Concerning the Canopie, wherein all this question standeth, he is well contented to yeld in the whole, as being not able to finde it once mentioned in any maner old Writer. But the hanging vp of the Sacrament, and that euen ouer the Alter, he is certaine, may well be proued by that solemne Fable, that we haue so often heard vnder the name of Amphilochius, Concerning which Fable (for a very Childish Fable it is, and no better) I must for shortnesse referre thee, gentle Reader, to that is written before in the First Article of this Booke, and in the 23. Diuision, as answer to the same. Yet thus much shortly, and by the way: First, M. Hardings Amphilochius saith, that S. Basil, after he had said Masse to Christ and his twelue Apostles, immediatly the same night, put one portion of the Sacrament in the Doue, that was then hanging ouer the Alter: and the next day following sent for a Goldsmith, and caused the same Doue to be made, the same Doue, I say, that he put the Sacrament in, the night before. And so M. Hardings Doue was a Doue, before it was made. But Dreames and Fables are worthy of Priuilege. Yet, lest this tale should passe alone, it is accompanied with a Miracle. For after that time, whensoeuer S. Basil was at Masse, and lifted vp the Bread, the same Doue (so saith this Amphilochius) vsed euermore to rowse her selfe ouer the Altar, and moued, and stirred, of her selfe hither and thither: much like to the Mathematicall Doue, that Architas Tarentinus made, that was able to flie alone. If this golden Doue had not beene endued with Spirit and Life, this tale had lost halfe his grace. Againe Pekham in his Prouincials gineth a strait commandement of all Priests, that the Bread in the Pix, be changed and renued euery seuenth day, for auoiding of putrefaction, or some other lothsomnesse, that may happen. But M. Hardings golden Doue had a speciall vertue aboue all others, to kepe the Bread seuen yeres together without corruption, and the same at the last, meet to be giuen to a sicke man in his death bed.

But there is mention made of golden and siluern Doues in the Councell of Constantinople. I grant. Howbeit, there is no mention made there of any Pix or Reseruation of the Sacrament. But if euery Doue there, were a Pix, or, as they call it, a Monster, then hath M. Harding a great aduantage. For seking out but one Pix, he hath found twenty, and that all together in one Church, some about the Alter, some about the holy Font, and some elsewhere. And yet I could neuer vnderstand, but euermore in one Church, were it neuer so big, one Pix was thought sufficient. O what paines M. Harding hath taken to furnish a Fable! God grant vs to be simple as Doues, in obeying of Matthæ. 10. Gods truth, and wise as Serpents in discerning and eschewing lies.

The rest, that is alleged of Symmachus, Gregorius Romanus, Gregorius Turonensis, and Theodorus, as it is not denied, so it is no parcell of this Question. The hanging of the Sacrament, and the Canopie, wherein the greatest danger stood, being remoued, somewhat may be considered touching Reseruation, when it shall be thought necessary. Wherein to counterpoise the credit of these foure obscure and late Doctours, we haue the authority of eight other Doctours counted learned and ancient: Clemens, Cyprian, Origen, Cyril, Hierome, Augustine, Hesychius and Nicephorus, as it is already proued.

OF ACCIDENTS WITHOVT SVBIECT.

THE TENTH ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that in the Sacrament after the words of Consecration, there remaine only the Accidents and Shewes, without the Substance of Bread and Wine.

The 175. vntruth. For the Substance of the Bread and Wine remaineth still, as shall appeare.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

In this Sacrament after Consecration (175) nothing in Substance remaineth, that was before, neither Bread nor Wine, but only the Accidents of Bread and Wine, as their forme and shape, sauour, smell, colour, lour, weight, and such like, which heere haue their being miraculously without their subiect: forasmuch as * after Consecration, there is none other substance, than the substance of the Body and Blood of our Lord, which is not affected with such Accidents, as the Scholastical Doctours terme it. Which Doctrine hath alwaies, though not with these precise termes, (176) beene taught, and beleeued from the beginning, and dependeth of the Article of Transubstantiation. For if the substance of Bread and Wine, be changed into the substance of the Body and Blood of our Lord (177) (which is constantly affirmed by al the learned and Ancient Fathers of the Church) it followeth by a necessarie sequell in nature, and by drift of reason, that then the Accidents onely remaine. For witnesse and proofe whereof, I will not let to recite certaine most manifest sayings of the old, and best approoued Doctours.

*Vntruth, as before.

The (176.) Vntruth. For this Doctrine was neither beleeued, nor taught from the beginning.

The (177.) Vntruth. For this kinde of Reall and Materiall change is not affirmed by any Father.

Transubstantiatiõ.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding granteth, that this Doctrine hath no expresse Authoritie by precise terms, neither in the Scriptures, nor in the Ancient Councels, nor in any old Father, Greeke, or Latine: yet the old Fathers both Greekes, and Latines, in their kindes were counted Eloquent, and were thought able to vtter their Doctrine in expresse, and precise words, if there had beene any such Doctrine receiued in the Church. Wherefore finding heerein such want of all Antiquitie, we may be bold expressly, and in precise termes to say: This seemeth to be a very new Doctrine, resting onely vpon a false Position, and a little coloured with drift of Reason: which Reason notwithstanding neuer entred into mans head, within a whole thousand yeares, after that the Gospell had beene preached. By like Position, and by like drift, the old Heretikes the Manichees held, that all, that outwardly appeared in Christ, was nothing els, but Accidents: that is, as M. Harding himselfe expounded it, the Forme, and Shape, the Colour, the Weight, and so indeed nothing els, but the Shew, and Appearance, and Fantasie of a Body. From such Doctours, it appeareth, these men haue receiued their new Doctrine. For Doctor Tonstall confesseth, It was first determined in the Councell of Lateran, which was holden in Rome in the yeare of our Lord a thousand, two hundred, and fifténe: and that, before that time it was euermore free for any man, without empeachment of his Faith, to hold the contrary.

Cuthbert. Tonstallus de Eucharist. lib. 1. pag. 45.

Likewise M. Hardings owne Doctour Gabriel Biel saith: Quomodo ibi sit Corpus Christi, an per conuersionem alicuius in illud: an sine Conuersione incipiat esse Corpus Christi cum pane, manentibus Substantia, & Accidentibus Panis, non inuenitur expressum in Canone Bibliæ: In what sort the Body of Christ is there, whether it bee by the turning of any thing into that, or without any turning (or Transubstantiation) the Body of Christ begin to be there together with the Bread, both the Substance and Accidents of the Bread remaining, it is not found expressed in the Scriptures. So likewise Duns himselfe saith: De Sacramentis tenendum est, sicut tenet Sancta Romana Ecclesia Nam verba Scripturæ possent saluari, Secundum intellectum facilem, & veriorem, Secundum apparentiam. Touching the Sacraments, we must hold, as the holy Church of Rome holdeth, For the words of the Scripture might be saued, (without Transubstantiation) by an easie and truer vnderstanding in appearance. Thus it appeareth by D. Tonstal, that this Doctrine hath no ground of antiquity: and by Biel, and Scotus, that it hath no certaine authority of Gods Word. Vpon this foundation, which by their owne confession is vncertaine, M. Harding buildeth vp the whole certainty of this Article.

Scotus in 4. Senten. dist. 11. q. 2.

But he will reply, Christ saith, This is my Body. So the Arian Heretikes were able to allege as many, and as plaine words of Christ: Pater maior me est: My Father is greater than I. Neither euer was there any Heresie so grosse, but was able to make some simple shew of Gods word. But Christ saith not: This Bread, is now no Bread: Or, This Bread, is Transubstantiate into my Body: Or, My Body is Really, and Fleshly contained vnder the Accidents of this Bread.

But contrariwise the Euangelists doe witnesse: That Christ toke Bread: and S. Paul after Consecration sundrie times calleth it Bread: and the holy Fathers expressly, and constantly affirme, that the Bread remaineth still in Nature, and Substance, as it did before.

1. Cor. 11.

Neuertheless, in that sense and meaning that Christ spake in, that Bread was Christs Body. For in this case we may not consider, what Bread is in it selfe, but what it is by Christs Institution. As the Body of Christ is his very Naturall Body: So the Bread in it selfe, is very Naturall Bread. And yet by way of a Sacrament, the Bread both is called, and also is Christs Body. So S. Paul saith: The Rocke was Christ: And S. Augustine saith: Non dicit, Petra Significabat Christum: sed, Petra erat Christus: He saith not, The Rocke Signified Christ: but, The Rocke was Christ. The Rocke naturally, and indeed was a Rocke, as it was before. Yet, because it gaue water, to refresh the people, by a Sacramentall vnderstanding the Rocke was Christ. So is it written: Sanguis est Anima: The Blood is the Soule: Which words rightly vnderstanded are true: and yet to say, that Naturally, and Really the Blood is the Soule, it were an errour. Vnto which words of Moſes, S. Auguſtine, by way of expoſition, reſembleth theſe wordes of Chriſt, This is my Body. His wordes be theſe: Poſſum interpretari Præceptum illud in Signo eſſe poſitum. Non enim dubitauit Dominus dicere: Hoc eſt Corpus meum, cùm Signum daret Corporis ſui: I may expound that commandement to conſiſt in a Signe. For our Lord doubted not to ſay, This is my Body, when he gaue a Signe of his body. And to come nére to the Inſtitution of Chriſts Supper, S. Luke, and S. Paul ſay: This Cup is the New Teſtament. Yet was not the Subſtance, and Nature of the Cup changed by any force of theſe wordes: neither was that Cup in déed, and Really the New Teſtament. Now, as the Rocke was Chriſt: The Blood is the Soule: The Cup is the New Teſtament, remaining notwithſtanding ech of them in their ſeuerall Nature and Subſtance: Euen ſo is the Bread, the Bodie of Chriſt: remaining ſtill notwithſtanding in the Nature, & Subſtance of very Bread. It is a Sacrament, that Chriſt ordained: and therefore muſt haue a Sacramentall vnderſtanding. Verily, as Water remaining ſtill Water, is the Sacrament of Chriſts Blood: So Bread remaining ſtill Bread, is the Sacrament of Chriſts Body.

1. Cor. 11.

But the contrary héereof was determined in the Councell of Laterane in Rome, about the yére of our Lord, 1215. Howbeit, the determination of that Councell neither was Generall, nor was euer Generally receiued. For the Chriſtians in Aſia, and Grecia, and of all other parts of Chriſtendome would neuer agrée vnto it, as it apeareth by the Councell of Florence: but euermore refuſed it, as an errour. But what ſpeciall power had that Councell of Lateran, to alter the Faith of the Church: and to change the ſenſe of Gods Word: and to make that Catholike, that before that time was neuer Catholike: and to make that Hereſie, that for the ſpace of twelue hundred yéeres, and more before was no Hereſie? Certainly, the old Catholike Fathers of the Primitiue Church, and theſe yong Fathers of the Church of Lateran agrée not together. For Gelaſius ſaith: Non deſinit eſſe Subſtantia, vel Natura Panis & Vini: It ceaſeth not to be the Subſtance, or Nature of Bread, and Wine. S. Chryſoſtom ſaith: Natura Panis in Sacramento remanet: The Nature of Bread remaineth in the Sacrament. Theodoretus ſaith: Chriſtus Naturam (Panis) non mutat, ſed Naturæ adijcit Gratiam: Chriſt changeth not the Nature (of the Bread) but vnto the ſame Nature he addeth Grace. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Quod videtis, Panis eſt, & Calix: quod vobis etiam oculi renuntiant: The thing, that you ſee, is Bread, and the Cup: which thing your eies doe teſtifie. Yéere bée the plaine teſtimonies of foure Ancient Catholike Fathers in this behalfe. But theſe New Lateran Fathers contrariwiſe ſay: Heere ceaſeth the Subſtance, and Nature of Bread, and Wine: The Nature of Bread remaineth not: Chriſt changeth the Nature, and Subſtance of the Bread: Beleeue not the witneſſe of your eies: The thing that you ſee, is not Bread. Thus theſe new Fathers as it may appeare, of purpoſe are contrary to the old. Héereof we may reaſon thus:

Gelaſius contrà Eutychem.
Chryſoſt. ad Cæſarium Monach.
Theodoretus Dialogo primo.
Auguſtin. ad Infantes. Citatur à Beda. 1. Cor. 10.

The Olde Catholike Fathers vnderſtood not this New fantaſie of Tranſubſtantiation:

Therefore they vnderſtood not the remaining of the Accidents without Subſtance.

Yet hath M. Harding choſen this, as the only foundation of his whole cauſe.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

S. Cyprian that learned Biſhop and holy Martyr ſaith thus: In Sermone de Cœna Domini Panis iſte, quem Dominus Diſcipulis porrigebat, non effigie, ſed natura mutatus, omnipotentia verbi factus eſt Caro: This Bread which our Lord gaue to his Diſciples, changed not in ſhape, but in Nature, by the almightie power of the word (he meaneth Chriſts word of Conſecration) is made Fleſh. Lo hee confeſſeth the Bread to bee changed, not in ſhape or forme, for that remaineth, but in Nature, that is to ſay, in Subſtance. And to ſignifie the change of Subſtance, and not an accidentarie change onely, to wit, from the vſe of common Bread, to ſerue for Sacramentall Bread, as ſome of our new Maſters doe expound that place for a ſhift: hee addeth great weight of words, whereby hee farre ouerpoiſeth theſe mens light deuice, ſaying that by the almightie power of our Lords word, it is made fleſh. Verily they might conſider, as they would ſeeme to bee of ſharpe iudgement, * that to the performance of ſo ſmall a matter, as their Sacramentall change is, the almightie power of Gods Word is not needfull. And now if this word, Factus eſt, may ſignifie an imaginatiue making, then why may not Verbum Caro factum eſt, likewiſe be expounded, to the defence of ſundry old hainous hereſies againſt the true Manhood of Chriſt? Thus the nature of the Bread in this Sacrament being changed, and the forme remaining, ſo as it ſeeme Bread, as before Conſecration, and being made our Lords fleſh by vertue of the word, the ſubſtance of Bread changed into that moſt excellent ſubſtance of the fleſh of Chriſt: Of that which was before, the accidents remaine onely, without the ſubſtance of bread. The like is to be beleeued of the wine.

* This is a Blaſphemie. For no Sacrament can be made without the almighty power of God. With this Example M. Harding fighteth againſt himſelfe

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

This place of S. Cyprian is often, and much alleged, as if euery word thereof were an argument: as indéed at the ſight, and firſt appearance, it ſéemeth vehement, and ſoundeth much: but being well weighed and conſidered, it will appeare in Subſtance, as it is. Certainly of Annihilations, of remouing of Natures, of remaining of Accidents without out Subiect, which thing M. Harding hath taken to proue, it speaketh nothing. For answer, first it is plaine by these foure Ancient learned Fathers, S. Augustine, S. Chrysostom, Gelasius, and Theodoretus, that the Bread and Wine after the Consecration, remaine in their Nature, and Substance, as they were before. Which thing notwithstanding, it is not the Nature of Bread, that worketh the effect, and force of this Sacrament: That is, that Christ may dwell in vs, and we in him: no more then it is the Nature of Water, in the Sacrament of Baptisme, that worketh the effect thereof, and maketh vs Flesh of Christs Flesh, and Bone of his Bones. And for better euidence hereof, to compare one Sacrament with another, S. Basil saith, Gratia (Baptismatis) non est ex natura aquæ, sed ex præsentia Spiritus: The Grace of Baptisme is not of the Nature of the Water, but of the Presence of the Spirit. And therefore Cyril saith: Quemadmodum viribus ignis, &c. As Water being vehemently heat by the strength of fire, heateth no lesse then if it were fire indeed; so the Water of Baptisme by the working of the holy Ghost, is reformed vnto a Diuine power (or Nature). So Chrysostom saith: Elizeus potuit vndarum mutare naturam, &c. Elizeus was able to change the Nature of the Water, and made it able to beare yron. Here Chrysostom saith, euen as S. Cyprian saith, that the Nature of the Water was changed: Yet the verie substance of the Water remained as before.

Natura.

Likewise S. Ambrose speaking of Gods marueilous working in Baptisme, saith: Non agnosco vsum Naturæ: Nullus est hic Naturæ ordo, Vbi est excellentia Gratiæ: In this case I haue no skill of the vse of Nature: The order of Nature hath no rule, where as is the excellencie of Gods Grace Againe he saith: Est hoc illud magnum Mysterium, quod oculus non vidit, nec auris audiuit, nec in Cor hominis ascendit. Aquas video, quas videbam quotidiè. Me istæ habent mundare, in quas sæpè descendi, & minquam mundatus sum? Hinc cognosce, quòd Aqua non mundat sine Spiritu. Is this that great Mysterie, that the eie neuer saw, that the eare neuer heard, that neuer entred into the heart of man? I see Water, that I saw euery day before. Is this it, that shall make me cleane? I haue gon often times into it, and was neuer the cleaner. Therefore vnderstand thou, that Water (of his owne Nature) without the holy Ghost cleanseth not. And againe: Per prædicationem Dominicæ Crucis, Aqua fit dulcis ad Gratiam: By the preaching of our Lords Crosse, the Water (beside his own nature) is made sweet vnto Grace. And in this respect S. Hilarie saith: Vno Christo per Naturam vnius Baptismi induimur: We put vpon vs, onely one Christ, by the Nature of one Baptisme. And Gregorie Nyssene (in like sort: Natura Aquæ præcedente virga Fidei, &c. vitam præstat: The Nature of Water (thus considered) the Rod of Faith going before, giueth life. Otherwise he saith: Hoc beneficium non Aqua largitur, &c. sed Dei præceptum, & Spiritus. Aqua verò subseruit ad ostendendam purgationem: It is not Water (of his own Nature) that giueth this benefit: but the commandement of God, and the Holy Ghost. The Water serueth to shew vs the clensing of the Soule.

Ephes. 5. Basilius de Spiritu Sancto, cap. 15. ὑ χάεις ὕυ ἐν τῆς φύσεως δύ τῶ ὕδατος. Cyrill. in Ioh. lib. 1. cap. 42. Chrysost. de virtutib. & vitijs, hom. 5. Ambros. de illis qui initiantur Mysterijs, cap. 9. Ambros. de illis qui initiantur Myster. ca. 4. Ambros. de illis qui initiantur Myster. ca. 3. Hilarius de Trinit. lib. 8. Gregorius Fyssen. in vita Moseos. Gregor. Nyss. de Sancto Baptismate.

By these examples, I trust, it may appeare, what S. Cyprian meant by the change of Nature Verily, Origen that ancient learned Father, touching the Bread in the Sacrament of Christs Body, writeth thus: Non materia panis, sed super illum dictus Sermo, est qui prodest, &c. It is not the matter (or Substance) of Bread, but the Word spoken ouer it, that doth profite. And therefore S. Ambrose likewise saith: Quantò magis operatorius est Sermo Dei, vt sint, quæ erant, & in aliud commutentur? How much more effectuall is the Word of God that (the Bread and Wine) may be (in Substance and Nature) the same, that they were before, and yet be changed into an other thing?

Orig. in Matth. cap. 15. Ambros. de Sacramentis, lib. 4. cap. 4.

Notwithstanding this answer vnto the discreet Reader may seeme sufficient, yet M. Harding forceth the matter further, with this word, Factus est. If this word, Factus est, saith he, may Signifie an imaginatiue making, then why may not, Verbum Caro factum est, be so expounded? O what simple shifts are these? Is M. Harding able to allege no barre, but that may be pleaded against himselfe? Or doth he thinke, that this Latine Word, Facere, must needes signifie, Transubstantiare? S. Augustine saith: Nos Christi Facti sumus: We are made Christs. Leo saith: Corpus regenerati, Fit Caro Crucifixi. The Body of the man that is Regenerate, is made the Flesh of Christ, that was Crucified. Beda saith: Nos ipsi Corpus Christi facti sumus: We our selues are made the Body of Christ. Origen saith: in like maner of speach: Spiritus Sanctus non in Turturem Vertitur, sed Columba Fit: The Holy Ghost is not changed into a Turtle, but is made a Done. So S. Ambrose: Victa anima libidine Carnis, Fit Caro: The Soule being ouercome with the pleasure of the Flesh, is made flesh. And will M. Harding vpon warrant of this one word, conclude, that our Bodies be vtterly Transubstantiate, and Substantially, and Really become the Body of Christ? Or, that the Holy Ghost is verily Transubstantiate into a Done? Or the Soule into Flesh? Or in these very words, that he hath alleged, Verbum Caro Factum est: The Word, that is the Sonne of God, was made Flesh; Doth he thinke, that the Sonne of God left the Nature of his Godhead, & was verily Transubstantiate into Flesh? Doubtles this were a Monstrous trous Doctrine, and in old times it was Cerinthus, and Ebions horrible Hereſie. Verely Leo ſaith, Quamuis Iohannes ſcribat, Verbum Caro factum eſt, Verbum tamen non eſt verſum in Carnē: Although S. Iohn ſay, The Word was made Fleſh, yet was not the Word turned (or Tranſubſtantiate) into Fleſh. S. Auguſtine ſaith of the Heretikes called Timotheani, Ad confirmandam huiuſmodi impietatem. qua Deum aſſerunt verſum eſſe à Natura ſua, cogunt Euangeliſtæ teſtimonium dicentis, Et Verbum Caro factum eſt. Quod ita interpretantur, Diuina Natura in Humanam verſa eſt. These Heretikes, to confirme their wickednesse, whereby they hold, that God was changed from his owne Nature (and made man) racke the witnesse of the Euangelist S. Iohn saying, The Word was made Fleſh. Which Word they expound thus, The Nature of God was changed into the Nature of man. Euen thus M. Harding ſaith, The Nature of Bread is changed into the Nature of Christs Body.

Auguſtin. ad Quoduult deū. Epiſtola Leonis ad Leonem Auguſtum.

Auguſtin. ad Quoduultdeū. Tertullian contra Marcionem

Where is then that great force of this word, Factus eſt, wherin M. Harding ſeemeth to haue ſuch truſt? He might better ſay thus: The Word was made Fleſh, the Nature, and Subſtance of the Word remaining ſtill: So the Bread is made Fleſh, the Nature and Substance of the Bread neuertheleſſe remaining ſtill. And in this ſort, the Olde learned Father Tertullian ſpeaketh touching the ſame: Chriſtus acceptum Panem & diſtributum Diſcipulis, Corpus ſuum illum fecit, dicendo, Hoc eſt Corpus meum, hoc eſt, Figura Corporis mei. Chriſt taking the Bread, and diuiding it to his Diſciples, made it his Bodie, ſaying, This is my Bodie: That is to ſay, ſaith Tertullian, This is a Figure of my Bodie. Thus the holy Fathers expound, what they meant by theſe words, The Bread is made Chriſts Bodie.

Omnipotentia Verbi.

But S. Cyprian further allegeth to this purpoſe: The Omnipotent Power of God, which ſaith M. Harding, Farre ouerpoiſeth all theſe mens light fantaſies. Thus he ſaith, as though, that without this light fantaſie of Tranſubſtantation, God could not be Omnipotent: or, as if there were ſuch wonderfull weight in his Outward Shewes, and Emptie Accidents. But God worketh mightily, and sheweth his Power Omnipotent, not onely herein, but alſo in all other his holy Myſteries, as it is before declared in the fifth Article, and the 4. Diuiſion. Leo ſaith, Chriſtus dedit Aquæ, quod dedit Matri. Virtus enim Altiſſimi, & obumbratio Spiritus Sancti, quæ fecit, vt Maria pareret Saluatorem, eadem fecit, vt Regeneraret vnda credentem. Leo Sermo. 4. de Natiuitate. Chriſt gaue to the Water, that he gaue to his Mother. For the Power of the Higheſt, and the ouerſhadowing of the Holy Ghoſt, that cauſed Marie to beare the Sauiour, the ſame Power hath cauſed the Water to Regenerate the beleeuer. To like purpoſe ſaith Chryſoſtome: Vt Saram, non Natura, ſed Dei promiſſio fecit matrem, &c: Chryſoſt. in Epiſt. ad Galat. cap. 4. As the promiſe of God, & not Nature made Sara a Mother, euen ſo our Regeneration by Nature is nothing. But the Wordes of God, which the Faithfull know, being pronounced by the Prieſt in the Bath of Water, doo forme, & regenerate him that is Baptized, as it were, in his mothers wombe. So they were wont to ſing at the hallowing of the Font, Deſcendat Spiritus Sanctus in hanc plenitudinem Aquæ, totàmq; eius Subſtantiam Regenerationis fœcundet effectu: Totam Subſtantiam. Let thy Holy Ghoſt come down into this fulnes of water, & let it fill the whole Subſtance therof with the effect of Regeneratiō. Thus Leo, Chryſoſtome, and other old Fathers, acknowledge the omnipotency of God in the Sacramēt of Baptiſme: yet did they not thinke it therfore neceſſary, to Tranſubſtantiate the Nature, & ſubſtance of the water. The ſame S. Cyprian, (albeit indeed it is not S. Cyprian, but a far later writer, as by good proofes it doth appeare) writing only of the Bleſſing of the holy Oyle, allegeth likewiſe the omnipotent power of God aboue Nature. His words be theſe, Sanctificatis Elementis, iam non propria Natura præbet effectū: Sed Virtus Diuina potentiùs operatur: adeſt Veritas Signo, & Spiritus Sacramento. Cyprianus de vnctione Chriſmatis. It is not Nature, that gineth effect vnto the Element of Oyle being ſanctified, but the Power of God worketh more mightily. The Truth is Preſent with the Signe, & the Holy Ghoſt with the Sacrament. Therfore it was no good Catholike Diuines part, ſo lightly to shake off theſe new Maſters Sacramentall changes, as matters of ſo ſmall weight. It appeareth by theſe examples, that God therein sheweth his Omnipotent Power: and yet without any Tranſubſtantiation.

Now if neither theſe words, Panis Natura Muratus: nor theſe words, Factus eſt: nor theſe words, Omnipotentia Verbi: nor all theſe words together, be able to proue Tranſubſtantiation, as it is cleere by that is ſaid already, then is M. Hardings foundation not well laid: and therefore we may the better doubt of his Concluſion.

And, whereas he ſaith, These New Maſters thinke it ſufficient to acknowledge a Sacramentall changing, and to ſay, that the Bread is changed into the Sacrament of Christs Body, and that onely for a ſhift, it may pleaſe him to remember, that Beda welnere nine hundred yeres ago, expounded the ſame in like ſort: and yet that notwithſtanding, was neuer counted neither Shifter, nor New Maſter. His words be plaine: Panis, & Vini creatura, in Sacramentum Carnis, & Sanguinis Chriſti, ineffabili Spiritus Sanctificatione transfertur: Beda in Octauis Epiphanie. The Creature of Bread and Wine, by the ineffable Sanctification of the Spirit, is turned into the Sacrament of Christs Fleſh, and Blood.

M. Harding.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuision.

Nothing can be plainer to this purpose, then the sayings of S. Ambrose, Licèt Figura Panis, & Vini videatur, nihil tamen aliud, quàm Caro Christi, & Sanguis, post Consecrationem credendum est: Although, saith he, the forme of Bread and Wine be seene, yet after Consecration we must beleeue, they are nothing els, but the Flesh, and Blood of Christ. After the opinion of this Father, the shew and figure of Bread and Wine are seene, and therefore remaine after Consecration. And if we must beleeue, that which was Bread & Wine before, to be none other thing, but the Flesh and Blood of Christ, then are they no other thing indeed. For if they were, we might so beleeue. For beleefe is grounded vpon trueth, and whatsoeuer is not trüe, is not to be beleeued. Heereof it followeth, that after Consecration, the accidents and shewes onely remaine without the substance of Bread and Wine. In another place he saith as much: Panis ille, &c. This Bread before the words of the Sacraments, is Bread: assoone as the Consecration commeth, of Bread is made the Body of Christ. Againe in another place he saith most plainly, That the power of Consecration is greater than the power of Nature; because Nature is changed by Consecration. By this Father it is euident, that the Nature, (178) that is to say, the substance of Bread and Wine, by Consecration being changed into the Body and Blood of Christ, their naturall qualities, which be accidents, continuing vnchanged for performance of the Sacrament, remaine without the substance of Bread and Wine.

This place is counterfeit, and not to be found in all S. Ambrose.

The 178. vntruth, standing in false interpretation: as shall appeare. Accidents performe the Sacrament. A strange kinde of Diuinitie.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Ambroses Bookes be extant, and knowen: among them all, these woords are not found. Gratian, the reporter of them, either of purpose, or for want of discretion, as a man liuing in a very barbarous and corrupt season, alleageth often one Doctour for another: the Greeke for the Latine; the New for the Old: as may soon appeare to the learned Reader. This Writer, whom M. Harding would so faine haue to passe by the name of Ambrose, in this very place, purposely depraueth the woords of Christ, alleging that for Scripture, that is not to be found so written in all the Scriptures: which is not the maner of S. Ambroses dealing.

But for contentation of the Reader, to answer that thing, that séemeth worthy of no answer, we must vnderstand, that the Bread, the Wine, and the Water, of their owne Nature, without further consideration, are nothing els but vsuall, and simple creatures. And therefore S. Augustine giueth this generall rule touching the same: In Sacraments we must cõsider, not what they be of themselues, but what they signifie. So S. Ambrose writeth of the Water of Baptisme: Quid vidisti? Aquas vtique; sed non solas. Apostolus docuit, non ea contemplanda, quæ videntur, sed quæ non videntur. What sawest thou? (in thy Baptisme) Water no doubt: but not onely Water. The Apostle hath taught vs, to behold, not the things, that be seen, but the things, that be not seen. Otherwise touching the very substance of the Bread and the Wine, he saith, Sunt quæ erant. They be the same things that they were. And immediatly before, he calleth the Sacrament touching the Bread and the Wine, which are the materiall parts thereof, A common, and a knowen, Creature.

Augusti. contra Maximin. li. 3.
Ambrosius de ijs, qui initiantur mysterijs, cap. 2.
Ambrosius de Sacramentis. lib. 4. cap. 4.

Yet neuertheless, touching the effect of the Sacrament, we consider not the corruptible Natures, or outward Elements, but direct our Faith onely to the Bodie, and Blood of Christ. S. Ambrose himselfe leadeth vs thus to say: Ante Benedictionem Verborum Cœlestium alia species nominatur: post Consecrationem Corpus Christi Significatur: Before the blessing of the Heauenly Words, it is called an other kinde: but after the Consecration, the Bodie of Christ is signified.

Ambros. de Sacram. li. 4. cap. 3.
Creatura Salennis & nota.

But M. Harding will replie, Thus Ambrose saith, Figura Panis, & Vini videtur: The Figure of Bread, and Wine is seene: Therefore we must néeds confesse, there are Accidents without a Subiect. If any old Writer, Greeke, or Latine: learned, or vnlearned, euer vsed this Woord, Figura, in this sense, to wit, to signifie a Shew alone without any Substance, then may M. Harding séeme to say somewhat. If neuer any writer vsed it so, then haue we good cause, to doubt his Conclusion. Verily, to leaue other old writers of all sorts, S. Ambrose himselfe saith: Christus apparet in Figura Humana: Christ appeareth in the Forme, or Figure of a Man. And S. Paul saith to the like purpose: Formam Serui accepit: Christ tooke vpon him the Forme of a Seruant. I thinke M. Harding will not warrant vs vpon the force of these woords, that Christ had onely the Shape, and Shew, and not the very Substance, and Nature of a Mans Bodie. For in so saying, he should séeme openly to fauour the old condemned Heresie of the Manichæs. In saying otherwise, this word, Figura, cannot further his purpose.

Philippen 2.

But S. Ambrose saith, Nihil aliud credendum: We must beleeue there is nothing else. Therfore, saith M. Harding, There is no Bread. I marueil, he hath no further insight, nor better skill in his owne Arguments. For héere he concludeth a plaine contradiction against himselfe. For if there be nothing else, but the Bodie of Christ, and we must also beleeue the same, then is there neither Forme, nor Figure, nor Weight, nor Sauour there: which is contrary to M. Hardings owne first position: and yet by these woords we must néeds beleeue it. The meaning is, as it is before said, that, according to the Doctrine of S. Augustine guſtine, in all Sacraments we ſequeſter our mindes vtterly from the Senſible Creatures, and with our Faith behold onely the things, that thereby are repreſented.

For anſwer to the other two places of S. Ambroſe heere alleged, touching the changing of Natures, and making of Chriſts Body, it may pleaſe thee, gentle Reader, to remember that it is anſwered before in the Second Diuiſion hereof, vnto the Words of S. Cyprian. I trow M. Harding will not ſay, that the changing of any thing is ſtreightway the Corruption of the ſame. Origen ſaith: Si mutabuntur Cœli, vtique non perit, quod mutatur: Albeit the Heauens ſhall be Changed, yet the thing that is Changed, is not therefore vtterly aboliſhed, and put away. The queſtion betweene vs is not, whether the Bread be the Body of Chriſt, or no: but whether in plaine, and ſimple maner of ſpeech it be Fleſhly, and Really the Body of Chriſt. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Secundùm Quendam Modum Sacramentum Corporis Chriſti, Corpus Chriſti eſt: After a certaine maner (of ſpeech) the Sacrament of Chriſts Body, is the Body of Chriſt. And S. Ambroſe himſelfe heerein ſeemeth well, and ſufficiently to open his owne meaning. For thus hee writeth, as is before alleged: Poſt Conſecrationem Corpus Chriſti Significatur: poſt Conſecrationem ſanguis Chriſti Nuncupatur: In Typum Sanguinis Chriſti, nos Calicem Sanguinis Myſticum percipimus: carnem, & Sanguinem, quæ pro nobis oblata ſunt, Significamus. Similitudinem precioſi Sanguinis bibis: Eſt Figura Corporis, & Sanguinis Domini: In Similitudinem accipis Sacramentum: After Conſecration, the Body of Chriſt is Signified: After Conſecration, it is called the Blood of Chriſt: We receiue the Myſticall Cup of Blood, in Example of the Blood of Chriſt: We Signifie the Fleſh, and Blood of Chriſt, that were offred for vs: Thou drinkeſt the Likeneſſe of that Precious Blood: It is a Figure of the Body, and Blood of our Lord: For a Likeneſſe, or Reſemblance (of the Body of Chriſt) thou receiueſt the Sacrament. Thus many waies it ſeemed good to S. Ambroſe, to qualifie the heat, and rigor of his other words.

Now, if M. Harding, as his maner is, will call all theſe, Naked Signes, and Bare Figures, let him then remember, he maketh ſport, and game at S. Ambroſe, his owne Doctour. But the Sacraments of Chriſt, notwithſtanding they be Signes, and Figures, as they be commonly called of the old Fathers, yet are they not therefore Bare, and Naked. For God by them, like as alſo by his Holy Word, worketh mightily, and effectually in the hearts of the Faithfull. Touching the force of Gods word, S. Ambroſe writeth thus: Vidimus, & oculis noſtris perſpeximus, & in veſtigia Clauorum eius digitos noſtros inſeruimus. Videmur enim nobis vidiſſe, quem legimus, ſpectaſſe pendentem, & vulnera eius Spiritu Eccleſiæ ſcrutante tentaſſe: We haue ſeene him, and beholden him with our eies, and haue thruſt our fingers into the very holes of his nailes. For we ſeeme to haue ſeene him whom we haue read, and to haue beholden him hanging on the Croſſe, and with the feeling Spirit of the Church, to haue ſearched his wounds. So ſaith S. Cyprian: Cruci hæremus, & Sanguinem ſugimus, & intra ipſa Redemptoris noſtri vulnera figimus linguam: We cleaue to the Croſſe, and ſucke vp the Blood, and thruſt our tongues euen within the Wounds of our Redeemer. And in this reſpect S. Ambroſe ſaith: Baptiſmus eſt Myſterium, quod oculus non vidit, nec auris audiuit, nec in Cor hominis aſcendit: Baptiſme is, (not bare Water, but) a Myſterie, that the eye neuer ſaw, the eare neuer heard, nor neuer entred into the heart of Man. In reſpect hereof, the Element of Water ſeemeth nothing. Euen ſo in reſpect of Chriſts Body, and Blod, that are repreſented, the Bread, and Wine ſeeme nothing. Thus, S. Ambroſe ſaith, in either Sacrament the power of Conſecration is greater, then the power of Nature: Thus by Conſecration Nature is Changed.

Dialog. 1.

Anno 1554.

Heere, good Chriſtian Reader, I beſeech thee to conſider thus much by the way. In the Vniuerſitie of Oxford, and in the late Solemne Diſputation holden there againſt that Godly Father, and Martyr of bleſſed Memorie Doctor Cranmer the Archbiſhop of Canterburie, the Authoritie of this Father Theodoretus was vtterly refuſed in open audience, for that he was a Grecian: and therefore not thought to iudge Catholikely of the Sacraments, according to the late Determination of the Church of Rome. Which thing notwithſtanding, it appeareth, M. Harding hath now reconciled him, and made him Catholike. Howbeit, this thing ſeemeth very ſtrange, that one man, in the vttering of one Sentence, without any maner altering, or change of Word, ſhould be both an Heretike, and a Catholike, both together.

Concerning the greateſt Subſtance hereof, this place of Theodoretus is anſwered before, fore, in the eight Article, and in the 28. Diuision. Here he saith: That the Bread, and the Wine are seene, and touched, as they were before. Hereof M. Harding concludeth thus: Ergo, there is neither Bread, nor Wine remaining, but only Accidents, and Shewes without Substance. This Argument of it selfe is strange, and wonderfull, and the more, for that it concludeth plaine contrary, not only to the meaning, but also to the expresse and euident words of Theodoretus. For thus his words lie: Qui seipsum appellauit vitem, illic Symbola, & Signa, quæ videntur, appellatione Corporis & Sanguinis honorauit: Non Naturam mutans, &c. He that calleth himselfe the Vine, honoured the Signes, and Tokens, (whereby he meaneth the Sacraments) that be seene, with the name of his Body, and Blood: not changing the Nature thereof, &c. And againe: Signa Mystica post Sanctificationem non recedunt a Natura sua. Manent enim in priori Substantia: The Mysticall Signes after the Consecration depart not from their owne Nature. For they remaine in their former Substance.

Subſtance and Nature not changed.

Theodoret. Dialogo 1. Immutabilis.

Theodoretus in Dialogo 2. Inconfusus.

Now let vs compare this text with M. Hardings Gloſſe. Theodoretus saith, The Bread, and Wine depart not from their owne Nature: M. Harding saith: They depart vtterlie from their owne Nature. Theodoretus saith: The Bread, and Wine remaine in their former Substance: M. Harding saith: There remaine only the Shewes, and Accidents of Bread, and Wine, without any their former Substance. It is a bold Gloſſe, that thus dareth to ouerthrow the manifeſt meaning of the Text. I trow such dealing should be rectified by a Writ of Error.

Of these plaine words of Theodoretus, we may well conclude thus against M. Harding: The Substance of the Bread, and Wine remaineth still, as it was before: Therefore the Accidents, and Shewes of Bread and Wine, be not there without their Substance. For the reſt, How these Mysticall Signes be vnderstanded, and beleeued to be the Body, and Blood of Christ, it is answered before, in the eight Article, and 26. Diuision.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuision.

In lib. sent. Prosperi de Consec. dist. 2. ca. Nos autem. Verbis Domini secundum Lucam, Serm. 28.

We do not in like sort (saith S. Auguſtine) take these two formes of Bread, and Wine, after Conſecration, as we tooke them before. Sith that we grant faithfully, that before Conſecration it is Bread and Wine, that Nature hath shapte: but after Conſecration, that it is the Flesh, and Blood of Christ, that the Bleſſing hath Conſecrated. In another place he saith, that this is not the Bread which goeth into the Bodie (179) (meaning for Bodily sustenance) but that Bread of life, qui anima nostra substantiam fulcit: Which sustaineth the substance of our Soule.

The Bishop of Sariſburie.

The former of these two places, may be easily discharged by that is answered before to the words of S. Ambroſe, in the 3. Diuision hereof. S. Auguſtine speaketh of the changing, and aduancing of the Natures of Bread, and Wine, vnto a Spirituall and Diuine vse, and not of the abolishing of the same. As for Accidents, and Shewes standing without Subiect, and Substance, he saith nothing. True it is, the Bread, before the Conſecration, was nothing else but Bare, and Common Bread: now it is aduanced, and made a Sacrament of Christs Body, and Blood: Not by Nature, but by Conſecration, aboue Nature. Chryſoſtome saith: Oculis intellectus iſta perſpiciamus. Nihil enim Senſibile tradidit nobis Christus, &c. Sic & in Baptiſmo: Let vs behold these things with the eies of our mind: for Christ hath deliuered to vs nothing, that is Senſible, &c. So likewise in Baptiſme. I thinke, M. Harding will not denie, but the Water in Baptiſme is a thing Senſible: likewise, that the Bread, and Wine in the holy Myſteries, or, at the leaſt, the Accidents, and Shewes thereof, are things Senſible. But S. Chryſoſtome withdraweth vs from the Bread, the Wine, the Water, and all other like things, that be Senſible, to the conſideration of the Body, and Blood of Christ, that are not senſible: in comparison whereof, all the reſt are consumed, and seeme nothing.

Chryſoſtom. in Matth. hom. 83.

Touching the second place, The words be written both in S. Auguſtine, and also in a Booke, that is commonly knowen by the name of S. Ambroſe De ſacramentis: the meaning whereof nothing toucheth, neither the Bread, nor the Wine: but only the Body, and Blood, of Christ, which thereby are repreſented. And therefore this place so vnaduiſedly chosen, can little further M. Hardings fantaſie of empty Accidents, hanging, I know not how, without Substance.

Ambroſ. de Sacramen. li. 5. cap. 4.

The words be plaine of themselues without further Expoſition. Non iſte Panis, qui vadit in Corpus: ſed ille Panis vitæ æternæ, qui animæ noſtræ Subſtantiam fulcit: Not this Bread, that paſſeth into the Body: but that bread of euerlaſting life, that Strengtheth the Subſtance of our Soule. M. Harding knoweth, that the Sacrament is receiued into our Bodies. Rabanus saith: Sacramentum ore percipitur, & in alimentum Corporis redigitur: The Sacrament is receiued with the mouth, and is turned to the nouriſhment of the Body. But the Body

Rabanus Maurus li. 1. ca. 31.

Body of Chriſt, as S. Cyprian ſaith, Eſt Cibus Mentis, non Ventris: Is meat for the Mind, not for the Belly. So S. Auguſtine ſaith, Panis iſte interioris Hominis quærit eſuriem: This Bread ſeeketh the hunger of the Inner Man. Intus bibendo fœlix fum: Drinking in my heart within, I am made happy. Terullian ſaith: Ruminandus intellectu, & fide digerendus eſt: That meat ought to be chewed with vnderſtanding, and to be digeſted with Faith. Likewiſe Chryſoſtome: Magnus iſte panis, qui replet Mentem, non Ventrem: This great Bread, that filleth the mind, and not the belly. Of this Bread S. Ambroſe ſpeaketh, and not of the Sacrament, that is receiued into the Body. Wherefore it appeareth, M. Harding was not wel aduiſed, how little this place would make for his purpoſe. The Old Father Origen ſaith: Accidit, vt ſimpliciores quidam, neſcientes diſtinguere, quæ ſint, quæ in Scripturis Diuinis interiori Homini, quæ verò Exteriori deputanda ſint, vocabulorum ſimilitudine falſi, ad ineptas quaſdam Fabulas, & figmenta inania ſe contulerint: It happeneth, that ſimple folke, being not able to diſcerne, what things they be in the Holy Scriptures, that are to be applied to the Inner Man, and what to the Vtter, being deceiued by the likeneſſe of Words, turne themſelues into vaine imaginations, and fooliſh Fables.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuiſion.

No man can ſpeake more plainly hereof, then Cyrillus Hieroſolymitanus, an old Author, who wrote in Greek, and is extant, but as yet remaining in written hand, and common to the ſight of few learned men: His words be not much vnlike the words of the Schoole Doctors. Præbetur Corpus ὸ τύπῳ ἄρτου, in ſpecie, ſiue figura Panis. Item, præbetur ſanguis ὸ τύπῳ οἴνου. Chriſts Body (ſaith he) is giuen vs in forme, or figure of Bread. Againe, his Blood is giuen vs in forme of Wine. A little after theſe words he ſaith thus, καὶ πεῖσθε ὃν, ὡς ψιλοῖς τῷ ἄρτῳ, καὶ τῷ οἴνῳ, &c. Ne mentem adhibeas quaſi Pani, & vino nudis: ſunt enim hæc Corpus, & ſanguis, vt Dominus pronunciauit. Nam tametſi illud tibi ſenſus ſuggerit, eſſe, ſcilicet, Panem & Vinum nudum, tamen firmet te Fides, & ne guſtatu rem æſtimes, quin potiùs pro certo ac compertò habe, omni dubitatione relicta, eſſe tibi impartitum Corpus, & ſanguinem Chriſti. Conſider not (ſaith this Father) theſe as bare Bread, and Wine. For theſe are his Body, and Blood, as our Lord ſaid. For although thy ſenſe report to thee ſo much, that it is bare Bread, and Wine, yet let thy Faith ſtay thee, & iudge not thereof by thy taſte, but rather be right well aſſured, all doubt put apart, that the Body and Blood of Chriſt is giuen to thee. Againe he ſaith thus in the ſame place: Hæc cum ſcias, & pro certo & explorato habeas, (180) quæ videtur eſſe Panis, non eſſe, ſed Corpus Chriſti; item, quod videtur vinum, non eſſe, quamquam id velit ſenſus, ſed Sanguinem Chriſti, ac de eo Prophetam dixiſſe, Panis Cor hominis confirmat: firma ipſe Cor, ſumpto hoc pane, vtpote Spirituale. Whereas thou knoweſt this for a very certainty, that that which ſeemeth to be Wine, is not Wine, albeit the ſenſe maketh that account of it, but the Blood of Chriſt, and that the Prophet thereof ſaid, Bread ſtrengtheneth the heart of man: ſtrengthen then thy ſelfe thy heart, by taking this Bread, as that which is ſpirituall. And in the 3. Catechеſi this Father ſaith, Panis Euchariſtæ poſt inuocationem Sancti Spiritus, non amplius eſt Panis nudus & ſimplex ſed Corpus &c. The Bread of the Sacrament after praier made to the Holy Ghoſt, is not bare, and ſimple Bread, but the body of Chriſt.

It is not Bare Bread? Ergo, it is Bread

The 180. Vntruth. Standing in wilfull corruption of the Authors Words, and meaning, as ſhal appeare.

Now, ſith that by this Doctors plaine declaration of the Catholike Faith in this point, we ought to beleeue, and to be verily aſſured, that the Bread is no more Bread after Conſecration, but the very Body of Chriſt, and the Wine no more Wine, but his pretious Blood, though they ſeeme to the eie otherwiſe, though taſte, and feeling iudge otherwiſe, and to be ſhort, though all ſenſes report the contrary, and all this vpon warrant of our Lords word, who ſaid theſe to be his Body and Blood: and that (as he teacheth) not in the Bread and Wine: And further, ſith we are taught by Euſebius [a] Emiſſenus, in Homilies of Eaſter, to beleeue terrena commutari, & tranſire, the earthly things to be changed, and to paſſe: againe, Creaturas conuerti in ſubſtantiam Corporis Chriſti, The Creatures of Bread and Wine to be turned into the ſubſtance of our Lords Body and Blood, which is the very Tranſubſtantiation: and ſith Chryſoſtome [b] ſaith, Panem abſumi, that the Bread is conſumed away by the Subſtance of Chriſts Body: [c] And Damaſcen, Bread and Wine Traſmutari ſupernaturaliter, to be changed aboue the courſe of nature: and Theophelact, the Bread [d] tranſelementari in Carnem Domini, to be quite turned by changing of the Elements, that is, the matter of Subſtance it conſiſteth of, into the Fleſh of our Lord: and that in another place, In effabili operatione transformari, etiamſi Panis nobis videatur, that the Bread is transformed and charged into another ſubſtantiall forme, (he meaneth that of our Lords Body) by vnſpeakable working, though it ſeeme to be Bread. Finally, ſith that the Greeke Doctors of late age, affiume the ſame Doctrine, among whom [e] Samona vſeth for perſuaſion of it the ſimilitude, which Gregory Nyſſene, and Damaſcene for declaration of the ſame vſed before: which is, that in Conſecration ſuch maner Tranſubſtantiation is made, as is the Conuerſion of the Bread in nouriſhing, in which it is turned into the Subſtance of the nouriſhed: Methonenſis, like S. Ambroſe, would not men in this matter to looke for the order of nature, ſeeing that Chriſt was borne of a Virgin beſide all order of nature, and ſaith that our Lords Body in this Sacrament, is receiued vnder the forme or ſhape of an other thing, leſt blood ſhould cauſe it to be horrible: Nicolaus Cabaſila ſaith, that this Bread is no more a Figure of our Lords Body, neither a gift bearing an Image of the true gift, nor bearing any diſcription of the Paſſions of our Sauiour himſelfe, as it were in a Table, but the true gift it ſelfe, the moſt holy Body of our Lord it ſelfe, which hath truly receiued reproches, contumelies, ſtripes, which was crucified, which was killed: Marcus Epheſius, though otherwiſe to be reiected, as he that obſtinately reſiſted the determination of the Councel of Florence concerning the proceeding of the holy Ghoſt out of the Sonne, yet a ſufficient witneſſe of the Greeke Churches Faith in this point, affirming the things offered to be called of S. Baſil Antitypa, that is, the ſamplers, and Figures of our Lords Body, becauſe they be not yet perfitly conſecrated, but as yet bearing the Figure, and Image, referreth the Change or Tranſubſtantiation of them to the holy Ghoſt, Donec Spiritus Sanctus adueniat, quæ ea mutet? Theſe gifts offered (ſaith he) be of S. Baſil called Figures, vntill the holy Ghoſt come vpon them, to change them. Whereby he ſheweth the Faith of the Greeke Church, that through the holy Ghoſt in Conſecration, the Bread and Wine are ſo changed, as they may no more be called Figures, but the very Body and Blood of our Lord it ſelfe, as into the ſame changed by the comming comming of the holy Ghoſt. Which change is a change in ſubſtance, and therefore it may rightly be termed Tranſubſtantiation, which is nothing elſe but a turning or changing of one Subſtance into another Subſtance.

Bare Bread. Bare Oile.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

This Cyrillus Hieroſolymitanus is an Old Authour newly ſet forth. I will not call his credit into queſtion: notwithſtanding many of his conſiderations bee very much like to M. Hardings iudgement in this Article, that is to ſay, like Accidens ſine Subiecto: A ſhew of words without Subſtance. He ſæmeth both in words and ſenſe, fully to agræe with Chryſoſtome, Oecumenius, and other Græke Fathers, that neuer vnderſtood this M. Hardings New Religion. He ſhutteth vp the hearers bodily eies, wherewith they ſæ the Bread, and Wine: and borroweth only the Inner eies of their mindes, wherewith they may ſæ the very Body, and Blod of Chriſt, which is that Bread that came from heauen. And herein, notwithſtanding his words be quicke, and violent, the more to ſtirre, and enflame the hearts of them, vnto whom hee ſpeaketh, yet he himſelfe in plaineſt wiſe openeth, and cleareth his owne meaning. For thus he writeth: Ne conſideres, tanquam Panem Nudum; Panis Euchariſtiæ non eſt amplius Panis Simplex, & Nudus: Conſider it not, as if it were Bare Bread: The Bread of the Sacrament is no longer Bare, and Simple Bread. Which words are naturally reſolued thus: It is Bread: howbeit not only bare Bread: but Bread, and ſome other thing elſe beſide. So, where they of M. Hardings ſide are wont to ſay, Papa non eſt Purus homo, The Pope is not a Bare man, I trow their meaning is not, That the Pope is no man: but only, that he is a man, and yet beſides that, hath another Capacitie, aboue the condition and ſtate of common men. Of theſe words of Cyrillus we may well reaſon thus by the way: The Sacrament is not only, or Bare Bread: Therefore it is Bread, albeit not only Bare Bread. And thus the ſame Cyrillus, that is brought to teſtifie, that there remaineth no Bread in the Sacrament, teſtifieth moſt plainly to the contrary, that there is Bread remaining in the Sacrament.

Catecheſis Myſtagog. 4.

And although this anſwer of it ſelfe might ſæme ſufficient, yet (good Chriſtian Reader) for thy better ſatisfaction, I pray thæ further to vnderſtand, that, as this Cyrillus ſpeaketh here of the Sacrament of our Lords Body, and Blod, euen ſo, and in like phraſe, and forme of words, he ſpeaketh of the Oile, that they call Holy, of the Water of Baptiſme, and of other Ceremonies. Of the Oile he writeth thus, and further by the ſame expoundeth his meaning touching the Sacrament: Vide, ne illud putes eſſe Vnguentum tantum. Quemadmodum enim Panis Euchariſtiæ, poſt Sancti Spiritus Inuocationem, non amplius eſt Panis Communis, ſed Corpus Chriſti; ſic & Sanctum hoc Vnguentum, non amplius eſt Vnguentum Nudum, neque Commune, ſed eſt Chariſma Chriſti: Beware, thou thinke not, this to be Oile only. For as the Bread of the Sacrament, after the Inuocation of the Holy Ghoſt, is no longer Common Bread, but the Body of Chriſt: ſo this Holy Oile is no longer Bare, or Common Oile, but it is the Grace of Chriſt. By theſe words there appeareth like change in the one, as in the other. As the Oile is the Grace of Chriſt, ſo is the Bread the Body of Chriſt: and as the Nature, and Subſtance of the Oile remaineth ſtill, although it bæ not Bare, or Common Oile, ſo the Nature, or Subſtance of the Bread remaineth ſtill, although it bæ not Common, or Bare Bread.

Cyrillus in Catecheſi Myſtagogica tertia.

In like ſort he writeth of the Water of Baptiſme: Non tanquam Aquæ Simplici ſtudeas huic Lauacro: Ne Aquæ Simplicitati mentem adhibeas: Behold not this Bath, as Simple Water: Conſider not the Simplicity of the Water. Of theſe conferences of places, wæ may well gather thus: The Water in the Holy Myſterie of Baptiſme, notwithſtanding it be not Bare, and Common Water, yet neuertheleſſe continueth ſtill in the Nature, and Subſtance of very Water: So likewiſe the Bread in the Holy Myſterie of Chriſts Body, notwithſtanding it bæ not Bare, and Common Bread, yet neuertheleſſe in Nature, and Subſtance is Bread ſtill. But Cyrillus ſaith, It is no Bread, it is no Wine, notwithſtanding it appeare ſo vnto the ſenſes: Chryſoſtome ſaith, The Subſtance of Bread is conſumed: Emiſſenus ſaith, It is turned into the Subſtance of Chriſts Body: and Damaſcenus, and Theophylactus, latter writers of no great credit, anouch the ſame.

Cyrillus in Catecheſi Illuminatorum 3.

It is plaine, that both Cyrillus and all other old learned Fathers, labour euermore with all vehemency, and force of words, to ſequeſter, and pull their hearers from the iudgement of their ſenſes, to behold that Bread, that gineth life vnto the world. And therefore hæ calleth it Spirituall Bread: and of Chriſts Blod he ſaith thus: Bibe vinum in corde tuo, Spirituale, ſcilicet, Vinum: Drinke that Wine (not with thy Bodily mouth, but) in thy heart: I meane that Spirituall Wine. Againe he ſheweth, wherefore the Iewes were offended with Chriſt, and openeth the very cauſe of the groſneſſe of their errour: Iudæi non audientes Verba Chriſti ſecundum Spiritum, Scandalizati abierunt retro, eò quòd exiſtimarent ſeſe ad ad humanarum Carnium esum incitari: The Iewes not hearing Christs Words according to the Spirit, were offended, and went from him, for that they thought, they were encouraged to eat Mans Flesh. Againe he saith: Gustate, & videte, quòd suauis est Dominus. Num hoc Corporeo palato, vt istud dijudicetis, vobis præcipitur? Nequaquam: sed potiùs certa Fide: Taste and see, that the Lord is delectable. What, are you commanded to iudge this with your Bodily Mouth? No, not so: but with vndoubted Faith.

Catecheſis Myſtago. 4.

Spirituall. Nothing in comparison. The Oile is Christ.

In this sense the Water in Baptisme giueth place to the Blood of Christ, and of it selfe semeth nothing: Likewise the Bread in the Sacrament of Christs Body giueth place to the Body of Christ, and in respect hereof is vtterly nothing. Which thing concerning the Water of Baptisme, Paulinus semeth to expresse thus:

Fonsque nouus renouans hominem: quia suscipit, & dat
Munus: siue magis quòd desinit esse per vsum,
Tradere Diuino mortalibus incipit vsu.

Likewise Chrysostome: Non erit Aqua Potationis, sed Sanctificationis: It shall not bee Water to Drinke (as it was before) but Water of Sanctification (as before it was not.) This is the very Substance of the Sacraments: in respect whereof the corruptible Elements of Bread, Wine, and Water, are consumed, and taken for nothing.

This thing Chrysostome expresseth notably to the eie by this example: Lanæ cùm tinguntur, naturæ suæ nomen amittunt, & tinctura nomen accipiunt: & non vltrà vocas Lanam, sed, vel Purpuram, vel Coccinum, vel Prasinum, &c. Wooll, when it is died, loseth the name of his owne Nature, and taketh the name of the Colour. Thou callest it no longer Wooll, but Purple, or Scarlet, or Greene, &c. Notwithstanding, the very Substance of Wooll remaineth still.

And so Pachymeres saith: The Holy Oile is no longer called Oile, but it is turned into Christ. His words bee plaine: Oleum enim est Christus: For the Oile is Christ. Not meaning thereby, that the Oile is no Oile, but only, that in respect of Christ, that thereby is signified, the Oile is Consumed, and appeareth nothing. So Paulus, that famous learned Lawyer saith: Res vna per prævalentiam trahit aliam: One thing by force of greater waight, draweth another with it.

Thus therefore saith Cyrillus: The Bread, that we see, is now not Bread, but Christs Body: and the Wine, that we see, is now not Wine, but Christs Blood. As if he should say, These Elements, or Creatures, are not so much the things, that they bee indeed, as the things that they represent. For so S. Augustine saith generally of all Sacraments, as it hath beene alleged once or twice before: In Sacraments we may not consider, what they be indeed, but what they signifie. And to the same end S. Ambrose saith: Magis videtur, quod non videtur: It is better seene, that is not seene. And all this is wrought, both in the Mysterie of Baptisme, and also in the Mysterie of Christs Body, not by the worke or force of Nature, but by the Omnipotent power of the Spirit of God, and by the warrant of Christs Word.

Thus Emissenus, thus Damascene, thus Theophylact say, the Bread is changed into the Substance of Christs Bodie: I meane, euen so, as the same Theophylact saith: We our selues are Transelementated (and Transubstantiated) into the Body of Christ. For thus he imagineth Christ to say: Miscetur mihi, & Transelementatur in me. And in like sort Chrysostome speaking of the Corruption, and Renuing of the world, saith thus: Opus erat quasi Reelementationem quandam fieri: It was needfull, that the Elements were (Transubstantiate, or) made new. So S. Peter saith: Efficimur consortes Diuinæ naturæ: We are made partakers of the Diuine Nature. And a Heathen Writer saith: Homo transit in Naturam Dei: A man is turned into the Nature of God.

2. Petri 1. Mercurius Trismegistus in Æsculapio. Chrysostom. in Iohan. hom. 39. Bertram de Sacramen. Eucha.

All these, and other like Phrases of speech, must be qualified with a sober, and a discrét construction: otherwise, according to the simple tenour of the words, they cannot stand. Therefore S. Chrysostome entreating of the Exposition of the Scriptures, saith thus: Diuina opus est Gratia, ne nudis verbis insistamus. Nam ita Hæretici in errorem incidunt, neque Sententiam, neque Auditoris habitum inquirentes. Nisi enim tempora, locos, auditorem, & alia huiusmodi consideremus, multa sequentur absurda: We haue need of Gods Heauenly Grace, that we stand not vpon the Bare Words. For so Heretiques fall into error, neuer considering neither the mind (of the Speaker) nor the disposition of the Hearer. Vnlesse we weigh the Times, the Places, the Hearers, and other like Circumstances, many inconueniences must needs follow. Verily Bertramus an Ancient Writer saith: Ipse, qui nunc in Ecclesia, &c. He that now in the Church by his Omnipotent Power Spiritually turneth the Bread, and the Wine into the Flesh, and Blood of his Body, the same inuisibly made his Body of the Manna, that came from Heauen: and of the Water, that flowed from the Rocke, inuisibly he made his owne Blood. Thus, as the Fathers say, Manna was made Christs Body, or the Water in the wildernesse was made his Blood; euen so they say, The Bread & Wine are likewise made Christs Body & Blood.

Manna made Christs Bodie.

Now,

Greeke Church. Figure.

Now, that it may thoroughly appeare, euen vnto the Simple, what the godly Fathers meant by such extraordinary vse of speech, it shall not be from the purpose to report certaine words of Gregorius Nyssenus touching the same, and that in such order, as they are written. Thus therefore he saith: Nam & hoc Altare, &c. This Altar, whereat we stand, is by Nature a Common stone, nothing differing from other stones, whereof our walls be built, and our pauements laid: but after that it is once dedicate to the honour of God, and hath receiued Blessing, it is a holy Table, and an vndefiled Altar, afterward not to be touched of all men, but only of the Priests, and that with reuerence. Likewise the Bread, that first was common, after that the Mystery hath hallowed it, is both called, and is Christs Body: likewise also the Wine Christs Blood. And whereas before they were things of small value, after the blessing, that commeth from the Holy Ghost, either of them both worketh mightily. The like Power also maketh the Priest to be Reuerend, and Honorable, being by meane of a new Benediction diuided from the common sort of the people. Hereby we see, as the Altar, which in some places, both for steadinesse, and continuance, was made of stone, was changed from the former state, and yet remained stone still: and as the Priest, or Bishop was changed from that, he was before, and yet remained in Substance one man still: so by the iudgement of this Ancient Father, the Bread, and Wine are changed into Christs Body, and Blod, and yet remaine Bread, and Wine in Nature still. Gregor. Nyssen de Sancto Baptismo.

And, forasmuch as M. Harding, to make good, and to maintaine this his New Error, hath here alleged together nine Doctors of the Greeke Church, as subscribing, and well agreeing thereto; vnderstand thou, good Christian Reader, for the better information, and direction of thy iudgement, that the Grecians neuer consented to the same, from the first preaching of the Gospell there vntill this day, as it is easie to be seene in the last action of the Generall Councel holden at Florence. And Duns himselfe, hauing occasion to intreat hereof, writeth thus: Ad hanc sententiam principaliter videtur mouere, quòd de Sacramentis tenendum est, sicut tenet sancta Romana Ecclesia. ipsa autem tenet, Panem Transubstantiari in Corpus, & Vinum in Sanguinem: To this determination this thing seemeth specially to lead, that we must hold of the Sacraments, as the holy Church of Rome holdeth, &c. For Confirmation hereof he allegeth, not the Greek Church, as knowing, it had euermore holden the contrary, but only the Particular Determination of the Church of Rome, concluded first in the Councel of Lateran, in the yere of our Lord a Thousand, two hundred and fiftene, and neuer before. Conci. Florent. Sessione vltima. Io. Scotus in 4. Senten. dist. 10. Concilium Lateranen. sub Innocen. 3. An. 1215.

And Isidorus the Bishop of Russia, for that after his returne home from the Councel of Florence, he began to practise both for vnity herein, and also in all other causes, to be concluded betweene his Churches, and the Church of Rome, was therefore deposed from his office, and vtterly forsaken of all his Clergy. So well they liked this new deuice of Transubstantiation. Romanus Patritius in historia de Noua Orbe.

M. Harding will reply, Cirillus saith, ὡς πρὸς ἄρτον, which he expoundeth, In specie, vel Figura Panis: In the forme, or Figure of Bread: And this, as he imagineth, is as much, as Accidents without Subiect. What maner consideration leadeth him hereto, I cannot tell. But it is most certaine, that by this very way, the Old Heretiques were led into their Errors. Marcion the Heretique held, that Christ appeared not in the very Naturall Body of a Man, but only in a fantasie, or shew of a Mans Body. And to proue the same, he vsed M. Hardings reason. For it is written, said he: In Similitudinem hominum factus est, & Figura inuentus vt homo: He was made after the Likenesse of men, and found in Figure (which M. Harding expoundeth, in Shewes, and Accidents) as a man. And S. Ambrose saith: Nec sibi blandiatur virus Apollinare, quia ita legitur, Et Specie inuentus, vt homo: Let not that Heretique Apollinarius flatter himselfe, for that it is thus written, He was found in Figure, and Forme, as a man. Here we see, M. Harding is driuen to fight with Old Heretiques Weapons: otherwise his friends would not iudge him Catholique. S. Ambrose saith, Christ appeared In Figura humana, In the Figure of a Man Origen saith: Christus est expressa Imago, & Figura Patris: Christ is the expresse Image, and Figure of his Father. Against S. Ambrose saith: Grauior est ferri species, quàm Aquarum Natura: The Forme of yron is heauier, than the Nature of the Water. And Gregorie Nyssene saith: Sacerdos quod ad speciem externam attinet, idem est qui fuit: The Priest, as touching his apperance, or outward Forme, is the same, that he was before. And will M. Harding gather hereof, that Christ, or a Peece of Yron, or a Priest, is nothing els, but an Accident, or a Shew without Substance? Philippen. 2. Ambros. li. 7. Epist. 48. Ambros. ad Colossen. 1. Origen. περὶ ἀρχῶν li. 1. ca. 2. Ambros. de iis, qui initiantur Mysteriis, ca. 3 Gregorius Nyssen. de Sancto Baptismate.

Besides all this, M. Harding is faine to falsifie Cyrillus, his owne Doctor, and to allege his words otherwise, than he found them. For, whereas in the common Latine Translation it is written thus: Sciens, panem hunc, qui videtur à nobis, non esse Panem, etiamsi gustus Panem esse sentiat: Knowing, that this Bread, that is seene of vs, is no Bread, albeit our taste taſte do perceiue it to be Bread: M. Harding hath choſen rather to turne it thus: Cum ſcias, qui videtur eſſe Panis, non eſſe, ſed Corpus Chriſti: Knowing, that the thing that ſeemeth to be Bread, is no Bread, but the body of Chriſt. Wherein he hath both ſkipt ouer one whole clauſe, and alſo corrupted the words, & meaning of his Author. For Cyrillus ſaith: With our outward eies we ſee Bread. M. Harding ſaith: It appeareth, or ſeemeth only to be Bread. Cyrillus ſaith: Our taſte perceiueth (or knoweth) it to be Bread: This clauſe M. Harding hath left out, both in his Latine Tranſlation, and alſo in the Engliſh. But ſpeaking of the Cup, he turneth it thus: Albeit the ſenſe make that account of it. Corrupt Doctrine muſt needs hold by Corruption. For it is certaine, Cyrillus meant thus, That as we haue two ſorts of eies, Corporall of the Body, and Spirituall of the Mind: ſo in the Sacraments we haue two ſundry things to behold: with our Bodily Eies, the Materiall Bread: With our Spirituall Eies, the very body of Chriſt. And thus the words of Cyril agree directly with theſe words of S. Auguſtine: Quod videtis, Panis eſt: quod etiam oculi veſtri renuntiant. Quod autem Fides veſtra poſtulat inſtruenda, panis eſt Corpus Chriſti: The thing, that you ſee, is Bread: which thing your Eies doe teſtifie. But touching that your Faith would be inſtructed of, the Bread is Chriſts Body: in ſuch ſort, and ſenſe, as is ſaid before.

M. Harding of purpose falsifieth & corrupteth the Old Fathers.

Auguſt. in Sermone ad Infantes.

Samona, Methonenſis, and Cabaſilas are very yong to be alleged, or allowed for Doctors. As for Marcus Epheſius, he ſeemeth well to breake his name. For his talke runneth altogether Ad Epheſios. For whereas S. Baſil in his Liturgy, after the Words of Conſecration, calleth the Sacrament ἀντίτυπον, that is to ſay, a Token, or a Signe of Chriſts Body: this Doctor Marcus imagineth of himſelfe, that S. Baſil ſpeaketh thus of the Bread, before it be conſecrate. A vere Child would not ſo Childiſhly haue gheſſed at his Authors meaning. Yet M. Harding herein ſeemeth not much to miſlike his iudgement. Howbeit he knoweth that the Bread before Conſecration, is neither Sacrament, nor Signe of Chriſts Body: no more then any other common Bakers Bread. Otherwiſe, it ſhould be a Signe, and ſignifie nothing; and a Sacrament, before it were Conſecrate, and made a Sacrament.

Steph. Gardiner. ad Obiect. 185.

Yet D. Steuen Gardiner ſeemeth to conſider better, and more aduiſedly of the matter. For he thinketh it likely, that Baſils Liturgy was diſordred, and that ſet behind, that ſhould haue bin before: and that one ignorant Simple Scribe, corrupted all thoſe bokes throwout the whole world. M. Harding ſaith, S Baſil calleth the Bread ἀντίτυπον, a Signe or Token, before it be perfitly Conſecrate: As if there were two ſorts of Conſecration, the one perfit, the other Unperfit. And yet he knoweth, it is commonly holden in the Schooles, that the very beginning, and end of Conſecration is wrought, not by degrees, but in an Inſtant. Thus Conſecration, is no Conſecration: No Sacrament, is a Sacrament: That is a Signe, is no Signe: that is no Signe, is a Signe: Bokes be corrupted and diſordred: That commeth after, that ſhould goe before: and that is before, that ſhould come after. And yet all theſe ſhifts will ſcarſely ſerue to helpe out a Common Error.

The 181. Vntruth. For this Infallible Faith was vnknowne to the Primitiue Church, and openly refuſed of the Greeke Church in the Councel of Florence.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuiſion.

Sith for this point of our Religion, we haue ſo good authority, (181) and being aſſured of the Infallible faith of the Church, declared by the teſtimonies of theſe worthy Fathers of diuers ages, and quarters of the world: we may wel ſay with the ſame Church againſt M. Iewel, that in this Sacrament after Conſecration, there remaineth nothing of that, which was before, but only the accidents, and ſhewes, without the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine.

The certainty of this Article reſteth only vpon the moſt vncertaine ground of Tranſubſtantiation. The Determination whereof, for ſo much as it is not much more then three hundred yeres old, nor neceſſarily gathered of the force of Gods Word, as Duns himſelfe confeſſeth, nor euer any where receiued, ſauing only in the Church of Rome, therefore is neither ſo Infallible, as M. Harding maketh it, nor ſo Ancient, nor ſo Catholique.

Time will not ſuffer me, to ſay ſo much, as might be ſaid to the contrary. S. Paul acknowledgeth very Bread remaining ſtill in the Sacrament, and that ſuch Bread, as may be deuided, and Broken: which words cannot without Blaſphemy be ſpoken of the Bodie of Chriſt it ſelfe, but only of the very Materiall Bread. Chriſt likewiſe after Conſecration, acknowledgeth the remaining of very Wine, and that ſuch Wine, as is preſſed of the grape. For thus he ſaith: I will drinke no more of this Generation of the Vine. Chryſoſtome ſaith: In ſimilitudinem Corporis, & Sanguinis, Chriſtus nobis panem, & Vinum, ſecundùm ordinem Melchiſedech oſtendit in Sacramento: Chriſt ſhewed vs (not accidents, or Qualities, but) Bread, and Wine in the Sacrament, according to the order of Melchiſedech, as all Likeneſſe, or Figure of his Body and Blood. Againe he ſaith: Chriſtus quando hoc Myſterium tradidit, Vinum tradidit. Non bibam, inquit, ex hac Generatione Vitis: quæ certè Vinum producit, non Aquam: Chriſt when he deliuered this Myſtery, deliuered (not Shewes or Accidents, but) Wine. Chriſt ſaith (after Conſecration) I will no more drinke of this Generation of the Vine. Doubtleſſe the Vine bringeth foorth Wine, and not Water. Cyrillus ſaith: Chriſtus credentibus Diſcipulis Fragmenta Panis dedit: Chriſt gaue, to his Faithfull Diſciples, Fragments, or Peeces of Bread. I paſſe by S. Cyprian, S. Auguſtine Gelaſius, Theodoretus, and other Ancient & Holy Fathers: according vnto whoſe moſt plaine words, and authorities, if there be Bread remaining in the Sacrament, then is there ſomewhat elſe beſides Accidents. What M. Harding may ſay, that ſaith ſo much, it is eaſie to ſee: but that Shewes and Accidents, hang emptie without the Subſtance of Bread and Wine, none of the old Fathers euer ſaid.

Chryſoſt. in Matt. hom. 85.

Cyrillus in Iohan. li. 4. c. 14.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuiſion.

And this is a matter to a Chriſtian man not hard to beleeue. For if it pleaſe God the almightie Creator, in the condition, and ſtate of things thus to ordeine, that ſubſtances created beare and ſuſteine accidents, why may not he by his almightie power conſerue and keepe alſo Accidents without Subſtance, ſith that the very Heathen Philoſophers repute it for an Abſurditie to ſay, Primam cauſam non poſſe id præſtare ſolam, quod poſſit cum ſecunda: that is to ſay, that the firſt cauſe, (whereby they vnderſtand God) cannot doe that alone, which he can doe with the ſecond cauſe, whereby they meane a Creature?

Gods omnipotent Power to beare vp Accidents.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Cicero ſaith: A ſimple Poet, when hee cannot tell, how to ſhift his matters, imagineth ſome God ſuddenly to come in place a little to aſtonne the people: and there an end. So M. Harding, finding himſelfe much encumbred with his Accidents, is faine to bring in God with his whole Omnipotent Power, to hold them vp. Children in their Schooles are taught to know, that an Accident hath no Being without a Subiect. Which rule being otherwiſe euermore true, hath Exception, as M. Harding ſaith, onely in this Sacrament, wherein be the Accidents, and Shewes of Bread, and Wine, and yet no Subiect. For they are not in the Bread: becauſe (as he ſaith) that is gone: nor in the Aire, for that cannot bee ſeene: nor in Chriſts Body, for that is not round, &c. So there is a white thing, yet nothing is white: And a round thing, yet nothing is round. Therefore, foraſmuch as theſe Accidents neither are able to ſtand alone, nor haue any Subiect there to reſt in, for that cauſe, M. Harding ſaith, they be ſuſteined by the Power of God.

One ſaith: Nec Deus interſit, niſi dignus vindice nodus inciderit: Neuer bring foorth any God in a Tragedie, to play a part, vnleſſe it be vpon ſome occaſion of great matter, meet for a God to take in hand. S. Paul ſaith: Deus portat omnia verbo virtutis ſuæ: God beareth all things by the Word of his power. And the Heathen Poets imagine, that Atlas holdeth vp the Heauens. But for God the Creator, and Cauſe of all Cauſes, to come from Heauen, to hold vp Accidents, it ſeemeth a very ſimple ſeruice.

Hebræ. 1.

M. Hardings reaſon ſtandeth thus: God is Omnipotent:
Ergo, Accidents in the Sacrament ſtand without Subiect.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuiſion.

And that this being of Accidents without Subſtance, or Subiect in this Sacrament, vnder which, the Bread not remaining, the Body of Chriſt is Preſent, may the rather be beleeued: it is to be conſidered, that this thing tooke place at the firſt Creation of the world, after the opinion of ſome Doctours: who do affirme, that that firſt light, which was at the beginning vntill the fourth day (182) Was not in any Subiect, but ſuſteined by the power of God, as him liked. For that firſt light, and the ſame, were as whiteneſſe, and a Body whited, ſaith S. Baſil. Neither then was Wicleffe yet borne, who might teach them, that the power of God cannot put an Accident without a Subiect. For ſo he ſaith in his Booke De Apoſtaſia, Cap 5. as Coclæus reporteth. Heereof it appeareth out of what root the Goſpellers of our Countrie ſpring. Who ſmatching of the ſap of that wicked tree, and heereby ſhewing their kind, appoint bounds, and borders to the power of God, that is infinite, and incomprehenſible. And thus by thoſe Fathers we may conclude, that if God can ſuſteine and keepe Accidents with Subſtance, he can ſo do without Subſtance.

The 182. vntruth. For S. Baſil plainly ſaith the contrary.

Baſilius hexameron hom. 6. Damaſc. li. 2. c. 7. Ioannes Damaſc. li. 1. Hiſt. Barlaam. Gen. 1.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

It is great violence, to force an ancient Father, to beare falſe witneſſe, and ſpecially againſt himſelfe. This report of S. Baſils meaning is as true, as is that long peeuiſh Fable, ſo often alleged vnder the name of Amphilochius, that is to wit, a vaine ſhew without ſubſtance. And becauſe M. Harding onely nameth Damaſcene, and Paulus Burgenſis in his Margin, as being afraid to touch their words, he may remember, that Damaſcene ſaith: Non aliud eſt ignis, quàm lux, vt quidam aiunt: The Fire is nothing elſe, but the light light, as ſome men ſay. And Burgenſis ſaith: Quidam tradunt lucem fuiſſe nubem lucidam: Some men write, that the light was a bright Cloud. By theſe expoſitions it appeareth, that either the Fire, or the Cloud, was a Subiect to receiue the light. Certainly neither Burgenſis, nor Damaſcene, nor Baſil euer ſaid, that the light ſtood without a ſubiect. Therefore that note in the Margin might well haue bene ſpared. But it is an eaſie matter, with ſhew of names to deceiue the ſimple.

Damaſcen. li. 2. cap. 7.

Burgenſis in 1. Cap. Gen.

Baſil. in Hexameron. hom. 6.

S. Baſil ſaith: The light was in the world before the Sunne was made. Therefore it was, and had his being without the Sunne. His words ſtand thus: Aliud quidem eſt, &c. The brightneſſe of the light is one thing, and the Body ſubiect vnto the ſame (that is, the Sunne) is an other thing. And ſay not now vnto me: It is impoſſible to diuide theſe things aſunder. For I ſay not, that thou, or I can poſſiblie diuide the bodie of the Sunne from the light. Yet notwithſtanding the things that we may part aſunder onely by Imagination, the ſame things God the Creator of Nature, is able to ſunder verily, and indeed. Hereof M. Harding gathereth his reaſons thus:

The Light was not in the Sunne: Ergo, It was in Nothing.
It was not in the Sunne: Ergo, It was not in the Aire.
It was not in the Sunne: Ergo, It was an Accident without a Subiect.

This errour commeth of the Equiuocation, or double taking of this Word, Being in. For one thing may be in an other, as in an Inſtrument, as the Light is in a Candle: which is the ſimilitude, that Baſil vſeth. The ſame thing may be in an other, as in a Subiect: as Light in the Aire. This diuerſitie conſidered, now let vs weigh M. Hardings reaſon.

The Light, ſaith he, was not in the Sunne, as in an Inſtrument to carry it about the world: Ergo, It was not in the Aire, as in a Subiect.

This argument ſeemeth very light. A man may eaſily, and ſenſibly with his fingers feele the folly of it in the Darke. Verily, S. Baſils words to the contrary ſhine ſo cleere, that I maruell M. Harding could not, or would not ſee them. For thus he writeth before in the ſame Booke: Baſilius in Hexamer. hom. 2. περιελάμπετο δὲ ὁ ἀὴρ μᾶλλον δὲ ἐγκεκραμένον ἑαυτῷ ὅλον ὅλῳ εἶχε τὸ φῶς, Illuſtrabatur Aër: vel potiùs lumen ſibi totum, & in totum permiſtum habuit: The Aire was lightened: or rather it had the whole Light wholly mingled with it ſelfe. Againe he ſaith: The World was inuiſible, becauſe the Aire was without Light. S. Baſil ſaith: The Light was in the Aire, and that wholly thorow the whole, as in a Subiect: Yet M. Harding forceth S. Baſil to ſay contrary to himſelfe: The Light was onely an Accident without Subiect, and was ſtaied in nothing. Now iudge thou, good Chriſtian Reader, what credit thou maiſt giue to M. Hardings words in reporting of the Ancient Doctours.

ἡ διακρίνη αὐ τῷ, διὰ τὸ αὐ τὸ πᾶν εἶναι τὸν ἀέρα. ὅλος δὲ ἦλν.

But he ſaith: Gods power is Infinite, and Incomprehenſible. Therefore he is able to ſuſtaine Accidents. This errour ſpringeth of miſunderſtanding S. Baſils words. For whereas S. Baſil writeth thus: τότε ἡ ἡμέρα ἐγένετο οὐ κίνησιν ἡλίου καὶ, ἀλλὰ ἀναχυθείσης τῆς πρωτογόνου φωτὸς ἐκείνης ἰλαρότητος: Dies tum fiebat, non per motum Solarem, ſed diffuſo illo primigenio Lumine: The day was made, not by the mouing or paſſing of the Sunne, but by powring abroad the firſt Light. It appeareth, that in ſtead of (ἀναχυθείσης) which is (powred abroad) M. Harding by errour read (ἀνεχομένης) which is, Borne vp, or Suſtained. But hee may not well maintaine his Accidents by ſhifting of words, or by miſunderſtanding, or corrupting of his Doctours.

That is here alleged of Wiclife, and of his offpring, as it ſheweth much Choler, ſo it maketh ſmall proofe. We know, that God is Omnipotent, and able, not onely to ſuſteine Accidents, but alſo to reſtore the Dead from the graue, yea, although he be putrified within himſelfe, and fight againſt the Spirit of God. But Tertullian ſaith: Non quia omnia poteſt facere, ideo credendum eſt, illum feciſſe: ſed, an fecerit, requirendum: We may not beleeue, that God hath done all things, becauſe he can do them: But rather we muſt ſee, whether he haue done them, or no. For Arguments taken of Gods Omnipotent Power, were a ready Buckler in old times, to ſerue Praxeas, and Eutyches, and other like Heretikes.

For if any deuout perſon require to be partaker with the Prieſt, being woorthily diſpoſed, and examined, he is not turned off, but with all gentleneſſe admitted. And in this caſe, the Prieſt is not to be charged with receiuing all alone. Albeit, reſpect had to the thing receiued, how many ſoeuer receiue, it is all, of all, and all of euery one receiued. Concerning the breaking of the Sacrament, and the diuiding of it in three parts: Firſt, it is broken, by the Prieſt, that we may know our Lord In Fractione Panis, In the breaking of the Bread, as the two Diſciples acknowledged him, to whom Ieſus appeared in the day of his Reſurrection, as they were going to Emmaus. And alſo that thereby the Paſſion of Chriſt may be repreſented to our remembrance, at which his precious Body was for our ſinnes broken, rent, and torne on the Croſſe. The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

I marueil M. Harding would ſo ſlenderly paſſe this matter ouer, for that it is thought to make much both againſt his Tranſubſtantiation, and alſo againſt his Priuate Maſſe, which are both Keies and Lockes of his whole Religion. For firſt of all, the Breaking it ſelfe ſeemeth to argue, that there is very Bread there remaining to be Broken. And albeit, as it is reported by Petrus Lombardus: Some held, that there is in the Sacrament a very Reall breaking, notwithſtanding there be nothing there to be Broken: Some, that the Body of Chriſt it ſelfe is there Broken, and that verily, and indeed, without any helpe or ſhift of Figure: and Some, that there is nothing Broken, but onely the Shewes, and Accidents: and Some others, that there is no maner Breaking there at all, notwithſtanding vnto our eies, and ſenſes there appeare a Breaking: Yet the Holy Euangeliſts witneſſe plainly: That Chriſt tooke Bread, and Bleſſed it, and Brake it: and S. Paul ſaith: (Not the Accidents of Bread, but) The Bread, that we Breake, is the Participation of Chriſts Body. And in the Primitiue Church, the very Supper of Chriſt, was commonly called the Breaking (not of Accidents, but) of Bread. And Cyrillus calleth the Broken Portions of the Sacrament, Fragmenta Panis, Fragments, or Peeces of Bread.

Further, by this ſame Ceremonie Gerardus Lorichius, one of M. Hardings Doctors, proueth, that euery Maſſe ought to be common, and none priuate. For thus he writeth: Diuiditur Hoſtia, vt non ſolùm ipſe Sacerdos Miſſæ officium faciens, ſed & Miniſtri quoque, imò omnis populus aſtans, participet: The Hoſt is broken, that, not only the Prieſt, that miniſtreth the Maſſe, but alſo the Deacons, yea and all the people ſtanding by, may Communicate. Likewiſe ſaith Durandus: In Primitiua, &c. In the Primitiue Church, the Prieſt receiued one portion, and the Deacons an other: and the third was miniſtred to all the People that was preſent. And therefore Dionyſius ſaith, as M. Harding hath alleged him: Pontifex opertum Panem aperit, & in fruſtra concidit: The Biſhop vncouereth the Breed, that ſtood couered, and cutteth it in peeces. Heare note alſo by the way: Dionyſius ſaith not, The Biſhop cutteth the Shewes, or Accidents, but the Bread in peeces. I grant, this tradition was vſed in the Apoſtles time: but it is vtterly broken, and aboliſhed in the Church of Rome at this time: and therefore it ſtandeth M. Harding in ſmall ſtead: vnleſſe it be to ſhew the world, how boldly he, and his Church haue broken the Traditions, and Orders of the Primitiue Church of God. Neither is there any maner mention in Dionyſius, either of the breaking in three parts, or of any theſe Myſticall ſignifications. Againe, the woords of Dionyſius be otherwiſe then M. Harding reporteth them. For he ſaith not, In fruſtra concidens: Diuiding it in peeces, (which perhaps M. Harding would haue vs to vnderſtand of three) but, In multa concidens: Cutting it in many peeces. And to that vſe ſerued a knife, which, as it appeareth by Chryſoſtomes Liturgie, or Communion, was called Sacra Lancea. For in ſuch ſort the Bread was cut in peces, not that one man might receiue the whole, but that it might ſuffice the Congregation. And therefore it is decreed in an Epiſtle that beareth the name of Clement: Let ſo many Pots, or Portions be prouided, as may be ſufficient for all the people.

Clement. Ep. 2.

This, I ſay, was the cauſe of this Ceremonie: and not, as M. Harding vainly gheſeth, To know our Lord in the breaking of Bread.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

The Myſterie of Breaking of Accidents.

Now touching the diuiding of the Sacrament in three parts, it may appeare to be a Tradition of the Apoſtles, or otherwiſe a cuſtome verie ancient, foraſmuch as Sergius the Biſhop of Rome, who liued within foure ſcore yeeres of the ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, that M. Iewel referreth vs vnto, wrote of the Myſterie of that Breaking, or Diuiding the outward Forme of Bread, and declared the Signification of the ſame.

The Fable of Amphilochius.

It is no ſmall argument of the antiquitie of this obſeruation, that S. Baſil, as Amphilochius writeth of him, diuided the Sacrament in three parts at his Maſſe, as is aboue rehearſed. And where as Sergius ſaith, that the portion of the Hoſt, which is put into the Chalice, betokeneth the Body of Chriſt that is now riſen againe, and the portion which is receiued and eaten, ſheweth his Body yet walking on the earth, and that other portion remaining on the Altar, ſignifieth his Body in the Sepulchre: what, I pray you, is there heerein, that any man ſhould be offended withall? I acknowledge that the Myſterie heereof is otherwiſe of ſome declared, and of all to this end, to put vs in minde of the benefits purchaſed to vs by Chriſt in his Bodie.

Platina. Vrſpergenſis.

M. Harding, of good policie, to win credit, fathereth all his Myſticall fantaſies vpon the Apoſtles. Of Sergius the firſt it is written, that he deuiſed the Agnus Dei to be ſong, at the breaking, and diſtribution of the Myſteries: but of the breaking of the ſame in three parts, notwithſtanding it be ſtrongly auouched by M. Harding, yet of Sergius the firſt, there is written nothing. Indeed, Gratian allegeth this Decree in the name of Sergius the Pope: but without Date, or any maner further addition. And therefore it may as well be Sergius the ſecond, that was called, Os Porci: Or Sergius the third, that toke Formoſus his predeceſſour, being dead, out of the graue, and beheaded him, and threw out his carcaſe into the Tiber. Therefore this matter, for ought that may appeare, beareth ſmall certaintie.

But let vs grant, that Gratian meant Sergius the firſt: yet was he welnere ſeuen hundred yeeres after Chriſt. Neither were it any great inconuenience, to ſay: That, as he was able to deuiſe theſe Myſticall ſignifications, ſo he was alſo able to deuiſe the number of parts, and maner of breaking. But what great Myſteries there may be in this breaking of outward Formes and Accidents, that M. Harding imagineth, I leaue vnto himſelfe to conſider.

The Fable of Amphilochius hath beene ſix times alleaged by M. Harding in this one booke, to ſundry purpoſes: and yet he himſelfe knoweth, it is but a very peeuiſh fable. Who ſo liſteth to know it further, may finde it anſwered in the firſt Article, and in the 33. Diuiſion.

But where as this Sergius ſaith: Triforme eſt Corpus Domini: The Body of our Lord is of three Formes: Whatſoeuer his meaning therein were, his ſpeech is very ſtrange, or rather monſtrous. For the Body of Chriſt is not of ſo many Formes, but only One, and Vniforme. One of theſe portions, ſaith Sergius, ſignifieth Chriſt after his Reſurrection: The ſecond, Chriſt walking in the Earth: The third, Chriſt lying in his graue. All this, ſaith M. Harding, is Holy, and Myſticall.

Durand. lib. 4. cap. 53.

Howbeit, ſome there were, that liked not ſo greatly theſe imaginations: and therefore of themſelues deuiſed others. Some ſaid: The firſt part ſignifieth the Saints in Heauen: The ſecond, the Faithfull, that be aliue: The third, the Soules in Purgatorie. Some ſay: Theſe three parts ſignifie the three ſtates of Chriſt, Mortall, Dead, and Immortall. Some: That they ſignifie the three ſubſtantiall parts of Chriſt, his Godhead, his Soule, and his Bodie. Some others, that they ſignifie the three perſons in the Trinitie, the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt. And I maruell, there was none, that could ſay, they ſignifie the three Patriarkes, Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob. Thus hauing vtterly loſt the very vſe of the breaking of the Myſteries, they reteine a bare Ceremonie thereof: and yet are ſo farre out of knowledge of the ſame, that they cannot agree among themſelues, what to make of it: I meane, neither what they Breake, nor wherefore they Breake it. This Sergius diſagreeth from Bonauentura, from Durandus, and all others: yet he liketh M. Harding beſt of all.

And what hurt, ſaith he, is there heerein? Or wherefore ſhould any man heerewith be offended? Verily in the Houſe of God, that thing is hurtfull, that doth no good. All the Ceremonies of the Church ought to be cléere, and liuely, and able to edifie. And if this Mysticall Ceremonie be not hurtfull, why then doth M. Harding himselfe breake it: and that, not of ignorance, or oblivion, but wittingly, and willingly, and as often as he saith his Masse? For Sergius saith: One of the three portions ought to be reserued vpon the Altar, vntill the Masse be done: But M. Harding contrary, both to Sergius, and also to his Mysticall Significations, receiueth all the parts together, and reserueth none, and that by the warrant of the Glosse in that place, which is quite contrarie to the Text. Why doth he thus dissemble, and so openly mocke the World? If this Ceremonie bée good, why doth he breake it? If it be ill, why would he haue vs to kéepe it? The ghesse, that M. Harding vseth herein, séemeth very simple: Pope Sergius deuised these Mysticall meanings, seuen hundred yeares after the Apostles time: Ergo, this order of Breaking came from the Apostles. 1. Corin. 14.

De Const. dist. 2. Triforme. In Glossa.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuision.

Now that this custome, or Mysticall Ceremonie, was not first ordeined by Sergius, for ought that can be gathered, but of him expounded onely touching the Mysterie of it, as vsed before his time, from the beginning of the Church, no one ancient Councel, or Authour found, vpon whom it may be Fathered, of good reason, sith it hath (184) generally beene obserued, we may referre the Institution of it to the Apostles: and that according to the minde of S. Augustine, whose notable saying for that behalfe is this. Quod Vniuersa tenet Ecclesia, nec in Conciliis constitutum, sed semper retentum est, non nisi authoritate Apostolica traditum, rectissimè creditur. What, saith he, the Vniuersall Church keepeth, neither, hath beene ordained in Councels, but hath alwaies beene obserued: of good right we beleeue, it hath beene deliuered (to the Church) as a Tradition, by the Authoritie of the Apostles. The 184. Vntruth. For it was neuer generally obserued.

To conclude, if any sparke of godlinesse remaine in our deceiued Countrimen, and brethren, they will not scorne, and despise this Ancient Ceremonie of Diuiding the Sacrament in three parts at the Blessed Sacrifice of the Masse, whereof any occasion of euill is not onely not ministred but rather contrariwise, whereby we are admonished, and stirred to tender our owne Soules health, and to render thanks to God, for the great benefit of our Redemption.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

There is no mention made, neither in Old Father, nor in ancient Councell of this maner of Breaking of the Sacrament: Ergo, (saith M. Harding) It came first vndoubtedly from the Apostles. The contrary hereof were much more likely. For he might rather haue said thus: There is no mention made of it in any old Father, or Councell: Therefore it came not from the Apostles.

And, where as he saith: It hath beene euery where Vniuersally obserued: It is a great vntruth: as God willing, it shall appéere. And therefore S. Augustines rule serueth nothing to this purpose.

For first, as M. Harding is deceaued in the maner of Breaking, so is he also deceiued in the quantitie of the Bread, imagining, it was a little thin round Cake, such as of late hath bene vsed in the Church of Rome: Which (Durandus saith) must be round like a Penie: either because Iudas betraied Christ for some like kinde of Coyne: or, because it is written: Domini est Terra, & plenitudo eius: The Earth is the Lords, and the fulnesse thereof. But indéed it was a great Cake, so large, and so thicke, that all the Congregation might receiue of it. Durandus himselfe saith: In Primatiua Ecclesia offerebant Vnum Magnum Panem, & omnibus sufficientem: quod adhuc Græci seruare dicuntur: In the Primatiue Church they offered one great Cake, that was sufficient for all the people: which thing, they say, the Greeks do continue still. In Chrysostomes Liturgie, or Communion, we sée both the Forme of the Bread, and also the order of cutting, or diuiding it with a knife. Gentianus Heruetus in the Description thereof, saith: Est Panis Crassus, & Fermentatus, & Figura propemodum Sphærica: It is a thicke Cake, and Leauened, and of Forme in maner round. It appeareth by S. Gregorie, that it was a great Cake, such as men vsed commonly at their Tables: which thing appéareth also, by that the Heretikes called Artotyrita, added Chéese vnto it: and so Ministred the Communion in Bread, and Chéese. And Paulinus sending such a Cake vnto S. Augustine, sent also this greeting withall: Panem vnum, quem vnanimitatis indicio misimus Charitatituæ, rogamus, vt accipiendo benedicas: This one loafe, or Cake, which I haue sent vnto you in token of vnitie, I beseech you, receiuing the same, to blesse it. And perhaps Ignatius in respect hereof said: Vnus est Panis pro omnibus Fractus: There is one loafe, or Cake broken for all. And S. Basil: Idem est virtute, siue vnam partem quis accipiat à Sacerdote, siue plures partes simul: It is all one in effect, whether a man take one onely part of the Priest, or many parts together. It is likely, he vseth these words, Part, and Parts, in respect of one whole. Durandus saith: That in his time, the Priest in some Churches diuiding the Sacrament into three portions, receiued one himselfe, and Ministred the other two to the Deacon, and Subdeacon. The like is recorded by Alexander de Hales, and sundry others. All this M. Harding dissembleth, and palleth by, and séeth nothing, but a Mysticall Ceremonie.

Now, this Cake being ſo large, ſo thicke, and ſo maſſie, and able to ſuffice ſo many, we may not well thinke, that the Prieſt could conueniently diuide it into three parts, and receiue all alone. But rather as I haue already ſaid, the breaking thereof, is an inuincible proofe of the holy Communion, and a manifeſt condemnation of M. Hardings Priuate Maſſe. For it was not diuided into parts, to the end to ſignifie theſe Myſticall Fantaſies, that M. Harding, and others haue imagined: but to be diſtributed, and deliuered to the people. Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith: Etiam Euchariſtiam, cùm quidam, vt mos eſt, diuiſerint, permittunt vnicuique ex populo, partem eius ſumere: After that certaine, (that is, the Prieſts) haue diuided the Sacrament, they ſuffer euery of the people to take a portion of it. So S. Auguſtine ſaith: Ad diſtribuendum comminuitur: It is broken, that it may bee diſtributed. And againe: Confringunt oblationes in Euchariſtiam: They diuide the Oblations into the Sacrament (that the people may Communicate). So Dionyſius: Velatum Panem in multa concidens, & vnitatem Calicis omnibus impertiens: Diuiding the Bread, that ſtood couered, into many parts, and deliuering the Vnitie of the Cup vnto all the people. In S. Baſils Communion, taken out of the Syrian tongue, it is written thus: Sacerdos frangit, & Signat: Diaconus proclamat, Communionem: The Prieſt breaketh, and Signeth (the Sacrament) The Deacon crieth aloud, The Communion. And what needeth the witneſſe of ſo many? S. Paul ſaith: panis, quem frangimus, nonne Communicatio Corporis Chriſti eſt? The bread, that we breake, is it not the Communication of the Body of Chriſt? Which words Anſelmus expoundeth thus: Panis, quem nos Sacerdotes Frangimus, & quem vnũ in multas partes Diuidimus, ad deſignandam Charitatem accipientium: The Bread, that we being Prieſts doe breake, and which Bread, being one Cake we diuide into many portions, to expreſſe the loue (or vnitie) of the receiuers. Likewiſe Lorichius: Panis, quem frangimus, Participatio Domini eſt, hoc eſt, Fractio Significat, nos eſſe vnum Corpus: The Bread, that we breake, is the Participation of the Lord: that is to ſay: The Breaking ſignifieth, that all we are one Body. It appeareth hereby, that the Sacrament was thus diuided into parts, not to the intent we ſhould thereby learne new Myſteries, but that the people might receiue it.

To be ſhort: This Ceremonie of three Portions ſo broken, and ſo receiued cannot be found, neither in the Scriptures, nor in any of the old Fathers, or Councels: It beareth witneſſe both againſt Tranſubſtantiation, and alſo againſt Priuate Maſſe: The beſt learned of that ſide cannot yet agree, neither whence it ſprang firſt, nor what it meaneth: The people neither ſeeth it, nor knoweth it: They themſelues, that ſo highly would ſeem to fauour it, contrary both to Sergius Decree, and alſo to his Myſticall Expoſition, in their Maſſes daily, and openly are bold to breake it. Now iudge then, good Chriſtian Reader, hereof indifferently to iudge, whether M. Harding, or his Countrimen be deceiued. Verily S. Auguſtine ſaith: If the cauſes, that firſt mooued, and led men to deuiſe ſuch Ceremonies, can hardly, or not at all be knowen, whenſoeuer opportunitie is offered, let them be cut off, and abliſhed without ſtaggering.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuiſion.

In this Article we doe agree with M. Iewel in ſome reſpect. For we confeſſe, it can not be auouched by Scripture, ancient Councell, Doctour, or example of the primitiue Church, that whoſoeuer had ſaid the Sacrament is a Figure, a Pledge, a Token, or a Remembrance of Chriſts Bodie, had therefore been iudged for an Heretike. (185) No man of any learning euer wrote ſo vnlearnedly. Much leſſe to impute hereſie to any man for ſaying thus, hath beene any of the higheſt myſteries, or greateſt keyes of our religion, with which vntrueth M. Iewel goeth about to deface the trueth. Wherefore this Article ſeemeth to haue beene put in, either of malice toward the Church, or of ignorance, or only to fill vp the heape, for lacke of better stuffe. Perusing the works of the ancient and learned Fathers we finde, that often times they call the Sacrament a Figure, a Signe, a Token, a Mysterie, a Samplar. The words of them vsed to this purpose in their learned tongues are these, Figura, Signum, Symbolum, Mysterium, Exemplar, ἀντίτυπον, Imago &c. By which they meane not to diminish the truth of Christs Bodie in the Sacrament, but to signifie the Secret maner of this being in the same. Sacramentum.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

It appeareth, that these mens Doctrine is much mutable, and subiect to change. For notwithstanding they be now growen into some better liking of these termes, Figure, Signe, Signification, Token, &c. Yet not long sithence they seemed to be otherwise resolued: and thought themselues able to allege Theophylactus, Damascenus, Euthymius, and other great matter, to disproue the same. D. Tonstall the more to make the matter odious, saith thus: If the Sacrament be a Figure of Christs Bodie, then was a Figure Crucified for vs, and not Christ. And whatsoeuer they were that vsed this word, Figura, in this matter of the Sacrament, D Steuen Gardiner scornfully calleth them Figuratores, Figurers. And M. Iohn White, late Schoolemaster, and after Bishop of Winton, writeth thus, in great scorne against that most Reuerend learned Father D. Peter Martyr, touching the same: Audio mille locis Corpus: non audio (Petre) Signa, Tropos que, tuo nec Symbola nata cerebro: I heare Bodie, Bodie, in a thousand places: But of Signes, Figures, Tokens, that came only out of thy head, I heare nothing. Which words notwithstanding, in all the ancient learned Fathers, by M. Hardings owne confession, if hee had had eares to heare, hee might haue heard. Therefore it was neither Malice, nor Ignorance, nor Increase of heape, nor Want of other stuffe; but the fondnesse and follie of M. Hardings side, that added this Article to the rest. Cuthb. Tonst. de Eucharist. lib. 1. Marcus Constantius.

But, forasmuch as many either of simplicitie, or of the great reuerence they beare towards that holy Mysterie, haue perswaded themselues, that Christs words touching the Institution thereof, must of necessitie be taken plainly, and as they sound, that is to say, without Figure: and, forasmuch also as S. Augustine saith: It is a dangerous matter, and a Seruitude of the Soule, to take the Signe in stead of the thing that is Signified: Therefore, to auoid confusion, lest the Simple be deceiued, taking one thing for another, I thinke it necessary, in few words, and plainly to touch, what the Ancient learned Fathers haue written in this behalfe. Aug. de Doctr. Christiana, lib. 3. cap. 5.

And, to passe by, that Christ himselfe saith, Do this in my Remembrance: And, that S. Paul saith, Ye shall declare the Lords Death vntill he come: And likewise, to passe by a great many other Circumstances, whereby the truth hereof may soone appeare; The nature, and meaning of a Sacrament of the Old Fathers is thus defined: Sacramentum est Sacrum Signum: A Sacrament is a holy Token. Which Definition is common, and agreeth indifferently to all Sacraments. Therefore S. Augustine saith: Signa, cùm ad res Diuinas pertinent, Sacramenta appellantur: Signes, when they be applied vnto godly things, are called Sacraments. And the cause, why Sacraments are ordeined, is this: That by meane of such Visible and Outward things, we may be led to the consideration of Heauenly things. Therefore Dionysius saith: Non est possibile animo nostro, ad immaterialem illam ascendere Cœlestium Hierarchiarum contemplationem, nisi ea quæ secundùm ipsum est, materiali manu-ductione vtatur: It is not possible for our minde, to lift vp it selfe to the Spirituall contemplation of Heauenly things, vnlesse it haue the Corporall leading of such naturall things, as be about it. Likewise againe: Nos Imaginibus Sensibilibus, quantum fieri potest, ad Cœlestes contemplationes adducimur: By Sensible Images we are led, as much as may be, to Heauenly contemplations. And, touching this holy Mysterie of Christs Bodie and Blood, the cause of the Institution thereof was, as Chrysostome saith, to keepe vs still in Remembrance of Christs great benefit, and of our Saluation. Which thing S. Hierome openeth in this sort: Vltimam nobis memoriam reliquit. Vt si quis peregrè proficiscens, aliquod pignus apud eum, quem diligit, relinquat: vt, quoties illud viderit, possit eius beneficia & amicitiam memorare: quod ille, si perfectè dilexit, non potest videre sine ingenti dolore, & sine fletu. He left vnto vs his last Remembrance. As if a man going a farre iourney, leaues a token with his friend, to the end that he seeing the same, may Remember his benefits, and his friendship: which token that friend, if he loue vnfainedly, cannot see without great motion of his minde, and without teares. So saith S. Basil: Quid vtilitatis habent hæc Verba? Nempe, vt Edentes, & Bibentes, perpetuò memores simus eius, qui pro nobis mortuus est, ac Resurrexit: What profit haue these words? Verily, that wee Eating, and Drinking, may euermore be mindfull of him, that Died for vs, and Rose againe. So S. Ambrose: Quia morte Domini liberati sumus, huius rei memores, in Edendo, & Potando, Carnem, & Sanguinem, quæ pro nobis oblata fuit, significamus: Because wi are made free by the Death of our Lord, being mindfull thereof, *1. For the better vnderstanding of such places, where these termes are vsed in the matter of the Sacrament, the Doctrine of S. Augstine In Sententijs Prosperi, may serue verie well, which is thus. Hoc est quod dicimus, quod omnibus modis approbare contendimus, Sacrificium Ecclesiæ duobus confici, duobus constare, visibili Elementorum Specie, & inuisibili Domini nostri Iesu Christi Carne & Sanguine: Sacramento, (id est, externo Sacro Signo) & re Sacramenti, id est, Corpore Christi, &c. This is that we say (saith he) which by all meanes we goe about to proue that the Sacrifice of the Church is made of two things, and consisteth of two things, of the Visible shape of the elements (which are Bread and Wine) and the inuisible Flesh and Blood of our Lord Iesus Christ: Of the Sacrament, (that is the outward Signe) and the thing of the Sacrament, to wit, of the Body of Christ, &c. By this we vnderstand, that this word (Sacrament) is of the Fathers two waies taken. First, for the whole Substance of the Sacrament, as it consisteth of the outward formes, and also withall of the very Body of Christ verily present, as S. Augustine saith, the Sacrifice of the Church to consist (186) of these two. Secondly, it is taken so, as it is distinct from that hidden, and diuine thing of the Sacrament, that is to say, for the outward Formes only, which are the holy Signes of Christs very Body present vnder them contained. Whereof we must gather, that whensoeuer the Fathers, doe call this most excellent Sacrament, a Figure, or a Signe, (187) they would be vnderstanded to meane none otherwise, than of those outward Formes, and not of Christs Body it selfe, which is there present not Typically, or Figuratiuely, but Really, and Substantially. Vnlesse perhaps respect be had, not to the Body it selfe present, but to the maner of presence, as sometimes it hapneth.

The 186. Vntruth. For S. Augustine neuer said so.

The 187. Vntruth For none of the learned Fathers euer called the outward Forme a Sacrament. Christs Body it selfe is a Figure.

So is S. Basil to be vnderstanded, in Lyturgia, calling the Sacrament, Antitypon, that is, a Samplar, or a Figure, and that after Consecration, as the Copies that be now abroad, be found to haue. So is Eustathius to be taken, that great learned Father of the Greeke Church, who so constantly defended the Catholique Faith against the Arians, cited of Epiphanius, in 7. Synodo. Albeit concerning S. Basil, Damascene, and Euthymius, likewise Epiphanius in the second Nicene Councell, Acti. 6. and Marcus Ephesius, who was present at the Councell of Florence, would haue that place so to be taken before Consecration. (188) As S. Ambrose also, calling it a Figure of our Lords Body and Blood, li. 4. De Sacramentis, cap. 5.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding, as he is content to yéld to these names, Figure, Signe, Token, &c. so he addeth thereto an Exposition of his owne, such, as, I beléeue, he can hardly finde the like in any Ancient Father. Therefore it must be such a Figure, not as the Old Doctors, and learned Fathers haue at any time vsed, but such, as M. Harding can best imagine: and therefore now, not the Old Doctors, but M. Hardings New Figure. Indéed Tertullian saith: Hæretici nudas voces coniecturis, quò volunt rapiunt: Heretiques by their Coniecturall Ghesses, draw bare words whither they list. With such conditions, the wicked Heretique Nestorius was contented to grant Christ to be God: but by his leaud Exposition he made him no God. For thus he said: Non inuidio Christo Diuinitatem suam: Hoc & ego fieri possum, si volo: It greeueth me not, to confesse Christ to be God: I my selfe can be God too, if I list. The Pelagian Heretiques, notwithstanding they were the enemies of Gods Grace, yet being forced by disputation, and conference, were content to yéld, and to confesse the Grace of God. But by their fantasticall Exposition, in the end they made it no Grace at all. In like maner M. Harding, notwithstanding he be driuen by force, to confesse the name of Figure, yet, as he gloſſeth it, with his colours, indeed he maketh it no Figure. Sometimes he ſaith, it is a Figure of Chriſts Body ſecretly being there: Sometimes, it is a Figure of the life to come: Sometimes, Common Bread is a Figure: Sometimes, the Accident, and outward Formes of Bread is a Figure: Sometimes, Chriſts Body Inuiſible, is a Figure of Chriſts Body Viſible: All hitherto M. Harding. Sometimes alſo, it is a Figure of the Church: So ſaith Hoſius: Sacramenta noſtra ſunt quodammodò per Figuram, ipſum Corpus Chriſti, cuius Sacramenta ſunt, id eſt, Eccleſia: Our Sacraments are in a maner, by a Figure, the very Body of Chriſt, whereof they be Sacraments: That is to ſay, Our Sacraments be the Church. Thus many waies theſe men haue ſought to make vp a new kind of Figure, ſuch as neither Grammarian, nor Rhetorician, nor Diuine euer vnderſtood before. Significat, It ſignifieth is as much to ſay, ſaith M. Harding, as, Continet, It conteineth: It is a Figure, that is to ſay, It is the thing it ſelfe: It is a Figure, that is in concluſion, It is no Figure. Yet all theſe Figures in the end be not ſufficient to expound one Figure. Truth is euer certaine, and ſimple: contrariwiſe falſehood is doubtfull, and double.

In Confeſſione Petriconienſi, ca. 39.

How much better were it, for theſe men to ſpeake ſo, as the Old learned Fathers were content to ſpeake? S. Auguſtine ſaith: De ſignis diſſerens hoc dico, ne quis in eis attendat, quòd ſunt, ſed potiùs quòd Signa ſunt, hoc eſt, quòd Significant: Reaſoning of Signes, I ſay thus: let no man conſider in them, that they be, but rather that they be Signes, that is to ſay, that they doe Signifie. Againe he ſaith: Cauendum eſt, ne Figuratam orationem ad Literam accipias. Ad hoc pertinet, quòd Apoſtolus ait, Litera occidit: We muſt beware, that we take not a Figuratiue ſpeech according to the Letter. For thereto it appertaineth, that the Apoſtle ſaith, The Letter killeth. S. Hierome ſaith: Quando dico Tropicam locutionem, doceo, verum non eſſe, quod dicitur, ſed Allegoriæ nubilo Figuratum: When I name a Figuratiue ſpeech, I meane, that the thing, that is ſpoken, is not true, but faſhioned vnder the Cloud of an Allegory. Likewiſe Chryſoſtome: Non alienum oportet eſſe typum à Veritate: alioqui non eſſet Typus: Neque omninò adæquari Veritati: alioqui & veritas ipſa foret: The Figure may not be far off from the Truth: otherwiſe it were no Figure: Neither may it be euen, and one with the Truth: Otherwiſe it would be the Truth, it ſelfe, and ſo no Figure.

These things conſidered, it may ſoone appeare, how faithfully, and how well to his purpoſe M. Harding alleageth this place of S. Auguſtine: Hoc eſt, quod dicimus, &c. This is it, that we ſay, which we goe about by all meanes to proue, that the Sacrifice of the Church is made of two Things, and ſtandeth of two things: of the Viſible Kind (or Nature) of the Elements, and of the Inuiſible Fleſh, and Blood of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt: Of the Sacrament, The outward Holy Signe, and the thing of the Sacrament, which is the Body of Chriſt. Hereof M. Harding gathereth, that the Body of Chriſt lieth hidden vnder the Accidents. S. Auguſtines words be true: But M. Harding with his gheſſes is much deceiued. For of this word, Specie, he concludeth, that the Subſtance of Bread is gone, and nothing remaining, but only Accidents: and of this word, Inuiſibili, he gathereth, that Chriſts Body is there Really incloſed. And ſo he maketh a Commentary far beſide his Text.

De Conſe. Diſt. 2. Hoc eſt.

But what would he haue ſaid, if he had ſeene these words of S. Hierome: Venit Philippus: Oſtendit ei Ieſum, qui Clauſus Latebat in Litera: Philip came: and ſhewed him Ieſus, that lay hidden in the Letter? Or theſe words in the Second Councel of Nice: Chriſtus ipſe habitat in oſſibus mortuorum: Chriſt himſelfe dwelleth in Deadmens Bones? Or theſe of Angelomus: Deus pater Filium ſuum vnigenitum in Litera Legis, Iudæis neſcientibus, abſconditum habuit: God the Father had his only begotten Sonne Ieſus Chriſt, hidden in the Letter of the Law, the Iewes not knowing it? Would he of theſe words conclude, that Chriſt is Really hidden, either in dead mens Bones, or in the Prophet Eſai, or in the Letter of the Law? Certainly S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh not one Word, neither here, nor elſewhere, neither of Accidents without Subiect, nor of any Reall Preſence. And albeit his words here be not very darke, yet in other places both often, and plainly, he expoundeth himſelfe. For thus he ſaith: Myſteria omnia Interioribus Oculis videnda ſunt, id eſt, Spiritualiter: All Myſteries muſt be conſidered with the Inner Eyes, that is to ſay, Spiritually. And againe: In Sacramentis aliud videtur, aliud intelligitur: In Sacraments we ſee one thing, and we vnderſtand another thing. So Chryſoſtome ſpeaking of the Water of Baptiſme: Ego non aſpectu iudico ea, quæ videntur: The things, that be ſeene in Baptiſme, I conſider not with my Bodily Eie. So likewiſe Origen: Bene Circumciſionem Signum appellauit, quia & in ipſa aliud videbatur, aliud intelligebatur: He called Circumciſion rightly a Signe, for that in it one thing was ſeene, and another thing was vnderſtood. Thus in Sacraments we ſée one thing with our Eie, and another thing with our Mind. With our Bodily eie we ſée the Bread: with our Faith we ſée the Body of Chriſt. Thus the Sacrament conſiſteth of two parts: Of the which the one is before our eies, the other in Heauen: and ſo the one Viſible, and the other Inuiſible.

Species.

So ſaith S. Auguſtine: Non oportet eſſe contentum ſuperficie Literæ, ſed ad intelligentiam peruenire: We may not ſtand content with the outward ſight of the Letter, but muſt goe further vnto the meaning. S. Auguſtine meaneth not by theſe words, that the vnderſtanding of the Scriptures lieth Really hidden vnder the Letter. He himſelfe better expoundeth his own meaning in this wiſe: In veteri Teſtamento occultabatur nouum, quia occultè Significabatur: The New Teſtament was hidden in the Old: becauſe it was ſecretly (or Inuiſibly) Signified in the Old.

Auguſt. contra aduerſarium Leg. & Prophe. li. 2. ca. 5.

Now let vs examine the ground of M. Hardings ghelles. S. Auguſtine nameth Viſibilem Speciem, the Viſible kind of the Elements: Ergo, ſaith M. Harding, he meaneth only the Accidents, or outward Formes of Bread, and Wine, and not the Subſtance. The weakneſſe of this Concluſion proceedeth of the miſunderſtanding of the Termes. For S. Auguſtine in this place, vſeth not this word (Species) for the outward Shew, but for the very Subſtance of the thing it ſelfe. So S. Ambroſe ſaith twice together in one place: Sermo Dei ſpecies mutat elementorum: The word of God changeth the Kinds of the Elements. And againe: Ante benedictionem alia Species nominatur: Before the Conſecration it is called another Kind. In theſe and other like places, M. Harding cannot well ſay, that, Species ſignifieth an accident, or outward Shew.

Auſtin. De Baptiſmo, Contra Donatiſt. li. 1. ca. 15.

Ambroſius de iis qui initiantur, cap. 9.

Neither doth this word, Viſible, import any ſuch Externall Forme, as is here imagined. But only excludeth the Body of Chriſt, which is in Heauen, Inuiſible to our Bodily eies, and Viſible only to the eies of our Faith. And ſo the Water in Baptiſme is called Forma Viſibilis, a Viſible Kind, or Element, according to the generall Definition of all Sacraments. So S. Auguſtine ſaith, Aliud Iudæi habebant, aliud nos: ſed ſpecie Viſibili, quod tamen idem Significaret: The Iewes had one thing (for their Sacrament) and we another: indeed of another Viſible Forme, or Kind, which notwithſtanding Signified the ſame thing, that our Sacrament doth Signifie. Likewiſe he ſaith: Quod videtur, Speciem habet Corporalem: quod intelligitur, fructum habet Spiritualem: The thing, that we ſee, hath a Corporall Shew: but the thing, that we vnderſtand, hath fruit Spirituall. And in this ſenſe Chryſoſtome ſaith of the Sacrament of Baptiſme: Chriſtus in Senſibilibus Intelligibilia nobis tradidit: Chriſt in Senſible things, hath giuen vs things ſpirituall.

Auguſtin. in Iohan. tract. 26.

Auguſtin. Citatur a Beda 1. Corin. 10.

Chryſo. in Matthæ. hom. 83.

By theſe we ſee both M. Hardings groſſe erroꝛ, and alſo, for what cauſe the Old godly Fathers call Chriſts Body inuiſible: That is, for that, being in Heauen, we ſee it with our Faith, with our mind, and with the eies of our vnderſtanding. Neither may M. Harding of this word, Inuiſible, reaſon thus, as he ſeemeth to doe: Chriſts Body is Inuiſible: Ergo, It lieth hidden vnder Accidents.

Ambroſius de Spiritu Sancto. lib. 3.

For S. Ambroſe in like phraſe of words, ſpeaketh thus of Baptiſme: Sacri Fontis vnda nos abluit: Sanguis Domini nos redemit. Alterum igitur inuiſible, alterum Viſibile teſtimonium Sacramento conſequimur Spirituali: The water of the Holy font hath waſhed vs: Chriſts Blood hath redeemed vs. Therefore by a Spirituall Sacrament we obtaine two Teſtimonies: the one Inuiſible, the other Viſible. Here S. Ambroſe ſaith: Chriſts Blood in Baptiſme is Inuiſible. Yet we may not conclude thereof, that Chriſts Blood is hidden vnder the Accidents, or Shewes of Water. So Origen ſaith: Baptiſmus Iohannis videbatur: Chriſti Baptiſmus eſt Inuiſibilis: Iohns Baptiſme was ſeene: But Chriſts Baptiſme is Inuiſible.

Origen. in Lucam, hom. 24.

And, notwithſtanding all theſe things be plaine to any man, that hath eies to ſee, yet that the weakneſſe, and folly of theſe ſhifts may throughly appeare, let M. Harding ſhew vs wherein, and in what reſpect, his naked Shew of Formes, and Accidents can be the Sacrament of Chriſts Body. For thus he ſaith, and doubleth, and repeateth the ſame, and maketh it the ſtay and ground of this whole Treaty.

Cyprian. de Cœna Domini.

The Signe, or Signification of this Sacrament, as S. Cyprian ſaith, ſtandeth in Refreſhing and Feeding. So ſaith Rabanus Maurus: Quia Panis Corporis Cor confirmat, ideò ille congruenter Corpus Chriſti nuncupatur: Et quia vinum Sanguinem operatur in Carne, ideò illud ad Sanguinem Chriſti refertur: Becauſe Bread confirmeth the heart of the Body, therefore it is conueniently called the Body of Chriſt. And becauſe wine worketh Blood in the Fleſh, therefore it hath relation to the Blood of Chriſt. Likewiſe, becauſe Water Waſheth away the ſoile and filth of the Body, therefore, as Gregory Nyſſene ſaith, Chriſt appointed it to the Sacrament of Baptiſme, to Signifie the Inward Waſhing of our Soules.

Rabanus Maurus li. 1. cap. 31.

Gregorius Nyſſenus De Sancto Baptiſmate.

Now, although M. Harding can ſay many things, yet this thing, I thinke, he will not ſay, that our Bodies be fed with his Shewes, and Accidents. Or, if he ſo ſay, as indeed they are driuen ſo to ſay, then will the very Naturall Philoſopher reproue his folly. For the Philoſopher ſaith, as indeed true it is, Exijſdem nutrimur, & ſumus: We conſiſt of the ſame things, wherewith we are nouriſhed. Therefore if M. Harding will ſay, The Subſtance of our Body is fed with Accidents, then muſt he likewiſe ſay, The Subſtance of our Bodie doth ſtand of Accidents.

Mar. Antonius Conſtantius ad theſ. 66.

Hereof

Hereof we may very well reason thus: The Accidents or Shewes of Bread & Wine feed not our Bodies, as Christs Bodie feedeth our soules:

Ergo, the Accidents and Shewes of Bread and Wine are not the Sacraments of Christs Bodie. Contrariwise S. Cyprian, Irenæus, Rabanus, and other Ancient Fathers say, The Substance of the Bread feedeth our Bodie, &c. Cypr. de Cœna Domini.

Ergo, The Substance of the Bread is the Sacrament of Christs Body. Irenæus lib. 4. cap. 34.

And againe, M. Harding standing vpon this simple ground, cannot possibly auoid many great inconueniences. For if the Shewes and Accidents be the Sacrament, then, forasmuch as in one Bread there be many Accidents, as the Whitenesse, the Roundnesse, the Bredth, the Taste, &c. and euery such Accident is a Sacrament, he can by no Glosse or conueyance shift himselfe; but in stead of one Sacrament he must needs grant a number of Sacraments: and auoiding one Figure, he must be driuen to confesse a great many Figures. Rabanus lib. 1. cap. 31.

Touching S. Basil, M. Harding semeth to confesse, that his bookes are disordered, and that now set after Consecration, that sometimes was before; and yet he sheweth vs not who hath wrought this treacherie. I trow, they haue corrupted, and falsified their owne bookes.

But Basil calleth the Sacrament Ἀντίτυπα, that is, a Samplar, a Signe, or a Token of Christs Bodie before the Consecration: and so Damascenus, Euthymius, and one Epiphanius, and Marcus Ephesius, late writers, haue expounded it. Here, marke well, good Reader, the Nicenesse, and curiositie of this people, without cause. Sooner than they will confesse, as the Ancient Catholike Fathers do, That the Sacrament is a Figure of Christs Bodie, they are content to say; It is a Sacrament, before it be a Sacrament: and so a Figure, before it be a Figure. For how can the Sacrament be a Sacrament, or what can the bare Bread Signifie before Consecration? Or who appointed, or commanded it so to Signifie?

But to leaue these M. Hardings New Fantasticall Doctours with their Mysticall Expositions, S. Ambrose in his time thought it no Heresie to write thus: Ante Consecrationem alia Species nominatur: Post Consecrationem Corpus Christi Significatur: Before Consecration it is called another Kinde: After Consecration the Bodie of Christ is Signified. And againe: In Edendo & Potando, Corpus & Sanguinem Christi, quæ pro nobis oblata sunt, Significamus: He saith not, Before Consecration, but euen in receiuing the Holy Communion, which he calleth, Eating, and Drinking, we Signifie the Bodie and Blood of Christ, that were offered for vs. Ambrosius de iis, qui initiantur, cap. 9. Ambrosius 1. Cor. 11.

Thus the Olde Fathers called the Sacrament a Signe, or a Figure of Christs Body, after it was Consecrate. But before Consecration neither did they euer call it so, notwithstanding these New Doctours iudgements to the contrarie, nor was there any cause why they should so call it. Yet were they not therefore counted Sacramentaries, nor mainteiners of false Doctrine.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuision.

And if it appeare strange to any man, that S. Basil should call the Holy Mysteries Antitypa, after Consecration, let him vnderstand that this learned Father thought good, by that word, to note the great secret of that mysterie, and to shew a distinct condition of present things, from things to come. And this consideration the Church seemeth to haue had, which in publike prayer, after holy mysteries receiued, maketh this humble petition; Vt quæ nunc in Specie gerimus, certa rerum Veritate capiamus: That in the life to come we may take that in certaine truth of things, which now we beare in shape or shew. Neither do these words import any prejudice against the truth of the Presence of Christs Bodie in the Sacrament; but they signifie and vtter the most principall truth of the same, when as all outward Forme, Shape, Shew, Figure, Sampler, and couer taken away, we shall haue the fruition of God himselfe in sight face to face, not as it were thorow a glasse; but so as he is in truth of his Maiestie. So this word Antitypon, thus taken in S. Basil, furthereth nothing at all the Sacramentaries false Doctrine, against the truth of the presence of Christs Bodie in the Sacrament. Sabbato 4. temporum, Mensis Septemb. Christs Bodie is a Figure of the life to come: proued only by the Portuise.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding for feare of taking, altereth, and shifteth himselfe into sundry formes; in like sort, as the Old Poets imagine, that one Proteus, a subtle fellow, in like case was wont to do. Among other his strange deuices he saith, Christs Bodie is a Figure of the life that is to come: and that he proueth only by his Portuise, without any other further Authoritie. But if a man would trauerse this New Exposition, how standeth M. Harding so well assured of the same? What Scripture, what Doctour, what Councell, what Warrant hath he, so to say? Verily, that Christs Naturall Bodie being now Immortall and Glorious, should be a Signe, or a Token, of things to come, it were very strange and wonderfull: but that bare Formes and Accidents should so Signifie, yet were that a wonder much more wonderfull.

The

The prayer, that is vttered in the Church, is good, and godly, and the meaning thereof very comfortable: That is, that all Vailes, and Shadowes being taken away, we may at last come to the Throne of Glory, and see God face to face. For in this life we are full of imperfections: and as S. Paul saith: We know (ex parte) Vnperfitly: we Prophecy vnperfitly. But, when that thing that is perfit, shall come, then shall imperfection be abolished. Now we see as thorow a seeing glasse in a riddle: but then we shall see face to face. Therefore S. Augustine saith: Vita est Christus, qui habitat in Cordibus nostris: interim per Fidem: post etiam per Speciem: Christ is our life, that dwelleth in our hearts: in the meane while by Faith, and afterward by sight. So S. Ambrose: Vmbra in lege: Imago in Euangelio: Veritas in cœlestibus: The Shadow was in the Law: the Image is in the Gospell: the Truth shall be in the Heauens. So S. Basil: Nunc iustus bibit aquam viuentem: & posthac abundatius bibet, quando adscribetur in Ciuitatem Dei: sed nunc in Speculo, & in ænigmate, per modicam comprehensionem rerum Cœlestium: tunc autem flumen vniuersum recipiet: Euen now the Iust man drinketh the Water of life: and hereafter he shall drinke the same more abundantly, when he shall be receiued into the City of God. Now he drinketh, as in a seeing glasse, or a riddle, by a small vnderstanding of Heauenly things: But then he shall receiue the whole streame. This is it, that the Church praieth for, that all imperfection set apart, our Corruptible Bodies may be made like vnto the glorious Body of Christ.

1. Corin. 13.

Ambrosius in Psalm. 38.

Basilius in Psalm. 45.

Whereof M. Harding saieth to reason in this wise: We shall see God face to face: Ergo, Christs Body is Really Present in the Sacrament. Or thus, We shall see God face to face: Ergo, The Sacrament Signifieth not Christs Body, but the Life, that is to come. By such arguments M. Harding confoundeth all the Sacramentaries false Doctrine.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuision.

The 189. Vntruth ioined with a slander. The former part was neuer our Doctrine: The Second as yet was neuer prooued.

And because our Aduersaries do much abuse the simplicity of the vnlearned, bearing them in hand, that after the iudgement, and Doctrine of the Ancient Fathers, the Sacrament is (189) but a Figure, a Signe, a Token, or a Badge, and containeth not the very Body it selfe of Christ, for proofe of the same alleging certaine their sayings vttered with the same termes: I think good by recital of some of the chiefe of such places, to shew, that they be vntruely reported, and that touching the Verity of the Presence in the Sacrament, they taught in their daies the same Faith that is taught now in the Catholique Church.

Taketh Bread, Blesseth It, Breaketh It.

Holy Ephrem in a booke, he wrote to those that will search the Nature of the Sonne of God by mans reason, saith thus: Inspice diligenter, quomodò sumens in manibus Panem, benedixit, ac Frangit, in Figura immaculati Corporis sui, Calicemque, in Figura pretiosi Sanguinis sui Benedicit, & tribuit Discipulis suis: Behold (saith he) diligently, how taking Bread in his hands, he blesseth it, and breaketh it, in the Figure of his vnspotted Body, and blesseth the Cup, in the Figure of his pretious Blood, and giueth it to his Disciples. (190) By these words he sheweth the partition, diuision, or breaking of the Sacrament, to be done no otherwise, but in the outward Formes, which be the Figure of Christs Body Present, and vnder them contained. Which Body now being glorious, is no more broken, nor parted, but is indiuisible, and subiect no more to any Passion: and after the Sacrament is broken, it remaineth whole, and perfit vnder each portion. Cap. 4.

The 190. Vntruth, ioined with vnaduised Corruption of the Author.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

If we abuse the simplicity of the people, vttering plainly and simply the very words of the Ancient Fathers, then did the Fathers themselues likewise abuse the simple people: for that they of all others, first vttered, and published the same words: and specially for that they neuer qualified the same, with any of these M. Hardings New Constructions.

But if we abuse the people, speaking in such wise, as the Old Catholique Fathers spake so long before vs, what then may we thinke of M. Harding, that commeth only with his owne words, that wresteth, and falsifieth the words of the Holy Fathers, and by his strange Expositions maketh them not the Fathers words? Gelasius saith: In the Sacrament there remaineth the Substance of Bread and Wine: That is to say, saith M. Harding, There remaineth the Accidents of Bread and Wine. Irenæus, and Iustinus Martyr say, The Bread of the Sacrament, increaseth the Substance of our Flesh: Their meaning is, saith M. Harding, that the Accidents of the Bread increase the Substance of our Flesh. S. Ambrose saith: Post consecrationem Corpus Christi Significatur: After Consecration the Body of Christ is Signified: M. Harding saith: No, not so: But after Consecration the life to come is Signified. Now iudge thou indifferently, good Reader, whether of vs abuse the simplicitie of the people.

Irenæus li. 5.

Iustinus Martyr Apologia 2.

Ambrosius de iis qui initiantur, cap. 9.

Now let vs see how he handleth this good Old Father Ephrem. Indeed here he maketh the darknesse light, and the light, darknesse. For Ephrems words be so plaine, as nothing can be plainer.

Christ tooke Bread, and blessed it, and brake it, in Figure, or, as Christ himselfe vttereth it, in Remembrance of his Blessed, and Vnspotted Body. But M. Hardings Exposition vpon the same is so peruerse, and so wilfull, as if it were free for him, to glose, and fansie fantſie what him liſteth: Ephrem ſaith: Chriſt tooke and brake Bread: M. Harding ſaith: Chriſt brake Formes and Accidents, and brake no Bread. Ephrem ſaith: The Bread is a Figure of Chriſts Body: M. Harding ſaith: The Bread is no Figure of Chriſts Body. To be ſhort, Ephrem ſaith: Chriſt brake Bread in Figure or Remembrance of his Body:

Ergo, ſaith M. Harding, Chriſts Body is there preſent, under the Forme of Bread. Such regard hath he to the ſimplicity of the people. Certainly Ephrem ſaith not, neither that the Formes or Shewes be broken: nor that the ſame Formes be Figures of Chriſts Body: nor that Chriſts Body is preſently in them contained. And therefore M. Harding in his guileſull conſtruction of the ſame hath included great vntruth.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuiſion.

Againe by the ſame words he ſignifieth, that outward breaking to be a certaine holy Figure, and repreſentation of the crucifying of Chriſt, and of his bloodſhedding. Which thing is with a more cleereneſſe of words ſet foorth by S. Auguſtine, In ſententijs Proſperi: Dum frangitur hoſtia, dum Sanguis de Calice in ora Fidelium funditur, quid aliud quam Dominici Corporis in Cruce immolatio, eiuſque Sanguinis de latere effuſio deſignatur? Whiles the Hoſt is broken, whiles the Blood is powred into the mouthes of the faithfull, what other thing is thereby ſhewed and ſet foorth, than the Sacrificing of Chriſts Body on the Croſſe, and the ſhedding of his Blood out of his ſide? And by ſo doing the commandement of Chriſt is fulfilled, Doe this in my Remembrance.

The breaking of Accidents is a Figure.

De Con. Diſt. 2. ca. Dominus.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Here hath M. Harding found out a new kinde of Figure, farre differing from all the reſt. The breaking of the Accidents, ſaith he, is a token of the Breaking of Chriſts Body: and this he thinketh himſelfe well able to proue by certaine words of S. Auguſtine. Wherein notwithſtanding he finde but ſmall helpe in the text, (for S. Auguſtine maketh no maner mention, neither of any Reall or Fleſhly Preſence; nor of Breaking of Formes or Accidents) yet is he ſomwhat relieued by the Gloſſe. For the words thereof are theſe: Secundùm hoc dices, Ipſa Accidentia frangi, & dare Sonitum: According to this thou ſhalt ſay, That the very Accidents, and Shewes are Broken, and giue a Cracke. Thus we ſee, there is no inconuenience ſo great, but theſe men can well defend it.

De Conſec. diſt. 2. Cum frangitur in Gloſſa.

But S. Auguſtine ſaith: Sanguis in ora Fidelium funditur: Ergo, ſaith M. Harding, Chriſts Blood is there Preſent. I maruell much, where M. Harding learned this ſtrange Logike. For S. Hierome ſaith in like ſort: Quando audimus Sermonem Domini, Caro Chriſti, & ſanguis eius in auribus noſtris funditur: When we heare the Word of God, the Fleſh of Chriſt, and his Blood is powred into our eares. Will M. Harding conclude hereof by his new Logike, That, when we heare Gods Word, Chriſts Fleſh, and Blood are Really Preſent? Here once againe, I muſt doe the, good Reader, to vnderſtand, that a Sacrament, according to the Doctrine of S. Auguſtine, beareth the name of that thing whereof it is a Sacrament. And for example he ſaith: Sacramentum Sanguinis Chriſti ſecundùm quendam modum Sanguis Chriſti eſt: The Sacrament of Chriſts Blood, after a certaine maner (of ſpeech) is the Blood of Chriſt. Againe he ſaith in the ſame Epiſtle: Conſepulti ſumus Chriſto per Baptiſmum: Non ait, Sepulturam ſignificamus: ſed prorſus ait, Conſepulti ſumus. Sacramentum ergo tantæ rei, non niſi eiuſdem rei vocabulo nuncupauit: Wee are buried together with Chriſt by Baptiſme: He ſaith not, Wee doe ſignifie our Buriall: but he ſaith plainly, Wee are buried together. Therefore S. Paul would not call the Sacrament of ſo great a thing, but onely by the name of the thing it ſelfe. Likewiſe he ſaith: Solet res, quæ Significat, eius rei nomine, quam ſignificat, nuncupari. Non dixit, Petra Significat Chriſtum, ſed, tanquam hoc eſſet, quod vtique per Subſtantiam non erat, ſed per ſignificationem: The thing, that Signifieth, is commonly called by the name of that thing, that it ſignifieth. S. Paul ſaith not, The Rocke ſignified Chriſt, but, The Rocke was Chriſt, as if the Rocke had beene Chriſt indeed. Yet it was not ſo in Subſtance, and indeed, but by way of ſignification. Thus therefore ſaith S. Auguſtine: Whiles the Sacrament is broken, and the Sacrament of Chriſts Blood, (which is called Blood) is powred into the mouthes of the Faithfull, what thing elſe is thereby ſhewed, but the offering vp of Chriſts Bodie vpon the Croſſe, and the ſhedding of his Blood from his ſide? Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Ita facit nos moueri tanquam videamus Præſentem Dominum in Cruce: So it cauſeth vs to be moued, euen as though we ſhould ſee our Lord Preſent on the Croſſe. This is S. Auguſtines vndoubted meaning. Theſe things conſidered, the weight of M. Hardings argument will ſone appeare. For thus he reaſoneth: The renting of Chriſts Body, and the ſhedding of his Blood is expreſſed in the Myſteries: Ergo, Chriſts Body is there Really preſent vnder Shewes and Accidents.

That it may further appeere, that theſe words Figure, Signe, Image, Token, and ſuch other like ſometimes vſed in ancient writers, do not exclude the trueth of things exhibited in the Sacrament, but rather ſhew the ſecret maner of the exhibiting: amongſt all other, the place of Tertullian in his fourth Booke contra Marcion is not to be omitted, ſpecially being one of the chiefe, and of moſt appearance, that the Sacramentaries bring for proofe of their Doctrine. Tertullians words be theſe: Acceptum Panem, & diſtributum Diſcipulis ſuis, Corpus ſuum illum fecit, Hoc eſt Corpus meum dicendo, id eſt, Figura Corporis mei. The Bread, that he tooke, and gaue to his Diſciples, he made it his Bodie, in ſaying, This is my Body, that is the Figure of my Body.

The double taking of the word (Sacrament) afore mentioned, remembred, and conſideration had, how the Sacraments of the New Teſtament comprehend two things, (191) the outward (1.) Viſible formes, that be (2.) Figures, Signes, and Tokens, and alſo, and that chiefly, a Diuine thing vnder them (3.) according to Chriſts promiſe (4.) couertly conteined, ſpecially this being weighed, that this moſt Holie Sacrament conſiſteth of theſe two things, to wit, of the Viſible Forme of the outward Elements, and the Inuiſible fleſh and Blood of Chriſt, that is to ſay, of the Sacrament, and of the thing of the Sacrament: Tertullian may ſeeme to ſpeake of theſe two parts of the Sacrament iointly in this one ſentence For firſt he ſpeaketh moſt plainly of the very Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, and of the marueilous turning of the Bread into the ſame. The Bread (ſaith he) that he tooke, and gaue to his Diſciples, he made it his Body. Which is the Diuine thing of the Sacrament. Then foorthwith he ſaith, that our Lord did it by ſaying, This is my Bodie, that is, the Figure of my Body. By which words he ſheweth the other part, the Sacrament onely, that is to ſay, that Holy outward Signe of the Forme of Bread, vnder which Forme Chriſts Body, into the which the Bread by Gods power is turned, is conteined: which outward Forme, is verily the Figure of Chriſts Body preſent, which our Lord vnder the ſame conteined deliuered to his Diſciples, and now is likewiſe at that Holy Table to the Faithfull people deliuered, where the order of the Catholike Church is not broken.

Holy outward Accidents.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

If this place of Tertullian bee the chiefe, and of greateſt apperance for the Sacramentaries, as M. Harding ſaith, I marueil it is ſo courſely anſwered. The words bee both verie few, and alſo verie plaine. But with this copious Commentarie of M. Hardings gloſſing, it will bee verie hard for the Reader, to find out any part of Tertullians meaning. I will firſt open the occaſion of the writing, and then lay forth the Words. That done, I doubt not but the ſenſe will ſtand cleere, and eaſie of it ſelfe.

Marcion the Heretike, againſt whom Tertullian wrote, held, and mainteined this errour, that Chriſt receiued of the Bleſſed Virgin, not the very Nature and Subſtance, but onely the outward Formes, and Shewes of Mans Body. Out of whoſe ſpringes M. Harding, and the reſt of that ſide, as it may appeere, haue drawen their Doctrine of Accidents, ſtanding without Subiect. This fond Hereſie Tertullian repreweth by this Reaſon:

A Figure of a Body, preſuppoſeth a very Naturall Body: For of a Shew, or a Fantaſie, there can be no Figure.

But Chriſt gaue vnto his Diſciples a Figure of his Bodie:

Therefore it muſt nedes follow, that Chriſt had a very Naturall Bodie.

Tertull. contra Marcion. li. 4.

As euery part of this Argument is true, ſo the propoſition, and forme of the ſame importeth a neceſſary ſequell in reaſon. The words ſtand thus: Acceptum Panem, & diſtributum Diſcipulis, Corpus ſuum illum fecit, Dicendo, Hoc eſt Corpus meum, id eſt, Figura Corporis mei. Figura autem non eſſet, niſi Veritatis eſſet Corpus. Cæterùm vacua res, quæ eſt Phantaſma, Figuram capere non poteſt: Chriſt taking the Bread, and diſtributing it to his Diſciples, made it his Body: ſaying. This is my Body: That is to ſay: This is a Figure of my Body. But a Figure it could not be, vnleſſe there were a Body of a truth and indeed. For a void thing, as is a fantaſie, can receiue no Figure. Theſe words are plaine of themſelues: and if truth onely might ſuffice, would require no long Expoſition.

Now, good Reader, marke well M. Hardings conſiderations touching the ſame: and thou ſhalt ſee the Darknes of Egypt brought in, to cleare the ſhining Sun. Firſt he ſaith, The Accidents, and Shewes may well be the Sacrament. Yet againe he ſaith: Chriſts Body it ſelfe may be the Sacrament. Thirdly he ſaith: Tertullian ioineth theſe two ſenſes iointly both together. And ſo by his cunning he hath found out two Sacraments in one Sacrament. All this is M. Hardings Gloſſe. For there is not one word thereof in the text, neither of accidents, nor of Chriſts Body, as being a Sacrament of it ſelfe: nor of this combining of two Sacraments both in one. M. Harding ſaith: Tertullian ſpeaketh of a marueilous turning: But Tertullian ſpeaketh no ſuch word, neither of Miracle, nor of Turning. M. Harding ſaith: Tertullian ſpeaketh of Holy Outward Formes. But Tertullian not once nameth any kind of Formes. By M. Hardings report, Tertullian ſaith: Under theſe Holy Formes Chriſts Body is Really Preſent. But Tertullian himſelfe ſpeaketh nothing of any Preſence. All theſe petite Gloſſes M. Harding hath deuiſed of his owne, as if it were lawfull for a Catholike man, man, to examine the old learned Fathers vpon the Racke, and to make them speake, what him listeth.

Tertullian onely saith thus: Christ tooke Bread, and made it his Body. And because these words seemed doubtfull, and might be diuersly taken, he openeth his owne meaning in this wise: This is my Body: that is to say, A Figure of my Body. And touching this word, Fecit, in what sense it is vsed in the holy Fathers, I haue spoken at large before in the Tenth Article, and the Second Diuision. Yet a little more to open M. Hardings folly in this behalfe, whereas in these two seuerall Propositions, Hoc est Corpus, and, Hoc est Figura, this Pronoune, Hoc, as Tertullian vseth it, hath relation onely to one thing, as if he would say, This Bread is my Body: and, This Bread is a Figure: M. Harding to make vp this new Construction, contrarie both to Tertullians minde, and also to the Naturall course of the words, imagineth the same Pronoune, Hoc, in the first place to signifie one thing, and in the second place to signifie another thing: As if Tertullian in the former clause had written thus: Hic Panis: This Bread is my Body: and in the second thus: Hæc Accidentia, These Accidents are a Figure of my Body. And so whereas these two Propositions should sound both one thing, the one being onely a declaration of the other, by M. Hardings Exposition, they are made to sound two diuers things, the one nothing like vnto the other. Thus M. Harding vseth the Ancient Fathers, in like sort, as they say, Procustes the cruell Giant was wont in old times to vse his Prisoners: If they bee longer than his measure, hee choppeth them shorter: If they bee too short, hee racketh them longer.

And where hee saith: The Sacraments of the New Testament Conteine Couertly vnder them the thing it selfe, that they Signifie, and that according to Christs promise; Verily this saying Couertly conteineth a great vntruth. For as hee is not able to allege any ancient learned Father, that euer once mentioneth this priuie and secret being vnder such Couert, so is hee not able to shew, that Christ euer made him any such promise touching the same. And notwithstanding Baptisme bee a Sacrament of the New Testament, yet contrarie to M. Hardings New Decree, it conteineth not Couertly, and Really the thing, that it Signifieth. True it is, the New Sacraments of Christs Institution are plainer, and clearer, than the Old: as the Gospell is plainer, and clearer, than the Law. But the things Signified are no more conteined in the one, than in the other. Therefore S. Augustine saith, Idem in Mysterio illorum Cibus, & noster: The Spirituall meat, that they had in the Old Law, and the Spirituall meat that wee haue in the Gospell, in a Mysterie is all one. And againe: Spiritualem escam comederunt eandem, quam nos: They did eate the same Spirituall meat, that we eat. And the whole difference betweene the Sacraments of the Old Testament, and the Sacraments of the New, he openeth thus: In illis Sacrificijs, quid nobis esset donandum, Figuratè significabatur: In hoc autem Sacrificio, quid nobis iam donatum sit, euidenter ostenditur. In illis Sacrificijs prænuntiabatur Filius Dei pro impijs occidendus: in hoc autem pro impijs annuntiatur occisus: In the Sacrifices of the Old Law, it was signified vnder a Figure, what thing should bee giuen vnto vs; but in this Sacrifice it is plainly shewed, what thing is already giuen vnto vs. In the Sacrifice of the Old Law, it was shewed by a Figure, that the Sonne of God should be slaine for the wicked: But in this Sacrifice it is declared, that hee hath beene already slaine for the wicked. Such differences the Old Fathers finde betweene these Sacrifices: But of M. Hardings Conteining, or Couert, they know nothing.

The reason, that M. Harding can gather hereof, standeth thus: Tertullian saith: The Sacrament is a Figure of Christs Bodie: Ergo, Christs Bodie is therein Couertly Conteined vnder the Accidents.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuision.

That Tertullian in this place is so to be vnderstanded, we are taught by the great learned Bishop S. Augustine, and by Hilarius, who was Bishop of Rome next after Leo the First. S. Augustines words be these: Corpus Christi & Veritas, & Figura est. Veritas, dum Corpus Christi & Sanguis in virtute Spiritus Sancti ex Panis & Vini substantia efficitur. Figura verò est quod exterius sentitur: The Bodie of Christ is both the Trueth and the Figure. The Trueth, whiles the Bodie of Christ and his Blood by the power of the holie Ghost, is made of the * Substance of Bread and Wine. And it is the Figure that is with outward sense perceiued.

Where S. Augustine heere saith the Bodie and Blood of Christ to be made of the Substance of Bread and Wine, beware thou vnlearned man, thou thinke them not thereof to be made, as though they were newly created of the matter of Bread and Wine, neither that they be made of Bread and Wine, as of a matter: but that where Bread and Wine were before, after Consecration there is the very Bodie and Blood of Christ borne of the Virgine Marie, and that in Substance, in sort and maner to our weake reason incomprehensible.

* Christs Body of the Substance of Bread.

Theſe wordes are baſtard, and miſbegotten, as nothing reſembling, neither the ſenſe, nor the wordes of S. Auguſtine, but rather contrary to them both. They are alleaged onely by certaine late writers, as namely by Gratian, by Peter Lombard, and by Algerius, as other things alſo be without any great choice, or iudgement. Onely S. Auguſtine, vpon whom they are fathered, and therefore ſhould beſt know them, knoweth them not. Howbeit, by whatſoeuer name we may call this new Doctor, M. Harding findeth him ſo farre, and ſo ranke of his ſide, that he is faine to checke him of too much riot, and to call him back. Beware thou vnlearned man, ſaith he, if thou take not very good heed, this new Doctour, whom I call S. Auguſtine, will deceiue thee. This Auguſtine ſaith, Chriſts Body is made of the ſubſtance of Bread: But ſay thou, Chriſts Body is not made of the ſubſtance of Bread. This Auguſtine ſaith twice together in one place, Chriſts Body is created: but he was not well aduiſed, what he ſaid: Therefore ſay thou, Chriſts Body is not created: beleeue not this Auguſtines words: he ſaith one thing, and thinketh an other. Thus this Doctour is ſet to Schole. But it may well be doubted, whether wee ought to giue more credit to this yong S. Auguſtine, that cannot tell his owne tale, or to M. Hardings Commentarie, that goeth ſo farre beſide the Text.

If theſe wordes be falſe, why doth M. Harding heere allege them: Why are they not rectified, either by Gratian, or by the Gloſſe, or at leaſt by ſome note in the Margin? And why are they publiſhed for a rule of our Faith? If they be true, why ſhould wee ſhun them? Or why ſhould wee beware, and take heed of them, ſpecially being vttered without Figure, or Metaphor, or heat of Speech?

The wordes of Hilarius the Pope vtter the ſame Doctrine: Corpus Chriſti quod ſumitur de Altari, Figuratum eſt, dum Panis & Vinum videtur extra: Veritas autem, dum Corpus Chriſti interius creditur: The Bodie of Chriſt which is receiued from the Altar, is the Figure, whiles Bread and Wine are ſeene outwardly: and it is the Trueth, whiles the Body and Blood of Chriſt are beleeued inwardly. Diſt. 2. Cana. Corpus Chriſti.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Theſe wordes of Hilarie are partly anſwered before. His meaning is this: The Bread, that we ſee with our ſenſes, is the Figure: but the very Subſtance of the Sacrament, that thereby is Signified, is the Body of Chriſt in Heauen. The Bread is receiued with our bodily mouth: The Body of Chriſt onely with our Faith. And thus theſe two wordes, Extra, and Interius, which Hilarie vſeth, haue relation to our mouth, and to our Faith: and ſo to the Sacrament, that is preſent before vs, and to the Bodie of Chriſt, that is at the right Hand of God. And in this ſenſe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Aqua exhibet Forinſecus Sacramentum Gratiæ: & Spiritus operatur Intrinſecus Beneficium Gratiæ: The Water outwardly ſheweth the Sacrament of Grace: and inwardly the Spirit worketh the benefit of Grace. And to come neare to the wordes of Hilarie, S. Auguſtine againe ſaith: Habent Foris Sacramentum Corporis Chriſti: ſed rem ipſam non tenent intus, cuius eſt illud Sacramentum: Outwardly they haue the Sacrament of Chriſts Body: but inwardly they haue not the thing it ſelfe, whereof that thing is a Sacrament. Further we may ſay, that Chriſts Bodie is in the Sacrament it ſelfe, vnderſtanding it to be there as in a Myſterie. But to this maner of Being there is required, neither Circumſtance of place, nor any Corporall, or Reall Preſence. So Chryſoſtome ſaith: Oleum Viſibile in Signo eſt: Oleum Inuiſibile in Sacramento eſt. Oleum Spirituale Intùs eſt: Oleum Viſibile Exteriùs eſt: The Viſible Oile is in Token: the Oile Inuiſible is in a Sacrament. The Spirituall Oile is within; the Viſible Oile is Without. So Paulinus writeth to Cytherius: In ſuarum literarum Corpore, Paulus Magiſter adfuit: Paul the Teacher was preſent in the Body of his Letters. So S. Auguſtine: Nouum Teſtamentum abſconditum erat in Lege: The New Teſtament was hidden in the Law. So the ancient Father Origen: In veſtimento podêris erat Vniuerſus Mundus: The whole World was in the Prieſts long gowne. So Chryſoſtome: In Scripturis inſertum eſt Regnum Dei: The Kingdome of God is incloſed in the Scriptures. So Paulinus writing vnto S. Auguſtine: In hoc Pane Trinitatis ſoliditas continetur: In this Cake the perfection of the Holy Trinitie is conteined. I vſe purpoſely the moe examples in this behalfe, for that I ſee many of ſimplicitie are deceiued, thinking that one thing cannot poſſibly be in another, vnleſſe it be conteined in the ſame Preſently, Really, and indeed. Yet it is written in that fond Councell of Nice the ſecond: Qui imaginem Imperatoris videt, in ea Imperatorem ipſum contemplatur: He that ſeeth the Emperors Image, in the ſame ſeeth the Emperor himſelfe. Likewiſe ſaith Prudentius: Legis in effigie ſcriptus per ænigmata Chriſtus: Chriſt written by Figure in the the ſhew of the Law. Therefore M. Hardings errour herein ſtandeth in ouer groſſe vnderſtanding of theſe words, Extra, and Internus. For by the former he can conceiue nothing elſe but Accidents: by the latter, nothing but Chriſts Body vnder the ſame ſecretly hidden: which was neuer any part of this Holy Fathers meaning.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuiſion.

Thus the Fathers call not onely the Sacrament, but alſo the Bodie and Blood of Chriſt it ſelfe in the Sacrament, ſometimes the Truth, ſometimes a Figure; the Truth, that is to wit, the very and true Body and Blood of Chriſt: a Figure, in reſpect of the maner of being of the ſame there preſent, which is Really, and Subſtantially, but Inuiſibly vnder the viſible forme of the outward Elements: And ſo Tertullian meaneth by this, That is the Figure of my Body, as though Chriſt had ſhewed by the Word (Hoc) that which was viſible, which verily is the figure of the Body, right ſo as that which is the Inuiſible inward thing, is the truth of the Body. Which interpretation of Tertullian indeed is not according to the right ſenſe of Chriſts words, though his meaning ſwarue not from the truth. For where as our Lord ſaid, This is my Body, he meant not ſo, as though he had ſaid, the outward Forme of the Sacrament, which heere I deliuer to you, is a Figure of my Body vnder the ſame conteined, for ſmuch as by theſe words, Hoc eſt, he ſhewed not the viſible forme, of Bread, but the Subſtance of his very Body, into which by his Diuine power he turned the Bread. And therefore (192) none of all the Fathers euer ſo expounded thoſe words of Chriſt, but contrariwiſe, namely Theophylact, and Damaſcene. He ſaid not, ſaith Theophylact, This is a Figure, but this is my Body. The Bread, nor Wine, (meaning their outward Formes) ſaith Damaſcene, * is not a Figure of the Body and Blood of Chriſt: not ſo in no wiſe. But it is the Body it ſelfe of our Lord Deificated, ſith our Lord himſelfe ſaith, This is my Body, not the Figure of my Body, but my Body: and not the Figure of my Blood, but my Blood, &c.

In Matt. 26. & cap. 14.

A miſerable ſhift. By this expoſition how can Chriſts Bodie it ſelfe be a Figure? Tertullian vnderſtandeth not Chriſts words. The 192. Vntruth, notorious. For M. Harding knoweth, that all the Old Fathers expounded it ſo. * Outward Formes and Accidents are Chriſts Bodie it ſelfe.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Here is imagined an other ſtrange kinde of Figures. For Chriſts Body it ſelfe is now become a Figure. But Hilarius ſaith: Figura eſt, quod extrà videtur: The Figure is that is ſeene outwardly. And S. Auguſtine ſaith: Signum eſt, quod ſpeciem ingerit oculis: A Signe is a thing, that offereth a ſight vnto the eies. Wherefore by M. Hardings iudgement, Chriſts very Body appeareth outwardly, and is ſeene in the Sacrament with our Corporall eies. If ſo, how then is it there ſecretly, as he ſaid before, and vnder couert? If not, how then can it be called a Figure? In confeſſing the one, he muſt needes denie the other. If Chriſts Bodie be a Figure, it is not in Couert: If it be in Couert, it is not a Figure.

De Conſecrat. diſt. 2. Corpus. Auguſtin. de Doctrina Chriſtiana, li. 2. c. 1. M. Harding contray to himſelfe.

He will ſay, The Accidents, and ſhewes are Figures of Chriſts Bodie there hidden. And againe: The ſame Bodie ſo Inuiſibly hidden, is a Figure of that Body that died Viſibly vpon the Croſſe. Thus, where as others may not once name any Figure in theſe caſes, it is lawfull for M. Harding, to heape Figure vpon Figure: and that not ſuch Figures as haue bene vſed by any the ancient Fathers, but ſuch as he himſelfe for a ſhift can beſt deuiſe.

Tertullian, ſaith M. Harding, ſuppoſeth, that Chriſt, when he had the Bread in his hand, and ſaid, Hoc, This, ſhewed onely the Viſible Accidents, and Formes of Bread, as if Chriſt had ſaid: This Whiteneſſe, this Roundneſſe, this Bredth, this Lightneſſe, &c. is my Body: By which ſkilfull conſtruction it muſt needs follow, that Chriſt had a Body made of Accidents.

Howbeit, (ſaith M. Harding) this Interpretation of Tertullian indeed is not according to the right ſenſe of Chriſts words. Whereby it appeareth what affiance M. Harding hath in the iudgement of this learned Father. After ſo many faire words, he beginneth vtterly to miſlike him, and concludeth in the end, that he wrote he knew not what: and toke vpon him to expound Chriſts words, and yet vnderſtood not what Chriſt meant: and that not in any deepe Allegorie, or other Spirituall, or ſecret meaning, but euen in the very Literall ſenſe and outward ſound of Chriſts words. And thus Tertullian is charged, not onely with Ignorance, but alſo with Preſumption.

But if, as M. Harding ſaith, Tertullian vnderſtood not Chriſts meaning, what if ſome man would likewiſe ſay, M. Harding vnderſtandeth not Tertullians meaning? And what if the ſimple Reader vnderſtand not M. Hardings meaning? It were too much to ſay further, M. Harding vnderſtandeth not his owne meaning. Verily Tertullian not once nameth any one of all theſe M. Hardings ſtrange fantaſies, neither Forme, nor Accident, nor Viſible, nor Inuiſible, nor outward Element, nor Secret Preſence, nor Really, nor Subſtantially, nor I know not what. He wrote, and meant plainly in theſe caſes, as others the learned Fathers wrote, and meant.

And touching the words of Chriſt, This is my Bodie: he ſaith not: Theſe Shewes, or Accidents of Bread, as M. Harding full vnaduiſedly expoundeth him, but, this Bread is my Body. Wherein he hath the conſent both of the Scriptures, and alſo of the Ancient Doctours of the Church. S. Paul ſaith (Not the outward Forme, or Accident, but, The Bread that we breake, is the Participation of Christs Bodie. Irenæus saith: Panis, in quo Gratiæ actæ sunt, est Corpus Domini: The Bread, wherein thanks are giuen, is the Bodie of the Lord. Origen saith: Dominus Panem Discipulis dabat, dicens, Hoc est Corpus meum: Our Lord gaue Bread vnto his Disciples, saying, This is my Body. So S. Cyprian: Vinum fuit, quod Sanguinem suum dixit: It was Wine, that he called his Blood. So Chrysostome: Christus, cùm hoc Mysterium tradidit, Vinum tradidit: Christ when he gaue this Mysterie, he gaue Wine. Likewise Cyrillus: Christus Fragmenta Panis dedit Discipulis: Christ gaue Fragments, or peeces of Bread to his Disciples. Thus Tertullian vnderstood, and expounded the words of Christ. Wherefore it is great folly, to charge him with this new imagination of Accidents, and so vnaduisedly, and without cause to reproue him, for speaking that he neuer spake. By these we may the better iudge of M. Hardings owne Exposition. For thus he saith: When Christ said, Hoc, This, he shewed not foorth the visible Accident, or Forme of Bread, but his verie Naturall Bodie. It appeareth that M. Harding, either little considereth, or not much regardeth his owne words. For all the rest of his fine hold for most certaine, that their Transubstantiation is not wrought, before the vttering of the last Syllable. Which thing notwithstanding, M. Harding contrarie to all his fellowes (I will not say, contrarie to himselfe) saith, that the Bread is turned into Christs Body, onely at the vtterance of the first Syllable. And so by this new Diuinitie, Christs Body is made Present, and the Sacrament is a Sacrament, before Consecration: and all is ended, before it be begun: which in M. Hardings Schooles, not long sithence was counted an errour aboue all errours: which to shift, they were faine to deuise, Indiuiduum Vagum.

1. Cor. 10. Irenæus li. 4. ca. 34. Orig. in. Matt. Tractatus 12. Cyprian. li. 2. Epist. 3. Chrysostom. in Matt. hom. 83. Cyrillus in Iohannem li. 4. cap. 14.

Againe, if this Pronoune, Hoc, haue relation to Christs Body, then must we of force by M. Hardings fantasie, thus expound the words of Christ: This is my Body: that is to say: My Body, is my Body: which Exposition of M. Hardings, D. Holcote saith: is vaine, and peruish, and to no purpose.

In 4. Sen. q. 3.

And, whereas M. Harding saith: None of all the Old Fathers euer expounded these words of Christ by a Figure, I marueil, he can so boldly vtter, and publish so great vntruth without blushing. For he knoweth right well, that scarsely any one of all the Old Fathers euer expounded it otherwise.

Damascene, and Theophylact, are verie yong Doctours, in comparison of them, that we may iustly call Old: as standing farre without the compasse of the first six hundred yeres, and otherwise fraught with great errours, and sundry follies. Therefore I thinke it not amisse, for shortnesse of time, to passe them by. Yet by the way, let vs a little view M. Hardings Logicke. Thus he teacheth vs to reason: Tertullian by this Pronoune, Hoc, vnderstood the outward Accident or Forme of Bread: Ergo, Christs Bodie it selfe is a Figure.

M. Harding. The 10. Diuision.

And the cause why Tertullian so expounded these words of Christ, was, that thereby he might take aduantage against Marcion the Heretike, as many times the Fathers in heate of disputation doe handle some places, not after the exact signification of the words, but rather follow such way, as serueth them best to confute their aduersarie. Which maner not reporting any vntruth, S. Basil doth excuse in the setting forth of a disputation, not in prescribing of a Doctrine. As he defendeth Gregorius Neocæsariensis against the Sabellians, for that in a contention he had with Ælianus an Ethnike, to declare the Mysteries of the Trinitie, he vsed the word ὑπόστασις, in stead of οὐσία. And the learned men, that be well seene in the Fathers, know, they must vse a discretion, & a sundry Iudge between the things they write. Ἀγωνιστικῶς, that is to say, by way of contention or disputation, and the things they vtter, Dogmatικῶς, that is, by way of setting forth a doctrine, or matter of Faith. Neither in that contention did Tertullian so much regard the exact vse of words, as how he might win his purpose, and driue his aduersarie, denying that, Christ tooke the true Body of man, and that he suffered death indeed, to confesse the truth, which he thought to bring to passe, by deducing of an argument from the Figure of his Body, which consisteth in that, which is visible in the Sacrament, to proue the verity of his Body. And therefore in framing his reason by way of illation he saith: Figura autem non esset, nisi veritatis esset Corpus: There were not a Figure, vnlesse there were a Body of truth, or a very Body indeed.

Epist. 64.

Tertullian regarded not the exact vse of his words. O folly! What needeth him to proue this by a Figure, if he had thought, that Christs Bodie it selfe was Really present?

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here M. Harding courteously deuiseth a fauourable excuse for Tertullian, not thinking it best, being so Ancient a Father, and so neere to the Apostles time, vtterly to condemne him of follie. He vttered all this (saith he) in heat of contention, rashly, and vnaduisedly, and vnderstood not what he said, neither had any great regard to the exact vse of his words. Howbeit, Tertullian not onely spake these words vpon the sudden, but also leasurely, and with studie wrote them: and yet afterward quietly perusing, and considering the same, was neuer able to espie this fault.

But, that such cases of heat may somtimes happen, we haue ouer good trial in M. Harding:

ding: whom, as it now appeareth, contention hath caused, so many waies, and so farre to ouerreach the truth, and to haue so small regard, to that he writeth. S. Ambrose saith: Apostolus impudoratos appellat eos, qui contentionibus nituntur: Necesse est enim, vt contentio extorqueat aliquid, imò multa, quæ dicantur contra conscientiam: vt intus in animo perdat, foris victor abscedat: Non enim patitur se vinci, licet sciat vera esse, quæ audit: The Apostle calleth them impudent, that hold by contention. For it cannot be chosen, but that contention must force a man to say some thing, or rather many things, against his Conscience: that he lose in his mind within, to the intent outwardle hee may seeme to haue the victory. For he will not suffer himselfe to be conquered: no, although he know, the things, that he heareth, be neuer so true. Ambrosius in 2. ad Timotheum. 2.

Afterward being thus caried away with contention, and more regarding their owne Reputation, than the Truth of God, as Lactantius saith, they seeke reasons, and shifts, to colour their error. So Seneca writeth of the Poet Ouid: Non ignorauit Vitia sua, sed amauit: He was not ignorant of his owne faults, but rather had a fansie to them. Lactan. Videri volunt, non tantùm cum venia, sed etiam cum ratione peccare.

Touching Gregorius Neocæsariensis, S. Basils excuse is good. So S. Augustine writing against the Pelagians, seemeth sometime, to leane too far to the contrary, and to become a Manichæ: as also writing against the Manichees, he seemeth sometimes to be a Pelagian. The like S. Basil writeth of one Dionysius, that contending ouer earnestly against the Heretike Sabellius, seemed to fall into the contrary Heresie. Basil. epist. 41.

Thus the holy Fathers in the sway of Disputation, vse oft times to enlarge their talke aboue the common course of truth: but specially when they intreat of the Nature, and effect of the holy Sacraments: to the end to withdraw the eies of the people from the Sensible, and Corruptible Creatures, that they see before them, to the contemplation of things Spirituall, that be in Heauen. In this sort S. Chrysostome saith: Figimus dentes in Carne Christi: We fasten our teeth in the flesh of Christ. And againe, Videmus Dominum nostrum in Cunis iacentem, & fasijs inuolutum: We see our Lord lying in a Cradle, and swathed in bands. And againe: Turba circumstans rubet Sanguine Christi: The company standing about is made red with the Blood of Christ. Likewise againe he saith: Hic Sermo Sanguine infectus omnes aspersit: These words being stained with Blood, haue sprinkled all men. So Likewise S. Bernard: Totum Christum desidero videre, & tangere: & non id solùm, sed accedere ad Sacrosanctum eius Lateris vulnus, ostium Arcæ, quod factum est in Latere, vt totus intrem vsque ad Cor Iesu: I desire to see whole Christ, and to touch him: and not only so, but also to come to the Holy Wound of his side, which is the doore, that was made in the side of the Arke: that I may wholly enter euen vnto the heart of Iesus. Thus the Holy Fathers haue euermore vsed vpon occasion to force, and aduance their words aboue the tenour of common speech. Chrysostom. in Iohan. hom. 45. Chrysost. de Beato Philogonio. Chrysost. de Sacerdotio, li. 3. Chrysostom. ad Hebræos hom. 16. Bernard. De amore Dei ca. 1.

Now marke, good Christian Reader, how handsomely M. Harding applieth these things vnto his purpose. Certainly Tertullian in these words, euen by M. Hardings owne iudgement, enlargeth nothing, nor vseth any such contentious, or fiery speech ouer, and aboue the Truth: but rather contrariwise he abateth, and minisheth, as much as he possibly may, of the Truth. For the thing, that M. Harding saith, Is Christs very Naturall Body, Tertullian saith, It is a Figure of Christs Body: The thing, that indeed, and vndoubtedly is the Substance of Bread, that Tertullian, by M. Hardings exposition, calleth a Shew, or Accident of Bread: To be short, that thing wherein resteth all thing, Tertullian in Conclusion maketh nothing. Yet M. Harding fauourably excuseth him, for that he wrote ἀγωνιῶς, as did Gregorius Neocæsariensis: and therefore through heat of Contentation seemeth somwhat to ouerreach the truth. Thus he, that calleth Christs Body a Figure, Substance, Accident, and abaseth his talke, and speaketh lesse, than he should doe; by M. Hardings Diuinity, amplifieth, enlargeth, ouerreacheth, and speaketh more than he should doe. It is a very narrow hole, that these men will not seeke, to shift out at. Hoc est, Figura Corporis mei. Origen. in Leuiti. Hom. 7. Cypri. de Vnctione Chrismæ. Hieronym. in Matthæ. ca. 26.

Origen expounding these words: Vnlesse ye eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, &c. saith thus, It is a Figure. S. Cyprian saith: Significata, & Significantia ijsdem nominibus censentur: The things that Signifie, and the things that be Signified, are counted both by one name. S. Hierome saith: Christ represented the Verity of his Body. S Augustine saith: Christ deliuered to his Disciples the Figure of his Body. Gelasius calleth the Sacrament Similitudinem, & Imaginem, A Similitude, and an Image of Christs Body. S. Basil calleth it ἀντίτυπον, A Samplar: Dionysius calleth it Signum, A Token. S. Ambrose vseth all these words together, Imago, Figura, Typus, Similitudo, significatur: An Image, a Figure, a Token, a Likenesse, it is Signified. Time will not suffer me to reckon vp the rest. For to this purpose, and with such words they write all, and none otherwise. And must we needs beleeue, vpon M. Hardings report, that all these Fathers spake in such heat, and in such fury of contention, and had no maner regard to the exact vse of their words? Truly, as it is said before, Tertullian wrote August. in Psal. 3. Gelasius contra Eutychem. Basil. in Liturgia. Dionys. Eccles. Hierar. ca. 3. Ambros. de Sacramen. Et de iis, qui initiantur.

wrote gravely, and soberly, and without any token of impatient heat: and that not lightly, or slenderly, touching the matter with one hot word, or two, as it is here supposed, but clerly proving the same by a Substantiall, and full conclusion. For, to prove against Marcion the Heretike, that Christ had the very Substance, and Nature of a mans Body, he vseth this reason: A Figure presupposeth the Verity of a thing, whereof it is a Figure: But Christ at his last Supper gaue to his Disciples the Figure of his Body: Therefore Christ had indeed (not a Fantasie, or a Shew) but a Naturall, and a very Body. The force hereof standeth vpon this ground, that a Fantasie, or Shew can beare no Figure. And in this sort seme thinke S. Paul said, Idolum nihil est, An Idoll is not thing. Thus S. Augustine saith: Vnlesse Sacraments had a certaine Likenesse of things whereof they be Sacraments, then no doubt, they were no Sacraments. Thus Leo, Gelasius, and other Old Fathers reason against the Heretike Eutyches. Likewise Chrysostome reproueth the Old Heretiques Valentinus, Manichæus, and Marcion. Thus he writeth: Quoniam isti, eorumque sequaces, negaturi erant hanc dispensationem (Christi in Carne) ideò nos in Memoriam Passionis semper reducit per hoc Mysterium: vt nemo, modò ne sit insanus, seduci possit: Because these Heretikes, and others their Disciples, would denie this dispensation (of Christ in the Flesh,) therefore by this Mystery he putteth vs euermore in Remembrance of his Passion, that no man, vnlesse he be mad, can be deceiued. And immediatly before, he vseth these words, which I haue elsewhere alleged: Si mortuus Christus non est, cuius Symbolum, ac Signum hoc Sacrificium est? If Christ died not, (as these Heretikes say) then whose Signe, and whose Token is this Sacrifice? In like maner Tertullian reasoneth against Marcion, not ignorantly, or blindly, as M. Harding saith, but directly, and orderly, and according to the words of Christ.

1. Cor. 8.
August. in Epist. 23.
Chrysostom. in Matth. hom. 83.

But, if Tertullian had then bẽn perswaded of this Priuie, and Secret Presence, that here is imagined, and neuertheless would haue left the same, and grounded his whole proofe vpon a Figure, then had he, not only bẽn ignorant, and presumptious, as here M. Harding maketh him, but also a traitor to his owne cause. For, if he had granted this New Fantasie, that the Accidents in the Sacrament stand alone without any Subiect, then had he concluded fully with Marcion the Heretike, and most directly against himselfe. For thus would Marcion conclude vpon the same: The Bread in the Sacrament is Fantastical, That is to say, It seemeth Bread, and is none: Euen so the Body of Christ was Fantastical: For it seemed a Body and was none.

Thus M. Harding, and Marcion the Heretike, build both together vpon one foundation.

M. Harding. The 11. Diuision.

And, wherein Tertullian vseth this word Figure, in this place, it is not to be vnderstanded such as the Figures of the Old Testament be, as though it signified the shewing of a thing to come, or of a thing absent, which is wont to be set against the truth, as contrary to the same; but it is such a kind of Figure, as doth couer the truth present, and so as it were ioined with the truth, (193) as it is wont to be taken in the New Testament, where it sheweth rather the maner of a thing to be exhibited, than that it taketh away the truth of presence of the thing, which is exhibited. For else concerning the truth of Christs Body in the Sacrament, if any man doubt, what opinion he was of, he sheweth himselfe plainly so to iudge of it, as euer hath been taught in the Catholike Church. Whereof he giueth euidence in many other places: But specially in his second booke to his wife, exhorting her not to marry againe to an Infidel, if she ouerliued him, lest if she did, she should not haue oportunitie to obserue the Christian Religion, as she would. Speaking of the Blessed Sacrament, which was then commonly kept of deuout men, and women in their houses, and there in times of persecution receiued before other meats, when deuotion stirred them, he saith thus: Shall not thy husband know what thou eatest secretly before other meat? And if he know it, he will beleeue it to be Bread, (194) not him, who it is called. The Latine is recited before. I omit many other places, which shew him to acknowledge Christs Bodie in the Sacrament, because I would not be tedious, which verily by no wresting can be drawen to the signification of a meere Figure.

The 193. Vntruth. For it is neuer so taken in the New Testament.

The 194. Vntruth, standing in manifest, and willfull Corruption.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

One Cloud more M. Harding throweth in, to dimme, and shadow the Day light. He casteth doubts, lest some man would make this Holy Mystery a Figure of the Old Testament. But it is knowen euen vnto children, that it is a Sacrament in the Gospell, like as also is the Sacrament of Baptisme.

But the difference betwẽn the Sacraments of the Old Testament, and of the New, standeth not in containing, or couering, as it is here surmised, but in the Order, and Maner, and Euidence of Shewing. Which difference S. Augustine openeth in this sort: Sacramenta Legis fuerunt promissiones rerum complendarum: nostra sunt indicia rerum completarum: The Sacraments of the Old Law were promises of things to be performed? Our Sacraments are Tokens of things, that already be performed. Againe: Lex, & Prophetæ Sacramenta habebant prænuntiantia rem futuram: Sacramenta nostri temporis venisse testantur, teſtantur, quod illa venturum prædicabant: The Law, and the Prophets had Sacraments, ſhewing before, a thing that was to come: But the Sacraments of our time doe witneſſe, that the thing is already come, that by thoſe Sacraments was ſignified. And againe: Sacramenta Iudæorum in Signis diuerſa fuerunt à noſtris: in rebus autem Significatis paria: The Sacraments of the Iewes, in outward tokens were diuers from ours: but in the things ſignified they were equall, and one with ours. Likewiſe againe he ſaith: In illis Carnalibus victimis Figuratio fuit Carnis Chriſti, quam pro noſtris peccatis fuerat oblaturus: in iſto autem Sacrificio eſt Gratiarum actio & Commemoratio Carnis Chriſti, quam pro nobis obtulit: In thoſe fleſhly Sacrifices there was a Signification of the Fleſh of Chriſt, which he had to offer for our ſinnes: But in this Sacrifice there is a Thankſgiuing, and a Remembrance of the Fleſh of Chriſt, which he hath already offered for vs. Auguſt. contra literas Petiliani lib. 2. ca. 37. Auguſtin. in Iohan. tract. 26. Auguſt. de Fide ad Petrum. ca. 19.

The New Fantaſie of Being preſent Secretly, or vnder Couert, is anſwered before.

And whereas, for further proofe of Tertullians mind herein, M. Harding hath here alleged certaine words of his vnto his wife, vnderſtand thou, good Reader, that wilfully he hath of purpoſe corrupted the ſame, the rather to miſlead thy ſimplicity. True it is, that the Vnfaithfull, that knoweth not Chriſt, if he happen to ſée the Bread of the Holy Myſteries, will iudge no further of it, but that he ſeeth. But what it meaneth, or Signifieth, or vnto what end it is appointed, he knoweth not. But the Bread of the Sacrament, by Chriſts Inſtitution, is Spirituall, and Heauenly Bread, euen as the Water of Baptiſme is Spirituall, and Heauenly Water. Which thing as Tertullian ſaith, The Infidell cannot ſée. But M. Harding, hauing ſmall regard to his Readers iudgement, hath wittingly falſified his Translation, changing this Article, It, into Him, only of his owne particular wilfulneſſe, contrary to all others, Old, or New: yea contrary to his owne Fellowes. Of whom one Translateth the ſame in this wiſe: And if he know it, he beleeueth it to be Bread, and not that, which it is ſaid to be. No man may be bold to worke ſuch open Corruption, but M. Harding. For, whereas Tertullians words be plaine, Si ſcierit maritus tuus, Panem eſſe, credet, non illum (Panem) qui dicitur: If thy huſband know it (being an infidell) he will beleeue it to be (bare) Bread, but not that (Bread) that it is called; M. Harding thought it better to Translate it thus, He will beleeue it to be Bread, but not Him, Who it is called: As if it were the perſon of a Man. This dealing, and the whole vnderſtanding of Tertullians mind, is opened more at large in the firſt Article, and in the ſeuentanth Diuiſion. Certainly, falſe Translation maketh no ſufficient proofe.

Now marke thou, good Chriſtian Reader, into how many, and how narrow ſtraits M. Harding hath caſt himſelfe, to auoid the force of theſe few plaine words of Tertullian, Hoc eſt Figura Corporis mei: This is a Figure of my Body. Firſt, the Outward, and, as he calleth it, the holy Forme of Bread is the Figure of Chriſts Body, Inuiſibly hidden vnder the Accidents. Secondly, the ſame Body ſo hidden, and Inuiſible, is a Figure of Chriſts Body Viſible. Thirdly, Tertullian, as it is here preſumed, vnderſtood not the very Grammaticall, and Literall ſenſe of Chriſts words. Fourthly, the ſame Tertullian was carried away with heat, and contention, and either knew not, or cared not, what he ſaid. Fiftly, by this New Expoſition he is made to ioine with Marcion the Heretike, againſt whom he writeth, and ſo to conclude directly againſt himſelfe. I paſſe ouer the fantaſying of Formes, Accidents, Outward Elements, Miraculous Changes, Secret Preſences, and other like forced Termes, whereof Tertullian knoweth none. To be ſhort, M. Harding with his ſtrange Conſtruction, and Marcion the Old Heretike, hold both by one Principle.

1 Holy Accidents. 2 3 4 5

It were far better, for a man, that meant truth, to leaue theſe vnſauory, and vnſenſible Gloſſes, and ſimply, and plainly to expound the Words of Chriſt, as this Ancient Learned Father expoundeth them: Hoc eſt Corpus meum: Hoc eſt, Figura Corporis mei; This is my Body, that is to ſay, This is a Figure of my Body. So ſhall Tertullian agree both in Sense, and Words with all the Old Catholike writers, and Doctors of the Church: So ſhall he agree with the Common Gloſſe noted in the Decrees: Vocatur Corpus Chriſti: id eſt, Significat Corpus Chriſti: It is called the Body of Chriſt: That is to ſay, It ſignifieth the Body of Chriſt. So ſhall he agree with Maximus the Greeke Scholiaſt vpon Dionyſius: Signa ſunt hæc, non autem Veritas: Theſe be Tokens, but not the Truth it ſelfe. To conclude, ſo ſhall Tertullian agree with himſelfe: For thus he writeth: Chriſtus non reprobauit Panem, quo ipſum Corpus ſuum Repreſentauit: Chriſt refuſed not Bread, wherewith he Repreſented his owne body. De Conſ. diſt. 2. Hoc eſt. In Gloſſa. Maximus in Eccleſ. hierar. Cap. 3. σύμβολα τοῦτα, ἀλλὰ οὐκ ἀλήθεια. Tertullian. contra Marcionem lib. 1.

M. Harding. The 12. Diuiſion.

The like anſwer may be made to the obiection brought out of S. Auguſtine, Contra Adimantum Manichæum, ca. 13. Non dubitauit Dominus dicere, Hoc eſt Corpus meum, cùm tamen daret Signum Corporis ſui: Our Lord ſtickt ſtickt not to ſay, This is my Body, when notwithſtanding he gaue the Signe of his Body. For this is to be conſidered, that S. Auguſtine in fighting againſt the Manichees, often times vſeth not his owne ſenſe, and meaning, but thoſe things which by ſome meane, howſoeuer it were, might ſeeme to giue him aduantage againſt them, ſo as he might put them to the worſt, as he witneſſeth himſelfe in his booke De bono perſeuerantiæ, Ca. 11. & 12.

A miſerable ſhift. S Auguſtine hath no regard what he ſay.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

S. Auguſtine, ſaith M. Harding, in the chafe and rage of Diſputation ſometimes forgat himſelfe, and vttered his words vnaduiſedly: and not only that, but alſo afterward publiſhed the ſame his vnaduiſed ſpeech in open writing vnto the world, as a man ſeking only to conquer his Aduerſary: but whether by right, or by wrong, by truth, or by falſehood, he had no care. But, O gentle, and eaſie Heretikes, that vpon ſuch proſes would ſo lightly yeld vnto S. Auguſtine! Eaſie alſo be theſe Catholikes, that in ſo childiſh Cheſſes will giue credit to M. Harding. Certainly, S. Auguſtine for his mildneſſe, and ſobriety, both in Diſputation, and alſo otherwiſe, hath the praiſe aboue all others. Neither doth there appeare in that whole booke againſt Adimantus, any token to the contrarie. Some part of their variance grew vpon occaſion of theſe words, Sanguis eſt Anima: The Blood is the Soule. For declaration whereof S. Auguſtine without any maner heat of Contention, that may appeare, ſaith thus: Ita Sanguis eſt Anima, quemadmodum Petra erat Chriſtus: So is the Blood the Soule, euen as the Rocke was Chriſt. And in the ſame Chapter he ioyneth theſe three ſentences all together: The Blood is the Soule, The Rocke was Chriſt, And, This is my Body: as being all both of like meaning, and alſo of like maner of vtterance. S. Auguſtine neuer knew any of theſe M. Hardings lately inuented holy Formes, or Couerts, or Secreſſes. But in moſt plaine wiſe he ſaith, Dabat Signum Corporis ſui: Chriſt gaue a Token of his Body: agreeing therein both with himſelfe, and alſo with all other Ancient Catholike Fathers. But if M. Harding, not ſhewing vs any ſuſpition, or token of inordinate heat in that Reuerend Maſter of the Church of God, may tell vs only of himſelfe, that he was thus vnaduiſedly caried away with vehemencie of Diſputation, and tempeſt of talke, then may he alſo eaſily diſpatch all other the Auncient Learned Fathers, and ſay, whatſoeuer they wrote, that liketh not him, they wrote in a Rage, and in their Furies. But if S. Auguſtine were aliue, he would rather ſay, That M. Harding were ſomewhat blown away with the winds, and waues of contention, and had much forgotten himſelfe, and talketh in his Heats, he knoweth not, or careth not, what. S. Ambroſe vpon occaſion expounding theſe words, ſaith thus: Cùm Sanguinem hoc loco Animam diceret, vtique ſignificauit, aliud eſſe Animam, aliud Sanguinem: When Moſes in this place called the Blood the Soule, doubtleſſe he meant thereby, that the Blood is one thing, and the Soule another, (notwithſtanding he ſeme by words to make them one.) Euen ſo likewiſe may we ſay, When Chriſt vttered theſe words, This Bread is my Body, he meant, that the Bread is one thing, and his Body another, notwithſtanding the words ſeme to ſound otherwiſe.

M. Harding. The 13. Diuiſion.

Gregory Nazianzene Oratione 4. in Sanctum Paſcha, ſhewing difference between the Paſſeouer of the Law, which the Iewes did eat, and that which we in the New Teſtament doe eat in the Myſtery of the Sacrament, and that which Chriſt ſhall eat with vs in the life to come, in the Kingdome of his Father, vttereth ſuch words, as whereby he calleth that we receiue here, a Figure of that ſhall be receiued there. Cæterum iam Paſchæ ſanctus participes, Figuraliter tamen adhuc, etſi Paſcha hoc veteriſit manifeſtius. Si quidem Paſcha legale, audenter dico, Figuræ Figura erat obſcurior: at paulò poſt illo perfectius & purius fruemur, cum Verbum ipſum biberit nobiſcum in regno patris nouum, detegens & docens, quæ nunc mediocriter oſtendit Nouum enim ſemper exiſtit id, quod nuper eſt cognitum. But now (ſaith he) let vs be made partakers of this Paſſeouer, and yet but Figuratiuely as yet, albeit this Paſſeouer be more manifeſt, then that of the Old Law. For the Paſſeouer of the Law (I ſpeak boldly) was a darke Figure of a Figure: but ere it be long, we ſhall enioy it more perfitly, and more purer, when as the Word (that is, the Sonne of God) ſhall drinke the ſame new with vs in the Kingdom of his Father, opening and teaching the things, that now he ſheweth not in moſt cleere wiſe. For that euer is new, which of late is knowen. Whereas this learned Father calleth our Paſſeouer, that we eat, a Figure, whereof the Law Paſſeouer was a Figure, terming it the Figure of a Figure, he asketh leaue, as it were, ſo to ſay, and confeſſeth himſelfe to ſpeak boldly, alluding, as it ſeemeth to S. Paul, or at leaſt hauing faſt printed in his mind, his Doctrine to the Hebrews: where he calleth the things of the life to come, Res ipſas, the very things themſelues: the things of the New Teſtament, Ipſam imaginem rerum, the very Image of things: and the Old Teſtament, Imaginis vmbram, the ſhadow of the Image. Which doctrine Nazianzene applieth to the Sacrament of the Altar. And his meaning is this, that although we be gotten out of thoſe darkneſſes of the Law, yet we are not come to the full light, which we look for in the World to come, where we ſhall ſee and behold the very things themſelues cleerely, and we ſhall know as we are known. To be ſhort, by his report, the Sacraments of the old Teſtament be but Figures, and Shadows of things to come, the Sacraments of the new Teſtament, not ſhadows of things to come (195) but Figures of things preſent, which are contained and deliuered vnder them in Myſtery, but yet ſubſtantially: at the end of all, Figures in Heauen ſhall ceaſe and be aboliſhed, and there ſhall we ſee all thoſe things that here be hidden, cleerly face to face. And

Heb. 10.

The 195. Vntruth. For this was neuer this Fathers meaning.

where Christ saith, that he will drink his Passeouer new with vs in the kingdom of his Father, Nazianzene so expoundeth that word, New, as it may be referred to the maner of the exhibiting, not to the thing exhibited. Not that in the World to come we shall haue another Body of our Lord, which now we haue not, but that we shall haue the selfe same Body, that now we haue in the Sacrament of the Altar in a Mystery, but yet verily, and substantially, after another sort and maner, and in that respect new. For so had without Mystery, or couerture in cleere sight, and most ioyfull fruition, it is new in comparison of this present knowledge.

The Law and the Gospel.

Orolly Nazian. speaketh not of the Sacrament, but of perfection and imperfection of knowledge.

This place is not well applied: for these words pertaine nothing to the Sacrament.

Thus the word Figure reporteth not alwales the absence of the truth of a thing, as we see, but the maner of the thing either promised, or exhibited: that forasmuch as it is not fully and cleerely seen, it may be called a Figure. So of Origen it is called Imago rerum, an Image of the things, as in this place. Si quis uero transire potuerit ab hac umbra, ueniat ad imaginem rerum, & uideat aduentum Christi in Carne susceptum, uideat eum Pontificem offerentem quidem & nunc patri hostias, & postmodum oblaturum: & intelligat haec omnia imagines esse Spiritualium rerum, & corporalibus officijs Cœlestia designari. Imago ergo dicitur hoc, quod recipitur ad praesens, & inuisuri sumus humana natura. And if any man (saith he) can passe and depart from this shadow, let him come to the Image of things; and see the comming of Christ made in Flesh, let him see him a Bishop that both now offereth Sacrifice vnto his Father, and also hereafter shall offer. And let him vnderstand, that all these things be Images of Spirituall things, and that by bodily seruices heauenly things be resembled, and set foorth. So this, which is at this present receiued, and may of mans nature be seen, is called an Image. In this saying of Origen, this word Image, doth not in signification diminish the truth of things, so as they be not the very things indeed, for the things that Christ did in Flesh, were true things: but when they are termed the Image of things, thereby is signified, so far as the condition and nature of man can behold and see them.

This is most plainly vttered by Oecumenius a Greeke writer, vpon these words of S. Paul to the Hebrews: Non ipsam imaginem rerum, not the Image it selfe of things, Id est, ueritatem rerum, that is, the truth of things, saith he, and addeth further: Res appellat futuram Vitam, imaginem autem rerum, Euangelicam politiam; umbram uero ueteris testamenti. Imago enim manifestiora ostendit exemplaria: adumbratio autem imaginis obscurius haec manifestat, nam haec ueteris Testamenti exprimit imbecillitatem. The sense of which words may thus be vttered in English. S. Paul calleth the life to come, the things: and the ordinance or disposition of the things in the Gospell, he calleth the Image of things: and the old Testament, he nameth the shadow of the Image of things. For an Image sheweth samplars more manifest: but the adumbration or shadowing of the Image sheweth these things but darkly, for this doth expresse the weakenesse of the Old Testament. By this place of Oecumenius we see, that although it be proper to an Image to exhibit the truth of things, and therefore by interpretation he saith, Imaginem, Id est, ueritatem, the Image, that is, the truth: yet the proper and right taking of the word, signifieth the way, or maner of a thing to be exhibited, not the thing it selfe: that what the Image hath lesse then the thing it selfe, it is to be vnderstanded in the maner of exhibiting, not in the thing it selfe exhibited.

Nothing of the Sacrament.

Hitherto we haue brought examples to declare, that the words, Figure, and Image, signifie the truth of things exhibited indeed, though in secret, and priuy maner.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

These three Fathers, Nazianzene, Origen, and Oecumenius, cost M. Harding no great study. He found them word by word, alleged before in Doctor Steuen Gardiner. Neither doe they any wise further his purpose, touching either his outward Formes, and Accidents: or else his Priuie, and Secret Presence. But he knoweth, that the verie Names of Old Doctors, although they say nothing, may suffice to lead the ignorant.

The meaning of these three Fathers was only to shew the difference, that is betweene the three states. The Iewes vnder the Law, The Christians vnder the Gospell, and the Saints in the life to come. All which three states are one offspring of Abraham, one people, one Church, one Inheritance: all calling vpon, and glorifying the name of God, and of his Son Iesus Christ. Therefore S. Augustine saith: The people of Israell vnder the Law were very Christians: and the Christians in the Gospell are very Israelites. Albeit, he addeth: Non oportet illud nomen in consuetudine Sermonis retinere: In common vse of speech we may not continue that name. Againe he saith: Iudæi non dum nomine, sed re ipsa erant Christiani: The Iewes although not in name, yet indeed were very Christians. Likewise Eusebius saith: All the Iewes, from Abraham vpward vntill Adam, were indeed Christian men: albeit they were not named so. So likewise Epiphanius saith: The Faith of Christ was euer from the beginning of the world.

Augustin. ad Asellicum Epist. 20.

August. contra 2. Epist. Pelagian. li. 3. ca. 4.

τῷ ἔργῳ χεσιανοὶ, εἰ μη χρόνῳ μαπ.

Epiphan. li. 3. ca. 1.

ἡ τοῦ πίστις ἀπ ἀρχῆς ἦν τοῦ κόσμου.

The substance of these three states is one: the difference standeth only in quality, or proportion of more, or lesse. The Iewes saw Christ in the Law: The Christians see Christ in the Gospell: The Blessed Saints see Christ in Heauen. The Iewes saw Christ darkly, as in a shadow: The Christians see Christ as in an Image liuely portraid: The holy Saints see Christ in Heauen expressly, and perfitly without Image or Shadow, face to face. Christ, that is seene, is all one: the difference is only in the seers: of whom some see in a darke Shadow: some in a perfit Image: and some in the cleere Light. And yet none of them without the sight of Christ. And as the Iewes were in a Shadow, in comparison of that Brightnesse of Light, that we see now: euen so are we likewise in a Shadow, in comparison of that Light, that we hope for, and is to come. And thus Origen, Nazianzene, Oecumenius, and the rest of the Ancient Fathers meant, and none otherwise.

There-

Therefore M. Harding may consider better, how much these authorities make for him, to prove his Secret Fleshly Presence in the Sacrament.

Chrysostom. in varijs locis in Matthæ. Chrysost. in dictum Apostoli, Patres nostri omnes, &c. Irenæus li. 4. cap. 42. Galat. 4. 1. Corin. 13.

Chrysostome compareth the state of the Jewes, vnto a Candle: and the state of the Christians, to the Brightnesse of the Sunne. Againe, he likeneth the Jewes to the first draught, or plat of an Image, set out only in bare lines: and the Christians vnto the same Image liuely filled vp with all due proportion, and resemblance, and furniture of colours. Irenæus compareth the Jewes to the sowing of the sad: and the Christians to the harnest, and reaping of the Corne. To conclude, S. Paul compareth the Jewes to a Child, and the Christians to a full perfit man.

By all these Examples it appeareth, that the Substance is one, and the difference standeth only in More, and Lesse. The Jewes had the same light, although not in like quantity: The same Image, although not with like furniture: The same Corne, although not growen to like ripenesse: They were the same person, although not in like perfection of age. Thus much, to open the difference betweene the Law, and the Gospell: which was one part of these Fathers meaning.

August. contra Faustum lib. 12. ca. 20.

The like difference we may find betweene the state of the Gospell, and the state of the life, that is to come. For although the things be one, yet the fruition of the same is not one: and in respect of that abundance of Glorie, that we looke for, all that we haue, and enioy already, is but a Figure. And therefore S. Augustine saith: Cùm Christus tradiderit Regnum Deo, & Patri, in illa perspicua contemplatione incommutabilis Veritatis, nullis Mysterijs Corporalibus indigebimus: When Christ shall haue deliuered the Kingdome to God, and the Father, in that plaine contemplation of the vnchangeable Truth, we shall need no Bodily Mysteries.

August in. in Psalm. 26.

Likewise he writeth of the Sacrament of Baptisme: Vngimur modò in Sacramento: & Sacramento ipso præfiguratur quiddam, quod futuri sumus: & illud, nescio quid, futurum ineffabile desiderare debemus, & in Sacramento gemere: vt in ea re gaudeamus, quæ Sacramento præmonstratur: We are now anointed in a Sacrament: and in the Sacrament it selfe there is a thing foresignified, that we shall be: and the same vnspeakable thing, that is to come, we ought to desire, and to mourne for it in the Sacrament, that we may reioice in that thing, that is signified in the Sacrament.

Basilius in Psalm 45. διὰ τὸν κατὰ βραχὺ κατὰ ἀπῆχον τῆς θεωρημάτων. Gregori. Nazianzen. in S. Pascha Orat. 4. Origen. in Psal. 38. Homil. 2.

So S. Basil: Etiam nunc iustus bibit Aquam illam viuentem: verùm eam post hac largiùs bibet, vbi cooptatus fuerit in Ciuitatem Dei. Nunc quidem bibit in speculo, & in ænigmate, per breuem comprehensionem Obseruationum Diuinarum: Tunc autem flumen vniuersum recipiet: Euen now the iust man drinketh that Liuing Water. But after this, when he shall be receiued into the Citie of God, he shall drinke it more abundantly. Now he drinketh as in a Seeing glasse, or in a riddle, by a small vnderstanding of Heauenly things: but then he shall swallow downe the whole streame.

In this sense Nazianzene saith: The Ecclesiasticall policy of the Iewes, compared with the Gospell of Christ, is a Figure of a Figure. In this sense Origen saith: The comming of Christ in the Flesh, and the offering of himselfe vpon the Crosse, (the force of which oblation continueth still) and all, that our Nature can conceiue of the same, is but an Image, in comparison of those Spirituall things, that we looke for. And here vnderstand, thou good Reader, that Origen in this place speaketh of Christs comming, and appearing in the Flesh: and not one word of the Sacrament. For thus he saith: Veniat ad Imaginem rerum, & videat aduentum Christi in Carne factum: Let him come to the Image of things, and see Christs comming in the Flesh.

Oecumenius ad Hebræos, c. 10. Chrysost. ad Hebræos, ca. 10.

This Image Oecumenius very well expoundeth: Veritatem rerum, that is, The Truth, and performance of things, that were promised vnder a Shadow to the Iewes. In like sort Chrysostome expoundeth the same words: Lex habuit vmbram futurorum bonorum, non ipsam imaginem rerum: hoc est, non ipsam Veritatem: The Law had a Shadow of good things to come, but not the Image of the things, that is to say, not the truth it selfe. He calleth the Gospell the truth it selfe, not in respect of Christs Secret Being in the Sacrament, vnto which fantasie M. Harding driueth all this long talke, but only in respect of Christs Incarnation, as it is plaine by that immediatly followeth: Donec enim quis velut in pictura circumducat colores, Vmbra quædam est: cùm verò flores ipsos colorum induxerit, & imposuerit, tunc Imago efficitur: A Picture, vntill the Painter lay on his colours, is but a Shadow: but the fresh colours being laid on, it is an Image. So S. Paul calleth the Law the Shadow, and Christ the Body. And in this consideration

Chrysost. ad Hebræos, c. 10. Colossi. 2. Athanasius De Communi essen. P. Fi. & Spir. S. Augustin. in Psal. 73.

Athanasius saith: Euangelium est Dei Verbi Domini Iesu Christi Præsentia, ad humani generis salutem Incarnati: The Gospell is the Presence of our Lord Iesus Christ, which is the Word of God, Incarnate vnto the Saluation of Mankind. And therefore S. Augustine saith: Nostra Sacramenta dant Salutem: Iudæorum Sacramenta promittebant Saluatorem: Non quòd iam acceperimus vitam æternam, sed quòd iam venerit Christus, qui per Prophetas pronuntiabatur: Our Sacraments doe game Saluation: The Sacraments of the Iewes promised a Sauiour. I speake not this, for that we haue already attained Euerlasting life, but for that Christ is already come, that is pronounced by the Prophets.

But of these Fathers words M. Harding reasoneth in this wise: The brightnesse of the Gospell is but a Figure, in Comparison of that Brightnesse, that is to come: Ergo, Christs Body is secretly hidden vnder the outward Formes, and Accidents of the Sacrament.

Howbeit, it may seme appeare vnto the discreet, and indifferent Reader that in all these words there is no maner mention, neither of Secretie, nor of Presence, nor of Absence, nor of Formes, nor of Elements, nor of Accidents, nor, in proprietie words, of any Sacrament. Nazianzene, notwithstanding he may seme to touch the Sacrament of Christs Body, yet indeed he speaketh onely of the Spirituall food of the knowledge of God, and not of the Sacrament: as it is plaine both by the place it selfe, and also by the words, that immediately follow after. The words, that went before, are these: Christus bibet nobiscum Nouum Vinum in Regno Patris: Christ will drinke with vs Iew Wine in the Kingdome of his Father. The words, that follow, are these: Quis est ille potus, & quæ est hæc oblectatio? Nostra quidem, Discere: illius verò, Docere. Doctrina enim etiam docenti alimenti instar est: What is this Drinke, and what is this Pleasure? Of our part, it is to learne: of Christs part, it is to teach. For Doctrine euen vnto him, that teacheth, is a kind of meat. τὸ γὰρ ἐστὶ τροφὴ καὶ διδαχὴ καὶ τῷ διδόντι.

It is very much for M. Harding, thus to conclude his imaginations of the Sacrament, by these Fathers, that speake not one word of the Sacrament. Nothing that is here alleged of Secret and Priuie Being, the Catholike Fathers doe confesse that Christ is in the Sacraments of the New Testament, as he was in the Sacraments of the Old. So S. Augustine saith: Quicunque in Manna Christum intellexunt, eundem, quem nos, Cibum Spiritualem manducauerunt: As many, as in Manna vnderstood Christ, fed of the same Spirituall Bread, that we feed of. Augustin. de vtilitate Pœnitentiæ. Againe he saith: Videte ergo, Fide manente, Signa variata. Ibi Petra Christus: Nobis Christus, quod in Altari Dei potur: Behold, the Faith standing one, the Signes, or Sacraments are changed. There the Rocke was Christ: Vnto vs that thing is Christ, that is laid vpon the Altar. August. in Iohan. tract. 45. As Christ is now here: so as Christ then there. And as Christ is now in the Bread: so was Christ then in the Rocke: none otherwise. But what can be so plaine, as that Nazianzene himselfe writeth, whom M. Harding hath chosen specially for his Author? These be his words: Pellent me Altaribus. At ego noui aliud Altare, cuius ea omnia, quæ nunc videntur, exemplaria tantum sunt: non manu, aut ascia elaboratum: Mentis opus est, & Contemplationis ascensus. Ibi astabo, & acceptabilia offeram, Sacrificium, Oblationem, & Holocausta, quæ tanto præstantiora sunt, quàm ea quæ nunc aguntur, quantò Veritas potior est, quàm Vmbra. Nazianzen. in Oration. Cum post ea, quæ contra Maximum &c. They will driue me from the Altars, or Communion Tables. But I know another Altar, whereof all the things, that are now seene, are but Samplars: not wrought by hand, or Instrument. It is the worke of the minde, and the eleuation of the heart. There will I stand, and offer vp acceptable Sacrifices: Which so farre exceed the Sacrifices, that are made heere, as the Truth exceedeth a Shadow.

M. Harding. The 14. Diuision.

Dist. Dist. 2. Cu. Verum sub Forma.

Certaine Fathers vse the words, Signum & Sacramentum, that is, Signe and Sacrament, in the same signification. S. Augustine, In libro Sententiarum Prosperi, saith thus: Caro eius est, quam in Pane operemur: & Sanguis eius, quem sub vini specie & sapore potamus: Caro videlicet & Sanguis est Sacramentum Sanguinis: Carne & Sanguine, vtroque Inuisibili, Spirituali, Intelligibili, Signo visibili Domini nostri Iesu Christi Corpus & palpabile, plenum gratia omnium virtutum, & Diuina Maiestate: is his Flesh that wee receiue couered with the forme of Bread in the Sacrament, and his Blood, that vnder the shape and sauour of Wine, we drinke. Soothly Flesh is a Sacrament of Flesh, and Blood is a Sacrament of Blood: by the Flesh and the Blood both Inuisible, Spirituall, Intelligible, our Lord Iesus Christ his visible and palpable Body, full of the grace of all vertues, and Diuine Maiestie is signified or, as it were with a Signe noted.

In these words of S. Augustine, we see the flesh of Christ called a Sacrament of his Flesh, and the Blood a Sacrament of his Blood, inasmuch as they be couered with the forme of Bread and Wine, yet verily, and in Substance present. And likewise he letteth not to call this Veritie or Truth of the things themselues thus couertly exhibited, a Signe of Christs Visible and palpable Body: so that the naming of a Signe doth not import a separation from the Truth, but sheweth a distinct maner of the Truth exhibited, and therefore according to the Truth of the maner of exhibiting, it is not the flesh of Christ, but the Sacrament of the Flesh of Christ, for that the Flesh doth not exhibite it selfe in his owne shape, but in a Sacrament.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

In this saying of S. Augustine, M. Harding seemeth specially to note these few words, Forma, Operta, and Inuisibilis: which being answered, I hope the force of his collection will seme appeare. First, if M. Harding will say, that his word, Forma, must must nedes be taken for the outward shew, and appearance of Bread, then must he nedes fall into a great inconuenience, and become either a Patron, or a Scholar of the old Heretike Marcion, who vpon the very same word erected his Heresie: and of these words of S. Paul, Formam serui suscepit, reasoned then, as M. Harding doth now, Ergo, Christ had nothing else, but the outward Forme, and Appearance, or Shape of a mans Body. But it is knowen to the Learned, that as well among the Philosophers, as also among the old Catholike learned Fathers, these words, Forma, and Species, are taken, not only for the outward Appearance, but also for Nature, and Substance it selfe. So S. Hierome imagineth Christ to say: Declinaui ad eos deserens Regna Cœlorum, vt cum eis vescerer, assumpta Forma Hominis: I went downe vnto them, leauing the Kingdomes of Heauen, that I might eat with them, hauing receiued the Forme of Man. I leaue S. Augustine, S. Ambrose, and other like authorities. This matter is proued more at large in the tenth Article, and sixth Diuision. By these few it may appeare, that this word, Forma, importeth, not only a Shew, but also the very Substance of the Bread.

Hieronym. in Osee, li. 3. ca. 11.

In the second word, Operta, which signifieth Couered, M. Harding wittingly dissembleth his owne learning, and would seeme not to know the maner, and nature of all Sacraments: which is, to offer one thing outwardly vnto our senses, and an other inwardly to our minde. Hereof there is sufficiently spoken before, in the Second, and Eighth Diuision of this Article. Chrysostome saith: In Sensibilibus Intelligibilia nobis tradidit: In Sensible, and Outward things, Christ hath giuen vs things Spirituall. And for Example he addeth: Sic & in Baptismo: So it fareth in the Sacrament of Baptisme. Thus S. Augustine saith: The godly of the Iewes vnderstood Christ in their Manna. In like sort Origen speaketh of the letter of the Scriptures: Corpora Prophetarum colunt posita in Libris, & Literis, quasi in quibusdam Sepulchris: They honour the Bodies of the Prophets laid in their Bookes, and Letters, as if it were in certaine Graues. So S. Augustine: Sensus in Litera manet, & per Literam videtur: The Sense lieth in the Letter, and by the Letter it is seene. So Nicolaus Cabasilas: Spiritus celatur in Litera: The Spirit of God is hidden in the Letter. I thinke M. Harding in these speaches will not necessarily require any Corporall, or Reall Presence. Thus S. Gregorie saith: Christus in seipso immortaliter, & incorruptibiliter viuens, iterum in hoc Mysterio moritur: Christ liuing in himselfe immortally, and without corruption, dieth againe in this Mysterie. Whereupon the Glosse saith: Moritur, id est, Mors eius Repræsentatur: Christ dieth, that is to say, his death is represented. Now, as Christ dieth in the Sacrament, so is his Body present in the Sacrament. But Christ dieth not there Really, and indeed: Therefore Christs Body is not there Really, and indeed.

Chrysostom. in Matt. hom. 83. ἐν αἰσθητοῖς τὰ νοητὰ παρέδωκε. Augustin. de vtilitate Pœnitentiæ: In Manna Christum intellexerunt. Orig. in Matthæ. Tract. 26. Augustin. de Spiritu & anima, cap. 2. Nicolaus Cabasilas. De Con. dist. 2. Quid sit Sanguis.

I thought it nedfull to vse the moe Examples in this behalfe, for that this place of S. Augustine seemeth to carrie the greatest force of all others. But as S. Augustine saith here, Christs Bodie is hidden vnder the Forme, or Kinde of Bread, euen so he saith: Gratia Dei in Veteri Testamento velata latebat: The Grace of God lay hidden in the Old Testament. Euen so S. Gregorie saith: Vt palea frumentum, sic Litera tegit Spiritum: As the Chaffe hideth the Corne, so the Letter hideth the Spirit. Euen so againe S. Augustine saith: In Veteri Testamento occultabatur Nouum: The New Testament was hidden in the Old. But he expoundeth himselfe: Occultabatur, id est, occultè Significabatur: It was hidden, that is to say, it was secretly signified. And thus, by S. Augustines owne words, and exposition, we may likewise say: Caro Christi operta, id est, occultè Significata: Christs Flesh is priuily hidden, that is to say, as S. Augustine expoundeth it, it is priuily Signified.

Augustin. de Spiritu & Litera. ca. 15. Gregor. in Proloqa in Cantica. August. de Baptismo contra Donatistas, li. 1. ca. 15.

Thus the Sacrament of Christs Flesh, which according to the Doctrine of S. Augustine, beareth the name of that thing that it signifieth, is called Christs Flesh, Inuisible, Spirituall, and only to be conceiued by vnderstanding. For the whole worke hereof perteineth, not vnto the mouth, or teeth, as S. Augustine saith, but only to Faith, and Spirit. And therefore the same S. Augustine expounding these words of Christ, Who so eateth of this Bread, shall not die, saith thus: Quod pertinet ad Virtutem Sacramenti, non quod pertinet ad visibile Sacramentum. Qui manducat intus, non foris: qui manducat in Corde, non qui premit dente. That perteineth to the Effect, and Vertue of the Sacrament, not that perteineth to the Visible Sacrament. He that eateth inwardly, not outwardly: that eateth with his heart, not that presseth with his teeth. Likewise he saith of Moses, Aaron, and Phinees, and others the faithfull of that time: Visibilem cibum (Manna) Spiritualiter intellexerunt; Spiritualiter esurierunt, Spiritualiter gustauerunt. They vnderstood Manna that Visible meat, Spiritually; they hungred it Spiritually; they tasted it Spiritually. By these words, Intus, Inwardly: In Corde, in the heart: Spiritualiter, Spiritually: S. Augustine expoundeth the meaning of this word, Inuisibiliter, inuisibly. Therefore Chrysostome saith, Mysterium appellatur, quia aliud videmus, aliud credimus. Nam huiusmodi est Mysteriorum nostrorum natura. It is called a Mystery, because we see one thing, & beleeue an other. For such is the nature of (Baptisme, and our Lords Supper, which are) our Sacraments, or Myſteries. So ſaith S. Ambroſe, as is alleged before: The Water of the holy Font hath waſhed vs: the Blood of Chriſt hath redeemed vs: Alterum igitur Inuiſibile, alterum Viſibile Teſtimonium, &c. The one Witneſſe is Inuiſible, the other is Viſible. So the old Father Origen ſaith: S. Iohns Baptiſme was Viſible: but Chriſts Baptiſme is Inuiſible.

Heauenly Bread.

Ambroſ. de Spiritu Sancto, li. 3. Origen. in Lucam, homil. 24.

As it is in the Myſterie of Baptiſme, ſo is it alſo in the Myſterie of Chriſts Bodie. As Chriſts Blood is Inuiſible, wherewith we are waſhed, ſo is Chriſts Fleſh Inuiſible, wherewith we are fed. And as this Inuiſible waſhing in Chriſts Blood, repreſenteth vnto our mindes the Blood of Chriſt, that was Viſibly ſhed for vs: ſo the Fleſh of Chriſt that is eaten Inuiſibly, repreſenteth vnto vs that Very Fleſh of Chriſt, that was Viſible, and Senſible nailed, and torne vpon the Croſſe. And thus S. Auguſtines meaning may well ſtand vpright, without any New Secreſie, or Reall, or Fleſhly Preſence.

M. Harding. The 15. Diuiſion.

De Con. diſt. 2. Hoc eſt quod dicimus.

And therefore in another place he writeth thus: Sicut ergo Cœleſtis Panis, qui Caro Chriſti eſt, ſuo modo vocatur Corpus Chriſti, cùm re vera ſit Sacramentum Corporis Chriſti, illius videlicet, quod Viſibile, quod Palpabile, mortale in Cruce poſitum eſt, vocaturque ipſa immolatio Carnis, quæ Sacerdotis manibus fit, Chriſti Paſſio, Mors, Crucifixio, non res veritate, ſed ſignificante Myſterio: Sic Sacramentum Fidei, quod Baptiſmus intelligitur, Fides eſt: As the Heauenly Bread (ſaith S. Auguſtine) which is the Fleſh of Chriſt, in his maner is called the Body of Chriſt, when as in very deed, it is the Sacrament of Chriſts Body, euen of that which is Viſible, which is Palpable, and being mortall was put on the Croſſe, and the Sacrificing it ſelfe of his Fleſh, wich is done by the Prieſts hands, is called the Paſſion, the Death, the Crucifying of Chriſt, not in truth of the thing, but in myſtery ſignifying: ſo the Sacrament of Faith, which is vnderſtanded to be Baptiſme, is Faith. By heauenly Bread he vnderſtanded not wheaten Bread, but that Heauenly meat, which he ſaith to be the Fleſh of Chriſt, and thus farre he affirmeth the truth of his Fleſh it ſelfe, which hee ſaith to be called, Suo modo, in his manor, the Bodie of Chriſt: as who ſhould ſay, whoſe truth notwithſtanding, if ye behold on the behalfe of the maner of exhibiting, in very deed it is a Sacrament of Chriſts Body, which is in viſible ſhape, ſo as he ſpeaketh of Chriſts Body, that hath ſuffered.

The 196. Vntruth. For this Heauenly Bread muſt needs be taken for the Sacrament, as it ſhall appeare.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Hére M. Harding allegeth good matter againſt himſelfe. For by theſe words S. Auguſtine ſaith, The Bread is ſo Chriſts Bodie, as the Breaking of the ſame Bread is Chriſts Death. But the breaking of the Bread is not Really, and indéd the death of Chriſt: Wherefore it followeth, that the Bread is not Really, or indéd the Bodie of Chriſt. And whereas M. Harding ſéemeth to ſtay altogether vpon theſe two words, Cœleſtis Panis, thinking that thereby is meant onely the Supernaturall Bread of Chriſts verie Bodie, it may like him neuertheleſſe to vnderſtand, that, not onely Chriſts verie Bodie, but alſo the Sacrament it ſelfe, may well be called, Cœleſtis panis, Heauenly Bread, for that it is a Sacrament of that Heauenly Bread. So Gregorius Nyſſenus calleth the Water of Baptiſme τὸ θεῖον λέτρον, The Diuine, or Heauenly Bath. So S. Ambroſe calleth the words of Baptiſme, Verba Cœleſtia, Heauenly words. So Dionyſius calleth the Oile Conſecrate, Diuiniſſimum Oleum, τὸ θεαρχικώτατον μύρον. So Cyrillus calleth Manna, Spirituall Bread. Thus he ſaith: Quomodo eſt Mana Panis Angelorum Spiritualis? Quia, quod Vmbra Veritatis erat, Veritatis nomine in Spiritu appellauit. How is Manna called the Spirituall Bread of Angels? That thing, that was a Shadow of the Trueth, in Spirit, or Spiritually, he vttered by the name of the Trueth it ſelfe. And albeit onely Chriſts verie Bodie it ſelfe hée indéd that Heauenly Bread, yet in theſe words of S. Auguſtine, it cannot in any wiſe ſo be taken, as to the learned, and diſcréet Reader it may ſone appéere. For firſt S. Auguſtine ſaith: That Heauenly Bread, whereof hée ſpeaketh, is a Sacrament. But the verie Bodie of Chriſt can not in any reſpect bée called a Sacrament, as it is eaſie to vnderſtand. For a Sacrament by S. Auguſtines Definition is, Signum Viſibile, A Signe, or a Token, that may be ſeene. But the Bodie of Chriſt, that M. Harding imagineth to bée Preſent, cannot bée ſéene: For S. Auguſtine ſaith, it is Spirituall, and Inuiſible. Whereof it neceſſarily followeth, that the verie Bodie of Chriſt cannot in any wiſe bée called a Sacrament: And therefore is not that kind of Heauenly Bread, that is hére mentioned by S. Auguſtine.

Greg. Nyſſen. de Sancto Baptiſmate. Ambroſ. de Sacramen. li. 2. ca. 5. Dionyſ. Eccle. Hier. cap. 2. Cyril. in Iohan. lib. 4. cap. 10.

Moreouer, S. Auguſtine ſaith: The ſame Heauenly Bread is the Bodie of Chriſt: Howbeit he addeth, not Verily, and indéd, but, Suo modo, In a Maner, or Kind of ſpeech. But Chriſts verie Bodie, is indéd, and Verily, in all reſpects the Bodie of Chriſt without any ſuch qualifying, or limitation. And it were great fondneſſe, or rather mére madneſſe to ſay, The Very Bodie of Chriſt is after a certaine maner, or in a ſort the Body of Chriſt.

These things first considered, for further vnderstanding of S. Augustines mind herein, I remit the Reader vnto the Glosse vpon the same, the words whereof are these: Cœlestis Panis, id est, Cœleste Sacramentum, quod verè repræsentat Carnem Christi, dicitur Corpus Christi, sed improprie. Vnde dicitur, Suo modo: sed non rei Veritate, sed significante Mysterio: vt sit sensus, Vocatur Corpus Christi, id est, Significat Corpus Christi: The Heauenly Bread, that is to say, the Heauenly Sacrament, which verily representeth the Flesh of Christ, is called Christs Bodie, but vnaptly, and vnfitly. Therefore it is said, In a peculiar maner belonging vnto it selfe: Not in Trueth of matter, but by a Signifying Mysterie: That the sense may be this, It is called the Body of Christ, that is to say, It signifieth the Bodie of Christ.

De Con. dist. 2. Hoc est. In Glossa.

But here marke thou, gentle Reader, into what straits these men be driuen. To mainteine the Inconueniences, and Absurdities of their Doctrine, they are faine to say, That the verie Bodie of Christ, is not, Rei veritate, Verily, and indeed, but, Improprie, Vnaptly, and Vnfitly called the Body of Christ.

M. Harding. The 16. Diuision.

Againe S Augustine saith in another place: Non hoc Corpus quod videtis, comesturi estis: Not this Body, which ye see, shall ye eat. * And S. Hierome saith: Diuinum & Spiritualem Carnem manducandam dari, aliam quidem ab ea quæ Crucifixa est: That Diuine and Spirituall Flesh is giuen to be eaten, other beside that, which was Crucified. Wherefore in respect of the exhibiting, the Flesh is diuided, that in it selfe is but one: and the Flesh exhibited in mystery, is in very deed a Sacrament of Christs Body visible and palpable, which suffered on the Crosse. And thus it followeth of conuenience, whereas the Flesh is not the same according to the qualities of the exhibiting which was Crucified, and which now is Sacrificed by the hands of a Priest: againe, whereas the Passion, Death, and Resurrection are said to be done, not in truth of the thing, but in mystery signifying; it followeth (I say) that the Flesh is not the same in qualities, so as it was on the Crosse, though it be the same in Substance.

* This place is answered before in the fifth Article, and in the seuenth Diuision.

In Psal. 98. In 1. cap. Esaiæ.

Many moe authorities might bee alleged for the opening of this matter, but these for this present are enough, if they be not too many, as I feare me, they will so appeare to the vnlearned Reader, and to such as be not giuen to earnest study, and diligent search of the truth. By these places, it is made cleare and euident, that these Names, Figure, Image, Signe, Token, Sacrament, and such other the like, of force of their signification doe not alwaies exclude the truth of the things, but doe only shew and note the maner of presence. Wherefore to conclude this matter, that is somewhat obscure to senses little exercised, the Figure of the Body, or Signe of the Body, the Image of Body, doth note the couertnesse and secretnesse in the maner of the exhibiting, and doth not diminish any whit the truth of the presence. So we doe accord with M. Iewel in this Article touching the forme of words, but withall wee haue thought it necessary, to declare the true meaning of the same, which is contrary to the doctrine of the Sacramentaries.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding, as in his words he pretendeth great store of authorities, so in his choice hee bewraieth great want. For, to passe by the place of Hierome, which is answered before in the fifth Article, and 7. Diuision, the words of S. Augustine same vtterly to ouerthrow all these his grosse, and fleshly fantasies: For better vnderstanding whereof, it is to be noted, that when Christ had opened that Heauenly Doctrine of the Eating of his Bodie, and Drinking of his Blood, the Capernaits hearing his words, imagined euen as M. Harding now doth, that hee meant a very fleshly Eating with their Bodily mouthes: and therefore began to bee offended, and said, His speech was ouer hard, and departed from him. Vpon occasion hereof, S. Augustine writeth thus: Ipsi erant duri, non sermo. Christus iustruxit eos, qui remanerant, & ait illis: Spiritus est, qui viui ficat: Caro autem nihil prodest. Verba, quæ locutus sum vobis, Spiritus sunt, & vita. Spiritualiter intelligite, quod locutus sum. Non hoc Corpus, quod videris, manducaturi estis, nec bibituri illum Sanguinem, quem fusuri sunt, qui me Crucifigent. Sacramentum aliquod, vobis commendaui: Spiritualiter intellectum viuificabit vos: They were hard: Christs word was not hard. Christ instructed them, that remained, and said vnto them, It is the Spirit that giueth life, the Flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I haue spoken, are Spirit and Life. Vnderstand ye spiritually, that I haue spoken. Yee shall not eat this Body, that ye see: neither shall ye drink that Blood, that they shall shed, that shall crucifie me. I haue recommended vnto you a certaine Sacrament: Being Spiritually vnderstanded, it will giue you life. These words be plaine of themselues, and need no long construction.

The difference that M. Harding hath deuised betwéne Christs Bodie in Substance, and the selfe same Bodie in respect of qualities, is a vaine Glosse of his owne, without Substance. For S. Augustine saith not, as M. Harding would faine haue him to saie, Yée shall not eat this Bodie (with your bodily mouth) Quale videtis, vnder such Conditions, and qualities of Mortalitie, and Corruption, as you now sée it: but Quod videtis, that is, You shall not eat the same Bodie in Nature, and Substance, that now yée sée.

Neither

Neither was the Bodie of Chriſt at that time, when he miniſtred the Holy Communion, and ſpake theſe wordes to his diſciples, endued with any ſuch qualities. For it was neither Spirituall, nor Inuiſible, nor Immortall: but contrariwiſe, Earthly, Viſible, and ſubiect to Death.

To be ſhort, S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh not one word, neither of this carnall Preſence, nor of ſecret Being vnder Couert: nor ſaith, as M. Harding ſaith, that the very Bodie of Chriſt is a Figure of Chriſts Bodie: nor imagineth in Chriſt two ſundrie ſorts of Naturall Bodies: nor knoweth any one of all theſe M. Hardings ſtrange Collections. Thus onely he ſaith: Non hoc Corpus, quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis: Touching your Bodily mouth, Yee ſhall not eat this Bodie of mine, that yee ſee. Of which wordes M. Harding, contrary to S. Auguſtines expreſſe, and plaine meaning, as his common wont is, concludeth the contrarie: Ergo, with your Bodily mouth, yee ſhall eat this ſelfe ſame Bodie in ſubſtance that yee ſee.

Now, forasmuch as M. Harding will ſay, We deuiſe Figures of our ſelues without cauſe, and that Chriſts wordes are plaine, and ought ſimply to be taken, as they ſound, without any maner Figure, I thinke it therefore neceſſarie in few wordes to ſhew, both what hath led vs, and all the Ancient Writers, and old Doctours of the Church, thus to expound the wordes of Chriſt: and alſo, how many, and how ſtrange, and monſtrous Figures M. Harding with his Brethren are driuen to vſe in the Expoſition of the ſame.

1 And to paſſe ouer all the old Learned Fathers, which in their writings commonly call the Sacrament a Repreſentation, a Remembrance, a Memorie, an Image, a Likeneſſe, a Samplar, a Token, a Signe, and a Figure, &c. Chriſt himſelfe before all others, ſeemeth to lead vs hereunto, both for that at the very Inſtitution of the holy Myſteries he
2 ſaid thus: Do ye this in remembrance of me: And alſo for that in the ſixth chapter of S. Iohn, 3 ſpeaking of the Eating of his Fleſh, he forewarned his Diſciples of his Aſcenſion into 4 Heauen, and ſhewed them, that his very Naturall Fleſh, Fleſhly receiued, can pro-
5 fit nothing.

Moreouer, it is not agreeable, neither to the Nature of man, Really, and indeed to eat a mans bodie: nor to a mans bodie, Really, and indeed, without Figure, to be eaten: For that S. Auguſtine ſaith, were, Flagitium, & Facinus: An horrible wickedneſſe. And againe he ſaith: Horribilius eſt, humanam Carnem manducare, quàm perimere: & Sanguinem humanam bibere, quàm fundere. It is a more horrible thing to eat mans Fleſh, than it is to kill it: and to drinke mans blood, than it is to ſhed it. For this cauſe he concludeth: Figura ergo eſt: Therefore it is a Figure. And in like maner Cyrillus ſaith: Sacramentum noſtrum non aſſeuerat Hominis manducationem: Our Sacrament auoucheth not the Eating of a man.

Auguſt. de Doctrina Chriſtiana, li. 3. ca. 16. Auguſt. contra aduerſ. Legis & Prophetar. lib. 2. cap. 9.

6 Again, in theſe wordes of Chriſt we finde Duo diſparata, that is, two ſundry termes of ſundrie Significations, and Natures, Panis, and Corpus: which as the learned know, cannot poſſibly be Verified the one of the other, without a Figure. Beſides all this, in euery of theſe clauſes, which ſo nerely touch Chriſts Inſtitution, there is a Figure: To
7 drinke the Cup of the Lord: In ſtead of the Wine in the Cup, it is a Figure. To drinke
8 Iudgement: Iudgement is a Spirituall thing, and cannot be drunken with the mouth:
9 Therefore it is a Figure. My Body, that Is giuen, that Is broken: in ſtead of, That 10 Shall be giuen, and that Shall be broken, is a Figure. I am Bread: Chriſt Really, and 11 indeed, was no materiall Bread: It is a Figure. The Bread is the Communication of The Lords Bodie: In ſtead of theſe wordes, It repreſenteth the Communication of the 12 Lords Bodie: It is a Figure. The Cuppe is the New Teſtament: The Cuppe indeed, and verily is not the New Teſtament: Therefore it is a Figure. In euery of theſe Clauſes M. Harding muſt néeds ſée, and confeſſe a Figure: and ſo it appeareth, that in the very Inſtitution of Chriſts Holy Myſteries, there are vſed a great many and ſundry Figures: all notwithſtanding, both conſonant to Reaſon, and alſo agreeable to Gods holy Word.

Auguſt. de Doctrina Chriſtiana. li. 3. ca. 16. Cyril. contra obiect. Theodoreti.

But now, marke well, I beſeech thée, good Chriſtian Reader, how many, and what kindes of Figures, M. Harding, and the reſt of his companie haue béene forced to imagin in theſe caſes.

1 Firſt, they ſay, This Pronoune, Hoc, This, ſignifieth not, This Bread, as all the old Writers vnderſtand it, but Individuum Vagum, which is neither Bread, nor any certaine determinate thing elſe: but onely one certaine thing at large in generalitie.

2 This Verbe, Eſt, they expound thus, Eſt, Hoc eſt, Tranſubſtantiatur: Such a figure, as neuer was vſed of any old Author, either Holy, or Prophane: or Heretike, or Catholike: or Greeke, or Latine. In theſe wordes, Take yee: Eat yee: This is my Body: They 3 haue found a Figure called Hyſteron Proteron, which is, when the whole ſpeech is out of order, and that set behinde, that should goe before. For thus they are driuen, to shift it, and turne it: This is my Body: Take ye: Eat ye.

In these foure words lying in order all together, He toke, He Blessed, He Brake, He Gaue, They imagine their sundrie Figures, and expound the same in this wise: He tooke, The Bread: He Blessed, He transubstantiated, or turned the Bread: He brake, the Accidents, or shewes: He gaue, His Bodie. Hoc facite, Doe ye this in Remembrance of me, They expound thus, Sacrifice this. Which also they flourish out with other figures in this wise: Sacrifice me in Remembrance of me. In this one word Panis, Bread, they haue found a swarme of figures. Sometimes, they say: It is called Bread: because it was Bread before: Sometimes, because the Infidel taketh it to be Bread: Sometimes, because there remaine still the Accidents and Formes of Bread: Sometimes, because the same Accidents feed the body miraculously, as it were Bread: Sometimes, because it is that Supernaturall Bread, that came from heauen.

Likewise in this one word, Frangimus, or Frangitur, they haue a numberof Figures. For sometimes they expound it thus: The Bread that we breake: that is, The Accidents, that we Breake. Sometimes, The Bread, that we Breake: That is to say, The Bread, that we take to be Broken: Sometimes, this word, Frangere, is not, to Breake, but only, to make a Feast. In their Malles they say, Frangitur, id est, Frangebatur, It is Broken: That is to say, It was Broken: Sometimes they say, Frangitur, id est, videtur Frangi: it is Broken: That is to say, It seemeth to be Broken. The meaning whereof is this, Frangitur, id est, non Frangitur: It is Broken: That is to say, It is not Broken.

In these words: Non bibam amplius de hoc fructu vitis, I will drinke no more of this fruit of the Vine: The fruit of the Wine, which is a Substance, they expound, The Accidents. And to leaue that miraculous Figure of all Figures, Concomitantia, whereby one is made two, and two are made one: Consider, good Reader, the strangenesse of the Figures, and the wonderfull shifts, that M. Harding hath imagined in this little Treatie, to defeat, and auoid the manifest words of the holy Fathers. Sometimes the Formes, and Accidents are the Sacrament: Sometimes Christs Body it selfe is the Sacrament: Sometimes both together are the Sacrament: Sometimes the Bread is a Figure of Christs Body, before Consecration: and so by meane of M. Hardings Figures, there is a Sacrament, before it be a Sacrament: and a Figure, before, it be a Figure. Sometimes, the holy Accidents, and outward holie Shewes, are a Figure of Christs Body Inuisible, vnder them secretly conteined: Sometimes the same Body Inuisible, is a Figure of the Body of Christ Visible. And so there is Figure vpon Figure: and a kinde of Demonstration, which they call, Notum per ignotum: Or rather, Verum per Falsum. Sometimes, the Sacrament is a Figure of the life to come: And sometimes, as Hosius fancieth, it is a Figure of the Church. Sometimes Tertullian vnderstood not, no not so much as the Grammaticall sense of Christs words: Sometimes Christs very Body is not aptly and fitly called the Body of Christ, but onely Impropriè, and after a maner.

Thus M. Harding roweth, and wandreth vp and downe, as a man that had lost his way. Such shadowes, and colours he can cast: into so many formes, and shapes, and figures, he can turne himselfe. So many, and so monstrous figures may he forge in the Institution of the Holy Sacrament, only to auoid one simple, plaine, vsuall, and knowen Figure. And yet he abuseth not the simplicity of the people. There he forceth his Figures, where as is no néed of figures: And without such vaine figures this vaine doctrine cannot hold. That one figure, that we vse, is plaine, and clére, vsed by all the ancient learned Fathers, and agreeable to the tenour of Gods word. But M. Hardings Figures as they be many, so be they vnnecessary and fantasticall, neuer vsed or once mentioned by any ancient Doctour of the Church, and serue only to breed darknesse, and to dimme the light.

Tertullian. contra Marcionem, lib. 4.

August. de doctrina Christiana, lib. 3. ca. 16.

How much better were it for him to leaue these shifts, and childish fables, and plainly and simply to say, as Tertullian saith: Hoc est Corpus meum, Hoc est, Figura Corporis mei: This is my Body, that is to say, This is a Figure of my Body. Or, as Maximus the Greeke Scholiast saith: Σύμβολα ταῦτα, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀλήθεια: These be tokens, but not the Truth. Or, as S. Augustine saith: Figura est, præcipiens Passioni Domini communicandum esse, & suauiter, atque vtiliter recondendum in memoria, quod pro nobis Caro eius Crucifixa, & Vulnerata sit: It is a Figure, commanding vs to communicate with the Passion of Christ, and comfortably and profitably, to lay vp in our Remembrance, that his Flesh was Crucified and wounded for vs.

OF PLVRALITIE OF MASSES.

THE THIRTEENTH ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that it was lawfull then to haue xxx. xx. xv. x. or v. Masses said in one Church in one day.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

As M. Iewel here descendeth by diuers proportions and degrees from xxx. to v. first by taking away x. the third part of the whole, and then v. from the rest three times: so it might haue pleased him also to haue taken away three from v. the last remnant, and so to haue left but two in all. Which if he had done, then should we haue made vp that number, as in this Audit he might not otherwise doe, in regard of his owne free promise, but allow our account for good and sufficient. For that number we are well able to make good. And what reason hath moued the ancient Fathers gouernours of the Church, to thinke it a godly and a necessary thing, to haue two Masses in one Church in one day, the same reason in cases either hath, or might haue moued them and their successours after them likewise to allow three or foure Masses, and in some cases fiue, or moe.

Two Masses in one day. M. Harding offereth to proue, but no moe.

A simple gheese.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding of his courtesie should giue vs leaue to lay out our owne reckenings, as we thinke best, hauing himselfe the aduantage of controlement, if errour happen to fall out. Of so great a number of Masses, as they haue this day in their Churches, and say, they haue had, and continued from the beginning, euen from the Apostles time, If I require of him only the proofe of fiue, I offer him no wrong: But if he of that whole number be able to shew but only two, and if the same two in the end be found no Masses neither, but only publike Communions, such as be now vsed in Reformed Churches, then is he a great dissembler, and doth no right. Vpon what occasion M. Hardings Masses grew first to this plenty, and to so great waste, Cochlæus one of the chiefe patrons of that cause declareth it thus: Quòd olim tam frequentes non fuerint Missæ, neque tot Sacerdotes, quot hodiè, inde accidisse arbitror, quòd olim omnes tum Sacerdotes, tum Laici, quicunque intererant Sacrificio Missæ, peracta oblatione, cum Sacrificante communicabant: sicut ex Canonibus Apostolorum, & ex Libris, atque Epistolis antiquissimorum Ecclesiæ Doctorum perspicuè cognoscitur: That in old times there were not so many Masses, nor so many Priests as be now, I reckon the cause thereof to be this: for that in old times, all that were present at the Sacrifice of the Masse, aswell Priests as Lay men, did Communicate together with the Minister, as it is plaine to be seene by the Canons of the Apostles, and by the Bookes and Letters of the most ancient Doctours of the Church. He addeth further: Nunc verò, &c. But now, seeing the order of Communion is no more obserued amongst vs, and that through the negligence and slothfulnesse, as well of the Lay people, as of the Priests, the Holy Ghost by the often saying of Priuate Masses, hath found out a godly remedie for this want. Here we see, that Negligence, and Slothfulnesse, and lacke of Deuotion, both in the people and in the Priest, is a good leare to breed Masses. And that the Priests, as many as were present, did then Communicate with the Priest that Ministred, it is plaine by the Canons of the Apostles, and by sundry other good Authorities, which now I purposely passe by. And to this purpose it is written thus, in a little booke set abroad vnder the name of S. Hierome: Non debet Episcopus repudiare Eucharistiam Presbyteri: The Bishop ought not to refuse the Sacrament of a Priest. But M. Hardings Priests vtterly refuse to Communicate one with another: and, be they neuer so many in one Church together, yet will they say seuerall Masses, at sundrie Altars. And not only thus, but also, as it appeareth by the Councell of Toledo in Spaine, one Priest hath sometimes said foure, fiue, or moe Masses in one day. Pope Leo said some daies seuen, some daies eight Masses, and some daies moe. The excesse and outrage whereof was so great, that they haue beene forced to prouide Lawes, and Canons to the contrary. For thus they haue Decreed: Presbyter in die non amplius, quàm tres Missas celebrare præsumat: Let not any one Priest presume to say more, than three Masses in one day. We may well thinke that Priests then said good store of Masses, when it was thought sufficient,

Io. Cochlæus de Sacrif. Missæ.

Canones Apost. Can. 9. De Septem ordinib. Eccle. gradu 6. Concil. Toletan. 12. ca. 5. Beatus Rhenanus in annota. in Tertull. de Corona Militis. Concil. Salesgunstadien. c. 5. Leonis Epist. 81.

sufficient, to stint them at three. The cause that moued Leo, and other Ancient Fathers, to appoint two Communions to be Ministred in one day, was, as it shall well appeare, that the whole people might Communicate all together, quietly, and without disturbance. Which thing of it selfe vtterly ouerthroweth the whole abuse of Priuate Masses.

But the causes, that haue increased the number of M. Hardings Priuate Masses, as they are alleged by Innocentius the third and others, are these, That there may be one Masse said, of the Day: and another, For the Dead: and, That there may be regard had to honesty, and Profit. For so they say: Causa Honestatis, vel Vtilitatis: vt si dicta Missa de die, superueniat aliqua magna persona, quæ velit audire Missam: As if any notable personage happen to come to Church, after that Masse is done, and be disposed to heare Masse. These be very easie causes: Vpon the same, the Priest may say twenty Masses, as well as three.

De Con. Dist. 1. Sufficit. De Celebratione Missarum, & aliis, &c.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuision.

Now if that reckoning could duly be made of our part, M. Iewel perhaps would then say, as commonly they say, that confesse their error in numbring, that he had mistold himselfe. Albeit, here it is to be maruelled, that he appointeth vs to proone a number of Masses in one Church, in one day, that vtterly denieth the Masse, and would haue no Masse in any Church any day at all. And standing in the deniall of the whole so peremptorily as he doth, it may seeme strange, that he should thus frame this Article. For what reason is it to challenge vs for proofe of so great a number, sith he taketh away all together?

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

I haue kept my reckoning well enough, as, I trust, it will well appeare. But if M. Harding, of so great a number of his Masses, be able to proue no more but two, and the same two in the end be found Publike Communions, and no Priuate Masses at all, then may we iustly say, That he hath both much misreckoned the people, and also shamefully mistold himselfe.

As before I vtterly denied, that any Priuate Masse was euer vsed within six hundred yeares after Christ, so in this Article, that the simple, that so long haue bene deceiued, might the better vnderstand, both the great disorder, that M. Harding maintaineth, and also, how far the Church of Rome is growen from the primitiue Church of God, I thought it not amisse to set out the matter by parts, in such plaine diuision. Therefore the maruell, that M. Harding raiseth hereof, is not so great. The matter considered, his Reader will rather maruell at his maruell.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuision.

It appeareth, that being not vnwitting, how good proofes we haue for the Masse it selfe, he thinketh to blanke vs by putting vs to the proofe of his number of xxx. xx. xv. x. or v.

Verily this kind of men fareth with the Church much like vnto strong Theeues, who hauing robbed an honest wealthy man of his mony, say afterwards vnto him vncurteously, ah Carle, how camest thou by so much Old Gold? Or if it like not them to be compared with Theeues, in regard of the roome they haue shuffled themselues into, they may not vnfitly be likened to a Iudge of the Stemery at Lidford in Deuonshire, who (as I haue heard it commonly reported) hanged a felon among the tinners in the forenoone, and sate vpon him in iudgement at afternoon. And thereof to this day, such wrongfull dealing in a common Prouerb is in that Country called Lydford Law. Sith that you, M. Iewel, and your fellowes, that now sit on the bench, require of vs the proofe of moe Masses in one Church in one day, as it were a verdit of twelue men: of equity and right, ye should haue heard our verdit, ere ye had giuen sentence, and condemned the Masse.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

How good cause M. Harding hath, to make these vaunts of his proues for his priuate Masse, it may soone appeare vnto the discreet Reader vpon the view. But here he thought it proue sufficient, for the multitude of his Masses, to call vs Theeues, and wicked Iudges, and to charge vs with the Law of Lydford, and so to solace himselfe with an Old Wiues tale, and to make holy day out of season. Howbeit, this comparison of his theeues is not so greatly agreeable to his purpose. For the coine, that is taken from him, was neither Gold, nor so old as he maketh it, nor was it touched with Cæsars stampe. We may rather say vnto him: Sometime ye had Gold: but how is it now become Drosse? ye had good seed: but how is it now become Cockle? Thou wert sometime a Faithfull City: how art thou now become an Harlot? Thou wert sometime the House of God: how art thou now turned into a Cane of Theeues? How haue ye lost the Holy Communion, that the Apostles had from Christ, and you from them? How came ye by your priuate Masses, that the Apostles had neuer. Thus, thus, M. Harding we may appose you. For it were but lost labour, to trouble you with questions of your Old Gold. Ye are not that rich wealthy Carle, that ye would be taken for: but euen as it is written in the Apocalyps of S. Iohn: Dicis, diues sum, & ditatus, & nullius egeo:

& nescis quòd tu es miser, & miserabilis, & pauper, & cæcus, & nudus: Thou saiſt, I am rich, and wealthy, and need nothing: And thou knoweſt not, that thou art wretched, and miſerable, and poore, and blind, and naked. Apocalyp. 3.

Neither are they alwaies Théeues, that ſpoile a Théefe. Oftentimes the True man forceth the Théefe to lay downe, that he hath vntruly gotten. Cicero ſaith: Fures earum rerum, quas ceperunt, nomina commutant: Theeues vſe to change the names of ſuch things, as they haue ſtollen: euen as theſe Théeues vſe to doe, that call the Communion, the Maſſe: and their Maſſe, the Communion: Priuate, Publike: and Publike, Priuate: and, as the Prophet Eſay ſaith, God, Euill: and Euill, God: Light, Darkneſſe: and Darkneſſe Light: and thus by ſubtle ſhift of words miſerably ſpoile, and rob the people. To be ſhort, the Théefe flieth the triall of the light, euen as you, M. Harding, and your fellowes flie the triall of Gods Holy Word. Cicero. Eſai. 5. Iohan. 3.

But how ye came to all, that ye had, and being but Copper, vttered the ſame for Old Gold, it is an eaſie matter to be anſwered. For you your ſelues will not ſay, ye had it, either from Chriſt, or from the Apoſtles, or from any the Ancient Fathers. It were double robbery, to make any of theſe the Authors, and Fathers of your robberies. Your owne Doctor Cochlæus confeſſeth, as it is ſaid before, that the Multitude of your Maſſes ſprang not from God, but from the Negligence, and Slothfulneſſe, and want of Deuotion, that grew both in Prieſt, and People. Then ye began to tell the ſimple, that it was ſufficient for them to ſit by: that your Maſſe was a Propitiatory Sacrifice for their ſinnes: that it was auailable vnto them Ex opere operato, although they vnderſtood not what it meant: that you had power to apply it to quick, and dead, and to whom ye liſted: and that the verie hearing thereof, of it ſelfe was meritorious. Vpon this foundation, ye erected vp your Chanteries, your Monaſteries, your Pardons, your Supererogations, and I know not what. Thus was the Holy Communion quite forgotten: Thus were your Maſſes multiplied aboue number: Thus ye came by that, ye would haue called your Old Gold. Then this doubt firſt grew in queſtion, whether Chriſt being in one of your Maſſes, might ſæ himſelfe, being at the ſame time in another Maſſe. Then ye began to deuoure vp poore Widowes houſes. In conſideration hereof, your owne Gloſſe ſaith of your Houſe Prieſts: Malus Presbyter æquiparatur Coruo, in nigredine vitiorum, in raucedine vocis, in voracitate oblationum mortuorum, in fœtore Spiritus, in garrulitate, & in furto: An euill Prieſt is reſembled vnto a Rauen, for the Blackneſſe of his vices, for the hoarceneſſe of his voice, for his rauening of the Oblations of the dead, for the ſtinch of his breath, for his vnpleaſant voice, and for his theft. Vnto ſuch reſemblances theſe words of S. Auguſtine may be well applied: Si Presbyter interceſſiones vendit, viduarum munera libenter amplectitur, negotiator magis videri poteſt, quàm Clericus. Nec dicere poſſumus, Nemo nos inuaſores arguit: violentiæ nullus accuſat: quaſi non interdum maiorem prædam à viduabus blandimenta illiciant, quàm tormenta. Nec intereſt apud Deum, vtrùm vi, an circumuentione quis res alienas occupet: If a Prieſt make ſale of his praiers, and gladly receiue the rewards of Widowes, he ought rather to be called a Merchant, than a Clerke. Neither may we ſay, No man chargeth vs with extortion. For of a Widow a man may get a greater pray by flattery, then by violence. And before God there is no difference, whether a man withhold another mans goods by might of hand, or by crafty dealing. These be the things, that M. Harding complaineth, are taken from him. Iulius Cæſar conueied three thouſand pounds weight of pure Gold out of the Treaſury in Rome, and laid in the like weight of Copper gilded. Liſander pickt a great ſumme of Gold out of the bottome of a bag, (for the mouth was ſealed) and ſewed it ſkilfully vp againe. But Cæſars Copper was bewraied by the touch: Lyſanders theft was eſpied by a billet, that was ſtill remaining in the bag. Euen ſo, whatſoeuer they of M. Hardings ſide, that ſo bitterly complaine, they are robbed of their robberies, and would ſo loath be called Théeues, either haue conueied into the Church, as into Gods great Treaſury, or elſe haue priuily picked thence, the billet doth eſpie them, the touch doth bewraie them: it cannot be hidden. Cochlæus de Sacrifi. Miſſæ. Rob. Holcot. lib. 4. Queſt. 3. 2. Queſt. 7. Non omnes. In Gloſſa. De verbis Domini in Euangel. Matth. ſerm. 19. Suetonius in Iulio. Plutarchus in Lyſandro.

In his Fable of Lydford, which in all reſpects is as good, as his other Fable of Amphilochius, as he compareth vs to the ouer haſty Judge, ſo he compareth his Maſſe vnto the Felon. Wherein notwithſtanding we might eaſily, and truly ſay, we néded no Law, to abolith ſuch things, as they by force and violence had vſurped againſt all Lawes, and that their Maſſe of it ſelfe fell downe, and fled away before the Holy Communion, euen as the darkneſſe flieth before the light, and as the Idoll Dagon fell downe at the Preſence of the Ark of the God of Iſraell: Yet M. Harding well knoweth, that in theſe caſes of Religion there was nothing at any time done, either haſtily, and vpon the ſudden, or by any ſmall aſſembly: but in the open Parliament of the whole Realme, with great, and ſober deliberation, with indifferent, and patient hearing, what might be ſaid, and anſwered, and replied 1. Samuel. 5.

plied of both sides, and at last concluded with publike Authority, and consent of all States and Orders of this most Noble Kingdome. I iudge him not well aduised, nor worthy to rest in England, that will compare the State, and Maiestie of that most High, and Honorable Court, to the Law of Lydford.

But it were long to shew in particular, what Lawes M. Hardings friends vsed, when they sate vpon the Bench. They caused Dead men, and Women to be digged out of their graues, and so sate vpon them solemnly in Iudgement, and condemned them. Their holy One of Rome, much like that spædy Iudge of Lydford, burnt that most Reuerend Father D. Cranmer at Rome in a mummery, before he euer saw him, or heard him speake: and yet that notwithstanding, they arraigned him in Oxford, and iudged him afterward to be burnt. They first toke, and imprisoned the innocent, that had broken no Law, and afterward deuised a law to condemne him. With such courtesie, Cyrillus saith, Christ was intreated of the Iewes: Primùm ligant: deinde causas in eum quærunt: First they bind him: and afterward they imagine matter against him. And to passe by many other like disorders, and horrible extremities of that time, first they scattered, and forced their Passes thorow the Realme against the Lawes: afterward they stablished the same by a Law: last of all the nert yære following they summoned, and had a solemne Disputation in Oxford, to try whether their Law were good, or no. Verily this sæmeth much like the Law of Lydford. For in order of Nature, the Disputation should haue bæn first, and then the Law, and last of all the Execution of the same among the people. But Tertullian saith: Hæretici ex conscientia infirmitatis suæ, nihil vnquam tractant ordinarie: Heretikes, for feare of their owne weaknesse, neuer proceed in due order.

Cyrillus in Iohan. li. 12. c. 45.

Tertull. de Resurrectione Carnis.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuision.

Now touching the number, and iteration of the Masse, first we haue good and ancient authoritie for (197) two Masses in one Church in one day. That eloquent and Holy Father Leo the first, writeth thus to Dioscorus the Bishop of Alexandria: Volumus illud quoque custodiri, vt cùm solennior Festiuitas conuentum populi numerosiorem indixerit, & ad eam tanta multitudo conuenit, quæ recipi Basilica simul vna non possit, Sacrificij Oblatio indubitanter iteretur: ne ijs tantùm admissis ad hanc Deuotionem, qui primi aduenerint, videantur ij, qui postmodum confluxerint, non recepti. Cumplenum pietatis atque rationis sit, vt quoties Basilicam, in qua agitur, præsentia vna plebis impleuerit, toties Sacrificium subsequens offeratur. This order we will to be kept, that, when a number of people commeth to Church together at a solemne feast, if the multitude be so great as may not well be receiued in one Church at once, that the Oblation of the Sacrifice hardly be done againe, lest if they only should be admitted to this Deuotion, who came first, they that came afterward may seem not to be receiued: Forasmuch as it is a thing full of Godlinesse, and reason, that how often times the Church, where the seruice is done, is filled with a new company of people, so often times the Sacrifice there eftsoons be offered.

The 197. Vntruth. For these two Masses, were two Communions.

Church filled.

By this Father, whom the great (198) Generall Councell of Chalcedon agnised for Supreme Gouernor of the Church of Christ, and honored with the singular title of Vniuersall Bishop, it is ordained that if any where one Church could not conueniently hold all the people together at one time; they that came after the first company, should haue their * Deuotion serued by hauing another Masse celebrated againe. And lest perhaps some might doubt whether that were lawful so to be done or no, or because then some doubted thereof, as now likewise some seem to doubt of it: to put the matter out of doubt, he saith assuredly, Sacrificij Oblatio indubitanter iteretur: Let them not stick to iterate, or doe againe the Oblation of the Sacrifice, that is to say, Let the Masse be celebrated againe, indubitanter, without casting perill, without sticking, staggering, or doubting. In that Epistle he sheweth two great causes, why more Masses than one may be done in one Church in one day. The one is, lest the after commers should seeme reiected, non recepti, not receiued *: The other is, that the one part of the people be not defrauded of the benefit of their Deuotion: as himselfe saith, Necesse est autem vt quædam pars populi sua deuotione priuetur, si, vnius tantum Missa more seruato, Sacrificium offerre non pertinent, nisi qui primo diei parte conuenerint: It must needs be, that a part of the people be bereft of their deuotion, if, the custome of hauing one Masse only kept, none may offer the Sacrifice but such as came to Church together in the morning, or first part of the day. Now, the people may neither be reiected, whom God hath chosen, nor sparkled abrod, whom our Lord hath gathered together: neither ought they to be defrauded of their Deuotion, by withdrawing the Masse from them, but rather to be stirred thereunto by their deuout presence, at the celebration of the same, where the Death, and passion of our Lord is liuely represented before their eies: the very same Body, that suffered on the Crosse, of them by the Ministery of the Priest offered to the Father, in a Mystery, but truly, not to be a new redemption, but in Commemoration of the Redemption already performed.

The 198. Vntruth. For there is no such Canon in all that Councel.

* This Deuotion was, that the whole people should receiue the Communion: which thing is contrary to Priuate Masse.

* To the Communion.

The people offer the Sacrifice.

A blind Commentary, contrary to the Text.

By this testimony we find, that it was lawfull within six hundred yeeres after Christ, (for Leo liued about the yeere of our Lord 450.) to haue two Masses in one Church in one day, for so much the word, iteretur, doth import at least, and if there were moe, the case so requiring, the word will beare it well enough.

Now by this Holy Bishops Godly will, the custome of hauing one Masse only in one day was abrogated, and this decreed, that in time of two sundry resorts of people to Church, two sundry Masses should be celebrated, for the auoiding of these two inconueniences, lest the aftercommers should seem not receiued, but reiected like excommunicate persons, and that a part of the faithfull people should not be put beside their Deuotion. Whereupon I make this reason, The causes standing, the effects follow: But the danger of the peoples seeming to be reiected, and the defrauding of their Deuotion, which are causes of iterating the Masse in one day, did in that age in some Holy daies of likelihood thrice, yea foure, or fiue times happen, and in our time certainly doth commonly so often, or oftner happen: wherefore the Masse may so many times be said in a day in one Church.

Where great multitude of Christian people is, as in townes, we see some resort to Church early in the morning, morning, making their ſpirituall oblations to the intent to ſerue God, ere they ſerue man in their worldly affaires, all cannot come ſo early. Others come at their conuenient opportunity, ſome at ſix, ſome at ſeuen, ſome at eight, ſome at nine, or ten of the Clock If they, which through lawfull lets cannot come at the firſt houres, comming afterward be roundly told by the Prieſt, Come ye at ſuch, or at ſuch houres, or els ye get no Maſſe here: ſhall not they according to Leo his ſaying ſeem to be reiected, and defrauded of their deuotion? All well diſpoſed people about Powles cannot come to Poſtels Maſſe at foure, or fiue of the Clocke in the morning, neither at high Maſſe there. Shall all ſuch in a Terme or Parlament time, when great reſort is, be denied that ſpirituall comfort? And if they be, ſhall they not ſeem reiected, and put from their deuotion? Which inconuenience that it might not happen, Leo willeth not only two, but three, foure, or moe Maſſes to be done on a day, for his words report no leſſe. Cum plenum pretatu, atque ratione ſit, vt quoties Baſilicam, in qua agitur, præſentia nouæ plebis impleuerit, toties Sacrificium ſubſiquens offeratur. Let there be no ſticking at the iterating of the Maſſe: foraſmuch as (ſaith he) it is a thing full of goodlineſſe, and reaſon, that how often the Church, where the ſeruice is done, is filled with a new company of people, ſo often the Sacrifice there eftſoons be offered. Here he willeth plainly that Maſſe be done Toties, quoties, at euery new reſort of the well diſpoſed people, and that for theſe waighty cauſes, leſt part of the people ſhould ſeem not receiued, and that they be not defrauded of their deuotion. The Church filled.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

I marueil, with what honeſt countenance M. Harding could allege this godly Father ſo vnaduiſedly, to proue his Maſſe. For he knoweth well, and being learned, cannot chuſe but know, that Leo both elſewhere in all other places, and alſo ſpecially in this ſame place, beareth witneſſe directly againſt his Maſſe. But, as Alcumiſts profeſſe a ſkill, to turne all maner Mettalls into Gold: ſo theſe men ſeem to haue learned a ſkill, to tranſubſtantiate, and to turne all things, whatſoeuer, into their Maſſe. It is euident by S. Auguſtine, and S. Hierome, that liued not long before Leo, that then in Rome, where Leo was Biſhop, the whole people receiued the Holy Communion euery day: Which Communion Leo calleth Miſſa, by a Latine word, then newly receiued in the Latine Church. In which Church, like as alſo in the Church of Græcia and Aſia, there was only one ſuch Maſſe, or Communion ſaid vpon one day: vnleſſe it had other wiſe bẽ thought neceſſary vpon occaſion of the multitude of Communicants, vntill the time of Pope Deusdedit, which was in the yere of our Lord ſix hundred and fiftẽ, as it ſhall appeare in the next Diuiſion of this Article. Auguſt. de Verbis Domini ſecundùm Lucam Sermo. 28. Hieronym. in Apologia aduerſus Iouinian. Auguſtin. De Bono Perſeuerantiæ. li. 2. c. 4.

Verily in theſe words of Leo there appeareth no maner token, neither of Priuate Maſſe, nor of Sole Receiuing, nor of Single Communion, nor of ſundry Altars, nor of moe Prieſts, than one in one Church. And, notwithſtanding theſe words of Leo be plaine enough of themſelues, yet by conference, and ſight of other places, we may the better be aſſured of his meaning. In the Councell holden at Agatha in the time of Coeleſtinus the firſt, which was about the yere of our Lord foure hundred and forty, it was decreed thus: In Paſchate, Natali Domini, Epiphania, Aſcenſione, Pentecoſte, Natali S. Iohannis Baptiſtæ, & ſi qui maxmi dies in Feſtiuitatibus habentur, non niſi in Ciuitatibus, aut Parochijs Miſſas teneant: Vpon Eaſter day the day of our Lords Birth, the Epiphany, the Aſcenſion, Whitſunday, the Natiuity of S. Iohn Baptiſt, and likewiſe vpon other great Solemne Feaſts, let the country people hold their Maſſes, or Communions no where elſe, but only either in great Pariſhes, or in the Cities. The like Decree was made in the Councel of Aruerne, That all Country Prieſts, and all wealthy and chiefe Citizens, ſhould vpon ſolemne Feaſts reſort to the Cities, and Communicate together with their Biſhops Vpon ſuch Solemne Daies the reſort often times was ſo great, that the Church was not able to receiue the whole company. Therefore order was taken, and that agreeable to naturall courteſie, to the intent no part ſhould be excluded from the Holy Myſteries, that the whole people ſhould come in parts, in ſuch wiſe, as the Church might eaſily receiue them, and that to that end, it ſhould be lawfull for the Prieſt, to Miniſter the Communion twice, or oftner, vpon one day. Vpon like occaſion, to increaſe the number of M. Hardings witneſſes, S. Auguſtine ſaith, the Communion in ſome places was twice ſaid in his time. Thus he writeth: In quibuſdam locis, vbi maior, & frequentior eſt Populus Dei, Quinta Sabbati hebdomadæ vltimæ Quadrageſimæ bis offertur, & mane, & ad veſperam: alijs autem in locis ad finem tantùm diei nos eſt offerri: In certaine places, where as the reſort of people is greater, vpon Shire thurſday the oblation is twice made, firſt in the morning, and after towards night: but in other places, (where as the people is not ſo great) the ſame oblation is made only before night. And this M. Harding cannot deny. S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of the Communion, and not of the Maſſe. To the ſame end S. Gregory miniſtred the holy Communion at three ſundry times vpon Chriſtmaſſe day. Thus vpon occaſion of great reſort, the Maſſe, or Communion that day was twice, or thrice, or oftner ſaid: not, that the people ſhould heare Maſſe, as M. Harding wittingly miſtaketh it, but that the whole people might Communicate. Which thing of late yeres, becauſe through diſuſe they knew not what it meant, they turned it only to a fantaſticall Myſtery, that the firſt Auguſt. Epiſt. 118. ad Ianuarium. Gregorius in Euangelia, hom. 8 De Conſ. Diſt. 1. Nocte Sancta.

first Masse signified the time of ignorance before the Law: the Second, the time in the Law: the Third, the time of Grace.

Thus hast thou, good Christian Reader, this learned Fathers undoubted meaning, confirmed plainly both by the knowen story, and Circumstance of that time, as may appeare by the two Councels of Aruerne, and Agatha, and also by the euident witnesse of S. Augustine, and S. Gregory.

Now, let vs see, what large Commentaries, and Coniecturall Shelles M. Harding hath here deuised, to transforme the Holy Communion into his Priuate Masse. First he saith, The great Vniuersall Councel of Chalcedon offered the Title of Vniuersall Bishop vnto this Leo, being then the Bishop of Rome, This note is both impertinent to the cause, and also worthily suspected of great vntruth. For that great Councel is extant whole, and perfit: and yet in the same no such Canon, or Title to be found. Only Gregory reporteth it: but the same Gregory reporteth further withall, that Leo would neuer suffer himselfe to be called the Vniuersall Bishop, and saith, It was a Proud, and Glorious Title, and mat for Antichrist. Whereas Leo saith, The aftercommers should seeme reiected, hee meaneth, from the receiuing of the Holy Communion, and not as M. Harding imagineth, from the hearing of Masse. And here we haue by the way specially to note these words of Leo: Sacrificium offerre non possunt. By which words Leo teacheth vs plainly, that the Sacrifice, whereof M. Harding maketh so great account, is offered no lesse by the people than by the Priest.

Superbum, Arrogans, Antichristianum.

Iteretur.

And, whereas M. Harding noteth further, that this Latine word, Iteretur, may stand as well with three, or foure, or moe Masses, as with two, which thing is not denied, he might also as well haue noted, that the same word Iteretur. importeth likewise one, and the selfe same Minister, and none other. For if the Second Communion be Ministred by another Priest, and not by the same, it cannot rightly be said, Iteratur. And further, the same word necessarily signifieth, that one Communion was then in such cases ministred successiuely, and in order after another: and not two Masses, or three, or foure, or six, or ten together, all at once, as the maner is now in the Church of Rome.

Hereof M. Harding frameth vs this formall Syllogisme: The cause that, moued Leo to take this order, was, that all, and euery of the deuout people might heare Masse: But it is likely, the people resorted to the Church at sundry times, some rather, some later, and not all at once: Ergo, It is Likely, that to satisfie the peoples deuotion, there were sundry Masses said in one day.

It is likely, that M. Harding neuer examined the parts, and likelihod of this argument. For first the Maior, or Head Proposition is apparent false, grounded, as it is termed in Logick, A non causa, vt causa, Presuming, that thing to be the cause, which indeed is no cause. For the cause that moued Leo, was not the hearing of Masse, as it is already proued, but the receiuing of the Holy Communion.

The Minor, or Second Proposition, notwithstanding in some part it may same true, yet it is nothing agreeable to Leos meaning. For Leo speaketh not of one man, or two, nor of the ordinary course of euery day, but only of great Solemne Feasts, and of such resort of people, as might fill vp the whole Church. His words be plaine: Cùm solennior Festiuitas conuentum populi numerosioris indixerit: And, Quoties Basilicam præsentia nouæ plebis impleuerit. Therefore, to beare vs thus in hand, that Leo had such a speciall care, either for the Terme time in London, or for the people about Pauls, or for hearing the Postles Masse, it is a very vaine, and a Childish fantasie: like as this also is, that he addeth, The people should be denied that Spirituall Comfort. For, alas, what Comfort can the people receiue, where as they can neither see, nor heare, nor vnderstand, nor know, nor learne: but stand only as men amased, vtterly bereft of all their senses? Let M. Harding once lay apart dissimulation, and tell vs, by what waies, or meanes, the people at his Masse can possibly receiue this Spirituall Comfort. If he would speake truly, and that he knoweth, as he seldome doth, he should rather call it Spirituall Blindnesse.

And, whereas he pleadeth his cories, quoties, and thereby would erect a whole totquot of Masses, sans number, if he had aduisedly considered out the whole sentence, he should better haue espied out his owne folly, and haue had lesse occasion, to deceiue the people. For Leo saith not, as M. Harding would force him to say, As often as any deuout people commeth to Church, but as it is said before, Quoties Basilicam præsentia nouæ plebis impleuerit: As often as the presence of a new company shall haue filled vp the whole Church. In such cases it was lawfull to begin againe the whole Communion, and not otherwise. By these words, M. Hardings Totquot is much abridged.

In the end he concludeth, not only against Leo his Authour, but also against the very expresse order of his owne Church, That one Priest, (for Leo speaketh only of one, and of no moe) may say Masse boldly without sticking, or staggering, as often as any people resorteth to him.

For,

For, now it is thought sufficient for one Priest, to say one Masse vpon one day, and no moe. So it is determined by Pope Alexander: Sufficit Sacerdoti vnam Missam in vno die celebrare: It is sufficient for a Priest to say one Masse vpon a day. Vnlesse it be in case of great necessitie, which the Glosse, as it is before alleged, well expoundeth: Causa Honestatis, vel vtilitatis: In case of Honesty, or of Profit: as if some great personage happen vpon the sudden to come to Church. Likewise the Councell of Saleigunstadium hath straitly charged, that no Priest presume, to say more than three Masses vpon one day, the one, in course of the Day Present: the other for the Dead: the third, to pleasure some noble personage: which also is a great stopple to M. Hardings Torquot. In these prouisoes, there is no maner consideration had to the Deuotion of the people: but, contrary to M. Hardings New Canon, they are vtterly left without their Spirituall comfort. And therefore Pope Clement the seuenth caused one Frier Stuppino in Rome to be whipt naked thorow the streets, for that he had said v. or vj. or moe Masses in one day, to satisfie the Deuotion of the people.

De Con. dist. 1. Sufficit. De Celeb. Miss. Consuluisti. In Glossa. Concil. Salesgunstadien. ca. 5.

Thus, good Reader, thou maiest see, both the parts, and the force of M. Hardings Syllogismus: The Maior is false: The Minor farre from Leos purpose: The conclusion contrary to himselfe. Certainly, if it had then beene thought lawfull, to say so many Corner Masses, as sithence that time haue beene vsed in the Church of Rome, it had beene great follie, either for Dioscorus, to moue this question: or for Leo to take this order.

M. Hardings Syllogismus.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuision.

Wherefore they that reproue the plurality of Masses in one Church in one day, after the iudgement of this worthy Father, be reiectours of the faithfull people, and robbers of their deuotion. But they that haue vtterly abrogated the Masse, which is the outward and euer enduring Sacrifice of the New Testament, (199) by verdict of Scripture, be no lesse, than the forerunners of Antichrist.

The 199. Vntruth, without any honest shame. For M. Harding knoweth, there is no such commendation giuen to his Masse, in the whole bodie of the Scriptures.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The former part of this Conclusion is already answered. But for the Second part, If they, that haue reformed the horrible abuses of the Masse, be the Forerunners of Antichrist, what then may we thinke of them, that haue wilfully, and of purpose inuented, & erected all those abuses? That haue taken from the people of God, not onely the Holie Communion, but also the vnderstanding, and swetnesse, and comfort of the same? That haue spoiled Gods Children of the Bread of Life, and haue fed them with the Bread of Confusion, that is, with Ignorance, Superstition, and Idolatrie? That haue mangled and corrupted Christs blessed Mysteries, and haue wickedly defiled the Campe of the Lord? And hauing thus done, yet notwithstanding, haue faces to maintaine, and vphold all their wilfull doings? What may Gods people thinke of them? And before whom do they run? Verily Gerardus Lorichius, M. Hardings owne Doctour saith thus: Missæ priuatæ, quæ absente populo Catholico fiunt, abominatio verius, quàm Oblatio, dicendæ sunt: Priuate Masses, which are said without presence of the people, are rather an Abomination, than a Sacrifice. And S. Augustine saith: Si Iohannes ita diceret, Si quis peccauerit, me habetis Mediatorem apud Patrem, & ego exoro pro peccatis vestris, Quis eum ferret bonorũ & fidelium Christianorum? Quis sicut Apostolum Christi, & non sicut Antichristum intueretur? If S. Iohn would say thus, If any man sinne, ye haue me your Mediatour with the Father, and I obtaine pardon for your sinnes, what good and faithfull Christian man could abide him? who would looke vpon him, as vpon the Apostle of Christ, and not rather as vpon Antichrist?

M. Harding. The 6. Diuision.

Heere that I may adde somewhat more for proofe of this Article, If the Plurality of Masses in one Church in one day had beene vtterly vnlawfull, the Fathers of the Councell of Antisiodorum would not haue Decreed, that it should not be lawfull to celebrate two Masses vpon one Altar in one day; neither where the Bishop had said Masse, that a Priest might not say the same day, at the same Altar. For beside that the prohibition presupposeth, the thing prohibited to haue beene before vsed (else prohibition had beene superfluous, and so far foorth it appeareth, that before the making of that Decree moe Masses were said at one Altar in one day) the argument of this Decree serueth very well for proofe, that by force of this Councell it was then lawfull to say moe Masses in one Church in one day. For this prohibition of the Councell is not generall, but speciall, restricted to a particular place of the Church, in vno Altario, at one Altar, which includeth not of any reason a more generall and larger matter, than it selfe, as, neither at any other Altar in the same Church the same day it shall be lawfull to say Masse: but of consequent this being but one speciall case forbidden, inferreth a permission and good leaue in the rest eiusdem generis & subiecti, that bee of the same kinde, and about the same matter, and not included by words of reason in that prohibition. So that wee may not argue by reason in this sort: It is forbidden to say moe Masses at one Altar in one day: Ergo, It is forbidden to say many Masses at all in one Church, in one day, vpon diuers Altars: but the contrary reason followeth: Ergo, Ye may say many Masses vpon diuers Altars in one day. And likewise: Yee may not say Masse that day on the Altar where the Bishop hath said; Ergo, Ye may lawfully say at another Altar; for otherwise the Law would haue forbidden generally, Yee shall not say Masse in the Church where the Bishop hath said that day; and then yee had beene forbidden that Altar, and all Altars there at one word. But in forbidding the one Altar, the Law granteth you the vse of the rest there.

M. Harding groundeth his ghesse without his compasse. For this Councell was holden Anno 613.

Non licet super vno Altario in vna die duas Missas celebrare: nec in Altario Episcopi Missas dicere. Presbyter duabus Missas dicat. Concil. Antisiodorens. ca. 10. Anno Dom. 613.

And this kinde of reasoning and arguing of the Law, that forbiddeth one case specially, to affirme the rest, that is not mentioned in the prohibition, the Lawyers will defend by their principles against M. Iewel, who, I thinke, will not wade far to stand against them in this match. For they say, An edict prohibitorie in such things, which are not wholly in their kind vnlawfull, forbidding speciall cases, granteth the rest, and doth permit all that, which is not specially forbidden. And by that, all may bee witnesses, which are not specially forbidden: all may make their proctors to answer for them in iudgement, which are not forbidden in the speciall prohibition: for that the edicts of proctours, and witnesses are prohibitorie. And because Lex Iulia did forbid a woman condemned for adulterie to beare witnesse in iudgement, thereof the text of the Ciuill Law concludeth, that women may beare witnesse in iudgement.

In generere permissorum omnia intelliguntur permissa, quæ specialiter non reperiuntur prohibita. L. Iulia. ff. de testibus. Exceptio confirmat regulam in non excepta.

And they say further, that exception in one case, confirmeth the generall rule, and maketh the rest, that is not excepted, more sure and stable, and to be in force in contrary sense to the exception.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This long discourse may well be granted without great preiudice. For this Councell was holden at Antisiodorum, as M. Harding hath also noted in the margin, in the yeare of our Lord six hundred and thirtene: and therefore neither furthereth him, nor hindereth me: as standing without the compasse of the first six hundred yeares. And who so listeth to peruse the Acts of that Councell, shall soone find, that many great disorders, and horrible abuses, and, as they are termed there, Incestæ Consuetudines, wicked, and abominable customes, were by that time growen into the Church of Rome: as Strenæ Diabolicæ: Diuelish New yeeres gifts: Heathenish vowes: to pray in groues, and at the water sides as the Heathens had vsed to pray: to Consecrate, and Minister the Lords cup in Metheglen: to put the Sacrament into dead mens mouthes: and such other like. And, that among these, and other like disorders, the pluralitie of Masses first began at that time, and not before, it may appeare by the Pontificall it selfe, in the life of Pope Deusdedit, where it is written thus: Deusdedit constituit secundam Missam in Clero. And Petrus Vrbeuetanus in his Scholies vpon the same place writeth thus: Quia tunc, ad instar Græcorum, non cantabatur in vna Ecclesia, nisi forsan vna Missa: quod magis ædificabat, secundùm antiquos: For then there was but one Masse (or Communion) said after the maner of the Greekes: which thing, as the ancient writers thinke, was more profitable to the people. Likewise Thomas Valdensis saith: Græci adhuc vnicam tantùm Missam in die celebrant: The Greekes hitherto say but one Masse (or Communion) in one day. So likewise Francis the Frier writeth vnto his Brethren: Moneo, & exhortor vos in Domino, vt in locis, in quibus morantur fratres, vna tantùm celebretur Missa in die, secundùm formam Sanctæ Romanæ Ecclesiæ: I warne you, and exhort you in the Lord, that in the places where our Brethren dwell, there be onely one Masse a day said, according to the order of the Holy Church of Rome. So S. Ambrose declareth the order of the Church of Millaine in his time: Omni Hebdomada offerendum est: etiam si non quotidiè peregrinis, Incolis tamen, vel bis in Hebdomada: Euery weeke the Oblation must bee made, although not euery day, for commers, and strangers, yet at least twice in the weeke for the Citizens. S. Ambrose saith, The Communion in his time was Ministred once, or twice in the weeke: and at the furthest vpon great occasion once a day: but not rr. or rrr. times in one day.

And, whereas M. Harding seemeth to warrant his multitude of Masses, by that in this Councell of Antisiodorum there is mention made of sundry Altars, it may like him to vnderstand, that before the time of that Councell, there appeareth no such multiplication, or increase of Altars. One Altar was thought sufficient for the whole Church, e the same altar placed in the midst of the congregation, that al the people might come round about it. So saith Eusebius: Absoluto Templo, & Altari in medio constituto: The Church being finished, and the Altar (or Communion Table) placed in the midst. S. Augustine likewise saith thus: Mensa Domini est illa in medio constituta: That is the Lords Table, that standeth heere in the midst. In like maner, it is written in the Councell of Constantinople: Tempore Diptychorum cucurrit omnis multitudo cum magno silentio circum Altare, & audiebant: When the Lesson, or Chapter was in reading, all the people drew together with silence round about the Altar, and gaue attendance. If M. Harding will contend, for that hitherto there is no mention made of one Altar alone, and therefore will say, there might be many, he may also remember, that Eusebius saith in the place before alleged, Augustum & Magnum, & Vnicum Altare: The Renerend, the Great, and the one Onely Altar. So Ignatius: Vnum est Altare toti Ecclesiæ: There is but one Altar for the whole Church. So S. Chrysostome: Baptismus vnus est, & Mensa vna: There is one Baptisme, and one Table. So likewise Gentianus Heruettus describing the maner of the Greeke Church, as it is vsed at this day, saith thus: In Græcorum templis, vnum tantùm est Altare, idq; in medio Choro, aut Presbyterio: In the Greeke church there is but one Altar, & the same stãding in the midst of the Quere. And the Quére also was in the midst of all the people. By these it may appeare, that M. Harding is not able to finde his pluralitie of Masses before the Councell of Antisiodorum, which was without the lists of the first 600. yéares, and therefore can stand him in little stead.

Ignatius ad Philadelphien. Euseb. lib. 10. ca. 4. In Encæniis. Augustinus de Verbis Domini secundum Ioh. Ser. 47. Conc. Constantino. 5. Acti. 1. Euseb. li. 10. cap. 4. Ignatius ad Philadelphien. Chrysost. in 2. Corin. hom. 18. Gentianus Heruettus.

As for these principles of the law, that are héere brought in, as a surcharge vnto the rest, they they may be safely receiued without danger. I grant, the law that forbiddeth in speciall case, generally graunteth all, that is not specially forbidden. This, I say, may well be granted. It is commonly called in Scholes, Argumentum à contrario sensu. Notwithstanding this Rule, being so generall, may receiue exception, although perhaps not in Law, yet in some cases of Diuinitie. For example; God saith: Thou shalt not commit Vsurie to thy Brother: Let there be no harlot of the daughters of Israel: Thou shalt not marrie thy wiues Sister, whiles thy wife liueth: Thou shalt not commit Aduoutrie: S. Paul saith: Bee yee not drunken with Wine. Deuter. 23. Ibidem. Leuit. 18. Exod. 20. Ephes. 5.

Of these speciall Prohibitions by M. Hardings Rule, or Principle, we may reason thus: These cases are specially forbidden: and what soeuer is not excepted in speciall prohibition as vnlawfull, is permitted as lawfull: Ergo, ex contrario sensu, by the contrary sense, It is left as lawfull, To commit Vsurie to a stranger: It is left as lawfull, To haue a Harlot, so that shee be not of the daughters of Israel: It is left as lawfull, to marrie thy wiues Sister, if thy wife be dead: It is left as lawfull, To commit Fornication: For Fornication in this speciall prohibition is not forbidden, but onely Aduoutrie. It is left as lawfull, to bee Drunken with Ale, or Beere: for only Wine is excepted. And why so? for M. Hardings Principle must needs stand, That a prohibition forbidding speciall cases, permitteth all the rest, and generally leaueth all that as lawfull, that is not specially forbidden. I speake not this to the intent to remoue the Principle of the Law, that here is alleged: but onely to shew, that Generall Rules must sometimes, and in some cases be taken with exception.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuision.

But I will not bring M. Iewel out of his professed studie too farre to seeke Lawes. For indeed wee need not goe to Law for these matters, wherein the Church hath giuen sentence for vs, but that our Aduersaries refuse the Iudge after sentence. Which if they had done when order permitteth it, at the beginning, and had plainly (as I feare mee some of them thinke) denied themselues to bee Christians, or at least of Christs Court in his Catholike Church: wee should not haue striued so long about these matters. Wee would haue imbraced the truth of God in his Church quietly, whiles they sought another Iudge according to their appetites and fantasies, as Turkes and Infidels doe.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

It were more for M. Hardings purpose, for proofe of these matters, to go rather to Diuinitie, than to Law. Howbeit, the state of his case being so feeble, and so deadly diseased, it were good Counsell for him, to leaue both Professions, and to goe to Physicke.

But here once againe in his impatient heats he vttereth his inordinate, and vnadui sed choler, and thinketh to proue himselfe a good Catholike man, onely by comparing others with Turkes, and Infidels. Notwithstanding herein we shall need no long defence. For, Gods holy Name be blessed, it is now open to the hearts, and consciences of all men, that both in life, and Doctrine we professe the same Gospell of Iesus Christ, that they of M. Hardings side haue of long time oppressed, and burnt for Heresie.

Neither doe we refuse the Iudge, either after sentence, or before. Him only we refuse, as no competent Iudge in these cases, that teacheth the Commandements, and doctrines of men, and hath infected the World with the leauen of the Scribes, and Pharisies: and we appeale vnto Christ the onely Iudge of all Iudges, vnto whom God the Father straitly bade vs to giue eare: Ipsum audite: Hearken vnto him: Vnus est Magister noster Christus: Christ is our only Master, and only Iudge. Matth. 15. Matth. 23. Matth. 16. Matth. 17. Matth. 23.

And for the Determinations of the Church, they are sundry, and variable, and vncertaine, and therefore sometimes vntrue: and for that cause may not alwaies stand of necessitie, as matter of iudgement. The Greeke Church neuer vsed the Priuate Masse, but only the Communion: The Latine Church hath vtterly abolished the holy Communion, sauing only at one time in the yeare, when also she vseth it with foule disorder, and, as Gelasius saith, with open sacrilege, and vseth only the priuate Masse. The same Latine church for the space of six hundred yeares, and more from the beginning, vnlesse it had bene vpon great occasion of many Communicants, vsed only one Communion, or, as M. Harding rather delighteth to cal it, one Masse in one day: But the Latine Church, that now is, hath in euery corner of the Temple erected Altars, and therefore now is full of corner Masses. In the old Latine Church it was not lawfull, to say the Second Communion, but only when the Church was full of people: In M. Hardings new Latine Church, there be oftentimes moe Masses said together, than there bee hearers of the people, to gaze vpon them. Thus the iudgement of the Latine Church disagreeth from the Greeke: and the new Latine Church likewise disagreeth in iudgement from the old. Touching this new Latine Church S. Bernard mourneth, and complaineth thus: Nunc ipsi Christum persequuntur, qui ab eo Christiani dicuntur. Amici tui Deus, & proximi tui aduersus te appropinquauerunt, & steterunt. Coniurasse videtur contra te vniuersitas populi Christiani, à minimo D. Bernard. in Conuersione Pauli.

minimo vsque ad maximum. A planta pedis vsque ad verticem non est sanitas vlla. Egressa est iniquitas à senioribus Iudicibus Vicarijs tuis, qui videntur regere populum tuum. Arcem Sion occupauerunt, apprehenderunt munitiones, & vniuersam deinceps liberè, & potestatiuè tradiderunt incendio Ciuitatem: They are now become the persecutors of Christ, that of his name are called Christians. O God, thy friends that are neereſt about thee, approch neere, and ſtand againſt thee. The whole vniuerſall Body of Christian people ſeemeth to haue conſpired againſt thee, euen from the loweſt vnto the higheſt. Wickednesse proceedeth foorth from thy Vicars the elder Iudges, that ſeeme to gouerne thy people. (Like Heathens and Infidels) they haue inuaded thy Caſtle of Sion, (which is thy holy Church) and haue taken all her holds, and freely, and by authoritie haue throwen thy whole Citie into the fire. Againe he ſaith: There remaineth now nothing, but that Antichriſt the Man of ſinne, the Childe of perdition be reuealed.

Bernard. in Pſalm. Qui habitat, Sermo. 6.

Seeing therefore the Reſolution of theſe Iudges is oftentimes vncertaine, and doubtfull, I will not ſay, as S. Bernard ſeemeth to ſay, vngodly, and wicked, wee may the more indifferently, and the better say now to M. Harding, as S. Auguſtine ſometimes ſaid to the Heretike Maximinus: Nec ego Nicenam Synodum tibi: nec tu mihi Arminenſem debes, tanquam præiudicaturus objicere. Nec ego huius authoritate, nec tu illius teneris. Scripturarum authoritatibus, non quorumcunque proprijs, ſed quæ vtriuſq; ſint communes, res cum re, cauſa cum cauſa, ratio cum ratione decertet: Neither will I preſcribe againſt thee by the Councell of Nice: nor maiſt thou preſcribe againſt mee by the Councell of Ariminum. Neither am I bound to this Councell, nor thou to that. By the authoritie of the Scriptures, which are neither thine, nor mine, but indifferent, and common to vs both, let vs compare matter with matter, cauſe with cauſe, and reaſon with reaſon. Againe he ſaith in like ſort to the Heretike Creſconius: Non debet ſe Eccleſia Chriſto præponere, &c. Cùm ille ſemper veraciter iudicet: Eccleſiaſtici autem Iudices, ſicut homines, plærunque fallantur: The Church, ſaith S. Auguſtine, may not ſet her ſelfe aboue Chriſt, &c. For Chriſt euermore iudgeth truly: but the Eccleſiaſticall Iudges, as being men, are often deceiued. Therefore we appeale from the Church, to Chriſt: From the partie, to the Iudge: From the Church deformed, to the Church Reformed: From a Church particular, to the Church Catholike: From the Falſe to the True: from the New to the Old: from a doubtfull, variable, vncertaine, vnadviſed ſentence, to a ſentence moſt firme, moſt ſtable, moſt certaine, moſt conſtant, that ſhall ſtand for euer.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuiſion.

Now if M Iewel bee not ſo preciſe in his iudgement of allowing the firſt ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, as to condemne the Church that followed in the next generation: then wee may allege vnto him the twelfth Councell of Toledo in Spaine, holden in the yeere of our Lord 680. for proofe that many Maſſes were celebrated in one Church in one day. For the ſame appeareth plainly by this Decree of the Fathers there: Relatum nobis eſt, quoſdam de Sacerdotibus non tot vicibus Communionis Sanctæ gratiam ſumere, quot Sacrificia Can 5.
in vna die videntur efferre, ſed in vno die, ſi plurima per ſe Deo offerant Sacrificia, in omnibus ſe Oblationibus à Communione ſuſpendunt, & in ſola tantùm extrema Sacrificij Oblatione Communionis Sanctæ gratiam ſumunt. Quaſi non ſit toties illis vero & ſingulari Sacrificio participandum, quoties Corporis & Sanguinis Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti immolatio facta conſiterit. Nam eſse Apoſtolus dicit: Nonne qui edunt Hoſtias, participes ſunt Altaris? Certum eſt, 1. Cor. 10.
quòd hi qui Sacrificantes non edunt, rei ſunt Dominici Sacramenti. Quicunque ergo Sacerdotum deinceps Diuino Altario Sacrificium Oblaturus acceſſerit, & ſe à Communione ſuſpenderit, ab ipſa, qua ſe indecenter priuauit, gratia Communionis anno vno repulſum ſe nouerit. Nam quale eſt ut illud Sacrificium, cui nec ipſe Sacrificans particeps eſſe cognoſcitur? Ergo modo omnibus eſt tenendum, vt quotieſcunque Sacrificans Corpus & Sanguinem Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti in Altario immolat, toties perceptionis Corporis & Sanguinis Chriſti ſe participem præbeat: It is ſhewed vnto vs, that there be certaine Priests, who doe not receiue the grace of the holy Communion ſo many times, how many Sacrifices they ſeeme to offer in one day. But if they offer vp to God many Sacrifices by themſelues in one day, in all thoſe Oblations they ſuſpend themſelues from the Communion, and receiue the grace of the holy Communion, only at the laſt Oblation of the Sacrifice, as though they ought not ſo often times to be partakers of that true and ſingular Sacrifice, as the Sacrifice of the Bodie and Blood of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt hath beene done. For behold the Apoſtle ſaith: Be not they which eat Sacrifices partakers of the 1. Cor. 10.
Altar? It is certaine, that they who doing Sacrifice doe not eat, be guilty of our Lords Sacrament. Wherefore what Prieſt ſoeuer heereafter ſhall come vnto the holy Altar to offer Sacrifice, and ſuſpend himſelfe from the Communion, bee it knowen vnto him, that hee is repelled and thruſt away from the grace of the Communion, whereof he hath vnſeemely bereaued himſelfe (whereby is meant, that hee ſtandeth excommunicate) for the ſpace of one yeere. For what a Sacrifice ſhall that be, whereof neither hee himſelfe that Sacrificeth, is knowen to be partaker? Wherefore by all meanes this is to be kept, that how often times ſo euer the Prieſt doth Sacrifice the Body and Blood of Ieſus Chriſt our Lord on the Altar, ſo often times hee receiue, and make himſelfe partaker of the Body and Blood of Chriſt.

This word Miſſa is found ſometimes in the Fathers. But it is vſed euermore for the Communion.

Heere by the word Sacrifice, and offering of the Sacrifice, the Fathers vnderſtand the daily Sacrifice of the Church, which wee call the Maſſe. For though the word Miſſa, bee of great antiquitie, and many times found in the Fathers, yet they vſe more commonly the word Sacrifice. Neither can the enemies of this Sacrifice, expound this Canon of the inward Sacrifices of a mans heart, but of that Sacrifice which the Prieſt commeth to the holy Altar to offer, of the Sacrifice of the Body and Blood of Chriſt our Lord offered on the Altar (for ſo be their words) where he receiueth the grace of the holy Communion, which is the participation of the Body and Blood of our Lord. Thus much granted, as by any reaſonable vnderſtanding it cannot be drawen, nor by racking can be ſtretched to any other ſenſe: wee haue heere good authoritie for the hauing of many Maſſes in one Church in one day. And whereas the Fathers of that Councell allowed many Maſſes in one day ſaid by one Prieſt, there is no reaſon why they ſhould not allow the the ſame ſaid by ſundrie Prieſts in one day. If our aduerſaries ſay, this might haue beene done in ſundrie places, whereby they may ſeeme to fruſtrate our purpoſe touching this Article: we anſwer, that beſide the approouing of the Maſſe by them ſo confeſſed, it were vaine and friuolous to imagine ſuch gadding of the Prieſts from Church to Church for ſaying many Maſſes in one day. Doubtleſſe the Fathers of that Toletane Councell meant of many Maſſes ſaid in one place in a day, as Leo did, for ſeruing the faithfull peoples deuotion that reſorted to Church at ſundrie houres, as we ſee the people doe now, that ſo all might be ſatisfied: which ſhould not haue beene, if one Maſſe only had beene ſaid. Miſſa.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

We condemne not the Church of God in any Generation, be the abuſes thereof neuer ſo great. God reſembleth it vnto a Vine, vnto a Cornefield, and vnto a Flocke of Sheepe. Notwithſtanding the Vine be ſpoiled, and borne downe, yet is it the Vine of the God of Sabaoth. Notwithſtanding the Field lie waſte, and bee ouergrowen with weeds, yet is it ſtill the Lords Field. Notwithſtanding the Flocke bee forſaken of the Shepheards, and run aſtray, and periſh in the Wildernes, yet is it ſtill the Flocke of Chriſt. And herein we haue great cauſe to glorifie the name of God, that, when he ſeeth it good in his ſight, ſendeth forth Labourers to reare vp, and to dreſſe his Vine: to labour, and to weed his Ground: to gather in, and to feed his Flocke. Eſay 1.

This allegation of the Councell of Toledo, ſerueth M. Harding, only to bewray his want. For if he could haue found any other Councell of antiquity, I trow he would not haue alleged this. It was holden well neere ſeuen hundred yeres after Chriſt: by which time many great diſorders, and deformities were priuily cropen into the Church, as may appeare both otherwiſe, and alſo by this ſame example, that one Prieſt vſed then to ſay many Maſſes in one day, and yet himſelfe not to Communicate, contrarie both to the Inſtitution of Chriſt, and alſo to the Lawes and Canons of the Church: and therefore the Gloſſe vpon the Decrees calleth it a moſt Naughtie Cuſtome: and this Councell it ſelfe ſaith: Whoſoeuer ſo doth, is guiltie of the Lords Sacrament. Thus both the computation of the time, and alſo the diſorder, and abuſe of the thing it ſelfe conſidered, this Authoritie needeth no further anſwer. De Con. diſt. 2. Relatum eſt. In Gloſſa.

It was impertinent in this place for M. Harding, to moue matter of the Sacrifice. Howbeit, for ſhort anſwer thereto, the Sacrifice, that in the Old Writers is called Daily, is that euerlaſting, and onely Sacrifice, that Chriſt once offered vpon the Croſſe, being there a Prieſt for euer, according to the order of Melchiſedech: and, whoſoeuer thinketh not that Sacrifice ſufficient, but imagineth ſome other Sacrifice for ſinnes to be made by man, is an enemie of the Croſſe of Chriſt, and of his Sacrifice, and treadeth downe the Sonne of God vnder his feet, and counteth the Blood of the Teſtament to be vnholy. In what ſenſe the Myſterie of the Holy Communion is of the Old Fathers called a Sacrifice, it ſhall be ſhewed at large in the ſeuententh Article hereof, ſeruing wholly to that purpoſe. Hebræ. 10. Philippen. 3. Hebræ. 10.

Touching this word, Miſſa, neither is the name, nor the meaning thereof of ſuch Antiquitie, as it is here ſuppoſed by M. Harding. It grew firſt in vſe about foure hundred yeres after Chriſt, and is very ſeldome vſed of the old Latine Writers: of S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, Tertullian, S. Cyprian, Arnobius, Lactantius, and others of that age, neuer: vnto S. Chryſoſtome, S Baſil, Nazianzene, Gregorie Nyſſene, and all other Greeke Writers, vtterly vnknowen. It is found in two ſundrie places vnder the name of S. Auguſtine, and once vnder the name of S. Hierome. But it is certaine, that theſe Bookes were neither S. Auguſtines, nor S Hieromes. Auguſt. in Sermonib. de tempore. Hieronym. in Pronerb.

Howbeit, we make no great account of the name. The naturall ſenſe, and meaning thereof, contrarie to M. Hardings ſurmiſes, neceſſarily importeth a Communion, and not a Priuate Maſſe. For this Latine word, Miſſa, is as much as, Miſſio, that is, a commanding away, or licence to depart. So S. Cyprian ſaith: Remiſſa peccatorum, in ſtead of Remiſſio: And the order of the Church then was this, That Nouices, that were not yet Chriſtened, and were called Catechumeni, and others, that were called Pœnitentes, that for ſome offence were inioined to doe penance, notwithſtanding they might lawfully heare the Sermons, and pray together with the reſt, yet might they neither bee preſent at the Baptiſme, nor receiue the Holy Myſteries. And therefore, after the Goſpell was read, and the Sermon ended, the Deacon ſaid vnto them, Ite, Miſſa eſt: Go ye hence: ye may depart. Likewiſe in S. Gregories time the Deacon vſed thus to ſay: Qui non communicat, det locum: Who ſo doth not Communicate, let him giue place. Thus all they, that either would not, or might not Communicate with the reſt of their Brethren, were willed to depart: whereof it neceſſarily followeth, that all they, that remained, did Communicate. Cyprian. lib. 3. Epiſtolar. Gregorius Dialogor. li. 2. ca. 23.

Of this departure away, and Proclamation of the Deacon, the action it ſelfe, which was the Holy Communion, was called Miſſa. Afterward, when either through negligence of the people, or through auarice of the Priests, the whole order hereof was quite altered, and the thing that had bene common, was become priuate, yet as it happeneth often in other the like things, the former name remained still. For example, The Vigils, or Night Watches, were turned into Fastings: Altars, that serued for offering vp of Calues, and Goats, were turned into the Lords Table: The Sabbath day was turned into the Sunday. Yet, the things being thus altered, the names notwithstanding of Vigils, Altars, and Sabbath daies remaine still in vse, as they did before. Therefore M. Harding herein, as commonly elsewhere, thought it best to deceiue his Reader, by the mistaking, and erreur of the Name.

Last of all, if the Fathers in the Councell of Toledo, and Leo meant all one thing, as here it is constantly auouched, then is M. Harding by the same Fathers but prely relæued. For it is most euident, by that is already said, that Leo meant the Holy Communion, and not M. Hardings Priuate Masse.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuision.

If M. Iewel agnise and accept for good the authoritie of this Councell, as the Church doth, then must he allow these many things, which he, and the Sacramentaries to the vttermost of their power and cunning, labour to disprooue and defase. First, the blessed Sacrifice of the Masse, which the Fathers of this Councell call the true and singular Sacrifice, the Sacrifice of the Body and Blood of our Lord Iesus Christ, which the Priest offereth on the Altar. Next, the truth and Reall Presence of the Body and Blood of our Lord in the Sacrifice offered. Then Altars, which this Councell calleth diuine or holy, for the diuine and holy things on them offered, the Body and Blood of Christ. Furthermore, the (100) multitude of Masses in one day. For they speake of many Sacrifices, that is, many Masses, Plurima Sacrificia. Lastly, Priuate Masses. For the words, nec ipse Sacrificans, tightly construed and weighed, import no lesse. For whereas no word in this Decree is vttered, whereby it may appeare, the people to be of necessitie required to receiue, if the Priests had receiued themselues at euery Masse, no fault had beene found And if the people had receiued without the Priests, in this case it had beene reason, this Decree should otherwise haue beene expressed. And so it is cleere, that at that time Priuate Masses were said and done.

The 100. Vntruth. For M. Harding vnderstandeth not his owne booke, as it shall appeare.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The authoritie, and credit of this Councell of Toledo is no part of our question. It was holden almost seuen hundred yeares after Christ: and of greater Antiquitie M. Harding is able to allege none. Which thing, I trust, the indifferent, and discreet Reader will well remember.

1 Concerning these fiue notes, whereof one onely toucheth this purpose, As this Councell saith, The Priest offereth the Sacrifice at the Altar, or Holy Table, euen so Leo saith, Euery of the whole Faithfull people likewise offereth vp the same Sacrifice. I say not any other, but the very selfe same Sacrifice, and that in as ample maner, as it is offered by the Priest.

Leo ad Dioscorum, epist. 81.

2 Touching Reall Presence, M. Harding seemeth to doe, as Children sometimes vse to doe, that imagine Horsemen, and Banners, and other strange miracles in the Cloudes. It is onely his owne fantasie: For there is no such word, or mention in the Councell.

3 The matter of Altars is already answered.

4 Priuate Masses, and also multitudes of the same, consideration euermore had to the computation of the yeares, might easily bee granted without hinderance.

5 Yet hath not M. Harding in the space twelue hundred yeares, hitherto found in one Church more than two Masses in one day: all this his great studie, and trauell therein taken notwithstanding.

Anno 680.

But the words of the Councell be plaine, Plurima Sacrificia, that is, many Sacrifices, and therefore saith M. Harding, many Masses. Hereby it may appeare, that M. Harding either considereth not his Booke, or els hath no great regard to that he writeth. His owne Bookes will reproue his ouersight, and shew how much he is deceiued. For, Plurima, in this place, signifieth not, Many, that is, neither six, nor fiue, nor foure, nor three, but onely two. And for triall hereof, I report me to the Glosse it selfe vpon the Decrees. The words be these: Nota hîc, plurima dici de duobus. Quia plura non licet: Marke here, that this word, Plurima, is spoken onely of two. For, to say moe Masses then two, it is not lawfull.

De Con. dist. 2. Relatum est. In Glossa.

M. Harding. The 10. Diuision.

Now if M. Iewel refuse and reiect the authoritie of the Church represented in that Councell, then hee giueth vs a manifest notice, what marke wee ought to take him to bee of. Then may we say vnto him the words of S. Paul: Nos talem consuetudinem non habemus, nec Ecclesia Dei: Wee haue no such custome, neither the Church of God hath not, to condemne the Church And in this case hee must pardon vs, if according to the precept of Christ, for that he will not heare the Church, wee take him for no better than a Heathen and a Publicane.

Matth. 18.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

To these simple Premisses, M. Harding hath laid a large conclusion. If wee heare not him, and his Church, then are we Heathens, and Publicans. God knoweth, This is a very very poore Brauerie. In the Scholes it is called, Petitio Principij, and Fallacia Accidentis: A deceitfull kinde of reasoning, without either ground, or good order. I need not to open it, it is knowen vnto Children.

But doth M. Harding thinke, that euery man is an Heathen, that reproueth errour, that discloseth the Man of Sinne, and wisheth the Reformation of Gods Church? Christ said vnto the Scribes, and Phariſees: You haue made the house of God a denne of Theeues: Matth. 21. Hieremie saith: The labourers themselues haue troaden downe, and torne the Vine of the Lord. Hierem. 12. The Prophet Esay saith: Your Siluer is turned into drosse. S. Bernard saith of the Bishops in his time: Pro Mercenarijs habemus Diabolos, &c. Instead of hirelings we haue Diuels: Esai 1. Bernard. in Concilio Remensi. from the toppe to the toe, there is no part left whole in the Church of Rome. Nicolaus de Clauengijs saith: Calamitosa desolatio est in Domo Dei: There is a miserable desolation in the House of the Lord. Pigghius confesseth, there be abuses in the Priuate Masse: Latomus confesseth, there is an errour in the Administration in One Kinde. And will M. Harding know all these by his owne priuie marke? Or must Christ, Hieremie, Esay, S. Bernard, Pigghius, and Latomus, be taken for no better, than Heathens, and Publicanes? Certainly, touching these pluralities of Masses, and this shamefull profanation, and waste of Gods holy Mysteries, both Christ, and his Apostles, and all the old Catholike Fathers of the Primitiue Church will say: Nos huiusmodi consuetudinem non habemus, nec Ecclesia Dei: We haue no such custome, neither the Church of God. And to the wilfull maintainers of the same, Christ will say: Frustra colitis me, docentes doctrinas, præcepta hominum: Yee worship me in vaine, teaching the Doctrines, and Commandements of men. Bernard. in Conuersione Pauli. Nicolaus de Clauengijs. Albertus Pighius de Primata Missæ. Latomus contra Bucerum.

And, whereas, M. Harding, yée countenance and furnish your errours by the name of the Church, Remember, S. Iohn saith: Make no vaunts that yee be the Children of Abraham. For God is able euen of the stones to raise vp Children vnto Abraham. And the Angel saith in the Booke of Reuelations: Dicunt, se esse Iudæos, & non sunt: Sed sunt Synagoga Satanæ: They name themselues Iewes, that is, the people of God, but they are not: They are the Synagogue of the Diuell. 1. Cor. 11. Matth. 15. Esay 29. Matth. 3. Apocalyp. 2.

Now, good Christian Reader, that thou maiest sée, how vainly M. Harding hath wandered throughout this whole Treatie, it may please thée, to remember my first Negatiue Proposition touching the same, which in effect is this: They are not able to shew, that within six hundred yéares after Christ, there were fiue Masses said any where, in any one Church, in one day, throughout the world. In which Proposition two points are specially touched: the number of Masses, and the number of yéares. To proue the affirmatiue hereof, M. Harding hath alleged the Councell of Antisiodorum, and the Councell of Toledo, either of them being without the compasse of six hundred yeares. He hath also alleged Leo an ancient Bishop of Rome, speaking onely of the Holy Communion, and not one word of the Priuate Masse. All these three Authorities touch onely one Priest, and as it appeareth by the Gloſſe, onely two Ministrations at the vttermost. Thus hath M. Harding failed, both in the computation of the yéares, and also in the number of his Masses. Anno 613. Anno 680. Leo epist. 81. De Con. dist. 2. Relatum est. In Glossa.

Yet must this be defended among the rest, bee the profanation thereof neuer so horrible: and whosoeuer dare wish a reformation hérein, must be no better then a Heathen, and a Publicane. O, how much better had it béene for M. Harding, either to haue passed the matter ouer in silence, or plainly, and simply to haue confessed his errour!

OF ADORATION OF IMAGES.

The Fovrteenth Article.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OVR, that Images were set vp in the Churches, to the intent the people might worship them.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

That Images were set vp in Churches, within six hundred yeeres after Christ, it is certaine, but not specially either then, or sithence to the intent the people might worship them. The intent and purpose hath

Not Specially to be worshipped: Ergo, to be wor-ſhipped, although not Specially.

hath beene farre other, but right godly, as ſhall be declared. Wherefore the imputing of this intent to the Catholike Church, is both falſe and alſo ſlanderous. And becauſe for the vſe of Images, theſe New Maſters charge the Church with reproach of a new deuice, breach of Gods commandement, and Idolatrie: I will heere ſhew, firſt, the Antiquity of Images, and by whom they haue beene allowed. Secondly, to what intent and purpoſe they ſerue. Thirdly, how they may be worſhipped without offence.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

This Article of Images may be eaſily paſſed ouer, both for that the weight thereof is not great, and alſo for that M. Harding, as his wont is, hath purpoſely diſſembled the matter, that was in queſtion, and deuiſed other fantaſies, that were not touched. Wherein, notwithſtanding hee vſe large diſcourſes, and make great ſhew, yet in the end, as it ſhall appeare, he concludeth nothing. I grant, Images were erected in ſome Churches within fiue hundred yeares after Chriſt, albeit neither ſo rathe, as it is pretended, nor without much repining of Godly men, and great contention.

Auguſt. de Fide & Symbolo, ca. 7. Epiſt. Epiphanij ad Iohannem Epiſcop. Hieroſol.

But M. Harding of his modeſty, once againe calleth vs New Maſters: ſo as hee would call Moſes, if hee were now aliue, or much rather God himſelfe. For this Doctrine is Gods Doctrine, and not ours. And therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Huiuſmodi Simulachrum Deo nefas eſt in Chriſtiano Templo collocare: In a Chriſtian Church to erect ſuch an Image vnto God, (reſembling God to an old man) it is an Abomination. And Epiphanius the Biſhop of Cyprus entring into a Church, and finding there a Veile hanged vp, and the Image of Chriſt painted in it, tare it aſunder, and pulled it downe, becauſe it was done, as he writeth himſelfe, Contra authoritatem Scripturarum: Contrary to the Commandement of Gods word. Againe he ſaith: Huiuſmodi vela contra Religionem noſtram veniunt: Such Veiles (ſo painted) are contrary to our Chriſtian Religion. And againe: Hæc ſcrupuloſitas indigna eſt Eccleſia Chriſti, & populis, qui tibi crediti ſunt: This Superſtition is vnmeet for the Church of Chriſt, and vnmeet for the people that is committed vnto thee. S. Auguſtine ſaith, It is Abomination. Epiphanius ſaith, It is contrarie to the Scriptures, and contrarie to Chriſtian Religion: Vnmeet for the Church of Chriſt, and vnmeet for the people of God. Howbeit, M. Harding perhaps will ſuffer theſe two to paſſe in the number of his New Maſters.

And, albeit by theſe Fathers iudgement it is plaine, that by ſetting vp of Images Gods Commandement is broken, yet it may the better appeare by comparing Gods Words, and M. Hardings Words both together. God ſaith, Thou ſhalt make to thy ſelfe no grauen Image: M. Harding ſaith, Thou ſhalt make to thy ſelfe grauen Images. God ſaith, Thou ſhalt not fall downe to them, nor worſhip them: M. Harding ſaith, Thou ſhalt fall downe to them, and worſhip them. Now iudge thou, good Reader, whether this bee a breach of Gods Commandement or no.

Verily M. Harding in the firſt entry heereof ſaith thus: Images are not ſpecially ſet vp, to the intent the people may worſhip them. The ſenſe whereof muſt néeds bee this: Images are ſet vp to the end to be worſhipped: although not ſpecially to that end. But an Image is a Creature, and no God: And to honor a Creature in that ſort, is Idolatrie: Therefore, by M. Hardings owne Confeſſion, Images are ſet vp to be vſed to Idolatrie: although not Specially to that end. Howbeit, by this ſimple Diſtinction of Generall, and Speciall, Idolatrie is eaſie to be excuſed.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

The 201. Vntruth, containing three great Vntruths together in one.

Concerning the antiquity, and originall of Images, they were not firſt inuented by man, but (201) commanded by God, brought into vſe by Tradition of the Apoſtles, allowed by Authoritie of the holy Fathers, and all Councels, and by cuſtome of all ages ſince Chriſts being in the Earth. When God would the Tabernacle with all furniture thereto belonging to be made, to ſerue for his honor, and glory, hee commanded Moſes among other things to make two Cherubins of Beaten Gold, ſo as they might couer both ſides of the propitiatory, ſpreading abroad their wings, and beholding themſelues one another, their faces turned toward the Propitiatorie, that the Arke was to be couered withall. Of thoſe Cherubins S. Paul ſpeaketh in his Epiſtle to the Hebrewes. Which Images Beſeleel, that excellent workman made at the commandement of Moſes, according to the inſtruction by God giuen. Againe, Moſes by the commandement of God made the Braſen Serpent, and ſet it vp on high for the people, that were hurt of Serpents in wildernéſſe, to behold, and ſo to be healed. In the Temple alſo that Salomon builded, were Images of Cherubins, as Scripture ſheweth. Of Cherubins mention is made in ſundrie places of the Scriptures, ſpecially in Ezechiel the Prophet, ca 41. Ioſephus writeth of the ſame in his third, and eight booke, Antiquitatum Iudaicarum. The Image of Cherubins repreſenteth Angels, and the word is a word of Angelicall Dignitie, as it appeareth by the third Chapter of Geneſis, where wee reade that God placed Cherubins before Paradiſe, after that Adam was caſt foorth for his diſobedience.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

M. Harding doubteth not, to deriue the firſt Inuention of his Images from God himſelfe, euen as rightly, and with as good Faith, as he deriueth his Maſſe from Chriſt, and his his Apoſtles: or his Holy Water from the Prophet Elizeus: or the Cardinals hat from S. Hierome. Vnleſſe perhaps he will reaſon thus: God ſaith: Thou ſhalt not make vnto thy ſelfe any grauen Image, nor the Likeneſſe of any thing: And, Accurſed be the man, that maketh an Image: And, Confounded be all they that worſhip Images. Ergo, God commanded Images to be made. If he can auouch his Images by ſuch warrants, then doubtleſſe God himſelfe was the firſt inuentor of Images.

The Heathens Fathers of Images.

But Learned, and Wiſe men thinke, that the inuention hereof came firſt from the Heathens, and Infidels that knew not God. Thus it is written in the Booke of Wiſedome: Vanitas hominum inuenit artes iſtas, ad tentationem animæ, & decipulam inſipientium: The vanity of men firſt found out this art, to the tentation of the ſoule, and to the deceiuing of the vnwiſe. S. Cyprian ſaith: Ad defunctorum vultus per Imaginem detinendos expreſſa ſunt Simulachra. Inde poſteris facta ſunt ſacra, quæ primitùs fuerant aſſumpta ſolatia: Images were firſt drawen, thereby to keepe the countenance of the dead in Remembrance. Vpon occaſion thereof things grew at length vnto holineſſe, that at the firſt were taken only for ſolace. Therefore S. Ambroſe ſaith: Gentes lignum adorant, tanquam Imaginem Dei: The Heathens worſhip Wood, as the Image of God. And Gregorius the Biſhop of Neocæſaria: Gentilitas inuentrix, & Caput eſt Imaginum: Heathenneſſe was the firſt deuiſer, and Head of Images. Likewiſe Euſebius ſaith, ſpeaking of the Images of Chriſt, of Peter, and of Paul: Hoc mihi videtur ex Gentili conſuetudine obſeruatum: quòd ita illi ſoleant honorare, quos honore dignos duxerint: This ſeemeth to be the obſeruation of the Heatheniſh cuſtome: for with ſuch Images they vſed to honor them, whom they thought worthy of honor. Therefore S. Auguſtine writing againſt Adimantus ſaith thus: Simulant ſe fauere Simulachris: quod propterea faciunt, vt miſerrimæ, & veſanæ ſuæ Sectæ etiam Paganorum concilient beneuolentiam: They would ſeem to fauour Images: which thing they do, to the intent to make the Heathens to thinke the better of their moſt miſerable, and leaud Sect. For of the Heathens Lactantius writeth thus: Verentur, ne Religio vana ſit, ſi nihil videant, quod Adorent: They are afraid (as they alſo are of M. Hardings ſide) their Religion ſhall be but vaine, if they ſee not thing, that they may worſhip. Therefore Daniel ſaith, that Nabucodonozor the Heathen King appointed a ſolemne Dedication day, for his Golden Image, with all kinds, and ſorts of Miniſtralſie. And the Prophet Baruch thus openeth, and vttereth the Religion of Babylon: Sacerdotes Barba, Capiteque raſo, & aperto, ſedent, & coram Dijs ſuis rugiunt: The Prieſts being ſhauen both Head and Beard, and ſitting bare, roare out before their Gods. Thus Heliogabalus, Adrianus, and Alexander Seuerus, being Infidels, and Heathen Princes, had in their Chapels, and Cloſets, the Images of Abraham, of Moſes, of Chriſt, and of others. Thus the Heretikes called Gnoſtici, and Carpocratiani, for that they fauoured of the Heathens, had, and worſhipped the Images of Chriſt, of Paul, of Pythagoras, and of Homer. By theſe few Authorities, and Examples it appeareth, that the firſt erection of Images came, not from God, but from the Heathens, that knew not God. And therefore Athanaſius ſaith: The Inuention of Images came not of good, but of ill. As for the Iewes, that had the Law, and the Prophets amongſt them, and therefore ſhould beſt know Gods meaning in this behalfe, they had no maner Image, neither Painted, nor grauen in their Temples, as Dion ſaith: and as Origen ſaith, they could not abide any Painter, or Grauer, to dwell amongſt them.

But M. Harding replieth: God commanded Moſes, to make the Cherubins, and the Braſen Serpent. Theſe examples make little againſt my aſſertion. For God commanded not, either the Cherubins, or the Serpent to be ſet vp to the intent the people ſhould Worſhip them: which is the whole, and only ſtate of this queſtion. The ſame obiection the Old Idolaters laid ſometime againſt Tertullian. For thus he writeth: Ait quidam: Cur ergo Moſes in Eremo Simulachrum Serpentis ex ære fecit? Some one, or other, that maintaineth Idolatrie, will ſay (as M. Harding now ſaith) And why then did Moſes make the Image of the Braſen Serpent in the Wilderneſſe? Hereby we ſee, that M. Harding is not the firſt that deuiſed this obiection. The Old Idolaters found out, and vſed the ſame aboue fourteene hundred yeeres agoe, and M. Harding hath learned it at their hands. But hereto Tertullian maketh this anſwer: Bene, quòd idem Deus, & Lege vetuit Similitudinem fieri, & Extraordinario Præcepto Serpentis Similitudinem * Interdixit: Well, and good: One, and the ſame God, both by his Generall Law forbade any Image to be made: and alſo by his Extraordinarie, and Speciall Commandement willed an Image of a Serpent to be made. He addeth further: Si eundem Deum obſeruas, habes Legem eius, Ne feceris Similitudinem. Et, ſi Præceptum factæ poſteà Similitudinis reſpicis, & tu imitare Moſen, Ne facias aduerſus Legem Simulachrum aliquod, niſi & tibi Deus iuſſerit: If thou be obedient vnto the ſame God, thou haſt his Law, Make thou no Image. But, if thou haue regard to the Image of the Serpent, that was made afterward by Moſes, then do thou, as Moſes did: Make not any Image againſt the Law, vnleſſe God command thee, as he did

* He ſeemeth to vſe Interdixit, for Edixit.

Moſes,

The Brasen Serpent. The Cherubins.

Genesis 22. Exod. 11. 2. Regum 18. Concilium Moguntinen. cap. 42.

Moſes. For God is free, and ſubiect to no Law. He commandeth vs, and not himſelfe. He giueth this Generall Law, Thou ſhalt not kill: Yet he ſaid vnto Abraham, Take thy Sonne Iſaac, and kill him. Likewiſe he ſaith: Thou ſhalt not ſteale: And yet the people of Iſrael, by his Commandement, ſtale away the Egyptians goods, without breach of the Law. The ſame anſwer may alſo ſerue for the Images of the Cherubins. Howbeit, the Cherubins ſtood not in the Temple, in the ſight, and preſence of the people: but within the vaile, in the Tabernacle, into which place it was not lawfull for any one of the people to caſt his eies. And therefore there was in it no danger of Idolatry. But like as, when the Brasen Serpent was abuſed by Idolatry, the Godly King Ezechias toke it downe, and brake it in peces, notwithſtanding God had commanded Moſes to ſet it vp: euen ſo, notwithſtanding it were ſufferable to haue Images in the Church of God, without breach of Gods Law, yet when they be abuſed, and made Idols, as they are throwout the whole Church of Rome, it is the dutie of godly Magiſtrates to pull them downe, like as alſo it is ordered by the Councell of Mens.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuiſion.

It were not much beſide our purpoſe heere to rehearſe the place of Ezechiel the Prophet, where God commanded one, that was clothed in linnen, and had an Inkhorne by his ſide, to goe thorow the mids of Hieruſalem, and to print the ſigne of T A V, that is, the ſigne of the Croſſe (for that letter had the ſimilitude of the Croſſe among the old Hebrew Letters, as S. Hierome witneſſeth) in the foreheads of the men, that mourned, and made mone ouer all the abominations of that City. Touching the Signe, Image, or Figure of the Croſſe in the time of the New Teſtament, God ſeemeth by his prouidence, and by ſpeciall warnings, in ſundry reuelations, and ſecret declarations of his will, to haue commended the ſame to men, that they ſhould haue it in good regard, and remembrance. When Conſtantine the Emperor had prepared himſelfe to war againſt Maxentius the Tyrant, caſting in his mind the great dangers that might thereof enſue, and calling to God for helpe, as he lookt vp, beheld (as it were in a viſion) the Signe of the Croſſe appearing vnto him in Heauen as bright as fire, and as he was aſtonied with that ſtrange ſight, he heard a voice ſpeaking thus vnto him, Conſtantine in this ouercome. Ezech. 9. In Ezechielem. The Signe of the Croſſe commended to men by Gods prouidence. Euſebius Eccleſiaſt. hiſt. lib. 1. cap. 9. & 10. pag. Sozomen. Tripart. hiſt. lib. 1. cap. 5. Eccleſ. hiſt. li. 10 in fin.

After that Iulian the Emperor had forſaken the profeſſion of Chriſtian Religion, and had done Sacrifice at the Temples of Painyms, mouing his ſubiects to doe the like: as he marched forward with his army on a day, the drops of raine, that fell downe out of the aire in a ſhower, formed and made tokens and ſignes of the Croſſe, both in his, and alſo in the ſouldiers garments.

Rufinus hauing declared the ſtrange, and horrible plagues of God, whereby the Iewes were fraied, and letted from their vaine attempt of building vp againe the Temple at Hieruſalem, leaue thereto of the Emperor Iulian in deſpight of the Chriſtians obtained: in the end ſaith, that leſt thoſe earthquakes, and terrible fires, which he ſpeaketh of, raiſed by God, whereby as well the workhouſes, and preparations toward the building, as alſo great multitudes of the Iewes were throwen downe, caſt abroad, and deſtroied, ſhould be thought to happen by chance: the night following theſe plagues, the ſigne of the Croſſe appeared in euery one of their garments ſo euidently, as none, to cloke their infidelitie, was able by any kinde of thing to ſcoure it out, and put it away. When the Temples of the Painyms were deſtroied by Chriſtians in Alexandria, about the yeere of our Lord 390. in the chiefe Temple of all, which was of the Idoll Serapis, the holy, and myſticall Letters called, ἱερογλυφικὰ, by Gods prouidence, were found grauen in ſtones, repreſenting the Figure of the Croſſe, the Signification whereof after their interpretation was, life to come. Which thing eſpied by the Chriſtians, and by the Prinyms preſent at the ſpoile, ſerued maruellouſly to the further ince of the Chriſtian faith, no leſſe then the inſcription of the Altar at Athens, Ignoto Deo, vnto the vnknowen God, ſerued to the ſame purpoſe through S. Pauls preaching. Which altogether was before wrought by Gods holy prouidence, as Socrates, one of the writers of the Eccleſiaſticall ſtories, reporteth. Hiſt. Tripart. lib. 9. cap. 29. χαράγματα ἱερογλυφικὰ. Actor. 17.

Thus it appeareth plainly, how Gods Prouidence hath commended vnto true beleeuers, the Signe of the Croſſe. For which cauſe, and for Remembrance of our Redemption, it hath bin in old time and alwaies ſithence much frequented and honored. For beſide that we reade hereof in Tertullian, who was neere the Apoſtles time, in Apologetico, we find in the writers of the Eccleſiaſticall ſtories, that the Chriſtian people of Alexandria, after they had pulled down, and taken away the armes and monuments of Serapis the Idoll, euery man cauſed the ſigne of our Lords Croſſe in place of them to be painted and ſet vp in their poſts, entries, windowes, walles, and pillars: that whereſoeuer the eie was turned, it ſhould light on the Holy ſigne of the Croſſe. Conſtantine the Emperor loued, and honored this Signe ſo much, that he cauſed the ſame to be painted in all his flags, and banners of warre, to be ſtrucken in his coines, and moneies, to be purtraited in his armes, ſcutchins, and Targets. Of this Aurelius Prudentius maketh mention: Cap 16. Eccleſ. hiſt. lib. 11. cap 29. ad finem Ruffin. Hiſtor. tripart. lib. 1. cap. 9.

Chriſtus purpureum gemmanti textus in Auro,
Signabat labarum: Clypeorum inſignia Chriſtus Scripſerat, ardebat ſummis Crux addita criſtis. Lib. 1. contra Symmachum.

The ſenſe whereof is thus much in Engliſh. The chiefe banner, which was of purple, had the Image of Chriſt in it wrought in Gold and ſtones: The Targets were painted all ouer with Chriſt: The Croſſe ſhined fire bright in the creſts of their Helmets. That the banner commonly borne before the Emperour in war, in Latine called Labarum, was of this ſort, it appeareth by an Epiſtle, that S. Ambroſe wrote to Theodoſius the Emperor. Neither was the Figure of the Croſſe then only in Flags, and Banners, painted, wouen, embrodered, or otherwiſe wrought, in Gold or pretious ſtones: But alſo made in whole gold, and ſet vpon a long ſtaffe or pole, and born before men (202) (as the maner is now in Proceſſions) as it ſeemeth plainly by theſe verſes of Prudentius: Vide hiſtor. tripart. lib. 1. ca. 5. Lib. 5. Epiſtol. 29.

The 202. Vntruth. For Prudentius ſpeaketh not of Proceſſion in the Church, but of Marching in the fields.

Agnoſcas Regina lubens mea ſigna neceſſe eſt:
In quibus effigies Crucis, aut Gemmata refulget,
Aut longis ſolido ex Auro preſertur in haſtis.

It behoueth you Madam, that gladly you acknowledge mine enſignes, in which the Figure of the Croſſe is either glittering in ſtones, or of whole Gold is borne on long ſtaues before vs. Thus much haue I gathered red out of the ancient Fathers writings concerning the Signe of our Lords Crosse, the sight whereof the professors of this New Gospell cannot abide, to the intent, the diuersitie of our time, and of old time may appeare, to the maners of which, for a perfect reformation, these Preachers would seeme to bring the world againe.

The Crosse.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The Signe of the Crosse, I grant, among the Christians was had in great regard: and that the more, both for the publike reproch, and shame, that by the common iudgement of all the world was conceiued against it, and also for that most worthy price of our Redemption, that was offered vpon it. It is written, Accursed be all they, that are hanged vpon the Tree. And Chrysostome saith, The Infidels vsed commonly to vpbraid the Christians with these words: Tu adoras Crucifixum? Wilt thou worship a man that was hanged vpon a Crosse? They thought great villanie in that kind of Death: for it was most odious, and shamefull of all others: and also they thought it great follie, to thinke well of it. Therefore S. Paul saith: Verbum Crucis pereuntibus stultitia est: The Word of the Crosse vnto them that perish, is but a folly. Againe: Prædicamus Christum Crucifixum, Iudæis quidem scandalum, Gentibus autem Stultitiam: We preach Christ Crucified: a great offence vnto the Iewes, and vnto the Heathens a great Follie. Likewise S. Augustine calleth the Crosse, Ipsam ignominiam, quam Pagani derident: That very shame, that the Heathens laugh to scorne. Likewise also Chrysostome: Mors Christi apud Iudæos maledicta, apud Gentiles abominanda: The Death of Christ among the Iewes is holden accursed, among the Heathens it is holden abominable.

Therefore the Faithfull, that beleeued in Christ, in all their talkes, and in their whole life, and conuersation, vsed so much the more to extoll, and magnifie the same, in reproch of the enemies of the Crosse of Christ, both Iewes, and Gentiles. For that cause, S. Paul saith: I am not ashamed of the Gospell of Christ: for it is the Power of God vnto Saluation: And, God forbid, that I should reioice in any thing, but only in the Crosse of Iesus Christ: And, I reckon my selfe to know nothing, but onely Iesus Christ, and the same Christ Crucified vpon the Crosse. Thus S. Paul triumphed of that thing that in the world was so deepely despised: As if he would haue said, This is that infirmity, that hath conquered the world: This is that villanie, and reproch, that hath led captiuity away captiue, that hath spoiled the Principalities, and Powers of Darknesse. Thus, as Theodoret recordeth, the Christians euery where in their common resorts, and in the open market places published and proclaimed the victorie, & Triumph of the Crosse: Which, as Chrysostome saith, they were not ashamed to set, as a posie, to any thing that they did, and to any thing, that they possessed. Likewise God, that the world might the more deepely thinke of the Death of Christ, wrought oftentimes strange Miracles by the same, as he did by Pauls Napkins, by Elizeus bones, and by Peters shadow. Then the first Christened Emperour Constantinus, seeing that thing became so glorious, that before had beene so slanderous, to increase the estimation thereof, commanded straitly by a Law, that from thencefoorth no offender should suffer vpon a crosse. These things had in remembrance, we grant al that M. Harding hath here alleged: The Vision of Ezechiel, and the marking of the mens foreheads with the Hebrew letter TAV: The sight of a Crosse offered vnto Constantinus in the aire: The staining of crosses in the Souldiers coates, in the time of the Renegate Emperour Iulian: The printing, or burning of the Crosses in the apparell of the Iewes at Hierusalem: The finding of the holy Hieroglyphicall letter bearing the forme of the Crosse in the Temple of Serapis in Egypt: And to conclude, we grant, that the people, being newly brought to the knowledge of the Gospell, after they had pulled downe the Scutchins of the Idoll Serapis, and other like Monuments of Idolatrie, in the place thereof straightway set vp the Crosse of Christ in token of Conquest, in their entries, in their wals, in their windowes, in their Posts, in their Pillars: briefly, in their Flagges, Banners, Armes, Scutchins, Targets, and Coines. All these things, I say, we yeld vnto M. Harding without exception. Euen so Christian Princes this day vse the same Crosse in their Armes, and Banners, both in peace, and in warre, of diuers formes, and sundrie colours, as in token, they fight vnder the Banner of Christ. Labarum among the old Romans was the Emperiall Standard of armes, richly wrought in Gold, and beset with stone, carried only before the Generall of the Field, and therefore reuerenced of the Souldiers aboue all other. Sozomenus as a Greeke writer, and therefore not able to ghesse rightly of the Latine tongue, seemeth to call it, Laborum: For thus he writeth: Δεύτερον τῶν σημάτων, ὃ δὴ Σαβαρον ῥωμαῖοι καλέσι; The one of the standards, which the Romans call Laborum: Vnlesse there be an errour in the Greeke. Notwithstanding it may bee thought, The Emperour Seuerus had some respect vnto the same, when he gaue this Watchword vnto his Souldiers, Laboremus: Let vs labour. Likewise S. Gregorie writeth: Christum belli socium habuisti, cuius cuius Labarum insigne gestasti, ipsam dico vivificatricem Crucem: This standard the Christian Emperor Constantinus so blessed with the Crosse, as others before him had done with Minotaurus, or with Aquila. And, notwithstanding Eusebius say, Constantinus vsed this Crosse, as a preseruation of his safety, yet doubtlesse his affiance was only in Christ, and not in the Materiall Crosse. For Nicephorus saith, Constantius caused these words to be grauen in the Crosse, Ἰησοῦς χριστὸς νικᾷ, Iesus Christus vincit: Iesus Christ conquereth, and not the Crosse. Otherwise S. Ambrose writeth thus: Helena the Empresse, by whose meanes the Crosse was found out, Inuenit Titulum: Regem Adorauit, non Lignum vtique: Quia hic Gentilis est error, & Vanitas impiorum: *She found out the Title: but she worshipped Christ the King, and not the Wood. Ambrosius in Oratione funebri Theodosij.

Last of all, whereas M. Harding saith, The professors of this New Gospell cannot abide the Signe of our Lords Crosse: let him vnderstand, it is not the Crosse of Christ, nor the Signe thereof, that we find fault withall, but the Superstitious Abuse of the Crosse. God be thanked, it hath well appeared vnto the world, that they, whom M. Harding thus condemneth, haue been able, not only to abide the Signe of Christs Crosse, but also to take vp their Crosses, and to follow Christ, and to reioice, and triumph in the same.

Neither is there any such great matter yet shewed, wherefore these men should glory of the Antiquitie of their cause. For notwithstanding all this long discourse, and great adoe, yet is it not hitherto any way proued, either that this Crosse was an Image, or that it was set vp in any Church, or that it was Adored of the people. Certainly the Letter, that Ezechiel saw in a Vision: the Crosse that Constantinus saw in the aire: the markes that were either stained with water, or burnt with fire in the labourers garments: the secret Mysticall Letters in the Temple of Serapis: the Cognisances of the Crosse painted, or grauen in Flags, Banners, Targets, and Coines, were only barres laid acrosse, and no Images. Againe, the same Crosses were abroad in other places, in the Aire, in the Field, in the Labourers Coats, in priuate houses, and in mens purses: and not set vp in any Temple, as it is plain by that is already spoken. To be short, it appeareth not by any of these allegations, that any man was then taught to kneel downe vnto these Crosses, or to say, Aue Crux spes vnica: Alhaile O Crosse our onely hope, or to yeld them any godly honour. Which thing M. Harding not hauing proued, notwithstanding his long discourse of words, hath proued nothing.

And, whereas he would force Prudentius to say, the Crosse was then carried about in Procession vpon a pole, as the maner is now in the Church of Rome, he openly misvseth that godly Father, and doth him wrong. For it is plaine, that Prudentius in that place speaketh not one word, neither of Church, nor of Priest, nor of Clerke, nor of any going in Procession. Onely he speaketh of the Souldiers marching in the field, and following the Crosse, as their Standard. So Eusebius writeth of the Emperour Constantinus: He commanded the Signe of the Crosse to be carried before all his armies. And the next verse that followeth in Prudentius is this: Hoc signo inuictus transmissis Alpibus victor, &c. Where he describeth the dangerous warre, that Constantinus had against Maxentius. Seeing therefore none of all these Crosses, that M. Harding hath here found out, either had any Image hanging on it, or was erected in any Church, or adored of the people, how can all these words stand him in stead, to serue his purpose?

M. Harding. The 4. Diuision.

Concerning the Images of Christ and of his Saints, that they haue been greatly esteemed and vsed in houses, Churches, and places of praier from the Apostles time forward, it is so euident, that it cannot bee denied. Athanasius writeth that Nicodeme, who came to Iesus by night, made an Image of Christ, with his owne hands, and that, when he lay in his death-bed, he deliuered it to Gamaliel, who was S. Pauls Schoolemaster. Gemaliel when he saw he should die, left it to Iames Iames left it to Simon and Zacheus. This Image came from hand to hand by succession, and continued a long time in Hierusalem. From Hierusalem it was carried into Syria, and at length it was brought to the Citie Berytus, not farre from Tyre and Sydon. Where how despightfully it was vsed of the Iews, and what wonders ensued thereupon, who list to know, he may read it largely declared in a little booke written by Athanasius of that matter.

Images from the Apostles time.

The Genealogy and peregrination of a Fable. It is a fabulous tale, neuer written by Athanasius.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The Reader, of himselfe, if he be not euer simple, may soone espie the simplicitie of this Fable. A Christian man remoueth his household, and hauing there an Image of Christ, equall vnto him in length, & breadth, and all proportion, by forgetfulnesse leaueth it there in a secret place behind him. A Iew after him inhabiteth the same house a long while, and seeth it not: An other strange Iew sitting there at dinner, immediately espieth it standing open against a wall. All this M. Hardings Athanasius. Thus it standeth open, and yet it is hidden: it is hidden, and yet it standeth open. Afterward the Priests, and Rulers, Rulers of the Iewes come together, and abuse it with all villany. They crowne it with a Thorn: make it drinke Esel, and Gal: and sticke it to the heart with a Speare. But issueth Blod in great quantity: The powers of Heauen are shaken: The Sun is darkned: The Mon loseth her light. And from thence, saith this yong Athanasius, we hap the Blod of Hailes, and all other like Blod throwout the world. To be short, the first word of the Boke is, Iraque. M. Harding himselfe is ashamed to report the tale. Yet must it beare the name of Athanasius: and being neuer so childish a fable, yet it must haue the forward to proue Adoration of Images. Only he telleth vs a long Genealogy of the names of Nicodemus, Gamaliel, Iames, Simon, and Zachæus, to astonne the Reader, and to make him thinke the better of it. Howbeit, all this notwithstanding, this Image was neither Churched, nor Adored, or Worshipped, either of Priest, or people.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuision.

Eusebius Cæsariensis in the seuenth booke of his Ecclesiasticall story, writeth of the ancient Image of Christ made in Brasse, and of the woman that was healed by our Sauior of her bloody flix in the City of Phœnica called Cæsarea Philippi, whereof that woman was a Citizen. Which Image, he saith, he saw, as likewise the Images of Peter and Paul, kept by some of old time. And there he confesseth, that the Images of Peter and Paul, and of our Sauior were in his time made, and painted in tables, and set foorth. After Eusebius death, Iulian the renegate tooke down this Image of Christ, and set vp his own in the same place: which with violent fire that fell from heauen, was cleft asunder in the brest, the head broken off with a peece of the necke, and stickt in the ground: The rest of it so remained long after, as a token of lightning, and Gods displeasure might be reserued. That Image of Christ, after that the Painims had haled, pulled, broken, and mangled it villanously, by the Christians was taken vp, set together, and placed in the Church, where it is yet reserued, saith Socrates of his time. Of the miraculous herbe that grew at the foot of this Image, which after that it had grown so high, that it touched the Images skirts, taken, and ministred, was a medicine and present remedy for all diseases, as Eusebius writeth: because it pertaineth not specially to the matter of Images, I rehearse nothing.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Eusebius himselfe sheweth, that the Phenicians being Heathens, and hearing, and seeing the strange Miracles, that had been wrought by Christ, and by his Apostles, made these Images in the honor of them, only of their Heathenish, and vaine Superstition. His words be these: Nec mirum est, veteres Ethnicos beneficio affectos à Seruatore nostro, ista fecisse. Nam & Apostolorum Pauli, & Petri, & ipsius Christi Imagines coloribus ductas & seruatas vidimus. Et credibile est, priscos illos homines, non dum relicta auita Superstitione, ad hunc modum consueuisse colere illos Ethnica consuetudine, tanquam Seruatores: It is no maruell, that the Heathens receiuing such benefits of our Sauior, did these things. For we haue seene the Images of Paul, of Peter, and of Christ, drawn in colours and preserued. And it may well be thought, that men in old times, being not yet remooued from the superstition of their Fathers, vsed after this sort to worship them by an Heathenish custome, as their Sauiours. By these words of Eusebius it is plaine, that the vse of Images came not from Christ, or from the Apostles, as M. Harding saith, but from the Superstitious custome of the Heathens. Neither doth it appeare, that those Images were set vp in any Church. As for the Image of Christ, it is plain, it stood in the street abroad, and an Herbe of strange operation grew vnderneath it. Euseb. lib. 7. cap. 17. ὡσαύτως τῶν παλαιῶν ἀπαρχὴν ἀπολαύοντας εἰκότως τοιαῦτα ἔθνικὴ συνήθεια παρ' ἑαυτοῖς ἔσχεν τιμᾶν εὐεργετῶν τὴν τρόπον. Eusebius lib. 7. ca. 7.

Iulianus that Renegate, that once had professed Christ, and afterwards wilfully renounced him, tooke down that Image of Christ, not to withdraw the people from Idolatry, but in malice, & despight of that new Religion: and erected vp his own Image, to the intent the people should worship it, purposely to deface Christ: euen as they doe now, that wilfully breake Gods Commandements, to vphold, and maintain their own Traditions. Of whom S. Basil writeth thus: Whosoforbiddeth vs to doe, that God commandeth: or commandeth vs to doe, that God forbiddeth, is accursed vnto all them, that loue the Lord. Matth. 15. Therefore God stroke Iulians Image from Heauen with lightning, and rent it in peeces, in token of his reuengeance. Basilius Moral. Cap. 14. Like as also, when another Iulian President of the East had spoiled the Churches of Antioch, and, in like despight of Christ, sate vpon the Holy Communion Cups, God smote him suddenly in the secret parts with such a disease, as neuer afterward could be cured. Sozomen. li. 5. cap. 7.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuision.

It is euident by Chrysostoms Masse, that there was some vse of Images in the Church of Constantinople in his time: for he speaketh of the Image of the Crucifix. Whosoeuer is desirous to see testimonies of the Fathers for proofe of Images, let him read the seuenth generall Councel holden in Nicea the City of Bithinia against Image breakers, and there he shall find no small number.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

In the Communion Boke, that beareth the name of Chrysostome, there is mention made of Nicolas Bishop of Rome, who, as I haue shewed before, liued well neere fiue Anno 855. hundred yeres after Chrysostome, and was in order the second Bishop there, after Dame Ioane the woman Pope. Such is the credit, and Antiquitie of M. Hardings witnesses. This second Councel of Nice was holden well neere eight hundred yeres after Christ. To open the whole folly, and fondnesse thereof, it would require a long treaty. Irene the Empresse a wicked woman, the Kings Daughter of Tartarie, an Heathen borne, caused that Councel to be summoned in despight of the Councel of Constantinople, that had decréed against Images. She toke her owne Sonne Constantinus, and pulled out his eies, only because he would not consent to the Idolatrous hauing of Images. The Bishops and Doctors in that Councel manifestly corrupted the Scriptures, and falsified the holy Fathers without shame. They said: Imago melior est, quàm Oratio: An Image is better than a Praier: And againe, Whosoeuer will not Adore the Godly Images, accursed be he.

I will not let heere to recite some, which, so far as I remember, be not found there, one only excepted, which is of S. Basil, euery one of right good and ancient authoritie.

Simeon Metaphrastes a Greeke writer describing the life of S. Luke the Euangelist saith, that he made the Images of Christ, and of his Mother Mary. S. Ambrose witnesseth, that in his time the Images of the Apostles were vsed in pictures. For where he declareth the maruellous appearing of the holy Martyrs Gerualius, and Protasius vnto him in a vision, he saith, that a third person appeared with them, that told him, where their bodies laie, which seemed like to S. Paul the Apostle, as he vnderstood his face by view of his Picture.

A vaine Fabular. He liued about the yeere 1550.

In vita Gerasij, & Protasij.

Gregory Nyssene S. Basils brother, writing the life of Theodorus the Martyr, bestoweth much eloquence in the praise of the Church, where his Holy Relikes were kept, commending the shape of liuing things wrought by the Carüer, the smoothnesse of Marble polished like Siluer by the Mason, the liuely resemblance of the Martyr himselfe, and of all his worthy acts, expressed and excellently set foorth to the eie in Imagery with the Image of Christ by the painter. In which Images he acknowledgeth the sights of the Martyr to be declared no lesse, than if they were described, and written in a booke.

Paulinus the Bishop of Nola in his booke, that he made in verses of the life of Felix the Martyr, praiseth the Church, which the Martyrs Body was laid in, for the garnishing of it with painted Images in both side, of both kinds, both men, and women, the one kind on the one side, and the other kind on the other sides. Where he speaketh expresly by name of the Images of scabbed Iob, and blind Tobie, of faire Iudith, and great Queene Hester: for so he nameth them.

In decimo Natali.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Coloss. 4. Lucas Medicus. S. Paul saith, Luke the Physitian, and not, Luke the Painter. He painted the Blessed Virgin with the colors of his speech, wherein he was counted more eloquent, than any of the rest: but otherwise to paint her, he had no leasure. Howbeit, Theodorus Anagnostes saith, Eudoxia sent the same Image from Hierusalem to the Empresse Pulcheria: vpon what credit, it is not knowen. But this Simeon Metaphrastes, whom M. Harding here painteth out in his colours, and calleth him a Greeke writer, was a poore Schoolmaster in Constantinople, and wrote Saints liues, which may well be called, the Legends of Lies, and liued two hundred yeres agoe, and not aboue. Of so right good ancient authoritie be M. Hardings witnesses.

Theodor. lib. 1.

Volaterranus.

Touching that is here alleged of S. Ambrose, of Gregorius Nyssenus, and of Paulinus; I grant, as there were Painters, and Grauers at that time, so were there also Pictures, and Images at the same time, and that not only in Priuate houses, and market places, but also in the Congregations, and open Churches. Eusebius saith, that the vse thereof was brought first into the Church by the Heathens: And S. Hierome saith, speaking of the Curiosity of the Heathens in this behalfe: Argento, & auro decorauit illud: vt fulgore vtriusque materiæ decipiat simplices. Qui quidem error ad nos vsque transiuit, vt Religionem in diuitijs arbitremur: He adorneth his Image with Siluer, and Gold, that by the shine and glittering of both these Mettals he may deceiue the simple. Which error doubtlesse is now cropen in among vs, (that be Christians) so that now we think, our Religion standeth in Riches. S. Hierome would not haue complained hereof, if it had not been vsed in some places in his time. Neither could Epiphanius the godly Bishop of Cyprus, haue rent in sunder the Picture of Christ painted in a cloth, or call it a Superstition vnfit for the Church of God: Nor could Serenus the worthy Bishop of Massilia, haue broken in peces Images wrought in timber and Stone, vnlesse such Pictures, and Images had then been vsed. We denie not, but Images were then in vse: but we deny, they were then worshipped of the people, or set vp to the intent they should be worshipped.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuision.

Athanasius hath one notable place for hauing the Image of our Sauiour Christ, which is not common, where he maketh Christ and the Church, to talke together as it were in a Dialogue, In Sermone de Sanctis, Patribus, & Prophetis. The Greeke may thus be translated. Age (inquit) dic mihi, cur oppugnaris? Oppugnor, (inquit Ecclesia) propter doctrinam Euangelij, quam diligenter & accuratè teneo, & propter verum, & firmum Pascha quod quod agito, & propter religioſam, & puram Imaginem tuam, quam mihi Apoſtoli reliquerunt, vt haberem depictam arram humanitatis tuæ, in qua Myſterium Redemptionis operatus es. Hic Chriſtus, Si propter hoc (inquit) te oppugnant, ne grauiter feras, neue animum deſpondeas, cum ſcias, ſi quis Paſcha neget, aut Imaginem, me eum negaturum coram patre meo, & electis Angelis. Rurſus verò, qui compatitur mecum propter Paſcha conglorificaturum. An non audiſti, quid Moyſi præceperim? Facies, inquam, mihi duos Cherubinos in Tabernaculo Teſtimonij, ſcilicet, ad præfigurandam meam Imaginem, &c.

The Image of Chriſt.

The Engliſh of this Latine, or rather of the Greek is this. Come on (quoth Chriſt to the Church) tell me wherefore art thou thus inuaded, and vexed? declare me the matter. Forſooth Lord (quoth the Church) I am inuaded, and vexed for the exact obſeruing of the Goſpell, and for the keeping of the Feaſt of the true, and firme Eaſter, and for thy reuerend and pure Image, which thy holy Apoſtles haue left to me by Tradition, to haue, and keep for a repreſentation of thine Incarnation.

Then (quoth our Lord) if this be the matter, for which thou art inuaded, and ſet againſt, be not diſmaied, be of good comfort in heart, and mind, being aſſured hereof, that who ſo denieth Eaſter, or my cleane Image, I ſhall deny him before my heauenly Father, and his choſen Angels. And he, that ſuffereth perſecution with me for keeping of Eaſter, the ſame ſhall alſo be glorified with me. Haſt not thou heard, what I commanded Moſes the Lawgiuer to doe? Make me (ſaid I) two Cherubins in the Tabernacle of the Teſtimony, to be a perfiguration, or foretokening of my Image, &c.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

I trow, this good Old Monument of Antiquity hath laine long in the duſt at Verona, with M. Hardings Amphilochius. The Church piteouſly bemoneth her ſelfe vnto Chriſt, that ſhe is ſore perſecuted, and vexed for his Image. Chriſt to comfort her withall, ſaith: Who ſo denieth mine Image, ſhall be denied before my Father. In the end he confirmeth the vſe of ſuch Images by the Example of the Cherubins.

Here M. Harding, to increaſe ſome credit to his new Doctor, ſhould haue ſhewed vs, when the Church was thus vexed, for hauing the Image of Chriſt, and who vexed her, and what kind of vexation it was, and how long it continued, and in what countrie, and when it ceaſed. The Church is built vpon a Mount: her perſecutions cannot be hidden. If ſhe euer were thus vexed, for hauing of Images, I meane before the time of Athanaſius, it muſt néeds appeare. If neuer, then was ſhe a very Wanton, thus to complaine without cauſe.

If theſe threats be true, that who ſo denieth the grauen, or painted Image of Chriſt, ſhall be denied before God the Father, then muſt Epiphanius the Biſhop of Cyprus, and Serenus the Biſhop of Maſſilia, both Godly, and zealous Biſhops, and a great number of other godly learned Fathers, that rent, and brake down, and defaced Chriſts Images, be vtterly denied before God. To be ſhort, to ſay, that God commanded Moſes to make the golden Cherubins, purpoſely to be Figures of theſe Images of Wood, or Stone, it is a verie Fabulous, and a Childiſh fantaſie, without any ground: howbeit, good enough to maintaine, and colour a Childiſh Doctrine.

Notwithſtanding, if there be any weight either in this hidden Athanaſius, or in his ſayings, then may we well coniecture, that he vſeth this Word Image in this place, not for any ſuch materiall forme painted, or grauen by mans hand, but for the whole Conuerſation of the Son of God in this mortall life, which is as much as, Verbum Caro factum eſt: The Word became Fleſh: and is expreſſed and ſet forth, as an Image before our eies in the whole Doctrine, and Policy of the Church, as the depeſt ground, and very foundation of the Chriſtian Faith. And thus S. Paul ſaith: Chriſtus eſt Imago patris: Chriſt is the Image of the Father. Otherwiſe God is Inuiſible. S. Iohn ſaith: No man euer ſaw God: But the Sonne, that is in the Fathers boſome, he hath reuealed the Fathers will. In his converſation in the Fleſh, as in an Image, we behold God the Father. So in the booke of the Apocalyps, Imago Beſtiæ, The Image of the Beaſt, is called, not any materiall Image painted, or grauen, but the Doctrine, the Seduction, the Errors, the Lies, the Blaſphemies, the Idolatry, and the whole Converſation of Antichriſt. So S. Baſil ſaith: Chriſt called his Fleſh, and Blood the whole Myſticall Doctrine of his Goſpell, which he publiſhed in his diſpenſation in the Fleſh. So S. Auguſtine ſeemeth to ſay: Eius Paſſionis Imaginem in Eccleſia Celebrandam dedit: He gaue the Image of his Paſſion to be frequented in the Church. And Pachymeres the Greek Paraphraſt expoundeth this word Imago thus: Αγάλματα δ φησὶ τὰς εἰκόνας τῶν μυστικῶν: He calleth Pictures, the Images, or inward and deepe conſiderations of our Myſteries. For this Image of Chriſt the Church of God was often perſecuted. This Image, as ſome of the Old Fathers ſay, was repreſented and figured by the Cherubins: and vndoubtedly, whoſoeuer denieth this Image, Chriſt ſhall deny him before God his Father. This expoſition is agreeable both to the tenor of Gods Word, and alſo to the ſtory of the time: and therefore we may ſafely iudge, if this were Athanaſius indeed, that this was his very meaning. Otherwiſe the common, and knowen Athanaſius, that is extant, and abroad, writeth thus: ἡ τῶν εἰδώλων ἔυρεσις ὐκ ἀπ' ἀγαθῆς, ἀλλὰ ἀπὸ κακίας γέγονε. Τὸ δ πᾶν ἀρχὴν ἔχον κακὴν, ἐν ὐδενί ποτε καλῷ κεῖται, ὅλον ὂν φαῦλον: The inuention of Images is of euill, and not of good good. And the thing, that hath an ill beginning, can neuer be iudged good in any thing, as being in all respects, and altogether ill. This is this Holie Fathers most clare iudgement, not cast vp in corners, and hidden in the dust, but open to the eies and sight of all the World.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuision.

Of all the Fathers none hath a plainer testimony, both for the vse, and also for the worshipping of Images, than S. Basil, whose authoritie for learning, wisedome, and holinesse of life, beside antiquitie, is so waighty in the iudgement of all men, that all our New Masters laid in ballance against him, shall be found lighter then any feather. Touching this matter, making a confession of his Faith in an Epistle, inueighing against Iulian the renegate, he saith thus: Euen as we haue receiued our Christian and pure Faith of God, as it were by right of heritage: right so I make my confession thereof to him, and therein I abide. I beleeue in one God Father almightie, God the Father, God the Sonne, God the Holy Ghost. One God (in substance) and these three (in persons) I adore and glorifie. I confesse also the Sonnes Incarnation. Then afterward S. Mary, who according to the Flesh brought him foorth, calling her Deiparam. I reuerence also the Holy Apostles, Prophets, and Martyrs, which make supplication to God for me: that by their mediation our most benigne God be mercifull vnto me, and grant me freely remission of my sinnes. Then this followeth: Quam ob causam, & historias imaginum illarum honoro, & psalam adoro: hoc enim nobis traditum à Sanctis Apostolis, non est prohibendum, sed in omnibus Ecclesijs nostris eorum Historias erigimus: For the which cause I doe both honor the stories of their Images, and openly Adore them. For this being deliuered vnto vs of the holy Apostles by tradition, is not to be forbidden. And therefore we set vp in all our Churches their stories. Loe M. Iewel, heere you see a sufficient testimony, that Images were set vp in the Churches long before the end of your six hundred yeeres, and that they were honored and worshipped, not only of the simple Christian people, but of Bishop Basil, who for his excellent learning, and wisedome was renowmed with the name of Great.

Citatur ab Adriano Papa in Epistola Synodica ad Constantinum & Irenem.

This Basil is not S. Basil.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Indéed, as S. Basil for his learning, wisedome, and constancy in Gods truth, was worthily called Great, so was his authoritie alwaies accounted very waighty. If M. Harding had in him some part of that poise, he would not so lightly be blowen away from Christ, and his Gospell, with so weake blasts of light fantasie. But this Basil, is not Basil: nor are these words, S. Basils words. Only Pope Adrian in his Synodical Epistle, among other vaine authorities, allegeth these words in the name of Basil. But in S. Basils Bookes, which are extant, and abroad, they are not found.

Concil. Mogunt. De Imaginib.

And, whereas this Basil is made to protest, that he will honor, and Adore Images, and that openly to the example of others, M. Harding knoweth, this Doctrine is contrarie, not only to common sense, but also to his owne Councels. For in the Councel of Mens it is thus written: Imagines non ad id proponuntur, vt Adoremus, aut Colamus eas: Images are not set vp to the intent we should honor, or worship them. Neither doth Gregory call them Gods to be honored, but only bookes to be read: neither bookes of profound knowledge, to instruct S. Basil, or other like learned Bishops: but, Libros Laicerum: Poore simple bookes to teach the ignorant.

And, forasmuch as M. Harding would haue vs, to make so déepe account of the authoritie of this Councel: for the better satisfaction of the Reader in this behalfe, I thinke it necessary briefly, and by the way to touch some part of those waighty reasons, whereby the Bishops, and Fathers there after long deliberation were forced to erect, and stablish the vse, and Adoration of Images, and to condemn the gainsaiers, as Blasphemers, and Heretikes. Their speciall grounds are these:

Genes. 2. Moses saith, God tooke claie, and made man after his owne Image and likenesse:

Esai. 19. Esai saith, There shall be a Signe, and a Testimony to the Lord in the Land of Ægypt:

Psalm. 95. Dauid saith, Confession, and beauty is before him: Lord, I haue loued the beauty of thy House:

Psalm. 25. O Lord, my face hath sought for thee: O Lord, I will seeke after thy countenance: O Lord, the light

Psalm. 26. of thy countenance is sealed ouer vs.

Adriani Epist. Synodica Actione. 2. Of euery of these seuerall clauses, Pope Adrian concludeth thus, Ergo, we must erect Images in the Church.

Another reasoneth thus: Sicut audiuimus, ita vidimus: As we haue heard, so haue we seen:

Psalm 47. Ergo, there must be Images, to looke vpon. Another saith: Mirabilis Deus in Sanctis suis: God is marueilous in his Saints: Ergo, the Church must be decks with Pictures. Another saith: No man lighteth a candle, and putteth it vnder a bushel: Ergo, Images must be set vpon the Altar. Of Theodorus. Concil. Nicen. 2. Actio. 1. all these, and other like authorities Isidorus concludeth, Ergo, A Church is nothing worth, ναὸς λέγω οὐδεὶς ἐν ᾧ ἔστιν εἰκὼν. vnlesse it be full freight with Images.

Psalm. 98. To prooue the Adoration, and Worshipping of Images, they haue these authorities.

Psalm. 47. Dauid saith, Adore ye the footstoole of his feet: Adore ye in his holy hill: O Lord, All the rich of Psalm. 44. the people shall pray before thy countenance.

Concil Nicen. 2. Actio. 1. Ergo, say they, Images must be worshipped. Now, to reckon vp the vanities, and Idolatrous Fables of that Councell, it would be tedious: The Diuell promiseth by his honestie, that he will no longer tempt, and trouble a holy man, if he will leaue worshipping of the Image of our Lady. Another tendeth to an Image, to fetch home water to his cellerne. Another goeth on Pilgrimage, and biddeth our Lady in his absence to set to her owne Candle. She did all things accordingly, as she was commanded. Until his returne the Candle went neuer out. Thus much only for a taste.

These prawes be great and weighty, and in comparison hereof, all our Doctor Patters, as M. Harding saith, shall be found lighter than a feather.

And forasmuch as these men so often charge our Doctrine with nouelty, thereby to bring it out of credit, as if it had neuer bene knowen before these latter daies, it shall therefore be good to fetch some part of the most antient Fathers iudgement, and the old practise of the Church concerning the same. Origen saith: Nostra lex diuina prohibet omnem rei, imaginem nullam effigiem fieri. We make no Images of God, as hauing him visible and without Body. Againe he saith: Celsus obijcit nobis, quòd non habemus Aras et Imagines. Celsus the Heathen chargeth vs, that we haue neither Altars, nor Images. Clemens Alexandrinus, that liued at the same time, writeth thus: Nobis penitùs vetitum est artem fallacem exercere. Non facies enim, inquit Propheta, cujusvis rei Similitudinem: We are vtterly forbidden to vse this deceitfull arte (of Painting or Grauing). For the Prophet saith: Thou shalt not make the likenesse of any thing. Arnobius that liued immediately after Clemens and Origen, writeth thus vnto the Heathens: Accusamus nos, quòd non habeamus Imagines & Altaria: Ye accuse vs, for that we haue neither Images, nor Altars. Lactantius, sometime Scholar to Arnobius, saith: Non est dubium, quin Religio nulla sit, vbi Simulachrum est: Out of doubt, where soeuer is any Image, there is no Religion. S. Augustine much commendeth this saying of Varro: Qui prima Simulachra Deorum populis posuerunt, illi Ciuitatibus suis metum demserunt, errorem verò addiderunt: They that first erected Images of the Gods vnto the people, tooke away feare and Religion, and increased error vnto their Cities. And addeth thereto this reason: Quia Dij facilè possunt in Simulachrum mortalitate contemni: Because the Gods in the folly of Images may soone be despised. The Counsell holden at Eliberis decreeth thus: Placuit Picturas in Ecclesijs esse non debere, ne, quod colitur aut adoratur, in parietibus depingatur: We thinke it good, there be no Pictures in the Churches, lest the thing that is honoured, or adored be painted on the Walles. The like might be said of the Counsell holden at Constantinople. The godly Emperours, Valens and Theodosius, gaue out this generall Proclamation touching all Christendome: Cum sit nobis cura diligens, in rebus omnibus Superni Numinis Religionem tueri, Signum Saluatoris nostri Christi nemini concedimus, coloribus, lapide, aliaue materia fingere, sculpere, aut pingere. Sed quocunque reperitur loco, tolli iubemus, grauissima pœna eos mulctando, qui contrarium Decretis nostris, & Imperio quicquam tentauerit: Forasmuch, as we haue a diligent care in all things to maintaine the Religion of the most high God, therefore we suffer no man to fashion, to grane, or to paint the Image of our Sauiour Christ, either in colours, or in stone, or in any other kind of Mettall or matter. But where soeuer any such Image shall be found, we commaund it to be taken downe, assuring our Subiects, that we will most straitly punish all such, as shall presume to attempt any thing contrary to our Decree and Commandement. The same Decree was afterward put in execution, and practised by Philippicus, Leo, Constantinus the Father, Constantinus the Sonne, Nicephorus, Stauratius, Michael, Leo, Armenius, and other Christian and godly Emperours. These authorities, as they be Old and Ancient, so be they also plaine and euident, and well acquainted and knowen vnto the World: and therefore will soone ouerpoise all these Fables of the Image of Nicodemus, of Symeon Metaphrastes, of this yong S. Basil, of new Athanasius, and of other like blind authorities, that haue bin lately sought vp out of corners, and brought to light. Verily Amphilochius, vnder whose cloke M. Harding hath so often hid himselfe, may in no wise be refused. His words be plaine: Non est nobis curæ, Sanctorum vultus corporales in tabulis coloribus effigiare: quoniam his opus non habemus: We haue no care, to draw out the bodily countenances of Saints in colours and tables: for we haue no need of them.

Three causes why Images haue beene vsed in the Church.
Ad Serenum Episcopum Massiens. lib. 9. Epist. 9.

Now, that there hath been enough alleged for the antiquitie, originall, and approbation of Images, it remaineth, it be declared, for what causes they haue been vsed in the Church. We find that the vse of Images hath been brought into the Church for three causes. The first is the benefit of knowledge. For the simple, and vnlearned people, which be vtterly ignorant of Letters, in Pictures doe, as it were, reade, and see no lesse, then others doe in books, the mysteries of Christian Religion, the acts, and worthy deeds of Christ, and of his Saints. What writing performeth to them that reade, the same doth a picture to the simple beholding it, saith S. Gregory. For in the same the ignorant see, what they ought to follow: in the same they reade, which can no Letters. Therefore Imagery serueth specially the rude Nations in stead of writing, saith he.

To this S. Basil agreeth in his Homily vpon the fortie Martyrs. Both the writers of stories (saith hee) and also Painters doe shew, and set foorth noble deeds of armes and victories, the one garnishing the matter with eloquence, the other drawing it liuely in Tables, and both haue stirred many to valiant corage. For what things the vtterance of the story expresseth through hearing, the same doth the still picture set foorth through imitation. In the like respect in old time the worke of excellent Poets was called a speaking picture: and the worke of Painters, a still Poetry. And thus the vse and profit of writing, and of Pictures is one. For things that be read, when as they come to our eares, then wee conueigh them ouer to the minde: and the things that we behold in pictures with our eies, the same also doe we imbrace in our minde. And so by these two, Reading and Painting, we atchieue one like benefit of knowledge. Pictura loquens. Poema tacens.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The first and chiefe cause and end of Images is, as it is heere pretended, that the people by the sight thereof may attaine knowledge. And therefore S. Gregory calleth them the Lay mens Bookes: And the Fathers in a late Councell say: We may learne more in a short while by an Image, than by long studie, and trauell in the Scriptures. And for the same cause S. Basil compareth an Image painted with a Story written. But the comparison, that M. Harding vseth betweene Imagerie and Poetrie, seemeth nearest to expresse the trueth. For Painters and Poets, for liberty of lying, haue of long time beene coupled both together. One writeth of them in this sort: Pictoribus, atque Poetis Quidlibet audendi semper fuit æqua potestas: Painters and Poets had euer like charter to aduenture all things. And Atheneus, blazing abroad the libertie of Poets, writeth of them thus: Οἷς μόνοις ἔξεστι λέγειν ἅπαντα, καὶ ποιεῖν ἃ βούλονται: Vnto whom onely it is lawfull to say, and doe, what they list. And therefore Cicero seemeth to say: Nihil negotij est hæc Poëtarum, & Pictorum portenta conuincere: It is no great masterie, to reprooue these monstrous Miracles of Painters, and Poets. And therefore, like as Plato commanded, all Poets for their lying to be banished out of his Common Wealth: So likewise Almightie God, for like libertie, banished all Painters out of Israel. For these causes M. Hardings comparison of Painters, and Poets may well be allowed.

Gregor. lib. 9. Epist. 9. Concil. Senonense. Horatius. Athenæus. Cicero Tuscul. Quæst. 1. Plato. Origen. contra Celsum, li. 4.

Howbeit, this seemeth to be no very handsome way, to teach the people. Of their Priests, they haue made Images: and of their Images, they haue made Priests. For their Priests, for the more part, haue Eies, and see not: haue Eares, and heare not: Hearts and vnderstand not: Mouthes, and speake not: in all respects euen like vnto their Images. Their Images haue no eies, and yet are made to see: haue no eares, and yet are made to heare: haue no Mouthes, & yet are set vp to speake: and so in these respects do the Duties, that perteine to Priests. Thus they barre the People from the hearing of Gods holy Word: and bid them goe, and looke vpon their Images: to talke with their Images: to heare their Images: and to learne of their Images.

And, although perhaps the people may happily learne somwhat by these meanes, yet is not this the ordinary way, whereby God hath appointed the people to atteine knowledge. S. Paul saith: Fides ex auditu: Faith commeth (not by seeing or gazing, but) by hearing. There were many simple, rude, & vnlearned lay men among the Iewes: Yet God neuer set vp any such Bookes for them to read: but contrariwise euermore forbad them, and cried against them, and would not suffer them. If this be so speedy & so ready a way to teach the People, how happeth it, that where as is greatest store of such Schoolmasters, there the people is euermore most ignorant, most Superstitious, and most subiect to Idolatry? But, to conclude, The Prophets, Habacuch, and Hieremie say: Conflatile est demonstratio mendacij: Lignum est Doctrina Vanitatis: A molten Idoll is a lesson of Lies: And (M. Hardings) wooden Image is a doctrine of Vanitie.

Rom. 10. Habacuch 2. Hierem. 10.

M. Harding. The 11. Diuision.

The second cause of the vse of Images, is the stirring of our mindes to all godlinesse. For where as the affect and desire of man is heauy, and dull in Diuine and Spirituall things, because the Bodie that is corruptible weigheth downe the minde: when it is set foorth before our eies by Images, what Christ hath done for vs, and what the Saints haue done for Christ: then it is quickned and moued to the like will of doing, and suffering, and to all endeuour of holy and vertuous life. As when we heare apt and fit words vttered in a Sermon, or an Oration: so when we beholde lookes, and gestures liuely expressed in Images, we are moued to pittie, to weeping, to ioy, and to other affects. Wherein verily it hath alwaies beene thought, that Painters haue had no lesse grace, than either Oratours, or Poets. Sapient. 9.

Who listeth to see examples heereof, he may peruse the second Nicene Councell, where he shall finde among other most notable things concerning this point, one of S. Euphemia the Martyr, an other of Abraham sacrificing his sonne Isaac, worthie of euerlasting memorie, that of Asterius the holy Bishop, this of Gregorie Nyssene, very elegantly described. Virgil maketh Æneas to weepe, to hope for better fortune, to gather courage of minde, to take good aduice, and order for redresse, and helpe of his great calamities, by occasion of beholding a Painters worke at Carthago, wherein the battle of Troy was expressed. Which that wise Poet would not haue done, were it not that Pictures haue great force to moue mens hearts. Aphth. 4.

Ouid likewise in the Epistle of Laodamia to Protesilaus her husband being foorth at warres, maketh her so to write of his Image, which she had caused to be made of waxe for her comfort in his absence, as it may well appeare, that Images haue a maruellous power to stirre vehement affects, and to represent things things absent, as though in maner they were present, in the mindes of the beholders. Among all other examples for this purpose, that seemeth to me most notable, which Appianus writeth of C. Iulius Cæsar, li. 2. De bellis ciuilibus. After that Cæsar had been murdered of the Senators in the Councell House, one of his friends, to shew the crueltie of the fact to the people, laid Cæsars bedde in the open market place, and tooke foorth of it his Image made of waxe, which represented three and twentie wounds after a beastly sort stabd into his face, and all the rest of his body, yet gaping, and as it were fresh bleeding. With which shew he stirred the people to more wrath and rage, then he could haue done with any oration or gesture: which was declared foorthwith. For assoone as the people saw it, not able to beare their griefe, nor stay their furie any longer, they wrought great and strange cruelties against them, that were found to haue committed that murder.

The third cause, why Images haue beene set vp in Churches, is the keeping of things in memory necessary to our saluation. For when we cast our eies on them, our memorie, which otherwise is fraile and weake, gathereth together, and imbraceth the benefits, and merits of our Sauiour Christ, and the vertuous example of Saints, which we ought to follow: that if we be such, as they were, we may by Gods grace through Christ attaine the blisse they be in, and with them enioy life euerlasting. And verily they that haue Images in regard, and reuerence, must be so minded, as they behold, not onely the things by them represented, but also performe the same in deed with most diligent imitation.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Touching the Second commoditie of Images, which is the moouing, & stirring of the minde, M. Harding is faine to pray aid of the Heathenish Poets, Virgil, and Ouid: not the meetest authorities for a Doctour of Diuinitie: and for more hereof to bring in their idle fables, with an old prophane storie of Appian. Therefore he seemeth now to wade very deepe, and not farre from the lies. I marueil, he had forgotten the pong man in Eunuchus, who, for that he saw Iuppiter painted in a Table, was straight way thereby inuited, and emboldened to his youthfull purpose. I grant, Images doe oftentimes vehemently moue the minde diuersly to sundry affections. And I reckon him a blind man, that will hold the contrary. Salust saith, Quintus Maximus, & Publius Scipio, whensoeuer they beheld their Ancestors Images, were by and by inflamed with nobilitie of courage, to aduance themselues to like aduentures. But euery thing that may delight, or moue the minde, is not therefore meete for the Church of God. Gods house is a house of prayer, and not of gazing. And, to answer one prophane story by another, the old Lacedemonians would not suffer any Image, or Picture to stand in their Councel house: lest the Senatours mindes by meane thereof, should be drawen from that, they had in hand, to other fantasies. Certainly the Wise man saith: Aspectus Imaginis dat insipienti concupiscentiam: The sight of an Image in the vnwise stirreth vp concupiscence.

In Eunucho.

Plutarchus.

The Third commoditie, touching Remembrance, is like the first: And therefore is already answered.

Sapientiæ 15.

M. Harding. The 12. Diuision.

How Images may be worshipped without offence.

And now we are come to declare, how Images may be worshipped, and honored without any offence. That Godly worship which consisteth in Spirit, and Truth inwardly, and is declared by signes outwardly in recognizing the Supreme dominion, which properly of the Diuines is called Latria, is deferred only to the Blessed Trinity. As for the Holy Images, to them we doe not attribute that worship at all, but an inferior reuerence or Adoration: for so it is named: * which is nothing else, but a recognizing of some vertue or excellency protested by outward signe, as reuerend kissing, bowing down, kneeling, and such the like honor. Which kind of Adoration or worship, we find in the Scriptures often times giuen to creatures. The whole act whereof is notwithstanding referred, not to the Images * principally, but to the things by them represented, as being the true and proper obiects of such worship. For although the honor of an Image passeth ouer to the originall, or first samplar, which the learned call Archetypum, as S. Basil teacheth: Yet that high worship called Latria, belongeth only to the blessed Trinity, and not to the reuerend Images, lest we should seem to be worshippers of creatures, and of matters, as of Gold, Siluer, Stones, Wood, and of such other the like things. For we adore not Images as God, (a) saith Athanasius, neither in them doe we put hope of our Saluation, ne to them doe we giue Godly seruice or worship, for so did the Gentiles: but by such adoration, or reuerence, we declare only a certaine affection, and loue, which we beare toward the originals. And therefore if it happen their Figure and shape to be defaced and vndone, we let not to burne the stocks, as very wood, and being of other stuffe, to conuert the same to any vse, is may best serue for.

Lib. Amphilochium. 18.

Ingustinib. Manichæus Principem.

Holy Images by M. Hardings confession, are worshipped without Spirit, and Truth.

* A vaine distinction. For the Hebrew word soundeth, Non incurnabis teipsum, Thou shalt not bow down, &c.

* The Act or Adoration is referred to the Image: although not principally.

(a) This Athanasius is forged, and not the true Athanasius.

S. Gregory praising much one Secundinus, for that he desired the Image of our Sauiour to be sent vnto him, to the intent by hauing his Image before his eies, he might the more be stirred to loue him in his heart: After a few words vttered in this sense, he saith further. We know thou demandest not the Image of our Sauiour to the intent to worship it, as God: But for the remembrance of the Sonne of God, that thou mightest be enkindled with the loue of him, whose Image thou desirest to behold. And verily we fall not down before it, as before God. But we adore and worship him, whom through occasion of the Image, we remember either borne, or done to death for vs, or sitting in his throne. And whiles we reduce the Son of God to our memorie by the picture, no lesse, than by writing, it bringeth either gladnesse to our mind by reason of his Resurrection, or comfort by reason of his Passion. Thus far S. Gregory.

Li. 7. Epist 53.

And if men pray kneeling before any Image, or triumphant signe of the Holy Crosse, they worship not the Wood or Stone Figured, but they honor the highest God. And whom they cannot behold with senses, they reuerence and worship his Image representing him, according to ancient institution, not resting or staying themselues in the Image, but transferring the adoration and worship to him, that is represented.

Much

Much might be alleged out of the Fathers concerning the worshipping of Images: but this may suffice. And of all this one sense redoundeth, that what Reuerence, Honor, or Worship soeuer is applied to Images, it is but for Remembrance, Loue and honor of the primitiues or Originals. As when we kisse the Gospell Booke, by that token we honor not the Parchment, Paper, and Inke, wherein it is written, but the Gospell it selfe. And as Iacob, when he kissed his Son Iosephs coat embrued with Kids blood, holding and embracing it in his armes, and making heauy moane ouer it, the affection of his loue and sorrow rested not in the Coat, but was directed to Ioseph himselfe, whose infortunate Death (as he thought) that bloody coat represented: So Christen men shewing tokens of reuerence, loue and honor before the Image of Christ, of an Apostle, or Martyr with their inward recognition and deuotion of their hearts, they stay not their thoughts in the very Images, but deter the whole to Christ, to the Apostle, and to the Martyr, giuing to ech one in due proportion, that which is to be giuen, putting difference betweene the Almighty Creator, and the Creatures: finally, rendring all Honor and Glory to God alone, who is marueilous in his Saints. Such worshipping of Images is neither to be accounted for wicked, nor to be despised (203) for the which we haue the testimonies of the Ancient Fathers, both Greeks and Latines: vnto which further authoritie is added by certaine * generall Councels, that haue condemned the breakers and impugners of the same. Gene. 37.

The 203. Vntruth. For no Ancient Father either Greek, or Latine, euer taught vs to kisse an Image, or to kneele, or to bow downe vnto it.

* Without the compasse of six hundred yeeres.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

M. Harding hath made a very large entry to so small a house. The whole question standeth only in this one point of Adoration, which is here very lightly past ouer in few words. All the rest is vsed only as a floorish, to begin the game. Neither doth he any wise directly answer, that was demanded, that is, whether Images in old times were set vp, to be worshipped: but only sheweth his own fantasie, in what sort they may be worshipped. Wherein notwithstanding, he saieth not to agree thorowly, neither with the rest of his company, nor with himselfe. His finall Resolution is this, The Adoration, that is made in this sort, is not Principally directed to the Image. The sense of which Words is this, The corruptible creature of Wood, or Stone may be worshipped, although not Principally, or chiefly as God himselfe, which is thereby represented. And thus he taketh an indifferent way betweene both: as if he would say, An Image may be Worshipped: and yet it may not be worshipped. Againe, It may not be worshipped: and yet it may be worshipped. And for Confirmation hereof, he alleged certaine Authorities forged vnder the names of S. Basil and Athanasius: Notwithstanding he know right well, that neither of these two Fathers euer either vttered such words, or had cause to moue such matter. Only they are alleged in that childish Councell of Nice the Second, among a great number of other like lies, and Fables. God Christian Reader, if thou be learned, consider, and weigh that Councell. And thou shalt say, I haue reported much lesse, than thou hast found. And the same Athanasius, as he is here brought in to proue the Adoration of Images, so elsewhere in the same Councell he is forced to say, that Christ dwelleth in Reliques, and Dead mens Bones.

Concil. Nicen. 2. Actio. 3.

As for Gregory, notwithstanding he speake expressly of Images, yet he speaketh not one Word of the Adoration of Images. In Conclusion, M. Harding being not able, to alege, no not so much as an Ancient Father for the worshipping of Images, these manifest forgeries only excepted, yet he blusheth not to say in a bravery, that he might allege a great number moe. By such faces, and lying of empty store, the simple people is oft deceiued. But what nedeth M. Harding, either to hold by these counterfet, and forged deeds: or else by these fond deuices of Principall, and not Principall Adoration, thus to simper, and to reason the matter betwixt both? Certainly the Bishops in his Second Councell of Nice, thinke themselues able to proue, both by Scripture, and also by Ancient Authoritie, that Images ought vndoubtedly to be honored. For, as it said before, they allege these Scriptures, Worship the footstoole of his feet: Adore him in his holy hill: All the rich of the people shall worship thy face. Hereof they conclude thus, Ergo, Images must be worshipped. And therefore Theodosius the Bishop of Mira in the same Councell alloweth it well, and specially, for that his Archdeacon was taught the same by reuelation in a Dreame. Therefore one of them saith: Venerandas Imagines adoro, & id perpetuo docebo: I Adore the reuerend Images, and will maintaine the same, while I liue. Another saith: Historias Imaginum honoro, & palam Adoro: I worship the stories of Images, and Adore them openly. Another saith: Imagines perfectè adoro: I giue perfit Adoration vnto Images. Another saith: Eos, qui diuersum statuunt, auersor, & anathematizo: All such, as hold the contrary, I vtterly forsake, and hold them accursed. Briefly, the whole Councell there determined thus: Eos, qui circa Adorationem Imaginum laborant, aut dubitant, nostra Synodus anathematizat: All such, as stagger, or stand in doubt, of the Adoration of Images, are accursed by this Councell.

Ex libro Caroli Magni. Psalm. 98. Psalm. 47. Psalm. 44.

Concil. Nicen. 2. Actio. 2.

They say, We know, that Images are Creatures Corruptible: and therefore we neither vse them, nor take them as Gods. And thus they thinke themselues very wise men, that can know, that Birds, and Children be able to know. Euen so the Heathens were wont to say say of their Idols. Cicero confesseth, Iouem lapidem, non esse Deum: That Iupiter is a stone, and no God. Lactantius hereof writeth thus: Non ipsa, inquit, Adoramus, sed eos ad quorum Imagines facta, & quorum nominibus Consecrata sunt: The Infidell will say, euen as M. Harding here saith, We worship not our Images, but our Gods, vnto whose likenesse the Images are made, and in whose names they are Consecrate. The like hereof we may find in S. Augustine, in Athanasius, in Sozomenus, and in others: And this excuse was then, as now, thought sufficient.

Latria. Doulia.

Augustin. in Psalm. 113. Athanasi. contra Gentes. Sozomen. li. 7. ca. 15. de Sophista Olympio.

But S. Augustine saith, Very children know, that these Images haue eies, and see not: mouths, and speake not. Wherefore then doth the holy Ghost so often teach vs, and admonish vs the same thing in the Scriptures, as if we knew it not? He answereth: Quia species membrorum in eminenti collocata suggestu, cùm honorari, atque adorari cœperit à multitudine, parit in vnoquoque sordidissimum erroris affectum: vt, quoniam in illo figmento non inuenit vitalem motum, credat numen occultum: & effigiem viuenti Corpori similem, seductus forma, & commotus authoritate, quasi sapientium institutorum, obsequentium turbarum, sine viuo aliquo habitatore esse non putet: For that, the very shape, and proportion of a man set aloft, after it once beginneth to be Adored, and honored of the multitude, it breedeth in euery man that most vile affection of error, that although he find there no naturall mouing, or token of life, yet he thinketh some God, or godly thing is within it: And so being deceiued, partly by the forme, that he seeth, and partly by the Authority, and credit of the Authors, and makers of it, whom they take to be wise, and partly also by the example, and deuotion of the people, whom they see obedient to the same, he thinketh, that the Image, being so like to a liuing body, cannot be without some liuing thing vnderneath it. Againe he saith: Cùm in his sedibus locantur, honorabili sublimitate, vt à precantibus, atque immolantibus attendantur, ipsa similitudine animatorum membrorum, atque sensuum, quamuis sensu, & anima careant, afficiunt infirmos animos, vt viuere, atque spirare videantur, After that Images be once set vp in these places in honorable height, that they that pray, or Sacrifice, may looke vpon them, although they haue neither sense, nor soule, yet they so strike and amaze the weake minds of the people, euen with the very proportion of liuing members, and sences, that they seem to haue life, and to draw breath. Againe he saith: Quis adorat, vel orat intuens Simulachrum, qui non sic afficitur, vt ab eo se exaudiri putet, ac ab eo sibi præstari, quod desiderat, speret? Who euer Adoreth, or maketh his praier beholding an Image, but he is so mooued in his mind, that he thinketh the Image heareth him, and hopeth it will performe his praier?

Augustinus in Psal. 13. 113.

All these things the Heathens knew, and therefore were well shielded with M. Hardings excuse, and yet notwithstanding were Idolaters: and, as the Prophet Hieremy reporteth, They said to a Block, Pater meus es tu: Thou art my Father: and to a Stone, Tu me genuisti, Thou art my Maker, thou hast begotten me. And therefore were they the children of Gods anger: for that they turned the truth of God into a lie, and honored the Creature aboue the Creator, which is God blessed for euer.

Roman. 1.

And, the more to encourage the simple in these errors, they haue deuised many fained Miracles. The dead Images haue bin forced to sweat, to weep, to laugh, and to shift themselues from place, to place. And as among the Panims, and Infidels, the Image of Iupiter was able to say aloud, Let all Christians be banished the Country: And as the Image of Iuno, being demanded, whether she would goe to Rome or no, was able to giue a curteous beck, and gently to say, Volo, I am content: Euen so among Christians, Images haue bin able to speak, whatsoeuer their keper, or Sertine listed. The Image of our Lady was able to attend her own Candle: and other Images able to heale all diseases. Briefly, Nicolaus Lyra saith: In Ecclesia Dei populus sæpè decipitur à Sacerdotibus fictis Miraculis lucri causa: In the Church of God the Priests oftentimes deceiue the people with fained Miracles for lucres sake. Thus the world was borne in hand, that Images were not only bare Images, but had also some secret diuine power hidden within them, and therefore were worthy to be honored.

Eusebius li. 8. De Theotecno.

Nicolaus Lyra in 14. ca. Daniel.

Here is imagined a great difference in Adoration betwen Latria, and Doulia. Latria is the honor, that belongeth only vnto God (as M. Harding saith) in recognising of the supreme Dominion. But of Doulia, which is the other part, and may be Englished a Seruice, and, as they say, is due vnto a Creature, he thought it best, to say nothing. Thus, by M. Hardings distinction, we must Honor God, and serue Images. And therefore this reuerence so giuen, may not be called Idololatria, but Idolodulia: That is to say, Not the Honoring, but only the seruing, or obeying of Images. In like sort Lyra saith: One knee we may bowe to any noble personage: but vpon both we may kneele only vnto God. And by such a simple distinction it is thought, the whole matter is well salued. But, what if the simple people vnderstand no Greek, and cannot so learnedly discerne Latria from Doulia, but take the one Adoration, for the other? Verily, as it now fareth in the Church of Rome, they vse them doth vniuersally without difference. Therefore this distinction, thus applied, seemeth much like to that Physitians wife sometime said, Pepper is cold in working, and hot in operation. For M. Hardings distinction standeth not in difference of matter, but only in words. Cicero saith: Bonum esse negas: præpositum dicis. An minuis hoc pacto auaritiam? Thou wilt not haue worldly wealth called Bonum, but only Præpositum. But doest thou hereby any thing abate auarice? Euen so may we say to M. Harding: ye will not haue your Adoration of Images called Latria, but only Doulia. But Sir, does you by this distinction, any thing abate Idolatria?

Cicero De Finib. 4.

Certainly, Constantius the Bishop of Constantia, in the Second Nicene Councell saith: Ego Imaginibus cultum honoris exhibeo eundem, qui debetur Viuificæ Trinitati: Et, si quis nolit idem facere, eum anathematizo, vt Marcionem, & Manichæum: I for my part yeeld vnto Images the same Adoration of honor, that is due to the Holy Trinity: And, if any man refuse to doe the same, I accurse him, as I doe the Heretikes Marcion and Manichee. And in the same Councel it is determined thus: Non sunt Duæ Adorationes, sed vna Adoratio, Imaginis, & Primi exemplaris, cuius est Imago: There are not two sorts of Adoration (the one called Latria, the other Doulia, as M. Harding diuideth them) but one onely Adoration, both of the Image, and also of the Samplar, whereof the Image is.

In libro Caroli Magni.

Concil. Nicen. 2. Actio. 4.

Likewise Thomas Aquine, after long debating of the matter, thus at last ruleth ouer the case: The Image, and the thing thereby represented, must be worshipped both with one kind of Adoration: And, for example he saith: The Crosse, or Image of Christ must be honored with Latria, (that is, with godly honor) because Christ himselfe is so honored: And the Image of our Lady must be honored with Doulia, because that honor, (as he saith) is due vnto our Lady. This determination of Thomas is reproued by Holcot: And his reason is this: Latria, or Godly honor, is due only vnto God: But the Image of God is not God: Therefore Latria, or Godly honor is not due vnto an Image. Otherwise (saith he) the Creator, and the Creature should both be Adored with one honor. And notwithstanding Henricus de Gandauo, Petrus de Aquila, Iohannes de Guiuerra, Durandus, and other Schoole Doctors agree with Holcot, and their iudgement seem very agreeable vnto Reason; Yet he that wrote Fortalitium Fidei, saith, The Common opinion, and practise of the Church holdeth the contrary. And one Iacobus Payua, a great stickler of that side, doubteth not to write thus: Non tamen inficiamur, hac nos Latriæ Adoratione Christi præclarissimam Crucem colere, & venerari: Yet we deny not, but we doe worship, and Adore the most noble Crosse of Christ, euen with this Godly honor, that we call Latria. And, whereas M. Harding referreth the whole Adoration vnto the thing represented by the Image, One Iacobus Nanclantus, the Bishop of Clugium in Italy telleth him, that the Image, and the thing represented by the Image, must, both be worshipped with one kind of Adoration. His words be these: Ergo non solùm fatendum est, Fideles in Ecclesia Adorare coram Imagine, vt nonnulli ad cautelam fortè loquuntur, sed & Adorare Imaginem, sine quo volueris scrupulo, quin & eo illam venerari cultu, quo & prototypon eius. Propter quod, si illud habet Adorari Latria, & illa habet Adorari Latria: Therefore we must confesse, that the Faithfull people in the Church doth not only worship before the Image, as some men vse to speake for more assurance, but that the worship they Image it selfe, and that without any maner scruple of conscience, whatsoeuer. Yea, and further they worship the Image with the same honor, wherewith they worship the thing represented. As if the thing represented by the Image be worshipped with godly honor, then must the Image it selfe likewise be worshipped with godly honor.

Author Fortalitij: Licèt hoc rationabiliter dictum videatur, tamen Communis opinio tenet oppositum.

Iacobus Payua li. 9.

Iacobus Nanclantus in epist. ad Roman. cap. 1.

If M. Harding will say, these errors be old, and long sithence controlled by his Church of Rome, it may please him to vnderstand, that Nanclantus was printed in Venice, Anno 1557. and that Payua was printed in Coleine, Anno 1564. both well allowed without controlement.

The case standing thus, what then auaileth M. Hardings distinction of Latria, and Doulia? I feare me, we may say of him, and his fellowes, as S. Augustine sometime said of the Heathens: Nemo mihi dicat, Non est Numen: non est Deus. Vtinam ipsi sic norint, quomodo nouimus nos. Sed quid habeant, pro qua re habeant, quid ibi faciant, Ara testatur: Let no man say vnto me, it is no Diuine Power: it is no God. I would to God, they so knew it, as we know it. But what they haue, and in what sort they haue it, and what they doe about it, the Altar beareth witnesse.

Augustin. De Verbis Domi. Secundum Matthæ. Sermo. 6.

August. ad Quoduultdeum.

Marcellina the Heretike is much reproued by S. Augustine, for that, among other Images, she offered vp incense to the Image of Christ. And Origen saith: Fieri non potest, vt quis & Deum, & Simulachrum colat: It is not possible, that any man may worship God, and an Image both together. And Polidorus Virgilius a man of late yeares, vttering the great abuse, that he saw in the Church in his time, writeth thus: Nunc de Simulacrorum cultu agamus: quem non modo nostræ Religionis expertes, sed, teste Hieronymo, omnes ferè Veteres Sancti Patres damnabant, ob metum Idololatriæ: Now let vs intreat of the worshipping ping of Images: which not only the Heathens, that were void of our Religion, but also, as S. Hierom saith, all the Old Godly Fathers condemned, for feare of Idolatry. And of the abuse, and disorder of the Church herein in his time, he writeth thus: Eo insaniæ deuentum est, vt hæc pars Pietatis parùm differat ab Impietate: The world is come to such outrage, and meere madnesse herein, that this part of Holinesse differeth now very little from open Wickednesse. To this passe the Church of God was brought by M. Hardings distinction, of Latria, and Doulia.

Latria, Doulia. Ibidem.

The best remedy in this behalfe, and most agreeable with Gods Word, is vtterly to abolish the cause of the ill. So the godly King Ezechias toke down, and brake in peces the Brasen Serpent: Notwithstanding Moses himselfe, by Gods speciall Commandement had erected it: notwithstanding it were an expresse Figure of Christ hanging vpon the Crosse: notwithstanding it had continued so many yeres: notwithstanding God by it had wrought so many Miracles. So the godly Bishop Epiphanius rent in sunder the Image of Christ Painted in a Cloth, and said, It was against Gods Commandement, a thing Superstitious, and vnmeet for the Church, and people of God: notwithstanding it were the Image of Christ. So the godly Emperor Theodosius made his Proclamation ouer all his Dominions in this sort: Signum Seruatoris nostri, quocunque loco reperitur, tolli iubemus: We straitly command, that the Image of our Sauior be taken down, in what place soeuer it shall be found: notwithstanding it were the Image of our Sauior. So it is Decreed in the late Councel of Mens, that, when Images happen to be abused by the people, they be either notably altered, or vtterly abolished. Neither doth God throughout all his holy Scriptures any where condemne Imagebreakers: but expresly, and euery where he condemneth Image worshippers, and Image makers. God saith, They are snares to catch the Ignorant: He knoweth the inclination of the heart of man. And therefore he saith, Accursed be he, that leadeth the blind out of his way: And, Accursed be he, that laieth a stumbling blocke to ouerthrow the blind.

OF READING THE SCRIPTVRES.

THE FIFTEENTH ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that the Laie People was then forbidden to Reade the Word of God in their own tongue.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

That the Lay people was then forbidden to read the Word of God in their own tongue, I find it not. (204) Neither doe I find, that the laie people was then, or at any other time commanded to read the word of God in their own tongue, being vulgar, and barbarous. By vulgar, and barbarous tongues, I vnderstand, as before, all other, beside the three learned, and principall tongues, Hebrew, Greek, and Latine. Which, as they were once natiue, and vulgar to those three peoples, so now to none be they natiue, and vulgar, but common to be obtained by learning, for meditation of the Scriptures, and other knowledge.

The 204. Vntruth. For M. Harding knoweth, The people was commanded to read the Scriptures, &c.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding fully dischargeth this whole matter in one word. I find it not, saith he, that the Lay people was then forbidden to read the word of God in their own tongue. Howbeit, some others of his side though somtimes, they had surely found it: and were able to allege these words: Nolite sanctum dare Canibus: Giue not holy things to Dogs: And thereof necessarily to conclude, that the Laie People, whom in respect of themselues they called Dogs, might not once touch the holy Scriptures. But M. Harding saith plainlie, He findeth it not. This short answer, touching the demand, is sufficient: If he knew, what were sufficient. All the rest is made vp only in words, as shall appeare.

He addeth further: Neither doe I find, that the Lay People was then, or at any other time, commanded to read the word of God in their own tongue, being Vulgar, and Barbarous. First, this stopple, of Commanding, is whole impertinent vnto the question. Secondly, all other tongues, tongues, three only excepted, are without iust cause, Condemned for Barbarous. Thirdly, this exception, of the peoples reading in their Vulgar tongue, is only a bace shift and a quarrell without sauour. For in what tongue can the Vulgar people read, and vnderstand any thing, sauing only in their owne Common, and Vulgar tongue? But as the Emperour Tiberius vsed sometimes to send certain of his Nobles into his out Prouinces, and far Countries, to rule there, as Viceroies, and Lieutenants vnder him, and yet, that notwithstanding, would not suffer them to goe thither, or in any wise to depart from Rome: euen in like sort M. Harding, notwithstanding he would seem to licence the Laie People to read Gods Word, yet he limiteth them either to the Greeke, or to the Latine, or to the Hebrew tongue, wherein he is well assured, they cannot read it.

Cornelius Tacitus, in Tiberio.

But, that the people was in Old times willed to read the Scriptures, and that in such tongues, as they were able to vnderstand, it is euident, and appeareth many waies. And of infinite testimonies, and good proofes, only to touch a few, God saith thus vnto his people: Hearken O Israel: Let the Words, that I speake to thee this day, rest in thy heart: thou shalt shew them vnto thy Children: thou shalt thinke of them sitting in thy house, and walking in thy iourney: and when thou goest to rest, and when thou risest: thou shalt bind them, as a marke, vnto thy hand: thou shalt haue them as a token before thine eies: thou shalt write them on the postes of thy doores, and at the entry of thy gates.

Deuteron. 6.

As it is noted by a Writer of late yeres, it was decréd in the First Councell of Nice, that no Christian man should be without the Bible in his house. S. Augustine saith vnto the people: Nec solùm sufficiat, quòd in Ecclesia Diuinas Lectiones auditis: Sed etiam in domibus vestris, aut ipsi legite, aut alios legentes requirite: Thinke it not sufficient, that ye heare the Scriptures in the Church: but also in your houses at home, either read your selues, or get some other to read vnto you. S. Chrysostome saith vnto his people: Admoneo, & rogo, vt libros comparetis: I warne you, and beseech you, to get bookes. Againe he saith: Audite Sæculares omnes: Comparate vobis Biblia, animæ Pharmaca. Si nihil aliud vultis, vel Nouum Testamentum acquirite, Apostolum, Euangelia, Acta, continuos, & sedulos Doctores: Heare me ye men of the World: get ye the Bible, that most holesome remedy for the Soule. If ye will nothing else, yet at the left get the New Testament, S. Pauls Epistles, and the Acts, that may be your continuall, and earnest Teachers. Origen saith: Vtinam omnes faceremus illud, quod Scriptum est, Scrutamini Scripturas: I would to God, we would all doe, as it is written, Search the Scriptures. S. Hierome speaking of the Company of women, that was at Bethleem with Paula, saith thus: Non licebat cuiquam Sororum, ignorare Psalmos, & non de Scripturis Sanctis quotidiè aliquid discere: It was not lawfull for any one of all the Sisters, to be ignorant of the Psalmes: nor to passe ouer any day, without learning some part of the Scriptures. In these Examples, notwithstanding some cauill perhaps might be made to the contrary, yet very reason will lead M. Harding to thinke that these Fathers meant the people should read the Scriptures in their owne knowen, and Vulgar tongues. S. Basil saith: Quantum ferre potest humana natura, possumus esse similes Deo: Similitudo autem illa sine cognitione nulla est: Cognitio autem constat ex Doctrina: Initium autem Doctrinæ, Sermo est: Sermonis autem partes, Syllabæ, & voces: We may become like vnto God, as far foorth, as the weake nature of man can beare. But this likenesse cannot be without knowledge: Neither this knowledge without Doctrine. And the beginning of Doctrine is speech: and the parts of speech be Words, and Syllables. The Resolution hereof is this: The people without vnderstanding the particular Words, and Syllables, cannot know the Speech: not knowing the Speech, they cannot attain this Doctrine: and without this Doctrine they cannot be like vnto God.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuision.

They that treat of this Article, concerning the hauing of the Scriptures in a Vulgar tongue for the Laitie to read, be of three sundry opinions. Some iudge it to be vtterly vnlawfull, that the Bible be translated into any tongue of the Common people. Some thinke it good it be translated, so that respect be had of time, and of place, and of persons. Some be of the opinion, that the Holy Scriptures ought to be had in the mother and native tongue of euery Nation, without any regard of time, place, or persons. *The first opinion is holden of few, and Commonly misliked. * The third is maintained by all the sects of our time, the Swenkfeldians excepted, who would the Scriptures to be in no regard. The second is allowed best of those that seeme to be of most wisdome, and godlinesse, and to haue most care for the health of the Church, * who haue not seuered themselues from the Faith which hath continued from the beginning. Here that I say nothing of the first opinion, as they of the third reproue the moderation of the second, so they of the second cannot allow the generalitie of the third.

Three sundry opinions concerning the Scriptures to be had in a Vulgar tongue.

* This is the practise of the Church of Rome.
* This was the iudgement of Christ, the Apostles, and all the Old Fathers.
* M. Harding is none of these.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here are laid out three sundrie opinions: The first vtterly barreth all, and euery of the Laie people, from euery parcell of the Scriptures. The Third giueth all men leaue to read read all parts thereof, without exception. Betweene these two extremes, the Second opinion is a meane.

The first hereof, saith M. Harding, is commonly misliked. Yet neuertheleſſe it appeareth by him in the fourteenth Diuiſion of this Article, it is the very Practiſe, and opinion of the Church of Rome: which Church, as he ſaith, hath already condemned all the New Translations, and not allowed the Old, neither in the Gothian tongue translated by Vlphilas, nor in the Sclauon tongue translated by S Hierome: nor hath deuiſed any other Translation of her own. Hereby it is plaine, that the Opinion, and Practiſe of the Church of Rome, is commonly misliked, and holden of few.

The Third Opinion, that all men indifferently may reade the Scriptures without reſtraint, as M. Harding ſaith, is holden onely by certaine Sects, and is to generall. Notwithſtanding this generalitie ſeemed good to Chriſt, his Apoſtles, and to all the Old Doctors of the Church, as it ſhall appeare. Wherefore it followeth, that Chriſt, his Apoſtles, and all the Old Doctors, by M. Hardings iudgement, were Sectaries, and Heretikes.

The Second Opinion is a meane betweene both, and is holden by M. Harding, and by certaine others, that haue not at any time altered their Faith: Notwithſtanding men ſay, M. Harding hath altered more then once, and therefore may hardly be allowed, to paſſe in this number. Yet is this opinion of all others accounted the beſt. Howbeit, whereas all men are indifferently, and equally inheritors to Gods Word: to binde the ſame only vnto a few, and that with ſuch reſtraint of times, and places, it muſt needs be thought ſome great partialitie. S. Paul ſaith: Quæcunque ſcripta ſunt, ad noſtram Doctrinam ſcripta ſunt: vt per patientiam, & conſolationem Scripturarum ſpem habeamus: All, that is written in the Scriptures, is written for our inſtruction: that by patience, and comfort of the Scriptures we may haue hope. Roman. 15. S. Baſil ſaith: The Scripture of God is like an Apothecaries ſhop, full of Medicines of ſundry ſorts, that euery man may there chuſe a conuenient remedy for his diſeaſe. Baſilius in Pſalm. 1. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Deus in Scripturis, quaſi amicus familiaris, ſine fuco loquitur ad Cor doctorum, & indoctorum: Almighty God in the Scriptures ſpeaketh, as a familiar friend without diſſimulation, vnto the hearts, both of the learned, and alſo of the vnlearned. Auguſt. Epiſt. 3. ad Voluſianum. Wherefore the word of God being ſo Vniuerſall, meet for all diſeaſes, for all wits, and for all capacities: for M. Harding to improper the ſame only vnto a few, it is both far greater diſhonor vnto God, and alſo far greater iniurie vnto Gods faithfull people, then, if he would in like maner impropet, and incloſe the Sun beames, to comfort the rich, and not the poore: to ſhine vpon ſome, and not vpon all. This meane way, is no way: It is waighed out, not by the Scriptures, or holy Fathers, but only by policie, and worldly reaſon.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuiſion.

Fiue Conſiderations why the Scriptures are not to beſet foorth for all ſorts of people to reade them without limitation.

That the Scriptures be not to be ſet foorth in the Vulgar tongue to be read of all ſorts of people, euery part of them, without any limitation of time, place, and perſons, they ſeeme to be mooued with theſe conſiderations. Firſt, that it is not neceſſary: Next, that it is not conuenient: Thirdly, that it is not profitable: Fourthly, that it is dangerous, and hurtfull: And laſtly, although it were accorded, the common people to haue liberty, to read the Bible in their owne tongue, yet that the Tranſlations of late yeeres made by thoſe, that haue diuided themſelues from the Catholike Church, be not to be allowed, as worthily ſuſpected, nor to be found, and aſſured.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

These deepe conſiderations were neuer deuiſed, neither by Moſes, nor by Chriſt, nor by the Apoſtles, nor by any the Ancient Fathers: but are brought in onely now at laſt by them, that of long time haue deceiued the world by Ignorance, and yet labor by the ſame to deceiue it ſtill. Chriſt ſaith: Qui malè agit, odit lucem: He that doth ill, flieth the triall of the light. Iohan. 3. And M. Hardings owne Amphilochius ſaith: Naturalis prouidentia eſt malè errantium, auferre de medio Teſtimonia Veritatis: It is the naturall proniſion of them, that be wilfully deceiued, to conuey out of ſight all prooſes, and Teſtimonies of the Truth. Amphilochius in vita Vincentij. So the Philiſtines the better to keepe the Iewes thrall, and in ſubiection, vtterly bereaued them of all maner weapon, and artillery, and left them naked: and, no doubts, bare them then in hand, as M. Harding doth now the people of God, that it was neither neceſſarie, nor conuenient, nor profitable for them to haue armor. 1. Regum 13. Verily Chryſoſtome ſaith: It is more neceſſary, more conuenient, and more profitable for the Lay People to reade Gods Word, than for Monkes, or Prieſts, or any others. Chryſoſtom. in Matth. hom. 2. Thus he writeth: Hoc eſt, quod omnia quaſi vna quadam peſte corrumpit, quòd Lectionem Diuinarum Scripturarum ad ſolos putatis Monachos pertinere: cum multò vobis magis, quàm illis, ſit neceſſaria. Itaque multò eſt grauius, atque deterius, rem ſuperfluam eſſe putare Legem Dei, quàm illam omninò non legere. Hæc enim verba ſunt, quæ de Diabolica prorſus meditatione promuntur: This is it, that, as it were with a peſtilence, infecteth all things, that yee thinke, The reading of the Scriptures pertaineth onely vnto Monkes: whereas it is much more neceſſary for you, than for them. It is more wickedneſſe, to thinke, Gods

Tradition.

De Diabolica prorſus meditatione promuntur.

Law is ſuperfluous, than if ye ſhould neuer read it. For theſe be the words, that no doubts come from the ſtudie of the Diuell.

Thus much therefore we learne here by Chryſoſtome, that theſe M. Hardings profound conſiderations come from the ſtudie and cloſet of the Diuell.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuiſion.

Firſt, that the Common people of all ſorts, and degrees, ought of neceſſitie to reade all the holy Scriptures in their owne tongue, they ſay, they could neuer find it hitherto in the ſame Scriptures. Irenæus writeth, that the Apoſtles preached to the Aliens, and Barbarous people the Faith of Chriſt, euen to thoſe, that were Aliens, and Barbarous in language, and ſaith, that hauing heard the Goſpell preached, they beleeued in Chriſt: and keeping the order of Tradition, which the Apoſtles deliuered vnto them, had their ſaluation, and Faith written in their heart without print, pen, or inke, and vtterly without letters. And further he ſheweth, that if the Apoſtles had left to vs no Scriptures at all, yet we ſhould be ſaued by the tradition, which they left to them, whom they committed their Churches vnto, as many Nations of Aliens be ſaued by the ſame. Libro 3. aduerſus hæreſes, c. 4.

Hilarius likewiſe declaring, that the myſterie of Gods will, and the expectation of the bleſſed Kingdome, is moſt and chiefly preached in the three tongues, in which Pilate wrote on the Croſſe, our Lord Ieſus Chriſt to be King of the Iewes: confeſſeth notwithſtanding, that many Barbarous Nations haue attained, and gotten the true knowledge of God by the preaching of the Apoſtles, and the Faith of the Churches remaining amongſt them to that day. Whereby hee doth vs to vnderſtand, that the vnlearned Barbarous people had their Faith without letters, or writing, whereof they had no skill, by Tradition, and preaching, as well as the other Nations, who were holpen by the benefit of the learned tongues, Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine. Prolegomenon planationum Pſalm.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Touching this firſt conſideration, M. Harding imagineth ſhadowes of himſelfe, and fighteth ſtoutly againſt the ſame. Therefore he may ſone attaine the Victory. For we ſay not, that the common people of all ſorts, and degrées, ought of neceſſitie to reade all the holy Scriptures. This is only M. Hardings fantaſie: We ſay it not: We know, ſome are blinde, and many vnlearned, and cannot reade. But thus we ſay, that in the Primitiue Church, whoſoeuer would, and could reade, might lawfully reade without controlement. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, as it is before alleged: Aut ipſi legite, aut alios legentes requirite: Either reade your ſelues, or get ſome other to reade vnto you. Auguſtin. in capite Ieiunij.

I grant, at the firſt preaching, and publiſhing of the Goſpell, certaine Barbarous Nations, that receiued the Faith of Chriſt, had neither Bookes, nor Letters. Yet were they not therefore ignorant, or left at large, to beléeue, they knew not what. They had then certaine Officers in the Church, which were called Catechiſtæ: whoſe dutie was, continually, and at all times, to teach the Principles of the Faith, not by Bookes, but by Mouth. Of theſe mention is made in the Acts of the Apoſtles, in the Councell of Nice, and elſewhere. This office bare Origen that Ancient learned Father. This doctrine Dionyſius calleth θεοπαράδοτα λόγια, Oracles, or Inſtructions giuen from God: And ſaith, They paſt from one to another, not by Writing, but by Mouth, ἐκ τοῦς εἰς νοῦν, from mind, to mind. Neither did theſe Traditions containe any ſecret, or priuie Inſtructions, or Inuentions of Men, as it is imagined by ſome, but the very ſelfeſame Doctrine, that was contained written in the Scriptures of God. And in this ſort the Goſpell it ſelfe, and the whole Religion of Chriſt, was called a Tradition. So Tertullian calleth the Articles of the Faith, An Old Tradition. So the Faith of the Holy Trinitie in the Councell of Conſtantinople is called a Tradition: And the Faith of two ſundry Natures in Chriſt in the ſame Councell is called, Apoſtolorum viua Traditio: The liuely tradition of the Apoſtles. So it is written in Socrates: Credimus in vnum Deum Patrem, ſecundùm Euangelicam, & Apoſtolicam Traditionem: Wee beleeue in one God the Father, according to the Tradition of the Goſpell, and of the Apoſtles. So S. Baſil calleth it, a Tradition, To beleeue in the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt. Therefore S. Paul ſaith: Tenete Traditiones, quas accepiſtis, ſiue per Sermonem, ſiue per Epiſtolam: Keepe the Traditions, that ye haue receiued, either by Mouth, or elſe by Letter. By theſe words the Doctrine of the Apoſtles is called a Tradition. And for this cauſe S. Cyprian ſaith: Vnde eſt iſta Traditio? An de Dominica, & Euangelica Veritate deſcendens: an de Apoſtolorum Mandatis, atque Literis veniens? From whence is this Tradition? whether commeth it from our Lord, and from his Goſpell: or elſe from the Epiſtles, and Commandements of the Apoſtles?

Thus were the Barbarous Nations inſtructed by Tradition, and by Mouth, and were made perfect in euery point, and parcell of the Faith, and, as Irenæus ſaith, Had their Saluation by the Holy Ghoſt written in their Hearts: and were as much bounden vnto the ſame, as vnto any writings, and letters of the Apoſtles. Of ſuch liuely, and clére Doctrine S. Paul ſaith, Chriſt was ſet out, and Crucified before the eies of the Galathians. And thereof hée ſaith to the Philippians: My prayer is, that your Charitie may yet more and more abound in all knowledge, and in all vnderſtanding. And thus, notwithſtanding they were Barbarous, yet yet were they able to render an account of all the Religion, and Faith in Chriſt. For thus Irenæus writeth of them: Si quis illis annunciaret ea, quæ ab iſtis Hæreticis inuenta ſunt, ſtatim clauderent aures: If any man would ſhew thoſe Barbarous Nations, what things theſe Heretikes haue inuented, they would ſtop their eares, and not abide it. Likewiſe if a man would ſhew them of the Prophanation of Chriſts Holy Myſteries, of Tranſubſtantiation, of Reall, and Fleſhly Preſence, and of other like horrible diſorders, that now are holden, and defended in the Church of Rome, as Irenæus ſaith, Fugerent longo longius, neaudite quidem ſuſtinentes blaſphemum colloquium: They would flee away, as farre as they were able, and would not abide the hearing of ſuch blaſphemous talke. Thus were theſe Nations ſufficiently inſtructed, notwithſtanding they were Barbarous, and wanted Bookes.

But they of M. Hardings ſide, neither will teach the people, as their duty is, nor ſuffer them to reade the Holy Scriptures, and to teach themſelues. Chriſt may iuſtly ſay to them, as he did ſometimes vnto others the like: Wo be vnto you, ye Scribes, and Phariſies: Ye ſhut vp the Kingdome of heauen before men: and neither doe ye enter your ſelues, nor ſuffer others, that would enter. Of ſuch Irenæus ſpeaketh in the next Chapter following: Hoc non eſt ſanantium, nec vimficantium, ſed magis grauantium, & augentium ignorantiam. Et multò verior hic Lex inuenitur, Maledictum dicens omnem, qui in errorem mittit Cæcum in via: This is not the part of them, that would heale, or giue life: but rather of them, that augment the burthen, and increaſe ignorance. And heerein is the Law well verified, Accurſed is he, that leadeth the blinde out of his way.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuiſion.

That it is not conuenient nor ſeemely, all ſorts of perſons without exception to bee admitted to the reading of the holy Scriptures, I need to ſay nothing: Euery reaſonable man may eaſily vnderſtand the cauſes by himſelfe. This is certaine, diuers Chapters and ſtories of the Old Teſtament, containe ſuch matter, as occaſion of euill thoughts is like to be giuen, if Women, Maidens, and Yong men be permitted to reade them. Gregorie Nazianzene, whom the Greekes called the Diuine, ſaith, mooued with great conſiderations, that it is not the part of all perſons to reaſon of God, and of Godly things, neither behoouefull the ſame be done in all times and places, nor that all things touching God bee medled withall. Which aduertiſement taketh no place, where all be admitted to the curious reading of the Scriptures in their owne Vulgar Tongue.

The word of God offereth occaſion of ill thoughts. Nazianzene ſpeaketh of Contention, and Reaſoning, and not of Reading.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

M. Harding ſaith, It is not conuenient, nor ſeemely, that all the people ſhould read the Holy Scriptures. As if he would ſay in plainer wiſe: It is not meet, nor ſeemely, that God ſhould ſpeake vnto euery of the poore ſimple people without exception. Howbeit, God himſelfe ſaith not ſo, but rather the contrary. S. Auguſtine ſaith, as it is alleged before: God ſpeaketh as a familiar friend vnto the heart both of the learned, and alſo of the vnlearned. For hee hath no acceptation, or choice of perſons. If it be not ſeemely for the people of God to read, and to know Gods holy Will, for whom then is it ſeemely? The danger of fantaſies, and ill thoughts, that may thereby be moued, is but a fantaſie. The Prophet Dauid ſaith: Eloquia Domini eloquia caſta: The words of God be holy and chaſte words. Againe he ſaith: Whereby ſhall a yong man amend his life? He anſwereth, not by fleeing, but, by keeping thy holy Words.

Pſalm. 119.

And may we thinke, that M. Harding meaneth any good Faith, that to the intent, as he ſaith, to pull yong men from euill thoughts, thus withdraweth them from the reading of Gods word, which euery where reproueth Sin: and neuertheleſſe giueth them leaue to read Ouid, Terence, Propertius, and ſuch others, which, for the moſt part, are nothing elſe but examples, and Schooles of Sin? Verily, if Gods holy Word be a prouocation of ill thoughts, which blaſphemous Words, I marueil M. Harding can vtter without horror, the World thinketh, that many Unmaried Prieſts in the Church of Rome, are as much inclined to the ſame, as any Woman, Maiden, or Yong man. For it is not a Gown or a Cap, that mortifieth the affections of the minde.

Nazianzene ſpeaketh not of reading the Scriptures, but of contentious diſputing, and reaſoning of God, or godly things: which, as S. Paul ſaith, often times worketh the ſubuerſion of the hearers. And in this ſenſe S. Cyprian ſeemeth to ſay: De Deo etiam vera dicere, periculoſum eſt: Of God it is dangerous to ſpeake, yea although ye ſpeake the truth. Hereof M. Harding maketh vp a very ſlender reaſon: It is not ſeemely for euery man to contend, and diſpute of God: Ergo, It is not ſeemely for the Lay People to reade the Scriptures. I grant, the Rabbines did not amiſſe, to reſtraine the people from reading certaine Chapters of the Old Teſtament, vntill they were growen in yeares, and iudgement. For the Scriptures of God are not all of one ſort. Some parts bee eaſie: ſome parts be hard: Some meet for beginners: ſome meet for them, that know more: but all meet, and made for the people of God. Yet were it great follie, and want of diſcretion, to begin firſt with the hardeſt. So Iuſtinian the Emperor appointeth an order for the reading of the Lawes: What Bookes, and Titles he would haue read the firſt peare, what the Second, and ſo forth. For otherwiſe, who ſo would wade without order, ſhould loſe his time.

But whereas M. Harding ſaith, It is not ſeemely, nor conuenient, the Scriptures ſhould bee read of all perſons without exception: It had beene good ſkill, and ſome credit vnto his cauſe, if he could haue told vs plainly, out of all the whole people, what perſons he thinketh meet, to be excepted. If he ſay, Old Men; that were much vnſeemely. If he ſay, Children; S. Paul

2. Timoth. 3. ſaith, Timothie was brought vp from his Childhood, in the Scriptures: and neuer thought it vnconuenient. If he ſay, The Vnlearned; Chryſoſtome anſwereth: Nihil opus eſt Syllogiſmis: Ruſtici, Aniculæque intelligunt: To vnderſtand Gods Word, we need no Syllogiſmes, or knowledge of Logicke: Husbandmen, and Old women doe vnderſtand it. If he ſay, Women; This ſame was it, that Iulianus the wicked Emperor charged the Chriſtians withall, for that their women were ſo ſkilfull in the Scriptures. But Nazianzenus anſwereth for his ſiſter Gorgonia, that ſhe was ſkilfull both in the Old Teſtament, and alſo in the New. If he ſay, Maidens; S. Hierome anſwereth, That all the Maidens about Lady Paula, were forced daily to learne the Scriptures. If he ſay, yong Men, or Boies; Cyrillus anſwereth: In Sacris Literis educati, fiunt poſtea religioſiſſimi, quamuis non æquè eloquentes: Being brought vp in the Scriptures, afterward they become moſt godly men, albeit perhaps not ſo eloquent. If he ſay, the Poore; S. Paul anſwereth: Non multi genere nobiles: At Corinth among them, that firſt receiued the Goſpell, There were not many of great birth, or much wealth. If he ſay, Heretikes; S. Auguſtine being inclined to the Hereſie of the Manichees, by reading the Scriptures was conuerted. If he ſay, Heathens; S. Luke will ſay, that Meroe Candaces Chamberlaine, being an Heathen, read the Scriptures without controlement.

Now if neither Old Men, nor Children, nor the Learned, nor the Vnlearned, nor Women, nor Maidens, nor Yong Men, nor Boies, nor the Poore, nor the Rich, nor Heretikes, nor Heathens, be excepted from the reading of Gods Word, what other ſort of men then is there, that M. Harding would haue excepted? If it be conuenient for euerie of theſe to reade the Scriptures, for whom then is it not conuenient?

M. Harding. The 6. Diuiſion.

And the Scripture it ſelfe (ſay they) ſheweth plainly, that of conuenience the Scriptures ought not bee made common to all perſons For Chriſt affirmeth the ſame with his owne words, where he ſaith to his Apoſtles: Vnto you it is giuen to know the ſecrets of the kingdome of God: but to * others in Parables, that when they ſee, they ſhould not ſee: and when they heare, they ſhould not vnderſtand. (205) They to whom it is giuen to know theſe ſecrets, be none other than the Apoſtles, and their Succeſſors, or Diſciples. They to whom this is not giuen, but muſt learne Parables, be they, for whom it were better to be ignorant of the Myſteries, than to know them, leſt they abuſe them, and bee the more greeuouſly condemned, if they ſet little by them, which we ſee commonly done among the common people. Lucæ 8.

* Theſe others were the Scribes and Phariſies, and others of that generation.

The 205. Vntruth. For Chriſt ſaith, Theſe Myſteries be hidden from the wiſe, and reuealed to the litle ones. Matth. 11.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

It were much better for M. Harding not to know the Word of God, than thus wilfully to abuſe it. They, vnto whom Chriſt would not open the Secrets of the kingdome of Heauen, were not the Common ſort of the Lay People, as M. Harding ſuppoſeth, but the Biſhops, the Prieſts, the Doctors, the Scribes, and the Phariſies, and other like reprobates, whom God had giuen ouer in the hardneſſe of their hearts, as it is plaine by the Words, that Chriſt allegeth out of the Prophet Eſay: O Lord, harden the heart of this people: ſtop their eares: blinde their eies: leſt happily they be conuerted, and ſo be ſaued. And thus that Ancient Father Irenæus immediately after the Apoſtles time expounded it: and applieth thereto theſe words of S. Paul: In quibus Deus huius ſæculi excæcauit corda infidelium, vt non fulgeat illis illuminatio Euangelij Gloriæ Dei: In whom God hath blinded the hearts of them, that be vnfaithfull, that the brightneſſe of the Goſpell of the Glorie of God may not ſhine vnto them: And likewiſe theſe words: Tradidit illos Deus in reprobum ſenſum: God hath deliuered them ouer into a reprobate vnderſtanding. And in the end hee compareth them with Pharao, and Antichriſt. So likewiſe Dionyſius the Carthuſian, whoſe authoritie, I trow, M. Harding will not deny, ſaith of them: Iuſto Dei Iudicio negata eſt illis prædicatio Euangelij, tanquam indignis intelligentia Spirituali: The preaching of the Goſpell was denied vnto them by the iuſt iudgement of God, as vnto men vnworthy of any Spirituall vnderſtanding.

Thus M. Harding, the better to win his purpoſe, is contented to ſay, that all the people of God, himſelfe only with a few others excepted, are blinde, reprobate, accurſed of God, forſaken, and left in hardneſſe of their hearts, vnworthie of Spirituall vnderſtanding, giuen ouer into a wicked minde, like to Pharao, like to Antichriſt. So much is the ſimple Lay People beholden to him. But Gerſon, a Doctor of M. Hardings owne Company, ſaith: Licet Iudicium, & Concluſiones Fidei authoritatiuè ſpectent ad Prælatos, & Doctores

By theſe it is euident, that God hath not excluded the Lay People, that beléeueth in him, from the vnderſtanding of his Holy Secrets. Hugo Cardinalis expoundeth theſe words in this wiſe: Vobis datum eſt: vobis qui libenter auditis, & Fidem habetis: Vnto you it is giuen: vnto you, that are glad to learne, and haue Faith. And the very ordinary Gloſſe ſaith thus: Vobis qui Fideles eſtis: Sed Phariſæis incredulis Sancta non ſunt danda: Vnto you, that are Faithfull, it is giuen: But vnto the vnfaithfull Phariſies holy things may not be giuen. And, where M. Harding ſaith, The knowledge of the Myſteries pertaineth only vnto the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and to their Succeſſors; pleaſeth it thee, good Reader, to vnderſtand, that by M. Hardings owne Decree, the Succeſſors of the Apoſtles be neither Prieſts, nor Deacons, nor Monkes, nor Friers, nor Cardinals, but only Biſhops. For ſo it is limited by Anacletus: Epiſcopi Apoſtolorum Domini, Presbyteri verò Septuaginta-duorum Diſcipulorum locum tenent: Biſhops are in the place of the Apoſtles: and Prieſts are in the place of the threeſcore and twelue Diſciples. Thus M. Harding hath taken great paines, ſo ſhut out both himſelfe, and the greateſt part of his Clergie, and all the whole people from the Myſteries of the kingdome of Heauen.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuiſion.

It is reported by ſundry (206) ancient writers of great Authority, that amonge the people of Iſrael, the ſeuenty Elders only could read, and vnderſtand the Myſteries of the holy Books, that we call the Bible. For, whereas the letters of the Hebrew tongue haue no Vocals, they only had the skill to read the Scripture by the Conſonants: And thereby the Vulgar people were kept from reading of it (207) by ſpecial prouidence of God, as it is thought, that Pretious ſtones ſhould not be caſt before * Swine, that is to ſay, ſuch as be not called thereto, as being for their vnreuerent curioſitie, and impure life, vnworthie.

Notwithſtanding M. Hardings allegation were true, yet S. Hilaries iudgement, touching the Hebrew tongue, were not great. For writing vpon the ſame Pſalme, he much miſtaketh this Hebrew word, Bereſchith, as a man vnſkilfull in that language: and S. Hierome reprooueth him likewiſe for miſtaking this Hebrew word, Oſanna. But M. Harding, as otherwiſe his wont is, much miſreporteth his Author. For S. Hilarie ſaith no ſuch thing. Thus only he ſaith, that theſe threeſcore and twelue Doctors, or Elders, were men of great knowledge, and therefore alloweth well of their iudgement.

Hieronym. ad Damaſum.

Touching the firſt inuention, and vſe of the Pricks, it is thought, the Rabbines themſelues doe not agree. Some ſay, they were deliuered to Moſes in the Mount: Some ſay, they were inuented by Eſdras: Some, by the Tabarites, which were the Canoniſts of the Iewes, or Doctors of Traditions. Howbeit, whatſoeuer it were, the caſe is not much Materiall. But to ſay, that in all the whole Country of Iewrie, a few only excepted, no man was able to reade the Hebrew tongue, in M. Harding, being ſo well learned in the ſame, it muſt néeds be thought, either a great ouerſight, or elſe ſome other greater fault.

For he knoweth, that God commanded euery of the people to write the Words of the Law in the poſts of their doores, and in the Borders of their cotes. Likewiſe God commanded, that, who ſo would put away his wife, ſhould firſt write a bill of diuorce, and ſo put her from him. If M. Harding will ſay, Some one, or other, of theſe learned Elders, or Doctors might write it for them: Yet it is written thus in the Booke of the Machabees: Cœpit populus Iſrael ſcribere in tabulis: The people of Iſrael began to write in their tables. It is written of Mardocheus, That hee wrote all that happened: That Hieremie wrote the plagues, that were comming: and, that Baruch wrote the words of Hieremie. And in the Goſpell, the wicked Steward ſaith vnto the debter, Take thy bill, ſit downe, and write. Now, let M. Harding conſider, how could all theſe Write, vnleſſe they could Reade: and if they could not Reade, to what end ſhould they write? Verily it appeareth not, that any of theſe was of the threeſcore, and twelue Elders. Likewiſe King Ioſias found the Booke of the Law in a wall, and Read it. When Chriſt Read, and expounded the Prophet Eſay in the Synagogue, the people marueiled not at his Reading, for that was common, but only at his Expoſition. Philip ſaid vnto the Chamberlain: Intelligis ea, quæ legis? Vnderſtandeſt thou that thou Readeſt? And when Chriſt ſuffered vpon the Croſſe, S. Iohn ſaith: Hunc titulum multi Iudæorum legerunt: Many of the Iewes Read that Title. And wherefore did the Rabbines take order, that none of the Laie People, before they came to certaine yeares of age ſhould Read, either the firſt Chapter of Geneſis, or the Booke of Canticles, or certain chapters of the Prophet Ezechiel, if none of all the people vnderſtood the Pricks, or Vowels, nor could Read any thing at all? If there were nothing els, yet this thing only is ſufficient, to deſcry M. Hardings error. The Rabbines ſay, that in euery Towne within the whole country of Iſrael there was a Schoole: and that in Ieruſalem there were found an hundred Schools. And will M. Harding haue vs beleeue, that in ſo many Schools there was not one Scholar able to know his letters? Howbeit, he taketh it for no inconuenience, whatſoeuer may helpe to ſerue his turne.

Actorum 8. Iohan. 19. Origen. in Cantica, in prologo. Paulus Phagius in Leuiticum. cap. 23.

But in the old times the Pricks, or Vowels were not found: therefore, ſaith he, the people could not Read. So likewiſe in old times the Greeke tongue was written without Accents, as it is euident vntill this day by ſundry Bookes, and old Marble Stones, that are ſo written. Yet notwithſtanding men were then able to read the Greeke tongue without Accents, Certainly M. Harding knoweth, that euen now, not only the learned of the Iewes, but alſo the very children of ten yeares of age, are able to Read without Pricks, or Vowels.

Geraldus Lilius in Hiſtoria Poetarum.

Yet notwithſtanding, ſaith M. Harding, This was done by Gods ſecret Prouidence, leſt the Laie people ſhould read Gods Word, and ſo Pretious Stones ſhould be thrown before Swine. This doubtleſſe was done by Gods prouiſion, that it might appeare, in what regard M. Harding hath the people of God: that is, by his own confeſſion, as vnpure, and vnclean beaſts, and filthy Swine, and none otherwiſe.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuiſion.

Here I need not to ſpend time in rehearſing the manifold difficulties of theſe holy letters, through which the Reading of them to the ſimple and vnlearned people, hauing their wits exerciſed in no kind of learning, their minds occupied in worldly cares, their hearts caried away with the loue of things, they luſt after, is not very profitable. As the light ſhineth in vaine vpon blind eies (ſaith a holy Father) ſo to no purpoſe or profit is the labor of a worldly, and naturall man taken for the attaining of things, that be of the Spirit. Verily among other, this incommodity is ſeen by dayly experience hereof to proceed, that of the people, ſuch as ought of right to take leaſt vpon them be now become cenſorers, and iudges of all, deſpiſers of the more part, and, which is common to all Heretikes, *mockers of the whole ſimplicity of the Church, and of all thoſe things, which the Church vſeth as Pap, or Milke to nouriſh her tender babes withall, that it were better for them not to read, than by reading ſo to be puft vp, and made inſolent. Which euill commeth not of the Scripture, but of their own malice, and euill diſpoſition.

Bernard calleth him a worldly, and a naturall man, that is void of the Spirit of God. Therefore this place is not well applied.

* They diſpiſe nothing, but that ſhould be deſpiſed.

Bernard. ſuper Cantica.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The Laie people is occupied in worldly affaires: Ergo, ſaith M. Harding, They may not be ſuffered to read the Scriptures: As if he would ſay, They are in the middeſt of diſeaſes: Therefore they may vſe no Phyſitian. They are in the throng of their enemies, Therefore they muſt be left naked without weapon. But the godly learned Fathers haue euermore reproued this reaſon, and thought it childiſh. S. Chryſoſtome ſaith thus vnto the Laie people: Lectio diuinarum Scripturarum vobis magis neceſſaria eſt, quàm Monachis: The Reading of the Scriptures is more neceſſary for you, than it is for Monks. And touching Worldly Cares, the world well ſeeth, that the Biſhop of Rome, and his Cardinals, and others of that profeſſion, are no leſſe troubled therewith, than they, that are moſt deeply drowned in the world. S. Gregory, being by the Emperor aduanced to the Biſhoprick of Rome, writeth thus of himſelfe: Sub colore Epiſcopatus, ad ſæculum retractus ſum: in quo tantis terræ curis inſeruio, quantis me in vita Laica nequaquam deſeruiſſe reminiſcor: Vnder the colour of my Biſhopruck, I am drawn backe into the world: wherein I am ſo much troubled with worldly cares, as I doe not remember the like, when I liued in the world. And againe he ſaith: Tanta me occupationum onera deprimunt, vt ad ſuperna animus nullatenus erigatur: So many cares, and buſineſſes do preſſe me down, that I can in no wiſe lift my minde vp to Heauen. Yet Gregorie in comparison of his Succeſſors might vndoubtedly ſeeme a Saint. For as now, they haue one foot in the Church, and another in the world: or rather, not one foot in the Church, but both heart, and body in the world.

Yet notwithſtanding, by M. Hardings Doctrine, theſe only muſt haue the Supreme Iudgement, and Expoſition of Gods Word: and, whatſoeuer they ſay therein, it ought to ſtand in more waight, than the Iudgement of a Generall Councel, or the Determination of the whole world.

Albertus Pighius li. 6. c. 13.

He addeth further: Knowledge bloweth vp the heart, and increaseth Pride: Thus saith M. Harding, being himselfe learned, and full of knowledge: I will not vse his owne Conclusion, Ergo, full of Pride. But thus he saith, euen as Epimenides the Poet said: Cretenses semper mendaces: The men of Creta be euer liers, being himselfe a man of Creta: and therefore by his owne iudgement, a lier, as others were. Scientia inflat. 1. Corinth. 8.

This slothfull quarrell against the knowledge of God might be maintained by great Antiquitie. For S. Hierome, and S. Augustine say, there were men then in their time of the same iudgement herein, that M. Harding is now. S. Hierome saith: Inertiæ se, & otio, & somno dantes, putant peccatum esse, si Scripturas legerint: & eos, qui in Lege Domini meditantur die, ac nocte, quasi garrulos, inutilesque contemnunt: Giuing themselues to sleep, and Slothfulnesse, they thinke it Sin to Read the Scriptures: and such, as both day, and night are studious in the Law of God, they despise, as pratlers, and vaine men. Likewise S. Augustine: Sunt quidam homines, qui, cùm audierint, quòd humiles esse debent, demittunt se, & nihil volunt discere, putantes, quòd, si aliquid didicerint, superbi futuri sint: & remanent in solo lacte: quos Scriptura reprehendit: There be certaine men, that, when they heare, they must be humble, abase themselues, and will learne nothing: fearing, that if they attaine to any knowledge, they shall be proud: and so they remaine still only in Milke: but the Scripture of God reprooueth them. Ad Titum, ca. 1. Hieronym. in Epist. ad Titum, ca. 1. Augustinus in Psalmum 130.

The Old learned Father Irenæus expounding these words of S. Paul: Scientia Inflat, writeth thus: Paulus ait: Scientia Inflat: Non, quòd veram Scientiam de Deo culparet: Alioqui se ipsum primùm accusaret: S. Paul saith, Knowledge puffeth vp the Minde: not, for that he found fault with the true knowledge of God: Otherwise he should first of all others haue reproued himselfe: For he was learned. And S. Chrysostome saith: Hoc omnium malorum causa est, quòd Scripturæ ignorantur: This is the cause of all ill, that the Scriptures are not knowen. Ireneus lib. 2. cap. 45. Chrysostom. in epist. ad Coloss. hom. 9.

But they, that read the Scriptures, despise such Superstitious orders, and Idolatrous deformities as haue beene vsed, which M. Harding calleth the Spilke, and Simplicitie of the Church. Verily, and they, that see the light, despise the darknesse: and they, that know the Truth, despise Falshood. S. Paul, after he once vnderstood Christ, despised all, that he had been trained in before, as Filth, and Dung. And therefore he saith, When I was a Child, I spake as a Child, and had vnderstanding as a Child: But, after that I once became a Man, I auoided (and despised) the things, that pertained to a Child. Who so despiseth Superstition, and Idolatrie, despiseth the things, that should be despised: And in consideration of the dangers, he hath escaped, he saith, with the Prophet Dauid: Anima nostra, sicut passer, erepta est de laqueo venantium: Our soule is deliuered, as a Sparrow, from the snares of Hunters. Philippen. 3. 1. Corin. 13. Psalm. 123.

Touching that danger, that is heere surmised, vndoubtedly, the knowledge of God inflameth not, nor bloweth vp the heart, but rather coleth it, and maketh it humble. And, for that cause God said vnto Moses, Let the King Read this Law all the daies of his Life, that he may learne to feare the Lord his God, &c. Et ne eleuetur cor eius in Superbiam: And that his minde be not blowen vp with Pride. For the nature, and force of Gods Word is to turne the heart: Lex Domini Conuertens animas. Therefore Cyrillus saith: Yong men, that vse to Read Gods Word, Fiunt postea Religiosissimi, Afterward become (not proud, or disdainfull, but) most vertuous, and Godly. So Theodoretus saith vnto the Emperor Iouinian: The knowledge of Heauenly things is behouefull for a Godly Prince. For so shall your heart be (not puft vp with Pride, but) truly and indeed in the hand of God. Likewise S. Augustine saith: Lectio assidua purificat omnia, &c. Et qui vult cum Deo semper esse, semper debet orare, & legere: Continuall reading cleereth, and purgeth all things. Who so will euer be with God, must euermore Pray, and Reade. Therefore Chrysostome saith: Fieri non potest, vt qui iugiter Cœlestis Doctrinæ verba excipit, nihil patiatur: It cannot possibly be, but the Man, that continually receiueth the Words of the Heauenly Doctrine, must of force be moued, and feele somewhat in his heart. Deuteron. 17. Psalm. 18. Contra Iulian. lib. 7. Augustinus De tempore, Ser. 1. Chrysostom. in 2. ad Timoth. hom. 5.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuision.

4 The dangers, and hurts, which the Common peoples Reading of the Scriptures in their own language bringeth, after the opinion of those, that reproue the same, be great, sundry, and many. I will here, as it were, but touch a few of them, leauing the whole matter it selfe to the iudgement of the Church. First, seeing the poyson of Heretikes doth most infect the common people, and all Heretikes draw their venome, out of the Bible vnder pretence of Gods word: it is not thought good by these men, to let euery curious, and busie body of the vulgar sort, to read and examine the Bible in their common language. * Yet they would not the learned, discreet, and sober lay men to be imbarred of that liberty.

Curious busie Bodie of the Vulgar sort.

* A contradiction. For how can the Sober Lay man Read the Scriptures, if they bee not translated into his Barbarous vulgar tongue?

De Trinitate, lib. 2. Againe, if Heresie spring of wrong vnderstanding, not of the Scriptures, (as Hilarius saith, Heresie is of vnderstanding, not of Scripture; and the sense, not the word, is a crime) who shall sooner fall to Heresie, than the common people, who cannot vnderstand, that they read? Verily, it seemeth a thing hard to beleeue, that the vnlearned people ſhould vnderſtand that, which the beſt learned men with long ſtudie, and great trauaile, can ſcarcely at length attaine.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

O, what dangerous caſes here are imagined, and all, to fray the people from Gods word! If the ignorant reade the Scriptures (ſaith M. Harding) they will prooue Heretikes. For Heretikes ſucke their venome out of the Scriptures. The concluſion hereof is this: Euery of the people may ſafely reade M. Hardings word: but Gods Word they may not reade. There is no maner danger in M. Hardings Booke: But Gods Booke is full of dangers. The reaſon hereof it is hard to gheſſe: vnleſſe it be, for that Gods Booke is full of Truth, and M. Hardings Booke is full of errour.

That he here calleth Hereſie, is the Euerlaſting, and Manifeſt Truth of God: which, when it was firſt preached, and publiſhed by S. Paul, was likewiſe euen then called Hereſie. For thus S. Paul anſwereth in his owne defenſe: Secundùm hanc ſectam, quam vocant Hæreſim, colo Patrium Deum: According to this ſect, which they call Hereſie, I worſhip the God of my Fathers. Actor. 24.

But if the Lay People, whom M. Harding for his pleaſure calleth Curious Buſie Bodies of the Vulgar ſort, may eaſily bee led into Hereſies by Reading the Scriptures, for that they be vnlearned, how then happened it, that M. Harding himſelfe, being a man ſo deepely trained in all kinde of learning, could ſo lightly be led into the ſame? I trow, he was then no curious Buſie Body. Doubtleſſe he was none of the Vulgar ſort.

In the Primitiue Church, and long after the Apoſtles time, there were ſundrie Sects, and ſorts of Hereſies, as it is plaine by S. Auguſtine, Epiphanius, Theodoretus, and others. Yet, that notwithſtanding, the Ancient Fathers then euermore called vpon the people, and exhorted them to Reade the Scriptures, to the intent they might the better auoid Hereſies. For Irenæus, writing againſt the Heretikes called Valentiniani, ſaith thus: Hæc omnia contulit eis Scripturarum Dei ignorantia: All this befell vnto them, becauſe they knew not the Scriptures. As Chriſt alſo ſaith vnto the Sadducees: Erratis neſcientes Scripturas: Ye are deceiued (not becauſe ye know, but) becauſe ye know not the Scriptures. So S. Hierome ſaith: Omni ſtudio legendæ nobis ſunt Scripturæ, vt probati trapezitæ ſciamus, quis numus probus ſit, quis adulter: We muſt read the Scriptures with all diligence, that as being good exchangers, we may know the lawfull coine from the Copper. So Chryſoſtome: Manichæi, & omnes Hæreſes decipiunt ſimplices. Sed ſi habuerimus ſenſus animæ exercitatos ad diſcretionem boni, & mali, poterimus huiuſmodi diſcernere. Quomodò autem fiunt ſenſus noſtri exercitati? Ex vſu Scripturarum, & frequenti auditione: The Manichees, and all Hereſies deceiue the ſimple. But if we haue the ſenſes of our mindes practiſed to diſcerne good, and ill, we may be able to diſcerne them. But how may our ſenſes become practiſed? By the vſe of the Scriptures, and often hearing. Likewiſe ſaith Theophylact: Illis, qui ſcrutantur Diuinas Scripturas, nihil poteſt illudere. Illæ enim ſunt Lucerna, qua fur deprehenditur: Nothing can deceiue them, that Search the Holy Scriptures. For that is the Candle, whereby the theefe is eſpied. This iudgement had the Old Catholike Fathers of reading the Holy Word of God. But, that a blinde man can better auoid dangers, than he that ſeeth: or, that a naked man in the middeſt of his enemies, can better acquite himſelfe, than he that is armed, it ſeemeth a very vnſenſible, and an vnlikely doctrine.

Irenæus lib. 3. cap. 12. Matthæ. 22. Hieronym. in Epiſt. ad Ephe. lib. 3. cap. 4. Chryſoſtom. ad Hebræ. hom. 8. Theophylact. De Lazaro.

M. Harding. The 10. Diuiſion.

Whereas Luther would the Scriptures to bee tranſlated into euery vulgar tongue, for that they bee light, and eaſie to vnderſtand, hee is confuted by the Scripture it ſelfe. For both S. Peter, and alſo S. Paul acknowledgeth in them to bee great difficulties, by occaſion whereof ſome miſconſtrue them to their own damnation, ſome vnderſtand not what things they ſpeake, nor of what things they affirme: and to ſome the Goſpell that S. Paul preached is hidden, euen to them which periſh. If the Scriptures were plaine, how erred Arius? how Macedonius? how Eunomius? how Neſtorius? how many moe, men of great learning? ſpecially ſeeing they all tooke occaſion of their errours of the Scriptures not rightly vnderſtanded? 2. Pet. 3. 1. Tim. 1. 2. Cor. 4.

Luther ſaith, that S. Hierome was ouerſeene in the vnderſtanding of the Scripture, that S. Auguſtine erred in the ſame, that S. Ambroſe, Cyprian, Hilarie, Baſil, and Chryſoſtome, the beſt learned Doctors of Chriſts Church, were often times deceiued. And yet in the Preface of his Booke, De Captiuitate Babylonica, hee ſpeaketh of them very honourably, and granteth, that they haue laboured in the Lords Vineyard worthily, and that they haue employed great diligence in opening the Scriptures. If theſe being of ſo excellent learning, after long exerciſe in the holy letters, after long ſtudie and watch, after long and feruent prayer, after mortification of themſelues, and purgation of carnal affections were deceiued, as he witneſſeth: how can hee ſay, they are cleare, plaine, and eaſie to bee vnderſtanded? And if theſe worthy Fathers were deceiued in one point, or two, is it not likely, the common people may be deceiued in many, ſpecially their diligence, and ſtudie not being comparable to theirs, and their liues not being ſuch, as the cleanenes of their inward affects might lighten their vnderſtanding, and the anointing of God might teach them?

Certaine places in the Scriptures haue euermore bene iudged darke, both for many other causes, and also for the matter it selfe, and for the deepe Mysteries therein contained: which thing D. Luther also hath confessed in sundry places. But vnto them, that haue eies, and cannot see, and delight more in darknesse, than in the light, the Sunne beames may seeme darke. The Prophet Osee saith: Rectæ viæ Domini: Præuaricatores autem corruent in eis: The waies of the Lord be straight: but the wicked shall fall in them. Therefore Cyrillus saith: Ea, quæ perspicua sunt, difficilia fiunt hæreticis: The things, that of themselues are plaine, vnto Heretikes are made darke.

Iohn 12. Rom. 11. Iohan. 3. Osee. 14. Cyrillus in Iohan. lib. 14.

But in these cases, the Spirit of God is bound, neither to sharpnesse of wit, nor to abundance of learning. Often times the Vnlearned saith that thing, that the learned cannot see. Christ saith: I thanke thee O Father, the Lord of Heauen and Earth, for that thou hast hidden these things from the wise, and the politike, and hast reuealed the same vnto the little ones. Therefore Epiphanius saith: Solis Spiritus Sancti Filijs facilis est omnis Scriptura, & dilucida: Onely to the Children of the Holy Ghost, all the Holy Scriptures are plaine, and cleare.

Hereof M. Harding seemeth to conclude thus: There bee certaine darke places in the Scriptures: Ergo, The Scriptures are full of Darknesse. This is a guilefull kinde of reasoning, knowen vnto Children, called Fallacia a secundum quid ad simpliciter. In like forme of Argument he might haue said: Albertus Pighius granteth, there bee certaine errours in the Masse: Ergo, The Masse is full of errours. Or thus: The Cardinalls themselues confesse, There be certaine Abuses in the Church of Rome: Ergo, The Church of Rome is full of Abuses. Certainly, notwithstanding a few certaine places in the holy Scriptures be obscure, yet generally, The Scriptures are a Candle to guide our feet: generally, Gods Commandement is light, and lightneth the eies, and therefore generally the Word of God is full of comfort. Therefore Chrysostome saith: Omnia clara, & plana sunt in Scripturis Diuinis: quæcunque necessaria sunt, manifesta sunt: All things are cleare, and plaine in the holy Scriptures. Whatsoeuer thing there is necessarie for vs, is also manifest. So saith Clemens Alexandrinus: Audite qui estis longè: Audite, qui propè: Nullis celatum est Verbum. Lux est Communis: omnibus illucescit hominibus: nullis est in Verbo Cymmerius: Hearken ye, that be farre off: hearken ye, that be neere. The word of God is hid from no man: It is a light common vnto all men: There is no darknesse in Gods word. So Irenæus: Scripturæ in aperto sunt, & sine ambiguitate: & similiter ab omnibus audiri possunt: The Scriptures are plaine, and without doubtfulnesse, and may be heard indifferently of all men. So the Old Father Origen: Clausum est negligentibus: inuenitur autem à quærentibus, & pulsantibus: It is shut from the negligent: but it is opened vnto them, that seeke, and knocke for it. So S. Hierome: Dominus per Euangelium suum loquutus est, non vt pauci intelligerent, sed vt omnes: The Lord hath spoken by his Gospell: not that a few should vnderstand him, but that all. So saith Fulgentius: In Scripturis Diuinis abundat, & quod robustus comedat, & quod paruulus sugat: In the Scriptures of God there is plenty sufficient, both for the strong to eat, and also for the little one to sucke. To be short, so S. Gregorie saith: Est flumen, in quo agnus ambulet, & elephas natet: It is a Flood, wherein the little Lambe may wade, and the great Elephant may swimme.

Albert. Pighius, in Priuatâ Missa. In Concilio Selectorum Cardinalium. Psalm. 118. Psalm. 18. Chrysost. in 2. Thessalonic. ho. 3. Clemens Alexandrin. in Oratione adhortatoria ad Gentes. Irenæus li. 1. cap. 46. Origen. in Exodum, hom. 9. Hieronym. in Psalm. 86. Fulgentius in Sermone de Confessorib. Gregor. in Epist. ad Leandrum.

Thus, notwithstanding certain clauses, and sentences in the Holy Scriptures be hard, and darke, yet by these Holy Fathers iudgements, the Scriptures generally are easie, and cleare.

But M. Harding vpon a false position maketh vp the like conclusion. For thus he saith: The Scriptures are darke: Therefore the people may not reade them. Verily, as hee would violently take the Scriptures from the simple, because, as hee saith, they vnderstand them not: So by the same force he may take the Scriptures from all the Old Doctors, and learned Fathers: because, as it appeareth by their dissension, and by M. Hardings owne Confession, they vnderstood them not.

M. Harding. The 11. Diuision.

And, lest all the vnlearned Lay people should seeme hereby vtterly reiected from hope of vnderstanding Gods word without teaching of others, it may be granted, that it is not impossible, a man (be hee neuer so vnlearned) exercised in long Praier, accustomed to feruent contemplation, being brought by God into his inward cellers, may from thence obtaine the true vnderstanding, and interpretation of the Holy Scriptures, no lesse than any other alwaies brought vp in learning. Of what sort S. Antonie that Holy, and perfect man the Eremite of Egypt, was. Who, as S. Augustine writeth, without any knowledge of letters, both conned the Scriptures by heart with hearing, and vnderstood them wisely with thinking. And that holy man, whom S. Gregorie speaketh of, who lying Bed-read many yeeres for sicknesse of Body, through earnest praier and deuout meditation, obtained health of minde, and vnderstanding of the Scriptures, neuer hauing learned letters, so as hee was able to expound them to those, that came to visit him: who comming comming vnto him with pretence to bring comfort, through his heauenly knowledge, receiued comfort. But among the people, how great number is there of leaud Losels, Gluttons, and Drunkards, whose belie is their God, who follow their vnruly lusts? Is it to bee thought, this sort of persons may without meditation, and exercise of prayer, pierce the vnderstanding of the Scriptures, and of those Holy Mysteries, which God hath hidden (as Christ confesseth) from the Learned, and wise men, and opened vnto little ones?

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding alloweth these, whom he calleth Curious Busie Bodies of the Vulgar sort, to attaine to the vnderstanding of Gods Word, not by reading, but onely by Speciall Reuelation, and Miracle, and none otherwise: and that, within the space of a thousand yeares, one, or two onely, and no moe. For so S. Antome attained vnto the knowledge thereof, vtterly without any booke, or reading, or any other helpe of vnderstanding. So that sicke man lying bedred, of whom S. Gregorie maketh that worthy mention. So that Barbarous, and vtterly vnlearned slaue, that suddenly by Reuelation was taught to Read. And so likewise perhaps M. Harding himselfe, being so long a time, and so earnest a Preacher of the same Gospell, and Truth of God, that he now so wilfully condemneth, without either Booke, or reading, or other Conference, only vpon the Change of the Prince, and none otherwise, vnderstood that thing, that before he could not vnderstand: and by Miracle, and Reuelation, vpon the sudden was wholly altered vnto the contrarie.

Augustinus in Prologo De Doctrina Christiana.

Augustinus in eodem Prologo.

Matthæ. 16. Matthæ. 11. Luke 24.

True it is, Flesh and Blood is not able, to vnderstand the holy will of God, without speciall Reuelation: Therefore Christ gaue thankes vnto his Father, For that hee had reuealed his secrets vnto the little ones: And likewise, opened the hearts of his Disciples, that they might vnderstand the Scriptures. Without this speciall helpe, and prompting of Gods holy Spirit, the Word of God is vnto the Reader, be hee neuer so wise, or well learned, as the Vision of a sealed Booke. But this Reuelation is not speciall vnto one, or two, but generall to all them, that be the members of Christ, and are endewed with the Spirit of God. Therefore S. Chrysostome saith generally vnto all the people: Audite, quotquot estis mundani, & vxoribus præstis ac liberis, quemadmodum vobis Apostolus Paulus præcipiat legere Scripturas, idque non simpliciter, neq; obiter, sed magna cum diligentia: Hearken, all ye men of the world, that haue wiues, and Children, how S. Paul the Apostle of Christ commandeth you to reade the Scriptures, and that not slightly, or as by the way, but with great diligence. Againe hee saith: Domi Biblia in manus sumite: Domi vacemus diuinarum Scripturarum lectioni: Take the Bible into your hands in your houses at home. At home in our houses let vs apply the Reading of Holy Scriptures. So likewise saith: S. Hierome: Hîc ostenditur, verbum Christi, non sufficienter, sed abundanter etiam Laicos habere debere, & docere se inuicem, vel monere: Heere we are taught, that the Lay people ought to haue the word of God, not only sufficiently, but also with abundance, and to teach, and counsell others.

Hieronym. in epist. ad Colos. cap. 3.

But amongst these Busie Bodies of the Vulgar sort, M. Harding findeth a great number of Losels, Gluttons, and Drunkards: whose bellie is their God. Thus he nameth the part: but he meaneth the whole. For euen so writeth Hosius one of the Chiefe of that companie: Non est Consilium in vulgo, non ratio, non discrimen: In this Vulgar sort there is neither Counsell, nor reason, nor discretion. And further hee calleth the flocke of Christ, Belluam multorum Capitum: A wilde beast of many heads: As M. Harding also a little before calleth them Swine, and others call them filthie Dogs. Euen so the Pharises iudged, and spake of the simple People that followed Christ: Turba ista, quæ non nouit Legem, maledicti sunt: These rabbles of rascals, that (are Vnlearned, and) know not the Law, are accursed. In such regard they haue them, whom S. Paul calleth, Ciues Sanctorum, & domesticos Dei: Citizens with the Saints, and of the Houshold of God.

Ephes. 2.

If lewdenesse of life bee a iust cause to banish the people from the Word of God, it is commonly thought, that the Cardinals, and Priests in Rome liue as lewdly as any others. S Bernard of the Priests of his time writeth thus: Non est iam dicere, Vt populus, sic Sacerdos: quia nec sic Populus, vt Sacerdos: We may not now say, As is the People, so is the Priest. For the People is not so wicked, as is the Priest. Therefore by M. Hardings iudgement the Priests ought no lesse to bee banished from Gods Word, than the rest of the people.

Bernardus in Conuersione Pauli.

M. Harding. The 12. Diuision.

And whereas learned men of our time bee diuided into contrarie sects, and write bitterly one against another, each one imputing to other mistaking of the Scriptures: if amongst them, who would seeme to be the leaders of the people, be controuersies, and debates about the vnderstanding of the Scriptures: how may the common people be thought to be in safe case out of all danger of errors, if by reading the Bible in their owne tongue, they take the matter in hand?

The Gospellers diuided into contrary sects.

If any man thinke, I ſlander them, for that I ſay they be diuided into contrary Sects, let him vnderſtand, their owne Countrimen, I meane them of Germanie, and ſpeciall ſetters forth of this new doctrine, report it in their Bookes, and complaine lamentably of it. Namely, Nicolaus Amſdorffius in his booke intituled, Publica Confeſſio puræ doctrinæ Euangelij, &c. Alſo Nicolaus Gallus, in his Booke of Theſes and Hypotypoſes: who acknowledgeth the ſtrifes and debates, that be amongſt them, to be, not of light matters, but of high Articles of Chriſtian Doctrine. For euen ſo bee his words in Latine: Non ſunt leues inter nos concertationes de rebus leuibus, ſed de ſublimibus Doctrinæ Chriſtianæ Articulis, de Lege & Euangelio, &c. The ſame man in the laſt leafe of his foreſaid Booke, with great vehemencie reporteth, Hæreſes permultas eſſe præ manibus, pleraſque etiamnum hærere in calamo: That very many Hereſies be already in hand, and many as yet ſticke in the pen, as though he meant, they were ready to be ſet foorth.

Of late there haue beene put foorth in print two great Bookes, one by the Princes of Saxonie, the other by the Earles of Mansfield, chiefe maintainers of the Lutherans: in which be recited eleuen Sects, and the ſame as deteſtable Hereſies condemned: They are contained in this Catalogue or Role: Anabaptiſtæ, Seruetiani, Stancariani, Antinomi, Ieſuitæ, Oſiandriani, Melanchthonici, Manriſtæ, Adiaphoriſtæ, Suencfeldiani, Sacramentarij. Albeit the Ieſuites haue wrong to bee numbred among them. Thus much is confeſſed of the ſects, and controuerſies of our new Goſpellers by their owne Princes, that ſtand in defence of the confeſſion of Auſpurge, and by two of the Lutheran Superintendents.

Fridericus Staphylus.

No man hath ſo exactly declared to the world the number, and diuerſitie of the ſects of our time, which hath ſprung out of Martin Luther, as Fridericus Staphylus a man of excellent learning, one of the Emperours Counſell that now is, who might well haue knowledge heerein, for as much as he was a diligent ſtudent ten yeeres at Wittenberg among the chiefe doctors of them, and for that time was of their opinion, and afterward by conſideration of their manifold diſagreeings and contentions within themſelues induced to diſcredit them, and through the grace of God reduced to a whole mind, and to the Catholike Faith, and now remaineth a perfect member of the Church. This learned man in his Apologie ſheweth, that out of Luther haue ſprung three diuers Hereſies or Sects: The (208) Anabaptiſts, the Sacramentaries, and the Confeſſioniſts, who made Confeſſion of their Faith in open Diet before the Emperour Charles, the Princes and States of Germanie at Auſpurge, Anno Domini 1530. and for Proteſtation of the ſame there, are called Proteſtants. Now hee prooueth farther by teſtimonie of their owne writings, that the Anabaptiſts be diuided into ſix ſects: (209) the Sacramentaries into eight ſects: (209) the Confeſſioniſts, and they which properly are called Proteſtants, into twenty ſects, euery one hauing his proper and particular name to be called and knowen by. This lamentable diuiſion of learned men into ſo many ſects in the Countries where the Goſpell (as they call it) hath theſe fortie yeeres, and is yet moſt baſely handled, may bee a warning to the gouernours of Chriſtendome, that they take good aduiſement, how they ſuffer the rude, and raſh people to haue the Scriptures common in their owne tongue.

The 208. Vntruth. For the Anabaptiſts ſprang not of Luther: but were reproued, and condemned by Luther.

The 209. Vntruth, inflamed with ſlander.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Here M. Harding, by the helpe of one Staphylus, a ſhameleſſe Renegate, hath made a long diſcourſe of ſuch differences in Doctrine, as hee imagineth to be among them that profeſſe the Goſpell. And indeed, as the imperfection, and want, that is in man, is naturally inclined vnto ſome diuiſion, and that often times in ſuch caſes, wherein ought to bee greateſt vnitie: Euen ſo the Heretikes, and the enemies of the truth, haue euermore vſed to take hold thereof, the more to diſcredit, and to depraue the whole. At the firſt preaching of the Goſpell by the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and other holy Fathers, there grew vp immediately with the ſame, ſundry ſorts of Sects, to the number of foureſcore and ten, as they are reckoned in particular by S. Auguſtine, all flowing out of one Spring, all profeſſing one Goſpell, and all knowen by the name of Chriſt.

Auguſtin. ad Quod-vult-deum.

Yea ſometimes the very lights of the world, and the pillars of the Church, ſeemed to be diuided by ſome diſſenſion amongſt themſelues: S. Peter, from S. Paul: S. Paul, from Barnabas: S. Cyprian, from Cornelius: S. Auguſtine, from S. Hierome: S. Chryſoſtome, from Epiphanius: the Eaſt part of the World, from the Weſt: Doctors, from Doctors: Fathers, from Fathers: Church, from Church: and Saints, from Saints. And here of the Heretikes in old time, and other ſworne enemies of GOD take occaſion, as M. Harding now doth, to deface the whole Profeſſion of the Goſpell, calling it a puddle, and a ſincke of diſſenſion. For theſe cauſes the Heathens laughed at the Chriſtians, and pointed at them in the market places with their fingers. So the Renegate Iulianus the Emperour, the better to cloke his owne infidelitie, ſaid, that Peter and Paul could not agree: Luke and Matthew diſſented in Chriſts Genealogie: and that therefore the whole Goſpell of Chriſt was nothing elſe but errour.

Socrates, lib. 1. cap. 6. Socrat. li. 3.

Often times, of malice againſt God, they fained diſſenſion to be, where as none was. So Marcion the Renegate deuiſed a great Booke of Contrarieties betweene the new Teſtament, and the Old. The falſe Apoſtles ſaid, that S. Paul diſſented from all the reſt of his Brethren, and often times from him ſelfe. Euen ſo, and with like truth M. Harding ſeemeth now to charge the Goſpell of Chriſt with like diſſenſion, following therein both the Example, and Doctrine of Staphylus the Renegate, that hath wilfully forſaken Chriſt, and is returned againe to his old vomit. And being able ſo sharply to behold, how ſome one man hath in ſome caſe diſſented from an other, yet is he not able to ſee, how much he himſelfe hath diſſented from himſelfe.

tle weight, what would he haue béne able to doe, if it had béne in the Primitiue Church, and had ſéene all thoſe hot, and troubleſome diſſenſions, that then were able to ſhake the world? What clouds, and colours might hée then haue caſt, to ſcorne at Chriſt, and to bring his Goſpell out of credit?

Doubtleſſe, as he ſaith now, all theſe diuerſities ſpring onely from Doctor Luther, ſo would he then haue ſaid, All theſe former diuerſities, & ſundry formes of Hereſies ſprang onely from Chriſt. And hereof he would haue concluded, as he doth now, that the Rude, and Raſh people ſhould in no wiſe be ſuffered to reade the Scriptures.

Howbeit, touching theſe 34. ſeuerall Sects, that Staphylus by his inquiſition, and cunning hath found out in Germanie, it muſt néeds be confeſſed, they are marueilous pure, and very ſimple Sects. For in that whole Countrie, where they are ſuppoſed to dwell, they haue neither name, to be knowen by, two, or three only excepted: nor Church, to teach in: nor houſe, to dwell in. But Staphylus may haue leaue to ſpeake vntruth, for that hée hath not yet learned to ſpeake otherwiſe.

Hereof M. Harding may conclude thus: The Learned ſometimes miſtake the Scriptures, and are deceiued: Ergo, the Learned ought to be baniſhed from reading the Scriptures. For all theſe fantaſticall imaginations of Opinions, and Sects, pertaine onely to the Learned ſort, and nothing to the Lay People.

And, that the Learned, either through ignorance, or through affection, may be miſled, no leſſe than others, it may eaſily appeare both by all theſe former examples, and alſo by theſe words of God in the Booke of Exodus: Nec in iudicio plurimorum acquieſces ſententiæ: In iudgement thou ſhalt not hearken to the minde of the moe. Which words Lyra expounded thus: Plurimorum, id eſt, doctorum: Of the moe, that is to ſay, of the learned ſort.

Exod. 23.

Certainly the Learned Fathers haue euermore thought, that in ſuch perillous times of diſſenſion in iudgement, it is moſt behouefull for the people, to haue recourſe vnto the Scriptures. When Paul and Silas preached at Berrhæa, the people there daily ſearched, and conſidered the Scriptures, to know, whether that they preached, were true, or no. Chryſoſtome expounding theſe words, When yee ſhall ſee the Abomination of deſolation ſtanding in the Holy place, writeth thus: Ideo mandat, vt Chriſtiani volentes firmitatem accipere Fidei veræ, ad nullam rem fugiant, niſi ad Scripturas: Alioqui ſi ad alia reſpexerint, ſcandalizabuntur, & peribunt, non intelligentes, quæ ſit vera Eccleſia: & per hoc incident in Abominationem deſolationis, quæ ſtat in Sanctis Eccleſiæ locis: Therefore he commandeth, that Chriſtian men, that will be aſſured of the true Faith, reſort vnto nothing elſe, but onely vnto the Scriptures: For elſe, if they haue regard to any other thing, they ſhall be offended, and ſhall periſh, not knowing, which is the true Church: and by meane thereof they ſhall fall into the Abomination of deſolation, that ſtandeth in the Holy places of the Church. In like ſort writeth Origen vpon the ſame place: Animæ imperitæ verbi iuſtitiæ, quia facilè ſeducuntur, non poſſunt inſeducibiliter permanere in conſpectu Abominationis deſolationis ſtantis in loco Sancto: The ſoules, that be vnskilfull of the Word of Iuſtice, becauſe they are eaſily deceiued, cannot ſtand without errour in the ſight of the Abomination of deſolation ſtanding in the Holy place. S. Hierome ſaith: In aduentu Meſſiæ, populus, qui ſub Magiſtris fuerat conſopitus, ibit ad montes Scripturarum: ibique inuenient montes Moſen, montes Prophetas, Montes Noui Teſtamenti. Et in talium montium lectione verſatus, ſi non inuenerit, qui doceat, tamen illius ſtudium comprobabitur, quòd confugerint ad Montes: At the Comming of Chriſt, the people, that was laid aſleepe vnder their teachers, ſhall go to the Mountaines of the Scriptures: There ſhall they finde theſe Mountaines, Moſes, the Prophets, and the New Teſtament. And being occupied in the reading of theſe Mountaines, notwithſtanding they finde no man to teach them, yet ſhall their good will be well allowed, for that they haue fled vnto the Mountaines. So S. Baſil: Diuinæ Scripturæ faciunt ad certitudinem bonorum, & ad confuſionem malorum: The Holy Scriptures are able both to confirme the godly, and alſo to confound the vngodly. So Chryſoſtome: Nec ipſis omnino Eccleſijs credendum eſt, niſi ea dicant, vel faciant, quæ conuenientia ſint Scripturis: We may in no wiſe beleeue the Churches themſelues, vnleſſe they ſay, and do ſuch things, as be agreeable to the Scriptures.

M. Harding. The 13. Diuiſion.

The perill of it is knowen by ſundry examples both of times paſt, and alſo of this preſent age. For out of this roote hath ſprung the Sect of the Valdenſes, otherwiſe called Pauperes de Lugduno. For Valdo a Marchant of Lions their firſt Author, of whom they were named Valdenſes, being an vnlearned Lay man, procured certaine Bookes of the Scripture to bee tranſlated into his owne language, which when hee vſed to Read, and vnderſtood not, he fell into many errours. Of the ſame welſpring iſſued the filthy puddles of the Sects called Adamitæ, or Picardi, Bogardi, and Turelupini: and of late yeeres beſide the ſame Sect of Adamites newly reuiued, alſo the Anabaptiſts, and Suenckfeldians. Wherefore that Edict, or Proclamation of the worthy Princes Ferdinando and Elizabeth King and Queene of Spaine, is of many much commended, Valdenſes.

commended by which they gaue ſtrait commandement, that vnder great penalties no man ſhould tranſlate the Bible into the Vulgar Spaniſh tongue, and that no man ſhould be found to haue the ſame tranſlated in any wiſe. Theſe and the like be the reaſons and conſiderations, which haue moued many men to thinke, the ſetting foorth of the whole Bible, and of euery part of the Scripture in the Vulgar tongue, for all ſorts of perſons to reade without exception or limitation, to be a thing not neceſſarie to Saluation, nor otherwiſe conuenient nor profitable, but contrariwiſe dangerous and hurtfull.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The Story of Valdo is heere brought in vpon the report, and credit of Friar Alfonſus. Touching which Valdo, whether he were learned, or vnlearned, it forceth not greatly. Origen ſaith: Vide quàm propè periculis ſint hi, qui negligunt exerceri in Diuinis Literis: ex quibus ſolis huiuſmodi examinationis agnoſcenda diſcretio eſt: Marke, how neere vnto danger they be, that refuſe to exerciſe themſelues in the Scriptures. For therby only the iudgement of this triall muſt be knowen. If he were learned, then is this no true report: if he were vnlearned, then was Gods worke ſo much the greater: who, as S. Paul ſaith, often times chuſeth the weake things of the world, to condemne the ſtrong: and the fooliſh things of the world to confounde the wiſe. Alphonſus De Hereſib. lib. 1. cap. 13. Ad Roman. li. 10. ca. 16. 1. Cor. 1.

The greateſt Hereſies, that be maintained, ſtood in reproouing the Idolatrous worſhipping of Images: of extreme Vnction: of Exorciſmes, and Conjurations: of Eare confeſſions: of vnſeemely Singing in the Church: of Fained Miracles: of the idle, and ſlanderous liues of Prieſts, and Biſhops: of the liues, and maners of the Church of Rome: of the outrage, and Tyrannie of the Pope: of Monks, Friers, Pardons, Pilgrimages, and Purgatorie. And, notwithſtanding the reproouing hereof were then iudged Hereſie, yet ſithence that time infinite numbers of godly men haue receiued it, as Gods vndoubted Truth, and M. Harding in part hath yelded vnto the ſame. Alphonſus de Hereſib. Bartholomæus Abramus Cretenſis in Concil. Ferrarien.

He added farther, Out of this welſpring of Valdo iſſued forth the Anabaptiſts, and the Swenkefeldians. I maruell, M. Harding can, either ſpeake ſo vnaduiſedly, or ſo ſone forget, what he hath ſpoken. For immediately before he wrote thus: Out of Luther haue ſprung three diuers Hereſies, The Anabaptiſts, the Sacramentaries, and the Confeſſioniſts. If the Anabaptiſts ſprang out of Valdo, and were ſo long before Luther, how could they then afterward ſpring out of Luther? If they ſprang firſt out of Luther, how were they then before Luther? By this report, the Father is yonger than the Childe: and the Childe was borne before the Father. Theſe be meere Monſters in ſpeech, and Contradictions in Nature. If the one of theſe reports be true, the other of neceſſity muſt needs be falſe. But M. Harding taketh it for no great inconuenience, whatſoeuer may helpe, to deface the Truth.

The Proclamation of Ferdinandus, and Elizabeth the Kings of Spaine for not Tranſlating the Bible into the Spaniſh tongue, as it is of very ſmall Authoritie, being made within theſe threeſcore and ten yeeres, that is to ſay, welneere fifteene hundred yeeres after Chriſt: ſo it is likely, it was firſt deuiſed, not againſt the Chriſtian people of that Country, but onely againſt the Renegate Iewes there: who by diſſimulation, and feare of the Law being become Chriſtians, afterward returned againe to their Old Errors, and both by their example, and alſo by miſunderſtanding of certaine places of the Scriptures, hardened, and confirmed others in the ſame. Againſt whom alſo was deuiſed the Spaniſh Inquiſition, and that by the ſame Princes, and at the ſame time. So Iulianus the Renegate Emperour thought it good policie, to ſuffer no Chriſtian mans Childe to be ſet to Schoole. So the wicked Princes Antiochus, and Maximinus, for like policie, burnt the Bookes of God, to the intent the people ſhould not reade them. Furius Bononia de Tranſferendis Scripturis. Sozomen. lib. 5. cap. 17. 1. Machabæorum. cap. 1.

But the godly, and firſt Chriſtened Emperour Conſtantinus cauſed the Bible to bee written out, and to be ſent abroad into all Kingdomes, Countries, and Cities of his Dominion. King Adelſtane the King of England, cauſed the Bible to be Tranſlated into the Engliſh Tongue. S. Hierome Tranſlated the ſame into the Sclauon Tongue: Vlphilas likewiſe into the Gotthian tongue. Whereto Socrates addeth alſo theſe words: Inſtituit Barbaros, vt diſcerent ſacra eloquia: Hee gaue occaſion to the Barbarous people of that Country, to learne the Scriptures. Alphonſus de Hereſib. lib. 1. cap. 13. Socrat. lib. 4. cap. 27.

M. Harding. The 14. Diuiſion.

What parts of the Scriptures appertaine to the people to know.

Yet it is not meant by them, that the people bee kept wholly from the Scripture, ſo as they read no part of it at all. As the whole in their opinion is too ſtrong a meat for their weake ſtomackes: ſo much of it they may right holeſomely receiue and brooke, as that which pertaineth to pietie, and neceſſary knowledge of a Chriſtian man. Wherein they would the examples of the Old Holy Fathers to bee followed. S. Auguſtine hath gathered together into one Booke, all that maketh for good life out of the Scriptures, which Booke hee intituled Speculum: that is to ſay, a Mirrour, or a Looking glaſſe, as Poſſidonius witneſſeth in his life. S. Baſil hath ſet foorth the like argument almoſt in his foureſcore morall rules pertaining altogether to good maners. S. Cyprian alſo hath done the like in his three Bookes Ad Quirinum. Such godly Bookes they thinke to be very profitable for the ſimple people to reade.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Hére M. Harding alloweth the people, to reade the Scriptures: howbeit, not what they liſt, but with reſtraint, and at delinery: that is to ſay, not caſes of queſtion, or perteining to knowledge, but onely matters belonging to manners, and order of life. And ſo he reſerueth knowledge to himſelfe, and his Brethren: and leaueth good Life vnto the People. Touching the Bookes of S. Auguſtine, S. Baſil, and S. Cyprian, it is vntrue, that they were written namely, and purpoſely for the vnlearned: Or if they were, why are they not Tranſlated? Why are they not deliuered vnto the people, for whoſe ſakes they were written?

Moreouer, it is vntrue, that in theſe Bookes is contained only matter of life, and maners, and nothing pertaining to Religion. For the firſt words in this Booke of S. Auguſtine called Speculum, are theſe: Non facies tibi Sculptile: Thou ſhalt make to thy ſelfe no grauen Image: which is now a ſpeciall caſe of Religion. And the greateſt part of S. Cyprians Booke, Ad Quirinum, conteineth a full diſputation of Chriſts Incarnation, Natiuitie, and Paſſion, and other like caſes of Religion againſt the Iewes. Touching S. Baſil, as he wrote this Booke of Morals concerning Maners: ſo he had written another Booke before, concerning Faith: and both theſe Bookes for the people. He maketh his entrie into his Morals, with theſe words: Cùm de ſana Fide in Præcedentibus ſufficienter ad præſens dictum eſſe putemus, &c. Foraſmuch as I thinke, I haue intreated ſufficiently in my former bookes concerning Faith, &c. Therefore this Aſſertion was vntrue, and ſo no firme ground, for M. Harding to ſtand vpon. Neither did any of the Old Fathers euer withdraw the people from the Vniuerſall, and free reading of Gods Word, and reſtraine them onely to ſuch ſhort Collections. S. Baſil ſaith: The Scriptures are like vnto a Shop full of Medicines for the Soule, whereas euery man may freely take, not only one kinde of ſalue, but alſo a ſpeciall, and a peculiar remedie for euery ſore. And Irenæus ſaith: De omni ligno Paradiſi manducate: id eſt, ab omni Scriptura Diuina manducate: Eat ye of all the fruit of Paradiſe: that is to ſay, Eat ye (not onely of matters concerning maners, but alſo) of euery part of the holy Scriptures. Howbeit, by M. Hardings iudgement, the people may learne the tenne Commandements, but may not meddle with their Creed.

M. Harding. The 15. Diuiſion.

But how much, and what part of the Scripture the common people may read for their comfort and neceſſary inſtruction, & by whom the ſame may be Tranſlated, it belongeth to the iudgement of the Church: Which Church hath already condemned all the Vulgar Tranſlations of the Bible of late yeeres, (210) for that they be found in ſundry places erroneous, and partiall in fauour of the Hereſies, which the Tranſlators maintaine. And it hath not onely in our time condemned theſe late Tranſlations, but alſo hitherto neuer allowed thoſe few of old time, I meane S. Hieromes tranſlation into the Dalmaticall tongue, if euer any ſuch was by him made, as to ſome it ſeemeth a thing not ſufficiently proued: And that which before S. Hierome, Vlphilas an Arian Biſhop made, and commended to the Nation of the Gothes, who firſt inuented letters for them, and propouned the Scriptures to them tranſlated into their own tongue, and the better to bring his ambaſſage to the Emperour Valens to good effect, was perſwaded by the Heretikes of Conſtantinople, and of the Court there, to forſake the Catholike Faith, and to Communicate with the Arians, making promiſe alſo to trauell in bringing the people of his Country to the ſame ſect, which at length hee performed moſt wickedly.

The 210 Vntruth, raiſed only of deſpight and ſlander.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

M. Harding alloweth the people, to reade certaine parcels of the Scriptures for their comfort: but yet he alloweth them no Tranſlation: that is to ſay, he alloweth them to eat the kernell, but in no wiſe to breake the ſhale. By theſe it appeareth, that of ſufferance, and ſpeciall fauour, the ſimple ignorant people may Reade the Word of God in Latine, Greeke, or Hebrew: but none otherwiſe.

The Church (ſaith M. Harding) for the ſpace welneere of fifténe hundred yéeres, neuer yet allowed any maner Tranſlation in the Vulgar Tongue. Yet notwithſtanding, it is certaine, that the Church not onely in the Primitiue time, vnder the Apoſtles, and holy Fathers, but alſo long ſithence hath both ſuffered, and alſo vſed the Vulgar Tranſlations in ſundrie tongues. Whereof we may well preſume, that the Church then allowed them.

Hieronym. in epitaphio Paulæ. Baſil. in epiſt. ad Neocæſarie. Sulpitius in Vita Martin. l. 1. Iſidorus de Eccleſiaſticis officijs, cap. 10.

And that the Scriptures were not onely in theſe three tongues, Greeke, Hebrew, and Latine, it appeareth by S Hierome, that ſaith, The Pſalmes were Tranſlated, and ſung in the Syrian tongue: by S. Baſil, that affirmeth the ſame, of the Paleſtine, Thebane, Phenike, Arabike, and Libyke tongues: By Sulpitius in the life of S. Martine, that ſeemeth to ſay, The Lections, and Chapters were Tranſlated, and read openly in the Churches of France in the French Tongue: And by Iſidorus, that auoucheth the like of all Chriſtian tongues.

M. Harding

M. Harding misliketh the Translation of Vlphilas into the Gotthian tongue, for that the Author was an Arian. Notwithstanding it appeareth not, that euer the Church misliked it. But, by this rule, he may as well condemne all the Greeke Translations, whatsoeuer, of Symmachus, of Aquila, of Theodotion, and of the Septuagints, and the whole Examples of Origen. For there is not one of all these, but may be challenged in like sort.

Touching S. Hieromes Translation of the Bible into the Sclauon tongue, M. Harding semeth to stand in doubt. Howbeit, Hosius his companion saith: In Dalmaticam Linguam Sacros Libros Hieronymum vertisse constat: It is certaine, and out of doubt, that S. Hierome Translated the Bible into the Sclauon tongue. The like whereof is reported by Alphonsus. Neither can M. Harding shew vs any errour, or ouersight in that whole Translation of S. Hierome: and therefore he semeth to condemne that Godly Father, and yet knoweth no cause why.

Alphonsus de Hæresib. li. 1. cap. 13.

All late Translations (saith he) haue beene made in fauour of Hereses, and therefore they may worthily bee mistrusted. But will these men neuer leaue these childish colours, and deale plainly? If there be errours, and such errours in these Late Translations, why doe they not descry them? If there be none, why doe they thus condemne them? But the greatest Heresie, that can be holden, and that toucheth them nerest, is the reuealing of the vsurped Authority, and Tyranny of the Church of Rome. For so it is determined by Pope Nicolas: Qui Romanæ Ecclesiæ Priuilegium auferre conatur, hic proculdubio in Hæresim labitur, & est dicendus Hæreticus: Whosoeuer attempteth to abbridge the Authoritie of the Church of Rome, falleth doubtlesse into an Heresie, and ought to be called an Heretike.

Dist. 2. Omnes.

M. Harding. The 16. Diuision.

As for the Church of this Land of Britaine, the Faith hath continued in it thirteene hundred yeeres vntill now of late, (211) without hauing the Bible translated into the vulgar tongue, to be vsed of all in common. Our Lord grant, we yeeld no worse soules to God now, hauing the Scriptures in our owne tongue; and talking so much of the Gospell, than our ancestors haue done before vs. This Iland, saith Beda, speaking of the estate the Church was in as his daies) at this present, according to the number of Bookes that Gods Law was written in, doth search and confesse one, and the selfe same knowledge of the high truth, and of the true height, with the tongues of fiue Nations, of the English, the Britons, the Scots, the Pights, and the Latines. Qua meditatione Scripturarum cæteris omnibus est facta communis: Which tongue of the Latines (saith he) is for the studie, and meditation of the Scriptures made common to all the other. Verily as the Latine tongue was then common to all the Nations of this Land, being of distinct languages, for the studie of the Scriptures, as Beda reporteth: so the same onely hath alwaies vntill our time, beene common to all the Countries and Nations of the Occidentall or west Church, for the same purpose, and thereof it hath beene called the Latine Church.

Hist. Eccle. lib. 1.

The 211. Vntruth. For sundry parts of the Bible were translated into the English tongue, by King Alured, by Cedman, and by Beda, as shall appeare.

Wherefore to conclude, they that shew themselues so earnest, and zelous for the translation of the Scriptures into all vulgar, and barbarous tongues, it behoueth them, after the opinion of wise men to see, first, that no faults be found in their Translations, (212) as hitherto many haue beene found. And a small fault committed in the handling of Gods word, is to bee taken for a great crime. Next, that forasmuch as such translations pertaine to all Christian people, they be referred to the iudgement of the whole Church of euery language, and commended to the Laitie by the wisedome and authoritie of the Clergie, hauing charge of their soules. Furthermore, that there be some choice, exception, and limitation of time place, and persons, and also of parts of the Scriptures, after the discreet ordinances of the Iewes. Amongst whom it was not lawfull, that any should reade certaine parts of the Bible, before hee had fulfilled the time of the Priestlie Ministerie, which was the age of thirtie yeeres, as S. Hierome witnesseth. Lastly, that the setting foorth of the Scriptures in the common language, be not commended to the people as a thing vtterly necessarie to Saluation, lest thereby they condemne so many Churches, that hitherto haue lackt the same, and so many learned and godly Fathers, that haue not procured it for their flocke: Finally, all that haue gone before vs, to whom in all vertue, innocencie, and holinesse of life, we are not to be compared. As for mee, in as much as this matter is not yet determined by the Church, whether the common people ought to haue the Scriptures in their owne tongue to read, and to heare, or no, I define nothing. As I esteeme greatly all godly, and holesome knowledge, and wish the people had more of it than they haue, with charitie and meekenesse: so I would, that these hot talkers of Gods word had lesse of that knowledge, which maketh a man to swell, and to be proud in his owne conceit: and that they would deepely weigh with themselues, whether they be not contained within the lists of the saying of S. Paul to the Corinthians: If any man think, that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet, as he ought to know. God grant all our knowledge be so ioined with meekenesse, humilitie, and charitie, as that bee not iustly said of vs, which S. Augustine in the like case said very dreadfully to his deare friend Alypius: Surgunt indocti, & cælum rapiunt: & nos cum doctrinis nostris sine Corde, ecce vbi volutamur in Carne, & Sanguine? The vnlearned and simple arise vp, and catch Heauen away from vs: and wee with all our great learning void of heart, lo where are wee wallowing in Flesh, and Blood?

The 212. Vntruth, ioined with a slander. If there were such faults, M. Harding would open them in particular.

Confess. li. 8. Cap. 8.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding semeth secretly to grant that thing, which without blushing no man can deny: that is, that the Scriptures long sithence, and in old times haue beene Translated into the naturall speech of this country. But he addeth withall a proper exception, that notwithstanding the Translation were in English, yet it serued not for English people. And yet, for what people else it should serue, it were not easie to coniecture. Doubtlesse, if they had meant, as these men doe, to barre the English people from Gods word, they would haue kept it still, as it was before, in Latine, Greke, or Hebrew, and would not haue suffered any such Translation.

But Beda himselfe, that wrote the storie of this Iland, in these very words, that M. Harding hath heere alleged, seemeth to witnesse, that the Scriptures were then Translated into sundry tongues, and that for the better vnderstanding of the people. For thus he writeth: Hæc Insula quinque Gentium linguis scrutatur vnam, eandemque Scientiam Veritatis: This Iland searched out the knowledge of one Truth, with the tongues of fiue Nations. It is not likely, he would haue written thus of fiue seuerall Tongues, if the Scriptures had beene written then onely in one tongue. In like maner, and to like purpose he writeth thus: Quicunque gentium linguis vnam, eandemque veritatis Scientiam Scrutantur: Whosoeuer they be, that search the knowledge of one Trueth (not onely in the Latine tongue: as M. Harding saith, but gentium linguis: that is, In the Naturall, and Vulgar Tongues of this Countrie. Doubtlesse, it were very much to say, that the meere English man, or Scot, or Pict, or Britton, that vnderstood no Latin, was able neuertheless to Read, and search the Scriptures in the Latine Tongue.

Beda in Histor. Anglorum, li. 1. cap. 1.

But to leaue coniectures, Beda saith expressly, and in most plaine words, that one Cedman an English Poet, Translated the Creation of the world, and the whole storie of the Genesis, and the Exodus, and sundry other stories of the Bible into English Rime. Likewise, as it is said before, king Adelstane about nine hundred yeres past, causes the whole Bible to be translated into English. And Sir Iohn Treuisa saith, that Beda himselfe turned S. Iohns Gospell into English. And againe he saith, that king Aluredus caused the Psalter to be turned into English. And vntill this day there be diuers such Translations yet remaining to be seene, which, for many causes, beare good proofe of great Antiquity. Therefore, that this Iland hath continued thirteene hundred yeres without hauing the Scriptures in English, it can beare no maner appearance, or shew of Trueth.

Beda in Histor. Anglorum, li. 5 cap. 22. Adelstane. Iohan. Treuisa. li. 5. ca. 24. Iohan. Treuisa. lib. 6. cap. 1.

But being admitted, and granted for true, If prescription of want may make good proofe, then may we say, This Iland stood, and continued foure thousand whole yeres, not onely without the English Bible, but also without any knowledge of Christ, or God. Likewise we may truly say, the Gospell, and the Trueth of God stood, and continued in this Iland for the space of many hundred yeres, without either the Supremacie of Rome, or Transubstantion, or Priuate Masses, or any other like fantasies.

True it is, our Fathers of late yeres haue beene led in ignorance, and haue beene violently forced from the Scriptures. But the examples, and wants of our Fathers, are not alwaies sufficient Rules of Faith. The Heretike Eutyches, said: Sic à progenitoribus meis accipiens credidi: In hac Fide genitus sum, & consecratus Deo: & in ea opto mori: This Faith haue I receiued from mine Ancestors: In this Faith was I borne, and Baptized: and in the same I desire to die. And yet the same Faith, was an Errour, and no Faith. So said the Arian Heritike Auxentius: Quemadmodum ab infantia edoctus sum, ita credidi, & credo: As I haue beene taught from my Childhood, so I haue beleeued, and so I beleeue still. So likewise the Idolatrous Iewes said vnto the Prophet Hieremie: Sic fecimus nos, & patres nostri: Reges nostri, & Principes nostri: Et saturati sumus panibus, & bene nobis erat: Thus haue we done, and our Fathers before vs: and our Kings, and our Princes. And we had store, and plentie of all things, and a merry world, and did full well. But God saith vnto them, In statutis patrum vestrorum nolite ambulare, &c. Ego Dominus Deus vester: Walke not in the statutes of your Fathers, I am the Lord your God.

Concil. Chalcedonen. Act. 1.

Hilarius in Epist. Auxentij.

Ezechiel 20.

Howbeit, we sit not in Iudgement to condemne our Fathers: GOD onely is there Iudge. S. Paul saith: Solidum Dei fundamentum stat, habens hoc signaculum, Nouit Dominus, qui sint sui: This foundation standeth sound, hauing this seale, The Lord knoweth, who be his owne. God was able to preserue the Bush in the middest of the Flame: and Daniel in the Caue in the middest of the Lions: and the three Children in the middest of the Fornace of flaming fire: and his people of Israel in the middest of the Read Sea: Euen so was he able to preserue his owne in the middest of that deadly time of darknesse. S. Cyprian saith: Ignoscì potuit simpliciter erranti. Post inspirationem verò, & Reuelationem factam, qui in eo, quod errauerat, perseuerat, sine venia ignorantiæ peccat. Præsumptione enim atque obstinatione superatur: Hee that erreth of simplicitie (as our Fathers did) may be pardoned: But after that God hath once inspired the heart, and reuealed his truth, who so continueth still in his errour, offendeth without pardon of ignorance. For he is ouer borne by presumption, and wilfulnesse.

2. Timoth. 2.

Exod. 3. Daniel 6. Daniel 3. Exod. 14.

Upon these words of Beda, M. Harding Concludeth thus: The Latine tongue for the study of the Scriptures, was common to all the Nations of this Realme: Ergo, The Scriptures were not translated into English. A very childe may soone see the simplicitie, and the weakenesse of this reason. For euen now, notwithstanding the whole Bible be translated into the English English tongue, extant in euery Church, and common to all the people, yet the Latine tongue is neuertheleſſe Common to all the Nations of this Land, for the reading of Old commentaries, & the ancient Doctors, and ſo for the meditation, & ſtudy of the Scriptures.

Now let vs weigh M. Hardings Conſiderations in this behalfe. Firſt, if there had any faults eſcaped in the Engliſh Tranſlation, as he vntruly ſaith there haue many, he would not thus haue paſt them vnreprooued. He lacht neither eloquence, nor good will, to ſpeak: but onely good matter to ſpeake of. 1

Secondly, the Scriptures Tranſlated into Engliſh, haue béene deliuered vnto the people by ſuch Biſhops, and other Spirituall guides, as indeed haue had a care for their ſoules, and haue giuen their liues, and blood, for their ſheepe. But the Biſhops of M. Hardings ſide, can onely eſpie faults in Tranſlations: but they can amend none. They haue burnt a great number of Bibles: but they haue hitherto tranſlated none. Chriſts words are rightly verified of them: Neither do you enter your ſelues, nor will you ſuffer others, that would enter. For the higheſt Principle of their Religion is this, Ignorance is the mother of true religion. 2

To limit, and to diet the people, what they may read, and what they ought to leaue, was ſometime the Superſtitious diſcretion of the Rabbins. Herein we may ſay as S. Hillary ſaith: Archangeli neſciunt: Angeli non audiuerunt: Propheta non ſenſit: Filius ipſe non edidit: The Archangels know it not: the Angels haue not heard it: the Prophet hath not felt it: the Son of God himſelfe hath reuealed to vs no ſuch thing. Certainly, now, the Veile béeing drawen aſide, and our faces being open, to behold the Glory of God, S. Paul ſaith: Omnis Scriptura diuinitus inſpirata vtilis eſt, &c. Not onely one part of the Scriptures, but, All and euery part thereof is profitable, &c. And againe: Quæcunque Scripta ſunt, ad Noſtram Doctrinam Scripta ſunt: All things, that are written, are written for our inſtruction. And therefore Irenæus ſaith, as it is before alleged: Ex omni Scriptura Diuina manducare: Eat you of euery part of the holy Scripture. 3

Humility, and good life, whereof M. Harding would ſéeme to make ſome great account, is ſooner learned of Knowledge, than of Ignorance. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Magna aduerſus peccatum munitio eſt Scripturarum Lectio: Magnum Præcipitium, & profundum barathrum Scripturarum ignoratio: nihil ſcire de Diuinis Legibus, magna Salutis perditio. Ea res & hæreſes peperit, & vitam corruptam inuexit: hoc ſurſum deorſum miſcuit omnia: The reading of the Scriptures is a great fence againſt ſin, & the Ignorance of the Scriptures is a dangerous downefall & a great Dungeon. To know nothing of Gods Lawes, is the loſſe of Saluation. Ignorance hath brought in Hereſies, and vitious life: Ignorance hath turned all things vpſide downe.

Therefore the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and all other godly Fathers haue euermore incouraged the people to read the Scriptures: and euermore thought the Church of God to be in beſt caſe, when the people was beſt inſtructed. S. Paul ſaith: Let the word of God dwell abundantly amongſt you. Polycarpus ſaith to the people: Confido vos bene exercitatos eſſe in Sacris Literis: My truſt is, that ye be well inſtructed in the Holy Scriptures. Origen ſaith vnto his people: Giue your diligence, not onely to heare Gods Word in the Church, but alſo to be exerciſed in the ſame in your houſes at home, and day and night be ſtudious in the Law of the Lord. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Read ye the Holy Scriptures. For to that end God would haue them written, that we might receiue comfort by them. S. Hierome ſaith, as it is alleadged before: Laici, non Tantum ſufficienter, ſed etiam abundanter Verbum Dei habere debent, & ſe inuicem docere: The Lay people ought to haue the word of God, not onely ſufficiently, but alſo abundantly, and to inſtruct one another. S. Chryſoſtome willeth the Father with his Child, and the Huſband with his Wife, at home in his houſe to talke, and reaſon of the word of God. Theodoretus writeth thus: Paſſim videas hæc noſtratia dogmata, &c. Ye may commonly ſee, that not onely the Teachers of the People, and Rulers of the Churches, but alſo Taylers, Smithes, and Clothworkers, and other Artificers doe vnderſtand the Principles of our Religion: And further, that not onely learned women, if there be any ſuch, but alſo ſuch women as liue by their labour, and Sewſters, and Maidſeruants, but alſo Huſbandmen, and Ditchers, and Heardmen, and Graffers can reaſon of the Holy Trinity, and of the Creation of the world, and of the Nature of mankind, a great deale more skilfully, than either Plato or Ariſtotle was euer able to doe. Therefore Origen ſaith vnto his hearers of the Lay people: Me dicente, quod ſentio, vos decernite, & examinate, ſi quid rectum eſt aut minus rectum: While I ſpeake, that I thinke meet, examine, and iudge you, whether it be well, or otherwiſe. Thus in old times the Vulgar People, and ſuch as M. Harding calleth Swine, and Rude, and Raſh people: and Curious Buſie Bodies, were able not only to vnderſtand the Scriptures, but alſo to iudge of their preachers. And therefore the wicked Renegate Emperor Iulianus reproued the Chriſtians (euen as M. Hard. now doth vs) for that they ſuffered their Women, and Children to read the Scriptures.

But the Enemies of Gods Truth, for feare, and conſcience of their weakneſſe haue euermore vſed violently to take away the Word of God, not only from women, and Children, but alſo from all the whole people. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Hæretici Sacerdotes claudunt ianuas Veritatis. Sciunt enim, ſi manifeſtata fuerit Veritas, Eccleſiam ſuam eſſe relinquendam, & ſe de Sacerdotali dignitate ad humilitatem venturos populärem: Heretike Prieſts ſhut vp the gates of the Truth. For they know, that if the Truth once appeare, they muſt needs leaue their Church, and from the dignity of their Prieſthood come down to the eſtate of other people. For Tertullian ſaith: Scripturæ Diuinæ Hæreticorum fraudes, & furta facile conuincit, & detegit: The Holy Scripture will eaſily bewray, and confound the guiles, and ſhifts of Heretikes. Chriſt ſaith, He that doth ill, hateth the Light. And therefore they ſay, as it is written in the Prophet Amos, Tace & ne recorderis nominis Domini: Hold thy peace, and neuer thinke vpon the name of the Lord. But miſerable is that Religion, that cannot ſtand without hiding, and ſuppreſſing of the Truth of God.

THE SIXTEENTH ARTICLE.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

OVR, that it was then lawfull for the Prieſt, to pronounce the words of Conſecration Cloſely, and in Silence vnto himſelfe.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuiſion.

The matter of this Article is neither one of the higheſt Myſteries, nor one of the Greateſt Keies of our Religion, howſoeuer M. Iewel pleaſeth himſelfe with that report, thinking thereby to impaire the eſtimation of the Catholike Church. The diuerſity of obſeruation in this behalfe ſheweth the indifferencie of the thing. For els if one maner of pronouncing the words of Conſecration had been thought a neceſſary point of Religion, it had been euery where vniforme, and inuariable. That the Bread, and Wine be Conſecrated by the words of our Lord pronounced by the Prieſt, as in the perſon of Chriſt, by vertue of the which, through the grace of the Holy Ghoſt, the Bread, and Wine are Changed into our Lords Body, and Blood: (213) this thing hath in all times, and in all places, and with conſent of all inuariably been done, and ſo beleeued. But the maner of pronouncing the words, concerning Silence, or open vtterance, according to diuerſity of places, hath been diuers.

The 213. Vntruth. Often auouched, and neuer prooued.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

This, ſaith M. Harding, is but a ſmall Key of our Religion. Which thing may very well appeare, both otherwiſe, and alſo by the ſmall waight, and ſlenderneſſe of his proofes. Howbeit, in caſes of Religion, and in the Seruice of God, nothing ought to be iudged ſmall, ſpecially that may deceiue the people. Verily, how ſmall ſoeuer they will now haue this Key to ſeem, as it hath bin heretofore cauſe of no ſmall Superſtition, ſo it hath ſhut out Gods people from the ſight, and vnderſtanding of our greateſt Myſteries.

Certaine it is, That the Religion of Chriſt may well ſtand without this kind of Myſticall Silence, as it may alſo without Tranſubſtantiation, or Primate Maſſe, or any other their like fantaſies. But if the matter be ſo ſmall, wherefore doth M. Harding take ſo great paines to proue it, and that by ſo great vntruths, and ſo manifeſt Fables? Wherefore are they not aſhamed, to ſay, that Chriſt himſelfe at his Laſt Supper Conſecrated in Silence, and Secreſie, and that in like order, and forme, as they doe now? Or how durſt the Biſhops in this preſent Councell of Trident ſo ſolemnly to abanne, and accurſe all them, that dare to find fault with the ſame? So ſmall a matter, as this is now ſuppoſed to be, ſhould neuer need ſo great adoe.

But whether theſe words be vttered Secretly, or Aloud, he imagineth, that by the power thereof the ſubſtance of the Bread, and Wine is Really, and wholly changed into the Subſtance of the Body, and Blood of Chriſt. The vntruth hereof is manifeſtly repꝛoued by S. Auguſtine, S. Chryſoſtome, Theodoretus, Gelaſius, and by the generall conſent of all the Old Fathers: and is anſwered more at large in the tenth Article of this Booke. cell of Lateran in Rome, which was about twelue hundred yeares after Christ, not euer receiued in the Greeke Church, from the Birth of Christ vntill this day. Conc. Lateran. Anno 1215.

Ad. Harding. The 2. Diuision.

The Greekes in the East Church haue thought it good, to pronounce the words of Consecration Clara voce, as we find in Chrysostomes Masse, and as Bessarion writeth, Alta voce, that is, plainly, out Aloud, or with a loude voice. Sacerdos alta voce iuxta Orientalis Ecclesiæ ritum verba ista pronunciat: Hoc est Corpus meum. The Priest, saith Bessarion, after the rite, or maner of the East Church, pronounceth them with a loud voice these words, This is my Body. Which maner of loud pronouncing was thought good to be vsed in the Greeke Church, as it may be gathered by that Bessarion writeth (who being a Greeke borne, and brought vp in learning amongst the Greeks; knew right well the order of that church (to the intent the people might thereby, for the better maintenance of there faith, be stirred, and wakned to giue token of consent, and of beleefe thereto. When the Priest, saith he, pronounceth these words with a loud voice, the people standing by, in vtraque parte, that is, first at the Consecration of the Body, and againe at the Consecration of the Blood, answereth, Amen: as though they said thus: Truly so it is, as thou saist. For whereas Amen, is an Aduerbe of Affirming in Hebrew, in Greeke it signifieth so much, as Truly. And therefore the people answering Amen, to these words, Verily, say they, the things set forth are the Body and Blood of Christ. So we beleeue: So we confesse. Thus far Bessarion. It is declared by Clement, lib. 8. Constitutionum Apostolicarum, That the people said Amen, when the words of Consecration had been pronounced. Whereby wee vnderstand, that order to haue been taken by the Apostles. The same Custome also may be gathered out of S. Ambrose, who saith thus: Dicit tibi Sacerdos, Corpus Christi: & tu dicis, Amen, hoc est, Verum. Quid confitetur lingua, teneat affectus. De sacram. lib. 4. ca. 5. The Priest saith, The Body of Christ: and thou saist, Amen, that is to say, True. Hold with thy heart that, which thou confessest with the Tongue. He saith likewise hereof, De iis, qui initiantur Mysterijs, ca. 9. Frustrà ab illis respondetur, Amen, &c. Amen, is answered in vaine by them, who dispute against that, which is receiued, saith Leo, Sermon. 6. De Ieiunio 7. Mensis. Bessarion, a yong Doctor. He liued Anno Dom. 1439.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

It is clerely witnessed by all these Doctours against M. Harding, and the order of the Church of Rome, that the words of Consecration were pronounced with a Loud Voice: and that the People, not only heard, but also vnderstood, and answered the same. Wherefore M. Harding can finde but small releefe in these Authorities. Verily in his Church, which he so often calleth Ancient, and only Catholike, the people neither answereth, nor vnderstandeth, nor heareth the words of Consecration. Thus it appeareth, he hath alleged these fiue Doctours, in their speciall points, against himselfe.

M. Harding addeth hereto: Amen, is as much as, Verum est, It is true. And therefore the People answering, Amen, confessed thereby, that they beleeued the very Reall and Substantiall Changing of the Bread into the Body of Christ. It was needlesse, and out of season, to renew this matter in this place. But he thought it better skill, to speake from the purpose, than vtterly to hold his peace, and to say nothing.

First, as it is said before, The Latine Church neuer receiued this new Beleefe, before the Councell of Lateran holden in Rome: the Greeke Church neuer vntill this day. Therefore by M. Hardings skille the people thus answering, said Amen, to that thing, that they beleeued not: and so Confirmed the Child eight hundred yeares, and more, before it was borne. Indeed, the people said, Amen, to that they heard spoken by the Priest. But the Priest spake nothing, neither of reall presence: nor of Transubstantiation: nor of Accidents without subiect. Therefore it is not likely, the peoples answer had relation to any such matter. Otherwise they should seeme to answer that thing, that was not spoken. The Priest only vttered these words of Christ: This is my Body: Whereunto the Greeks make answer in this sort, as it is recorded in the Counsell of Florence: Firmiter credimus, Verbis illis Dominicis Sacramentum fieri: We beleeue stedfastly, that by these words of our Lord there is made a Sacrament. Likewise S. Ambrose: Post Consecrationem, Corpus Christi significatur: After the Consecration, the Body of Christ is signified. Againe: Ante Consecrationem, aliud dicitur: Post Consecrationem, Sanguis nuncupatur. Et tu dicis, Amen, hoc est, Verum est: Before the Consecration, it is called another thing: After Consecration, it is named the Blood of Christ. And thou saist, Amen, that is to say, It is true. So Dionysius writeth vnto Sixtus the Bishop of Rome, of one that had been baptised amongst Heretikes: Gratiarum actionem in Ecclesia audiuit, & ad illam vna cum alijs respondit, Amen: He heard the Thanksgiuing in the Church, and to the same together with others he answered, Amen. So S. Augustine: Fratres nostri eadem Sacramenta celebrantes, & Vnum Amen respondentes: Our Brethren resorting to one Sacrament, and answering all one Amen. This answering, Amen, imported not any sudden Transubstantiation, but a Thanksgiuing vnto God for our deliuery by the Death of Christ. Anno Domini 1215. Concil. Floren. Sessione vltim. Ambrosius de iis, qui initiantur, cap. 9. Eusebius lib. 7. cap. 9. Ἐυχας εἰς ἱστ. κἀκεῖνα, χἠτε πεσὼν ξὺν ἅπασι τὸ Ἀμὴν ἀπέδωκεν. Augustin. in Psal. 33.

But Leo saith, They answer, Amen, in vaine, that dispute against the same thing, that they receiue. For cleare vnderstanding of which words, it behoueth thee, good Reader, to remember, that Leo, as well herein, as also in sundry other places, bendeth the whole Leo De Ieiunio 7 Mensis, Sermon. 6.

whole force of his learning againſt the Heretike Eutyches, whoſe error was this, much like vnto the common error, that is now defended: That Chriſts Body, after his Aſcenſion, was turned wholly into the Godhead, and ſo was no longer a Mans Body. Againſt which error Leo taketh an argument of the holy Myſteries: wherein the Faithfull People, as with their Bodily Mouth they receiue the Myſticall Bread, and Wine, ſo with their Spirit, and Faith they receiue the Body, and Blood of Chriſt, and that verily, and in Truth: and in witneſſe therof the receiuer ſaith, Amen. But, ſaith Leo: He ſaith, Amen, in vaine, that denieth the ſame thing, that he receiueth: That is to ſay, That receiueth the Sacrament of Chriſts Body, and yet neuertheleſſe is perſwaded, as the Heretike Eutyches was: That Chriſt indeed hath no Body. And in this ſenſe S. Auguſtine ſeemeth to ſay:

Beda 1. Corin. 10. Mors illi erit, non Vita, qui mendacem putauerit Vitam: The receiuing of the Sacrament ſhall be Death, and not life vnto him, that thinketh that Chriſt, being the life it ſelfe was a liar; Deliuering theſe holy Myſteries, as the Sacrament, or Pledge of his Body, himſelfe indeed hauing no Body. So likewiſe Proſper Aquitanus: Chriſtum à Populo Iudaico fuiſſe occiſum, nullus iam ambigit Chriſtianus: Cuius Sacris Sanguinem omnis nunc terra accipiens, clamat, Amen: Vt neganti Iudæo, quòd occiderit Chriſtum, rectè dicatur à Deo: Vox Sanguinis fratris tui clamat ad me de terra: Whether Chriſt were ſlaine of the Iewes, or no, there is no Chriſtian man now, that can ſtand in doubt. For now all the Earth receiueth his holy Blood, and crieth, Amen. Therefore, if the Iew will denie, that euer he ſlew Chriſt, God may iuſtly ſay vnto him: The voice of the Blood of thy Brother crieth vnto me from the Earth. So S. Chryſoſtome: Hæc afferentes Myſteria, ora ipſorum conſuimus. Si enim mortuus Chriſtus non eſt, cuius Symbolum, ac Signum hoc Sacrificium eſt? Laying foorth theſe Myſteries, we ſtop their mouths. For, if Chriſt died not, whoſe Signe then, and whoſe Token is this Sacrifice? Thus, by the iudgement of theſe learned Fathers, Eutyches the Heretike, or any other, that denied, either the Body, or the Death of Chriſt, might ſone be reproued, euen by the receiuing of theſe holy Myſteries. For they receiue the Sacrament, and yet denie the thing it ſelfe, that is repreſented by the Sacrament: and ſo, as Leo ſaith, they diſpute againſt the thing it ſelfe, that they receiue. And thus Leo himſelfe plainly expoundeth, and openeth his owne meaning:

Chryſoſtom. in Matth. hom. 83.

Leo Epiſtola 81. ad Paleſtinos. Quam ſibi in huius Sacramenti præſidio Spem relinquunt, qui in Saluatoris noſtri corpore negant Humanæ ſubſtantiæ veritatem? Dicant, quo Sacrificio ſint reconciliati: Dicant, quo Sanguine ſint redempti: What hope doe they leane themſelues in the helpe of this Sacrament, that ſay, There is no Truth of the Subſtance of Man in the Body of our Sauiour? Let them tell me, by what Sacrifice they are reconciled: Let them tell me, with what Blood they are redeemed.

By theſe holy Fathers it is plaine, that, whoſo receiueth the Holy Myſterie of Chriſts Body, and yet thinketh, and holdeth, that Chriſt indeed hath no Body, as Eutyches the Heretike did, he diſputeth againſt that thing it ſelfe, that he receiueth. For Gelaſius ſaith:

Gelaſius contra Eutychem. Hoc nobis in ipſo Domino Chriſto ſentiendum eſt, quod in eius Imagine profitemur: We muſt thinke the ſame of Chriſt the Lord himſelfe, that we profeſſe (in the Sacrament, which is) his Image. And therefore in the Communion Booke, that beareth the name of S. Iames, it is written thus:

Liturgia Iacobi. Quotieſcunque comederitis hunc Panem, & hunc Calicem biberitis, Mortem Filij Hominis annuntiatis, donec veniat. Populus reſpondet, Credimus, & Confitemur: As often, as ye ſhall eat this Bread, or drinke this Cup, ye doe publiſh the Death of the Son of Man, vntill he come. Hereto the people maketh anſwer, We beleeue it, and we confeſſe it. This is it, that S. Ambroſe, S. Chryſoſtome, Leo, and Clement call, Amen. And this is that vndoubted Truth of Chriſts Body, not in the Sacrament, as M. Harding imagineth, but in the Vnitie of one Perſon, that Leo defendeth againſt the Heretike Eutyches. Beſſarions Authoritie in theſe caſes cannot be great: both for that he was but of very late yeres, and therefore a very yong Doctor to be alleged: and alſo for that, being promoted to the Biſhoprick of Tuſculum, and made a Cardinall of Rome, in the late Councell of Florence, contrarie to the minds, and iudgements of the reſt of his Brethren of Græcia, he openly flattered, and yalded himſelfe vnto the Pope.

Ann. Dom. 1439.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuiſion.

And that the people ſhould giue their conſent, and apply their Faith to this truth without error, and deceit, and that by ſaying, Amen, they ſhould then beleeue, and confeſſe, The Bread, and Wine to be made the Body, and Blood of Chriſt, (214) when it was made indeede, and not elſe, for ſo were it a great error. For this cauſe Iuſtinian the Emperor made an ordinance, that the Biſhops, and Prieſts ſhould to this intent pronounce their Seruice plainly, diſtinctly, and ſo, as it might be vnderſtanded, that the people might anſwer, Amen: (which is to be referred to each part of the Seruice, but ſpecially to the Conſecration) that they might beleeue, and confeſſe, it was the Body, and Blood of Chriſt, (215) when it was indeed, and not ſo confeſſe, when it was not; which might happen, if they heard not the Words of Conſecration plainly pronounced. And hereunto ſpecially that Conſtitution of Iuſtinian is to be reſtrained, as pertaining only to the Greeke Church, wherein he liued, (216) and not to be ſtretched further to ſerue for proofe of all the ſeruice

The 214. Vntruth. For Iuſtinian meant no ſuch thing. But M Harding is licenced at Louaine, to make comments, as he liſteth.

The 215. Vntruth, vaine, and Fantaſticall. For whereunto ſhould the people anſwer, Amen, hearing no part of the Prater?

The 216. Vntruth. For this Law touched as well the Church ſeruice to be had, and ſaid in the vulgar tongue in the Weſt Church, as to that purpoſe of our new teachers it is vntruely alleged.

of Rome, as the Church of Grecia; as ſhall appeare.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

So many vntrueths in ſo little rome, ſo conſtantly to be auouched without blushing! Where is the feare of God? Where is the Reuerence of the Reader? Where is ſhame become? Firſt, neither doth that godly Emperour Iuſtinian once mention, or touch this New Fantaſie of M. Hardings Doctrine: nor did the Greeke Church, as it is ſufficiently already proued, euer hitherto conſent vnto the ſame. Will M. Harding make the world beleeue, that the people openly in the Church, gaue their conſents vnto that thing, that they neuer beleeued, but knew vndoubtedly to be an error? Is he able to allege not one Councell, not one Doctor, not one Father, that euer expounded, Amen, in this ſort? Is the matter ſo miſerable, and ſo bare, that no honeſt witneſſe will ſpeake for it? Or muſt M. Hardings bare word, without Scripture, Councell, Doctor, or Father, be taken for the Doctrine of the Church?

The Emperors words are plaine: We command all the holy Biſhops, and Prieſts, to miniſter the holy Oblation, and the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and other Praiers (not cloſely, or in Silence, as the maner is now in the Church of Rome, but) with a loud voice, that may be heard of the Faithfull people (not, to teſtifie M. Hardings Tranſubſtantiation, which then was not knowen, but) that the hearts of the hearers may thereby both the more be humbled to repentance, and alſo the more be ſtirred to glorifie God. If the pronouncing of theſe two Syllables, Amen, be proofe ſufficient to warrant Tranſubſtantiation, then may we eaſily find the ſame Tranſubſtantiation, not only in the Sacrament of Chriſts Body, but alſo in the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and in all other Publike praiers. For in euery hereof the people was willed to ſay, Amen.

De Eccleſia. Diuer. Capitulis, Conſtitutione 123. εἰς πλείονα κατάνυξιν.

Secondly, M. Harding ſaith, (and he ſaith it alone: for no man euer ſaid it before him) that the Biſhop, and Prieſt was thus commanded to ſpeake aloud, leſt the people ſhould happen to preuent the time, and to anſwer Amen, out of ſeaſon, before the Sacrament were conſecrate. And this muſt be taken, as a graue, and a deep conſideration, and met for the Emperour of the world. But, O the vanities of theſe vaine Men! For whereunto ſhould the people anſwer, Amen, that heard no part of the Praier? Or how ſhould they Confirme, that was ſaid by the Prieſt, that knew not one word, what he ſaid? Certainly it appeareth not, that the Emperor Iuſtinian doubted ſo much the ouer haſty anſwering of the people: but rather thought, that, if the Prieſts voice were not heard, the people ſhould be able to anſwer nothing. For to that end he alleggeth theſe words of S. Paul, How ſhall the vnlearned man anſwer, Amen, to thy thanksgiuing? For he knoweth not, what thou ſaieſt.

1. Corin. 14.

Laſt of all, he ſaith, This Conſtitution of the Emperor Iuſtinian touched only the Greeke Church, and pertained nothing to the Church of Rome: adding further, That by theſe New Maſters it hath been, and is otherwiſe vntruly alleged. Thus much M. Harding only of himſelfe, without any other further Authoritie, either Old, or New. Perhaps he would haue vs thinke, according to that Childiſh Fable of their forged Donation, that the Emperor Conſtantinus had giuen ouer the whole Empire of the Weſt part of the world vnto the Pope, and that therefore Iuſtinian the Emperor had now nothing to doe in the Church of Rome. But Iuſtinian himſelfe, contrary to M. Hardings Commentary, commandeth his Lawes to be taken as generall, and to be kept vniuerſally throughout the world. For thus he writeth: Viſum eſt, præſentem Legem omni terrarum Orbi ponendam, nullis locorum, vel temporum anguſtijs coartandam: We haue thought it good, that this Law ſhould generally concerne the whole world, to be reſtrained by no limits of place, or time. And, making an Ordinance for the Church, he writeth thus: Et hoc, non ſolùm in Veteri Roma, vel in hac Regia Ciuitate, ſed in omni terra, vbicunque Chriſtianorum Nomen colitur, obtinere ſancimus: And this Law we will to take place, not only in the Old City of Rome, or in this princely Citie of Conſtantinople, but alſo in all the world, where the name of Chriſtians is had in Honor. Likewiſe Euſebius writeth of Conſtantinus the Emperors Proclamation for the keeping of the Sunday: Vpon that day he commanded, not only the Greekes, but alſo all other Nations, that were ſubiect to the Empire of Rome, to reſt from bodily labours. And concerning ſuch matters, as ſpecially touched the City of Conſtantinople, he writeth thus in the ſame Law, that M. Harding hath here alleged: Whatſoeuer things namely concerne the Church of this Princely City of Conſtantinople, we haue compriſed the ſame in a particular Law ſpecially ſeruing to that purpoſe. Yet neuertheleſſe, M. Harding thinketh it lawfull for him to ſay, The Emperors mind was not, to extend this Law to the Church of Rome: and we muſt beleeue him vpon his bare word, yea, although the Emperor himſelfe ſay the contrary.

But

But to what purpoſe excepteth M. Harding the Latine Church in this behalfe? was not S. Ambroſe Biſhop of Millaine: Clemens, and Leo Biſhops of Rome? all three Biſhops of the Latine Church? And doth not M. Harding ſay, that euery of theſe three pronounced the words of Conſecration openly, with loud voice, and not in Silence? And doth not M. Harding further tell vs, It was the Tradition of the Apoſtles? Wherefore then doth he ſo nicely except the Church of Rome? Had the Church there any ſpeciall Priuiledge to breake the Apoſtles Traditions, more than others? Certainly, Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith, The Traditions of the Apoſtles, as well in the Eaſt Church, as in the Weſt, were all one, euen as was their Doctrine. Fuit vna omnium Apoſtolorum, ſcut Doctrina, ita Traditio. Thus hath M. Harding found by his owne Confeſſion, both the Tradition of the Apoſtles, and the Ancient Doctors, Ambroſe, Clemens, and Leo, and both the Churches of God, the Greeke, and the Latine againſt himſelfe.

M. Harding contrary to himſelfe.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuiſion.

Now in this Weſt Church, which is the Latine Church, the people hauing beene ſufficiently inſtructed touching the beleefe of the Body, and Blood of our Lord in the Sacrament, (217) it hath beene thought by the Fathers conuenient, the Words of Conſecration to bee pronounced by the Prieſt cloſely, and in ſilence, rather than with open voice. Wherein they had ſpeciall regard to the dignitie of that high Myſtery. And doubtleſſe for this point they vnderſtood, as S. Baſil writeth, that the Apoſtles, and the Fathers, which at the beginning made Lawes for the order of Eccleſiaſticall things, maintained the Myſteries in their due authority, by keeping them ſecret, and in ſilence. For it is not, ſaith he, any Myſterie at all, which is brought foorth to the popular, and vulgar eares, whereof he wrote very truly before: Ei, quod publicatum eſt, & per ſe apprehendi poteſt, imminere contemptum: Ei verò, quod remotum eſt, ac rarum, etiam naturaliter quodammodo eſſe conuectam admirationem. That, what is done openly, and made common, and of it ſelfe may be attained, it is like to come in contempt, and be deſpiſed. But what is kept far off, and is ſeldome gotten, that euen naturally in maner is neuer without wondring at. And in ſuch reſpect Chriſt gaue warning, that Precious ſtones be not ſtrewed before Hogs.

The 217. Vntruth. For there is no ſuch thing decreed by the Ancient Fathers. Theſe words of S Baſil pertaine nothing to the Sacrament.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

It is moſt certaine, and therefore the more lamentable, that, as it now fareth through the whole Church of Rome, the people knoweth, neither the Subſtance, nor the Meaning, nor the Vſe, nor the Effect, nor the End, or Purpoſe of the Sacrament, nor the Conſecration, nor any Word thereto belonging. They heare nothing: They ſee nothing: They vnderſtand nothing: They learne nothing: The Pope, the Cardinals, the Biſhops, the Prieſts teach them nothing. It is thought to be the ſureſt fence, and ſtrongeſt ward for that Religion, that they ſhould be kept ſtill in ignorance, and know nothing: M. Harding both in this place, and alſo before, calleth them all Hogs, and Swine, as inſenſible, and Brute beaſts, and void of reaſon, and able to iudge, and conceiue nothing. Yet he bluſheth not to ſay, The people of the Latine Church is ſufficiently inſtructed, touching the Sacrament: And that more ſufficiently, as it appeareth, than euer they were inſtructed in the Primitiue Church, or in the time of the Old learned Fathers. Verily Ignorance is eaſily learned: They may ſone be taught, to know nothing. But the Doctrine, that hee meaneth, ſtandeth in Tranſubſtantiation, and Reall Preſence, and other like matters incident vnto the ſame, ſuch as the Godly people in the Old times neuer learned. Howbeit, if the people were thoroughly inſtructed, and knew the meaning of all Myſteries, would M. Harding thereof conclude, That therefore they ſhould not heare the Words of Conſecration? Is this the Logicke of Louaine? Who euer taught him to frame ſuch a Syllogiſmus? In what Forme, in what Mood may it ſtand? How may this Antecedent, and this Conſequent ioine together?

Articul. 15. Diuiſione 7.

But, where he addeth, That in conſideration hereof, the Fathers thought it conuenient, the words of Conſecration ſhould be pronounced in Silence, this, beſides other great wants, is alſo a great vntruth, to make vp his ſimple Syllogiſmus. For what were theſe Fathers? what names had they? where dwelt they? In what Councell, in what Country met they? This is a very ſtrange caſe, that, being Fathers, and ſuch Fathers, able to alter the Traditions of the Apoſtles, and the whole ſtate of the Church, no man ſhould know them, but only M. Harding.

As for S. Baſil, whoſe name he much abuſeth to this purpoſe, it is plaine, that he ſpeaketh not, neither of the Sacrament, nor of the words of Conſecration. And heare, good Chriſtian Reader, marke, I beſeech thee, the circumſpection, and conſtancie of M. Harding. For proofe of his late inuented order of the Latine Church, he ſheweth vs examples of the Greeke Church: and to auouch his Conſecration in Silence, he allegeth the Authoritie of S. Baſil, who by his owne Confeſſion, euermore pronounced the ſame aloud with open voice, and neuer in Silence. He ſhould neither ſo vnaduiſedly auouch the names of Ancient Fathers, nor haue ſo ſmall regard vnto his Reader. True it is, as S. Baſil ſaith,

Familiar

Familiar vſe breedeth contempt. And for that cauſe Pope Innocentius ſaith, The wordes of Conſecration were commanded to be ſaid in Silence, Ne Sacroſancta verba vileſcerent: Leſt the holy words ſhould be deſpiſed. The like hereof is ſurmiſed alſo by Iohn Billet. Thomas of Aquine ſaith, That the Oblation, and Conſecration belong onely to the Prieſt, and that therefore the words be ſpoken in Silence, as nothing pertaining to the people. But if the people be thus naturally inclined, the leſſe they heare, or know things, the more to haue them in admiration, then were it good, they ſhould neuer heare, neither the Wordes of Baptiſme, nor any part of the Goſpell, nor the Lords Prayer, nor the Name of God, or Chriſt, no nor the Maſſe it ſelfe. And, as now their eares be barred from hearing the wordes, that make the Sacrament, ſo were it good policie, their eies were alſo barred, from ſeeing the Sacrament. For naturally contempt groweth as well of Sight, as of Hearing, or rather more. For by M. Hardings ſkill, theſe were good waies, to breede reuerence in the people, and to increaſe Deuotion. But this is an vnreuerent reuerence, and a diſordered honour of God. The people of God is not made, to ſerue the Sacraments: but the Sacraments are made to ſerue the people. But theſe be the ſecret workes, and policies of Satan, to make the ſimple beleeue, they Reuerence the Sacraments, and yet vnderſtand no part, neither of the meaning, nor of the vſe of the Sacraments. Lactantius ſaith: Hinc fida ſilentia inſtituta ſunt ab hominibus callidis, vt neſciret populus, quid coleret: Therefore ſuttle and crafty men deuiſed to haue their Sacrifices wrought in Silence, that the people ſhould not know what thing they honoured for their God.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuiſion.

If in the Old Law Prieſts were choſen (as S Ambroſe writeth) to couer the Arke of the Teſtament, becauſe it is not lawfull for all perſons to ſee the depth of Myſteries: If the Sons of Caath by Gods appointment did only beare the Arke, and thoſe other Holy things of the Tabernacle on their ſhoulders, whenſoeuer the children of Iſrael remooued, and marched forward in the Wilderneſſe, being Cloſely folded, and lapt within vailes, curtaines, and pals by the Prieſts: and might not at no time touch, nor ſee the ſame vpon paine of death, which were but Figures of this: how much more is this high, and worthy Myſterie to bee honoured with Secretneſſe, Cloſenеſſe, and Silence?

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Yéere M. Harding ſéemeth to reaſon thus: In the time of the Old Teſtament it was not lawfull, for euery of the people, to behold the Arke of God, and the things therein contained: Ergo, the Prieſt ought to pronounce the words of Conſecration in Silence, and ſecretly to himſelfe. This ſimple reaſon holdeth from Moſes, to Chriſt: from the Old Teſtament, to the New: from Seeing, to Hearing: and to be ſhort, from ſomewhat, to nothing: and ſerueth onely to controle all the Ancient Fathers of the Church, who, as M. Harding knoweth, and hath alreadie in part confeſſed, neuer pronounced theſe wordes in ſuch ſecret ſort, nor euer vſed theſe policies for increaſe of Reuerence. Notwithſtanding M. Harding, the better to leade along his ſimple Reader, hath cunningly drawen in the names of two old Fathers, Ambroſe, and Origen, to the intent to make his owne Concluſion to ſéeme theirs. And thus vnder his painted couerings, and Vailes of Eloquence, hee ſoldeth vp Cloſely, not the Arke of God, but, as his wont is, great Vntruths.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuiſion.

For this cauſe, as they report, ſaith Carolus Magnus, that noble, vertuous, and learned Emperor, writing to his Schoolemaſter Alcuinus our Countriman, and firſt teacher of Philoſophie in Paris: It is become a Cuſtome in the Church, that the Canon, and Conſecration be ſaid by the Prieſt Secretly, that thoſe words ſo Holy, and pertaining to ſo great a Myſterie, ſhould not grow in contempt, whiles all in maner through common vſe bearing them away, would ſing them in the high waies, in the ſtreets, and in other places, where it were not thought conuenient. Whereof it is told, that before this Cuſtome was receiued, Shepheards when they ſang them in the field, were by Gods hand ſtricken. Luther himſelfe in Præceptorio, is much againſt them, that would haue the Canon of the Maſſe to bee pronounced with a loud voice for the better vnderſtanding.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

It appeareth, M. Harding is much ſcanted of good Authorities, when he is thus driuen by Tables, and Fables, to counteruaile the Tradition of the Apoſtles: and that, by ſuch Fables, as he himſelfe is faine to cut off in the middeſt, and cannot truly report without ſhame. Howbeit, nothing commeth amiſſe, that may ſerue to aſtonne the ſimple. Such grounds be ſufficient for ſuch Doctrine. The tale, as it is told by Innocentius, and Durandus amongſt other Fables, is this: Certaine Shepheards, hauing by often hearing learned the wordes of Conſecration, began to practiſe the ſame amongſt themſelues, ouer their Bread, in the field, vpon a ſtone. Suddenly the Bread was Fleſh: the poore men were amaſed:

amaſed: God was angry: Fire came from Heauen, and burnt them vp: not one left aliue to tell theſe tidings. Hereupon, ſaith M. Harding, this Law was made. For view of the likelihood hereof, they ſay, that the Prieſt himſelfe, be he neuer ſo holy, vnleſſe he haue his Alter, his Superaltar, his Chalice, his Corporaſſe, his Lights, his Veſtiments, and all other appurtenances neceſſary: Vnleſſe he ſtedfaſtly eie, and behold the Bread: vnleſſe he pronounce all theſe fiue words with one breth, without ſtop: and vnleſſe he haue a ſpeciall intent, and minde to worke Conſecration, he laboreth in vaine, and can neuer Conſecrate. Yet theſe poore Shepheards, not being Prieſts, for ought that we know, nor hauing either Alter, or Superaltar, or Veſtiments, or any knowledge of theſe Cautels, nor intention, or minde to worke Conſecration, yet notwithſtanding, had Conſecrate ſuddenly before they were ware. By theſe it may be gathered, that Conſecration is eaſier for a Shepheard, than for a Prieſt. But when theſe Shepheards were all ſlaine in the place, where they ſtood, and not one left aliue to report theſe doings, M. Harding ſhould haue told vs, by what Angell, or Archangell, or other ſecret Reuelation, this tale afterward came to light. His Reader would alſo long to know, in what Kingdom, or in what Country, in what Kings, or Popes daies theſe things happened: in what Chronicle, in what Story they were recorded. Otherwiſe he will ſuſpect, M. Harding found it in the Shepheards Calender. And touching this New Decree for Silence, and Secreſie, M. Harding ſhould haue taught vs, in what Councel, in what Synod, in what Conuocation, in what Diet, in what Country, and at what time it was determined: who was Legat at the doing, who was Referendarie, who was Preſident, who was Preſent. If he haue nothing to ſay, his tale hath loſt his grace, and will be thought a Shepheards Fable.

But hereof, theſe two things M. Harding might well haue learned: Firſt, that before theſe ſtrange vnknowen Shepheards gaue this attempt, the Conſecration was euerywhere pronounced aloud: And farther, that the ſame Conſecration was pronounced in the Common knowen Mother tongue of euery Country: that the Shepheards might learne it, and vnderſtand it: Vnleſſe M. Harding will happily ſay, They were Greeke, or Latine Shepheards.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuiſion.

The Fathers of the Primitiue Church had this Sacrament in ſuch reuerence, and honor, that they excluded ſome ſorts of Faithfull people from being preſent at the celebration of it, thinking them vnworthy not only to heare the myſticall words of Conſecration pronounced, but alſo to ſee the formes of the outward Elements, and to be in the Church, whiles that moſt holy Sacrifice was offered. They were theſe, Catechumeni, Energumeni, and Pœnitentes. The firſt were learners of our beleefe, who, as they were daily inſtructed, beleeued in Chriſt: and as S. Auguſtine writeth, bare Chriſts Croſſe in their forehead, and marked themſelues with the ſame. The ſecond were ſuch, as notwithſtanding they had beene Chriſtned, yet for the Inconſtancie of their minde were vexed with vncleane Spirits. The third ſort were they, who for their ſinnes committed, had not yet made an end of doing their open penance. All theſe were iudged by the Gouernors of the Church at the beginning vnworthy to be preſent at theſe holy Myſteries. Now if this great reuerence towards the holy things, in them was iuſtly praiſed, the admitting of all ſorts of people, not onely to be preſent, and to behold the ſame, but alſo to heare, and vnderſtand the Words of Conſecration (218) (that hath thus alwaies beene honored with ſilence, and ſecretneſſe) cannot ſeem to wiſe, zealous, and godly men, a thing commendable: ſpecially in theſe times, in which the holy Chriſtian Diſcipline of the Church is looſed, and vtterly ſhaken off, and no difference nor account of any diuerſitie is made betweene the perfit and godly people, and them, that ought to doe open penance, that be poſſeſſed with Diuels, and be infamous for hainous and notorious crimes committed.

Truth is full.

The 218. Vntruth For the Contrarie is knowen, and euident.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The reuerence, that M. Harding preſumeth was giuen only to this Sacrament, was giuen likewiſe, and in as ample ſort to the Sacrament of Baptiſme. And, as the Catechumeni were ſequeſtred from the preſence, and ſight of the one Sacrament, ſo were they alſo ſequeſtred from the other. In the Councell holden at Arauſica it is written thus: Catechumeni ad Baptiſterium nunquam admittendi ſunt: The Catechumeni may neuer be admitted to the place of Baptiſme. S. Chryſoſtome, touching the words of Baptiſme, writeth thus: Verba Dei, quæ norunt Fideles, in Aquæ Lauacro per Sacerdotem pronuntiata, tanquam in vtero quodam, Formant, ac Regenerant eum, qui Baptizatur: The words of God, which the Faithfull know, being pronounced by the Prieſt in the Water of Baptiſme, doe Forme, and Regenerate him, that is Baptiſed, as if it were in the Mothers wombe. Likewiſe again he ſaith: Cupiam ſanè verba illa clarè proferre, &c. Faine would I in plaine ſort vtter theſe words (of Baptiſme) if the preſence of theſe vngodly men, the Heathens, did not let me. They cauſe my interpretation to be the harder: I may not ſpeake plainly, nor publiſh our Myſteries becauſe of them. So ſaith Cyrillus: Dicerem de Baptiſmo alia, niſi vererer non initiatorum aures: Touching Baptiſme, I would ſay more, ſauing that I doubt the eares of theſe prophane people, that are not Chriſtned. To like purpoſe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Opera noſtra bona vident etiam Pagani: Sacramenta verò noſtra noſtra occultantur illis: The Heathens may ſee our good workes: But our Sacrament (that is, our Baptiſme, and our Lords Supper) are hidden from them. The like maye be ſaid both of Publike, and Solemne Prayers, & alſo of the vnderſtanding of the Scriptures. Chryſoſtom ſaith: Quid Oratione potentius? Et Catechumenis quidem hoc nondum permiſſum eſt, &c. What thing is there more mightie than the Solemne Prayer? (of the Church:) Yet is it not lawfull for the Catechumeni to vſe the ſame. For they are not yet come to that boldneſſe. But you (being Chriſtened) are commanded to pray for the whole world, and for the Church. Thus, like as for reuerence of the Myſterie, the Catechumeni might not be preſent at the Miniſtration of the Sacrament of Chriſts Bodie, euen ſo for like reuerence, they might not be preſent, either at the Sacrament of Baptiſme, nor at the ſolemne Common Prayers. But now let vs weigh M. Hardings reaſons. In the old time (ſaith he) the Catechumeni, which were onely Nouices in the Faith, and as yet vnchriſtened, and other Renegates, Frantike, and vngodly people, might not be preſent at the Holy Myſteries: Ergo, Now the godly Faithfull people may not heare the words of Conſecration. No man would vſe ſuch Logike, but M. Harding. And yet this, he thinketh, for Wiſe, Zelous, and Godly men is ſufficient. As for the reſt, indeed M. Harding, as a man of trauell, that hath beene in Rome, and hath ſeene Biſhops, and Cardinals men of warre: Children, and Boies ſet in the higheſt Degrées, and Dignities of the Church: Open Stewes ſo dearely rented: ſo many thouſand Courtegians ſo well regarded: Prieſts ſo freely allowed to keepe their Concubines: The Church of God turned into a Caue of Theeues: Such corruption in the Clergie: ſuch corruption in the People: So little difference betweene Wife, and Harlot: Honeſt, and Vnhoneſt: Godly, and Vngodly: and, as Bernard ſaith of them, The Seruants of Chriſt, ſeruing Antichriſt: And all this ſuffered without Correction, and well allowed of, and accounted Catholike: ſeeing, I ſay, the Church of God in Rome thus died, he may iuſtly complaine of corruption of life, and looſeneſſe of Diſcipline. Howbeit, it were hard hereof to conclude, that therefore no man may heare the words of Conſecration. Verily it is thought lawfull for Vſurers, Theeues, Whoores, Murderers, Traitors, and all other like, to be preſent, and to heare Maſſe, without exception.

Chryſoſtom. ad popul. Antiochen. hom. 79.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuiſion.

Whereas in old times, when by holeſome Diſcipline the Faithfull people were kept in Godly awe, and obedience, that Prayer alſo, which was laid ouer the Oblation before Conſecration, (219) was pronounced cloſely, and in Silence: and therefore it was called of the Latines Secreta, of the Greekes, Myſtica oratio, meaning thereby, that it ought not to be vttered openly, and made Common.

(219) The 219. Vntrueth. For the ſame ſecret Prayer was pronounced aloud, as ſhall appeare.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Here M. Harding, for want of other proofes, preſumeth of himſelfe, that in Old times the Prayer before Conſecration, was pronounced, as he ſaith, Cloſely, and in ſilence. And that he gheſſeth onely by his word, Secreta: whith is a terme peculiar onely to his Maſſe booke: and in the old Catholike Fathers was neuer found. And yet doth not the ſame import any ſuch ſilence, or ſecreſie, as M. Harding ſuppoſeth. For ſo Gerardus Lorichius writeth of it: Non arbitrandum eſt, Orationem eam dici Secretam, quaſi non liceat Laicis, illam vel noſſe, vel audire: Sed quòd iuxta atque Canon, non canetur voce alteriori: We may not thinke, that the Prayer is called, Secreta, for that it is not lawfull for the Lay people to know it, or to heare it: but onely, for that it is not ſung out with loud voice, as is the Canon. Therefore M. Harding concludeth this matter with two vntrueths both together.

Gerard. Lorichius lib. 2.

Thus, notwithſtanding this new dumbe Ceremonie hath beene only receiued in the Church of Rome, and no where elſe, and that onely for a time, and not from the beginning, and therefore meere particular, and no way Vniuerſall, and ſo not Catholike: Notwithſtanding alſo it be vtterly void of any ſhew, either of the Scriptures, or of the old Councels, or Ancient Fathers, or of any maner Antiquitie, Yet M. Harding thinketh himſelfe well able to maintaine it as he doth the reſt, againſt S. Ambroſe, againſt S. Auguſtine, againſt S Chryſoſtome, againſt Leo, againſt his owne Clemens, againſt the whole Primitiue Church, both Greeke, and Latine, and againſt the Decrees, and Traditions of the Apoſtles, and againſt his owne knowledge, and, I feare me, alſo againſt his owne Conſcience.

OF THE SACRIFICE.

THE SEVENTEENTH ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that the Priest had then Authoritie to offer vp Christ vnto his Father.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

Christ is offered vp to his Father after three maners. Figuratiuely, Truely with Bloodshedding, and Sacramentally, or Mystically. In Figure, or Signification he was offered in the Sacrifices made to God both in the time of the Law of Nature, and also in the time of the Law written. And therefore S. Iohn calleth Christ the Lamb, which was killed from the beginning of the world, meaning in Figure. The Sacrifices of Abel, Noe, and Abraham, and all those of the people of Israel commanded by the Law of Moses, figured, and signified Christ. For which respect chiefly, the Law is reported of S. Paul, to haue the shadow of the good things to come. S. Augustine writing against Faustus the Heretike, saith: Testamenti Veteris Sacrificia omnia multis, & variis modis vnum Sacrificium, cuius nunc memoriam celebramus, significauerunt? All the Sacrifices of the Old Testament signified by many, and sundry waies this one Sacrifice, whose memorie wee doe now celebrate. And in an other place he saith, * That in those Fleshly Sacrifices, there was a signification of Christs Flesh, which he should offer for sinnes, and of his Blood, which he should shed for the remission of our sinnes.

Threefold oblation of Christ. Agnus occisus ab origine mundi. Apoc. 13. Heb. 10. Lib. 6. cap. 5. De Fide ad Petrum Diaconum, ca. 16.

* M. Harding hath purposely maimed this place of S. Augustine, as shall appeare.

Truely, and with Bloodshedding, Christ was offered on the Crosse in his owne person, whereof S. Paul saith, Christ gaue himselfe for vs, that he might redeeme vs from all iniquitie. And againe, Christ hath loued vs, and hath deliuered himselfe for vs an Oblation, and Sacrifice to God into a sweet sauour.

Tit. 2. Ephes. 5.

Sacramentally, or in Mysterie, Christ is offered vp to his Father in the daily Sacrifice of the Church vnder the Forme of Bread, and Wine, truely and indeed, not in respect of the maner of offering; but in respect of his very Bodie, and Blood, really (that is, in deed) present, as it hath beene sufficiently prooued heere before.

Christ offred, not in respect of the maner of offering.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The greater, and worthier the worke is, that our Aduersaries haue imagined, that is, for a Mortall, and a Miserable man to offer vp the Immortall Sonne of God vnto his Father, and that Really, and indeed, the more ought the same, either by manifest words, or by necessarie collection expressly, and plainly to be prooued. For no man taketh honour, and office vnto himselfe, but he that is called, and appointed thereto by God. But for ought, that may appeare by any Clause, or Sentence, either of the New Testament, or of the Old, God neuer appointed any such Sacrifice to be made by any Mortal Creature. And Theophylact saith: Iesus eijciendo Boues, & Columbas, præsignauit, non vltra opus esse animalium Sacrificio, sed Oratione: Iesus throwing the Oxen, and Doues out of the Temple, signified, that they should no longer haue need of the Sacrifice of beasts, but of praier.

Theophylact. in Matthæ. cap. 21.

Howbeit, the old learned Fathers, as they often times delighted themselues with these words, Sabbatum, Parasceue, Pascha, Pentecoste, and such other like Termes of the Old Law, notwithstanding the Obseruation, and Ceremonie thereof were then abolished, & out of vse: Euen so likewise they delighted themselues often times with these words: Sacerdos, Altare, Sacrificium, the Sacrificer, the Altar, the Sacrifice, notwithstanding the vse thereof were then clearely expired: onely for that the eares of the People, as well of the Iewes, as of the Gentils, had bin long acquainted with the same. Therefore Pachymeres the Paraphrast writing vpon Dionysius, saith thus: Presbyterum appellat Sacerdotem, vt etiam in Cœlesti Hierarchia: idque vsus iam obtinuit: Him, that is the Priest, or Elder, he calleth the Sacrificer, as he doth also in his Cœlestiall Hierarchie: And the same word, Sacrificer, is now obteined by Custome. In this sense S. Paul saith of himselfe: Sacrifico Euangelium Dei: I sacrifice the Gospell of God. And Origen saith: Sacrificale opus est, annuntiare Euangelium: It is a worke of Sacrifice, to Preach the Gospell. So the learned Bishop Nazianzenus saith vnto his people: Hostiam vos ipsos obtuli: I haue offered vp you for a Sacrifice. So saith S. Chrysostome: Ipsum mihi Sacerdotium est, Prædicare, & Euangelizare. Hanc offero oblationem: My whole Priesthood is, to Teach, and to Preach the Gospell. This is my Oblation: This is my Sacrifice. Thus the holy Fathers alluding to the orders, and Ceremonies of Moses Law, called the preaching of the Gospell a Sacrifice: notwithstanding indeed it were no Sacrifice.

Pachymeres. pag. 401. καὶ σύνηθεια ἐκράτησεν. Roman. 15. Origen. in Epi. ad Rom. li. 10. Nazian. in Orationem ad Pleb. Chrysostom. in Epist ad Rom. Hom. 29.

Now, to come to M. Hardings words. Three waies, saith hee, Christ is offered vp vnto his his Father. In a figure, as in the old Law: Indeed, and Bloodly, as vpon the Crosse: In a Sacrament, or Mysterie, as in the New Testament. Of which three waies, the Bloody Oblation of Christ vpon the Crosse, is the very true, and onely Propitiatorie Sacrifice for the sinnes of the world. The other two, as in respect, and maner of signifying, they are sundry, so in effect, and substance, they are all one. For, like as in the Sacraments of the Old Law was expressed the Death of Christ, that was to come: Euen so in the Sacraments of the New Law of the Gospell, is expressed the same Death of Christ already past. As we haue Mysteries, so had they Mysteries: As we Sacrifice Christ, so did they Sacrifice Christ: As the Lamb of God is slaine vnto vs, so was the same Lamb of God slaine vnto them. S. Augustine saith: Tunc Christus Venturus, modò Christus Venit. Venturus, & venit, diuersa verba sunt: Sed idem Christus: Then was, Christ shall come: Now is, Christ Is come. Shall come, and, Is come, are sundry words: But Christ is all one. Againe in like comparison betweene the Law of Moses, and the Gospell of Christ, he saith thus: Videte, Fide manente, Signa variata. In Signis diuersis eadem Fides: Behold, the Faith remaining, the (Sacraments, or) Signes are changed. The Signes, or Sacraments being diuers, the Faith is one. Auguſt De vtilitate Pœniten. cap. 1. Auguſt. in Iohan. tracta. 26.

But here hath M. Harding done great, and open wrong vnto S. Augustine, wilfully suppressing, and drowning his words, & vncourteously commanding him to silence in the middest of his tale. Wherein also appeareth some suspition of no simple dealing. S. Augustines words touching this whole matter, are these: In illis Carnalibus Victimis Figuratio fuit Carnis Christi, quam pro nobis fuerat oblaturus, & Sanguinis, quem erat effusurus in Remissionem peccatorum: In isto autem Sacrificio Gratiarum actio est, & Commemoratio Carnis Christi, quam pro nobis obtulit, & Sanguinis quem pro nobis idem Deus effudit. In illis Sacrificijs, quid nobis esset donandum, Figuratè significabatur: In hoc autem Sacrificio, quid nobis iam donatum sit, euidenter ostenditur. In illis Sacrificijs prænuntiabatur Filius Dei pro impijs occidendus: In hoc autem, pro impijs annuntiatur occisus: In those fleshly Sacrifices (of the Iewes) there was a Figure of the Flesh of Christ, which he would afterward offer for vs, and of the Blood, which he would afterward shed for the Remission of Sinne: But in this Sacrifice (of the New Testament) there is a Thanksgiuing, and a Remembrance of the Flesh, which he hath already offered for vs, and of the Blood, which hee beeing God, hath already shed for vs. In those Sacrifices it was represented vnto vs vnder a Figure, what thing should be giuen vnto vs: But in this Sacrifice it is plainly set forth, what thing is already giuen vs. In those Sacrifices it was declared, that the Sonne of God should be slaine for the wicked: But in this Sacrifice it is plainly preached vnto vs, that the same Sonne of God hath already beene slaine for the wicked. Auguſt. de Fide ad Petrum Diacon. cap. 19.

Likewise againe he saith: Huius Sacrificij Caro, & Sanguis ante Aduentum Christi per Victimas Similitudinum promittebatur: in Passione per ipsam Veritatem reddebatur: Post Ascensum verò Christi per Sacramentum Memoriæ celebratur: The Flesh and Blood of this Sacrifice, before the comming of Christ, was promised by Sacrifices of Resemblance: the same in his Passion (vpon the Crosse) was giuen in Trueth, and indeed: But after his Ascension it is solemnised by a Sacrament of Remembrance. Auguſt. contra Faustum, lib. 20. cap. 21.

This is the Difference that S. Augustine noteth betweene the Sacraments of the Old Law, and the Sacraments of the New. Therefore, the words, that M. Harding hath hereunto added, Christ is offered vp vnto his Father, and that vnder the Formes of Bread and Wine, yea, and that truely, and indeed, are his owne onely words, confidently, and boldly presumed of himselfe, neuer vsed, neither by Saint Augustine, nor by any other Ancient godly Father.

But, whereas he addeth further, That Christ is indeed, and verily offered by the Priest, albeit, as he saith, not in respect of the maner of offering, but onely in respect of the presence of his Bodie; Either he vnderstandeth not, what himselfe meaneth: or else with a vaine distinction of cloudie words without sense, he laboureth to dazell his Readers eies. For what a fantasie is this, to say, Christ is offered Verily, and indeed, and yet not in Respect of the Maner of offering? What Respect? What maner is this? Wherefore come these blinde Mysteries abroad without a glosse? Which of all the old Doctors, or holy Fathers euer taught vs thus to speake? Certainly, as he saith, Christ is Really offered, and yet not in respect of the Maner of Offering: So may he also say, Christ died vpon the Crosse, and yet not in respect of the maner of dying. By such Maners, and such Respects he may make of Christian Religion, what him listeth.

If he thinke, somewhat to shadow the matter with these words of the Councell of Nice, Sine Sacrificio Oblatus; Let him consider aforehand, it will not help him. For the holy Fathers in that Councell neither say, that Christ is Really offered by the Priest, nor seeme to vnderstand these strange Respects, and Maners of Offering. They agree fully in sense with that is before alleaged of Saint Augustine: In this sacrifice the Death of Concil. Nicen. Ἀσύτως θύο. μένος.

Contra Faustũ lib.20.cap.21. Chrysostom. in Epist. ad Hebr. hom.17.

Christ is solemnized by a Sacrament of Remembrance. And with that S. Chrysostom saith: Hoc Sacrificium, Exemplar illius est: This Sacrifice is an example of that Sacrifice, Thus the death of Christ is renued before our eies. Yet Christ indeed neither is Crucified, nor dieth, nor sheddeth his Blood, nor is Substantially Present, nor Really Offered by the Priest. In this sort the Councell saith, Christ is offered, ἀδύνατον, without Sacrifice. So S. Augustine saith: Quod ab omnibus appellatur Sacrificium, Signum est Veri Sacrificij: The thing, that of all men is called a Sacrifice is a Token, or a Signe of the True Sacrifice. Likewise againe he saith: Vocatur ipsa Immolatio, quæ Sacerdotis manibus fit, Christi Passio, Mors, Crucifixio, non rei veritate, sed Significante Mysterio: The Sacrifice, that is wrought by the hands of the Priest, is called the Passion, the Death, the Crucifying of Christ: not indeed, but by a Mysterie Signifying.

Augustin. De Ciuitate Dei. li.10.cap.5. De Conse. Dist.2. Hoc est.

And whereas M. Harding saith further, Christ is offered onely in respect of the presence of his Bodie; Neither would the Reall Presence, beeing granted, import the Sacrifice (for Christ was Really Present in his Mothers Wombe, and in the Crib, where notwithstanding he was no Sacrifice) nor hath M. Harding hitherto any way proued his Reall Presence.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuision.

The two first maners of the offering of Christ, our aduersaries acknowledge and confesse: The third they deny vtterly. And so they rob the Church of the greatest treasure it hath or may haue, the Body and Blood of our Sauiour Christ once offered vpon the Crosse with painfull suffering for our redemption, and now daily offered in the Blessed Sacrament in remembrance. For which we haue so many proofes, as for no one point of our Christian religion moe. And herein I am more encombred with store than straited with lack; and doubt more, what I may leaue, than what I may take. Wherefore thinking it shall appeare to the wise more skill, to shew discretion in the choice of places, rather than learning in recital of number, though we are ouer peartly thereto prouoked by M. Iewels vaunting and insolent challenge: I intend herein to be short, verily shorter, than so large a matter requireth: and to bring for proofe a few such authorities, (I meane a few in respect of the multitude that might be brought) as ought in euery mans iudgement to be of great weight, and estimation.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Touching the Oblation of Christs Bodie, we beleeue, and confesse as much, as the Holy Ghost hath opened in the Scriptures. Whereas M. Harding saith, Christs bodie is offered vp by the Priest vnto God the Father, in remembrance of that bodie, that Christ himselfe offered vpon the Crosse. He seemeth not to consider the inconstancie, and folly of his owne tale. For it is well knowen to all Creatures, not onely Christians but also Iewes, Turkes, and Saracens, that Christ was Crucified vpon the Crosse: but that Christ should be Sacrificed by a Mortall man, Inuisibly, and, as they say, vnder the Formes of Bread, & Wine, and that Really, and indeed, it is a thing so farre passing the common sense of Christian knowledge, that the best learned, and wisest of the Ancient learned Christian Fathers could neuer know it.

Therefore this is, not onely the proouing of a thing knowen, by a thing vnknowen: & of a thing most certaine, by a thing vncertaine: but also the Confirmation of a manifest Trueth, by an open Errour.

Neither do we rob the Church of God of that most Heauenly, and most comfortable Sacrifice of Christs Bodie: But rather we open, and disclose the errours, wherewith certaine of late yeares haue wilfully deceiued the Church of God. We know, That Christs Bodie was rent for our Sinnes, and that by his wounds we are made whole: That Christ in his Bodie carried our Sinnes vpon the tree: and by the Oblation thereof, once made vpon the Crosse, hath sanctified vs for euer, and hath purchased for vs euerlasting Redemption: And, That there is none other Name (or Sacrifice) vnder Heauen, whereby we can be saued, but only the Name (or Sacrifice) of Iesus Christ. I recken, who so teacheth this Doctrine, leaueth not the Church of God without a Sacrifice.

Esai.53. 1.Pet.2. Hebr.x.9. Actor.4.

Touching the multitude of Authorities, wherewith M. Harding findeth himselfe so much encombred, the greater his store is, the more will wise men require his discretion, & skill in the choice. His choise will seeme vnskilfull, if he alledge his Authorities beside his purpose. His purpose, and promise is to proue, that the Priest hath good warrant, to offer vp Christ the Son of God vnto his Father. Which purpose if he neuer vouchsafe once to touch, but range abroad, as his manner is, & roaue idely at matters impertinent, then must we needes say, he bewraieth his want, and bringeth his great store out of credit. So shall the offer, that is gently made him, seeme to stand vpon good, and conuenient termes, of Trueth, and Modestie. So shall his store-full Haunt of all things, performing nothing, vnto the wise (to vse his owne words) seeme peart, and insolent.

M. Harding.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuision.

The Scripture it ſelfe miniſtring euident proofe for the Oblation of Chriſt to his Father by the Prieſts of the New Teſtament, in the Inſtitution of this Holy Sacrament, in the figure of Melchiſedech, and in the Prophecie of Malachi the Prophet: the authorities of the Fathers needed not to be alledged, were not the ſame Scripture by the ouerthwart, and falſe interpretations of our aduerſaries wreſted, and turned to a contrary ſenſe, to the horrible ſeducing of the vnlearned.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Alas, what tale is there ſo weake, that M. Harding will refuſe, to ſtrike withall? To proue his imagined Kind of Sacrifice, he hath brought vs forth out of his great ſtore, the Example of Melchiſedech, and the Prophecie of Malachi: As if hee would reaſon thus: God ſaith vnto Chriſt, Thou art a Prieſt for euer according to the order of Melchiſedech: Or, God ſaith by the Prophet Malachi, A pure Oblation ſhall be offered vnto me in euerie place: Ergo, The Prieſt hath Authoritie, and power, to offer vp the Son of God vnto his Father. If he had not had good choice, and ſtore of Authorities, he would neuer haue begun with theſe. Pſalme 110. Mal. 1.

But he addeth further, as matter of grieuance, That theſe plaine Scriptures, by the ouerthwart, and falſe Interpretations of his Aduerſaries, are wreſted, and turned to a contrary ſenſe, and that, (as he ſaith) to the horrible ſeducing of the Vnlearned. Doubtleſſe, here is a very horrible accuſation. Howbeit, if wee happily had miſtaken theſe places, and our errour therein were fully proued, yet ſhould not M. Harding in ſuch horrible termes reproue vs, for doing that thing once, that he and his fellows doe ſo often. But by what words, by what falſe Interpretation, into what peruerſe or Heretical Senſe, haue wee ſo horribly wreſted theſe Scriptures? M. Harding is wiſe, is eloquent, is watchfull, is circumſpect, is faſt addicted vnto his cauſe: he diſſembleth, and leaueth nothing, that any way may ſerue his purpoſe. If our Errours be ſo horrible, he ſhould not haue ſpared them: If there bee none, he ſhould not thus haue touched them. If M. Harding winke at them, who can ſee them? If M. Harding know them not, who can know them?

Perhaps he will ſay, Wee expound the Prophecie of Malachi, ſometimes of Prayer, & ſometimes of the Preaching of the Goſpell. This was neuer the Prophets meaning. This is an horrible wreſting of the Scriptures. Thus, no doubt, M. Harding will ſay: for otherwiſe he can ſay nothing. And yet he knoweth, and, being learned, cannot chuſe but know, that this is the Old learned Catholike Fathers Expoſition, touching, theſe words of the Prophet Malachie, and not ours. He knoweth, that the Ancient Father Tertullian ſaith thus: The pure Sacrifice, that Malachias ſpeaketh of, that ſhould be offered vp in euery place, Eſt Prædicatio Euangelij vſque ad finem Mundi: Is the Preaching of the Goſpell vnto the end of the world: And in an other place: Simplex Oratio de Conſcientia pura: The Sacrifice, that Malachi meant, is a deuout Prayer proceeding from a pure Conſcience. He knoweth, that S. Hierom expoundeth the ſame words in this wiſe: Dicit, Orationes Sanctorum Domino offerendas eſſe, non in vna Orbis Prouincia Iudæa, ſed in omni loco: The Prophet Malachi meaneth hereby, That the Praiers of holy people ſhould be offered vnto God, not onely in Iewrie, that was but one prouince of the world, but alſo in all places. He knoweth, that Euſebius calleth the ſame Sacrifice of Malachi, The Sacrifice, and the Incenſe of Prayer. Thus the holy Catholike Fathers expounded theſe words of the Prophet Malachi: and yet were they not therefore iudged either ouerthwart wreſters of the Scriptures, or horrible deceiuers of the people. Tertul. contra. Iudæos. Tertull. contra Marcion. lib. 4. Hieronym. in. 1. Caput. Malac. Euſeb. De Demonſtr. lib. 1. τὸ δι' ἐυχῶν θυμίαμα.

Now, of the other ſide, if it may pleaſe M. Harding to ſhew forth but one Ancient Doctor, or Father, that either by the Example of Melchiſedech, or by force of theſe words of Malachi, will conclude, that the Prieſt hath Authoritie, and Power, to offer vp Merily, and indeed, the Sonne of God vnto his Father, he may happily win ſome credit.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuiſion.

For, whereas the Holy Euangeliſts report, that Chriſt at his laſt Supper tooke Bread, gaue thankes, brake it, and ſaid, This is my Body, which is giuen for you: Againe, this is my Blood, which is ſhed for you in remiſſion of ſinnes: By theſe words, being words of Sacrificing and offering, they ſhew, and ſet forth an Oblation in act, and deed, though the terme it ſelfe of Oblation, or Sacrifice be not expreſſed. Albeit to ſome of excellent knowledge, Datur, here ſoundeth no leſſe, than offertur, or immolatur, that is to ſay, is offered, or Sacrificed, ſpecially the addition, pro vobis, withall conſidered. For if Chriſt ſaid truely (as hee is Trueth it ſelfe, and guile was neuer found in his mouth) then was his Bodie preſently giuen, and for vs giuen, at the time he ſpake the words, that is, at his Supper. For he ſaid datur*, is giuen, not dabitur, ſhall be giuen: (221) And likewiſe was his Blood ſhed in remiſſion of ſinnes, at the time of that Supper: for the text hath Funditur*, is ſhed. But the giuing of his Body for vs, and the ſhedding of his Blood in remiſſion of ſinnes, is an Oblation of the ſame. Ergo Chriſt offered his bodie and Blood at the Supper. And thus datur, ſignifieth here as much, as offertur. Words of Oblation, without Termes of Oblation. 1. Pet. 2. The 221. Vntrueth, without any ſenſe, or ſauour. *A great Follie. For the Old Christs Blood Shed at Supper.

Here M. Harding beginneth to scanne his Tenses, to rip vp Sillables, and to hunt for Letters: And in the end buildeth vp the highest Castle of his Religion vpon a ghesse. I maruell, that so learned a man would either vse so vnlearned arguments: or, hauing such store of Authorities, as he pretendeth, would euer make so simple choice.

He saith, These words, Is giuen, Is Shed, be words of Sacrificing, though the Terme it selfe of Oblation, and Sacrifice, be not expressed. Here M. Harding, besides that he hath imagined a strange Construction of his owne, that neuer any learned man knew before, and so straggleth alone, and swarueth from all the Old Fathers, includeth also a Repugnance, & Contradiction against himselfe. For, whereas words, and termes sound both one thing, the one being meere English, the other borrowed of the Latine, M. Harding saith: Christ in the Institution of his Supper, vsed the Words of Sacrificing, and yet expressed not the Termes of Sacrificing. Such Priuiledge these men haue, with shift of termes to beguile the World. For if Christ vsed the Words of Sacrificing, how can M. Harding say, He vsed not the termes of Sacrificing? And if he vsed not the Termes (Words, and Termes being one thing) how can he say, He vsed the words?

Verily if this Latine word, Dare, be, Sacrificare: and, Giuing, be Sacrificing, then, whereas S. Paul saith, If thine enemie be thirsty, Giue him drinke: And, whereas Iudas saith, What will ye giue me, and I will deliuer him vnto you? And whereas the Foolish Virgins say, Giue vs part of your Oile, &c. In euery of these, and such other like places, by this new Diuinitie, M. Harding will be able to find a Sacrifice.

Roman. 12.
Matth. 25.

Yet, saith he, Certaine men of excellent knowledge haue thus expounded it. It seemeth very strange, that these so notable men, of so excellent Knowledge should haue no names. Perhaps he meaneth Tapper of Louaine, or Gropper of Colaine, of whom he hath borrowed the whole substance welneare of all this Article. Howbeit, the demand was of the Ancient Doctors of the Church: not of any of these, or other such petite Fathers.

But Christ saith in the Present Tense, This is my Bodie, That Is Giuen: not in the Future Tense, That Shalbe Giuen. And likewise, This is my Blood, That Presently is Shed: not in the Future Tense, That Salbe Shed. Therefore Christ Sacrificed his Bodie, and Shed his Blood presently at the Supper.

Here M. Harding is driuen to controll the Old Common Translation of the New Testament, not onely, that beareth the name of S. Hierome, and hath bene euermore generally receiued in the Church, and is allowed by the Councell of Trident, but also, that is still vsed, and continued in his owne Masse Booke. I grant. In the Greeke it is written, Datur, Is Giuen: not Dabitur, Shalbe giuen. But here the Present Tense, according to the Common Phrase of the Scriptures, is vsed for the Future. Chrysostome readeth it thus: Dabitur, Shalbe Giuen: not Datur, Is Giuen. Origen likewise readeth, not, Effundetur, Is Shed: but, Effundetur, Shalbe Shed. And in this sort Chrysostom also expoundeth it: Effundetur pro multis. Hoc dicens, ostendit, quòd Passio eius est Mysterium Salutis humanæ: quod etiam Discipulos consolatur. Shalbe shed for many. Thus saying, he sheweth, that his Passion is the Mysterie of the Saluation of mankinde: and by the same he comforteth his Disciples. Againe he saith: De Passione, & Cruce sua loquebatur: Christ (vttering these words of the Sacrament) spake of his Passion, and of his Crosse.

Chrysostom. in 1. Corin. 11.
Origen. in Matthæum, tract. 35.
Chrysostom. in Catena.

To be short, if it be true, that Christ shed his Blood at his Last Supper, and that Verily, Really, and indeed, as M. Harding alone strangely auoucheth, and no man else, I trow, beside him; then can he no more say, The same was an vnbloodie Sacrifice: And so must he yeeld vp the strongest Tower of all his hold. For if the Sacrifice, that Christ made at his Supper, were Vnbloody, how did Christ there Shed his Blood? If Christ, as M. Harding saith, did there Shed his Blood, how can that Sacrifice be called Vnbloody?

But to leaue these fantasies, and vaine shifts, Christ gaue his Bodie to be broken, and his Blood to be Shed, not at his Last Supper, but only vpon his Crosse, and no where else. There he bare our iniquities, There was he rent for our Sinnes. And in that onely respect we receiue his Bodie, and embrace it, and haue fruit of it. In this respect S. Paul saith, God forbid, I should reioice in any thing, saue only in the Crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Galat. 6.

Therefore this new Article of the Faith, of the Real Sacrificing, and Shedding of Christs Blood at the Table, neither being true in it selfe, nor hitherto by M. Harding any any

any way proued, notwithstanding the great store and choice of his Authorities: for as much as Christ neuer gaue, neither his Apostles, nor any their successors Commission to doe more in that behalfe, than he himselfe had done; To say, that any mortall man hath power, and Authoritie, Really, and indeed to Sacrifice the Son of God, it is a manifest, and wicked blasphemie: the great, and grosse errors, wherewith the Diuell, and his Disciples in the time of his Kingdome of darknesse haue deceiued the world, notwithstanding.

As for Clemens, whom M. Harding so often calleth the Apostles fellow, as he is but lately start vp, and come abroad, and therefore hath not yet gotten sufficient credit, and is here brought in dumb, and saying nothing, so is he not worthy of further answer. Howbeit M. Harding doth great wrong, otherwise to report his Authors words, than he findeth them. Truly his Clemens, whatsoeuer he were, saith not, The Priest hath Commission, or Power, to offer vp the Sonne of God. His words are plaine to the contrary: Antitypon Regalis Corporis Christi offerte: Offer ye vp (not the Body of Christ, but) the Signe, or Sacrament of the Roiall Body of Christ. Likewise againe he saith: Offerimus tibi Regi, & Deo, iuxta Institutionem Christi, Hunc Panem, & Hoc Poculum: We offer vp vnto thee, our King and God (not the very Body of thy Son Really, and indeed, but) This Bread, and this Cup, according to Christs Institution. It is a great Prerogatiue for M. Harding, both to make Doctors of his own, and also to giue them his owne Constitutions. Clemens Constit. Apostols. li. 6. cap. 30. Clemens Constit. Apostol. lib. 8.

Neither did Christ by these words, Doe ye this in my Remembrance, erect any new Succession of Sacrificers, to offer him vp Really vnto his Father: nor euer did any Ancient learned Father so expound it. Christs meaning is clere by the words, that follow. For he saith not only, Doe ye this, but he addeth also, In my Remembrance: Which doing pertaineth, not only vnto the Apostles, and their successors, as M. Harding imagineth, but also to the whole people. And therefore S. Paul saith, not only to the Ministers, but also to the whole Congregation of Corinth, As often, as ye shall eat this Bread, and drinke this Cup, Ye shall shew foorth, and publish the Lords Death, vntill he come. Likewise S. Chrysostome applieth the same, not only to the Clergie, but also to the whole people of his Church of Antioch. Thus he saith: Hoc facite in memoriam Beneficij mei, Salutis vestræ: Doe ye this in Remembrance of my Benefit, and of your Saluation. 1. Corin. 11. Chrysostom. ad popul. Antiochen. Hom. 61.

Of these weake positions M. Harding without the warrant, or authoritie of any learned Father reasoneth thus: Christ saith, This is my Bodie, that is giuen for you: Doe this in my Remembrance:

Ergo, The Priest hath power to offer vp the Son of God vnto his Father.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuision.

That Christ offered himselfe to his Father in his last Supper, and that Priests by those words, Doe this in my remembrance, haue not only authority, but also a speciall commandement to doe the same, and that the Figure of Melchisedech, and the Prophecy of Malachie pertaineth to this Sacrifice, and maketh proofe of the same: let vs see by the testimonies of the Fathers, what doctrine the Apostles haue left to the Church.

De Demonstrat. Euangel. lib. 1. cap. 10. Eusebius Cæsariensis hath these words, Horrorem afferentia Mensa Christi Sacrificia Supremo Deo offerre, per eminentissimum omnium ipsius Pontificem edocti sumus: We are taught (saith he) to offer vnto our Supreme God the Sacrifices of Christs Table, which cause vs to tremble, and quake for feare, by his Bishop highest of all. Here he calleth Christ in respect of his Sacrifice, Gods Bishop highest of all Bishops: the Sacrifices of Christs Table he calleth (222) the Body and Blood of Christ, because at the Table in his last Supper he Sacrificed and offered the same; and for that it is his very Body, and very Blood, imagination only, Phantasie, and Figure set apart, he termeth these Sacrifices, as commonly the ancient Fathers doe, horrible, causing trembling and feare. And whereas he saith, we haue been taught to offer these Sacrifices to God, doubtlesse he meaneth by these words of Christ: Doe this in my remembrance, This is my Body, which is giuen for you: This is my Blood, which is shed for you. Clement in his eight Booke often cited, speaking of the Sacrifice offered by the Apostles, commonly addeth these words, Secundùm ipsius ordinationem, or, ipso ordinante: whereby he confesseth it to be Christs own ordinance. The 222. Vntruth. For Eusebius calleth it the Sacrifice of Thanksgiuing: And saith, Memoriam offerre dedit pro Sacrificio.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

To proue, that the Priest offereth vp the Son of God, M. Harding hath here brought in Eusebius, an Ancient Father, that neuer once named any such Oblation of the Son of God. So much is he oppressed, and encumbred with his store.

True it is, The Ministration of the Holy Communion is often times of the Old learned Fathers called a Sacrifice: not for that, they thought, the Priest had authoritie, to Sacrifice the Son of God, but for that therein we offer vp vnto God, Thanks, and Praises for that great Sacrifice once made vpon the Crosse. So saith S. Augustine: In isto Sacrificio est gratiarum actio, & Commemoratio Carnis Christi, quam pro nobis obtulit: In this Sacrifice is a thanksgiuing, and a Remembrance of the Flesh of Christ, which he hath offered for vs. Likewise Eusebius saith: Christ after all other things done, made a marueilous Oblation, and August. ad Petrum Diac. ca. 19.

Dreadfull Sacrifice.

and a passing Sacrifice vnto his Father (vpon his Crosse) for the Saluation of vs all: giuing vnto vs to offer continually vnto God a Remembrance in stead of a Sacrifice. So Nazianzenus calleth the Holy Communion, A Figure of that great Mystery, of the Death of Christ.

This it is, that Eusebius calleth, The Sacrifice of the Lords Table: Which also he calleth, Sacrificium Laudis: The Sacrifice of Praise.

Euseb. De Demonst. li. 1. c. 10.

Cyrill. in Apol.

But Eusebius saith further, This Sacrifice is dreadfull, and causeth the heart to quake. M. Harding may not well gather by any force of these words, that the Son of God is Really offered vp by the Priest vnto his Father. For all things, whatsoeuer, that put vs in remembrance of the Maiesty, and Iudgements of God, of the Holy Fathers are called Dreadfull. Saint Cyril saith: Lectio Diuinarum, & Terribilium Scripturarum: The reading of the Diuine, and Terrible Scriptures. S. Chrysostome calleth the words of Baptisme, Verba arcana, & metuenda, & horribiles Canones dogmatum de Cœlo transmissorum: The Secret, and Dreadfull words, and Terrible Rules of the Doctrine, that came from Heauen. And speaking of the Hand, and Voice of the Deacon, he saith thus: Manu illa Tremenda, & continua Voce clamans, alios vocat, alios arcet: With that Terrible Hand, and continuall Voice crying, some he calleth in, and some he putteth off.

Chrysost. in 1. ad Corin. hom. 40.

This Sacrifice maketh the Heart to tremble, for that therein is laid forth the Mysterie, that was hidden from Worlds, and Generations: The horror of Sin: the Death of the Son of God: That he tooke our heauinesse, and bare our sorrowes, and was wounded for our offences, and was Rent, and Tormented for our Wickednesse: That he was carried like an innocent Lambe vnto the Slaughter, that he cried vnto his Father, O God, O my God, why hast thou thus forsaken me?

There we call to Remembrance all the Causes, and Circumstances of Christs Death: The Shame of the Crosse: The Darkning of the Aire: The Shaking of the Earth: The renting of the Vaile: The cleauing of the Rockes: The opening of the Graues: The Descending into Hell: and the Conquering of the Diuell. Therefore Chrysostome saith: Quamuis quis lapis esset, illa nocte audita, quomodò cum Discipulis tristis fuerit, quomodò traditus, quomodò ligatus, quomodò abductus, quomodò iudicatus, quomodò denique Omnia Passus, cera mollior fiet, & terram, & omnem terræ cogitationem abijciet: Any man, hearing of the order of that night, how Christ was mournfull among his Disciples, how he was deliuered, how he was bound, how he was led away, how he was arraigned, and how meekly he suffered all, that was done vnto him, were he as hard as a stone, yet would he be as soft as Wax, and would throw both the Earth, and all Earthly Cogitations away from him.

Thus saith: Nicolaus Cabasilas, one of Master Hardings late Greeke Doctors: Hoc facite in meam Commemorationem. Sed quænam est hæc Commemoratio? &c. Doe ye this in Remembrance of me. But what is this Remembrance? How do we consider our Lord in the Holy Ministration? What doe we conceiue him doing? How dealing? what suffering? what thinke we? what speake we of him? Doe we imagine of him (in that time of the Holy Mysteries) that he healed the Blind? That he raised the Dead? That he staied the Winds: Or that with a few loaues he fed thousands: which are tokens, that he was God Omnipotent? No, not so. But rather we call to remembrance such things, as declared his weaknesse: his Crosse, his Passion, his Death. Inrespect of those things he said, Doe ye this in my Remembrance. The Priest both by his words, and also by the whole Circumstance of his doing, seemeth to say, Thus Christ came to his Passion: Thus he was wounded in the side: Thus he died: Thus Blood and Water issued, and streamed from his wound These Considerations, thus laid before our eies, are able to cause any godly hart to quake, and tremble. As for the Reall offering vp of Christ in Sacrifice, that learned Father Eusebius saith nothing.

Verily, it is but a simple Sophisme, to say, This Sacrifice is Dreadfull, and causeth vs to quake: Ergo, The Priest offereth vp the Son of God vnto his Father.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuision.

That Christ Sacrificed himselfe at his Supper, Hesychius affirmeth with these words: Quod Dominus iussit (Leuit. 4.) vt Sacerdos vitulum pro peccato Oblaturus, ponat manum super caput eius, & iugulet eum coram Domino, Christum significat, quam nemo obtulit, sed nec immolare poterat, nisi semetipsum ipse ad patiendum tradidisset. Propter quod Ioan. 10. non semel dicebat, Potestatem habeo ponendi animam meam, & potestatem habeo iterum sumendi eam: sed & præuenions semetipsum in Cœna Apostolorum immolauit, quod sciunt, qui Mysteriorum percipiunt virtutem. That our Lord commanded (saith he) the Priest, which should offer a Calfe for sinne, to put his hand vpon his head, and to sticke him before our Lord, it signifieth Christ, whom no man hath offered, neither could any man Sacrifice him, except he had deliuered himselfe to suffer. For the which he said not only, I haue power to lay Ioan. 10. down my Soule, and I haue power to take it againe: But also preuenting it, he offered vp himselfe in Sacrifice in the Supper of the Apostles: which they know, that receiue the vertue of the Mysteries. By these words of Hesychius we learne, that Christ offered, and Sacrificed his Body and Blood twice. First in that Holy Supper vnbloodily, when he tooke Bread in his hands, and brake it, &c. Without Diuision of the Sacrifice, for it is but one and the same Sacrifice. And afterward on the Crosse, with Shedding of his blood, and that is it, he meaneth By the word, Preuenting.

Christ offered himselfe in a mystery, but not Really, and indeed.

The

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

We deny not, but it may well be said, Christ at his last supper offered vp himselfe vnto his Father: Albeit, not Really, and indeed, but, according to M. Hardings owne Distinction, in a Figure, or in a Mystery: in such sort, as we say, Christ was offered in the Sacrifices of the Old Law: and as S Iohn saith: Agnus Occisus ab Origine Mundi: The Lamb was slaine from the beginning of the World. As Christ was slaine at the Table, so was he Sacrificed at the Table. But he was not slaine at the Table Verily, and indeed, but only in a Mystery: Therefore he was not Sacrificed at the Table Really, and indeed, but only in a Mystery. Apocal. 13.

So saith S. Augustine: Nonne semel immolatus est Christus in semetipso? Et tamen in Sacramento, non tantùm per omnes Paschæ Solemnitates, sed etiam omni die populis immolatur. Nec vtique mentitur, qui interrogatus, eum responderit immolari. Si enim Sacramenta quandam Similitudinem earum rerum, quarum Sacramenta sunt, non haberent, omninò Sacramenta non essent: Was not Christ once offered in himselfe? And yet in (or, by way of) a Sacrament, not only at the Solemne Feast of Easter, but euery day he is offered vnto the people. And he saith no vntruth, that being demanded, maketh answer, that Christ is Sacrificed. His reason is this: For if Sacraments had not a certaine Likenesse, or Resemblance of the things, whereof they be Sacraments, then should they vtterly be no Sacraments. Augustin. Epist. 23.

Notwithstanding, Hesychius expounding the Booke of Leuiticus, to the intent he may force the whole Storie of the Life, and Death of Christ, to answer euery particular Ceremony of the Law, is sometimes driuen, to stretch, and straine the Scriptures to his purpose. So he saith, Christ is the Altar: And, Christ Incarnate in the Virgins Wombe, is the Sodden Sacrifice. Hesych. in Leuit. li. 1. cap. 4. Li. 1. ca. 2. Sacrificium Coctum.

Now, as Christ was the Altar, and as he was Sacrificed in his Mothers Wombe, euen so he Sacrificed himselfe at his Supper: not in proper, or vsuall maner of speech, but only in a Mystery signifying.

Otherwise S. Cyprian plainly openeth the whole difference of these two Sacrifices in this sort: Dedit Dominus noster in mensa, in qua Vltimum cum Apostolis participauit Conuiuium, proprijs manibus Panem, & Vinum: In Cruce verò manibus militum Corpus tradidit vulnerandum: Our Lord at the Table, whereat he receiued his last Supper with his Disciples, with his owne hands gaue (not his very Body, and very Blood Really, and indeed, but) Bread, and Wine: But vpon the Crosse, he gaue his owne Body, with the Souldiers hands to be Wounded. This, saith S. Cyprian, is the difference betweene the Sacrifice of the Table, and the Sacrifice of the Crosse: At the one, Christ gaue Bread and Wine: Vpon the other, he gaue his Body. Cyprian. de Vnctione Chrismatis.

Therefore, whereas M. Harding saith, only vpon his own warrant, That Christ Reallie Sacrificed himselfe at two sundry times, and that he twice Really Shed his Blood, First at the Table, and Afterward vpon the Crosse: The vntruth, and folly hereof is easily reproued by these plaine words of S. Paul: Semel Oblatus est, ad multorum exhaurienda peccata: He was once offered to take away the sins of many. And againe: With one Sacrifice he hath made perfit them for euer that be Sanctified. These places are clere, and without question: vnlesse M. Harding will say, that one, and, Two: and Once and Twice, be both one thing. Hebræ 9. Hebræ. 10.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuision.

And at the same very instant of time, (which is here further to be added, as a necessary point of Christian doctrine) we must vnderstand (223) that Christ offered himselfe in Heauen inuisibly (as concerning man) in the sight of his Heauenly Father, and that from that time forward that Oblation of Christ in Heauen was neuer intermitted, but continueth alwaies for our attonement with God, and shall without ceasing endure vntill the end of the world. For, as S. Paul saith, Iesus hath not entred into Temples made with hands, the samplars of the true Temples, but into Heauen it selfe, to appeare now to the countenance of God for vs. Now as this Oblation and Sacrifice of Christ endureth in Heauen continually, for as much as he is risen from the dead, and ascended into Heauen with that Bodie, which he gaue to Thomas to feele, bringing in thither his Blood, as Hesychius saith, and bearing the markes of his wounds, and there appeare before the face of God with that Thorn-prickt, Nail-boared, Speare pierced, and otherwise wounded, rent, and torne Bodie for vs: (whereby we vnderstand the vertue of his Oblation on the Crosse euer enduring, not the Oblation it selfe with renuing of paine, and sufferance continued) so we doe perpetually celebrate this Oblation and Sacrifice of Christs verie Body and Blood in the Masse, in remembrance of him, (224) commanded so to doe, vntill his comming. The 223. Vntruth, vaine, and Fantasticall, and without ground. Hebr 9. The 224. Vntruth. For Christ neuer commanded M Harding, neither to say Masse, nor to Offer vp his Body in Sacrifice.

Wherein our Aduersaries so foolishly, as wickedly scoffe at vs, as though we Sacrificed Christ againe, so as he was Sacrificed on the Crosse, that is, in Bloodly maner. But we do not so Offer or Sacrifice Christ againe: but that Oblation of him in the Supper, and ours in the Masse, is but one Oblation, the same Sacrifice, for this cause by his Diuine ordinance left vnto vs, that as the Oblation once made on the Crosse continually endureth, and appeareth before the face of God in Heauen for our behalfe, continued not by new suffering, but by perpetuall intercession for vs: So the memory of it may euer vntill his second comming ming be kept amongſt vs alſo in earth, and that thereby we may apply and bring vnto vs through Faith the great benefits, which by that one Oblation of himſelfe on the Croſſe he hath for vs procured, and daily doth procure.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

At the ſame very inſtant of time, ſaith M. Harding, when Chriſt was Sacrificed vpon the Croſſe, he offered vp himſelfe alſo in Heauen in the ſight of his heauenly Father. Which thing he enlargeth Rhetorically with a Tragicall Deſcription of a Thorn-prickt, Naile-boared, Speare-pierced, and otherwiſe rent, and Torne Body. And this, ſaith he, is a neceſſary point of Chriſtian Doctrine: And that he auoucheth Conſtantly, albeit without the word, or witneſſe of any Ancient writer, only vpon his owne credit. Whereof alſo groweth ſome ſuſpition, that his Store of Old Records, is not ſo plenteous, as it is ſuppoſed.

But where he ſaith, Chriſt was thus Inuiſibly Sacrificed in Heauen, I marueil, he ſaith not likewiſe, that Pilate, Annas, Caiphas, the Souldiers, and the Tormentors were likewiſe in Heauen, to make this Sacrifice. For, without this Company, Chriſts Blood was not

Howbeit, like as the Prayers, that Chriſt once made, and the Doctrine, that he once taught, remaine ſtill full, and effectuall, as at the firſt: euen ſo the Sacrifice, that Chriſt once made vpon the Croſſe, remaineth ſtill in full force, effectuall, and perfit, and endu-

Chryſoſtom. in epiſt. ad Hebræ. hom. 17. And therefore S. Chryſoſtome compareth this Sacrifice to a moſt ſoueraign ſalue, that being once laid to the wound, healeth it cleane, and needeth no more laying on. Likewiſe

Cyprian. De Baptiſ. Chriſti. S. Cyprian ſaith: Nec Sacerdotij eius pœnituit Deum: quoniam Sacrificium, quod in Cruce obtulit, ſic in beneplacito Dei conſtat acceptabile, & perpetua virtute conſiſtit, vt non minùs hodie in conſpectu Patris Oblatio illa ſit efficax, quàm ea die, qua de ſaucio latere Sanguis, & Aqua exiuit: & ſemper reſeruatæ in Corpore plagæ Salutis Humanæ exigant pretium: It neuer repented God of Chriſts Prieſthood: For the Sacrifice, that he offered vpon the Croſſe, is ſo acceptable in the good will of God, and ſo ſtandeth in continuall ſtrength and Vertue, that the ſame Oblation is no leſſe acceptable this day in the ſight of God the Father, than it was that day, when Blood, and Water ran out of his wounded ſide. The Scarres reſerued ſtill in his Body, doe waigh the price of the Saluation of Man.

But M. Harding condemneth vs all for Fooliſh, and Wicked people. For Fooliſh, I know not why. Neither is it thought a wiſe mans part, either greatly to miſlike other mens wits, or ouermuch to like his own. Howbeit, who ſo ſpeaketh, as neuer wiſe man ſpake, and yet himſelfe vnderſtandeth not what he ſpeaketh, as, in this caſe, it is thought, M. Harding doth, hath no great cauſe, in this behalfe, to charge others with follie.

Of the other ſide, whatſoeuer Mortall man preſumeth to offer vp Chriſt in Sacrifice, and dareth to deſire God the Father ſo fauourably to behold his own only Son, as in old times he beheld the Oblation of Abel, or of Melchiſedech, and is not afraid, therewith to beguile the ſimple, and to mocke the world, as M. Harding doth daily at his Maſſe, he cannot well excuſe himſelfe of open wickednes.

Notwithſtanding this matter is eaſily anſwered. For (ſaith he) we Sacrifice not Chriſt againe: The Oblation, that Chriſt made vpon the Croſſe, and ours in the Maſſe, is all one. And this Sacrifice Chriſt hath commanded vs to continue vntill his comming. If M. Harding make the ſelfeſame Sacrifice, that Chriſt made vpon the Croſſe, then is he A Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech: And ſo, The King of Iuſtice: the Prince of Peace, and a Prieſt for euer, without Succeſſor. For theſe titles be incident to the Prieſthood of Melchiſedech: which neuertheleſſe, I thinke, M. Harding of his modeſty will not acknowledge. And without the ſame, he cannot offer vp to God the ſame Sacrifice, that Chriſt offered vpon the Croſſe.

And

And where he saith: Christ hath commanded him, and his Fellowes to make, and continue this Sacrifice vntill his comming; If he had meant simply and plainly, he would haue shewed, either when, or where, or by what words Christ gaue him this Commandement. For so large a Commission is worthy the shewing. And it were great boldnesse, to attempt such a matter without Commission.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuision.

Now for further proofe of the offering, and Sacrificing of Christ of those words of our Lord, Doe this in my remembrance, to recite some Testimonies of the Fathers: First, Dionysius S. Pauls Scholar, and Bishop of Athens writeth thus: Quocirca reuerenter simul, & ex Pontificali officio, post sacras diuinorum operum laudes, quod hostium saluatrix, quæ super ipsam est, Iesus, se extulsat, ad ipsum primo decenter exclamans, Tu dixisti, Hoc facite in meam commemorationem. Wherefore the Bishop (saith he) reuerently, and according to his Bishoply office, after the holy praises of Gods workes, he excuseth himselfe, that he taketh vpon him to offer that healthfull Sacrifice, which is aboue his degree, and worthinesse, crying out first vnto him in seemly wise, Lord thou hast commanded thus, saying, Doe this in my remembrance. By these words he confesseth, that he could not be so hardy, (225) as to offer vp Christ vnto his Father, had not Christ himselfe so commanded, when he said, Doe this in my remembrance. This is the Doctrine touching this Article, that S. Paul taught his Scholars, which M. Iewel denieth.

The 225. Vntruth, ioyned with great folly. For Dionysius speaketh not one word of Offering vp the Son of God vnto his Father.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Here maist thou, gentle Reader, easily see, that M. Harding, either had not that abundance of store, wherof notwithstanding he hath made vs so large a promise, or else had no great regard vnto his choice. For Dionysius hath no token, or inkling of any such Sacrificing of the sonne of God vnto his Father. But clearly, and in most plaine wise, he sheweth the difference, that is betweene the Sacrifice of the Crosse, and the Sacrifice of the holy Communion. These be his words: The Priest extolleth those things, that Christ wrought in his Flesh vpon the Crosse, for the Saluation of Mankind: and with Spirituall eies, beholding the spirituall vnderstanding thereof, draweth neere to the Figuratiue Sacrifice of the same. Here Dionysius calleth not the Ministration of the Holy Mysteries, the Sacrificing of Christ vnto his Father, as M. Harding would force vs to beleeue, but a Figuratiue Sacrifice, that is, a Figure, or a Signe of that great Sacrifice. And Pachymeres the Paraphrast expoundeth the same words in this wise: Πρὸς τὸν ἄρτον, καὶ ποτήριον ἔρχεται: He commeth to the Bread, and the Cup.

Dionys. Eccles. Hierar. ca. 3. πρὸς συμβολικὴν ἱερουργίαν.

Pachymer. in 3. cap. Eccles. Hierarch.

Then the Priest, saith Dionysius, after certaine Prayers, and holy Songs, excuseth himselfe, as not worthy to make that Sacrifice: and pronounceth these words out with a loud voice, Tu dixisti, &c. Thou hast said, Doe this in my Remembrance. Hereof M. Harding concludeth thus: The Priest excuseth himselfe; Ergo, He offereth vp the Son of God vnto his Father. A yong Sophister would neuer so vnskilfully frame his arguments. Otherwise the Respondent might easily say: Nego Consequentiam, & Consequens. For what order, or sequell is there in this Reason? How may this Antecedent, and this consequent agree together.

M. Harding knoweth there, be other sundry causes, wherefore the Priest should excuse his vnworthinesse, and not this only, that he imagineth. The Priest in the Liturgy, or Communion, that beareth the name of S. Basil, prayeth thus: Fac nos idoneos, vt tibi Offeramus Sacrificium Laudis: Make vs meet, to offer vnto thee (not Christ thine only Son, but) the Sacrifice of praise. In like maner Nazianzene saith: How can they, or dare they offer vnto God, (he saith not, The Body of Christ Really, and indeed, but) the Figure of these great Mysteries? But M. Harding, being vtterlie void of other reasons, prooueth his imagined Sacrifice of the Son of God, only by the vnworthinesse of the Priest.

Liturgia Basilij.

Nazian. in Apologet. τὴν τῶν μεγάλων μυστηρίων ἀπεικόνισιν τύπον.

This is the Iust Iudgement of God, that whoso endeuoreth himselfe to deceiue, and blind others, shall be deceiued, and blinded himselfe. For Dionysius vseth the very like words, speaking of the Sacrament of Baptisme: Sacerdos cogitans negotij magnitudinem, horret, atque hæsitat: The Priest considering the waight of the matter, is in an horror, and in an agonie. Likewise S. Basil excuseth his owne vnworthinesse of hearing the Word of God: Quæ auris digna est magnitudine earum rerum, quæ dicuntur? Cogitemus quisnam ille sit qui nos affatur: What eare is worthy to heare the Maiesty of these things? Let vs consider who it is, that speaketh to vs. S. Paul speaking of the Glory, and Puissance of the Gospell, in the end, in respect of his own vnworthinesse, vseth this Exclamation: Et ad hæc quis idoneus? And who is meet to publish, and to speake these things? S. Cyprian saith: We are not worthy to looke vp into Heauen, and to speake vnto God. O saith he, what mercifull fauour of our Lord is this, that we may call God our Father: and euen as Christ is Gods Son, so may we be called the Children of God! Quod nomen nemo nostrûm in Oratione auderet attingere, nisi ipse nobis sic permisisset orare: Which Name (of Father) none of vs in our Prayers would dare to vtter, sauing that he hath giuen vs leaue so to pray. By these, the slenderne of M. Hardings reason may

M. Harding. The 9. Diuiſion.

Irenæus receiued the ſame from S. Iohn the Euangeliſt, by Polycarpus S. Iohns Scholar. He declareth it with theſe words: Eum, qui ex creatura Panis eſt, accipit, & gratias egit, Dicens, Hoc eſt Corpus meum. Et Calicem ſimiliter, qui eſt ex creatura quæ eſt ſecundum nos, ſuum Sanguinem confeſſus eſt, & Noui Teſtamenti nouam docuit Oblationem, quam Eccleſia ab Apoſtolis accipiens, in vniuerſo mundo offert Deo. De quo in duodecim Prophetis Malachias ſic præſignificauit, Non eſt mihi voluntas in vobis, dicit Dominus exercituum: & munus non ſuſcipiam de manibus veſtris. He tooke that, which by creation is bread, and gaue thankes, ſaying, This is my Body. And likewiſe the Cup full of that Creature, which is here with vs, and confeſſed it to be his Blood, and thus taught the new Oblation of the New Teſtament, which the Church receuing of the Apoſtles, doth offer to God thorow the whole world, whereof Malachi one of the twelue Prophets did prophecie thus: I haue no liking in you, ſaith our Lord almighty, neither will I take a Sacrifice of your hands; becauſe from the riſing of the Sun, to the going downe of the ſame, my name is glorified among the Nations, and Incenſe is offered to my name in euery place, and pure Sacrifice, for that my name is great among the Nations. What can be vnderſtanded by this new Oblation of the New Teſtament, other than the Oblation of that, which he ſaid to be his Body, and confeſſed to be his Blood? And if he had offered Bread and Wine only, or the Figure of his Body and Blood in Bread and Wine, it had been no New Oblation, for ſuch had been made by Melchiſedech long before. Neither can the Prophecy of Malachi be vnderſtanded of the Oblation of Chriſt vpon the Croſſe, forasmuch as that was done but at one time only, and in one certaine place of the world, in Golgatha, a place without the gates of Hieruſalem, meere to the walles of the Citie? Concerning the Sacrifice, of a contrite, and an humble heart, and all other Sacrifices of our deuotion, that be meere Spirituall, they cannot be called the New Oblation of the New Teſtament, forasmuch as they were done as well in the Old Teſtament, as in the New, neither be they altogether pure. Wherefore this place of Irenæus, and alſo the Prophecie of Malachi, wherewith it is confirmed, muſt needs be referred to the Sacrifice and Oblation of the Body and Blood of Chriſt daily thorow out the whole world offered to God (226) in the Maſſe, which is the externall Sacrifice of the Church, and proper to the New Teſtament: which, as Irenæus, ſaith, the Church receiued of the Apoſtles, and the Apoſtles of Chriſt.

Lib. 4. cap. 34.

Malac. 1.

The 226. Vntruth. For Irenæus neither ſpeaketh of the Maſſe: nor calleth it a Sacrifice: Neither ſaith, either that the Church receiued it from the Apoſtles, or the Apoſtles from Chriſt. Malac. 1.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Yeare at laſt, M. Harding hath found out the name of a Sacrifice, that was not denied him. But the Sacrifice, that he hath ſo long ſought for, and hath ſo aſſuredly promiſed to find, hitherto he hath not found. For Irenæus not once nameth, neither the Maſſe, nor this Reall Oblation of the Son of God vnto his Father. Thus onely he ſaith: God hath vtterly miſliked, and refuſed the Old Carnall Sacrifices of the Iewes: and hath taught vs to offer vp the New Sacrifice of the New Teſtament, according to the Prophecy of Malachi. This Sacrifice, M. Harding imagineth, can be none other, but the offering vp of Chriſt in the Maſſe. Theſe Concluſions be verie ſudden. The Old learned Fathers could neuer vnderſtand ſo much. One of M. Hardings own New found Doctors, Martialis, ſaith thus: Oblatio munda, non tantùm in Ara Sanctificata offertur, ſed etiam vbique: The pure Sacrifice, which Malachi meaneth, is offered, not only vpon the holy Altar (or Communion Table) but alſo euery where. M. Harding ſaith: It is offered only vpon the Altar: Martialis ſaith: It is offered euery where, and not only vpon the Altar. Certainly if Malachi meant the Sacrifice, that may be offered in all places, and without an Altar, as Martialis ſaith, then he meant not the Sacrifice of the Maſſe. Tertullian ſaith: That the Prophet Malachi by that pure Sacrifice, meant the Preaching of the Goſpell: the offering vp of a Contrite Heart; and praier proceeding from a pure Conſcience. S. Hierome likewiſe expoundeth the ſame of the Sacrifice of Praier, and openeth it by theſe Words of the Prophet Dauid: Let my Praier be directed, as Incenſe before thy ſight. S. Auguſtine calleth the ſame, Sacrificium Laudis & Gratiarum actionis: The Sacrifice of Praiſe, and Thankſgiuing.

Hieronym. in Zachar. li. 2. cap. 8.

Auguſt. contra Aduer. Legis, & Prophet. ca. 20. Contra Liter. Petiliani, li. 2. ca. 86.

In like ſort Irenæus alſo expoundeth his own meaning: Eccleſia offert Deo cum Gratiarum actione ex Creatura eius. Eſt ergo Altare in Cœlo; Illuc Preces, & Oblationes noſtræ diriguntur: The Church offereth vp to God, (not his own, and only Son, but) a Naturall thing of Gods Creation. Neither is our Alter here in Earth, but in Heauen. Thither our Praiers, and Sacrifices be directed. So likewiſe Euſebius ſaith: Sacrificamus, & incendimus Memoriam Magni illius Sacrificij, ſecundum ea, quæ ab ipſo tradita ſunt, Myſteria celebrantes, & gratias Deo pro ſalute noſtra agentes: We Sacrifice, and offer vp vnto God the Remembrance of that Great Sacrifice, vſing the Holy Myſteries accordingly, as Chriſt hath deliuered them, and giuing God thankes for our Saluation.

Irenæus lib. 4. cap. 34.

Euſeb. de Demonſtra. li. 1. a. 10.

And that Irenæus meant not any ſuch Reall Sacrifice of the Son of God, nor may not in any wiſe ſo be taken, it is euident by the plaine words, that follow, touching the ſame. For thus he ſaith, ſpeaking of the very ſame Sacrifice of the New Teſtament, that is mentioned by Malachi: Sacrificia non Sanctificant hominem: ſed conſcientia eius, qui offert, exiſtens pura, ſanctificat Sacrificium: The Sacrifice doth not Sanctifie the Man: but the conſcience of the offerer being pure, ſanctifieth the Sacrifice. I trow M. Harding will not ſay, The Prieſt is not ſanctified by the Sonne of God, but the Sonne of God is ſanctified by the conſcience of the Prieſt: For that were Blaſphemie. And yet thus muſt he nedes ſay, if Irenæus meant the Reall Sacrificing of the Sonne of God. Malachi.

But M. Harding hath deuiſed a great many replies to the contrarie. Firſt he ſaith: The offering vp of Praier, Praiſes, and Thankſgiuing cannot be called a New Sacrifice: for the ſame was made by Moſes, Aron, the Prophets, and other holy men in the Old Law. This obiection ſerueth well to controll Tertullian, S. Auguſtine, and S. Hierome, and other learned Fathers that thus haue taken it: who, by M. Hardings iudgement, wrote vnaduiſedly they knew not what. Hereunto Irenæus himſelfe anſwereth thus: Oblationes hic: Oblationes illic. Sacrificia in populo Iſraël: Sacrificia in Eccleſia. Sed ſpecies immutata eſt tantùm Quippe cùm iam non à Seruis, ſed à Liberis offeruntur: There were Sacrifices in the Old Teſtament: There be Sacrifices in the New. There were Sacrifices in the people of Iſrael: There be Sacrifices in the Church. Only the maner or forme is changed. For now they be offered, not by Bondmen (as before) but by Free men. In like ſenſe writeth Angelomus; Mandatum Nouum ſcribo vobis, non alterum: ſed ipſum, quod dixi Vetus, idem eſt Nouum: I write vnto you a New Commandement: none other, but that I called the Old, the ſelfe ſame is the New. And it is called a New Sacrifice, ſaith Chryſoſtom, Becauſe it proceedeth from a New mind, and is offered not by fire and ſmoke, but by Grace, and by the ſpirit of God. And in this conſideration Irenæus thinketh, Dauid ſaid vnto the Children of the Church of Chriſt, O ſing vnto the Lord a New ſong.

Iren. li. 4. c. 34.

Angelomus Antiqu. li. 3.

Chryſoſt. contra Iudæos, li. 2.

Iren. li. 4. c. 21.

M. Harding ſaith further: The words of Malachi may in no wiſe be taken for the Oblation of Chriſt vpon the Croſſe. For that, ſaith he, was done at one time onely, and in one certaine place, in Golgotha, without the gates of Hieruſalem, and not in euery place. Yet M. Harding may eaſily vnderſtand, that the Remembrance of that Sacrifice, and Thankſgiuing for the ſame, may be made at all times, and in all places. And therefore Euſebius, as it is noted before, calleth our Sacrifice: Magni illius Sacrificij memoriam: The Remembrance of that great Sacrifice: and the Thankſgiuing which we yeeld vnto God for our ſalnation. Dionyſius calleth it, συμβολικὴν ἱερουργίαν, a Figuratiue Sacrifice. And S. Auguſtine ſaith: Cùm credimus in Chriſtum, ex ipſis reliquijs cogitationis, Chriſtus nobis quotidie immolatur: When we beleeue in Chriſt, euen of the very remanents of our cogitation (in what place ſoeuer we be) Chriſt is Sacrificed vnto vs euery day. Likewiſe S. Hierome ſaith: Cùm audimus Sermonem Domini, Caro Chriſti, & Sanguis eius in auribus noſtris funditur: When we heare the word of the Lord, the Fleſh of Chriſt and his Blood is powred out into our eares. And whereas M. Harding ſaith further, that the ſpiritual Sacrifices of our deuotion cannot altogether be called pure, and therefore cannot be Sacrifices of the New Teſtament, it muſt nedes be confeſſed, that all our righteouſneſſe, in reſpect of many imperfections, may be compared, as the Prophet Eſay ſaith, vnto a filthy clout. Yet in reſpect of Gods mercie, and in Chriſt, the Prophet Dauid ſaith: Thou ſhalt waſh me, and I will be whiter than the ſnow.

Howbeit, herein I will remit M. Harding to the iudgement of them, whoſe authorities he cannot well denie. Euſebius calleth our Prayers, Mundum Sacrificium: A pure Sacrifice Tertullian ſaith, We make Sacrifice vnto our God for the ſafety of our Emperours, pura prece, with A Pure Praier. S. Hierome ſpeaking of the Sacrifice of Chriſtian Prayers, ſaith thus: A pure Sacrifice is offered vnto me in euery place: not in the Oblations of the Old Teſtament, but in the holineſſe of the purity of the Goſpell. To be ſhort, S. Paul ſaith: Volo viros precari in omni loco, leuantes manus Puras: I would that men ſhould pray in all places, lifting vp Pure hands (vnto God.)

Touching the Sacrifice of the Lords Table, Euſebius writeth thus: μνήμην ἡμῖν παρέδωκε ἀντὶ θυσίας τοῦ θεῷ διωρεὰς προσφέρειν: He gaue vs a Remembrance in ſtead of a Sacrifice to offer vp continually vnto God. And this he calleth, Incruentum & Rationabile Sacrificium: The vnbloody and Reaſonable Sacrifice. This, ſaith Irenæus, is the Sacrifice of the New Teſtament. This Sacrifice the Church receiued of the Apoſtles: and the ſame the Apoſtles receiued of Chriſt, that made all things New.

M. Harding. The 10. Diuiſion.

Now let vs heare what S. Cyprian hath written to this purpoſe. Becauſe his workes be common, to be ſhorter I will rehearſe his words in Engliſh. If in the Sacrifice, * which is Chriſt, none but Chriſt is to be followed, ſoothly it behoueth vs to obey, and doe that, which Chriſt did, and commanded to be done. For if Ieſus Chriſt our Lord and God, very he himſelfe be the high Prieſt of God the Father, and himſelfe firſt offered Sacrifice to God the Father, and commanded the ſame to be done in his Remembrance; Verily that Prieſt doth occupie the office of Chriſt truly, who doth by imitation the ſame thing, that Chriſt did. And then he offereth to God the Father in the Church a true and a perfect Sacrifice, if he begin to offer right ſo as he ſeeth Chriſt himſelfe to haue offered Thus farre S. Cyprian. How can this Article be auouched in more plaine words? (227) He ſaith that Chriſt offered himſelfe to his Father in his Supper, and likewiſe commanded vs to doe the ſame.

* Euen ſo Chryſoſtome ſaith, Chriſts Baptiſme is Chriſts blood. Ad Hebr. hom. 16.

The 227. Vntruth. For S. Cyprian ſaith not, neither that Chriſt offered himſelfe at the Supper, nor that wee are commanded to offer Chriſt.

The Sacrifice is Christ.

Here we haue prooued, that it is lawfull, and hath alwaies from the beginning of the New Teſtament been lawfull for the (228) Prieſts to offer vp Chriſt vnto his Father, by the teſtimonies of three holy Martyrs, two Greeks, and one Latine, moſt notable in ſundry reſpects, of antiquity, of the roome they bare in Chriſts Church, of Learning, of Conſtancy, of Faith ſtedfaſtly kept to Death, ſuffered in places of fame, and knowledge, at Paris, at Lions, at Carthage.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The 228. Vntruth For none of all theſe three Fathers euer ſpake theſe words.

The place of S. Cyprian, as it not once toucheth the Reall Sacrificing of Chriſt vnto his Father, ſo it vtterly condemneth the Communion vnder One Kind: the Common Prayers in a ſtrange vnknowen tongue: and briefly the whole diſorder and abuſe of M. Hardings Maſſe.

But S. Cyprian ſaith: In Sacrificio, quod Chriſtus eſt: In the Sacrifice, that is Chriſt. If M. Harding thinke to find great aduantage in theſe words, it may pleaſe him to Remember, that S. Auguſtine ſaith: Illis Petra erat Chriſtus: Vnto the Iewes the Rocke was Chriſt. Verily, the Sacrifice after the Order of Melchiſedech, which is the Propitiation for the Sins of the world, is only Ieſus Chriſt, the Son of God vpon the Croſſe. And the Miniſtration of the holy Myſteries, in a Phraſe, and maner of ſpech, is alſo the ſame Sacrifice: becauſe it laieth forth the Death, and Blood of Chriſt ſo plainly, and ſo euidently before our eies. So ſaith S Auguſtine: The very Remembrance of Chriſts Paſſion ſtirreth vp ſuch motions within vs, as if we ſaw Chriſt preſently hanging vpon the Croſſe. Vpon which words the Common Gloſſe noteth thus: Chriſtus immolatur, id eſt, Chriſti immolatio Repræſentatur, & fit Memoria Paſſionis: Chriſt is Sacrificed, that is to ſay, The Sacrifice of Chriſt is Repreſented, and there is made a Remembrance of his Paſſion. So S. Cyprian ſaith: Vinum exprimit Sanguinem: In Aqua populus intelligitur: In Vino Sanguis oſtenditur. Itaque Paſſionis eius mentionem in Sacrificijs facimus. Paſſio enim Domini eſt Sacrificium, quod offerimus: The Wine ſheweth the Blood: In the Water we vnderſtand the people: The Blood is expreſſed in the Wine. And therefore in our Sacrifices we make mention of Chriſts Paſſion. For the Sacrifice, that we offer, is the Paſſion of Chriſt. As the Miniſtration of the Holy Communion is the Death, and Paſſion of Chriſt, euen ſo, and in like ſort and ſenſe may the Sacrifice thereof be called Chriſt. Therefore S. Gregorie ſaith: Chriſtus in ſeipſo immortaliter viuens, iterum in hoc Myſterio moritur. Eius Caro in populi Salutem patitur: Chriſt liuing immortally in himſelfe, Dieth againe in this Myſterie. His Fleſh ſuffereth (in the Myſterie) for the Salnation of the people. I recon, M. Harding will not ſay, that Chriſt Dieth indeed, according to the force, and ſound of theſe words, or that his Fleſh verily, and indeed is tormented, and ſuffereth in the Sacrament. S. Gregorie better expounded himſelfe in this wiſe: Hoc Sacramentum Paſſionem Vnigeniti Filij imitatur: This Sacrament expreſſeth or repreſenteth the Paſſion of the Only begotten Sonne. And the very Barbarous Gloſſe touching the ſame ſaith: Chriſtus Moritur, & Patitur, id eſt, Mors, & Paſſio Chriſti Repræſentatur: Chriſt Dieth, and Suffereth, that is to ſay, Chriſts Death, and Paſſion is Repreſented.

So S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: In Myſterijs Mors Chriſti perficitur: The Death of Chriſt is wrought in the Myſteries. So ſaith Beda: Exaltatio Serpentis Ænei Paſſio Redemptoris noſtri eſt in Cruce: The lifting vp of the Braſen Serpent is the Paſſion of our Redeemer vpon the Croſſe. So ſaith S. Hierome: Quotidiè nobis Chriſtus Crucifigitur: Vnto vs Chriſt is daily Crucified. So S. Ambroſe: Chriſtus quotidiè immolatur: Chriſt is daily Sacrificed. So S. Auguſtine: Tunc vnicuique Chriſtus occiditur, cùm credit occiſum: Then is Chriſt ſlaine to euery man, when he beleeueth, that Chriſt was ſlaine. To conclude, ſo S. Hierome ſaith: Semper Chriſtus credentibus immolatur: Vnto the Faithfull Chriſt is euermore Sacrificed. Thus may the Sacrifice of the Holy Communion be called Chriſt: to wit, euen ſo, as the Miniſtration of the ſame is called the Paſſion, or the Death of Chriſt.

And that the weakneſſe of M. Hardings ghoſſes may the better appeare, vnderſtand thou, good Chriſtian Reader, that the Holy Catholike Fathers haue vſed to ſay, that Chriſt is Sacrificed, not only in the Holy Supper, but alſo in the Sacrament of Baptiſme. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Holocauſtum Dominicæ Paſſionis eo tempore pro ſe quiſque offert, quo eiuſdem Paſſionis Fide dedicatur: The Sacrifice of our Lords Paſſion euery man then offereth for himſelfe, when he is Confirmed in the Faith of his Paſſion. And againe: Holocauſtum Domini tunc pro vnoquoque offertur quodammodò, cùm eius nomine Baptizando ſignatur: Then is the Sacrifice of our Lord in a Maner offered for eech man, when in Baptiſme he is marked with the name of Chriſt. And againe: Non relinquitur Sacrificium pro peccatis: id eſt, non poteſt denuò Baptizari: There is left no Sacrifice for Sin: that is to ſay, He can be no more, Baptiſed. And in this conſideration Chryſoſtome ſaith: Baptiſma Chriſti Sanguis Chriſti eſt: Chriſts Baptiſme, is Chriſts Blood. And likewiſe S. Ambroſe: In Baptiſmo Crucifigimus in nobis Filium Dei: In Baptiſme we Crucifie in our ſelues the Son of God.

M. Harding. The 11. Diuiſion.

Our Aduerſaries crake much of the ſealing vp of their new Doctrine with the blood of ſuch and ſuch, who be written in the booke of lies, not in the booke of life, whom they will needs to be called Martyrs. Verily, if thoſe Monkes and Friars, Apoſtates, and Renegates, wedded to wiues, or rather (to vſe their own terme) yoked to Siſters, be true Martyrs, then muſt our New Goſpellers pull theſe Holy Fathers, and many thouſands moe out of Heauen. (229) For certainly the Faith, in Defenſe of: which either ſort died, is vtterly contrarie. The worſt that I wiſh to them is, that God giue them eies to ſee, and eares to heare, and that he ſhut not vp their hearts, ſo as they ſee not the light heere, vntill they be throwen away into the outward darkneſſe, where ſhall be weeping and grinding of teeth. Matth. 25.

The 229. vntruth. For M. Harding well knoweth, that the whole ſubſtance of our doctrine fully agreeth with the Fathers.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

This talke was vtterly out of ſeaſon: ſauing that it liked well M. Harding to ſport himſelfe with the Scriptures of God, and a little to ſcoffe at the words of S. Paul. Which thing becomming him ſo well, may be the better borne withall, when it ſhall pleaſe him likewiſe to ſcoffe at others. S. Paul calleth Wiues, ſometimes Siſters, ſometimes Yokefellowes; and thinketh Matrimony to be Honourable in all perſons; and the forbidding of the ſame to be the Doctrine of Diuels. Neither doth it any way appeare, that euer honeſt godly Matrimony either diſpleaſed God, or was thought vncomely for a Martyr, and witneſſe of Gods Truth. 1. Corin. 9. Philip. 4. Hebræ. 13. 1. Tim. 4.

S. Paul was married, as it appeareth by Ignatius, Clemens, Euſebius: and yet neuertheleſſe was a Martyr. S. Peter the chiefe of the Apoſtles had a Wife and yet neuertheleſſe ſtood by and gaue her comfort, and conſtancie at her Martyrdome. The Twelue Apoſtles, ſaith S. Ambroſe, only S. Iohn excepted, were all married: and yet neuertheleſſe, the ſame S. Iohn only excepted, as it is thought, were all Martyrs. Spiridion was a married Biſhop: and yet as Sozomenus writeth, he was thereby nothing hindred, neither to diſcharge his duty, nor to any other godly purpoſe. Tertullian was a Prieſt, as appeareth by S. Hierome, and married, as appeareth by his owne Booke written to his Wife: and yet notwithſtanding, as ſome report, was a Martyr. S. Hillary was a reuerend Father, and Biſhop of Poicters, and yet married, as may be gathered by his Epiſtle written to his Daughter Abra. Ignatius ad Philadelphi. Euſeb. lib. 3. cap. 30. Clem. Stromat. lib. 7. Euſeb. lib. 3. cap. 30. Ambroſ. in 2. Ad Cor. cap. 11. Sozomen. li. 1. ca. 11.

And to leaue infinite others, S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Ita pretioſa res eſt matrimonium, vt poſſis cum eo ad Sanctum Epiſcopatus ſolium ſubuehi. Vtere moderatè nuptijs, & eris primus in Regno Cœlorum: So pretious a thing is Matrimony, that with the ſame thou maiſt be promoted euen to the Biſhops Chaire. Vſe marriage with diſcretion, and thou ſhalt be the chiefe in the Kingdome of Heauen. S. Hierome ſaith: Hodiè quoque plurimi Sacerdotes habent matrimonia: Euen now a great number of Prieſts liue in Matrimony. Thus the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and many other learned Fathers, and godly Biſhops were maried, and as M. Harding ſaith, in his mirth and pleaſance, had their Siſters and Yokefellowes. But how, and with what Siſters, or Fellowes, a great number of the Wineleſſe ſort of M. Hardings ſide be yokt, for very regard of honeſty, it may not be vttered. Ad res Diuinas nihilo deterior. Hieronym. De Eccleſ. Script. Regino, in Rebus Germanicis. Hilar. ad Abram filiam. Chryſoſt. in Epiſt. ad Tit. homil. 2. Chryſoſt. in Epiſt. ad Hebra. homil. 7. Hieron. contra Iouinianum. Epiphan. contra Origenian.

Ephiphanius writeth thus of certaine of his time: Repudiant nuptias, at non libidinem. In honore enim apud illos eſt, non Sanctitas ſed Hypocriſis: They refuſe Marriage, but not filthy luſt. For they eſteeme not Holineſſe but Hypocriſie. Who ſeeth not, that in the Church of Rome, Prieſts, Biſhops and Cardinals, notwithſtanding they be vtterly forbidden to haue Wiues, yet are eaſily allowed to haue Concubines? They themſelues haue confeſſed it by theſe words vnto the World: Etiam in hac vrbe Romana meretrices, vt Matronæ incedunt per vrbem, ſeu multa vehuntur: quas aſſectantur de media die Nobiles familiares Cardinalium, Clericique: Euen heere in this Citie of Rome, harlots paſſe thorow the ſtreets, or ride vpon their Mules, like honeſt Gentlewomen: and Gentlemen of the Cardinals bands and Prieſts at noone daies wait vpon them. Ἀθεμίτους γάμους, ἀλλ' οὐ λαγνείας· πεφιλοτιμηται γὰρ παρ' αὐτοῖς οὐχ ἡ ἀγνεία, ἀλλὰ ὑποκρισις. In Concilio delectorum Cardinalium.

As touching them, whom it ſo much greeueth you, M. Harding, to be called Martyrs, you haue ſlaine, not only ſuch and ſuch, whom it liketh you, by your owne name, if ye haue not forgotten your owne name, to call Renegates, but alſo great numbers of others moe, Married, Unmarried, Learned, Unlearned, Old, Young, Boies, Maides, Laymen, Prieſts, Biſhops, Archbiſhops, without mercy. Ye ſcourged them with rods: ye ſet burning torches to their hands, ye cut off their tongues, ye hanged them, ye beheaded them, ye burnt them to aſhes, ye toke the poore innocent babe falling from the mothers wombe, and threw it cruelly into the fire. Briefly, ye did with them, whatſoeuer your pleaſure was. The worſt word that proceaded from them, was this: O Lord forgiue them, they know not what they doe. O Lord Jeſu, receiue my ſpirit. In the meane while ye ſtood by, and delighted your eies with the ſight. Ye digged vp the poore carcaſes of Gods Saints, that had beene buried long before: ye ſerued them ſolemnly with proceſſe, and aſcited them to appeare at your Conſiſtories, and by publike ſentence adiudged them to die the ſecond death: and ſo to the perpetuall ſhame of your cruell folly, ye wrekt your anger vpon the dead. O M. Harding, your conſcience knoweth, theſe are no lies. They are written in the eies and hearts of many thouſands. Theſe be the markes of your Religion. O what reckning will you yeld, when ſo much innocent blod ſhall be required at your hands? And where you ſay, We muſt pull the old Martyrs out of Heauen to place our owne, for that our Doctrine and theirs (as you beare vs in hand) is quite contrarie; all this is but a needleſſe oſtentation of idle words. If vants were proues, then were this matter fully ended. But we ſay, that in theſe caſes that I haue moued, you are not able to allege one ſufficient Clauſe or Sentence of your ſide out of any of all the old learned Fathers. And hitherto your muſter appeareth but very ſimple, notwithſtanding the great promiſe of your ſtore.

Certainly the Holy Fathers and Martyrs of God will ſay vnto you, We know not your Priuate Maſſes: We know not your halfe Communion: We know not your ſtrange vnknowen Prayers: We know not your Adoration of corruptible Creatures: We know not this Sacrificing of the Sonne of God: We know not your New Religion: We know not you. God open the eies of your hearts, that ye may ſee the miſerable ſtate ye ſtand in, and recouer the place that ye haue loſt, and finde your Names written in the Booke of Life.

M. Harding. The 12. Diuiſion.

Leauing no ſmall number of places that might be recited out of diuers other Doctors, I will bring two of two worthy Biſhops; one of Chryſoſtome, the other of S. Ambroſe, confirming this truth. Chryſoſtomes words be theſe; Pontifex noſter ille eſt, qui hoſtiam mundantem nos obtulit, ipſam offerimus & nunc, quæ tunc oblata quidem conſumi non poteſt. Hoc autem quod nos facimus in commemorationem fit eius quod factum eſt. Hoc enim facite, inquit, in mei commemorationem: Hee is our Biſhop, that hath offered vp the Hoſt which cleanſeth vs. The ſame doe wee offer alſo now, which though it were then offered, yet cannot bee conſumed. But this that we doe, is done in remembrance of that which is done. For do ye this, ſaith he, in my remembrance. S. Ambroſe ſaith thus: Videmus Principem Sacerdotum ad nos venientem: videmus & audiamus offerentem pro nobis ſanguinem ſuum: ſequamur, vt poſſimus, Sacerdotes, vt offeramus pro populo Sacrificium, etſi infirmi merito, tamen honorabiles Sacrificio. Quia etſi Chriſtus non videtur offerre, tamen ipſe offertur in terris, quando Chriſti Corpus offertur: We haue ſeen the Prince of Prieſts come to vs; we haue ſeen and heard him offer for vs his Bloed; Let vs that be Prieſts follow him, as we may, that we may offer Sacrifice for the people, being though weake in merit, yet honourable for the Sacrifice. Becauſe albeit Chriſt be not ſeen to offer, yet he is offered in Earth, when the Body of Chriſt is offered. Of theſe our Lords words, which is giuen for you, and which is ſhed for you, and for many, heere S. Ambroſe exhorteth the Prieſts to offer the Bodie and Blood of Chriſt for the people; and willeth them to be more regarded, than commonly they be now adaies, for this Sacrifice ſake, though otherwiſe they be of leſſe deſert.

Chryſoſtomus epiſt. ad Hebr. homil. 17. — In Pſal. 38.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

This allegation argueth no great abundance of ſtore. For Chryſoſtome in theſe words both openeth himſelfe, and ſheweth, in what ſenſe other ancient Fathers vſed this word, Sacrifice, and alſo vtterly ouerthroweth M. Hardings whole purpoſe touching the ſame. For, as he ſaith, We offer vp the ſame Sacrifice that Chriſt offered, ſo in moſt plaine wiſe, and by ſundry words, he remoueth all doubt, and declareth in what ſort and meaning we offer it. He ſaith not, as M. Harding ſaith, Wee offer vp the Sonne of God vnto his Father, and that verily and indeed: but contrariwiſe thus he ſaith: Offerimus quidem, ſed ad Recordationem facientes mortis eius. Hoc Sacrificium Exemplar illius eſt. Hoc, quod nos facimus in Commemorationem fit eius, quod factum eſt. Idipſum ſemper offerimus: magis autem Recordationem Sacrificij operamur: We offer indeed, but in remembrance of his Death. This Sacrifice is an Example of that Sacrifice. This, that we do, is done in remembrance of that, that was done. We offer vp the ſame that Chriſt offered: or rather we worke the remembrance of that Sacrifice. Thus we offer vp Chriſt, that is to ſay, an Example, a Commemoration, a Remembrance of the Death of Chriſt. This kinde of Sacrifice was neuer denied: but M. Hardings Reall Sacrifice was yet neuer proued. So ſaith S. Auguſtine: Cùm hoſtia frangitur, & Sanguis in ora Fidelium funditur, quid aliud, quàm Dominici Corporis in Cruce immolatio ſignificatur? When the Oblation is broken, and the Blood (that is to ſay, the Sacrament of the Blood) is powred into the mouthes of the faithfull, what other thing is there ſignified, but the Sacrifice of our Lords Body vpon the Croſſe?

Chryſoſtom. in epiſt. ad Hebr. homil. 17.

De Con. diſt. 2 Cùm frangitur.

Euen ſo S. Ambroſe ſaith, Chriſt is offered heere in the Earth (not Really and indeed, as M. Harding ſaith) but in like ſort and ſenſe, as S. Iohn ſaith, The Lamb was ſlaine from the beginning of the World: that is, not Subſtantially or in Real maner, but in ſignification, in a Myſtery, and in a Figure. And thus S. Ambroſe expoundeth his owne meaning, euen in the ſame place that is heere alleged: Primùm Vmbra præceſſit: ſequuta eſt Imago: Erit Veritas. Vmbra in Lege: Imago in Euangelio: Veritas in Cœleſtibus. Aſcende homo in Cœlum, & videbis illa, quorum hic Vmbra erat, vel Imago: Firſt the ſhadow went Ambroſ. in Pſalm. 38. Apocalyp. 5.

Ambroſ. in Pſalm. 38.

went before: The Image followed: The Trueth shall be. The shadow in the Law: The Image in the Gospell: The Trueth in the Heauens. O man, go vp into Heauen: and thou shalt see those things whereof heere was an Image, and a shadow. To like purpose S. Ambrose writeth thus: Vidimus eum, & oculis nostris perspeximus, & in vestigia clauorum eius digitos nostros inseruimus. Videmur enim vidisse eum, quem legimus: spectasse pendentem, & vulnera eius Spiritu Ecclesiæ scrutante tentasse: Wee haue seene him, and look vpon him with our eies: & we haue thrust our fingers into the dents of his nailes. The reason hereof is this: For we seeme to see him, that wee read of: and to haue beholden him hanging on the Crosse: and with the feeling spirit of the Church to haue searched his wounds. So S. Hierome saith: Quod semel natum est ex Maria, quotidie in nobis nascitur: Christ, that was once borne of Marie, is borne in vs euery day. Now, as S. Ambrose saith: Wee see Christ euen with our eies hanging vpon the Crosse: and thrust in our fingers, and search his wounds: Euen so, doe we se Christ Coming vnto vs, and Offering himselfe in Sacrifice vnto God. And as S. Hierome saith, Christ is Borne euery day, Euen so, and none otherwise, S. Ambrose saith: Christ is sacrificed euery day. In like maner S. Ambrose writeth vnto certaine Virgins: Vestras Mentes confidenter Altaria dixerim, in quibus quotidie pro Redemptione Corporis Christus Offertur: I may boldly say, your hearts be Altars, vpon which Hearts Christ is daily offered for the Redemption of the Bodie. Hitherto M. Harding hath found no maner token of that he sought for.

M. Harding. The 13. Diuision.

Now for proofe of the Sacrifice, and Oblation of Christ by the Doctors minde vpon the figure of Melchisedech: First, S. Cyprian saith thus: Qui magni Sacerdos Dei summi, quam Dominus noster Iesus Christus, qui Sacrificium Deo patri obtulit, & obtulit hoc idem, quod Melchisedech, id est, Panem & Vinum, suum, scilicet, Corpus, & Sanguinem? Who is more the Priest of the highest God, than our Lord Iesus Christ, who offered a Sacrifice to God the Father, and offered the selfe same, that Melchisedech did, that is, Bread and Wine, that is to say, his owne Bodie and Blood? S. Hierome in an Epistle, that he wrote for the vertuous women Paula, and Eustochium to Marcella, hath these words: Recurre ad Genesim, & Melchisedech Regem Salem. Hunc principem inuenies ciuitatis, qui iam in typo Christi Panem, & Vinum obtulit, & Mysterium Christianum in Saluatoris sanguine, & corpore dedicauit. Returne to the booke of Genesis, and to Melchisedech the King of Salem, and thou shalt find the Prince of that Citie, who euen at that time in the figure of Christ offered Bread, and Wine, and dedicated the Mysterie of Christians in the Bodie, and Blood of our Sauiour. Here this learned Father maketh a plaine distinction betweene the Oblation of the Figure, which was Bread and Wine, and the Oblation of the Trueth, which is the Mysterie of Christian people, the Blood and the Bodie of Christ our Sauiour. Of this S. Augustine speaketh largely in his first Sermon vpon the 33. Psalme, and in the 17. booke De Ciuitate Dei, cap. 20.

Lib. Epist. 3.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

If M. Harding meane plainly, and will haue S. Cyprians words taken as they lie, without figure, then must he say, That Melchisedech offered vp verily, and Really Christ himselfe. For S. Cyprians words be cleare: Christus obtulit hoc idem, quod Melchisedech obtulerat: Christ offered vp the same thing, that Melchisedech had offered. Notwithstanding it is certaine, that the Sacrifice, that Melchisedech made, if it were granted to be a Sacrifice, yet in plaine, and Common maner of speech, was not Christ the Sonne of God but onely materiall Bread, and Wine, and other like prouision of Victuals prepared for Abraham, and for his men. And therefore the Old learned Fathers say not Melchisedech offered the same in sacrifice vnto God: but, He brought it forth, as a present, as the maner was, to refresh them, after the pursuit, and chase of their enemies. And S. Hierome in his Translation turneth it not: Obtulit: He Sacrificed, but Protulit, He brought it foorth. Iosephus reporteth the matter thus: Melchisedech Milites Abrahami hospitaliter habuit, nihil illis ad victum deesse passus: Simulque ipsum adhibuit Mensæ: Melchisedech feasted Abrahams Souldiers, and suffered them to want nothing, that was necessary for their prouision. And likewise he receiued Abraham himselfe vnto his Table. Chrysostome, and Epiphanius say thus: He brought foorth vnto them Bread, and Wine. Tertullian saith: Abrahamo reuertenti de prælio obtulit Panem, & Vinum: Melchisedech: offered Bread, and Wine (not vnto God, but) vnto Abraham returning from the fight. So S. Ambrose: Occurrit Melchisedech, & obtulit Abrahamo Panem, & Vinum: Melchisedech came foorth to meet, and offered (not vnto God, but) vnto Abraham Bread, and Wine.

By these few it may appeare, that Melchisedech brought forth Bread, and Wine, and other prouision, not, as a Sacrifice vnto God, but as a Relæfe, and Sustenance for Abraham, and for his company.

S. Paul compareth Christ with Melchisedech, In that, like vnto Melchisedech, he was the king of Iustice: In that, he was the Prince of peace, as Melchisedech was: And in that, he had neither father, nor mother: For so it is likewise written of Melchisedech. But of the Sacrifice of Bread & Wine he speaketh nothing. Yet notwithstanding, the ancient holy Fathers often times

Hebræ. 7.

Melchiſedech.

reſemble the ſame preſent of Melchiſedech, vnto the Sacrifice, that Chriſt made vpon the Croſſe. And in that reſpect S. Cyprian ſaith, Chriſt offered the ſame thing, that Melchiſedech offered. That is to ſay, as M. Harding himſelfe muſt néeds expound it, The ſame thing in performance of Trueth vpon the Croſſe, that Melchiſedech had before offered in a Figure.

Auguſtin. in Iohan. tractat. 26.

So ſaith S. Auguſtine: Illis Petra Chriſtus: Vnto them the Rocke was Chriſt: And yet not Really, and indeed: but only by way of Signification, becauſe it ſignified, and Repreſented Chriſt.

Sometimes they compare it with the ſacrifice of Thankſgiuing, and with the Miniſtration of the holy Communion, and make it equall with the ſame.

Auguſtin. in quæſt. Noui, & veter. Teſtamenti, qua. 109 Hieronym. ad Marcellam.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: Melchiſedech Abrahæ primùm, quaſi Patri Fidelium, tradidit Euchariſtiam Corporis, & Sanguinis Domini: Melchiſedech gaue firſt vnto Abraham, as vnto the Father of the Faithfull, the Sacrament of the Bodie, and Blood of Chriſt. So S. Hierome ſaith: Melchiſedech in typo Chriſti Panem, & Vinum obtulit, & Myſterium Chriſtianorum in Saluatoris Corpore, & Sanguine dedicauit: Melchiſedech in the Figure of Chriſt offered Bread, and Wine: and dedicated the Myſterie of Chriſtians in the Bodie, and Blood of Chriſt. Theſe Authorities might ſerue, to make ſome ſhew, that Melchiſedech ſaid Maſſe, & Conſecrated the Sacrament of the Bodie, and Blod of Chriſt, and offered vp Chriſt in Sacrifice vnto his Father: But of M. Harding, or any other ſuch Prieſt, they touch nothing.

And leſt any man happen of ſimplicitie to be deceiued, thinking that S. Hierome hereby meant M. Hardings Reall Preſence, for that he ſaith, Melchiſedech dedicated the Chriſtian Myſterie in the Bodie and Blood of Chriſt; It may pleaſe him to conſider, that both S. Hierome, and all other Ancient Fathers haue often vſed the ſame maner of ſpech in other caſes, wherein M. Harding can haue no maner ſuſpicion of Reall Preſence. S. Hierome ſaith: Euangelium Paſſione, & Sanguine Domini dedicatur: The Goſpell is dedicated in the Paſſion, and Blood of Chriſt. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Quid eſt Mare Rubrum? Sanguine Domini Conſecratum: What is the Red Sea? He anſwereth, Conſecrate in the Blood of Chriſt. Againe he ſaith: Vnde rubet Baptiſmus Chriſti, niſi Chriſti Sanguine Conſecratus? Whereof is Chriſts Baptiſme red, but that it is Dedicate in the Blood of Chriſt? Thus Melchiſedech Dedicated the Chriſtian Myſterie in the Blod of Chriſt.

M. Harding. The 14. Diuiſion.

Of all other, Occumenius ſpeaketh moſt plainely to this purpoſe vpon this place of S. Paul, alleged out of the Pſalme: Tu es Sacerdos in æternum ſecundùm ordinem Melchiſedech: Thou art a Prieſt for euer after the order of Melchiſedech. His words be theſe: Significat ſermo, quòd non ſolùm Chriſtus obtulit incruentam hoſtiam (ſiquidem ſuum ipſius corpus obtulit) verùm etiam qui ab ipſo ſungentur ſacerdotio, quorùm Deus Pontifex eſſe dignatus eſt, ſine ſanguinis effuſione offerent. Nam hoc ſignificat (in æternum). Neque enim de ea, quæ ſemel à Deo facta eſt Oblatio, & Hoſtia, dixiſſet in æternum, ſed reſpiciens ad præſentes Sacrificos, per quos medios Chriſtus, Sacrificat, & Sacrificatur, qui etiam in Myſtica Cœna modum illum tradidit huiuſmodi Sacrificij. The meaning of this place is (ſaith he) that not onely Chriſt offered an Vnbloody ſacrifice, for he offered his owne Bodie, but alſo that they, which after him ſhall doe the office of a Prieſt (whoſe Biſhop hee vouchſafeth to be) ſhall offer without ſhedding of Blood. For that ſignifieth the word (For euer.) For concerning that Oblation and Sacrifice, which was once made by God, he would neuer ſay, (In æternum) For euer. But (he ſaid ſo) hauing an eie to thoſe Prieſts, that be now, by the mediation of whom Chriſt ſacrificeth, and is ſacrificed: who alſo in his Myſticall ſupper taught them by tradition the maner of ſuch a Sacrifice. Concerning the Prophecie of Malachi, for proofe of this Oblation, though the place of Irenæus aboue recited may ſtand in ſtead of many authorities, yet I will not let to rehearſe the ſayings of a Father or two, for confirmation of this Article. Pſalm. 109

Chryſoſtom ſaith very plainly: In omni loco Sacrificium offertur nomini meo, & Sacrificium purum, Vide quàm luculenter, quamque dilucidè Myſticam interpretatus eſt Menſam, quæ eſt Incruenta hoſtia. In euery place a Sacrifice ſhalbe offered to my name, and that a pure Sacrifice. See, how plainely, and clearely hee interpreted the Myſticall Table, which is the Vnbloody Sactifice. In Pſal. 95.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Yéere might I iuſtly take exception againſt this Doctor, as finding him without the compaſſe of the firſt ſix hundred yéeres. Howbeit, He ſaith not, That the Prieſt hath power, or Authoritie, to ſacrifice the Sonne of God, nor ſéemeth any way to fauour M. Hardings purpoſe. Therefore we ſhall not néed to touch his credit.

Hieronym. in Pſalm. 86. Hieronym. in Pſalm. 97. Auguſt. quæſti. Euang. lib. 2.

The whole Contents of his words are theſe: That there is in the Church an Vnbloody Sacrifice, and that Chriſt himſelfe offereth vp the ſame by the meane, and Miniſterie of the Prieſt, and that Chriſt himſelfe is that Sacrifice. Which words with due Conſtruction, and in the ſenſe, and meaning of the Ancient Fathers, may well be granted. For like as S. Hierome ſaith, as it is alleged before: Quod natum eſt ex Virgine, nobis quotidie naſcitur: Chriſtus nobis quotidie Crucifigitur: Chriſt, that was Borne of the Virgin, is Borne vnto vs euery day: Chriſt vnto vs is daily Crucified. And, as S. Auguſtine ſaith: Tum Chriſtus cuique Occiditur, cùm credit Occiſum: Then is Chriſt preſently ſlaine to euery man, when he truſteth truſteth wholly in his Death, and beleeueth, he was ſlaine: And as the ſame S. Auguſtine ſaith: Tibi Chriſtus quotidiè Reſurgit: Chriſt riſeth againe to thee euery day: And, as Chryſoſtom ſaith, In the holy Myſteries is wrought, and perfited the Death of Chriſt: Briefly, as Gregorie ſaith, Chriſtus iterum in hoc Myſterio Moritur: Chriſt is ſlaine in this Myſtery, and dieth againe: Euen ſo, and in the ſame ſenſe, and meaning, and none otherwiſe, Oecumenius ſaith, Chriſt is offered in the Holy Supper.

Sacrificed Dailie. Chriſt the Prieſt, and the Oblation.

But, as Chriſt is neither daily Borne of the Virgin, nor daily crucified, nor daily ſlaine, nor daily Riſeth from the Dead, nor daily Suffereth, nor daily Dieth, but only in a certain maner of Speech, not verily, and indeed: Euen ſo Chriſt is daily Sacrificed, only in a certaine maner of ſpeech, and in a Myſterie: but Really, verily, and indeed he is not Sacrificed.

Auguſtin. De verbis Domini Secun. Luc. ſermone 38. Chryſoſt. in Acta hom. 21. De Con. diſt. 2. Quid ſit.

The reſt, that followeth in Oecumenius, only expreſſeth the two ſeuerall Natures in Chriſt, the Godhead, and the Manhood: That, touching his Manhood, he was Sacrificed: touching his Godhead, he was the Prieſt, and made the Sacrifice: And further to M. Hardings purpoſe it maketh nothing. So Beda ſaith, although ſomewhat otherwiſe: Filius Dei, & Orat pro nobis: & Orat in nobis: & Oratur à nobis. Orat Pro nobis, vt Sacerdos: Orat in nobis, vt Caput: Oratur à nobis, vt Deus: The Son of God both Praieth for vs, and Praieth in vs: and is Praied of vs. He Praieth for vs, as our Prieſt, he Praieth in vs, as our Head: He is Praied of vs, as our God. Epiphanius ſaith: Chriſtus eſt victima, Sacerdos, Altare, Deus, Homo, Rex, Pontifex, Ouis, Agnus, omnia in omnibus pro nobis factus: Chriſt is our Sacrifice, our Prieſt, our Altar, God, Man, King, Biſhop, Sheepe, Lambe, made for our ſakes all in all. Thus is Chriſt our Sacrifice: thus is Chriſt our Sacrificer, not to be offered by the Prieſt, as M. Harding imagineth: but, as the Old Fathers, and Fathers of the Church haue taught vs, offered by himſelfe vpon the Croſſe. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Ecce iſtic oblatus eſt: Ibi ſeipſum obtulit: Simul & Hoſtia, & Sacerdos. Et Altare erat Crux: Behold there was he offered: There he offered himſelfe: He was both the Prieſt, and the Sacrifice: And his Croſſe was the Altar.

Auguſtin. De Tempore Sermo. 130.

This word, Incruentum, that M. Harding hath here alleged out of Chryſoſtome, is thought to beare great waight: but being well conſidered, of that ſide it is alleged for, as it ſhall appeare, it waigheth nothing. The Holy learned Fathers apply that word, ſometime to Prayer, and other deuotion of the mind: and ſometime to the Miniſtration of the holy Communion.

For the better opening hereof, it may pleaſe thee, good Chriſtian Reader, to vnderſtand, that in the time of Moſes Law, the Prieſts, and Leuits offered vp vnto God Oxen, Calues, Rams, and Goats: and with the Blood thereof ſprinkled the Booke, the inſtruments of the Miniſtery, the whole Tabernacle, and all the people: and as S. Paul ſaith, In the Ceremonies of that Law without Bloodſhedding there was no remiſſion of Sinne. Likewiſe the Heathens killed, and offered vp their cattell vnto their Idols, ſometimes an hundred fat Oxen in one day. Sometime they proceeded further, and made their Sacrifices of Mans Blood. Erichtheus of Athens, and Marius of Rome killed, and offered vp their owne Daughters in the honor of Pallas. The Nobles of Carthage in the honor of their Idoll Saturnus killed, and offered vp threeſcore and ten of their own male Children in one Sacrifice.

Hebræ. 9.

Clemens in Oratio contra Gentes.

In reſpect of theſe groſſe, and Fleſhly, and Bloody Sacrifices, our Chriſtian Sacrifices in the Goſpell, becauſe they are more Spirituall, and proceed wholly from the heart, are called Vnbloody. Euſebius ſaith: Incendimus Orationis ſuffitum: & Sacrificium, quod appellatur Purum, non per Cruores facimus, ſed per puras actiones: We burne the Incenſe of Prayer: and we offer vp the Sacrifice, that is called Pure, not by ſhedding of Blood, but by Pure, and godly doings.

Euſeb. De Demonſt. li. 1. c. 6. τὸ δὲ θυμίαμα. Chryſoſt. contra Iudæos Orat. 3.

So Chryſoſtome: Offerimus, non per Fumum, Nidorem, aut Sanguinem, ſed per Spiritus Gratiam: We make our Sacrifices not by Smoke, Smell, and Blood; but by the Grace of the Holy Spirit. He addeth further: For God is Spirit, and he that adoreth him, muſt adore in Spirit, and Truth.

And this is the Vnbloody Sacrifice. So ſaith Euſebius: Offerent illi Rationabiles, & Incruentas Hoſtias: They ſhall offer vnto him Reaſonable (or Spirituall) and Vnbloody Oblations. And the ſame he expoundeth, The Sacrifice of Praiſe.

Euſeb. De Demon. li. 2. λογικὰς, καὶ ἀναιμάκτους θυσίας.

In like ſort, S. Hierome ſaith: In ſinceritate azyma epulamur: We feaſt in Pureneſſe without leauen. In like conſideration the Sacrifices, that in Old times were made vnto Fides, and Terminus, were called ἀναίμακτα, Vnbloody, becauſe they conſiſted only in Suffumigations, and Odors, and were not imbrued with any Blood. And for the like cauſe Thucydides calleth certaine of the Heathen oblations ἀγνὰ θύματα, Pure Sacrifices. Likewiſe Cyrillus calleth the Prayers and Melody of the Angels, and bleſſed Spirits in Heauen

Hierony. in Epiſt. ad Galat. ca. 4. Cyrillus ad Reginas.

Vnbloody Sacrifice.

Heauen continually praising, and glorifying the name of God, Incruenta Sacrificia: Vnbloody Sacrifices. Againe he saith: Nos, relicto crasso Ministerio Iudæorum, præceptum habemus, vt Tenue, & Spirituale, & Subtile Sacrificium faciamus. Itaque offerimus Deo in odorem suauitatis virtutes omne genus, Fidem, Spem, Charitatem: Wee, hauing left the grosse Ministerie of the Iewes, haue a Commandement, to make a Fine, Thin, and Spirituall Sacrifice. And therefore we offer vnto God all maner Vertues, Faith, Hope, Charitie, as most sweet sauours.

Cyrillus contra Iulian. li. 10.

For this cause the Sacrifices of our Praiers, and other like deuotions, are called Vnbloody, for that they require no Fleshly Seruice, or Shedding of Blood, as did the Sacrifices of the Iewes, and Heathens, but are méere Ghostly, and Spirituall, and stand wholly in the lifting vp, and eleuation of the minde.

Euseb. De Demon. lib. 1. Θυσιαστήριον ἀνάπεμψαν, καὶ Λογικὰς θυσίας καὶ τὰ καινὰ μυστήρια. In eodem libro. μηνύων ἡμῖν παρῆσθαι τὴν θυσίαν τοῦ σφαγίου.

In like maner the Ministration of the Holy Communion is sometimes of the Ancient Fathers called an Vnbloody Sacrifice: not in respect of any Corporall, or Fleshly presence, that is imagined to be there without Bloodshedding, but for that it representeth, and reporteth vnto our minds that One, and Euerlasting Sacrifice, that Christ made in his Body vpon the Crosse. Therefore Eusebius saith: Excitamus illi Altare Incruentorum, & Rationabilium Sacrificiorum, secundum Noua Mysteria: We erect vnto God an Altar of Vnbloody, and Reasonable, or Spirituall Sacrifices, according to the New Mysteries. Againe: Sacrificium incendimus illi, Memoriam magni illius Sacrificij: We burne a Sacrifice vnto God, that is, the Remembrance of that great Sacrifice. Likewise againe: Christus obtulit Mirabile Sacrificium pro salute omnium nostrûm, iubens nos offerre Memoriam pro Sacrificio: Christ offered vp that maruellous Sacrifice for our Saluation, commanding vs to offer a Remembrance thereof, in stead of a Sacrifice. So likewise saith S. Hierome, although not altogether in like respect: Pane, & Vino, Puro, & Simplici Sacrificio Christi dedicauit Sacramentum: He dedicated the Sacrament of Christ in Bread, and Wine, which is (not a Bloody, or loathsome, but) a Pure, and a simple Sacrifice.

Hieronym. ad Euagrium.

This Remembrance, and Oblation of praises, and Rendring of thankes vnto God for our Redemption in the Blood of Christ, is called of the Old Fathers, An Vnbloody Sacrifice, and of S. Augustine, The Sacrifice of the New Testament, August. de Gratia Noui Testa. ad Honoratum.

Iustinus Martyr saith: Esaias non pollicetur Cruentarum Victimarum instaurationem: sed veras, & Spirituales Oblationes Laudis, & Gratiarum actionis: Esaias promiseth not the restoring of Bloody Sacrifices, but the True, and Spirituall Oblations of Praises, and Thanksgiuing.

Iustin. Martyr in Dialogis. cum Tryphone.

S. Chrysostome saith: Non iam Sanguinem, aut adipem offerimus, &c. We offer not now the fat, or Blood of Beasts. All these things are abolished. And in stead thereof there is brought in a Reasonable, or Spirituall dutie. But, what is this duty that we call Reasonable, or Spirituall? That it is, that is offered by the Soule, and Spirit.

Chrysostom. in Epist. ad Heb. hom. 11.

This kind of Sacrifice, because it is méere Spirituall, and groweth only from the Minde, therefore it néedeth not any materiall Altar of Stone, or Timber to be made vpon, as doth that Sacrifice, that M. Harding imagineth in his Masse. Chrysostome saith: Munus Euangelij sine Sanguine, sine Fumo, sine Altari, cæterisque sursum ascendit: The Sacrifice of the Gospell ascendeth vp without Blood, without Smoke, without Altar, and other the like. In the second Councell of Nice it is written thus: Nos Christiani propemodum quid sit Ara, & quid sit Victima, nescimus: What Sacrifice, or Altar meaneth, we being Christian people, in a maner cannot tell.

Chrysostom. in Psalm. 95.

S. Hierome saith: Vnusquisque Sanctus Altare Domini in se habet, quod est Fides: Euery Holy man hath in himselfe the Altar of God, which is Faith. To be short, S. Augustine saith: Sacrificium Noui Testamenti est, quando Altaria Cordis nostri munda, & pura in conspectu Diuinæ Maiestatis offerimus: The Sacrifice of the New Testament is, when we offer vp the Altars of our hearts pure, and cleane in the sight of the Diuine Maiesty. In these respects our Praiers, our Praises, our Thanksgiuing vnto God for our Saluation in the Death of Christ, is called an Vnbloody Sacrifice. Hereof the slenderneſſe of M. Hardings ghesses may some appeare. For thus he would séeme to reason: The Ministration of the Holy Communion, and our humble Remembrance of the Death of Christ, is called an Vnbloody Sacrifice: Ergo, The Priest hath power to offer vp the Son of God in Sacrifice vnto his Father.

Hierom. in Psalm. 26.

August. de Tempore sermo 125.

M. Harding. The 15. Diuision.

S. Augustine hath many euident sayings touching this matter in his workes. One shall suffice for all, which is in a little Treatise, he made contra Iudæos, vttered in these words. Aperite oculos tandem aliquando, & videte ab Oriente sole vsque ad Occidentem, non in vno loco, vt vobis fuit constitutum, sed in omni loco offerri Sacrificium Christianorum, non cuilibet Deo, sed ei, qui ista prædixit, Deo Israel. Open your eies at last you Iewes, and see that from the rising of the Sun to the setting, not in one place, as it was appointed to you, but in euery place the Sacrifice of the Christian people is offered, not to euery God, but to him, that prophecied of these things Cap. 9.

things before, the God of Israel. And euen so with that protestation, which S. Augustine made to the Iews, I end this tedious matter consisting in maner altogether in allegations, to M. Iewel. Open you your eies at last M. Iewel, and see how (230) all the holy, and learned Fathers, that haue preached the Faith of Christ from the rising of the Sun to the setting, haue taught this Doctrine, by word, and writing left to the posterity, that they which vnder Christ doe vse the office of a Priest after the Order of Melchisedech, haue not only Authority, but also expresse commandement, to offer vp Christ vnto his Father.

The proofe of which Doctrine, although it depend of the waight of one place, yet I haue thought good to fortifie it with some number, that it may the better appeare to be a most vndoubted truth, not mooued greatly with the blame of tediousnesse, where no thankes are sought, but only defence of the Catholike Religion is intended.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

S. Augustine, as in these words he neither toucheth, nor signifieth this new maner of Offering vp Christ vnto his Father, so in sundry other places he openeth his own meaning plainly, and fully touching the same. In his Treatie against the Iewes he writeth thus: Sacerdotium Aaron iam nullum est in aliquo templo: At Christi Sacerdotium æternum perseuerat in Cœlo: The (Bloody) Priesthood of Aaron is now inno Temple to be found: But the Priesthood of Christ continueth still (not vpon any Earthly Altar, but) in Heauen. Againe: The Priest offereth vp the Sacrifice of Praise, not after the Order of Aaron, but after the Order of Melchisedech. Eius Sacrificij similitudinem celebrandam in suæ Passionis Memoriam commendauit: & illud, quod Melchisedech obtulit Deo, iam per totum Orbem terrarum videmus offerri: Christ hath left vnto vs a likenesse, or Token of that Sacrifice in Remembrance of his Passion: And the same, that Melchisedech offered vnto God, wee see is now offered thorowout the whole World. Holocausti eius Imaginem ad Memoriam Passionis suæ in Ecclesia celebrandam dedit: Christ hath giuen vs, to celebrate in his Church, an Image, or Token of that Sacrifice, for the Remembrance of his Passion. Huius Sacrificij Caro, & Sanguis antè Aduentum Christi per victimas similitudinum promittebatur: In Passione Christi per ipsam Veritatem reddebatur: Post Ascensionem Christi per Sacramentum Memoriæ celebratur: The Flesh, and Blood of this Sacrifice before the Comming of Christ was promised by Sacrifices of Resemblance: The same was performed in deed in the time of Christs Passion: But after Christs Ascension, it is frequented by a Sacrament of Remembrance. Sacrificium hoc Visibile, Inuisibilis Sacrificij Sacramentum, id est, Sacrum Signum est: This Visible Sacrifice, is a Sacrament, that is to say, a Token, or Signe of the Sacrifice Inuisible. Quod appellamus Sacrificium, Signum est, & Representatio Sacrificij: The thing, that we call a Sacrifice, is a Signe, and Representation of a Sacrifice.

Thus many waies S. Augustine himselfe teacheth vs, what he meant by this word Sacrifice: An Oblation of Praise: a Similitude: a Resemblance: a Likenesse: an Image: a Remembrance: a Token: a Signe: a Representation of a Sacrifice. So Nazianzene calleth it, πρὸ τῶν μεγάλων μυστηίων ἀντίτυπον: The Figure, or Token of the Great Mysteries. To conclude, S. Hierome saith thus: Tunc acceptabis Sacrificium, vel cùm te pro nobis offers Patri: vel cum à nobis Laudes, & Gratiarum actiones accipis: Then shalt thou receiue Sacrifice, either when thou offerest thy selfe (vpon thy Crosse) for vs vnto thy Father: or when thou receiuest of vs Praises, and Thanksgiuing.

Neither hath God appointed any certaine order of outward Priesthood to make this Sacrifice. Euery Faithfull Christian man hath Authoritie, to offer vp, and to make the same. Howbeit, this I meane, not of the Ministration of the Holy Sacraments, which only pertaineth vnto the Minister, but only of the Oblation, and making of the Spirituall Sacrifice. Thus much I say, lest any man, either of malice take occasion, or of ignorance be deceiued. S. Cyprian saith: Omnes, qui à Christi nomine dicuntur Christiani, offerunt Deo quotidianum Sacrificium, ordinati à Deo Sanctimoniæ Sacerdotes: All, that of Christ be called Christians, offer vp vnto God the daily Sacrifice, being ordained of God Priests of holinesse. Origen saith: Omnes, quicunque, &c. All, that ar bathed with the holy ointment, are made Priests, euen as Peter saith vnto the whole Church, You are the Chosen Stocke, and the Kingly Priesthood. S. Augustine saith: Holocaustum Dominici Passionis offert quisque pro peccatis suis: Euery man offereth vp the Sacrifice of our Lords Passion for his own sinnes. S. Ambrose saith: Inuicem expectate, vt multorum Oblatio simul celebretur: Wait ye one for another, that the Sacrifice of many may be offered together. S. Chrysostome saith: In Mysterijs nihil differt Sacerdos à Subdito: In the holy Mysteries (the Ministration only excepted) the Priest differeth nothing from the People

It appeareth by these Ancient learned Fathers, that euery Christian man is bound, to offer vp the Vnbloody, and daily Sacrifice of the New Testament, and that in as full, and ample sort, as is the Priest. And therefore M. Harding himselfe saith euen in the verie Canon of his Masse: Memento Domine famulorum, famularumque tuarum, & omnium Circumstantium, pro quibus tibi offerimus, vel qui tibi offerunt hoc Sacrificium Laudis: Remember, Melchisedech.

The 230. Vntruth. For not one of all these Fathers here alleged, euer said that the Priest hath either power, or commandement, to offer vp the Sonne of God vnto his Father.

Remember, O Lord, thy ſeruants, and all them, that ſtand about, for whom we offer vnto thee, or elſe, which doe offer vnto thee, this Sacrifice of Praiſes.

Out of S. Auguſtines words M. Harding in the end concludeth thus: Chriſt is a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech: Ergo, The Prieſt hath Authoritie, to offer vp the Son of God in Sacrifice vnto his Father. It were hard to tell vs, how this Antecedent, and this Conſequent came together. No man hath Authority thus to mince his Logicke, but M. Harding.

Chriſt only is that Prieſt for euer, according to the order of Melchiſedech: He hath made an endleſſe Sacrifice: He himſelfe hath offered vp himſelfe vnto God his Father vpon the Croſſe. Therefore God the Father ſaith vnto him: Thou art that Prieſt for euer: not any mortall Creature, or worty wight, but thou (only) being both God, and Man, art that Prieſt for euer. S. Paul ſaith: We are made perfit, and Sanctified by that one Sacrifice once made vpon the Croſſe. S. Iohn the Euangeliſt ſaith: He is the propitiation, and Sacrifice for our ſinnes. S. Peter ſaith: He carried our ſinnes in his Body vpon the Tree. S. Paul ſaith: God was in Chriſt reconciling the world vnto himſelfe. Therefore S. Iohn the Baptiſt ſaith: Behold that Lambe of God, that taketh away the ſinnes of the world.

Hebræ. 7. & 9. Pſalm. 110. Hebræ. 9. 1. Iohan. 2. 1. Petr. 2. 2. Corin. 5. Iohan. 1.

If M. Harding, and his fellowes doubt hereof, as they ſéeme to doe, let Chriſt himſelfe beare witneſſe to the price of his own Blood. Hanging vpon the Croſſe, and yelding vp the Spirit, he ſealed vp all with theſe words: Conſummatum eſt: That is to ſay, This is the Sacrifice for ſinne: Hereby my Fathers wrath is pacified: hereby all things are made perfit.

The Sacrifice is but one: we may loke for none other. It is full, and perfit: we may loke for no better.

S. Peter ſaith: Chriſt offereth vs vnto God his Father. S. Paul ſaith: Through Chriſt we haue acceſſe to the Throne of Glory. What then meaneth M. Harding, thus to tell vs, and to beare the world in hand, that contrarywiſe, he hath Authority, to offer vp Chriſt, and to preſent him before the Throne of Glory? Or how dareth he, to deſire God, to receiue his only begotten Son into fauour, and fauourably, and fatherly to loke vpon him at his requeſt? For thus he biddeth his Prayer euen in his Canon, euen in the ſecreteſt, and deuoteſt part of his Maſſe: Super quæ propitio, ac ſereno vultu, &c. Vpon theſe things (that is to ſay, ſaith Gabriel Biel, vpon the Body, and Blood of Chriſt thy Son) O Lord looke down with a Mercifull and a cheerfull countenance: and receiue the ſame (the Body, and Blood of thy Sonne) as thou didſt in Old times receiue the Sacrifice of Abel, and of Abraham (which was a Weather, or a Calfe, or ſome other like thing.) Thus he, not only taketh vpon him, to pray for Chriſt, but alſo compareth the Sacrifice of the Son of God, with the Sacrifice of brute Cattell. If he deny any part hereof, his own Canon, his own Maſſebooke will reproue him. If this be not Blaſphemie, what thing can be called Blaſphemie?

1. Petri 3. Hebræ. 4.

But God will anſwer ſuch a Blaſphemous, and raſh Sacrificer: I know my Sonne: In him my heart is pleaſed. But what art thou? Who bad thee thus to praie? Who required ſuch Sacrifice at thy hand?

O M. Harding, God open the eies of your heart, that you may ſée the miſerable nakednes of your ſide. Deceiue not your ſelfe. Mocke not the world. Conſider better of your Authorities. Of all the Holy learned Fathers, of whom, ye tell vs, ye haue ſuch ſtore, ye are not yet able to ſhew vs one, either Greake, or Latine: or Heretike, or Catholike: from the riſing of the Sun, to the Sun going downe: that euer ſaid, as you ſay, A mortall man hath Authority, and power, to offer vp in ſacrifice the Son of God.

Talke of your ſtore, when ye haue tried it better. Thraſo will talke of that, he hath not. And ſomewhat it may ſerue, to traie the ſimple: But the wiſe will thinke it folly.

Of

OF RECEIVING FOR OTHERS.

THE EIGHTEENTH ARTICLE.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

OR, that the Prieſt had then authority to Communicate, and to receiue the Sacrament for others, as they doe.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuiſion.

The Prieſt receiueth not the Sacrament for another.

What you would ſay M. Iewel, I wot not: what you ſay, I will not. Verily we doe not communicate, ne receiue the Sacrament for another. Neither hath it euer been taught in the Catholike Church, that the Prieſt receiue the Sacrament for another. (231) We receiue not the Sacrament for another, no more than we receiue the Sacrament of Baptiſme, or the Sacrament of Penance, or the Sacrament of Matrimonie, one for another. Indeed the Prieſt ſaith Maſſe for others, where he receiueth that he hath offered, and that is it you meane I gheſſe: In which Maſſe being the externall Sacrifice of the New Teſtament, according vnto Chriſts Inſtitution, the thing that is offered, is ſuch, as maketh our petitions and requeſts acceptable to God, as S. Cyprian ſaith: In huius (corporis) præſentia non ſuperuacuè mendicant lachryma veniam: In the preſence of this body teares craue not forgiueneſſe in vaine.

The 231. Vntruth. For in the Church of Rome, the Prieſt receiueth for others, as it ſhall appeare.

In Sermone de Cœna Domini.

That the Oblation of the Maſſe is done for others, than for the Prieſt alone, which celebrateth it, may ſufficiently be prooued by an hundred places of the Fathers: The matters being vndoubted, two or three may ſuffice. Firſt Chryſoſtome writeth thus in an Homily vpon the Acts: Quid dicis? in manibus eſt hoſtia, & omnia propoſita ſunt bene ordinata: adſunt Angeli, adſunt Archangeli, adeſt filius Dei, cum tanto horrore adſtant omnes, adſtant illi clamantes, omnibus ſilentibus, & putas ſimpliciter hæc fieri? Igitur & alia ſimpliciter, & quæ pro Eccleſia, & quæ pro Sacerdotibus offeruntur, & quæ pro plenitudine, ac vbertate? abſit. Sed omnia cum fide fiunt. What ſaiſt thou hereto? The hoſt is in the Prieſts hands, and all things ſet foorth are in due order. The Angels be preſent, the Archangels be preſent, the Sonne of God is preſent. Whereas all ſtand there with ſo great feare, whereas all they ſtand there crying out to God, and all other hold their peace, thinkeſt thou that theſe things be done ſimply, and without great cauſe? Why then be thoſe other things done alſo ſimply, both the things which are offered for the Church, for the Prieſts, for plentie, and abundance? God forbid. But all things are done with Faith.

In Actis hom. 21.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Here M. Harding of the Printers negligence, hath taken good occaſion, to refreſh himſelfe out of ſeaſon, and to play merily with theſe two words, For another. Which thing would rather become ſome other man, than a Doctor profeſſing ſuch a countenance of grauitie, as doe few others. It might haue pleaſed him, without any great preiudice, or hinderance of his cauſe, to allow vs ſome ſimple abilitie of ſpeaking Engliſh.

But Gods Iudgements be iuſt. He that will ſcorne, ſhall be ſcorned. M. Harding, that is ſo learned, ſo circumſpect, ſo curious, and maketh himſelfe ſo merry with the error of one poore Syllable committed only by the Printer in my Booke, in the ſelfe ſame place, and in the next ſide following, hath erred fiue Syllables together in his own Booke: as it may eaſily appeare by that, his friend, for ſhame, hath reſtored, and amended the ſame with his Pen. Fol. 172. b. lin. 17.

Howbeit, as he ſo fauorably bearing his owne errors, is ſo witty, to play with Syllables, and ſo ſharpe, and ready to carpe others, ſo in this whole Article, as poore Apothecaries for want commonly vſe to do, he ſeeketh out quid pro quo, and in ſtead of Receiuing the Communion, or Sacrament for others, he ſheweth vs Prayers, and Sacrifices, and I know not what, and ſo allegeth one thing for another.

Whether the Prieſt in the Church of Rome, haue vſed to receiue the Sacrament for others, or no, which thing M. Harding now vtterly denieth, and ſaith it was neuer vſed, nor neuer meant, in the end hereof, God willing, it ſhall appeare.

The thing that is offered, ſaith M. Harding maketh our Prayers acceptable vnto God. True it is, God accepteth, and mercifully beholdeth both vs, and alſo our Prayers, and our whole obedience in Ieſus Chriſt his Sonne, and for his only ſake: not for that he is now, or can be offered Verily, and Really by the Prieſt, but only for that he was once offered for all vpon the Croſſe. S. Paul ſaith: By Chriſt we haue acceſſe to the Throne of Grace. Chriſt himſelfe ſaith: No man commeth to my Father, but by me. Irenæus ſaith: Chriſt (being in Heauen) is Hebræ. 4. our Altar, and vpon him we muſt offer vp, and lay our Praiers. And therefore in time of the holy Myſteries the Deacon ſaith thus vnto the People, Lift vp your hearts.

Cyprian. De Cœna Domini. But S. Cyprian ſaith: In huius Corporis præſentia: In the Preſence of this Body. Howbeit, S. Cyprian ſaith not, In the Locall Preſence of this Body. For ſuch Preſence M. Harding himſelfe hath already refuſed. He meaneth only the Preſence of Faith, and the Vertue, and power of Chriſts Body. And in this ſenſe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Rerum Abſentium Præſens eſt Fides: & rerum, quæ foris ſunt, intus eſt Fides: Of things, that be Abſent, Faith is Preſent: Of things, that be without, Faith is within. Againe he ſaith: Accedamus ad Ieſum, non Carne, ſed Corde: non Corporis Præſentia, ſed Fidei Potentia: Let vs approch vnto Ieſus, not with our Fleſh, but with our heart: not with Preſence of Body, but with power of Faith. Likewiſe againe: Habes Chriſtum in Præſenti, & in futuro. In Præſenti per Fidem: in Præſenti per Signum: in Præſenti per Baptiſmatis Sacramentum: in Præſenti per Altaris Cibum, & Potum: Thou haſt Chriſt both in the time preſent, and alſo in the time to come. In the time Preſent, by Faith: in the time Preſent, by the Signe (of the Croſſe in thy forehead): in the time Preſent, by the Sacrament of Baptiſme: in the time Preſent, by the Meat, and Drinke of the Altar, (or Communion Table.)

Auguſt. in Iohan. Tract. 51.

Hieronym. ad Euſtochium, de Epitaphio Paulæ. S. Hierome writing the Epitaph of Paula vnto Euſtiochium, ſaith thus: Paula ingreſſa in ſtabulum, me audiente, iurabat, cernere ſe oculis Fidei Infantem pannis inuolutum, & vagientem in Præſepi Dominum: Paula entring into the ſtable (at Bethlehem) affirmed with an oth, in my hearing, that with the eies of her Faith ſhee ſaw (Chriſt, as) an Infant in his ſwathing clouts, and the Lord crying in the Manger like a Child. So mighty is the power of Faith. That vertuous Lady Paula ſaw by Faith, that indeed ſhe ſaw not. She ſaw Chriſt, as an Infant in his Swathing Clouts: and yet then Chriſt was neither Infant, nor Swathed in Clouts, nor in Corporall Preſence, indeed, and verily Preſent there. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Abſentia Domini non eſt abſens. Habe Fidem, & tecum eſt, quem non vides: The Abſence of our Lord is not Abſent. Haue Faith, and he, whom thou ſeeſt not, is Preſent with thee. Likewiſe S. Ambroſe ſaith: S. Steuen ſtanding in the Earth, toucheth the Lord being in Heauen.

Ambroſ. Sermo 58. De Magdalena.

De Con. Diſ. 2. Quia Corpus.

Thus ſaith S. Cyprian, Chriſts Body is preſent at the holy Communion, not by any Corporall, or Reall Preſence, but by the effectuall working, and force of Faith. In like ſort Euſebius Emiſſenus ſaith: Vt perennis illa Victima viueret in Memoria, & ſemper Præſens eſſet in Gratia: That, that Euerlaſting Sacrifice might liue in our Remembrance, and euermore be Preſent in Grace. He ſaith not, that the Sacrifice of Chriſts Body ſhould be Preſent Locally, Really, Verily, or indeed, but in Remembrance, and in Grace. Germanus hereof writeth thus: Non amplius ſuper terram ſumus: Sed in Throno Dei, Regi aſſiſtimus in Cœlis, vbi Chriſtus eſt: We are no longer vpon the Earth: but we are aſſiſtant vnto the King in the Throne of God in Heauen, where Chriſt is. For that Lambs ſake, whom we thus ſee, and thus haue Preſent, whatſoeuer we pray, our teares beg not in vaine. For he is our Aduocate, and Mediator, and euermore maketh intercellion for vs. Whatſoeuer we deſire the Father in his name, ſhall be done vnto vs.

German. in Rer. Eccleſ. Theoria.

1. Iohan. 2. Roman. 8. Hebræ. 7. Iohan. 16.

Thus the Angels, and Archangels, as Chryſoſtome by way of amplification ſaith, lifting vp, and ſhewing forth, and preſenting vnto God in Heauen that Body of Chriſt, make their Praiers for Mankind, and thus they ſay: For them we Pray, O Lord, whom thou louedſt ſo tenderly, that for their Saluation it pleaſed thee to ſuffer Death; and to yeeld thy ſoule vpon the Croſſe: For them we pray, for whom thou haſt giuen thy Blood, and offered vp this Body.

Chryſoſt. De Incomprehen. Dei Natura. hom. 3.

This certainly is the meaning of Chryſoſtomes words. And therefore he ſaith againe: Whether we Pray for the Church, or for the Miniſters, or for the increaſe of the Earth, our Praiers are acceptable vnto God only in Chriſt, and for his ſake.

Touching that he writeth further of the Preſence, and Aſſiſtance of Angels, and Heauenly Powers, it is the ordinary maner, and courſe of Chryſoſtomes eloquence, and ſeruieth him both to beautifie the matter, and alſo to ſtir vp, and inflame the hearers minds: and that not only in the time of the holy Myſteries, but alſo at all other holy aſſemblies, and Puplike praiers. For thus he ſaith vnto the people: Angeli ſunt vbique, & maxime in domo Dei Adſunt Regi, & omnia plena ſunt Incorporeis illis Virtutibus: The Angels of God are euery where: but ſpecially in the Houſe of God. They are aſſiſtant vnto the King: and all places are full of Spirituall Powers. In like maner of amplification he ſaith: The Martyrs are here Preſent in the Church. If thou wilt ſee them, open the eies of thy Faith, and thou ſhalt ſee a great company.

Chryſoſt. hom. 15. ad Hebræ. Chryſoſtom. in hom. De Aſcenſione.

Baſili. De Ieiunio, hom. 2. Tertull. De Baptiſmo.

So ſaith S. Baſil: The Angels of God are preſent amongſt vs, and marke, and regiſter them, that keepe their faſt. So ſaith Tertullian: Let no man be hard to beleeue, that the holy Angell of God is Preſent, and tempereth the Water, to the Saluation of Man.

This is it, that Chryſoſtome meaneth, by his vehement Eroynation of the Preſence of Angels.

And

And whereas M. Harding ſaith, he hath paſſed ouer an hundred authorities and moe, that might be alleged to like purpoſe, this is one of his accuſtomed colours, and an artificiall ſhift of his Rhetorike. Verily hitherto he hath not found one authority to proue that thing that is in queſtion.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

S. Ambroſe in his funerall Oration of the death of Valentinian the Emperour, calling the Sacrament of the Altar, the holy and heauenly Myſteries, and the Oblation of our Mother (by which tearme he vnderſtandeth the Church) ſaith, that he will proſecute the holy ſoule of that Emperour with the ſame. This Father writing vpon the 38. Pſalme, exhorteth Prieſts to follow Chriſt, that as he offered for vs his Blood, ſo Prieſts offer Sacrifice for the people. His words be theſe: Vidimus Principem Sacerdotum, &c. We haue ſeene the Prince of Prieſts comming vnto vs, we haue ſeene and heard him offering for vs his blood. Let vs that be Prieſts follow as we can, ſo as we offer Sacrifice for the people, though weake in merit, yet honourable for the Sacrifice, &c.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

This obiection is eaſily anſwered. S. Ambroſe ſaith, That in the Congregation, and in the time of the holy Myſteries, he would offer vp vnto God praiſes and thankſgiuing for that godly Emperour Valentinian. But he ſaith not, That he would offer Chriſt the Sonne of God vnto God his Father, or receiue the Sacrament for the Emperor. Therefore M. Harding might well haue paſt this authority ouer among the reſt.

Neither did S. Ambroſe thinke, that the Emperour Valentinian was in Purgatory, whereas M. Harding imagineth, he might be relæued: but contrariwiſe he preſumeth, him vndoubtedly to be in Heauen. For thus he writeth of him: Quænam eſt hæc anima, &c. What is this Soule, that looketh foorth as the day Starre, beautifull as the Moone, choſen as the Sun? O bleſſed ſoule, thou looke ſt downe from aboue vpon vs, being heere beneath: Thou haſt eſcaped the darkneſſe of this world: thou art as bright as the Moone: thou ſhineſt as the Sun. Further he ſaith: Cum fratre coniunctus æternæ vitæ fruitur voluptate. Beati Ambo: Being now with his Brother, he enioieth the pleaſure of euerlaſting life. Bleſſed are they both. Therefore the Sacrifice that S. Ambroſe made, was not a Propitiatory, or Satisfactory, or other like Maſſe, whereby M. Harding thinketh himſelfe able to baile ſoules out of Purgatory, but only a Sacrifice of thankeſgiuing for that godly Emperour, being now in Heauen. Ambroſ. de Obitu Valentiniani Imperat.

The other place of S. Ambroſe, as it nothing toucheth this queſtion, ſo it is already anſwered fully and at large, Artic. 6. Diuiſ. 7. and Artic. 17. Diuiſ. 12.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuiſion.

That the oblation of the Maſſe, is profitably made for others, S. Gregory witneſſeth very plainly, homilia 37 expounding the place of S. Luke, cap. 14. Aliquos legationem mittens, ea quæ pacis ſunt poſtulat: Elſe he ſendeth foorth an Ambaſſade and ſueth for peace. Hereupon he ſaith thus: Mittamus ad Dominum legationem noſtram, fletibus, Sacras hoſtias offerendo. Singulariter namque ad abſolutionem noſtram, oblata cum lachrimis & benignitate mentis, Sacris altaris Hoſtia ſuffragatur: Let vs ſend to our Lord our Ambaſſade, with weeping, giuing almes and offering of holy Hoſts. For the Hoſt of the holy Altar (that is, the bleſſed Sacrament) offered with teares, and with the mercifull bounty of our minde, helpeth vs ſingularly to be aſſoiled. In that homilie he ſheweth, that the oblation of Chriſts Body in this Sacrament preſent, which is done in the Maſſe, is helpe and comfort not onely to them that be preſent, but alſo to them that bee abſent, both quicke and dead, which he prooueth by example of his owne knowledge

Whoſo liſteth to ſee antiquity for proofe hereof, and that in the Apoſtles time Biſhops and Prieſts in the dreadfull Sacrifice offered and praied for others, as for euery ſtate, and order of men, and alſo for holeſomeneſſe of the aire, and for fertilitie of the fruits of the Earth, &c. let him reade the eighth booke of the Conſtitutions of the Apoſtles ſet foorth by Clement.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Praier for the Dead is none of thoſe Articles, that M. Harding hath taken in hand to proue. And therfore, as his maner is, he ſheweth vs one thing for another. This kinde of Praier, although it be more Superſtitious, and vtterly without warrant of Gods word, yet I confeſſe, it was many wheres receiued, and vſed, both in Gregories time, and alſo long before, and is auouched of Gregory by a number of vaine and childiſh fables. Touching the Sacrifice of the holy Communion he ſaith: In this Myſterie Chriſt ſuffereth againe for our ſake: in this Myſterie Chriſt dieth: wee offer vp the Sacrifice of his Paſſion: wee renne againe his Paſſion vnto our ſelues. As Chriſt ſuffereth and dieth, and as his Paſſion, and Death is renued in the holy Communion: euen ſo is he offered and Sacrificed in the ſame, that is to ſay, as Gregory expoundeth himſelfe, by Repreſentation, and by Memory, and not Verily, Really or Indeed. De Conſ. diſt. 2. Quid ſit. Item rum in hoc myſterio moritur. Greg. in Euangel. hom. 37.

Touching the matter it ſelfe that ſtandeth in queſtion, Gregorie ſaith not, neither heere nor elſewhere, either that the Prieſt receiueth the Communion for the reſt of his Pariſh, or that one mans receiuing is auaileable for another.

The Sacrifice that he nameth, is no more the Sacrifice of the Prieſt, than the Sacrifice of any other of all the People. For thus he writeth in the ſame Fable: Toties Mariti vincula ſoluebantur in Captiuitate, quoties ab eius Coniuge oblatæ fuiſſent Hoſtiæ pro eius Greg. in Euangel. hom. 37.

ius animæ Absolutione : The Husband being taken prisoner had his gieues loosed from him, as often as his wife offered vp Sacrifice for his soule.

The words of this supposed Clement, by whom M. Harding would séme to claime a shew of great Antiquitie, nothing touch the thing that is demanded. For thus onely he saith : Offerimus tibi Regi, & Deo, &c. Wee offer vp vnto thee our God and King, according to Christs Institution, This Bread, and this Cup, by him rendring thankes vnto thee. And lest M. Harding happen to say, This Sacrifice was Propitiatorie to release the soules that were in Purgatorie, this Clemens saith further : Offerimus tibi pro omnibus, qui à sæculis tibi placuerunt, Sanctis, Patriarchis, Prophetis, Iustis, Apostolis, Martyribus : Wee offer vnto thee for all holy Saints, that haue beene from the beginning of the World, Patriarks, Prophets, Iust men, Apostles and Martyrs. I trow, M. Harding will not say, All these were in Purgatorie.

Clemens Apost. Constit. lib. 8.

And touching the receiuing of the Communion, he saith thus : Posteà recipiat Episcopus, &c. Then let the Bishop receiue, and after him the Priests, the Deacons, the Subdeacons, the Readers, the Singers, the Religious, the Women Deacons, the Virgins, the Widowes, the Children, and the whole Congregation in order with sobrietie and reuerence without confusion. By this Record of this Clemens it appeareth, that the whole Congregation receiued the holy Communion all together, each man for himselfe, and not one man for another.

Now, whereas M. Harding vtterly denieth, that euer any man in his Church receiued the Sacrament in stead of others, as somewhat misliking the open follie of the same, for short triall héereof, I remit him both to the very practise of his Masse, and also to the most Catholike Doctours of all his Schoole.

In his Requiem, he singeth thus : Pro quorum memoria Corpus Christi sumitur, &c. For whose remembrance the Body of Christ is receiued. If he can happily deuise some veile to shadow this, yet his Doctours be both so plaine, that they cannot be shifted : and also of so good credit, that they may not be refused. Certainly they haue béene euermore thought to teach the Catholike Doctrine of the Church. Gabriel Biel saith thus : Sicut os materialis Corporis, &c. As the mouth of our materiall Body, not only eateth for it selfe, but also receiueth sustenance for the preseruation of all other members, which sustenance is diuided thorowout the whole Body: Euen so the Priest receiueth the Sacrament, and the Vertue therof passeth into all the members of the Church, and specially into them that are present at the Masse.

Biel Lect. 81.

Likewise saith Vincentius de Valentia : The whole Christianitie is one Body, knit together by Faith and Charitie, and hauing in it sundry members : and the Priest is the mouth of this Body. Therefore when the Priest receiueth the Sacrament, all the members are refreshed.

In Serm. 2. de Epiphania.

Againe he saith : Nos communicamus ore Sacerdotis, audiendo Missam: We hearing Masse, doe Communicate or receiue the Sacrament by the mouth of the Priest.

Eckius de Vtraque Specie.

Likewise Doctour Eckius saith : Populus bibit Spiritualiter per os Sacerdotis : The people drinketh Spiritually by the mouth of the Priest. These words be plaine, and truely reported. Which being true it muſt needs appeare, that M. Hardings auouching the contrary is vntrue.

Chrysostom. in 1. Cor. hom. 40

So Chrysostome saith, The old Heretikes called Marcionitæ vsed to Baptize some, that were liuing, in the behalfe and stead of others that were dead. And from thence, it séemeth, they that now would bee counted Catholikes, haue deriued their Doctrine in this point. And that M. Harding may the rather beléeue, that such folly hath beene vsed, let him remember, that in his Church the Bishop, when he createth a Reader, giueth him euermore this Commission: Accipe potestatem legendi Euangelium tam pro Viuis, quàm pro defunctis: Receiue thou power to read the Gospell, aswell for the Quicke, as for the Dead. Therefore M. Harding so earnestly denying this, denieth the manifest and knowen truth, and defaceth the credit of his owne Doctours.

To conclude, I may well say, as before, that M. Harding hauing nothing to allege touching the matter that lieth betwéene vs, and in stead thereof, filling vp his papers with matters impertinent, of Praier and Sacrifice, hath somewhat abused the patience of his Reader, and shewed him one thing for another.

OF APPLICATION.

THE NINETEENTH ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that the Priest had then authoritie to applie the vertue of Christs Death and Passion, to any man by meane of the Masse.

M. Harding.

The vertue of Christs Death and Passion, is grace and remission of sinnes, the appeasing of Gods wrath, the reconciliation of vs to God, deliuerance from the Diuell, Hell and euerlasting damnation. Our aduersaries imputing to vs, as though we said and taught, that the Priest applieth this vertue, effect and merit of Christs Death to any man by the meane of the Masse, either (232) belie vs of ignorance, or slander vs of malice. Verily we say not so. Neither doth the Priest applie the vertue of Christs Passion to any man by the meane of the Masse. He doth but applie his Praier, and his intent of Oblation, beseeching Almightie God to applie the merit and vertue of his Sons death (the memorie whereof he celebrateth at the Masse) to them, for whom he praieth.

What applieth the Priest vnto vs in the Masse.

The 232. Vntruth. For in the Church of Rome the Priest presumeth to applie the merits of Christ by meane of his Masse, as shall appeare.

It is God and none other that applieth to vs remission of sinne, the Priest doth but pray for it, and by the commemoration of his Sonnes death, mooueth him to applie. So as all that the Priest doth, is but by way of petition and praier, leauing all power and authority of applying to God, which praier is to be beleeued to be of most force and efficacie, when it is worthily and deuoutly made in the Masse, in the which the Priest beareth the person of the whole Church, and offereth his praier in the Sacrifice, wherein the Church offereth Christ, and it selfe through Christ to God. Which his (233) praier and deuout seruice hee beseecheth to be offered vp by the hands of Angels vnto the high Altar of God, in the sight of the diuine maiestie. Of what strength praier made at the Masse is, the holy Bishop and Martyr S. Cyprian witnesseth, (that in all his Bookes neuer once named the Masse) where hee saith; In the presence of this Sacrament teares craue not in vaine, and the Sacrifice of a contrite heart is neuer denied his request.

Sermone de Cœna Domini.

The 233. Vntruth. For the Priest praieth, that the Body of Christ may bee carried vp by the hands of Angels.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Neither haue wee of ignorance belied M. Hardings Doctrine, nor haue wee of malice slandered it: but plainly and truly haue reported the same, euen as both he, and his late Doctors haue taught it, and as the people in the Church of Rome hath euery where receiued it at their hands.

But like as in old times God commanded the Philistines to offer vp golden Mise, and golden Hemeroides, to be kept for euer in Record, and to witnesse against them, in what sort they had béene plagued for their wickednesse, if at any time they should happen afterward to denie it: euen so hath God specially prouided, that the monuments of our Aduersaries old errours, whereof they séeme now to be ashamed, should still remaine in sure Record, euen in their owne Doctours Bookes, to witnesse against them, if they should happen, as now, vpon mislike, vtterly to disclaime and denie the same: and to force them to confesse, that they are the Children of them that haue deceiued the people.

1. Samuel 6.

For whereas M. Harding amongst many other words, wherewith hée laboureth to shadow and to darken the case, saith: It is God onely, and none other, that appleth vnto vs the Death of Christ, and the Remission of our sinnes; Iohannes Scotus, one of his most famous, and most Catholike Doctours, saith plainly the contrarie: Non solus Deus distribuit virtutem Sacrificij, sed Sacerdos quoque: Not only God distributeth or applieth the vertue of the Sacrifice, but the Priest also. And Gabriel Biel another of M. Hardings Doctors in like sort saith: The force and effect of the Sacrifice is distributed and applied, not onely by God, but also by the Priest. Only, and Not Only, implie a contradiction. If the one be true, the other of necessitie must be false. Againe Biel saith: Sacerdotis est determinare virtutem Sacrificij, vt his, vel illis indigentibus præmium reddendum per huiusmodi Ecclesiæ Sacrificia conferatur: It is the Priests office to determine and limit the vertue of the Sacrifice, that the meed that is giuen by such Sacrifices of the Church, may be applied to these or them that stand in need. Which thing he proueth by sufficient example in this wise: As the Pope by right of his Supremacie, hath power to diuide the Treasure of the Church (whereby he meaneth his Pardons) giuing vnto some full Remission of all their sinnes: and dispensing with some other for the third part of their paines: and granting vnto some pardon for certaine number of daies, or yeeres, as he seeth it may be most expedient for the deuotion of the people: Euen so (saith he) may the Priest dispense, and diuide the merits of the Church, and applie the same to this man, or that man, as hee shall thinke it may stand him in some stead.

In Summa Angelica it is written thus: The Masse is auaileable vnto them, vnto whomsoeuer euer it pleaſeth the Prieſt to applie it by his intention. And againe: Miſſa reſpectu Operis Operati, &c. The Maſſe in reſpect of the worke that is wrought, is nothing elſe, but the applying of the Merits of Chriſts Paſſion.

So Vincentius de Valentia, a notable Catholike Scholeman of M. Hardings ſide: Virgo Maria ſolùm ſemel aperuit Cœlum, &c. The Virgin Mary neuer but once opened Heauen, but the Prieſt openeth it euery day and at euery Maſſe. Doctour Holcot ſaith: Quid eſt celebrare Miſſam principaliter pro aliquo? R. Eſt applicare Miſſam Iohanni, quòd ſit quædam ſatisfactio apud Deum pro anima Iohannis, ſi indigeat: What is it to ſay Maſſe principally for any man? He anſwereth: It is the applying of the Maſſe vnto Iohn, to be a certaine ſatisfaction for him before God, if Iohn ſtand in need of it. And withal he moueth a great doubt, whether the Prieſt may apply one Maſſe to two ſeuerall men, and neuertheleſſe ſatisfie for them both.

Vincent. de Valentia in 1. Sermon. de Corpore Chriſti. Holcot. in 4. Sen. quæ. 3. In eadē quæſt.

And Biel ſaith, that certaine, the better to helpe the Prieſts memory, taught him to applie his Maſſe throughout all the Caſes of Declenſion: as for example; Nominatiuo, A Maſſe for himſelfe: Genitiue, A Maſſe for his Father and Mother: Datiuo, A Maſſe for his Founders or Benefactors: Accuſatiuo, A Maſſe for his Enemies or Accuſers: Vocatiuo, A Maſſe for Sinners and Infidels: Ablatiuo, A Maſſe for his Backbiters and Slanderers.

Biel lection 26.

Of theſe things M. Harding ſeemeth now to be aſhamed: notwithſtanding it were of late the Catholike and Generall Doctrine of his Church, Vniuerſally taught, by Holcot in England: by Vincentius, in Spaine: by Biel, in France: by Angelus, in Italie: or rather by all theſe, and all others, throughout the whole Church of Rome. Hereof grew ſuch Merchandize and ſale of Maſſes, that the Houſe of God was become a Den of Theeues.

Therefore M. Harding hauing no other defenſe for all theſe follies, but only to caſt off all that can be ſaid of our ſide, as malitious and ignorant ſurmiſes, ſheweth himſelfe little to haue conſidered the ſtate of his owne Church, & in the impatience of his heats, to ſpeake againſt vs, what him liketh, and ſo to ſpice his error both with ignorance and with malice.

But for reſolution hereof, and ſome ſhort ſatisfaction of the Reader, it behoueth vs to vnderſtand, That it is not the Prieſt, but God only it is, that applieth vnto each man the Remiſſion of his ſinnes in the Blood of Chriſt: not by meane of the Maſſe, but only by the meane of Faith. S. Iohn ſaith: He that beleeueth in the Sonne of God, hath a witneſſe in himſelfe. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Holocauſtum Dominicæ Paſſionis eo tempore offert Vnuſquiſque pro peccatis ſuis, quo eiuſdem Paſſionis Fide dedicatur: Then doth euery man offer the Sacrifice of Chriſts paſſion for himſelfe, when hee is dedicated in the Faith of Chriſts Paſſion. So ſaith the old learned Father Origen: Siclo Sancto comparandus eſt nobis Chriſtus, &c. With the holy Sicle, we muſt buy Chriſt, that may put away our Sinnes. The holy Sicle beareth the forme of our Faith. For if thou bring Faith, as the Price, thou ſhalt receiue the Remiſſion of thy ſinnes. Likewiſe againe he ſaith: Chriſtus factus eſt Hoſtia, & Propitiatio pro peccatis. Quæ Propitiatio ad vnumquenque venit per viam Fidei: Chriſt is made the Sacrifice and Propitiation for ſinne. Which Propitiation commeth (or is applied) to each man (not by the Maſſe, but) by the way of Faith

OR, that it was then thought a ſound Doctrine, to teach the people, that the Maſſe, ex Opere Operato, that is, euen for that it is ſaid, and done, is able to remoue any part of our ſinnes.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuiſion.

Indeed the Doctrine vttered in this Article is falſe, and derogatorie to the Glorie of our Sauiour Chriſt. For there by the honour of Chriſts Sacrifice, whereby hee hath once ſatisfied for the ſinnes of all, ſhould be transferred to the worke of the Prieſt, which were great wickedneſſe and deteſtable blaſphemie. And therefore we will not require M. Iewel, to yeeld and ſubſcribe vnto this Article. For wee grant, this was neuer thought a ſound doctrine within ſix hundred yeeres of Chriſts Aſcenſion, nor ſhall bee ſo thought within ſix thouſand yeeres after the ſame of any man of ſound beleefe. (234) Neither hath it beene at any time time taught in the Catholike Church, howſoeuer it liketh our Aduerſaries to charge the Scholaſticall Doctours with the ſlanderous report of the contrary. For it is Chriſt onely, and none other thing, that is able to remoue our ſins, and that hath he done by the Sacrifice of his Body once done vpon the Croſſe. Of which Sacrifice once performed vpon the Croſſe with ſhedding of his Blood, this vnbloody Sacrifice of the Altar, which is the daily Sacrifice of the Church, commonly called the Maſſe, is a ſamplar, and a commemoration, (235) in the which we haue the ſame Body that hanged on the Croſſe. Neither is it a ſamplar or commemoration only, but the ſelfe ſame Sacrifice which was offered on the Croſſe: a ſamplar or commemoration, in reſpect of the maner, for that it is done without bloodſhedding: the ſelfe ſame, for that the thing which is offered, is the ſame that was offered on the Croſſe. And whereas we haue nothing of our ſelues, that we may offer vp acceptable to God, we offer this his Sonnes Body as a moſt acceptable Sacrifice, beſeeching him to looke not vpon our worthineſſe, our act or worke; but vpon the face of Chriſt his deare Sonne, and for his ſake to haue mercy vpon vs.

How the Maſſe is vaileable ex Opere Operato.

And in this reſpect we doubt not this bleſſed Sacrifice of the Maſſe to be vaileable and effectuall, ex Opere Operato, that is, not as M. Iewel interpreteth, for that the Maſſe is ſaid and done, referring Opus Operatum, to the act of the Prieſt, not ſo: but for the worke wrought it ſelfe, which God himſelfe worketh by the miniſterie of the Prieſt, without reſpect had to his merit, or act, which is the Body and Blood of Chriſt, whoſe breaking and ſhedding is in this myſticall Sacrifice, ſo farre as the Holy Ghoſt hath thought expedient for mans behooſe, repreſented, ſhewed, and recommended to memorie. Which Body and Blood, when it is (236) according to his commandement offered vp to God, is not in regard of our worke, but of it ſelfe, and of the holy Inſtitution of his only begotten Sonne, a moſt acceptable Sacrifice vnto him, both for quicke and dead, * where there is no ſtop nor let to the contrarie on the behalfe of the receiuer. The dead, I meane ſuch only, as through Faith haue recommended themſelues to the Redemption wrought by Chriſt, and by this Faith haue deſerued of God, that after their departure hence, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, this Sacrifice might profit them.

The 236. Vntruth. For Chriſt neuer gaue ſuch commandement * A follie ioined with a contradiction in it ſelfe. For the Dead can make no ſtop.

Theſe words Opus Operatum, Opus Operans, Opus Operantis, as they are ſtrange and barbarous, ſo are they not found neither in the Scriptures, nor in the Old Doctors, nor in any ancient Councell: but haue bene lately deuiſed by certaine new Scholaſticall Doctours of M. Hardings owne ſide: who notwithſtanding cannot yet well agrée vpon their owne deuice, nor can certainly tell vs what they haue found.

Opus Operantis, ſome of them call the worke and worthineſſe of the Prieſt: But Innocentius 3. rather calleth Opus Operantis, The Prieſt himſelfe. Likewiſe about theſe words, Opus Operatum, they haue made much adoe: and yet are not well reſolued of it, what it ſhould be. Scotus and Biel ſay, It is the Conſecration, the Oblation, and the receiuing of the Sacrament. Gerſon ſaith: It is the Word of the Creatour, and the Power of the Holy Ghoſt. Pigghius ſaith: It is the will of God, that appointed the Sacrament to this purpoſe. Gropper of Colaine ſaith: It is the Body of Chriſt. Howbeit, it were hard to ſay, either that Chriſts Body is a Worke, or that any Worke is Chriſts Body.

It were a point of Maſterie, to make all theſe contrary reſolutions agrée in one. Thus it fareth euermore, where as men ſhot without a marke. Howbeit, if neither M. Harding, nor any other of his Fellowes for him, be able to finde theſe words, Opus Operatum, in any ancient Doctor, or Councell, then, notwithſtanding the great multitude of his words, my Aſſertion ſtandeth ſtill true. But if he, and others of his ſide haue maintained this Doctrine, euen in ſuch ſort as I haue vttered it, then by his owne confeſſion, they haue deceiued the World by wicked and blaſphemous Doctrine, to the great derogation of the Glorie and Croſſe of Chriſt.

And foraſmuch as M. Harding ſeemeth now to bluſh at his owne termes, and therefore beginneth to ſhun and to thiſt the ſame by vaine and friuolous expoſitions: it ſhall not be amiſſe to open the true meaning thereof, both by the old Records of the ancient Writers, in whoſe daies the like follie began to grow, and was then remoued: and alſo by the plain words of M. Hardings owne allowed Doctours.

Auguſtinus de Ciuit. Dei, li. 21. ca. 19. Chryſoſt. ad popul. Antioch. homil. 19. Chryſoſt. in 1. Cor. homil. 43. Hieronym. in Matthæ. li. 4. ca. 23. Concil. Carthag 3. Can. 6. Inter Decreta Deuſdedit. ca. 12.

S. Auguſtine ſaith, There were ſome in his time, that thought, and taught the people, that if a man had bene Baptized, and had once receiued the Communion, notwithſtanding he liued wickedly, and maintained Hereſies and wilfull Doctrine, yet he could not be condemned, only becauſe he was Baptized, and had once receiued the holy Communion: which thing now is called, Opus Operatum.

Chryſoſtome ſaith: Mulieres, & parui Pueri pro magna cuſtodia, ad collum ſuſpendunt Euangelia: Women and yoong Children for great ſafety, hang the Goſpell at their necks. They thought, the Goſpell it ſelfe, and of it ſelfe, could ſaue them from all miſhaps, not becauſe they beléeued in it, but only becauſe it was hanged or tied about them: and this is alſo, Opus Operatum.

So there were certaine in Old times, that of méere Superſtition, vſed to miniſter the Communion vnto the Dead, and to lay the Sacrament in the mouthes of them that were departed: as S. Benet alſo cauſed the Sacrament to be laid vpon a dead womans breaſt, thinking that the very outward Ceremony therof, without Faith, or inward motion of the partie, might be ſufficient to doe her good: which alſo is called, Opus Operatum.

Euen in S Pauls time there were certaine that of like Superſtition beganne to Baptize the Dead: which thing alſo continued a long while after, as may appeare by the Councell of Carthage. They thought the very outward workes of Baptiſme it ſelfe, onely becauſe it was done without any further motion of the minde, was ſufficient to remit their ſinnes.

Concil. Carthag. 3. ca. 6.

This old errour our Aduerſaries of late yéres haue taken vp, and made it Catholike: bearing the people in hand, that their Maſſe it ſelfe, ex Opere Operato, onely of it ſelfe, and becauſe it is ſaid, is auaileable for the Remiſſion of their ſinnes.

Thus they expound their owne dreame: Ex Opere Operato, id eſt, ex ipſa Conſecratione, & Oblatione, & Sumptione Venerabilis Euchariſtiæ: Ex Opere Operato, is as much to ſay, as for the very Conſecration, and Oblation, and receiuing of the reuerend Sacrament.

Biel lection. 27 Scotus Quodlib. ar. 2.

In Manipulus Curatorum, which not long ſithence was thought to be a Booke moſt neceſſary for all Parſons and Curats, as containing all neceſſary Doctrine for the Church of God, it is written thus: Opus Operatum, eſt actus exercitatus circa Sacramentum; ſicut Opus Operatum in Baptiſmo, eſt Inſperſio, vel Immerſio Aquæ, & prolatio verborum. And therefore Cardinall Caietan at Auguſta in Germanie, requiring Doctour Luther to recant this Article, ſaid thus: Fides non eſt neceſſaria acceſſuro ad Euchariſtiam: Faith is not neceſſary for him that will receiue the Sacrament: Meaning thereby that the very Sacrament it ſelfe, only becauſe it is miniſtred, is ſufficient, although the receiuer be vtterly void of Faith.

Manipulus Curatorum.

In Paralipomenis Vrſpergen. An. 1518.

And therefore the Biſhops in the late Councell of Trident haue determined thus: Si quis dixerit, per Sacramenta Nouæ Legis non conferri Gratiam ex Opere Operato, ſed Fidem ſolam Diuinæ Promiſſionis ſufficere ad Gratiam conſequendam, anathema ſit: If any man ſay, that Grace is not giuen by the Sacraments of the New Teſtament, euen for the worke, that is wrought, but that Faith only of the Heauenly promiſe is ſufficient to atchieue grace, accurſed be he.

Biel lection. 81

Likewiſe Gabriel Biel: Hoc Sacrificium in illis, pro quibus offertur, non præexigit vitam Spiritualem in actu, ſed in potentia, &c. This Sacrifice in them, for whom it is offered, requireth not a ſpirituall (or godly) life in act and in deed, but only in poſſibility. Neither is this againſt the ſaying of S. Auguſtine: Who will offer the Body of Chriſt, but only for them that are the members of Chriſt? For thus we underſtand it, That the Oblation is made for the members of Chriſt, when it is made for any, that may be the members of Chriſt.

And therefore Cardinall Caieran, notwithſtanding that he had ſpoken againſt Doctor Luther in open Conference to the contrarie confeſſeth a generall errour therein in his time. For thus he writeth: Vnde in hoc videtur Communis multorum Error, quòd putant, hoc Sacrificium ex ſolo Opere Operato habere certum meritum, vel certam ſatisfactionem, quæ applicatur huic, vel illi: Wherefore herein appeareth the common errour of many, that thinke, that this Sacrifice euen of the worke that is wrought, hath a certaine merit, or a certaine ſatisfaction, that may be applied to this man, or that man.

Caietan. in Quodlib. De vſu Spiritualium, quæſt. 3.

This of late yéres was the Schole-doctours Catholike meaning, touching theſe New Termes of their owne inuenting: which now M. Harding and his Fellowes are faine for ſhame, to colour ouer with ſome finer Vernith Hereof, good Chriſtian Reader, maieſt thou iudge, how aptly this Doctrine may ſtand with the Glorie and Croſſe of Chriſt.

Now touching theſe words, Oblation and Sacrifice, with the ſhew whereof, M. Harding thinketh it good ſkill, to dazle and to abuſe the eies of the ſimple: Firſt, where he ſaith: A Mortall man offereth vp the Sonne of God indeed and verily vnto his Father, and that Chriſt commanded ſuch a Sacrifice to be made, he knoweth himſelfe it is both a great vntruth, and alſo a manifeſt, and a wilfull blaſphemie. And further, where he addeth, That the ſame Sacrifice ſo offered is auaileable for the Dead, vnleſſe there be ſome ſtop or let in the Receiuer: This is a very vaine and vnadviſed follie: For Children know, that the Dead can neither receiue the Sacrament, nor make let or ſtop againſt the receiuing of the ſame. Therefore this addition might haue bene better ſpared, ere it came abroad.

Indeed S. Auguſtine hauing occaſion ſomewhat to touch the ſtate of the Faithfull departed, ſaith, That the Prayers of the liuing, being either ioined with Almes-deds, or made at the time of the holy Communion, at which time the Death of Chriſt is laid open before vs, and therefore our minde the more inflamed to deuotion, may be auaileable for the Dead. Howbeit S. Auguſtine herein compareth the Sacrifice of the holy Communion, with the Sacrifice of Almes-giuing, and in that behalfe of releeuing the Dead, maketh either equall with the other. But for this preſent, it is needleſſe hereof to make further Treatie. For M. Harding well knoweth, this is none of the Articles we haue now in queſtion.

But

But certaine it is, that S. Auguſtine, neither heere, nor elſewhere, euer moued one word of Opus Operatum, that now ſo mightily is defended.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

Maſſe taken two waies.

But to ſpeake of this matter more particularly, and more diſtinctly, the terme, Maſſe, may be taken two waies Either for the thing it ſelfe, which is offered, or for the act of the Prieſt in offring of it. If it be taken for the thing it ſelfe, that is offrred, which is the Body of Chriſt, and is in this reſpect of the * Scholaſticall Doctors called Opus Operatum: no man can iuſtly denie, but that it remooueth, and taketh away ſinne. * For

1. Cor. 6. & 7. Tit. 2. Apoc. 14. 1. Ioan. 2. In 3. cap. ad Romans.

Chriſt in his Fleſh crucified is our only Sacrifice, our only Price, our only Redemption, whereby hee hath merited to vs vpon the Croſſe, and with the Price of his Blood hath bought the Remiſsion of our Sins: and S. Iohn ſaith, he is the propitiation for our Sins. * So Oecumenius ſaith, Caro Chriſti eſt propitiatorium noſtrarum iniquitatum: The Fleſh of Chriſt is the propitiation for our iniquities. And this not for that it is offered of the Prieſt in the Maſſe * ſpecially, but for that he offered it once himſelfe with ſhedding of his Blood vpon the Croſſe for the redemption of all. Which Oblation done vpon the Croſſe, is become a perpetuall and continuall Oblation, not in the ſame maner of offering, but in the ſame vertue, and power of the thing offered. For ſince that time the ſame Body of Chriſt appearing alwaies before the face of God in Heauen, preſenteth and exhibiteth it ſelfe for our reconciliation: And likewiſe it is exhibited and offered (237) by his owne commandement here in earth in the Maſſe, where he is both Prieſt, and Sacrifice, offerer and Oblation, verily and indeed, though in Myſterie, and by way of commemoration, that thereby wee may be made partakers of the reconciliation performed, applying the ſame vnto vs (ſo far as in this behalfe man may apply) through Faith, and deuotion, no leſſe than if we ſaw with our eies preſently his Body hanging on the Croſſe before vs, and ſtremes of Blood iſſuing foorth. And ſo it is a Sacrifice in very deed propitiatorie, not for our act or worke, but for his owne worke already done and accepted. To this only wee muſt aſcribe remiſsion and remooving of our Sinnes.

Heb. 9.

* M. Harding ſhould haue ſhewed, what Scholaſticall Doctors haue taken it thus: Otherwiſe it may ſeeme vntrue.

* All theſe allegations vtterly condemne the worke, that is ſuppoſed in the Maſſe.

* The worke of the Prieſt is propitiatorie, albeit not ſpecially. The 237. Vntruth. For God neuer commanded the Prieſt, neither to ſay Maſſe, as it is now vſed, nor to offer vp the Body of Chriſt.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Heere M. Harding is driuen to make wonderfull hard ſhift, and to leaue all the whole companie of his Schole-doctors, and to goe alone. The Maſſe, ſaith he, ſometime ſignifieth the Body of Chriſt. Sometime, ſay you? And at what time, I beſeech you? And, if at one time, why not at all times? what Ancient Doctor, or Holy Father euer told vs this tale? But let vs giue M. Harding leaue to make ſomewhat of himſelfe, and to vphold his ſtrange Religion, with ſtrange phraſes, and Formes of ſpeech. For he hopeth, that, whatſoeuer he liſt to ſay, the ignorant people will beleeue him.

But wherefore allegeth he not, either the Scriptures, or ſome Old Councell, or ſome Ancient Doctor: at the leaſt, ſome one, or other of his owne Schole doctors, Innocentius, Thomas, Scotus, Alexander, Henricus de Gandauo, Robertus de collo torto, or ſome other like in this behalfe? Is there none of all theſe, that euer could vnderſtand, that the Maſſe is the Body of Chriſt? And muſt we needs beleeue M. Harding in ſo ſtrange a matter, without witneſſe? Verily if the Maſſe, according to this new Doctrine, be Chriſts Body, and that verily, and indeed, without ſhift, or helpe of Figure, then was the Maſſe Borne of the Bleſſed Virgin: then was it Crucified: then was it Buried in the Graue. For all theſe things happened to the Body of Chriſt. Then whoſoeuer denieth the Maſſe, denieth Chriſts Body: and whoſoeuer beleeueth Chriſts Body, beleeueth the Maſſe. But what ſhould M. Harding doe? A monſtrous Doctrine requireth a monſtrous kinde of words.

Indeed, Chriſts Body Crucified was the Price, and Propitiation for all our Sinnes. Chriſt with one Oblation hath made perfit for euer, all, that be Sanctified. For in his Fleſh he was that Lamb of God, that hath taken away the Sinnes of the World. And now in the ſame Fleſh he appeareth before God, and euermore intreateth for our Sinnes.

1. Iohan. 2. Hebræ. 10. Iohan. 1. Roman. 8. Hebræ. 7.

But, M. Harding, what is all this to your Maſſe? Who euer bade you, to Sacrifice Chriſt vnto his Father? Who euer warranted you, that your Sacrifice, deuiſed by your ſelues, ſhould bee of the ſame vertue, and power, as you ſay, that was the Sacrifice of Chriſt himſelfe vpon his Croſſe? Who euer told you, that your Sacrifice ſhould bee the Price, and Propitiation for the ſinnes of the whole world? Or that Chriſt in your Maſſe ſhould euermore appeare before God, and intreat for vs?

But why adde you further this Speciall exception of your ſelfe, And this, not for that, it is offered of the Prieſt in the Maſſe Specially? What needeth you with this ſo Speciall prouiſo, ſo finely to mince this matter? Why ſhould you ſo Specially diſable, or diſcredit the Vnbloody Sacrifice of the Church? If the Fleſh of Chriſt be not Specially auaileable, for that, as you ſay, it is offered by the Prieſt, how then, being ſo offered, can it be propitiatorie for our ſinnes? If it be propitiatory indeed, and if the Prieſt offer vp Chriſt vnto his Father, and that in all reſpects of power, and Vertue, as effectuall, and auaileable, as that Chriſt himſelfe offered vpon the Croſſe, how then is it not Specially profitable for that, as you ſay, it is offered by the Prieſt? We ſhould haue haue brought some Daniel with you, to expound your dreame: or some skilfull Surucior, to part tenures betwæne Christ, and the Priest, and to limit ech part Generally, and Specially his owne right.

O M. Harding, what a miserable Doctrine is this! Remoue onely this vaine shew of strange Words, where with yée delight to astonne the simple: and the rest that remaineth is lesse than nothing.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuision.

If the terme, Masse, bee taken for the act of the Priest, in respect of any his onely doing, it is not able to remoue Sinne. For so wee should make the Priest Gods peere, and his act equall with the Passion of Christ, as our aduersaries doe vniustly slaunder vs. Yet hath the Masse vertue, and effect in some degree, and is acceptable to God, by reason of the oblation of the Sacrifice, which in the Masse is done by the offerer, without respect had to Christs institution, euen for the faithfull praier and deuotion of the party, that offereth, which the Schoole-doctors terme, ex opere operantis For then the oblation seemeth to be most acceptable to God, when it is offered by some that is acceptable. Now the party that offereth, is of two sorts. The one offereth immediatly, and personally: the other offereth mediatly, or by meane of another, and principally. The first is the Priest that consecrateth, offereth, and receiueth the Sacrament, who so doth these things in his owne person, yet by Gods authority, as none other in so offering is concurrent with him. The partie, that offereth mediatly or by meane of another, and principally, is the Church militant, in whose person the Priest offereth, and whose minister hee is in offering. For this is the Sacrifice of the whole Church. The first partie that offereth, is not alwaies acceptable to God, neither alwaies pleaseth him, because often times he is a Sinner. The second party that offereth, is euermore acceptable to God, because the Church is alwaies Holy, beloued, and the only Spouse of Christ. And in this respect the Masse is an acceptable seruice to God, Ex Opere Operantis, and is not without cause and reason called a Sacrifice Propitiatorie, not for that it deserueth mercy at Gods hand of it selfe, as Christ doth, who only is in that principall and speciall sort a Sacrifice Propitiatorie: but for that it mooueth God to giue mercie, and remission of Sin already deserued by Christ. In this degree of a Sacrifice Propitiatorie, we may put Praier, a contrite Heart, Almes, forgiuing of our neighbour, &c. This may easily be prooued by the holy Fathers.

Origens words be very plaine: Si respicias ad illam commemorationem, de qua dicit Dominus, Hoc facite in meam commemorationem, inuenies, quòd ista est commemoratio sola, quæ propitium faciat Deum. If thou looke to that commemoration, whereof our Lord saith, Doe this in my Remembrance, or in commemoration of me, thou shalt find, that this is the only commemoration, that maketh God mercifull. S. Augustine saith thus: Nemo melius præter Martyres meruit ibi requiescere, vbi & hostia Christus est, & Sacerdos, scilicet, vt Propitiationem de oblatione hostiæ consequantur. No man hath deserued better than the Martyrs * to rest there, where Christ is both the Host, and the Priest, (238) (hee meaneth to bee Buried vnder the Altar) to the intent they might attaine Propitiation by the Oblation of the Host. But heere to auoid prolixitie in a matter not doubtfull, I leaue a number of places whereby it may be euidently prooued, that the Masse is a Sacrifice Propitiatory in this degree of propitiation, both for the Quicke and the Dead, the same not being specially denied by purport of this Article. Thus we haue declared, as we might superficially treating of this Article, that the Masse is a Sacrifice Propitiatory both Ex Opere Operato, that is, through the merit of Christs Body that suffered on the Crosse, which is heere Opus Operatum, and is by Christ through the ministery of the Priest in the Masse offered, Truly, but in Mystery, and also Ex Opere Operante, that is, through the doing of the Priest, if he haue the Grace of God, and so be acceptable, but in a far lower degree of propitiation, which is called Opus Operans, or Opus Operantis. And this is the doctrine of the Church, touching the valour of the Masse Ex Opere Operato, whereby no part of Christs Glorie is impaired.

In Leuit. Homil. 13.

Sermone 11. de Sanctis.

* S. Augustine speaketh not of any Materiall Altar in Earth, but of the Spirituall Altar in Heauen. The 238. Vntruth, standing in vntrue Construction. For S. Augustine saith, Vidi sub Ara Dei (non Corpora, sed) animas Sanctorum

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Touching the worthinesse of the Priest, which they call Opus Operantis, it appeareth, M. Harding could partly bee contented to make it equall with the Sacrifice of Christ, were it not, that it should seeme too great presumption. For thus he saith: So we should make the Priest Gods Peere, and his act equall with the Passion of Christ. And therefore they say, A wicked Priests Masse is as good, and as meritorious in this respect, as a good Priests Masse: for that the worthinesse of the worke hangeth nothing of the worthinesse of the Priest.

Tho. in 4. Sen. dist. 14. Gerson contra Floret. lect. 4. Summa Angel. in Missa. Hieron. in certum caput Zophonie. Iren. li. 4. ca. 34. Biel Lection. 26.

Notwithstanding S. Hierome seemeth to say farre otherwise: Impiè agunt in Legem Christi, putantes Eucharistiam imprecantis Verba facere, non Vitam: They doe wickedly against the Law of Christ, thinking, it is not the Life, but the Word of the Minister, that maketh the Sacrament. And likewise Irenæus saith: Sacrificia non sanctificant hominem, sed Conscientia eius, qui offert, sanctificat Sacrificium, pura existens: The Sacrifice doth not sanctifie the Man, but the Conscience of the Priest being vpright, and pure, doth sanctifie the Sacrifice. In like maner Gabriel Biel his owne Doctor saith: Videant, ne, si peccato obnoxij offerant, sit illorum Oblatio, quasi eius, qui victimat filium in conspectu Patris, néue rursus Crucifigant Filium Dei: Let them take heed, lest if they Sacrifice, being in Sinne, their Oblation bee like vnto the Oblation of him, that slaieth the Child in the sight of the Father: and lest they Crucifie againe the Son of God. Verily of wicked Priests God saith: Maledicam benedictionibus vestris: I will Curse your Blesse.

Malach. 2.

Touching S. Augustine, and Origen, that héere are brought in for a countenance, if these Ancient Holy Fathers were now aliue, they would blush to heare their tales thus reported. Origens words, if it might haue pleased M. Harding to haue laid them out whole, whole, and at large without clipping, as he found them, both would haue bene cleare, and plaine in themselues, and also would haue sone shaken down all this whole frame of Opus Operatum. For he neither speaketh of the Masse, neither promiseth Remission of sinnes for any thing, that is done in the Masse: but only, and wholly for the Sacrifice of Christs Body vpon the Crosse. His words be these: Si redeas ad illum Panem, qui de Cœlo descendit, & dat huic mundo vitam, illum Panem propositionis, hoc est, Christum ipsum, quem proposuit Deus propitiationem per Fidem in Sanguine eius: & si respicias ad illam Commemorationem, de qua dicit Dominus, Hoc facite ad meam Commemorationem, inuenies, quòd ista est Commemoratio sola, quæ propitium faciat hominibus Deum: If thou turne to that Bread, that came downe from Heauen, and giueth life to this world, I meane that Shew-bread, that is, Christ himselfe, whom God hath appointed to be a Propitiation by Faith in his Blood: and if thou behold that Remembrance, whereof the Lord saith, Doe this in Remembrance of me, thou shalt find, that it is this Remembrance only (that is to say, The Body of Christ Crucified, and the price of his Blood thus Remembred) that maketh God mercifull vnto men. Now let M. Harding indifferently iudge, whether these words be likely to proue his Opus Operatum, or any other thing belonging vnto his Masse.

The place of S. Augustine is yet much plainer. For, as he toucheth none of all these M. Hardings fantasies, so he speaketh only of the Innocents, and Blessed Martyrs, that were slaine only for the Testimonie of Christ, Whose Soules, S. Iohn saith, lie vnderneath the Altar of God, not in Earth, as M. Harding fantsieth, but in Heauen. For thus he writeth: Vidi sub Ara Dei animas occisorum propter Verbum Dei, & propter Testimonium Iesu, &c. I saw vnder the Altar of God (in Heauen) the Soules of them, that were slaine for Gods Word, and for the Testimony of Iesus. What thing is there, either more reuerend, or more Honorable, than to rest vnder that Altar (in Heauen) in which Sacrifices are made, and Oblations are offered vnto God, and wherein (no mortall man, but) the Lord himselfe is the Priest? For so it is written, Thou art a Priest for euer, after the order of Melchisedech. It is right (not that the Bodies, but) that the Soules of the Iust should remaine vnder the Altar: because that vpon that Altar (in Heauen) Christs Body is offered. And well it is, that Iust men doe there require reuenge-ance of their Blood, whereas Christs Blood for sinners is poured out. August. De Sanctis Sermon. 11. Apocalyp. 6.

Immediately after this, he intermedleth somewhat touching Altars, or Communion Tables in the Earth. For thus he addeth further: Conuenienter igitur, & quasi pro quodam Consortio ibi Martyribus Sepultura decreta est, vbi Mors Domini quotidiè celebratur, &c. Therefore vpon good discretion, and in some token of Fellowship, Martyrs burials are appointed in that place (here in Earth) where the Lords Death is daily remembred: As the Lord himselfe saith; As often as ye shall doe these things, yee shall set foorth my Death, vntill I come. I meane, that they, that died for the Lords Death, may rest vnder the Mysterie of his Sacrament.

After this he returneth againe to the Soules of the Blessed Martyrs, vnder the Altar in Heauen: Legimus plerosque Iustorum Abrahæ sinibus refoueri &c. We reade, saith S. Augustine, that many Iust men are refreshed in Abrahams bosome: and that many are in the pleasures of Paradise. Yet no man deserued better than the Martyrs, to rest there (in Heauen) whereas Christ is both the Sacrifice, and the Priest. I meane, that they may enioy Gods fauour by the offering of that Sacrifice, and may receiue the Blessing, and Ministery of that Priest.

Hereby it is plaine, that S. Augustine speaketh of Heauen: and not of Earth, nor of Purgatorie: Of the Soules receiued aboue: and not of the Bodies buried beneath. For all these things S. Iohn by Reuelation saw in Heauen. And for proofe hereof, S. Augustine addeth further: Inter cæteros igitur Martyres, quos sub Ara Dei consistere prædicamus, etiam beatas illas Infantum lactentium pro Christo primitias Martyrum laudemus: Therefore amongst the rest of the Martyrs, whom we say to bee vnder the Altar of God (in Heauen) let vs commend those Blessed first fruits of Sucking Infants, that were Martyrs for Christ.

This is S. Augustines plaine, and vndoubted meaning. But M. Harding to serue his turne, is faine, of Soules to make Bodies: of Ioy, to make Paine: and of Heauen, to make Purgatorie. And yet in all this great adoe, findeth, neither Opus Operatum, nor his Masse. Thus is it lawfull for these men, to carrie about, and to vse their Readers.

Touching the substance of this Doctrine, which M. Harding now at last vpon better aduice seemeth in some part to mislike, notwithstanding it were not long sithence generally receiued, both in Schooles, and Churches, and counted Catholike, Origen that Ancient learned Father writeth thus: Quod sanctificatur per Verbum Dei, & per obsecrationem, non suapte natura sanctificat vtentem. Nam id si esset, sanctificaret etiam illum, qui comedit indignè Domino: The thing, that is Sanctified by the Word of God, and by Praier, of his owne Nature Orig. in Matt. ca. 15.

Nature (or Ex Opere Operato) Sanctifieth not him, that vseth it. For otherwise it should sanctifie him, that eateth vnworthily of the Lord.

Origen. in Matth. tract. 25.

Againe he saith: Assiduitas Communicationis, & alia similia, non ipsæ sunt Iustitiæ, sed condituræ habentur Iustitiarum. Res autem Spirituales, quæ ex se ipsis Iustitiæ sunt, dicuntur Iudicium, Misericordia, & Fides: The often vsing of the Communion, and other like things, be not right cousnesse it selfe, (of it selfe, or of the worke, that there is wrought) but only the seasoning, and setting foorth of right eousnesse. But the Spirituall things, which be right eousnes it selfe, are called Iudgement, Mercy, and Faith.

Hieronym. 1. Cor. 10.

So S. Hierome: Ne quis confidat in eo solo, quòd Baptizatus est: aut in Esca Spirituali, vel Potu putet, Deum sibi parcere, si peccauerit: Let no man presume of this thing only, that he is Baptized: nor let him thinke, that God for Receiuing the Spirituall Meat, or drinking the Spirituall Cup (Ex Opere Operato) will pardon him if he offend.

August. in Iohan. tract. 80.

So S. Augustine: Non ait, Mundi estis propter Baptisma, quo loti estis: sed propter Verbum, quod locutus sum vobis: Christ saith not, Ye are Cleane for the Baptismes sake, wherwith ye are washed: but for the Words sake, that I haue spoken vnto you.

August. in Iohan. tract. 10.

And againe: Fœlix Venter, qui te portauit, &c. Blessed is that wombe that bare thee. But Christ answered: Nay, blessed be they, that heare the Word of God, and keepe the same: That is to say, My Mother, whom ye call Blessed, therefore is Blessed, for that she keepeth the Word of God.

August. De Sancta Virginitate.

Likewise againe: Materna propinquitas nihil Matri profuisset, nisi Fœliciùs Christum in Corde, quàm in Carne gestasset: The neerenesse of Mothers Blood should haue profited Christs Mother nothing at all, vnlesse she had more blessedly carried Christ in her Heart, than in her Bodie.

Verily to ascribe Felicitie, or Remission of Sinne, which is the Inward Worke of the Holy Ghost, vnto any maner Outward Action whatsoeuer, it is a Superstitious, a grosse, and a Iewish error.

Origen. in Lucam. Homil. 5.

Origen of the Sacrament of Circumcision writeth thus: Circumcisionis nisi reddatur ratio, nutus tantùm est Circumcisio, & opus mutum: Vnlesse there be a reason yeelded of the meaning of Circumcision, it is but an Outward Shew, and a dumbe labour, and auaileth nothing.

And touching the vse, and order of the Holy Mysteries, Christ saith not, Doe this, for Remission of your Sinnes: but, Doe this in my Remembrance.

The Only, and euerlasting Sacrifice for Sin, is the Sonne of God Crucified vpon the Crosse. He sitteth now in the Nature, and Substance of our Flesh, at the right Hand of his Father, and euermore maketh intercession for vs: and is the only Sacrifice, and Propitiation for our Sinnes.

Whatsoeuer Doctrine is contrarie to this Doctrine, is Wicked, and Blasphemous, and, as M. Harding hath confessed, iniurious to the Glorie, and Crosse of Christ.

OF LORD, AND GOD.

THE XXI. ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The 239. Vntruth. For the only outward Formes were neuer called the Sacrament, or Christs Body, by any of all the Ancient Fathers. The 240. Vntruth, standing in vntrue exposition. For this was not these Fathers meaning.

OR, that then any Christian man called the Sacrament his Lord, and God.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

This word Sacrament (as is declared before) is of the Fathers taken two waies. (239) Either for the only outward formes of Bread, and Wine, which are the holy Signe of the very Body, and Blood of Christ present, and vnder them contained: Or for the whole substance of the Sacrament, as it consisteth of the outward formes, and also of the very Body, and Blood of Christ (240) verily Present, (240) which S. Augustine calleth the Inuisible grace, and the thing of the Sacrament, (240) And Irenæus calleth it, Rem Cælestem, the Heauenly thing, as that other, Rem Terrenam, the Earthly thing. Taken the first way, (As among the learned Fathers it was neuer taken) no Christian man euer honoured it, with the name of Lord and God. For that were plaine Idolatrie, to attribute the name of the Creator, to the Creature. But taken in the second signification, (As no Ancient Father euer toke it) It hath alwaies of Christian people, and of the learned Fathers of the Church, beene called by the name of Lord, and God. And of right so Sacrament two waies taken.

ſo ought it to be, for elſe were it impietie, and a deniall of God, not to call Chriſt the Sonne of God, by the name of Lord, and God, who is not onely in truth of Fleſh, and Blood in the Sacrament, after which maner he is there, Ex Vi Sacramenti, but alſo the inſeparable coniunction of both Natures in vnity of perſon, Ex neceſſaria concomitantia, Whole Chriſt, God and man. That the holy Fathers called the Sacrament taken in this ſenſe, Lord and God, I might prooue it by many places: the rehearſall of a few may ſerue for many. Origen in a Homily ſpeaking reuerently of this bleſſed Sacrament, ſaith, that when a man receiueth it, our Lord entreth vnder his roofe, and exhorteth him that ſhall receiue it, to humble himſelfe, and to ſay (241) vnto it: Domine non ſum dignus, vt intres ſub tectum meum: I Lord am not worthie that thou enter vnder my Roofe.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Whoſoeuer erreth in this Article, committeth Idolatrie, and giueth Gods honor to a corruptible creature, that is no God. Therefore it behoued M. Harding, herein to leane his ghesſes, and to allege none, but good, ſubſtantiall, and waighty reaſons: and that ſo much the more, for that none of the Old Catholike Fathers euer, either erected Temples, or Proclaimed Holy dates in the name of the Sacrament, or euer willed the People to Adore it, as the Maker of Heauen, and Earth: or to beleeue in it, or to call it God.

This notwithſtanding, the reaſons, that M. Harding hath here found out, are ſo ſlender, and ſo ſimple, and ſo guilefully, and vntruly gathered, that his friends of that ſide may happily ſuſpect, he had vſed ſome colluſion, to betray their cauſe. But to take away occaſion of cauill, firſt we ſtedfaſtly beleeue, and plainly confeſſe, that Chriſt is the Son of God, Very God, of Very God: That hee is the True God, and life euerlaſting: That hee is God Bleſſed for euer: and that, Whoſoeuer truſteth in him ſhall neuer be confounded. And we vtterly deteſt, and accurſe the Arians, the Neſtorians, the Photinians, and all other like Hereſtikes, that either haue taught, or any way doe teach the contrarie. Neither is this queſtion moued of Chriſt himſelfe, vnto whom, we know, all maner godly Reuerence, and honour is due, but onely of the Myſticall Bread, which, by the witneſſe of the Catholike learned Fathers, is not Chriſt himſelfe, but only a Sacrament of Chriſt. Which Sacrament, Irenæus ſaith, ſtandeth of two things, the one Earthly, the other Heauenly: not, that the one is Really lapped vp, or ſhut within the other, wherein reſteth M. Hardings errour: but, that, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, The one is Senſible, the other Intelligible: as it is alſo in the Sacrament of Baptiſme: Or, that, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, The one part is the Signe, the other the thing Signified: Or, that, as Tertullian ſaith, The one part is the Figure, the other the thing Figured.

1. Iohan. 5.

Chryſoſtom. in Matthæ. hom. 83.

Auguſt. contra Adimantum, cap. 12.

Tertullian. contra Marcion. lib. 4.

The Sacrament is the Earthly thing: Chriſts Body is the Heauenly thing. The Sacrament is Corruptible: Chriſts Body is Glorious. The Sacrament is laid vpon the Table: Chriſts Body is in Heauen. The Sacrament is receiued into our Bodies; Chriſts Body is only receiued into our Soules.

For manifeſt proofe of this difference, S. Auguſtine writeth thus: Huius rei Sacramentum alicubi quotidie, alicubi certis interuallis dierum in Dominico præparatur, & de Menſa Dominica ſumitur, quibuſdam ad vitam, quibuſdam ad exitium: Res verò ipſa, cuius eſt Sacramentum, omni homini ad vitam, nulli ad exitium, quicunque eius particeps fuerit: The Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt is prepared in the Church, in ſome places euery day, in ſome places vpon certaine daies: and is receiued from the Lords Table, of ſome vnto life, of ſome vnto Condemnation. But the thing it ſelfe (that is, the Body of Chriſt, being in Heauen) whereof it is a Sacrament, is receiued of euery man vnto life, and of no man to Condemnation, whoſoeuer be partaker of it.

Auguſtin. in Ioha. tract. 26.

Againe he ſaith: Qui non manet in Chriſto, &c. Hee that abideth not in Chriſt, nor hath Chriſt abiding in him, doubtleſſe he eateth not his Fleſh, nor drinketh his Blood, notwithſtanding he Eat, and Drinke the Sacrament of ſo great a thing vnto his iudgement. By theſe few examples it is plaine, that the Sacrament of Chriſts Body is one thing, and Chriſts Bodie it ſelfe is another thing: and that in Common, and natural maner of ſpæch neither is Chriſts Body, the Sacrament: nor the Sacrament, Chriſts Body.

De Con. diſt. 2. Qui diſcordat.

By theſe words of Irenæus, M. Harding, as he hath no maner likelihood to proue, that he alleageth for, ſo he vtterly ouerthroweth his whole fantaſie of Tranſubſtantiation. For Irenæus calleth the Earthly part of the Sacrament, not the Formes, and Accidents, as M. Harding imagineth, but the very Subſtance, and Nature of the Bread, and that ſuch Bread, as increaſeth, and nouriſheth the Subſtance of our Fleſh. For ſo he writeth: Ex quibus augetur & conſiſtit Carnis noſtra Subſtantia.

Irene. lib. 5.

But Origen teacheth vs, when wee receiue the Sacrament, to ſay, Domine, non ſum dignus, Therefore, ſaith M. Harding, the Sacrament was called Lord, and God. Alas, what a miſerable caſe is this, that cannot poſſibly ſtand without Falſifying, and Paining of the Holy Fathers? Of the Falſifying, afterward. But touching the Paining, and mangling of theſe woꝛds of Origen, it might haue pleaſed M. Harding, to haue reꝑted them whole, as he found them, there had bene no manner cauſe of doubt.

and

Foꝛ thus the woꝛds lie: Intrat etiam nunc Dominus ſub tectum Credentium duplici Figura, vel more, &c. Euen now the Lord entereth vnder the roofe of the Faithfull, by two ſundry waies. For euen now, when the Holy, and Godly Biſhops enter into your houſe, then throngh them the Lord entreth. And be thou perſwaded, as if thou receiuedſt the Lord himſelfe. And when thou receiueſt that Holy Meat, and that vncorruptible Banket, the Lord entreth vnder thy roofe.

Our Lord (ſaith) Origen ) entreth vnder our roofe, both when we receiue a Holy man, and alſo when we receiue the Holy Sacrament. And as Chꝛiſt entreth into vs by the one, ſo doth he alſo enter into vs by the other. So ſaith the ſame learned Father wꝛiting vpon the Goſpell of S. Matthew: Qui Diſcipulos Chriſti tradit, ipſum Chriſtum tradit: Whoſo betraieth the Diſciples of Chriſt, betraieth Chriſt himſelfe. Now, if M. Harding will ſay by foꝛce of theſe woꝛds, that Chꝛiſt entreth Really, and Subſtantially into our mouthes, then muſt he alſo ſay, that Chꝛiſt likewiſe entreth Really, and Subſtantially into our materiall houſes.

Origen. in Matth. hemil. 35.

But foꝛ full Reſolution hereof, S. Ambroſe ſaith, That the Body of Chꝛiſt it ſelfe entreth not into our Bodies. Thus he wꝛiteth: Non iſte Panis, qui vadit in ventrem: ſed panis Vitæ æternæ, qui animæ noſtræ ſubſtantiam fulcit: Chriſts Body is not the Bread, that entreth into our belly: but the Bread of Enerlaſting life, that feedeth the Subſtance of our Soule. And thereforе S. Cyprian ſaith: The Body of Chriſt is the meat of our Soule, not the meat of our Body. Foꝛ this cauſe Origen himſelfe in the ſelfeſame Homily ſaith thus: Domine, non ſum dignus, vt intres ſub tectum meum. Sed tantùm dic verbo: tantùm veni Verbo. Verbum eſt aſpectus tuus: Lord, I am not worthy, that thou ſhouldeſt enter vnder my roofe. But only ſpeake the word: Only come by thy word: thy word is thy ſight. Againe he ſaith: Per Euangeliſtarum prædicationem: per ſui Corporis Sacramentum: per glorioſæ Crucis Signaculum nobiſcum Deus, & ad nos, & in nobis: God is with vs, and commeth to vs, and is within vs, by the preaching of the Euangeliſts: by the Sacrament of his Bodie: and by the Signe of the glorious Croſſe. Likewiſe againe: Fideles credunt Aduentum Verbi, & libenter recipiunt Dominum ſuum: The faithfull beleeue the comming of the Word, and gladly receiue their Lord. So ſaith S. Auguſtine: Sancti, qui ſunt in Eccleſia, accipiunt Chriſtum in manu, & in fronte: The holy men, that be in the Church, receiue Chriſt in their hand, and in their forehead. So likewiſe Tertullian: Cùm te ad fratrum genua protendis, Chriſtum contrectas: When thou falleſt downe to touch thy brethrens knees, thou toucheſt Chriſt.

De Con. diſt. 2. Non iſte.

Origen. in Diuer. Euan. locos hom. 1.

Origen. in Diuer. Euan. locos hom. 2.

Auguſt. in Apocalyp. Serm. 11.

Tertullian. De Pœnitentia.

Thus is Chꝛiſt touched: thus is Chꝛiſt Receiued: thus is Chꝛiſt Preſent: thus Chꝛiſt Entreth vnder our roꝛfe. As Chꝛiſt entreth into vs by a godly Miniſter, by his Woꝛd, by the Sacrament of Baptiſme, by the Croſſe, and by the Poꝛe, euen ſo he entreth into vs by the Sacrament of his Body, and Blood: euen ſo, I ſay, and none otherwiſe. And at euery ſuch entring of Chꝛiſt we ought to ſay: O Lord, I am not worthie, that thou ſhouldeſt enter vnder my roofe.

Now, if theſe woꝛds be ſufficient to pꝛoue, that the Sacrament was called Loꝛd, and God, then are they likewiſe ſufficient to pꝛoue, that the Water of Baptiſme, that the Woꝛd of God, that a Croſſe dꝛawen in the foꝛehead, and that a godly Biſhop, oꝛ Miniſter was called Loꝛd, and God.

Here alſo appeareth a great vntruth in M. Hardings Tranſlation. Foꝛ whereas Origen ſaith: Et tu ergo humilians teipſum, &c. And thou therefore humbling thy ſelfe, follow this Centurion, and ſay, Lord, I am not worthy, that thou ſhouldeſt enter vnder my roofe, meaning therby, that we ought to humble our ſelues vnto Chꝛiſt, and to ſay vnto him, Lord, I am not worthie, &c. M. Harding thought it better cunning to coꝛrupt the place, and to tranſlate, It, in ſtead of Him: Foꝛ thus he wꝛiteth: Origen exhorteth him, that ſhall receiue It, to humble himſelfe, and ſay vnto It, Lord, I am not worthy &c. And ſo by open fraud, and by falſifying his Authoꝛs woꝛds, without feare, oꝛ blushing, he teacheth Gods people to woꝛſhip a Creature in ſtead of God.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

S. Cyprian, in Sermone de Lapſis, telleth, how a man, who had denied God in time of perſecution, hauing notwithſtanding (the Sacrifice by the Prieſt done) priuily with others receiued the Sacrament, not being able to eat it, nor to handle it, opening his hands, found that he bare aſhes. Where he addeth theſe words, Documento vnius oſtenſum eſt, Dominum recedere cùm negatur: By this example of one man it is ſhewed, that our Lord departeth away, when he is denied.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

This ghelle hangeth not of S. Cyprians woꝛds, but of M. Hardings Expoſition. Foꝛ S. Cyprian calleth the Sacrament, neither Loꝛd, noꝛ God. The man, that he ſpeaketh of, hauing hauing denied God in time of perſecution, and neuertheleſſe afterwards receiuing the Holy Communion among other Chriſtians, opened his hand, and found the Sacrament turned into aſhes. By this Miracle, ſaith S. Cyprian, we are taught to vnderſtand, that God, when he is denied, departeth from vs.

I trow, M. Harding will not ſay, That the Sacrament had euer denied God: and yet by his expoſition, God was departed and gone from it: nor will he ſay, that this man had denied the Sacrament: for he came amongſt others to receiue the Sacrament. But he had diſſembled and forſaken God: and therefore God had likewiſe forſaken him: and in token thereof he cauſed the Sacrament to mulder into aſhes in his hands.

So S. Auguſtine ſpeaking of the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and of order of Prieſthood, ſaith thus: Si Sancta malos fugiant, vtrumque fugiat: If theſe holy things (Baptiſme, and Prieſthood) flie from ill men, let them both flie from them, aſwell the one as the other. Auguſt. contra Epiſt. Parmeniani, li. 2. c. 13

Proſper ſaith: Non locorum interuallis, vel acceditur ad Deum, vel a Deo diſceditur: Similitudo facit proximum, diſſimilitudo longinquum: Wee neither come to God, nor goe from God by diſtance of places. The likeneſſe of minde maketh vs neere: the vnlikeneſſe remooueth vs farre off. Proſper. Sententia. 123.

When one Deuterius an Arrian Biſhop, would haue Baptized a Man after his blaſphemous ſort, ſuddenly the water was ſunken away, and the Font ſtood drie. The like ſtory is vttered alſo by Socrates and by others. This Miracle was likewiſe a token, that God when he is denied, departeth from vs. Paulus Diacõ. li. 15. in hiſtor. De Anaſtaſio. Socrat. lib. 7. cap. 17.

Yet may not M. Harding conclude hereof, that the Water of Baptime was therefore called Lord and God.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuiſion.

The ſame S. Cyprian in the expoſition of the Pater noſter, declaring the fourth petition of it, Giue vs this day our daily Bread, vnderſtandeth it to containe a deſire of the holy Communion in this bleſſed Sacrament, and ſaith; Ideo Panem noſtrum, id eſt, Chriſtum dari nobis quotidie petimus, vt qui in Chriſto manemus, & viuimus, à Sanctificatione, & corpore eius non recedamus: Therefore wee aske our daily Bread, that is to ſay, Chriſt to be giuen vnto vs, that wee which abide and liue in Chriſt, depart not from the ſtate of holineſſe and Communion of his Body. (242) Heere S. Cyprian calleth the Sacrament Chriſt, as he is indeed there preſent Really, ſo as in the place alleged before he calleth it Lord. And, I weene, our Aduerſaries will embrace the Sacrament of the name of Chriſt, no leſſe than of the name of Lord or God, vnleſſe they make leſſe of Chriſt, than of Lord and God.

The 242. vntruth. For S. Cyprian calleth not the Sacrament Chriſt, but only ſaith, Chriſt is the Bread or food by whom we liue.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Heere M. Harding auoucheth three ſundry vntruthes with one breath. For S. Cyprian neither in theſe words calleth the Sacrament Chriſt, nor in the words before calleth it Lord, nor any where euer ſaid, that Chriſts Body is Really Preſent in the Sacrament. Vntruthes ſhould not ſo rifely flow from a good Diuine.

It is true that S. Cyprian ſaith: That Chriſt is our Bread, euen the ſame Bread, that came from Heauen, and giueth life to the World: which Bread whoſoeuer eateth, ſhall liue for euer. So ſaith S. Baſil: Chriſt is called our Life, our Way, our Bread, our Vine, our Light, our Sword. Baſil. in Pſal. 44. Which words muſt be taken, not groſly, nor according to that ſoundeth in the Letter, but of a Myſticall and Spirituall meaning. Therefore as Chriſt is our Spirituall Sword, our Spirituall Light, our Spirituall Vine, our Spirituall Way, and our Spirituall Life, ſo is he alſo our Spirituall Bread. Origen ſaith: Ne mireris, quod Verbum Dei Caro dicitur: nam & Panis, & Lac, & Olera dicitur: & pro menſura credentium, vel poſſibilitate ſumentium diuersè nominatur: Marueil not, that the Word of God is called Fleſh: for it is alſo called Bread, and Milke, and Herbes: and according to the meaſure of the Beleeuers, or poſſibility of the Receiuers, it is diuerſly named. Origen. in Exod. hom. 7.

Verily S. Cyprian ſaith not, neither that the Sacrament is Chriſt, nor that Chriſt is the Sacrament. Therefore whereas M. Harding would reaſon thus: Chriſt is the Bread of Life: Ergo, The Sacrament is our Lord and God: He ſeemeth to preſume ouer boldly of his Logicke.

The 243. vntruth. For S. Cyprian ſaith not, The Sacrament is God, but only ſheweth, that God with his power is aſſiſtant vnto the Sacrament, as alſo to the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuiſion.

Verily this holy Martyr acknowledgeth this Sacrament not for Lord and Chriſt onely, but (243) alſo for God, by theſe words in his Sermon, De Cœna Domini: Sicut in perſona Chriſti humanitas videbatur, & latebat Diuinitas, ita Sacramento viſibili ineffabiliter Diuina ſe infudit Eſſentia: As in the Perſon of Chriſt, the manhood was ſeene, and the Godhead was hidden, ſo the Diuine Eſſence (or Subſtance of God) hath infuſed it into the viſible Sacrament vnſpeakably.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Heere is another proper kinde of proſe, euen like the reſt. O holy Cyprian, if thy maner of ſpeaking were not knowen, the ſimple might eaſily be deceiued. I grant, heere here is a great amplification and maieſtie of words, ſuch as the holy Fathers haue much delighted to vſe in their Sermons to the people, but ſpecially intreating of the Sacraments. S. Ambroſe ſaith: Sacerdos precem facit, &c. The Prieſt maketh his praier to ſanctifie the Font, and that the Preſence of the whole Trinitie may be in it.

Ambroſ. de Sacramen. lib. 1. cap. 3.

Tertullian ſaith: The holy Ghoſt commeth downe from Heauen, and reſteth vpon the Water of Baptiſme, and ſanctifieth it of himſelfe.

Tertull. De Baptiſmo.

Euen thus S. Cyprian ſaith: The diuine Subſtance infuſeth it ſelfe vnſpeakably into the viſible Sacrament: None otherwiſe, then as the Holy Ghoſt, or the whole Bleſſed Trinitie infuſeth it ſelfe into the Water of Baptiſme.

Paulinus ſeemeth to write much agreeably to theſe words of S. Cyprian:

Sanctus in hunc Cœlo deſcendit Spiritus amnem:
Cœleſtique Sacras Fonte maritat Aquas.
Concipit Vnda Deum.

The holy Ghoſt into this Water commeth downe from Heauen: And ioyneth the Heauenly Waters, and theſe Waters both in one. Then the Font receiueth God. What can be ſpoken with greater Maieſtie? Then, ſaith he, the Water, or the Font receiueth God.

If M. Harding out of theſe words of S. Cyprian, be able by this ſimple gheſſe to proue that the Sacramentall Bread was called Lord and God, then by the like gheſſe, and the like words of Tertullian, S. Ambroſe, and Paulinus, he may alſo proue, that the Water of Baptiſme was likewiſe called Lord and God. For the forme and maner of ſpech is all one.

But theſe and other like phraſes be vſuall and ordinary among the ancient learned Fathers. S. Auguſtine writeth thus: Baptiſmi Sanctitas pollui non poteſt: & Sacramento ſuo Diuina Virtus aſſiſtit: The holineſſe of Baptiſme can not be defiled. The Heauenly power is aſſiſtant vnto the Sacrament. And againe: Deus adeſt Sacramentis & Verbis ſuis: God is preſent with his Words and Sacraments. Likewiſe S. Cyprian, touching the hallowing of the Oile, writeth thus: In Sacramentis Virtus Diuina peremptiùs operatur. Adeſt Veritas Signo & Spiritui Sacramento: In Sacraments the Heauenly Power worketh mightily. The Truth is preſent with the Signe, and the Holy Ghoſt is preſent with the Sacrament.

Auguſt. de Baptiſmo contra Donatiſtas, lib. 3. cap. 10.

Auguſt. de Baptiſmo contra Donatiſtas, lib 5. cap. 19.

Cypriam. de vnctione Chriſmatis.

All theſe words of the Holy Fathers notwithſtanding, I thinke, M. Harding will not call, neither the Water of Baptiſme, nor the Oile hallowed, Lord and God.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuiſion.

The 244. Vntruth. For Chryſoſtome ſaith not, The Sacrament is God; but contrariwiſe ſaith; Quid ſignificat Panis? And anſwereth, Corpus Chriſti.

(244) Chryſoſtome doubteth not to call the Sacrament God in this plaine ſaying: Nolimus oſtendere, nolimus impudentes nos ipſos interimere: ſed cum honore & mundicia ad Deum accedamus, & quando id proprium videris, dic tecum: Propter hoc Corpus non amplius terra, & cinis ego ſum: non amplius captiuus, ſed liber: Let vs not, let vs not for Gods ſake, be ſo ſhameleſſe, as to kill our ſelues (by vnworthy receiuing of the Sacrament) but with reuerence and cleanneſſe let vs come to God. And when thou ſeeſt the Sacrament ſet foorth, ſay thus with thy ſelfe; By reaſon of this Bodie, I am no more earth and aſhes; no more captiue, but free.

In primam ad Cor. hom. 24.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Chryſoſtome, ſaith M. Harding, calleth the Sacrament God by plaine words. Firſt, Chryſoſtome calleth not the Sacrament God by any maner or kinde of words. Therefore we may by plaine words, and boldly ſay, M. Harding here hath vttered another great vntruth.

But Chryſoſtome intreating of the holy Communion, ſaith vnto the people: Accedamus ad Deum: Let vs come vnto God. Heere (ſaith M. Harding) the Sacrament by theſe words is called God. O, when will theſe men deale plainly and ſimply with their Readers! M. Harding knoweth full well, that he much abuſeth this good old Father, and reporteth of him: that he neuer thought. He knoweth, that we come to God, not by trauell of Body, or by thifting of places, but by inclining and bending our hearts vnto God. So S. Paul ſaith: Let vs goe with boldneſſe to the Throne of Grace.

Hebræ 4.

S. Auguſtine ſpeaking of the Sacrament of Baptiſme, agreeth fully with theſe words of Chryſoſtome: Ad Med cum Chriſtum, hoc eſt, ad percipiendum Sacramentum ſalutis Æternæ portantur: Children are carried vnto Chriſt the Phiſitian, that is to ſay, to receiue (Baptiſme, which is) the Sacrament of Euerlaſting Saluation. By theſe plaine words of S. Auguſtine it appeareth, that comming to Baptiſme, is comming to Chriſt. Yet may not M. Harding conclude thereof, that the Water of Baptiſme was called Chriſt.

Auguſt. de peccatorum merit. & Remiſſ. li. 1. ca. 18.

Our comming vnto Chriſt, is beleeuing in Chriſt. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Quid eſt Accedite, niſi Credite? Accedite ad eum, qui in veſtris auribus prædicatur. Accedite ad eum, qui ante oculos veſtros glorificatur. Ambulando non laborabitis. Ibi enim Accediſtis, vbi Creditis: What is Come, but Beleeue? Come vnto him that is preached in your eares. Come vnto him that is glorified before your eies. Ye ſhall haue no paine in going. For there ye Come, where ye Beleeue.

Auguſt. aduerſus Iudæos, cap. 1.

So

So Chryſoſtome: Nunquid longè eſt à te Deus, vt vadas ad locum aliquem? Non includitur loco: ſed ſemper eſt in proximo: Is God farre away from thee, that thou ſhouldeſt need to remoue to ſome place to come vnto him? God is not contained in any place, but is euermore at hand. Chryſoſt. hom. 12. De Mulier re Cananea.

Likewiſe ſaith Nazianzene: Accede fidens ad Chriſtum: Riga pedes eius: Come boldly vnto Chriſt, and waſh his feet. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Accedant ad Ieſum, non Carne, ſed Corde: non Corporis præſentia, ſed fidei potentia: Let them come vnto Ieſus, not with their Fleſh, but with their heart: not by preſence of Body, but by the power of Faith. Nazianzen. de Pœnitentia. Auguſt. contra Fauſt. li. 33. cap. 1.

Thus we come vnto Chriſt in Baptiſme, in Gods Word, in the Sermon, and in the Holy Communion, not by mouing of the Body, or changing of places: but by the deuotion of the heart, and trauell of the minde.

Now, that the Reader himſelfe may ſe ſome part of M. Hardings courteous dealing in this behalfe, it ſhall not be amiſſe briefly to touch certaine other words of Chryſoſtome, that immediatly went before: by which words he ſeemeth of purpoſe to teach vs, where we ought to ſeeke for Chriſt, and by what waies and meanes we may come vnto him.

His words be theſe: Aquilæ in hac vita facti ad ipſum cœlum euolemus, &c. Being made Eagles in this life, let vs flie vp into Heauen, or rather aboue the Heauens. For where as the Carcaſe is, there are the Eagles. The Carcaſe is our Lords Body in reſpect of his Death. But he calleth vs Eagles, to ſhew vs, that whoſo will come neere to that Body, muſt mount on high, and haue no dealing with the Earth, not to bow downward, or creepe beneath, but euer to ſore aloft, and to behold the Sun of Iuſtice, and to haue a quicke eie in our heart.

Thus S. Chryſoſtome teacheth vs, both where Chriſt reſteth in the Glory of his Father: and by what meanes we may come vnto him: and with what eies we may behold him. Then hauing thus aduanced our mindes into Heauen, he ſaith: Propter hoc Corpus, &c. For this Bodies ſake, (that I ſee at the Right hand of God) I am no more a priſoner, I am no longer duſt and aſhes. Touching the Sacrament, by theſe moſt plaine words he calleth it Bread. For thus he ſaith, euen in the ſame Homily: Quid ſignificat Panis? Corpus Chriſti: What doth the Bread (of the Sacrament) ſignifie? He anſwereth: The Body of Chriſt. He ſaith not: The Bread is Chriſt: But, The Bread ſignifieth the Body of Chriſt.

Yet notwithſtanding, M. Harding ſaith, that theſe words, Accedamus ad Deum, import as much, as Let vs come to the Sacrament, and thereof imagineth, that the Sacrament by plaine words is called God. But indeed that holy Father by theſe words carrieth vs ſo far aboue M. Hardings God, as the Spirit is aboue the Body, or as Heauen is aboue the Earth. For he teacheth vs to come to Chriſts Bodie, not as lying preſently before our eies, but as being in the glory of God in Heauen.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuiſion.

Diuini myſterij initiatur, cap. 9. Pſalm. 33. Intellectum in 10. ca. prioris ad Cor.

And leſt this ſenſe taken of Chryſoſtome ſhould ſeeme ouer ſtrange, this place of S. Ambroſe, who liued in the ſame time, and agreeth with him thorowly in Doctrine, may ſeeme to lead vs to the ſame: Quid edamus, quid bibamus, alibi tibi per Prophetam Spiritus Sanctus expreſſit, dicens: Guſtate & videte, quoniam ſuauis eſt Dominus: beatus vir qui ſperat in eo, in illo Sacramento Chriſtus eſt, quia Corpus eſt Chriſti: What wee ought to eat, and what we ought to drink, the holy Ghoſt hath expreſſed by the Prophet in another place, ſaying; Taſte and ſee, how that our Lord is ſweet, bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him. In that Sacrament is Chriſt, becauſe there is the Body of Chriſt. Heere S. Ambroſe (245) referring thoſe words of the Pſalme to the Sacrament, calleth it Lord, and that Lord, in whom the man that truſteth, is bleſſed, who is God. The 245. vntruth. For S. Ambroſe applieth theſe words vnto Chriſt himſelfe, & not vnto the Sacrament.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

To ſay that Chriſt is either in the Scriptures, or in the Manna, or in the Sacrament of Baptiſme, or in the Sacrament of his Bodie, it is no new phraſe or maner of ſpæch, but commonly vſed of the ancient Fathers. S. Hierome ſaith: Chriſtus clauſus latebat in litera: Chriſt lay hidden in the Letter. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Pij in Manna Chriſtum intellexerunt: The godly in Manna vnderſtood Chriſt. Hieronym. ad Paulinum. Aug. de Vtilitate Pœniten. Auguſt. contra Fauſtum, lib. 12. cap. 1.

Againe he ſaith: Vt Petra erat Chriſtus propter firmitatem: ita Manna erat Chriſtus, quia deſcendit de Cœlo: As the Rocke was Chriſt in reſpect of conſtancie and ſteddineſſe: euen ſo was the Manna Chriſt, becauſe it came downe from Heauen. Hieronym. in Pſalm. 133. Origen. in Cantica, hom. 2.

S. Hierome ſaith: Lapis ille, qui erat ad caput Iacob, Chriſtus erat. Lapis ille Chriſtus eſt: The Stone that lay vnder Iacobs head, was Chriſt. That Stone is Chriſt.

Origen ſaith: Mare Baptiſmus eſt: Nubes Spiritus Sanctus eſt: Agnus Saluator eſt: The Sea is Baptiſme: The Cloud is the holy Ghoſt: The Lambe is the Sauiour. And to be ſhort, a Doctour, although not very ancient, yet of M. Hardings owne ſide, one that wrote the Fort of Faith, and therefore in this caſe may not iuſtly be refuſed, writeth thus: Chriſtus vendebatur in Ioſepho: Suſpendebatur in Botro: Crucifigebatur in Serpente: Chriſt was ſold in Ioſeph: Hanged in the Cluſter of grapes: and Crucified in the Serpent. Fortalitium Fidei, lib. 1.

All theſe, and ſuch other like phraſes of ſpeech muſt be taken, not of any Reall or Fleſhlie Being, according to the ſhew of the Letter: but onely as in a Sacrament, or in a Myſterie.

But M. Harding will ſay, The Sacrament of S. Ambroſe is called Lord. This is another vntruth, and like the reſt of M. Hardings praiſes. Chriſt ſitting now at the Right hand of God, is the Bread and food of Life: Thither S. Ambroſe calleth vs: There he biddeth vs, To taſte and ſee that the Lord is ſweet and gracious. And he addeth immediately: Beatus vir qui ſperat in eo: Bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him. Notwithſtanding it might very well ſerue his purpoſe, yet I thinke M. Harding will not ſay, The man is bleſſed that truſteth in the Sacrament. For ſo to ſay, as it ſhall hereafter appeare, it were great blaſphemie.

And that S. Ambroſe meant this not of the Sacrament, but of the Bodie of Chriſt it ſelfe, that is repreſented by the Sacrament, it is plaine by other his words both going before, and alſo immediately following after. A little before in the ſame Chapter he writeth thus: Ante benedictionem verborum Cœleſtium alia ſpecies nominatur: poſt Conſecrationem Corpus Chriſti ſignificatur: Before the bleſſing of the Heauenly words, it is called another kind: but after Conſecration: the Bodie of Chriſt is ſignified.

Ambroſ. de illis qui initiantur Myſter. ca. 9.

The words next following in the ſame ſentence are theſe: Non ergo Corporalis eſca, ſed Spiritualis eſt: Therefore Chriſts Body is not Corporall food (to be receiued into the Body) but ſpirituall food, that is to ſay, to be receiued with the Spirit. Which words M. Harding, as his maner is, thought it beſt ſkill to diſſemble. God quicken the inward ſenſes of his vnderſtanding, that he may taſte and ſee that the Lord is ſweet and gracious.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuiſion.

Agreeably to this ſaith S. Auguſtine, in a Sermon De verbis Euangelij, as Beda reciteth: Qualem vocem Domini audiſtis inuitantis nos? Quis vos inuitauit? Quis inuitauit? Et quis præparauit? Inuitauit Dominus ſeruos, & præparauit eis cibum ſeipſum. Quis audeat manducare Dominum ſuum? Et tamen ait, qui manducat me, viuat propter me: What maner of voice is it, that ye haue heard of our Lord inuiting, and bidding vs to the feaſt? Who hath inuited? Whom hath he inuited? And who hath made preparation? The Lord hath inuited the ſeruants, and hath prepared * himſelfe to be meat for them. Who dareth be ſo bold as to eat his Lord? And yet he ſaith, He that eateth me ſhall liue for cauſe of me.

* Theſe words are ſpoken, not of the Sacrament, but of Chriſts Body it ſelfe repreſented by the Sacrament. The 246. Vntruth. For Cyril ſpeaketh theſe words of Chriſts Body it ſelfe, and not of the Sacrament of Chriſts Body.

Cyrillus accounteth (246) the Sacrament for Chriſt, and God the word, and for God, in this ſaying: Qui Carnem Chriſti manducat, vitam habet æternam. Habet enim hæc Caro Dei verbum, quod naturaliter vita eſt. Propterea dicit: Quia ego reſuſcitabo eum in nouiſſimo die. Ego enim dixit, id eſt, Corpus meum quod comedetur reſuſcitabo eum. Non enim alium ipſe eſt, quàm Caro ſua, &c. He that eateth the Fleſh of Chriſt, hath life euerlaſting. For this fleſh hath the word of God, which naturally is life. Therefore ſaith hee, that I will raiſe him in the laſt day. For I, quoth he, that is to ſay, my Body, which ſhall be eaten, ſhall raiſe him vp againe, for he is no other than his fleſh, &c.

In Iohan. li. 4. cap. 15. Iohan. li. 4.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

It is true, that S. Auguſtine ſaith, That Chriſt prepared himſelfe to be meate for vs. For Chriſt himſelfe ſaith, He that eateth me, ſhall liue through me. Neither was it ſo needfull, for proofe hereof, to borrow S. Auguſtines words out of Beda. We might haue found the ſame meaning, both in S. Auguſtine himſelfe, and alſo in other old Fathers in ſundry places. S. Auguſtine writeth thus: Panis eſt, & Panis eſt, & Panis eſt, Deus Pater, Deus Filius, & Deus Spiritus Sanctus. Deus, quitibi dat, nihil melius, quàm ſe tibi dat: It is Bread, it is Bread, and it is Bread (meaning thereby, not the Sacrament, but the Spirituall Bread of life) God the Father, God the Sonne, and God the Holy Ghoſt. God, that giueth it vnto thee, giueth thee no better thing then himſelfe. So S. Hierome: Sancti veſcuntur Cœleſti Pane, & ſaturantur omni Verbo Dei, eundem habentes Dominum, quem & Cibum: Holy men eat the Heauenly Bread, and are filled with euery word of God, hauing the ſame Lord, that is their meat.

Auguſt. de verb. Dom. Secund. Luc. Sermon. 29. Hieronym. ad Pammach. aduer. error. Iohan. Hieroſolymit. Greg. in Iob. lib. 7. cap. 4.

So S. Gregorie: Præſepe natus impleuit, qui Cibum Semetipſum mortalium mentibus præbuit: Being borne he filled the manger, that gaue himſelfe meat to the mindes or ſoules of men. In this ſenſe and none otherwiſe, Cyrillus ſaith: I, that is to ſay, my Body that ſhall be eaten, ſhall raiſe him vp againe. For Chriſt is none other than his Fleſh.

All theſe ſayings be true, and out of queſtion. Yet notwithſtanding, that M. Harding would gather hereof, is not true, that is, that either S. Auguſtine, or any of theſe holy Fathers euer called the Sacrament, either Lord, or God, or Chriſt himſelfe.

Auguſt. in Iohannem tract. 26. Qui manducat mente, non qui premit dente.

S. Auguſtine in diuers places teacheth vs, that Chriſts Body it ſelfe, and the Sacraments thereof are ſundry things. And the difference he openeth in this ſort: That Chriſts Body is receiued inwardly with the minde: but the Sacrament is outwardly preſſed, and bruiſed with the tooth. And therefore he calleth the Sacrament, Panem Domini: The Bread of the Lord. But Chriſt himſelfe he calleth, Panem Dominum: The Bread, that is our Lord. And expounding these words of Christ, Giue vs this day our daily Bread, he saith thus: This daily Bread we may vnderstand, either for the Sacrament of Christs Body, which wee receiue euery day, (as then the whole people vsed to doe) or for that Spirituall food (of Christs Body it selfe) of which our Lord saith: Worke yee the Meat that perisheth not: And againe, I am that Bread of life, that came from Heauen. Here wee see an other notable difference betweene Christs Bodie it selfe, and the Sacrament of his Bodie. Augusti. in Iohan. tracta. 59. Augusti. de Sermone Domini in Monte lib. 2.

that

And if it had pleased M. Harding to haue taken better view of his places, thus he might haue seene S. Augustine himselfe, euen in the same place expound himselfe. For thus he saith: Nulli est abquatenus ambigendum, tunc vnumquenque fidelium Corporis & Sanguinis Domini participem fieri, quando in Baptismate membrum Christi efficitur: nec alienari ab illius Panis, Caliciſque consortio, etiamsi, antequam Panem illum comedat & Calicem bibat, de hoc sæculo in vnitate Corporis Christi constitutus abscedat. Sacramenti enim illius participatione ac beneficio non priuatur, quando ipse hoc, quod ilud Sacramentum significat, inuenit: No man may any wise doubt, but that euery faithfull man is then made partaker of the Body and Blood of Christ, when in Baptisme he is made a member of Christ: and, that he is not put from the fellowship of that Bread and Cup, although he depart this life in the Vnity of Christs Body, before he eat of that Bread, or Drinke of that Cup. For he loseth not the partaking and benefit of that Sacrament, so long as he findeth the thing (that is, the Body of Christ, it selfe) which is signified by that Sacrament. Here S. Augustine teacheth vs, that a Faithfull man is partaker of Christs Body it selfe, yea although he receiue not the Sacrament of his Body. Augusti. ad Infantes. Citatur à Beda in 1. Cor. 10.

And, as S. Augustine in these words here alleged by M. Harding saith, Christus præparauit Cibum seipsum: So writing vpon S. Iohn he saith thus: Christus inuitauit nos ad Euangelium suum: & ipse Cibus noster est: quo nihil dulcius, sed si quis habeat palatum in Corde: Christ hath called vs vnto his Gospell: and he himselfe is our Meat: than which meat there is nothing sweeter: if a man haue wherewith to taste it in his heart. Aug. in Iohan. Tracta. 7.

So againe he saith: Deus Panis intus est animæ meæ: God is the inward Bread (not to enter into my bodily mouth, but) of my soule. Augusti. Confession. lib. 1.

Thus we see, The one part of M. Hardings tale is true, That Christ himselfe is our Bread: But the other part is vntrue, That the Sacrament is that Bread. And it were a strange forme of reasoning, to say thus: Christ is our food, we eat him with our Soule and with our Spirit, and liue by him: Ergo, the Sacrament in S. Augustines time was called Lord and God. The errour and falshod of this argument, besides sundry other infirmities, standeth in the Equiuocation or double taking of this word, Eating: which hath relation sometime to the materiall mouth of our Body: sometime to Faith, which is the Spirituall mouth of our soule. S. Iohn saith: Christ hath washed vs with his Blood. And S. Bernard saith: Lauemur in Sanguine eius: Let vs bathe our selues in the blood of Christ. Yet M. Harding may not hereof conclude, that the Water of Baptisme Indeed and Verily is that Blood. Apocalyp 1. Bernard. Super Missus est, Sermo. 3.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuision.

No man more expresly calleth the Sacrament by the name of God, than S. Bernard in his godly Sermon De Cœna Domini ad Petrum Presbyterum, where he saith thus: Comedunt Angeli verbum de Deo natum, Comedunt homines verbum sœnum factum: The Angels eat the word borne of God, men eat the word made hay; meaning heereby the Sacrament, which he calleth the word made hay, that is to wit, the word incarnate. And in another place there, he saith: Hæc est verè indulgentia cœlestis, hæc est verè cumulata gratia, hæc est verè superexcellens gloria, Sacerdotem Deum suum tenere, & alijs dando porrigere. This is verily an heauenly gift, this is verily a bountifull grace, this is verily a passing excellent glory, the Priest to hold his God, and in giuing to reach him foorth to others. In the same Sermon speaking of the maruellous sweetnesse that good Bishops and holy Religious men haue experience of, by receiuing this blessed Sacrament, he saith thus: Ideo ad mensam Altaris frequentius accedunt, omni tempore candida facientes vestimenta sua, id est, corpora, prout possunt, melius vtpote Deum suum manu & ore contrectaturi: For this cause they come the oftner vnto the boord of the Altar, at all times making their garments, that is to say, their bodies, so white as they can possible, as they, who shall handle their God with hand and mouth. Another place of the same Sermon, for that it containeth a holesome instruction, beside the affirming of our purpose I cannot omit, I remit the learned to the Latine, the English of it is this: They are maruellous things, brethren, that be spoken of this Sacrament, Faith is necessary, Knowledge of reason is (heere) superfluous. This, let Faith beleeue, let not vnderstanding require, lest that either not being found, it thinke it incredible, or being found out, it beleeue it not to be singular and alone. And therefore it behoueth it to be beleeued simply, that cannot be searched out profitably. Wherefore search not, search not, how it may be, doubt not whether it be. Come not vnto it vnreuerently, lest it be to you to death, Deus enim est, & quanquam Panis Mysteria habeat, mutatur tamen in Carnem: For it is God, and though it haue mysteries of Bread, yet is it changed into Flesh. God and Man it is that witnesseth, Bread truly to be made his flesh. The vessell of election it is, that threateneth iudgement to him that putteth no difference in iudging of that so holy Flesh. The selfe same thing thinke thou, O Christian man, of the Wine, giue that honour to the Wine. The Creatour of Wine it is, that promoteth the Wine to be the blood of Christ. Thus far holy Bernard. Hee liued eleuen hundred yeeres after Christ, in the great corruption of the Church.

1. Cor. 11.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Bernard was a Monke, and liued at Clara Vallis about the same time that Thomas Becket liued here in England: at which time, as it appeareth by his often complaints, the Church of God was miserably defaced. For thus he writeth, namely touching the Clergy of Rome: Nihil integri est in Clero, &c. In the whole Clergie (wherein he includeth the Pope, the Cardinals, the Bishops, and all the rest) there is no part left sound. It remaineth now, that the man of Sinne, that is, Antichrist, be reuealed. From the top to the toe, there is no health the seruants of Christ now serue Antichrist. Therefore Bernard, liuing in a time of such corruption, and being carried away with the tempest and violence of the same, must needes in these cases beare the lesse credit. Howbeit in other places he seemeth somewhat to rectifie his owne meaning. For thus he writeth: Quasi verò Christus, cùm iam ascenderit in Cœlum, tangi à Maria, aut velit, aut possit. Et vtique poterit: sed affectu, non manu: Voto, non oculo: fide non sensibus: As though Christ, after he is ascended into Heauen, either can, or will be touched of Marie. And verily hee may bee touched: but with loue, not with hand: with desire, not with eie: with faith, not with senses.

Anno Domini 1117. Bernard. in Psalm. Qui habitat. De Conuersione Pauli. In Canti. Canticorum. Bern. in Cantica Canticorũ, Sermone 28.

If M. Harding will presse vs further with that S. Bernard saith, The Priest holdeth God in his hands; it may please him to consider, that the rigour thereof may be qualified by a conuenient exposition. So S. Chrysostome saith: Adest Sacerdos gestans Spiritum Sanctum: The Priest is present bearing the holy Ghost.

Chrysostom. de Sacerdotio, lib. 3.

And S. Gregory saith: Paulus prædicando Deum infundebat audientibus: Paul by his Preaching powred God into his hearers. And againe: Latens in Pauli pectore, quasi sub tentorio ibat Deus? God went in Pauls heart, as vnder a tent. S. Hierome saith: His, qui baptizandi sunt, publicè tradimus Sanctam & adorandam Trinitatem: Vnto them that are to receiue Baptisme, we openly deliuer the holy Trinitie. The meaning hereof is this, That he receiueth the Trinitie, that receiueth the Faith and Doctrine of the Trinitie.

Greg. in Iob. lib. 27. cap. 6. Hieronym. ad Pammach. aduersus errores Iohan. Hierosolymitan.

Now, as S. Chrysostome saith, The Priest beareth the holy Ghost: As S. Gregory saith, S. Paul powred God into his hearers: And as S. Hiereme saith, Wee deliuer the holy Trinity: Euen so it may seeme Bernard saith, The Priest holdeth God in his hand: that is to say, not Really or Indeed, but in a certaine peculiar maner, and forme of speech. For by a Rhetoricall amplification of words, he holdeth God that holdeth any thing specially pertaining vnto God.

Thus must these and other like words be salued: namely these of Bernard, for that they seeme expresly to require the same. For thus they stand far otherwise than M. Harding hath reported them: Deum suum manu, & ore contrectaturi, & colloquentem sibi ipsis audituri: To touch God with their hand, and with their mouth, and to heare him speaking vnto them. Which latter clause M. Harding, as his maner is, hath purposely dissembled. As the Priest heareth Christ speake vnto him, so he holdeth Christ in his hand. But the Priest heareth not Christ speake Verily and Indeed, but by a Figure: Therefore it seemeth it may reasonably be gathered of the same, that he holdeth not Christ in his hand Really and Indeed, but only by way of a Figure.

Thus much touching Bernard. Notwithstanding it is likely, and thought of many, that aswell herein, as in other cases of Religion, he was led alway with the erours and ignorance of his time.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuision.

Heere let our aduersaries, touching this Article, consider and weigh with themselues, whether they be Lutherans, Zuinglians, or Geneuians, what English they can make of these words vsed by the Fathers, (247) and applied to the Sacrament in the places before alleged: Dominus, Christus, Diuina essentia, Deus Ipsum, verbum Dei, Ego, verbum fœnum factum, Deum suum; The number of the like places that might be alleged to this purpose, be in maner infinit. Yet M. Iewel promiseth to giue ouer, and subscribe, if any one may be found. Now we shall see, what truth is in his word.

The 247. Vntruth. For not one of all these words is applied to the Sacrament.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

I doubt not, but by these few well considered, it may easily appeare vnto the discreet Reader, that none of all these ancient Fathers, neither Irenæus, nor Origen, nor Cyprian, nor Chrysostome, nor Ambrose, nor Augustine, nor Cyrillus, for ought that may appeare by their words, euer called the Sacrament, either Lord, or Christ, or Diuine substance, or God, or Himselfe, or the Word of God, or their God: notwithstanding M. Harding hath taken some paines by guilefull translations, and braduised asseuerations, to make some appearance of the same. S. Hierome saith: Falsi testes sunt, qui non eodem sensu dicta proferunt, quo dicuntur: They that report words in other sense than they were spoken, are false witnesses.

Hieronym. in Matt. ca. 26.

M. Harding.

M. Harding. The 10. Diuiſion.

The Sacrament inferiour to Gods Word.

In the weighing of this Doctrine of the Church, little occaſion of wicked ſcoffes, and blaſphemies againſt this bleſſed Sacrament ſhall remaine to them, that be not blinded with that groſſe and fond errour, * that denieth the inſeparabilitie of Chriſt; but affirmeth in this myſterie to be preſent his Fleſh only, without Bloud, Soule, and a Godhead. Which is confuted by plaine Scriptures. Chriſt raiſed from the dead, now dieth no more. Rom. 6. He ſuffereth himſelfe no more to be diuided. 1. Cor. 1. Euery ſpirit that loſeth Ieſus, this is Antichriſt. 1. Iohan. 4. Heereof it followeth, that if Chriſt be verily vnder the forme of Bread in the Sacrament, as it is other wheres ſufficiently prooued: then is he there entire and whole, fleſh, bloud, and ſoule, whole Chriſt, God and man, for the inſeparable vnion of both natures in one perſon. Which matter is more amply declared in the Article of the Adoration of the Sacrament.

* M. Harding hath imagined this errour of himſelfe.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

In the end, M. Harding confirmeth this Doctrine by the Confutation of an Error which for the nouelty, and ſtrangeneſſe of it, may eaſily ſeem to be his own: and therefore ought of right to be called, M. Hardings Error. For, I beleeue, it was neuer, neither defended, nor imagined by any other.

He ſurmiſeth, there be ſome, that either haue ſaid, or elſe may ſay, that Chriſts Fleſh is preſent Really in the Sacrament: howbeit dead, and bloodleſſe, and vtterly void both of Soule, and Godhead. This is a new error, neuer tained, or touched before this time.

As for vs, we doe conſtantly beleeue, and confeſſe, that Chriſt, the very naturall Son of God receiued our Fleſh of the Bleſſed Virgin, and that, whereſoeuer that Fleſh is, there is alſo both the Godhead, and the Soule.

Of this vndoubted truth M. Harding gathereth an impertinent Concluſion. For thus he reaſoneth: If Chriſt be verily vnder the Forme of Bread in the Sacrament, then is he there intire, and whole, God, and Man. Indeed, the firſt being granted, the reſt muſt needs follow. But how is M. Harding ſo well aſſured of the firſt? What Old Doctor, or Ancient Father euer taught him, that Chriſts Body is Really, and Fleſhly preſent vnder theſe Formes, or Fantaſies of Bread, and Wine? If the Learned Fathers ſay ſo, it were good, to ſhew it: If they ſay not ſo, it is great ſhame, to plead it. Verily, all that M. Harding hath yet ſaid, is not able to proue it.

Now, good Chriſtian Reader, for thy better ſatisfaction in this caſe, being ſo dangerous, wherein whoſo erreth, is an Idolater, and knoweth not God, it may pleaſe thee briefly to conſider, both the Ancient godly Fathers vndoubted iudgement touching this Sacrament, and alſo the Ancient order, and vſage of the ſame.

Firſt, concerning the iudgement of the Fathers, in this behalfe, S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: In vaſis ſanctificatis, non verum Corpus Chriſti, ſed Myſterium Corporis Chriſti continetur: In the Holy Veſſels, not the very, or true Bodie of Chriſt, but the Myſterie of Chriſts Bodie is contained. Chryſoſtom. in opere imperfect. homil. 11. Quaeſt. 1, Interrogo vos.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: Interrogo vos, Fratres, dicite mihi: quid plus videtur vobis, Corpus Chriſti, an Verbum Chriſti? Si vultis verè reſpondere, hoc dicere debetis, quòd non ſit minus Verbum Dei, quàm Corpus Chriſti: I demand of you this queſtion, my Brethren, anſwer me. Whether, thinke you, is greater, the Body of Chriſt (meaning thereby the Sacrament) or the word of Chriſt? If ye will anſwer truly, this muſt ye ſay, that the Word of God is no leſſe, than the Body of Chriſt. S. Hierome ſaith: Ego Corpus Ieſu Euangelium puto. Et quamuis, quod Chriſtus dicit, Qui non manducat meam Carnem, &c. poſſit intelligi de Myſterio, tamen verius Corpus Chriſti, & Sanguis eius Sermo Scripturarum eſt: I take, the Body of Ieſus to be the Goſpell. And albeit theſe Words of Chriſt (He that eateth not my Fleſh, &c.) may be taken of the Sacrament, yet in truer ſenſe the Word of the Scriptures is the Body, and Bloud of Chriſt. Hieronym. in Pſalm. 147. Verius.

Likewiſe ſaith Origen: Quòd ſi circa Corpus Chriſti ſeruandum tanta vtimini cautela, quomodò putatis, minoris eſſe periculi, Verbum Dei neglexiſſe, quàm Corpus eius? If ye take ſuch heed in keeping (the Sacrament, which is called) the Bodie of Chriſt, how can you thinke there is leſſe danger, in deſpiſing the Word of God, than there is in deſpiſing (the Sacrament, that is called) the Body of God? Orig. in Exod. hom. 13.

If the Sacrament were indeed, and Really the Body of Chriſt, and ſo our very Lord, and God, thus to compare it with a Creature, and to make it inferior vnto the ſame, as S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, Origen, and other Godly Fathers doe, it were great blaſphemie.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: Plus eſt vnus Deus, quàm vnus Baptiſmus. Neque enim eſt Baptiſmus Deus. Sed ideò magnum aliquid eſt, quia Sacramentum eſt Dei: One God is more, than one Baptiſme. For Baptiſme is no God. But yet is Baptiſme a great thing, becauſe it is a Sacrament of God. Auguſtin. de vnico Baptiſmo contra Petilianum, cap. 5.

Origen that great learned Father ſaith: Ille panis, qui ſanctificatur per Verbum Dei, & Obſecrationem, iuxta id, quod habet materiale, in ventrem abit, & in ſeceſſum ejicitur: Orig. in Matt. cap. 15.

The

The Sacrament a Creature.

The Bread, that is Sanctified by the Word of God, and by praier, touching the Materiall part of it (which is the Sacrament) entereth into the Belly, and passeth into the draught. These words were horrible to be spoken, if the Sacrament indeed were Christ, and God.

Ambros. de Benedictionib. patriarcharum.

S. Ambrose expounding these words of Christ, Giue vs this day our dailie Bread, saith thus: Hodiè dat nobis hunc Panem, quem ipse quotidiè Sacerdos Consecrat suis Verbis. Possumus & ipsum Dominum accipere, qui ait, Ego sum Panis vitæ: Euen this day Christ giueth vs this (daily) Bread (that is, the Sacrament) which he himselfe being the Priest doth daily Consecrate with his own words. We may take the same daily Bread also for our Lord himselfe, that saith, I am the Bread of life. Hereby it is plaine, that Christ himselfe, and the Sacrament are sundry things: and that neither the Sacrament is Christ himselfe, neither Christ himselfe is the Sacrament.

Chrysostom. in Opere Imperfecto, homi. 49.

S. Chrysostome saith: Habent & Hæretici in Schismate similiter Ecclesias, &c. Heretikes in their Schisme haue likewise Churches, as well as haue the Catholikes, likewise the Holy Scriptures, likewise Bishops, likewise orders of Clerks, likewise Baptisme, likewise the Sacrament (of the holy Communion) likewise all other things: and, to be short, Christ himselfe. Here likewise this holy Father S. Chrysostome, contrary to M. Hardings fantasie, presupposeth a great difference betwæn the Sacrament, and Christ himselfe. But what can be so plaine, as these words of S. Ambrose touching the same? Veniste ad Altare: vidisti Sacramenta posita super Altare: & ipsam quidem miratus es Creaturam. Tamen Creatura solennis, & nota: Thou camest to the Altar, and sawest the Sacrament laid vpon the Altar: and thou marnelledst at the Creature. And yet it is a Creature Common, and knowen. Here S. Ambrose by expresse words calleth the Sacrament, not Lord, or God, but a Creature.

Ambro. De Sacram. li. 4. ca. 3.

Epiphan. in Anchorato.

Therefore Epiphanius thereof writeth thus: Hoc est rotundæ figuræ, & insensibile, quantum ad potentiam &c. Dominum verò nostrum nouimus totum sensum, totum sensitiuum, totum Deum, totum mouentem: This thing (that is, the Sacrament) is of a round forme, (for it was a great thicke round Cake) and, touching any power that is in it, vtterly void of sense. But we know that our Lord is whole sense, whole sensible, whole God, whole mouing. In these words, betwæn Christ, and the Sacrament appeareth likewise a great difference.

Iustinus Martyr in colloquio cum Tryphone.

Iustinus Martyr saith: Alimento Humido, & Sicco admonemur, quæ propter nos Deus Dei filius perpessus sit: By Dry and Moist food (whereby he meaneth the Sacrament) wee are taught, what things God the Sonne of God hath suffered for vs.

Cyrill. in Ioham. lib. 4. ca. 14.

Cyrillus calleth the Sacrament, Fragmenta Panis: Fragments, or Peeces of Bread.

August. in Iohan. tract. 26.

S. Augustine calleth it Buccellam Dominicam: The Lords Morsell.

Certainly, it had bæne horrible wickednesse, to haue called the Sacrament by any of these names, either a Creature: or, a thing Insensible, and void of Life: or, a Food Drie, and Moist: or, a Morsel: or, a Fragment: or, a peece of Bread, If the holy Fathers had bæn perswaded, as M. Harding beareth vs in hand, that the Sacrament was their Lord, and God.

Liturgia Chrysostom.

Chrysostome in the Communion, that commonly beareth his name, after the Consecration praieth thus: We beseech thee, O God, to send downe thy Holy Ghost vpon these (Sacraments, or) Presents laid before vs.

And M. Harding himselfe in his Masse, in like maner after Consecration, maketh his Praiers vnto God in this wise: Looke O Lord, vpon these Sacraments with a gracious, and a cheerefull countenance, and vouchsafe to receiue the same, as thou diddest sometime receiue the Oblations of Abel thy Child, and the Sacrifice of our Patriarch Abraham, and the thing that was offered vnto thee by the high Priest Melchisedech.

It were very much for M. Harding to say, that he praieth God, that the holy Ghost may come vpon Christ, that God at his request, and for his sake, will fauorably, and chærfully behold his own Sonne: or, so receiue him, being our Lord, and God, as he sometime receiued a Goat, or a Wheather, or any other like corruptible kind of Sacrifice.

Howbeit, if he speake plainly, and dissemble not, as some of his friends are afraid hee doth, then is this vndoubtedly the very tenor, and meaning of his praier. But if he dissemble, and speake otherwise, than he thinketh, and that at the secretest, and holiest part of all his Masse, then by his own Confession, and by the Authority of his owne Masse booke, the Sacrament is not Lord, and God.

Cyprian. in Concil. Carthag. ad Quirinum. Stella Clericorum Sermon. Disciplin. ser. 111.

In the Councell holden at Carthage vnder S. Cyprian, Cæcilius à Bilta saith thus: Antistes Diaboli audet Eucharistiam facere: A Priest of the Diuell dareth to make the Sacrament: Which words by M. Hardings exposition, must needs sound thus: A Priest of the Diuell dareth to make our Lord, and God. Which saying notwithstanding, among the Priests of M. Hardings side, is not so strange. For thus they dare to say without feare, or shame: Sacerdos est Creator Creatoris sui: qui Creauit vos, dedit vobis Creare se: qui Creauit vos absque vobis, Creatur à vobis mediantibus vobis: The Priest is the Creator of his owne

Creatour:

Creatour: hee that created you of nought, hath giuen you power to create himselfe of nought: he that made you without you, is made of you by meane of you. These wordes sometime had beene counted blasphemie. But now they must be taken as good and Catholike, as vttered by the Patriarkes of that profession.

Thus much of the iudgement of the old Fathers, touching this question.

Now for the ancient order and vsage of the Sacrament, it may please thee, good Christian Reader, to vnderstand, that for the space of six hundred yeres after Christ, it cannot appeare, that euer any man adored or worshipped the Sacrament with godly honour: which is a great token, it was not then accounted our Lord and God.

The maner was then in many Churches, that all such remanents and portions of the Sacrament, as were not receiued of the people, should be burnt and consumed into ashes: which thing vndoubtedly had not been sufferable among Christian people, if the holy learned Fathers had thought the Sacrament had been the very Lord and God. Hesychius in Leuit. lib. 2. cap. 8.

Yet Pope Hildebrand, that forbade Priests Marriage, toke the Sacrament and demanded of it certaine secret questions of things to come: and because it would not, or could not speake, and make him answer, in his fury he threw it into the fire. Benno Cardinalis.

They haue honoured the Pope by the name of God, as it appeareth by sundry their Decrées and Canons. And in their Bookes they haue not doubted to write thus: Dominus Deus noster, Papa: Our Lord God the Pope. But the Sacrament, which now they say, is Lord and God, they neuer neither intituled by the name of God, nor worshipped it with godly honour, before the time of Honorius 3. nor allowed it any Holy day, before the time of Vrbanus 4. If the World had beene well assured, that the Sacrament had beene the Lord, and God, it is not likely, it should haue continued so long without either godly title, or godly honour. Extran. Ioan. 22. Cum inter. In Glossa. Dist. 96. Satis euidenter. De Elect. & Electi potest. In præmio Clemen. Augustinus Steuchius. Clemen. li. 3. tit. 16. Si Dominũ.

In the end Pope Clement the fifth granted out large and liberall indulgences to all, that would frequent this new Holy day, to countenance this new Religion: For the first Euensong, Matins, Masse, and Latter Euensong, Prime, and Houres, for euery of these times a hundred daies of Pardon, toties, quoties, à pœna & culpa. Thus the people was well allured, and thus this new Holy day, and new Religion gate great credit. Anno Domini, 1308.

S. Hierome saith: Pagani Deos suos digito ostendunt: & ob hoc ingerunt mihi opprobria. Vnde sciant, quòd ego mente Deum meum reconditum teneo, & per interiorem hominem in ipso habito: The Heathens point their Gods with their finger: and that, they say to my reproch. But let them know, that I haue my God hidden in my heart, and that by my inward man I dwell in him. Hieronym. in Psalm. 41.

Certainly, if the Sacrament could speake vnto M. Harding, thus it would speake: I am a Creature, as S. Ambrose teacheth you: I am a fragment, or peece of Bread, as S. Cyril teacheth you: I am a thing insensible and void of life, as Epiphanius teacheth you: I am a Corporall food, and passe into your bodies, and increase the substance of your flesh, as other meats doe, as Origines and Irenæus haue taught you: I mould and putrifie, and are subiect to corruption, as your eies and senses may easily teach you: I am a Sacrament of Christ, I am not Christ: I am a Creature of God, I am not God: ye doe wrong vnto me, ye doe wrong vnto God: the wormes of the Earth, and the birds of the Aire will condemne your follie: giue not this honour vnto mee, giue godly honour vnto God. If the Sacrament could speake vnto M. Harding, thus would it speake: and being a dumbe, and a liueles thing, and not able to speake, yet thus it speaketh.

God open the eies and hearts of all men, that they may see and discerne the Almighty and Euerliuing God, from a Corruptible Creature, that is no God. Amen.

OF REMAINING VNDER THE ACCIDENTS.

The XXII. Article.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that the people was then taught to beléeue, that the Body of Christ remaineth in the Sacrament, as long as the Accidents of the Bread remaine there without corruption.

M. Harding.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuiſion.

Theſe fiue Articles here following are Schoole points, the diſcuſſion whereof is more curious, than neceſſary. Whether the faithfull people were then, that is to ſay, for the ſpace of ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, taught to beleeue, concerning this bleſſed Sacrament, preciſely according to the purport of all theſe Articles, or no, I know not. Verily I thinke, they were taught the truth of this matter ſimply and plainly, yet ſo as nothing was hidden from them, that in thoſe quiet times, (quiet I meane touching this point of Faith) was thought neceſſary for them to know. If ſithence there hath been more taught, or rather if the truth hath in ſome other forme of words been declared, for a more euidence and cleereneſſe in this behalfe to be had, truth it ſelfe alwaies remaining one: this hath proceeded of the diligence, and earneſt care of the Church, to repreſſe the pertinacy of Heretikes, who haue within theſe laſt ſix hundred yeeres impugned the truth herein, and to meet with their peruerſe and froward obiections: as hath been thought neceſſary to find out ſuch wedges, as might beſt ſerue to riue ſuch knotty blockes.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

M. Harding paſſeth lightly ouer theſe Articles following, as being only, as he ſaith, containe vnneceſſary Schoole points, to be debated priuatly among the learned, and nothing pertaining to the ſimple capacity of the people. Which thing may the better appeare, by that hee is not able to auouch any of the ſame by the Authority of any Ancient learned Father.

It is true, that the Doctrine of the Church touching the Sacrament in the Old time was deliuered ſimply, and plainly vnto the people. But, M. Harding himſelfe well knoweth, that Doctrine was nothing like vnto this Doctrine.

Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 3. S. Auguſtine taught the people thus: Chriſtus in Cœna Figuram Corporis ſui commendauit: Chriſt at his Supper gaue a Figure of his Body.

Ambroſ. De illis qui initian. Myſter. ca. 9. S. Ambroſe ſaith vnto the people: Poſt Conſecrationem Corpus Chriſti Significatur: After Conſecration the Body of Chriſt is Signified.

Chryſoſt. in Matthæ. homi. 83. S. Chryſoſtome ſaith vnto the people: Si mortuus Chriſtus non eſt, cuius Symbolum, ac Signum hoc Sacrificium eſt? If Chriſt died not, whoſe Signe, and whoſe Token is this Sacrifice? And to leaue infinite other like authorities to like purpoſe, S. Auguſtine thus taught the people: Non hoc Corpus, quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis: nec bibituri illum Sanguinem, quem fuſuri ſunt, qui me Crucifigent: Ye ſhall not eat (with your Bodily mouthes) this Bodie, that you ſee: nor ſhall you drinke that Blood, which they ſhall ſhed, that ſhall Crucifie me.

Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 98. And whereas Chriſt ſaith, Vnleſſe ye Eat my Fleſh, and Drinke my Blood, ye ſhall haue no life in you, The Old learned Father Origen thereupon thus taught the people: Si ſecundùm Literam accipias hæc verba, illa Litera occidit: If ye take theſe words according to the Letter, this Letter killeth.

Origen. in Leuiti. hom. 7. And touching Chriſts Body it ſelfe, the Holy Biſhop, and Martyr, Vigilius taught the people in this ſort: Caro Chriſti, cùm eſſet in terra, non erat in Cœlo: & nunc, quia eſt in Cœlo, non eſt vtique in terra: The Fleſh of Chriſt, when it was in Earth, was not in Heauen: And now, becauſe it is in Heauen, doubtleſſe it is not in Earth.

Vigilius contra Eutychem. li. 1. S. Auguſtine ſaid thus vnto the People: The Bodie, wherein Chriſt roſe againe, muſt needs be in one place: Corpus, in quo Reſurrexit, in vno loco eſſe oportet.

De Con. Diſ. 2. Prima. Cyrillus ſaid vnto the People: Chriſtus non poterat in Carne verſari cum Apoſtolis, poſtquam aſſendiſſet ad Patrem: Chriſt could not be conuerſant together with his Diſciples in his Fleſh, after he had aſcended vnto his Father.

Cyrillus in Iohan. li. 11. ca. 3. Touching the eating of Chriſts Bodie, S. Auguſtine taught the People in this wiſe: Crede, & manducaſti. Credere in Chriſtum, hoc eſt, manducare Panem Viuum: Beleeue in Chriſt, and thou haſt Eaten Chriſt. For beleeuing in Chriſt, is the Eating of the Bread of life.

Auguſtin. in Iohan. tract. 25. Likewiſe againe: Quomodò in Cœlum manum mittam, vt ibi ſedentem teneam? Fidem mitte, & tenuiſti: Thou wilt ſay, How ſhall I reach my hand into Heauen, that I may hold Chriſt ſitting there? I anſwer thee, Reach vp thy Faith and ſo thou holdeſt him.

De Con. Diſ. 2. Vt quid. Thus was the People then taught, ſimplie, and plainly: and that not only in the Schooles, but alſo openly in the Church: neither only in one place, but at Hippo, in Africa: at Conſtantinople, in Thracia: at Alexandria, in Ægypt: at Millain, in Italy: and ſo in all places, and in all Churches thorowout the World: and this was then thought to be the Catholike Doctrine of the Sacraments. Tranſubſtantiation, Reall Preſence, Concomitantia, Accidents without Subiects, Naturall Bodies without Naturall places, Quantum ſine modo Quanti, Holy Formes, and Holy Shewes, were not yet knowen, nor heard of.

Auguſt. in Iohan. tracta. 50. At the laſt, as M. Harding ſaith, there ſprang vp certaine ſtrange Heretikes, that ſaid, that like as the Nature, and Subſtance of Water remaineth in the Sacrament of Baptiſme, euen ſo the Nature, and Subſtance of Bread, and Wine remaineth ſtill in the Sacrament crament of Chriſts Body. But if this, according to M. Hardings iudgement, be an Hereſie, then muſt all the Old Fathers, and Doctors of the Church be condemned for Heretikes.

For Gelaſius ſaith: There remaineth ſtill in the Sacrament the Nature, or Subſtance of Bread and Wine. Gelaſius contra Eutychem.

Chryſoſtome ſaith: The Nature of Bread remaineth in the Sacrament, as before. Chryſoſtom. ad Cæſarium.

Theodoretus ſaith: The Bread remaineth in his former Nature, and Subſtance: In priori Natura, & Subſtantia. Theodoretus Dialogo. 1.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: Quod videtis, Panis eſt: The thing, that ye ſee, is Bread. He ſaith not, It ſeemeth Bread, but it is no Bread: It is only the Accident, the Forme, and the Shew of Bread: but, Panis eſt, It is indeed, and Verily Very Bread. Auguſtin. in Sermon. ad Infantes.

But, I trow, both theſe, and all other like Ancient learned Fathers, muſt, by M. Hardings Decree, be taken for New Wallers and condemned for Heretikes.

This is that knotty great Blocke, which to riue, and rend by, M. Harding hath deuiſed a iolly ſubſtantiall ſtrong iron wedge made of Accidents. God knoweth, a ſimple, and a childiſh inſtrument: and yet much like to the reſt of his toles. Howbeit, God be thanked, the Church of God was able to confound, and to cleane aſunder all maner Hereſies twelue hundred yeres together, without any of theſe wedges. Beda in 1. ad Corin. 10.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

Yet this matter hath not ſo much been taught in open audience of the people, as debated priuately between learned men in Schooles, and ſo of them ſet foorth in their priuate writings, wherein if ſome perhaps through contention of wits haue been either ouer curious, or ouer bold, and haue ouerſhot the marke, or not ſufficiently confirmed the point they haue taken in hand to treat of, or through ignorance, or fauour of a part, haue in ſome thing ſwarued from reaſon, or that meaning which holy Church holdeth: it is great vncourteſie, to lay that to our charge, to abuſe their ouerſights to our diſcredit, and to reproue the whole Church for the inſufficiency of a few.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

For excuſe hereof, M. Harding ſaith, This Doctrine ſerued only for the Schooles, and had no place among the People. But ſo likewiſe did the reſt of all their Doctrine. For it was euer their greateſt policy, to kepe their learning in the Schooles, and to ſee, that the People ſhould know nothing. S. Hierome ſaith: Eadem & in Veteri, & in Noua Hæreſi ſeruatur Fides: vt aliud populi audiant, aliud prædicent Sacerdotes: They keepe one Faith both in Old Hereſie, and in the New. The People heare one thing, and the Prieſts teach another. And certainly, as their Religion was vſed, happy was the poore people, that knew leaſt of it. S. Hilaries words may verie aptly be applied vnto them: Sanctiores ſunt aures plebis, quàm corda Sacerdotum: There is more holineſſe in the eares of the People, than in the hearts of the Prieſts. Hieronym. ad Pammach. con. error. Iohan. Hieroſolymitan. Hilarius contra Auxentium.

Howbeit, contrary to M. Hardings euaſion, other Doctors of his owne forme, Antoninus, Gabriel, and others ſeem to publiſh the ſame, as a Generall Doctrine, Common, not only to the Schooles, but alſo to the whole Church, and no more touching the Prieſt, than the ſimpleſt of the People. Antoninus in 3. par. Summa titul. 13. Biel lection. 84

And verily, if the Sacrament be God indeed, and that, not a God for euer, but only to laſt for a ſeaſon, which is the purport of M. Hardings Doctrine, why ſhould not all the People vnderſtand, when it beginneth to be God: how long it continueth God: when it is God: when it is no God: and how long they may Adore it without danger: and, when they may ſafely leaue off, and Adore no more? For during the time it is God, whoſo Adoreth it not, is wicked, and godleſſe: and, whoſo Adoreth it, when it is no God, committeth Idolatry, and Adoreth a Creature in ſtead of God. Therefore the certainty hereof, notwithſtanding M. Hardings contrary iudgement, ſeemeth as neceſſary for the People, as for the Prieſt.

But here it appeareth, M. Harding is halfe aſhamed of his own Scholaſticall Catholike Doctors. For he confeſſeth, That either of meere ignorance, or of affection, and fauour of parts, they haue ſometime ſwarued, both from common Reaſon, and alſo from the ſenſe of the Catholike Church. This may ſtand well for a Maxima, as one of the greateſt truths of M. Hardings whole booke.

Notwithſtanding, theſe Doctors vttering ſuch points of learning, were neuer thought to publiſh their own priuate fantaſies, but rather the Catholike Doctrine of the Vniuerſell Romane Church. Neither was there either Biſhop, or Cardinall, or Pope, or Counſell, that euer condemned them for the ſame.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuiſion.

Now concerning this Article, whether we are able to auouch it by ſuch authorities, as M. Lewell requireth, or no, it ſhall not greatly force. The credit of the Catholike Faith dependeth not of old proofes of a few new controuerted points, that be of leſſe importance. As for the people, they were taught the truth plainly, when no Heretike had aſſaulted their Faith craftily. (248) The doctrine of the Church is this: The Bodie of Chriſt after due Conſecration remaineth ſo long in the Sacrament, as the Sacrament endureth. The Sacrament endureth ſo long, as the Formes of Bread and Wine continue. Theſe formes continue in their integrity, vntill the other accidents be corrupted, and periſh. As if the colour, waight, ſauour, taſte, ſmell, and other qualities of Bread and Wine be corrupted, and quite altered, then is the forme alſo of the ſame annihilated, and vndone. And to ſpeake of this more particularly, ſith that the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine is turned into the ſubſtance of the Bodie and Blood of Chriſt, as the (249) Scriptures, Ancient Doctors, the neceſſary conſequent of truth, and determination of holy Church leadeth vs to beleeue: if ſuch change of the Accidents be made, which ſhould not haue ſufficed to the corruption of Bread and Wine, in caſe of their remainder, for ſuch a change the Bodie and Blood of Chriſt ceaſeth not to be in this Sacrament, whether the change be in qualitie, as if the colour, ſauour, and ſmell of Bread and Wine be a little altered, or in quantitie, as if thereof diuiſion be made into ſuch portions, in which the nature of Bread and Wine might be reſerued. But if there be made ſo great a change, as the nature of Bread and Wine ſhould be corrupted, if they were preſent, then the Bodie and Blood of Chriſt do not remaine in this Sacrament, as when the colour and ſauour, and other qualities of Bread and Wine are ſo far changed, as the Nature of Bread and Wine might not beare it: or on the quantities ſide, as if the Bread be ſo ſmall crummed into duſt, and the Wine diſperſed into ſo ſmall portions, as their formes remaine no longer: then remaineth no more the Bodie and Blood in this Sacrament. Thus the Bodie and Blood of Chriſt remaineth in this Sacrament, ſo long as the formes of Bread and Wine remaine. And when they faile and ceaſe to be any more, then alſo ceaſeth the Bodie and Blood of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament. For there muſt be a conuenience and reſemblance betweene the Sacraments, and the things whereof they be Sacraments, which done away and loſt at the corruptions of the formes and Accidents, the Sacraments alſo be vndone and periſh, and conſequently the inward thing and the heauenly thing in them contained, leaueth to be in them.

The 248. Vntruth. For this is a new fantaſie, and not the Doctrine of the Ancient Church.

The 249. Vntruth. For neither the Scriptures, nor any of the Ancient Doctors &c. leadeth vs thus to beleeue.

The Doctrine of the Church.

Auguſt. ad Bonifac. epiſt. 23.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

I cannot Imagine, wherefore M. Harding ſhould ſo often tell vs, that the people in the Primitiue Church was taught plainly. For, as now, in his Church of Rome, all things of purpoſe are drowned in darkneſſe, and the ſimple people ſuffered to know nothing: no not the meaning of the Sacraments, which of all other things ſhould bee moſt plaine.

For, briefly to open ſome part of the Myſteries, which euery of the ſimple vnlearned People may not know, marke, I beſeech thee, good Chriſtian Reader, how plainly they haue determined the maner of Chriſts Being in the Sacrament. Thomas of Aquine the moſt famous of all the Schoole doctors writeth thus: In Corpore Chriſti in Sacramento non eſt diſtantia partium ab inuicem, vt oculi ab oculo, aut Capitis à pedibus: ſicut eſt in alijs Corporibus organicis. Talis enim diſtantia partium eſt in ipſo Corpore Chriſti vero: ſed non prout eſt in Sacramento. Quia ſic non habet Quantitatem dimenſiuam. In the Bodie of Chriſt in the Sacrament there is no diſtance of parts, one from another: as between eie, and eie: or eie, and eare: or head, and feet, as it is in other naturall Bodies: For ſuch a diſtance there is in the True Bodie of Chriſt: but not as it is in the Sacrament. For ſo it hath no dimenſion of Quantities. Out of which Words the Reader may gather by the way, that, the True Bodie of Chriſt is not in the Sacrament. O what a Chriſt haue they deuiſed for themſelues! He hath neither Quantitie, nor Proportion of Bodie, nor diſtance of parts: he is neither long, nor ſhort, nor round, nor broad, nor thicke, nor thin: his eies, his eares, his head, his feet are all in one. Yet is this the very Proportion, and ſtature of Chriſts Body, euen as he walkt vpon the Earth, and euen as he was nailed vpon the Croſſe.

In 3. quæſt. 76. art. 3.

And leſt any man ſhould ſtagger hereat, and ſtand in doubt, this matter is ouerlokt, and conſidered in the Decrees by the Canoniſts, by theſe words: Sed ſecundùm hoc videtur, quòd, vbi pars eſt, ibi eſt totum: & ſecundùm hoc videtur, quòd pes, & naſus ſunt coniuncti: quod non credo: By this it appeareth, that, where as the part is, there is the whole: and that Chriſts foote and his noſe are both together. But I cannot beleeue that. So clerely and plainly theſe men are wont to teach the people.

De Con. Diſt. 2. Vbi pars. In Gloſſa.

I paſſe ouer the reſt of their Doctrine. Sometimes their Accidents haue power to nourish: Sometimes the ſame Accidents are parts of the Subſtance: Sometimes Subſtance muſt be an Accident: ſometimes Accidents muſt be Subſtance. To be ſhort, thus of Night they make Date, and of Day they make Night. They are now aſhamed of their own Doctors, that lately were in higheſt rome, and, as it befell ſometime vnto them, that enterpriſed the Tower of Babylon, one of them vnderſtandeth not anothers language. And therefore now their building is at a ſtay.

This is the ſimplicitie, and plainneſſe of M. Hardings Church. It is an eaſier matter, for the ſimple people to goe to Heauen, than for him, and his fellowes to agree well, and thoroughly of the way.

Here M. Harding without either Scripture, or Councell, or Doctor, hath interlarded a long Fable of his owne: which notwithſtanding, as he ſaith, is the Doctrine of the Church.

Church. But miſerable is that Church, that hath neither Scripture, nor Councell, nor Doctour, to approue her Doctrine. Reſeruation.

Firſt he imagineth, That Chriſts Body is Really in the Sacrament, ſo long, as the Sacrament is a Sacrament. Againe, by the tenour and force of his Doctrine, If Chriſts Body once depart away, then is the Sacrament no more a Sacrament. Thus this Doctrine turneth round. If it bee a Sacrament, then is Chriſts Body there: if Chriſts Body be there, then is it a Sacrament. So ſimply and plainly they teach the people. O happie are they that haue ſuch Maiſters!

Further he ſaith: The Subſtance of the Bread and Wine is Really changed into the Body and Blood of Chriſt. And this he auoucheth by Scriptures without words, and by Doctours without names.

Afterward, hee keepeth great Motes about Qualities and Quantities: How far the colour, or ſauour, or other qualities of the Bread may be altered; and into how ſmall mites the Bread may be crummed (for theſe be his owne words) and yet neuertheleſſe Chriſts Body continue in it. No doubt, a very plaine and comfortable, and a ſauorie doctrine for the people. S. Ambroſe, S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, S. Chryſoſtome, and other learned Fathers trauelled far, and deepely with great ſtudy: S Paul was lifted vp into the third Heauen: yet none of them could vnderſtand it.

In the end he ſaith: There muſt be a conuenience, and a Reſemblance betweene the Sacrament, and the things whereof it is a Sacrament. For example, As Water doth waſh and refreſh our Bodies: ſo by Reſemblance we are taught in the Water of Baptiſme, that Chriſts blood doth waſh and refreſh our ſoules. And as our Bodies be fed by materiall Bread, ſo in the Holy Communion we are taught by like reſemblance, that our Soules are fed with the Body of Chriſt. Such conuenient likeneſſe there is betweene the Sacrament, and the thing that is repreſented by the Sacrament. But what ſuch Reſemblance or Likeneſſe can M. Harding imagine herein to further his fantaſie? Wherein are his Accidents like vnto Chriſts Body? Or wherein is Chriſts Body like vnto his Accidents? Will hee ſay, that the Accidents of Bread doe nouriſh and increaſe the Subſtance of our Bodies? Or that our Soules liue ſo by Chriſts Body, as our Bodies liue by Accidents? If he leaue this Reſemblance of Feeding and Nouriſhing, what other Reſemblance can he finde?

O how much better were it for M. Harding, ſimple, and plainly to confeſſe, that, as well for this Article, as for the reſt, he is vtterly deſtitute, not onely of the Scriptures, but alſo of Generall Councels, and Ancient Fathers: and hath nothing to allege, but only certaine vaine imaginations of his owne!

M. Harding. The 4. Diuiſion.

Of Reſeruation of the Sacrament. fol. 12.

Ad Caluſorium Aſſoncen. Epiſcopum, citat Thom. part. 3. q. 76.

Heere becauſe many of them which haue cut themſelues from the Church, condemne the Reſeruation of the Sacrament, and affirme that the Body of Chriſt remaineth not in the ſame, no longer than during the time whiles it is receiued, alleging againſt Reſeruation the example of the Paſchall Lambe in the Old Law, wherein nothing ought to haue remained vntill the morning, and likewiſe of Manna: I will rehearſe that notable and knowen place of Cyrillus Alexandrinus. His words be theſe: Audio quòd dicant myſticam benedictionem, ſi ex ea remanſerint in ſequentem diem reliquiæ, ad ſanctificationem inutilem eſſe. Sed inſaniunt hæc dicentes. Non enim alius fit Chriſtus, neque ſanctum eius Corpus immutabitur: ſed virtus benedictionis, & viuifica gratia manet in illo: It is told me, they ſay, that the myſticall bleſſing (ſo he calleth the bleſſed Sacrament) in caſe portions of it be kept vntill the next day, is of no vertue to Sanctification. But they be mad that thus ſay. For Chriſt becommeth not another, neither his holy Body is changed: but the vertue of the Conſecration & the quickning or lifegiuing grace, abideth ſtill in it. By this ſaying of Cyrillus we ſee, that he accounteth the errour of our Aduerſaries in this Article, no other than a meere madneſſe. The Body of Chriſt (ſaith he) which he termeth the myſticall bleſſing, becauſe it is a moſt holy myſterie done by Conſecration, once Conſecrated is not changed, but the vertue of the Conſecration and the grace that giueth life (250) where by he meaneth that Fleſh aſſumpted of the Word, remaineth in this Sacrament, alſo when it is kept; (250) verily euen ſo long, as the outward Formes continue not corrupt.

The 250. Vntruth, ſtanding in vntrue and guilefull conſtruction.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Truth is not afraid of ſlanderous Tragedies. Wee haue not cut off our ſelues from the Catholike Church of God. Wee haue forſaken the dangerous companie of them, that haue turned the Church of God into a Caue of Theeues: whoſe companie God by ſpeciall words hath willed vs to forſake. For thus the Almighty ſaith vnto vs: O my people, come out from her, and bee not partaker of her ſinnes: leſt yee take part of her plagues. Apocalyp. 18.

The matter of Reſeruation is only paſſed on, and vtterly impertinent and nothing belonging to this queſtion. Howbeit, vnleſſe M. Harding had vſed the aduantage of this digreſſion, he had paſſed ouer this whole Article without framing of any Doctor. I grant, the Sacrament in the Old time in some certaine Churches was reserued: howbeit, not to be worshipped with godly honour, but only to be receiued in the holy Communion of the people. And Origen amongst other godly Fathers seemeth to mislike the same; For thus he writeth: Dominus Panem, quem Discipulis dabat, non distulit, nec seruari iussit in Crastinum: The Bread that the Lord gaue to his Disciples, he deferred it not, nor willed it to be reserued vntill the next day.

Origen. in Leuit. homil. 5.

But touching the force of this Article, Cyrillus speaketh not one word, neither of Corporall Presence, nor of Formes, nor of Accidents, nor of Crummes, nor of Quantities, nor of Qualities, nor of Putrefaction, or Corruption, nor of the comming of Christs Body, nor of the Abode or Departure of the same, nor of any other the like M. Hardings Mysteries. Therefore this holy Father neither reproueth our Doctrine, nor chargeth vs, as M. Harding imagineth, with any madnesse. But if he were now aliue, he would account him mad and twice mad, that would so madly racke his words to so vaine a purpose.

Concerning the Reseruation of the Sacrament that Cyrillus speaketh of, the matter stood thus. Sometimes after that the people had receiued the holy Mysteries, it happened that there remained some portions vntouched. These portions so remaining the godly Fathers, that then were, thought it not meet to turne to any prophane vse: but rather reserued them vntill the next day to be receiued of the people in the holy Communion. For as yet there was no Priuate Masse knowen in the whole Church of God, throughout the world.

The Messalian Monkes repined hereat, and said, The Sacrament could not so long continue holy. Cyrillus answereth them, not that the Flesh, which Christ receiued of the Blessed Virgin, continueth still, as inclosed in the Sacrament, as it is vntruly reported by M. Harding; but, that Christs Institution, and the Mysticall Benediction, which he calleth the Quickening Grace, continueth still. And his reason is this: for that all Sacraments haue their Vertue and Power, not of themselues, but wholly and onely from Christ. Wherefore as Christ is one, and continueth still without change: euen so must the Grace, that Christ worketh in vs by his Sacraments, be likewise one, and continue still. And as there is no vertue in the Water of Baptisme, but when it is vsed: euen so there is no vertue in the Bread of the holy Communion, but likewise only when it is vsed.

As for the quickening Grace, it is as well in the one Sacrament, as in the other. S. Ambrose saith: Aqua Baptismatis habet Gratiam Dei, & Præsentiam Trinitatis: The Water of Baptisme hath the Grace of God, and the Presence of the holy Trinity. And in the Nicene Councell it is written thus: Cogita aquas plenas ignis Cœlestis: Imagine this Water to bee full of Heauenly fire. And this Grace is not only for one houre or two, but lasteth and continueth still. So S. Augustine saith: Arca Testamenti, quamuis ab hostibus capta, Virtutem tamen suæ Sanctificationis non amisit: The Arke of God, notwithstanding it were taken and carried away by the Enemies, yet it lost not the vertue of the former holinesse that was in it.

Ambros. de Sacram. li. 1. cap. 5.
Πλήρη τῆς θείου πυρὸς νέες τὰ ὕδατα.
August. contra Gaudent. lib. 3.

Yet may not M. Harding vpon occasion hereof, either thinke or say, that this Grace is Really and Substantially inclosed either in the one Sacrament, or in the other. Bonauentura saith: Non est aliquo modo dicendum, quòd Gratia continetur in Sacramentis essentialiter, tanquam aqua in vase. Hoc enim dicere est erroneum. Sed dicuntur continere Gratiam, qui eam significant: We may not in any wise say, That the Grace of God is contained in the Sacraments Substantially and Indeed, as Water is contained in a Vessell. For so to say, it were an errour. But Sacraments are said to containe the Grace of God, because they signifie the Grace of God.

In 4. Senten. Dist. 1. quæ. 3.

Here the opinion that M. Harding seemeth to maintaine, is condemned for an error, and this sentence allowed for true and Catholike: Sacraments are said to containe the Grace of God, because they signifie the Grace of God. To conclude he saith: Gratia est in animis, non in signis Visibilibus: The Grace is in the Mindes or Soules of the receiuers: not in the Visible Signes or Sacraments.

THE XXIII. ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that a Mouse or any other Worme or Beast may eat the Body of Christ: For so some of our Aduersaries haue said and taught.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

M. Iewel conuicteth himselfe.

Whereas M. Iewel imputeth this vile assueration but to some of the Aduersaries of his side, he seemeth to acknowledge, that it is not a doctrine vniuersally taught and receiued. The like may bee said for his next Article: And if it hath beene said of some only, and not taught vniuersally of all, as a true Doctrine for Christian people to beleeue; how agreeth he with himselfe, saying after the rehersall of his number of Articles, the same none excepted, as beeing the highest mysteries and greatest keies of our Religion? For if that were true, as it is not true for the greatest part, * then should this Article haue beene affirmed and taught of all. For the highest and greatest points of the Catholike Religion be not particular, but of vniuerlall teaching.

* By this rule the greatest points of M. Hardings Catholike Religion may well come in question.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here it appeareth that M. Harding somewhat misliketh his Catholike Maisters, and thinketh it now an errour to say, That a Mouse may eat the Body of Christ: and therefore he calleth this part of his owne Doctrine, A vile assueration. But if this Assueration of M. Hardings owne Doctours and greatest Doctours be so vile, then vile were they that first deuised it. And yet I cannot well see, how he may so lightly recant the Doctrine that he was borne and brought vp in, and condemne his owne fellowes of villanie, without blame.

Howbeit, one good excuse he seemeth to haue that this part of his Religion was neuer vniuersally receiued, nor counted Catholike. And therefore he saith, It is no key of his Religion. If M. Harding will measure all the rest in this sort, I feare me, very few parts of his whole Religion will proue Catholike. And yet the first deuisers and setters forth and maintainers hereof, toke this euer more for a principall key, as without which the rest of their Doctrine could not stand. Yet were they euermore accounted, both as Vniuersall for their Learning, and as Catholike for their Religion, and as constant in the same, as M. Harding.

But indeed the old holy Fathers, S. Ambrose, S. Augustine, S. Hierome, S. Chrysostome, neuer heard of this strange Doctrine: nor if they had heard it, would euer haue taken it for locke or key of their Religion: but would rather haue thought him worthy to be lockt vp as a mad man, that would either haue taught it, as great numbers haue done: or else haue doubted of it, as M. Harding doth. Now let vs see by whom this Doctrine hath beene maintained. So, whether it haue beene holden for Catholike, or no, it will soone appeare.

Yet notwithstanding, I must protest before hand, that the speeches that they haue vsed in this behalfe, are so blasphemous and so vile, that for the reuerence I beare to the glorious Body of Christ, I can neither heare them, nor vtter them without horrour.

First of all, Thomas of Aquine saith thus: Quidam dixerunt, quòd cùm primùm Sacramentum sumitur à Mure, vel à Cane, desinit ibi esse Corpus, & Sanguis Christi: Sed hoc derogat veritati huius Sacramenti; Some haue said, that as soone as the Sacrament is touched of a Mouse or a Dog, the Body and Blood of Christ straight way departeth from it. But this is a derogation to the truth of this Sacrament. By these words, M. Hardings iudgement is vtterly condemned, as vttered against the truth, and in the derogation of this Sacrament. Thom. par. 3. de Euchar. qu. 79. arti. 3.

M. Harding may not well call in question, whether this Doctour were Catholike, or no. For Christ said vnto him by a vision in his dreame: Bene scripsisti de me Thoma: O Thomas thou hast written full well of me. And therefore he is called, Doctor Angelicus, An Angelicall Doctour, for that in learning and iudgement he so far surmounted all other Doctours, and was accounted most Catholike.

In the Councell of Arle it is written thus: Qui non benè custodierit Sacrificium, & Mus, vel aliquod animal comederit illud, quadraginta dies pœniteat: Whoso keepeth not the Sacrifice well and duly, and a Mouse or any other beast, happen to eat it, let him be put to penance forty daies. Concil. Arelaten. 3. can. 6.

Iohan. de Burgo de Cuſtodia Euchariſt. cap. 10.

Iohannes de Burgo ſaith: Mus comedens Hoſtiam, ſuſcipit Corpus Chriſti: The Mouſe eating the Sacrament, receiueth the Body of Chriſt.

Alexan. par. 4. queſt. 45. m. 1.

Alexander de Hales ſaith thus: Quidam dicunt, Vbicunque ponantur ſpecies, ſiue in mundo loco, ſiue in immundo, ſiue in Ventre Muris, ibi eſt Corpus Chriſti. Et in hoc non derogatur Corpori Chriſti, nec Sacramento: Some ſay, Where ſoeuer the Formes be laid, whether it be in a faire place, or in a foule, or in the belly of a Mouſe, there is the very Body of Chriſt. And this is no hinderance, neither to the Body of Chriſt, nor to the Sacrament.

Againe he ſaith: Si Canis vel Porcus deglutiret Hoſtiam Conſecratam integram, non video, quare Corpus Domini non ſimul trajiceretur in ventrem Canis vel Porci: If a Dog or a Swine ſhould eat the whole Hoſt being Conſecrate, I ſee no cauſe, but our Lords Body ſhould enter into the belly of the Dog or of the Swine.

Gerſon. contra Floret. lib. 4.

Gerſon ſaith: Brutem ſumit Corpus Chriſti per Accidens, quia illud illud, in quo eſt: A brute Beaſt receiueth the Body of Chriſt, becauſe it receiueth that thing, wherein Chriſts Body is contained.

Bonauen. in 4. Senten. diſt. 13. q. 1. e.

Bonauenture liketh better the contrary Doctrine, as more agreeing, as he ſaith, both with Ciuill Honeſty, and alſo with the iudgement of common Reaſon: Hæc Opinio eſt honeſtior, & rationabilior.

4. Sent. diſt. 13.

Peter Lombard, The Maſter of all Catholike Concluſions, one that taketh vpon him to teach all others, when he commeth to this point, he ſtandeth in a maunmering, and is not able to teach himſelfe. For thus he ſaith touching the ſame: Quid igitur ſumit Mus, vel quid manducat? What is it then that the Mouſe receiueth, or what eateth it? He anſwereth: Deus nouit: God knoweth: I know it not.

Notwithſtanding his Reſolution is this: Sane dici poteſt, quod Corpus Chriſti a brutis animalibus non ſumitur: It may very well be ſaid, that a brute beaſt receiueth not the Body of Chriſt. But this Sentence is reuerſed, and not thought Catholike. For the great Faculty of Paris hath giuen this iudgement vpon the ſame: Hic Magiſter non tenetur: Herein the Maſter is not allowed.

Therefore, notwithſtanding M. Hardings contrary determination, this Doctrine hitherto appeareth righ good and Catholike.

Antonin. de defectib. Miſſ. 3. Par. Summ. 3.

Touching ſuch caſes, as herein may happen, Antoninus the Archbiſhop of Florence writeth thus: Si Mus, aut aliud animal, &c. If a Mouſe, or any other Worme, or Beaſt happen to eat the Sacrament through negligence of keeping, let the keeper through whoſe negligence it happened, be enioined to penance forty dayes. And if it be poſſible, let the Mouſe be taken and burnt, and let his aſhes be buried in or about the Altar. But Peter of Palus ſaith: The Mouſes entrailes muſt be drawen, and the portion of the Sacrament that there remaineth, if the Prieſt be ſquamiſh to receiue it, muſt reuerently be laid vp in the Tabernacle, vntill it may naturally be conſumed. But the Hoſt ſo found in the Mouſes entrailes may in no wiſe be throwen out into the poole. In a certaine Prieſt ſometime vſed a flie, that he found in his Chalice after Conſecration. But if a man had ſuch a fernent zeale (ſaith he) that his ſtomacke would ſerue him to receiue the ſame without horrour, there were no way to it, ſpecially if the man were faſting. So S. Hugh of Cluniee much commendeth Goderanus a Prieſt, for receiuing the like portions caſt vp againe by a Leper. But he ſaid afterward, S. Laurences gridiron was nothing ſo bad. Hitherto Antoninus.

De Con. diſt. 2. Si quis. In Gloſſa.

And, for more likelihood hereof, this is holden as a Catholike Concluſion of that ſide: Corpus Chriſti poteſt euomi: The very Body of Chriſt may be vomited vp againe.

I proteſt againe, as before, the very blaſphemie and loathſomneſſe hereof vnto a godly heart is vntolerable. Neither would I haue vſed this vnpleaſant rehearſall, were it not, that it behoueth ech man to know, how deepely the people hath bene deceiued, and to what villany they haue ben brought.

Fortalitium Fidei, lib. 3.

This Doctrine hath bene publiſhed and maintained in Schooles, in Churches, by the Schoole-doctours, by the Canoniſts, by Preachers, by Biſhops, by Generall Councels, and by him that wrote the very Caſtle and Fort of Faith. Yet M. Harding doubteth not to ſay, It is a vile Aſſeueration, and was neuer counted Catholike.

Simile.

Theſe be the Imbres of their Tranſubſtantiation. For like as Ixion, in ſtead of Lady Iuno, hauing the company of a Cloud, begat Centaures, that were monſtrous and vglie formes of halfe a man, and halfe a horſe ioined together: euen ſo theſe men, in ſtead of Gods holy Myſteries, companying with their owne light and cloudy fantaſies, haue brought forth theſe ſtrange, vglie, deformed ſhapes in Religion, loathſome to remember, and monſtrous to behold.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

Concerning the matter of this Article, whatſoeuer a Mouſe, Worme, or Beaſt, eateth the Bodie of Chriſt now being impaſſible, and immortall, ſuſteineth no violence, iniury, ne vilany. As for that which is gnawen, bitten, or eaten of worme or beaſt, whether it be the Subſtance of Bread, as appeareth to ſenſe, which is denied,(251) becauſe it ceaſeth through vertue of Conſecration: or the outward forme only of the Sacrament, as many hold opinion,(252) which alſo only is broken and chewed of the receiuer, the Accidents by miracle remaining without ſubſtance: In ſuch caſes happening contrary to the intent and end, the Sacrament is ordained and kept for, it ought not to ſeeme vnto vs incredible, the power of God conſidered, that God taketh away his Body from thoſe outward formes, and permitteth either the nature of Bread to returne, as before Conſecration, * or the Accedents to ſupplie the effects of the Subſtance of Bread; as he commanded the nature of the Rod which became a Serpent to returne to that it was before, when God would haue it ſerue no more to the vſes it was by him appointed vnto.

* The graue authoritie of S. Cyprian addeth great weight to the ballance for this iudgement in weighing this matter, who in his Sermon de Lapſis, by the report of certaine miracles, ſheweth that our Lords Bodie made it ſelfe away from ſome that being defiled with the Sacrifices of Idols, preſumed to come to the Communion ere they had done their due penance. One (as hee telleth there) thinking to haue that bleſſed Bodie, which he had receiued with others in his hand, when hee opened the ſame to put it into his mouth, found that he held aſhes. And therof S. Cyprian ſaith: Documento vnius oſtenſum eſt, Dominum recedere cùm negatur: By the example of one man it was ſhewed, that our Lord departeth away when he is denied. It is neither wicked, nor a thing vnworthy the Maieſty of that holy myſterie, to thinke our Lords Bodie likewiſe done away, in caſes of negligence, villanie, and prophanation.

The 251. Vntruth. For the Bread remaineth ſtill, as it is plaine by the Old Catholike Fathers.

The 252. Vntruth, as it is fully proued in the tenth Article.

* The certainty of M. Hardings Doctrine.

* S. Cyprian ſpeaketh neither of Miſe, nor of brute beaſts, &c.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

O what ſhifting heere is, to auoid this miſerable inconuenience! Innocentius thinketh it not good to ſay, The Mouſe eateth Chriſts Body in the Sacrament. But rather he ſaith, That Chriſt when he ſeeth the Mouſe comming, getteth himſelfe away, and leaueth the Sacrament. This Doctours iudgement M. Harding alloweth before others, and thinketh it beſt to ſtand with reaſon.

Innocent. 3. De Officio Miſſ. cap. 11.

But what then is it that the Mouſe eateth? Bread it cannot be. For that is gone, as they ſay, by Conſecration. It remaineth, that the Mouſe muſt needs eat the Shewes and Accidents. Howbeit that were a ſtrange kind of feeding. But nothing is ſtrange to M. Harding. Yet Shewes and Accidents cannot nouriſh. what is it then wherewith the Mouſe is nouriſhed? M. Harding anſwereth: Perhaps Almighty God by a Miracle ſuffereth the Bread to returne againe to feed the Mouſe. Or elſe, if this will not ſerue, he ſaith further: Perhaps God worketh another Miracle, and by his omnipotent power giueth the very Accidents of Bread ſtrength to nouriſh and increaſe Subſtance, as if it were Bread. Thus theſe men haue deuiſed a prety way to feed Miſe with Miracles.

Thomas of Aquine ſaith, that if a man take ouermuch of the Conſecrate Wine, notwithſtanding the Subſtance of the Wine be gone, yet he may be ouerſeene by the Accidents, and ſo may happen to be drunken by a Miracle.

Thomas in 1. Cor. 11.

Heere we ſee, M. Harding anſwereth only by Perhaps, as being not yet well aduiſed, what he may ſay. Whereby it appeareth, his Doctrine holdeth no certainty. Therefore, whatſoeuer he ſay, we may giue no great credit to his tale, nor take it for Catholike.

S. Cyprian, that is heere alleged, maketh no maner mention, neither of Formes, nor of Accidents, nor teacheth vs, that the Mouſe can eat Chriſts Body: nor that Chriſt conueieth himſelfe away, and leaueth the Sacrament: nor that the Subſtance of Bread returneth again: nor that the Accidents haue power to nouriſh: nor any other like fantaſie. Only he ſaith, God gaue that wicked man by that Miracle to vnderſtand, that for his Infidelitie and Idolatrie, his grace was ſo departed from his heart, as the Sacrament was departed from his hand. Therefore this place maketh vtterly nothing to M. Hardings purpoſe. Notwithſtanding he thought it good, ſo in this Article to vſe the name of S. Cyprian, as in the Article before he vſed the name of S. Cyril: leſt he ſhould be thought to paſſe ouer any Article without a Doctour.

Cyprian. Serm. 5. De Lapſis.

The beſt that may be gathered of S. Cyprians words is this, That the wicked receiueth not the Body of Chriſt. Which thing, as it is moſt true, ſo it vtterly ouerthroweth the whole ſubſtance of M. Hardings Doctrine.

Now, good Chriſtian Reader, that thou maiſt ſee how aptly M. Hardings Doctours agree together, notwithſtanding ſo many of them tell vs, & hold it for moſt certaine, That a Mouſe may eat the very Body of Chriſt, and receiue whole Chriſt, God and Man into his belly: Yet others of them contrariwiſe tell vs, and hold it likewiſe for moſt certain: That a faithfull Chriſtian man, be he neuer ſo godly, yet cannot receiue the Body of Chriſt into his belly. For thus they write: Certum eſt, quòd quàm citò ſpecies teruntur dentibus, tam citò in Cœlum rapitur Corpus Chriſti: It is certaine, that as ſoone as the Formes of the Bread be touched with the teeth ſtraightway the Body of Chriſt (is not receiued into the belly, but) is caught vp into Heauen. And he ſaith not Perhaps, as M. Harding doth, but, Certum eſt: It is certain, and out of queſtion, and therefore Catholike.

De Con. diſt. 2. Tribus gradib. In Gloſſa.

And Hugo a great Schole Doctor, ſuch a one as M. Harding may not well denie, ſaith thus: Quando in manibus Sacramentum tenes, Corporaliter tecum eſt Chriſtus: quando ore ſuſcipis, Corporaliter tecum eſt. Poſtquam autem Corporalis ſenſus in percipiendo deficit, Hugo de Sacram. li. 1. par. 8. cap. 13.

Bonauen. in 4. Senten. diſt. 13. qua. 2.
Durand. li. 4.

deficit, deinceps Corporalis Præſentia quærenda non eſt: While thou holdeſt the Sacrament in thy hand, Chriſt is bodily with thee: while thou receiueſt the Sacrament with thy mouth, Chriſt is bodily with thee. But after that (the Sacrament is paſſed further, and) thy bodily ſenſe beginneth to faile, thou maiſt no longer looke for bodily Preſence. Thus they grant, that a Mouſe may receiue the Body of Chriſt into his belly: and yet they denie the ſame vnto a Man. Such is the certainty and conſtancie of this Doctrine.

But to conclude, and to giue ſome certaine reſolution in this vncertaine and doubtfull Doctrine, it behoueth vs to vnderſtand, That, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, there is great difference betweene Chriſts Bodie, and the Sacrament. For the Sacrament is Corruptible: Chriſts Body is Glorious, and void of all Corruption. The Sacrament is in the Earth: Chriſts Body is in Heauen. The Sacrament is receiued by our Bodily Mouth: Chriſts Body is receiued only by Faith, which is the mouth of our Soule. And whoſo vnderſtandeth not this difference, vnderſtandeth not the meaning of any Sacrament.

Now to applie the ſame to this purpoſe: The Mouſe or other Worme may receiue the ſubſtance of the Bread, which is the outward corruptible Element of the Sacrament: But the very Body of Chriſt it ſelfe, which is in Heauen, cannot be receiued, but by Faith only, and none otherwiſe.

Auguſt. Confeſſion. lib. 7. cap. 10.

S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh thus in the perſon of Chriſt: Ego ſum Cibus grandium: Creſce, & manducabis me: I am the food of great ones: Grow, and thou ſhalt eat me. Againe he ſaith: Hoc eſt Manducare illam eſcam, & illum potum Bibere, in Chriſto manere, & Chriſtum manentem in ſe habere: This is the Eating of that Food, and the Drinking of that Drinke for a man to abide in Chriſt, and to haue Chriſt abiding in him.

Aug. in Iohan. tract. 26.

Chryſoſtom. ex variis, locis in Matth. hom. 9.

Chryſoſtome ſaith: Magnus iſte Panis replet mentem, non Ventrem. Iſte Panis, & noſter eſt, & Angelorum: This great loafe (meaning thereby the Body of Chriſt, that is in Heauen) filleth the Minde, and not the belly. This is our bread, and the bread of Angels. As the Angels receiue it, ſo we receiue it.

Hilarius de Trinit. li. 8.

And to conclude, ſo ſaith S. Hilarie: The bread that came downe from Heauen, is not receiued but of him, that hath our Lord, and is the member of Chriſt.

By the old learned Fathers vndoubted iudgement, this is the only Eating of the Fleſh of Chriſt: wherein Wiſe, and Brute Beaſts, and wicked men, that are worſe than brute Beaſts, haue no portion. And if theſe holy Fathers were now aliue, doubtleſſe they would ſay to M. Harding and to his Fellowes: O curui in terris animi, & Cœleſtium inanes! O you that lie groueling on the ground, and haue no ſenſe of things aboue.

OF INDIVIDVVM VAGVM.

THE XXIIII. ARTICLE.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

OR, that when Chriſt ſaid, Hoc eſt Corpus meum, this word Hoc, pointed not the Bread, but Indiuiduum Vagum, as ſome of them ſay.

M. Harding.

Whatſoeuer Hoc pointeth in this ſaying of Chriſt after your iudgement, M. Iewel, right meaning and plaine Chriſtian people (who through Gods grace haue receiued the loue of truth, and not the efficacy of illuſion to beleeue lying) beleeue verily, that in this Sacrament after Conſecration, is the very Body of Chriſt, and that vpon credit of his owne words, Hoc eſt Corpus meum. They that appoint themſelues to follow your Geneuian doctrine in this point, deceiued by that ye teach them (Hoc) to point the Bread, and by ſundry other vntruths, inſtead of the very Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament rightly miniſtred verily preſent, ſhall receiue nothing at your Communion, but a bare peece of bread not worth a point. As for your, ſome ſay, who will haue Hoc to point Indiuiduum Vagum, Firſt, learne you well what they meane, and their meaning be naught, whoſoeuer they be, handle them as you liſt; therewith ſhall we bee offended neuer a deale. How this word Hoc, in that ſaying of Chriſt is to be taken, and what it pointeth, * wee know, who haue more learnedly, more certainly, and more truly treated thereof, than Luther, Zuinglius, Caluin, Cranmer, Peter Martyr, or any their offpring.

1. Theſſ. 1.

The benefit of the Geneuian Communion.

*M. Hardings good opinion of himſelfe.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

In this Article M. Harding only vttereth ſome part of his choler againſt them, whom it pleaſeth him to call Geneuians: and vanteth much of his owne learning, as learned men men seldome vse to doe, with reproch, and disdaine of others: and in the end, touching the matter, saith vtterly nothing. Yet is there not lightly any doubt, that amazeth, and troubleth the best learned of his side, so much, as this.

The Dissention of Doctors.

For, their fantasie of Transubstantiation presupposed to stand in force, if they say, That Christ by this Pronoune, Hoc, meant the Bread, that he held in his hand. Then must it néeds follow, that the very Substance of that Bread, was the very Body of Christ. For by this position, that must néeds be the purport, and meaning of these words.

If they say, Christ by the same Pronoune meant the Accidents, and Shews of the Bread, Then must it follow, that the same Accidents, and Shewes of Bread were the Body of Christ. But so should an Accident be a Substance: Which error were much worse, and far more vnsensible, than the former.

If they say, This Pronoune, Hoc, signified the Body of Christ it selfe, Then the meaning of these Words, This is my Bodie, must néeds be this: My Body is my Body. But this (saith Holcot) were vainly spoken, and to no purpose. And by this exposition, Christs Body should be there, before the words of Consecration were pronounced: and so there should bée no vertue, or force in Consecration: or rather there should be Consecration, before Consecration: and so, Consecration, without Consecration. Holcot in 4. Sen. que. 3.

Vpon these few words they haue built vp their whole Religion. This is the foundation of all together. Therefore M. Harding should not so lightly, and so disdainfully haue passed it ouer without answer. Otherwise, this change being so great, as it is supposed, we shall not know, neither what thing is changed, nor whereof Christs Bodie is made present.

Neither is there any iust cause, wherefore M. Harding should be thus angry with the Genevians in this behalfe. For he knoweth right well, that this new fantasie, of Indiuiduum Vagum, is no part of their Doctrine.

But briefly to touch, how pitifully the learned of M. Hardings side haue entangled themselues in this case, first of all Gerson saith thus: Dicendum est, quòd Hoc, demonstrat substantiam Panis: We must say, that this Pronoune, Hoc, signifieth the substance of the Bread. By this Doctor, the Substance of Bread is Christs Body. Gerson contra Floret. li. 4.

Occam saith: Hoc, refertur ad Corpus Christi: This Pronoune, Hoc, hath relation to the Body of Christ. By this Doctor, the Body of Christ is the Body of Christ. Occam in 4. Senten. dist. 13.

Yet Petrus Alliacensis saith: Hoc, demonstrat Corpus Christi: aliôqui falsa est propositio: Hoc, poynteth the Body of Christ: Otherwise Christs saying is not true. Petrus Alliacen. in 4. Sent. dist. 13. qua. 5.

Thomas of Aquine goeth learnedly to worke, and expoundeth it thus: Hoc, id est, hoc contentum sub istis Speciebus, est Corpus meum: This, That is to say, this thing contained vnder these Formes, is my Body. Thomas in 4. Senten. dist. 8. arti. 16.

But all these expositions séeme to import some inconuenience. For hereby it may bée gathered, that the Bread is Transubstantiate, and, as they imagine, Christ Body made Present, before the Words of Consecration.

Therefore Iohannes de Burgo thought it good, to help the matter with a Disiunctiue, in this sort: Hoc sub hac specie præsens, vel de propinquo futurum, est Corpus meum: This thing, that either is present already vnder these Formes, or a non will be present is my Body. Iohan. De Burgo de Forma Verboru. requisita &c. ca. 4.

By all these Doctors iudgements, the meaning of Christs Words is none other, but this, My Body is, or shall be my Body. Which exposition (as Holcot saith) is Childish, Vaine, fantastical, and to no purpose. Holcot in 4. Senten. que. 3.

And therefore Holcot himselfe saith: Hoc, Significat quiddam vtrique termino Commune: & termino, A quo, & termino, Ad quem. This Pronoune, Hoc, signifieth a certaine thing, that is indifferently Common, as well to the Bread, as to Christs Body. But what thing, that Indifferent thing should be, it were hard to know. Holcot eodem loco.

Doctor Durand séeing all these inconueniences, and difficulties, and not knowing how to get out, in the end concludeth thus: Super hoc dicunt quidam, quòd per pronomen, Hoc, nihil significatur: Sed illud materialiter ponitur: Hereupon some say, that this Pronoune, Hoc, signifieth nothing at all: but is put Materially, and Absolutely, without any maner signification. Durandus li. 4.

But hereof groweth another doubt greater, than any of all the rest. For if this Word, Hoc, signifie nothing at all, what force then can it haue, to worke Consecration?

Innocentius waighing these things indifferently all together, is driuen to say, That Christ Consecrated the Sacrament, not by these Words, Hoc est Corpus meum, But by his blessing, that went before. Innocen. 1. De Offi. Miss. par. 3. ca. 6. &c. 14.

Likewise is Iohn Duns driuen to say, touching the same: Illa propositio, Hoc est Corpus meum, non est Consecratiua, nec vt Vera, nec vt Falsa: sed vt est propositio neutra: This sentence, Hoc est Corpus meum, is not the Sentence of Consecration, neither as it is true, nor Scotus in 4. Sentent. dist. 8. que. 3.

as it is False: but only as it is a Sentence neuter between both, that is to say, neither true, nor false.

All this notwithstanding, D. Steuen Gardiner, not greatly regarding the Authority of any of these Doctors, in his first Booke of the Sacrament, intituled, The Diuels Sophistrie, writeth thus: Christ spake plainly, this is my Body, making demonstration of the Bread. Which last exposition being true, if this Pronoune, Hoc, signified the materiall Bread, that Christ held in his hand, then, by M. Hardings Doctrine, that very Materiall Bread was indéed, and verily the Body of Christ.

The Diuels Sophistry, fol. 24.

But if the same Pronoune, Hoc, signified not that same Materiall Bread, that Christ held in his hand, then was not that same Materiall Bread changed into the Substance of Christs Body.

Thus the best learned of that side are vtterly amazed at this matter, and run each man his owne way, and know not, what may please them best.

Yet M. Harding thinketh it sufficient, thus to conclude with a courage: How that word, Hoc, is to be taken, and what it pointeth, we know, who haue more learnedly, more certainly, and more truely treated heereof, than Luther, Zuinglius, Caluine, Cranmer, Peter Martyr, or any their ofspring. If M. Harding, and his fellowes know so much, as héere hé séemeth to take vpon him, he hath the greater cause, to giue God thankes. Whatsoeuer he haue, he hath receiued it. God giue him grace, to vse it well.

He would séem, not to know, who they be, that would force vs to this fansie of his Indiuiduum Vagum. And therefore he saith, If their meaning be naught, handle them as ye list. Howbeit, he cannot be so ignorant herein, as he would séeme to be. For although perhaps he be not much acquainted with the Doctrine, yet he cannot chuse, but know the Doctor. Him I meane, of whom he hath borrowed good store of matter, sometimes a whole leafe, and more together, towards the building of his Booke.

D. Steuen Gardiner.

Hé, notwithstanding hé were once perswaded, that Christ by this Pronoune, Hoc, made demonstration of the Bread, yet afterward thought all that not worth a point, but vtterly changed his whole minde, and thought it better to say, that Christ by the same Pronoune, Hoc, pointed not the Bread, that he held in his hand, but only Indiuiduum Vagum. And that, for the better vnderstanding of his Reader, he calleth, Indiuiduum in Genere, Indiuiduum Entis, Vnum Substantiæ, Vnum Entis, Indiuiduum Insignitum, Indiuiduum Indiuidui. This fansie he so warranth, and forceth euery where, as if Christs Words could beare none other exposition.

Mar. Antoni. Constantius.

Thus therefore he imagineth Christ to say: This thing, that ye see me hold in my hand, is not two things: It is only one certaine thing. But what one certaine thing it is, I cannot tell: but, sure I am, Bread it is not.

Thus are they driuen to wander in Vanities, and to séeke vp strange, and monstrous formes of speech, such as the Ancient Catholike Doctors neuer knew, lest they should séeme plainly, and simply to say, as the learned Father Tertullian saith: Hoc est Corpus meum, hoc est, Figura Corporis mei: This is my Body, that is to say, this is a Figure of my Bodie: Or, as it is written in their owne Decrées: Vocatur Corpus Christi, id est, Significat Corpus Christi: It is called the Body of Christ, that is to say, It signifieth the Body of Christ.

Tertullian. contra Marcion. lib. 4. De Con. Dis. 2. Hoc est. In Glossa. Hieronym. in Esai. li. 2. ca. 5.

S. Hierome saith: Tam diù quærunt Hæretici noua veteribus adiungere, & eadem recentioribus immutare, donec eos & sensus humanus, & verba deficiant: The maner of Heretikes is, so long to mingle, and blend new things with the Old, and still to alter new for new, vntill both their wits, and their speech begin to faile them.

Here note, good Reader, that in this whole Article M. Harding hath alleged no maner Doctor, nor Old, nor New. The reason thereof is this: for that of the Old Doctors, hé had none to allege: and of his New Doctors, he was ashamed.

WHETHER

WHETHER THE FORMES BE THE SACRAMENT.

THE XXV. ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that the Accidents, or Formes, or Shewes of Bread, and Wine be the Sacramentes of Christs Body, and Blood, and not rather that Bread, and Wine it selfe.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

Forasmuch, as by the Almighty power of Gods word pronounced by the Priest in the Consecration of this Sacrament, the Body and Blood of Christ are made (253) Really Present, the Substance of Bread (253) turned into the Substance of the Body, and the Substance of Wine into the Substance of the Blood: the Bread (which is consumed away by the fire of the Diuine Substance, as Chrysostome saith, and now is become the Bread which was formed by the hand of the Holy Ghost in the wombe of the Virgin, and decorated with the fire of the Passion in the Altar of the Crosse, as S. Ambrose saith:) cannot be the Sacrament of the Body, nor the Wine of the Blood. Neither can it be said that the Bread, and Wine which were before, are the Sacraments, for that the Bread is become the Body, and the Wine the Blood, and so now they are not: and if they be not, then neither be they Sacraments. Therefore that the outward formes of Bread, and Wine which remaine, be the Sacraments of Christs Body, and Blood, and not the very Bread, and Wine it selfe: it followeth by sequell of reason, or consequent of vnderstanding, deduced out of the first truth, which of S. Basil in an Epistle, ad Sozopolitanos, speaking against certaine, that went about to raise vp againe the old Heresie of Valentinus is called, τὸ ἐκ δυοῖν ἀκολουθον. Of which sequel of reason in the matter of the Sacrament many conclusions may be deduced in case of want of expresse Scriptures. Which way of reasoning Basil vsed against Heretikes, as also sundry other Fathers, where manifest Scripture might not be alleged.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

M. Harding presumeth, that his new fantasie of Transubstantiation must nedes stand for good. And therefore imagining, that the Bread, and Wine are wholy remoued, and cannot be the Sacraments, he thinketh, he may well conclude, that the Formes, and Shewes, that are left behinde, must nedes be the Sacraments. But this error is soone reproued by the consent of all the Old Catholike Fathers of the Church. S. Augustine saith: Quod videtis, Panis est: The thing that ye see (speaking of the Sacrament) is (not a Forme, or an Accident, but) Very Bread. S. Chrysostome, Theodoretus, Gelasius, and other learned Fathers confesse by manifest and expresse words: That there remaineth still in the Sacrament the very Nature, and Substance of Bread, and Wine. Therefore this Doctrine is built vpon a false ground, and cannot stand.

Augustin. ad Infantes. Chrysostom. ad Cæsarium. Gelasius contra Eutychem. Theodoret. Dialogo. 1. & 2.

But Chrysostome saith: The Bread is consumed by the force of the Diuine Presence. And S. Ambrose, saith M. Harding, reporteth the same. It is great frowardnesse, whatsoeuer any one, or other of the Fathers happen to vtter in vehemency, and heat of talke, to dissemble the maner of their speech, and to draw, and force the same violently to the rigor of the letter. Paulus saith: In fraudem Legis facit, qui, saluis verbis Legis, sententiam eius circumuenit: He doth wrong to the Law; that, following only the bare words, defraudeth the meaning of the Law.

De LL. & Senatusc. & Icn. Con. Contra.

S. Cyprian saith: Passio Christi est Sacrificium, quod offerimus: The Sacrifice, that wee offer, is the Passion of Christ.

Cyprian lib. 2. Epist. 3.

Chrysostome saith: Baptisma Christi Sanguis eius est: The Baptisme of Christ is Christs Blood.

Chrysostom. in Epist. ad Hebræ. homi. 16.

And againe he saith: In Mysterijs Sanguis ex Christi latere hauritur: In the time of the holy Communion, the Blood of Christ is drawne out of his side.

Chrysostom. in Encæniis.

S. Gregorie saith: Christus iterum in hoc Mysterio moritur: In this Mysterie (of the holy Communion) Christ is put to Death againe.

De Conse. Dis. 2. Quid sit Sanguis.

I trow, M. Harding will not so straitly force vs to beleeue, only vpon the sight of these bare words, either that the holy Communion is Christs Passion: or, that the Water of Baptisme is Christs Blood; or, that Christ is slaine, and put to Death in the time of the Holy Holy Myſteries: Or, that Chriſts Blood at that time is drawen, and poured from his ſide, and that, without helpe of Figure, Verily, Really, and indeed.

By ſuch maner of amplification, and kind of ſpeach S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: The Bread is conſumed: not for that there remaineth in the Sacrament no Bread at all, but for that, in compariſon of the Death of Chriſt, that there is laid forth, and repreſented before vs, the materiall Bread ſemeth nothing. For otherwiſe Chryſoſtome moſt plainly confeſſeth, that the Nature of Bread remaineth ſtill. Theſe be his words: In Sacramento manet Natura Panis: In the Sacament there remaineth ſtill the Nature of Bread.

Chryſoſtom. ad Cæſarium.

And, as he ſaith, The Bread is conſumed, Euen ſo in the ſame place he ſemeth to ſay, The Prieſt is conſumed. His words be theſe: Ne putes, te accipere Diuinum Corpus ab Homine: Thinke not, that thou receiueſt the Diuine Body, of a Man.

In Encæniis. Chryſoſtom. in Matthæ. hom. 51.

And to like purpoſe he ſpeaketh of the Sacrament of Baptiſme: Non Baptizaris à Sacerdote: Deus ipſe tenet Caput tuum: Thou art not Baptiſed of the Prieſt: It is God himſelfe, that holdeth thy Head.

Thus the holy Fathers intreating of the Sacraments, vſe to aduance our minds from the Senſible, and corruptible Elements, to the cogitation of the Heauenly things, that thereby are Repreſented. And therefore Chryſoſtome ſaith: Myſteria omnia interioribus oculis videnda ſunt? Wee muſt behold all Myſteries with our inner eies: Which inner eies doubtleſſe haue no regard to any corruptible, and outward thing.

Chryſoſt. in 1. Corin. cap. 2. Chryſoſtom. in Matthæ. hom. 83.

Hereby the fableneſſe of M. Hardings ſequell may ſone appeare.

True it is, that he further ſaith, In caſe of want of the Scriptures, we may ſometime guide our ſelues by diſcourſe, and drift of Reaſon. Notwithſtanding S. Auguſtine ſaith: Hæc conſuetudo periculoſa eſt: The cuſtome hereof is very dangerous. But in this caſe M. Harding wanteth neither the Scriptures, nor the Authority of Ancient Doctors.

Auguſt in. De Doctrina Chriſtiana. lib. 3. ca. 28.

It is plaine by the manifeſt words of S. Paul, of S. Chryſoſtome, of S. Auguſtine, of Theodoretus, of Gelaſius, and of other moe holy Fathers, both Grekes, and Latines, that in the Sacrament, after the words of Conſecration, the very Nature, and Subſtance of the Bread remaineth ſtill. It were much for M. Harding, to forſake all theſe, and to truſt only to a bare ſhift of ſimple Reaſon.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

And whereas there muſt be a likeneſſe betweene the Sacrament, and the thing of the Sacrament, (for if the Sacraments had not a likeneſſe of things whereof they are Sacraments, properly, and rightly they ſhould not be called Sacraments: as the Sacrament of Baptiſme, which is the outward waſhing of the Fleſh: hath a likeneſſe of the inward waſhing of the Soule) and no likeneſſe here appeareth to bee betweene the Formes that remaine, and the thing of the Sacrament, for they conſiſt not, the one of many cornes, the other of grapes, for thereof commeth not Accident, but Subſtance: Hereto may be ſaid, it is enough, that theſe Sacraments beare the likeneſſe of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, foraſmuch as the one repreſenteth the likeneſſe of Bread, the other the likneſſe of Wine, which S. Auguſtine calleth (254) Viſibilem ſpeciem elementorum, the viſible Forme of the Elements.

Auguſt in Epiſt. 22. ad Bonifacium Epiſc.

A ſtrange Reſemblance. The 254. Vntruth. For S. Auguſtine by theſe words meant the very Subſtance of Bread.

De Conſ. diſt. 2. cap. Hoc eſt quod dicimus.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

What meaneth M. Harding, thus to encumber himſelfe with theſe vaine and miſerable follies? S. Auguſtine ſaith: A Sacrament muſt haue a Reſemblance, or Likeneſſe of that thing, whereof it is a Sacrament. For without this Reſemblance or Likeneſſe, he ſaith, a Sacrament is no Sacrament.

Auguſt. Epiſt. 23. ad Bonifacium.

Therefore M. Harding commeth in with his Fantaſie, and telleth vs, that his Formes and Accidents are the Reſemblance and Likeneſſe of the Body of Chriſt. But, alas, wherein ſtandeth this Compariſon of Reſemblance and Likeneſſe? Or wherein are M. Hardings Accidents, and Chriſts Body like together? Certainly M. Harding himſelfe, notwithſtanding he can ſay many things, yet he cannot truly ſay, that Chriſts Body is either round, or plaine, or white, or thin, or any way like vnto his Accidents.

Yet muſt there be a certaine likeneſſe in effects betwen the Sacrament, and the thing it ſelfe, whereof it is a Sacrament. Of which effects, the one is Senſible, and wrought outwardly to the Body: the other is Spirituall, and wrought inwardly in the mind. As for example, in the Sacrament of Circumciſion, the Outward Viſible Cutting in the Fleſh, was a Reſemblance of the Inward Spirituall Cutting of the Heart. In the Sacrament of Baptiſme, the Outward Waſhing of the Body, is a Reſemblance of the Inward Spirituall Waſhing of the Soule.

Likewiſe in the Sacrament of the Holy Communion, as the Bread Outwardly Feedeth our Bodies: ſo doth Chriſts Body Inwardly, and Spiritually Feed our Soules. Thus is Feeding an effect common vnto them both. And therein ſtandeth the Reſemblance, blance, and Likeneſſe of the Sacrament. Therefore Rabbanus Maurus ſaith: Quia Panis Corporis Cor confirmat, ideò ille congruenter Corpus Chriſti nominatur: Et quia, Vinum ſanguinem operatur in Carne, ideò illud refertur ad Sanguinem: Becauſe the Bread confirmeth the Heart of our Body, therefore is the ſame conueniently called the Body of Chriſt: And becauſe Wine Worketh Blood in our Fleſh, therefore the Wine hath relation vnto the Blood of Chriſt. Rabban. Maurus li. 1. ca. 31.

Now, if M. Harding, touching this effect of Feeding, will compare his Accidents with Chriſts Body, then muſt he ſay, That we Eat Accidents, and Drinke Accidents, and be Fed with Accidents, and Liue by Accidents: euen as in the Inner Man we Eat Chriſt, and Drinke Chriſt, and be Fed with Chriſt, and Liue by Chriſt. Otherwiſe he muſt confeſſe, that, touching the effect of Feeding, his Accidents haue no Reſemblance of Chriſts Body: and therefore can in no wiſe be called Sacraments.

But, ſaith M. Harding, The Accidents Repreſent the likeneſſe of Bread: and the Bread, that was, Repreſenteth the Body Chriſt. Here is another ſubtile drift of M. Hardings reaſon: from Accidents, to Bread: and from Bread, to Chriſts Body. And ſo we haue here fanſie vpon fanſie: and one Likeneſſe vpon another: but neither Scripture, nor Councell, nor Doctor, either Greeke, or Latine: or Old, or New, to auouch the ſame.

But here appeareth a marueilous peruerſe Order in Nature. For by M. Hardings drifts, neither can the Bread Signifie Chriſts Body, but only when the Bread is aboliſhed, and nothing left to Signifie: nor can theſe Accidents Signifie the Bread, but only, when there is no Bread remaining there, to be Signified. And ſo the effect of M. Hardings drift, and of this Reſemblance palleth from nothing to nothing, and ſtandeth in nothing.

Here it behoued M. Harding to haue foreſéen the inconueniences, that might haue followed. For if the Accidents of the Bread be the Sacrament, foraſmuch as in one peece of Bread there be ſundry Accidents, it muſt néds follow of theſe poſitions, that in one peece of Bread be ſundry Sacraments, and ſo, ſundry Sacraments in one Sacrament. Innocentius himſelfe eſpied this inconuenience: and therefore hée demandeth this queſtion: Cum ſint multæ ſpecies, quomodo non ſunt multa Sacramenta? Innocen. De Officio Miſſ. ca. 38.

But this Reſemblance, or Likeneſſe S. Auguſtine calleth, Viſibilem Speciem Elementorum, The viſible Forme of the Elements. By which words (ſaith M. Harding) he meant only the Shewes, and Accidents of the Bread. Indéed S. Auguſtines words bée true: but M. Hardings Expoſition is not true. For S. Auguſtine by this word, Species, meant not the outward Formes, or Shewes, as it is ſuppoſed, but the vere Kind, and Subſtance, and Nature of the Bread.

So S. Ambroſe ſaith: Ante benedictionem Verborum Cœleſtium, alia Species nominatur: poſt Conſecrationem Corpus Chriſti Significatur: Before the Bleſſing of the Heauenly Words, it is called (not another Forme, or another Shew, but) another Kind, or Nature: But after the Conſecration, Chriſts Body is Signified. Which thing may alſo plainly appeare by S. Auguſtine himſelfe in the ſame place. For thus he writeth: Panis, qui Corpus Chriſti eſt, ſuo modo vocatur Corpus Chriſti, cùm re vera ſit Sacramentum Corporis Chriſti, &c. Vocaturquè ipſa immolatio Carnis Chriſti, quæ Sacerdotis manibus fit, Chriſti Paſſio, Mors, Crucifixio: non rei Veritate, ſed Significante Myſterio. He ſaith (Not the Forme, not the Shew, not the Accident, but) The Bread, that is the Body of Chriſt (not verily, or indéed, but) after a maner is called the Body of Chriſt: whereas it is indeed a Sacrament of the Bodie of Chriſt, &c. And the Oblation of the Fleſh of Chriſt, that is made with the Prieſts hand, is called the Paſſion, the Death, and the Crucifying of Chriſt: not in Truth of the matter, but by a Myſterie Signifying. Ambro. De illis qui initian. Myſteriis, c. 9. De Con. diſt. 2. Hoc eſt, quod dicimus.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuiſion.

Thus the Formes of Bread and Wine are the Sacraments of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, not only in reſpect of the thing ſignified, which is the vnity of the Church, but alſo of the thing contained, which is the very Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt, whereof the truth it ſelfe ſaid: The Bread that I ſhall giue, is my Fleſh for the life of the world. Ioan. 6.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

In the end M. Harding, not only without any Authority, either of Scriptures, or of Councels, or of Doctors, but alſo without any maner Shew, or drift of Reaſon, concludeth in this ſort: Thus the Formes of Bread and Wine are the Sacraments of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Thus M. Harding bringeth in his Concluſion without premiſſes. By M. Hardings iudgement, S. Auguſtine was not well aduiſed, when he called the Holy Myſterie, Sacramentum Panis & Vini: The Sacrament of Bread and Wine. He ſhould rather haue called it, by this Conſtruction, The Sacrament of Formes and Shewes. And whereas S. Auguſtine ſaith, Accedat Verbum ad Elementum, & fit Sacramentum: whereby hee meaneth, De Fide ad Petrum, ca. 19. Auguſt in Iohan. tract. 80.

Forma. Operta.

Matthæ. 26. Cyprian. li. 2. epist. 3. Cyprian. in Oration. Dom. Cyril. in Iohan. li. 4. ca. 24. Irene. lib. 5. Ad Obiect. 27.

meaneth, that the Bread it selfe is made a Sacrament: M. Harding will rather expound it thus: Let the Word come to the Element, or Creature of Bread: and then the Accidents thereof are made a Sacrament.

Verily, touching the Wine, Christ himselfe calleth it, not Formes, or Accidents, but the Fruit, or, as Cyprian termeth it, The Creature of the Vine, Creaturam Vitis.

S. Cyprian calleth the Bread after Consecration, Panem ex multorum granorum adunatione congestum: Bread made (not of Formes, and Accidents, but) of the (Substance, and) moulding of many Cornes.

S. Cyril saith: Credentibus Discipulis Fragmenta Panis dedit: Christ vnto his Disciples beleeuing in him, gaue (not Accidents, or Shewes, but) Fragments, or peeces of Bread.

Irenæus saith, Of the same Bread, and Wine after Consecration, Augetur, & consistit Carnis nostræ Substantia, is increased, and consisteth the Substance of our Flesh.

Here must M. Harding néds say, as Marcus Constantius said before him, that Accidents are the Fruit of the Vine: that Cornes, and Grapes be likewise Accidents that Fragments, and péces of Bread be nothing else but Accidents: that the Substance of our Bodies is nourished, and increased, and standeth by Accidents. Thus are their Accidents Fuga miserorum. They can prouue, and reproue all by Accidents: and without their Accidents they can doe nothing. And thus, as bad Surgians, they make one Salue to serue for all sores.

Gregor. in Iobum, lib. 18. cap. 14.

S. Gregorie saith: O Timothee. depositum custodi, deuitans profanas vocum nouitates. Quia cùm laudari Hæretici, tanquam de excellenti ingenio, cupiunt, quasi noua quædam proferunt, quæ in Antiquorum Patrum libris Veteribus non tenentur. Sicque fit, vt dum videri desiderant sapientes, miseris suis auditoribus stultitiæ semina spargant. O Timothie, keepe that thou hast receiued: and beware of the wicked nouelties of words. For these Heretikes seeking the commendation of the excellency of their wit, bring foorth new things, that in the Old bookes of the Ancient Fathers are not found. And so it hapneth, that while they would be taken for wise men, they scater amongst their poore hearers the seeds of Folly.

Certainly, M. Harding, and his fellowes, as of Shewes they haue made Sacraments; euen so of the Holy Sacraments, and whole Religion of Christ, they haue left nothing to the simple people, but a sight of Shewes.

OF HIDING, AND COVERING.

THE XXVI. ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that the Sacrament is a Signe, or Token of the Body of Christ, that lieth hidden vnderneath it.

M. Harding.

The 255. Vntruth. For the Outward forme was neuer by any Old Father called the Sacrament.

That the outward forme of Bread, (255) which is properly the Sacrament, is the Signe of the Body of Christ, we confesse, yea of that Body, which is conertly in, or vnder the same, which S. Augustine calleth Carnem Domini forma Panis oportam: The Flesh of the Lord couered with the forme of Bread. But what is meant by this terme (Lieth) we know not. As through Faith grounded vpon Gods word, we know that Christs Body is in the Sacrament, so that it lieth there, or vnderneath it, by which terme it may seeme a scoffe to be vttered, to bring the Catholike teaching in contempt, or that it sitteth, or standeth, we deny it. For lying, sitting, and standing, noteth scituation of a Body in a place, according to distinction of members, and circumscription of place, so as it haue his parts in a certaine order correspondent to the parts of the place. But after such maner the Body of Christ is not in the Sacrament, but without circumscription, order, and habitude of his parts to the parts of the Bodie, or place enuironing. Which maner of Being in, is aboue al reach of humane vnderstanding wonderous, strange, and singular, not defined, and limitted by the Lawes, or bounds of nature, but by the almightie power of God. To conclude, the Being of Christs Body in the Sacrament is to vs certaine, the maner of his Being there to vs vncertaine, and to God only certain. In libro sententiarum Prosperi.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The entry of this Article, is the Conclusion of the last. So artificially M. Hardings Vntruths are wouen together. The outward Forme of Bread, saith he, is the Sacrament.

But

But withall he ſhould haue added, that this forme and maner of ſpech is only his owne, peculiar only to himſelfe, and certaine his fellowes of that ſide: neuer vſed by any of all the Old Doctours, and Fathers of the Church, either Greke or Latine: or Learned, or Vnlearned: or Catholike or Heretike: or one or other.

Theſe words of S. Auguſtine are alleged and anſwered before. That holy learned Father neuer ſaid, neither that the Formes and Accidents be the Sacrament: nor that Chriſts Body is Really hidden vnder the ſame: nor in this place ſpeaketh any one word at all of any Accidents. In the 12. Article, and 14. Diuiſion.

But the words, wherein M. Harding is deceiued, are theſe: Forma Panis: Which words ſignifie not the outward Formes and Accidents, as he vntruly expoundeth them: but the very Kinde and Subſtance of the Bread. So S. Paul ſaith Chriſtus cùm in Forma Dei eſſet, Formam Serui accepit: Chriſt being in the Forme (or Nature) of God, tooke vpon him the Forme (or Nature) of a Seruant. By which words S. Paul meant, that Chriſt was very God in Subſtance, and that he toke vpon him the very Subſtance of a Man. So S. Hierome expoundeth the ſame words, ſpeaking in the perſon of Chriſt: Declinaui ad eos deferens Regna Cœlorum, vt cum eis veſcerer, aſſumpta Forma Serui: I went downe to them leauing the Kingdome of Heauen, that I might eat with them, hauing taken the Forme of a Seruant. I thinke M. Harding will not ſay, Chriſt toke a Body of Formes and Accidents, that he might be conuerſant, and liue with men. So S. Auguſtine ſaith: Secundùm hanc Formam, non eſt putandus vbique diffuſus: Chriſt (not according to the Shewes or Accidents of his Body, but) according to this Kinde, this Nature, and this Subſtance of his Body, may not be thought to be powred and ſpred into all places. Thus S. Paul, S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, and other learned Fathers vſe this word Forma, for Nature and Subſtance: and not for Accidents. Philip. 2. Hieronym. in Oſee, li. 3. ca. 2. Auguſtin. ad Dardan. epiſt. 57.

And as touching the other word, Operta, Couered, S. Auguſtine meaneth not thereby, that Chriſts Body is Really contained and couered vnder the ſaid Forme or Kinde of Bread: but only that it is there as in a Sacrament, or in a Myſtery. In this ſenſe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Gratia Dei in Veteri Teſtamento velata latebat: The Grace of God lay hidden couered in the Old Teſtament. And againe: In Veteri Teſtamento occultabatur Nouum, id eſt, occultè Significabatur: The New Teſtament was hidden in the Old, that is to ſay, It was ſecretly ſignified in the Old. Auguſt. de Spiritu & Litera, cap. 15. Auguſt. de Baptiſm. contr. Donat. lib. 1. cap. 15.

Yeare, leſt M. Harding ſhould take theſe words ſtrictly and groſly, as he doth the reſt, and ſay, The New Teſtament Indeed and Really was couered in the Old, S. Auguſtine himſelfe hath preuented him, and opened his owne meaning in this wiſe, as it is ſaid before: Occultabatur, id eſt, occultè Significabatur: It was Couered, that is to ſay, It was ſecretly Signified. By which expoſition, being S. Auguſtines, M. Harding might haue learned likewiſe to expound theſe words: Caro Operta Forma Panis, id eſt, occultè Significata: The Fleſh couered in the Forme or Subſtance of Bread: that is to ſay, Primly Signified in the Forme or Subſtance of Bread.

But M. Harding thought it beſt, to leaue the matter, and to make his quarrell to the words: This word, Lieth, ſaith he, importeth a ſcoffe, wherewith to bring his Catholike teaching into contempt. Verily this muſt needs be a maruellous tender, and a miſerable Doctrine, that may no waies be touched without ſuſpition of a ſcoffe. But why is he more angrie with vs for vttering theſe words, Lieth hidden, than he is with his owne Doctours vttering the ſame?

In his Gloſſe vpon the Decrees it is written thus: Species Panis, ſub qua latet Corpus: Species Vini, ſub qua latet Sanguis: The Forme of Bread, vnder which is hidden the Body: The Forme of Wine, vnder which is hidden the Blood. These bee his owne fellowes words: they are not ours. De Con. diſt. 2. Hoc eſt. In Gloſſa.

Willihelmus Haffliginenſis, one of M. Hardings New Doctours ſaith thus: Quærite Dominum, dum inueniri poteſt. In Templo inuenitur Materiali: ibi latet ſub Specie Panis: Seeke the Lord, while he may be found. He is found in the Materiall Church of ſtone: there hee is hidden vnder the Forme of Bread. Willih. Haffliginenſis in Sermone de Aduentu. Vixit Anno 1300.

Another like Doctour ſaith thus: Ibi eſt Corpus Chriſti in tanta quantitate, ſicut fuit in Cruce. Vnde mirum eſt, quomodo ſub tam modica Specie tantus homo lateat: The Body of Chriſt is there as great in quantitie, as he was vpon the Croſſe. Therefore it is maruellous how ſo great a man can be hid vnder ſo ſmall a Forme. Ludulphus in vita Chriſti, par. 2. ca. 56.

If this word Hidden, ſo necceſſarily import a ſcoffe, then muſt M. Harding needs thinke, that his owne Doctours ſcoffe at him, and laugh him to ſcorne. Certainly, it is no indifferent dealing, the words being all one, ſo fauourably to allow them in his owne bookes, and ſo bitterly to miſlike them in all others.

Perhaps hee will ſay, It is no Catholike Forme of ſpeech, to ſay, Chriſt Lieth in the Sacrament.

Sacrament. And yet I ſée no great reaſon, but it may ſtand as well with the Catholike Doctrine to ſay, Chriſt lieth in the Sacrament, as, Chriſt ſitteth in the Sacrament. Yet Iohannes à S. Andrea, a great Doctour, and a ſpeciall Patrone of that ſide, is well allowed to write thus, and that without any maner controlement or ſuſpicion of ſcoffe: Id temporis contentio nulla erat, vtrùm Corpus Chriſti inſideret Euchariſtiæ: At that time there was no ſtrife, whether Chriſts Body were ſitting in, or vpon the Sacrament, or no. Thus was it lawfull for him to write: and his writings are taken for good and Catholike.

Iohan. à S. Andrea in epiſtola ante Liturgias.

But M. Harding ſaith: Chriſts Bodie is in the Sacrament, without Circumſcription or Reſpect of place, ſtrangely, wondrouſly, and ſingularly, and by the might of Gods omnipotent power; and the maner of his Being there is knowen onely vnto God. These be faire, and orient, and beautifull colours, but altogether without ground: and, to vſe the termes of M. Hardings Religion, they are nothing elſe, but Accidents, and Shewes without a Subiect.

It is a ſtrange and a marueilous matter, that this preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament being ſo certaine and ſo ſingular, as M. Harding ſémeth to make it, yet all the old learned Catholike Fathers ſhould ſo lightly paſſe it ouer in ſilence, without any maner mention, as if it were not worth the hearing: or that M. Harding ſhould ſo aſſuredly, and ſo certainly know it, and yet God himſelfe ſhould not know it: or that God ſhould know it, and yet, being a matter ſo ſingular, and ſo neceſſary to be knowen, ſhould neuer reueale the ſame to any, either of the learned Fathers, or of the Holy Apoſtles, or make them priuie to that knowledge.

Indéed it behoueth vs to humble our hearts vnto the miracles and marueilous workes of God. But euery M. Hardings fantaſie is not a Miracle. The Heretike Praxeas ſaid, euen as now M. Harding ſaith: Deo nihil eſt difficile: Vnto God nothing is hard. But Tertullian that learned Father anſwered him then, euen as we now anſwer M. Harding: Sitam abruptè in præſumptionibus noſtris vtamur hac ſententia, quiduis de Deo confingere poterimus: If we ſo raſhly vſe this ſentence to ſerue our Preſumptions (or fantaſies) we may imagine of God what we liſt.

Tertull. contra Praxeam.

Act. 7. Coloſſ. 3.

S. Steuen ſaw Chriſt in Heauen, Standing: S. Paul ſaith: Chriſt is now at the Right hand of God, Sitting: which thing alſo we confeſſe in the Articles of our Faith. But in the Sacrament, ſaith M. Harding, Chriſt is preſent without any maner ſuch Circumſcription or Circumſtance, or order of place: that is to ſay, as great in quantitie, as he was vpon the Croſſe, and yet neither Standing, nor Sitting, nor Lying, nor Leaning, nor Knæling, nor Walking, nor Reſting, nor Mouing, nor hauing any maner Proportion, or Poſition of his Body, either vpward or downeward: or backeward or forward: A very Body, and yet not as a Body: in a place, and yet not as in a place.

This is M. Hardings Catholike Doctrine, without Scripture, without Councell, without Doctour, without any liking or ſenſe of Reaſon. Yet muſt euery man receiue the ſame at M. Hardings hand, as the Singular, Strange, Wonderfull, Omnipotent Worke of God.

To conclude, Chriſts Body is in the Myſticall Bread of the holy Communion, not Really or Corporally, or Indéed, as M. Harding fanſieth, but as in a Sacrament, and in a Myſterie: euen as the Blood of Chriſt is in the Water of Baptiſme.

THE XXVII. ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that Ignorance is the Mother, and cause of true Deuotion and Obedience.

M. Harding.

Master Iewel had great need of Articles, for some shew to be made against the Catholike Church, when he aduised himselfe to put this in for an Article. Verily this is none of the higheſt Mysteries, nor none of the greateſt keies of our Religion, as he saith it is, but vntruly, and knoweth that for an vntruth. For himselfe imputeth it to D. Cole, in his replies to him as a strange saying by him vttered in the Disputation at Westminster, to the wondring of the most part of the honourable and worshipfull of this Realme. If it were one of the higheſt Mysteries, and greateſt keies of the Catholike Religion, I trust the most part of the honourable and worshipfull of the Realme would not wonder at it. Concerning the matter it selfe, I leaue it to D. Cole. He is of age to answer for himselfe. Whether he said it or no, I know not. As he is learned, wise, and godly, so I doubt not, but if he said it, therein he had a good meaning, and can shew good reason for the same, if he may be admitted to declare his saying, as wise men would the Lawes to bee declared, so as the minde be taken, and the Word spoken not alwaies rigorously exacted.

Iohan. 9. μετ' τῶν Φαρισ. ταῦτα, καὶ μὴ ἐστὶ πρὸς θεῶν.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Here M. Harding allegeth no Doctour, but Doctour Cole. And touching the matter it selfe, he thinketh this errour well excused, for that it is not the principall key of his Religion. Howbeit, he that in most honorable Assemblie doubted not openly to pronounce these words: I tell you, Ignorance is the Mother of Deuotion, was thought then to esteeme the same, as no small key of his Religion. Verily it appeareth by the whole practise and policie of that side, they are fully perswaded, that without deepe Ignorance of the people it is not possible for their Church to stand.

Therefore they chase the simple from the Scriptures, and drawne them in Ignorance, and suffer them vtterly to know nothing: neither the profession they made in Baptisme: nor the meaning of the holy Mysteries: nor the price of Christs Blood: nor wherein, or by whom they may be saued: nor what they desire of God, either when they pray together in the Church, or when they priuately pray alone.

They shut vp the Kingdome of Heauen before men: and neither will they enter themselues, nor suffer others, that would enter. Matth. 23.

And as it is written by the Prophet Esay: Dicunt videntibus, Nolite videre: They say vnto them that see, Stop your eies, and see no more. Esai. 30.

As the people is, such is the Priest: and as the Priest is, such is the people. Esai. 24.

The blinde is set to guide the blinde. Matth. 15.

Thus they welter in darknesse and in the shadow of Death. And yet as it is written in the Booke of Wisdome: Non satis est illis errasse circa scientiam Dei: sed in magno viuentes insciliæ bello, tot & tanta mala pacem appellant: Sapien. 14.

They thought it not sufficient to be deceiued, and blinded in the knowledge of God: but liuing in such a warre of ignorance, all these euils they call peace: And make the people beleeue, it is Obedience, Catholike Faith, and Deuotion: Or, rather, as Irenæus writeth against the Valentinian Heretikes: Veritatis Ignorantiam, Cognitionem vocant: Ignorance of the Truth, and blindnesse, they call Knowledge. Iren. lib. 2. cap. 19.

By these policies they ouer-rule the Church of God, and keepe the people in Obedience: euen as the Philistines, after they had once shorne off Samsons haire, and boared out his eies, not withstanding the strength and sturdinesse of his Body, were able to lead him whither they listed, at their pleasure. Iudic. 16.

For he that walketh in the darke, knoweth not whither to goe. Iohan. 12.

In the Councell of Toledo in Spaine, it is written thus: Mater omnium errorum Ignorantia: Ignorance is the Mother (not of Deuotion, but) of all Errours. Concil. Tolet. 4. Can. 24.

Like as S. Augustine also saith: Erat in illis Regnum Ignorantiæ, id est, Regnum Erroris: There was in them the Kingdome of Ignorance, that is to say, the Kingdome (not of Deuotion, but) of Errour. Augustin. in Psal. 33. concion. 1. Distin. 38. Si iuxta.

S. Hierome ſaith: Scripturarum Ignorantia, Chriſti ignorantia eſt: The Ignorance of the Scriptures is the ignorance of Chriſt.

Gregor. in Paſtorali, lib. 1. cap. 1. And S. Gregorie ſaith: Qui ea, quæ ſunt Domini, neſciunt, à Domino neſciuntur: Whoſo know not the things that pertaine vnto the Lord, be not knowen of the Lord.

Origen. in Numer. hom. 27. But aboue all others, theſe words of the ancient learned Father Origen are ſpeciallie worthie to be noted: Dæmonibus eſt ſuper omnia genera tormentorum, & ſuper omnes pœnas, ſi quem videant Verbo Dei operam dare, ſcientiam Diuinæ Legis, & Myſteria Scripturarum intentis ſtudijs perquirentem. In hoc eorum omnis flamma eſt: in hoc vruntur incendio. Poſſident enim omnes, qui verſantur in Ignorantia: Vnto the Diuels it is a torment aboue all kindes of torments, and a paine aboue all pains, if they ſee any man reading the Word of God, and with feruent ſtudy ſearching the knowledge of Gods Law, and the Myſteries and Secrets of the Scriptures Heerein ſtandeth all the flame of the Diuels: in this fire they are tormented. For they are ſeaſed and poſſeſſed of all them, that remaine in Ignorance.

Numer. 11. 1. Theſſal. 4. 1. Cor. 14. To be ſhort, Moſes wiſhed that all the whole people might haue vnderſtanding and bee able to Prophecie. S. Paul wiſhed, that the whole people might daily more and more increaſe in the knowledge of God, and ſaith: Whoſo continueth in Ignorance, and knoweth not, ſhall not be knowen.

Iohan. 5. Epheſ. 4. God, the God of Light and Truth, remoue all Ignorance and Darkneſſe from our hearts: that we may flie the ſpirit of Error, and know the Voice of the Great Shepheard: that we grow into a full perfect man in Chriſt Jeſu, and be not blowen away with euery blaſt of vaine Doctrine: that wee may be able to know the Onely, the True, and the Liuing God, and his onely begotten Sonne Jeſus Chriſt: To whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt, bee all honour and glorie, for euer and euer. Amen.

An Answer to M. Hardings

Conclusion.

AS the rest of your Booke, M. Harding, may in many respects seeme very weake, so is there no part thereof, more weake, than your Triumph at the end, before the Conquest. Yee say, yee haue fullie answered the Offer, which you call a Challenge: and haue auouched the Negatiues: and haue fullie prooued all that lay in question, by Scriptures, by examples of the Primitiue Church, by Old Councels, and by Ancient Fathers. Whereby it appeareth, ye haue some good liking in that yee haue done. It had beene more modestie to haue left the commendation and iudgement thereof vnto your Reader: who comparing your Proofes with the Answers, and laying the one with the other, might be able to iudge indifferently betweene both. For it may well bee thought, that while ye ran alone, yee were euer the foremost: and that, making your owne award, yee would hardly pronounce against your selfe.

The proofes that yee haue shewed vs, are common and knowen, often alleged, and often answered, and now brought in, as a companie of maimed Souldiers, to make a shew. But from you, and from such conference, and helpe of fellowes, your learned friends looked for some fresher matters.

That ye charge me with ambition and selfe-loue, and seeking of praise, although it be the weakest of all other your shifts, yet it is an affection incident vnto the children of Adam: and some men suspect that M. Harding is not fullie emptie of the same. But hee that made the heart, is onelie meet to search and to iudge the heart. As for me, as I am nothing, so I know nothing. God forbid that I should glorie in any thing, saue only in the Crosse of Iesus Christ. Galat. 6.

But where it pleaseth you so horriblie to pronounce your Definitiue sentence, that Euerlasting damnation shall bee the end of our game, I might well answer you with S. Paul: Nolite ante tempus Iudicare: Iudge not before the time. It seemeth ouermuch for you, so vnaduisedlie to take vpon you the office and person of Christ without Commission. For S. Iohn saith; God hath giuen all iudgement (not vnto M. Harding, but) vnto Christ his Sonne: who, no doubt, will inquire further of your iudgement. Your owne Gelasius saith: Neminem grauare debet iniqua sententia: A wrongfull sentence may hurt no man. It behooueth vs, patientlie to wait for the Iudgement seat of God. In that day all the secrets of darknesse shall bee reuealed. 1. Cor. 4. 1. Cor. 4. Iohan. 5.

The wicked and vngodlie cried out against the Prophet Dauid: Non est salus ipsi in Deo eius: Hee hath no health, hee hath no comfort in his God. But Dauid turned himselfe vnto God, and said; O Lord, thou receiuest me: thou art my glory: thou liftest vp my head. If damnation be the end of all their trauels, that seeke onely the Glorie of God, and the Truth of his Gospell, where then shall they bee, that so wilfullie haue dishonoured the name of God, and haue burnt his Gospell without cause, and haue condemned it as open Heresie? Certainlie, Renegates, Infidels, Liars, Blasphemers, and Idolaters shall haue their portion in the Lake that flameth with Fire and Brimstone. The Lords mouth hath spoken it. This doubtlesse shall bee the end of their game. Psalm. 3. Apocalyp. 21.

Now, say you, it remaineth, that I performe my promise. Yea verily: but, notwithstanding all that yee haue hitherto said, much more it remaineth, that you beginne againe, and assaie better to proue your purpose: that is, that yee leaue your Surmises and Ghesses: and alledge one or other sufficient Clause or Sentence, for any of these matters, that yee say, yee haue prooued. For that yee haue hitherto shewed vs, as vnto any indifferent Reader it may soone appeare, is ouerweake, and will not serue.

I grant, ye haue alleged Authorities, sundrie and many, such as I knew long before: with what Faith, I doubt not, but by Conference it may soone appeare. Verily, M. Harding, I neuer denied, but you were able to misreport the ancient learned Doctours of the Church, and to bring vs the names and shadowes of many Fathers. The Heretikes of all ages were likewise able to doe the same. But what credit may wee yeeld to such Allegations? What Errour was there euer so plaine, what Abuse so horrible, but yee haue beene able to maintaine the same by some colour of Scriptures, and Fathers? Yee haue defended your Holy Water by the Example of Elizeus, and by the words of the Prophet Ezechiel: Your Pardons, by the Prophet Esay: the open filthinesse and abomination of your Stewes, by the name and authoritie of S. Augustine. Such credit yee deserue to haue, when yee come to vs in the name of holy Fathers.

4. Regum 4. Esai. 40. Augustin. de Ordine.

Ye say, ye haue shaken downe all the holds of our side; and that whosoeuer seeth it not, is starke blinde, and seeth nothing. So easily, and with so small adoe, this whole matter is brought to passe. So Iulius Cæsar, sometime to declare the maruellous speed and expedition of his victorie, expressed the same briefly in these three words, Veni: Vidi: Vici: I came to them: I saw them: I conquered them.

Heere in few words to trauerse the speciall points and corners of your whole Booke, and to shew by what force and engins ye haue atchieued this enterprise: First yee haue prooued your Priuate Masse, by Women, Boies, Children, Laymen, Fables, Dreames and Visions. Your Halfe Communion, by sicke Folke, Deathbeds, Infants, and Madde men. Of Christs Institution, of the Scriptures, of the certaine practise of the Apostles, of the Generall and knowen vse of the Primitiue Church, of the Ancient Councels, of the Old Canons, of the Holy Catholike Fathers, sauing only your bare Ghesses, you bring nothing. Of your vnfruitfull maner of praying in a strange vnknowen tongue, ye allege neither authoritie nor example; Touching the Supremacie of Rome, which is the Keepe and Castle of your whole Religion, yee wander farre and wide, and many times beside the way; yet haue ye not found any ancient Father, that euer intitled the Bishop of Rome, either the Vniuersall Bishop of the whole World, or the Head of the Vniuersall Church. Thus yee proceed with your Reall Presence; and so foorth with the rest.

You intreat vncourteously the Holy Fathers, with such your Translations, Expositions, and Constructions, not as may best expresse their meaning, but as may best serue to further your purpose. Ye racke them: ye alter them: yee put to them: yee take from them: yee allege sometime the end without the beginning: sometime the beginning without the end: sometime yee take the bare words against the meaning: sometime ye make a meaning against the words. Ye imagine Councels that were neuer holden, and Canons of Councels, that neuer were seene. Yee bring forged Pamphlets vnder the names of Athanasius, Anacletus, and other godly Fathers, by whom you well know, and cannot chuse but know, they were neuer made. Your greatest grounds bee Surmises, Ghesses, Coniectures, and Likelihoods. Your arguments bee Fallacies, many times without either Mood or Figure: the Antecedent not agreeing with the Consequent, nor one part ioined with another. Your vntruthes bee so notorious and so many, that it pitieth me in your behalfe to remember them. But the places be euident, and crie Corruption, and may by no shift be denied. And to forget all other your Inconstancie, touching the former times, euen now in this selfe same Booke which yee wish vs to receiue, and so to receiue, as the rule, and standard of our Faith, ye say and vnsay: ye auouch and recant: and either of forgetfulnesse, or for that yee mislike your former sayings, you are often contrarie to your selfe. Yee haue sought vp a companie of new petite Doctours, Abdias, Amphilochius, Clemens, Hippolytus, Leontius, and such others, Authours void of Authoritie, full of Vanities and Childish Fables. And no great marueil. For whoso wanteth wood, is often driuen to burne turfes.

It

It had beene good, ye had brought some other Doctors, to prooue the credit of these Doctors. Ye make no difference betweene Siluer, and Drosse: betweene Corne, and Chaffe: betweene Old, and New: betweene True, and False. Ye say, Christ shed his Blood in deed, and verily at his Last Supper: and that at the same instant of time, he offred himselfe in his Body likewise in Heauen indeed, and verily before God his Father. And these ye call necessary points of the Christian Faith. Artic. 17. diuis. 4. & 7.

These are the contents of your Booke: this is the substance of your proofes. Thus, I feare me, ye know, ye dallie, and deale not plainly: thus, ye know, ye abuse the patience, and simplicitie of your Reader. And did you imagine, M. Harding, that your Booke should passe only among children, or that it should neuer be examined, and come to triall? or, did you thinke, that onely with the sound heereof, ye should be able to beat downe, and to vanquish the truth of God?

As for your Eloquence, and furniture of words, as it serueth well, to make the matter more saleable in the sight of the simple, so it addeth but small weight vnto the Truth. Wise men are led with choice of matter, not with noise of words: and trie their gold, not only by the sound, which often deceiueth, but also by the touchstone, and by the waight. Although your Eloquence may worke miracles in the eares of the vnlearned, that cannot iudge, yet it cannot turne, neither water into Wine: nor Darknesse into Light: nor Error into Truth. There is no Eloquence, there is no colour against the Lord.

Whereas it liketh you, so bitterly, as your maner is, to call vs Heretikes, and to say, We sit in the Chaire of Pestilence, and that the people learneth of vs dissolution of maners, and libertie of the Flesh, and walketh vtterly without sense, or feare, or care of God, It standeth not with your credit, thus with manifest Vntruths, and common slanders to enuegle your Reader. Balach, when he saw, he could not preuaile against the people of God by force of armes, he began to raile against them, and to curse them, thinking, that by such meanes he should preuaile. Numer. 22. & 23.

But it is not alwaies Heresie, that an Heretike calleth Heresie. Athalia, when shee vnderstood, that Ioas the right Inheritour of the Crowne of Iuda, was proclaimed King, flew in her furie in to the Temple, and cried out, Treason, Treason. Yet was it not King Ioas, but she her selfe, that had wrought the Treason. The Arian Heretikes called the true Christians, that professed the Faith of the Holy Trinitie, sometime Ambrosians, sometime Iohannites, and sometime Homousians: allowing only themselues to bee called Catholikes. The Valentinian Heretikes condemned all others, as Grosse, and Earthly, and themselues onely they called Ghostly. The sheepe often times seemeth to stray without the fold, whiles the Woolfe lurketh, and prieth within. Verily, M. Harding, who so hateth the intolerable outrage of your Abuses, and pitieth the miserable seducing, and mocking of the people, and mourneth for the Reformation of the House of God, and desireth to tread in the steps of the Ancient Catholike Godly Fathers, whose Doctrine, and ordinances ye haue forsaken, and with all submission, and humilitie of minde, referreth the whole iudgement, and order heereof vnto the vndoubted Word of God, he may not rightly be called an Heretike. 4. Regum 11.

Touching looseneſſe of life, I maruell, ye can so soone forget, either your Church of Rome, where, as S. Bernard said in his time, From the Head to the Foot, there was no part whole: Or the Popes Holinesse owne Palace: where, as the same S. Bernard saith, Mali proficiunt, boni deficiunt: The wicked grow forward, the godlie goe backward. Bernard. in Conuersione Pauli. De Consideratio. lib. 4.

Verily, wee haue neither Stewes, nor Concubines, nor Courteghians set out, and deckt as Ladies, nor Priests, nor Prelates to wait vpon them, as, by your owne friends Confession, there are in Rome. There is no Vertue, but we aduance it: there is no Vice, but we condemne it. To be short, a light wanton amongst vs, if she were in Rome, might seeme Penelope. In Concil. Delectorum Cardinalium.

Ye say, There are none, but a few, light, vnstable persons of our side. And therfore of good will, and friendship ye counsell me to returne to you againe. But a few, say you?

you? and the same vnstable, and light persons? Surely, M. Harding, if you could behold the wonderfull Workes, that God hath wrought in the Kingdomes, of England, France, Denmarke, Polonia, Suecia, Bohemia, and Scotland: and in the noble States, and Common Weales of Germanie, Heluetia, Prussia, Russia, Lituania, Pomerania, Austria, Rhetia, Vallis, Tellina, &c. ye would not greatly finde fault with the number; nor thinke, that they, whom it hath pleased God in all these Kingdomes, and Countries to call to the knowledge, and feeling of his holy Gospell, are so few. And if ye could also consider the extremitie, and cruelty of your side, and the abundance of innocent blood, that so constantly hath beene yeelded for the testimonie of the Truth, ye would not so lightly call them, either vnstable, or light persons. Certainly, they, whom you seeme so lightly to esteeme, are Kings, Princes, Magistrates, Counsellers, and the graueſt, and greateſt learned Fathers of Christendome. If it please God of his mercie to blesse, and increase that he hath begunne, within few yeeres ye shall find but few, that will so lightly be deceiued, and follow you. In all Countries they flee from you, and forsake you. Yee can no longer hold them, but either by Ignorance, or by force, and Tyrannie. The people, whom it liketh you to call Dogs, and Swine, are neither so beastly, nor so vnsensible, and void of Reason, but that they are able now, to espy them, by whom they so often haue beene deceiued. They are able now to discerne the Truth, from Falshood; and the true Shepheard, from a stranger; and lament your pitifull case, that are so suddenly fallen backe, and welter so miserably in your error.

Whereas you in so earneſt sort, and with such protestation of friendship counsell mee to leaue Christ, and to follow you; as your counsell ioined with Truth, were very holesome, so standing with manifest Vntruth, it is full of danger; and the more vehement, the more dangerous. Certainly, Heretikes, and Infidels, to increase their factions, haue euermore vsed the like perswasions. But wee may heare no Counsell against the Counsell of God. Aristotle sometime said, Socrates is my friend, and so is Plato; but the friendship of Truth is best of all. We cannot beare witnesse against God; we cannot say, Good is Ill, and Ill is Good; Light is Darkenesse, and Darkenesse is Light.

Roman. 1. We cannot be ashamed of the Gospell of Christ: it is the mighty power of God vnto Saluation.

And, with whom then would ye haue vs to ioine? Examine the weight, and circumstance of your Counsell. Whom should wee flee? whom should wee follow? Leaue affection; leaue fauour of parts; and iudge vprightly. Would yee haue vs to ioine with them, that haue burnt the Word of God; and scornefully call it a Shipmans hose, and a Nose of Wax? That maintaine manifest, and knowen errors? That call Gods people Dogs, and Swine? That say, Ignorance is the Mother of true Deuotion? That force the people to open Idolatrie? That forbid Lawfull mariage; and licence Concubines, and Common Stewes? That haue deuised vnto themselues a strange Religion, without either Scriptures, or Ancient Councels, or Old Doctors, or Example of the Primitiue Church? That haue turned their backes to God? That haue deceiued the people? That haue made the house of God a Caue of Theeues? Whom so many Kingdomes, and Countries, and infinite thousands of Godly people haue forsaken? From whom the holy Ghost by expresse words hath commanded vs to depart? For so it is written; Come away

Apocal. 18. from her, O my people, that ye be not partakers of her sinnes: lest ye be also partakers of her plagues.

Would yee counsell vs, M. Harding, to forsake the Word of Life, and the company of all them, that haue giuen their Bodies, and Blood for the testimonie of Christ, and to ioine with these?

Yes ſay, We may haue the Example, and Company of one Staphylus, and Balduinus, and Wicelius, that haue done the like. Ye might also haue added the Example, and Company of Iudas the Traitor; of Iulianus the Renegate, and of others the like, of

2. Petr. 2. whom S. Peter saith, They are turned backe, to feed vpon their vomit, as shameleſſe Dogs: and to wallow againe in their mire, as filthy Swine. I will say nothing of you, M. Harding. Notwithstanding yee know, whose examples yee haue followed.

Tertullian

Tertullian saith thus: Christus ait, Fugite de Ciuitate in Ciuitatem. Sic enim quidem argumentabatur: sed & ipse fugitiuus: Christ said, Flee from Citie to Citie: So there is one that vsed to reason: but he himselfe was a Fugitiue. Tertullian. De Fuga in persequntione.

I consider well their doings, and stand in horror of their ends: Some such of your side haue died in miserable desperation, with terrible witnesse against themselues, that they had wrought against their owne Conscience: as it is faithfullie testified vnto the world. One of these three, as it is reported, and openlie published, by them that know him best, hath altered his whole Faith seuen times within the space of seuenteene yeeres: and therefore is well resembled to the Old Apostata Ecebolius. S. Peter saith, It had beene better for them, neuer to haue knowen the way of Righteousnesse, than hauing once receiued knowledge, afterward to turne away from the holy Commandement. It is an horrible thing, to fall into the Hands of the Liuing God. S. Paul saith: Whoso hath once receiued the light of God, and hath felt the sweetnesse of the Heauenly gift, and hath beene partaker of the Holy Ghost, and hath once tasted of the good Word of God, and afterward falleth away; It is not possible for such a one to be renued by repentance. I wish you in God, and vnfainedly, M. Harding, to beware heereby. These words, and Examples are marueilous horrible. 2. Petr. 2. Hebr. 10. Hebr. 6.

Although these, and such others can denie God, yet God cannot denie himselfe. What, saith S. Paul, if certaine of them be fallen away? Shal their infidelity make frustrate the Faith of God? God forbid. For God is True: and all men are liers. 2. Timoth. 2. Roman. 3.

Of your person, as I promised, I will say nothing. Gods workes be wonderfull. Hee calleth, whom he will: and whom he will, he maketh hard. He called Paul from his horse: Elizæus from the Plough: the Apostles from their Nets: and the Theefe on the Crosse, vpon the sudden. Roman. 9.

But if some simple one, or other of them, whom you so vnsourteouslie haue despised, should say thus vnto you: M. Harding, not long sithence ye taught vs the Gospell, euen in like sort and forme, in all respects, as it is taught vs now. Wee remember both your words, and also the maner, and courage of your vtterance. Yee told vs of the Paper walles, and painted Fires of Purgatorie: ye said, Rome was the sinke of Sodome: ye said, your Masse was a heape of Idolatrie, and the Mysterie of Iniquitie: ye wished your voice had beene equall with the great Bell of Oseney, that yee might ring, as yee then said, in the dull eares of the deafe Papists. No man was so vehement, and so earnest, as you. The whole Vniuersitie, and Citie of Oxford, the Crosse at Pauls, and other like places of great concourse can well record it. Ye bad vs then beleeue you vpon your credit: and we beleeued you. The Prince died: another was placed. Suddenlie yee had quite forgotten all that ye had taught vs before: and had as suddenlie learned other things, all contrarie to the former: which, ye told vs, ye neuer knew before: and yet, with one face, and one conscience, ye required vs earnestlie to beleeue you still, euen as wee had done before. As though your bare word were the rule of our Faith: and, whatsoeuer you should saie, true, or false, we simple people were bound of neeessitie to beleeue you. Howbeit, we thinke, if yee tell vs Truth now, then yee deceiued vs before; if ye told vs Truth before, then yee deceiue vs now. And thus it cannot bee denied, but this waie, or that waie, yee haue deceiued vs. And how may we know, whether you speake, as you thinke, or dissemble with vs now, as yee did before? Surelie S. Iames sheweth vs, That a man of double minde is euer vnconstant in all his waies. Iacob. 1.

We marueiled, how ye could attaine to all this Doctrine, specially in so short a time; but most of all, in such perfection. For, the Scriptures are large; and, as they say, the Councels are sundrie; the Doctors Volumes are long, and many. So suddenlie in seuen daies, to read them all, and so to read them, it was not possible. You may by your eloquence persuade vs manie things. But this one thing yee can neuer persuade vs. You wanted time; it is not credible; it was not possible. Therefore yee must needs say, ye were taught these things, euen as the Prophets were, by Reuelation. If anie of all your Old hearers would thus put you in remembrance, alas what answer could you make him?

But, it was not you M. Harding: it was the time. If the time had beene one, you had still continued one. But ye were forced to know, that ye knew not: and to thinke, that ye thought not: and so, to beleeue, that yee beleeued not. Howbeit, S. Hilarie saith, Quæ ex necessitate est, Fides non est: Forced Faith is no Faith.

Ye say, Whosoeuer shall attempt to answer your Booke, shall sweat in vaine. His labour shall be, as was the Commendation of Baldnesse, or of Ignorance, or of Folly: as a Florish, as a Smoke, as a Smother, and as, I know not what. The force of your Eloquence is so inuincible: No truth is able to withstand it. Such affiance yee would seeme to haue in the beautie of your Cause.

Heere, I beseech you, giue me leaue, once againe to put you in remembrance of the Contents, and Substance of your trauailes. Thinke you in sooth, M. Harding, or would ye haue vs to thinke, that your maimed Allegations, your vntrue Translations; your wrested Expositions; your Councels neuer holden; your Canons neuer, not made, nor seene; your Epistles neuer Written; your Amphilochius, your Abdias, your Clemens, your Leontius, your Hippolytus, and other like fabulous Pamphlets, and forgeries, so lately found out, so long lacked, and neuer missed; your Additions, your Diminutions, your Alterations, your Corruptions of the Doctours; your Contrarieties, and Contradictions against your selfe; your Surmises, your Ghesses, your Dreames, your Visions; your Elenchs, your Fallacies, your sillie Syllogismes, without either Mood, or Figure, or Sequell in Reason: and to conclude, your Vntruths, so plaine, so euident, so manifest, and so manie, can neuer be answered? Is Simple Truth become so weake? Or, is Error and Falshood growen so strong?

O M. Harding, you know right well the weakenesse of your side. No man seeth it better than your selfe. If you will dissemble, and say ye see it not, Open your eies; behold your owne Booke; and you shall see it. You haue forced the Old Doctors, and Ancient Fathers, to speake your minde, and not their owne. And therefore they are now your Children: they are no Fathers; they are now your Scholars; you haue set them to Schoole: they are no Doctors. You should haue brought some Truth for proofe of your purpose: The World will not now be led with Lies.

These be cases, not of Wit, but of Faith: not of Eloquence, but of Truth: not inuented, or deuised by vs, but from the Apostles, and Holie Fathers, and Founders of the Church, by long succession brought vnto vs. We are not the Deuisers thereof, but onelie the Keepers: not the Masters, but the Scholars. Touching the Substance of Religion, wee Beleeue that the Ancient, Catholike, Learned Fathers Beleeued: wee doe that they did; wee say that they said. And maruell not, in what side soeuer yee see them, if yee see vs ioine vnto the same. It is our great Comfort, that wee see their Faith and our Faith to agree in one. And wee pitie and lament your miserable case, that hauing of your selues erected a Doctrine, contrarie to all the Ancient Fathers, yet would thus assaie to colour the same, and to deceiue the people onelie with the names and titles of Ancient Fathers.

Cyprian. li. 1. epist. 3.

S. Cyprian saith, Lies can neuer deceiue vs long. It is Night, vntill the Day spring. But, when the day appeareth, and the Sunne is vp, both the Darknesse of the Night, and the Thefts and Robberies, that in the darknesse were committed, are faine to giue place. Now the Sunne is vp; your Smother is scattered. God with his Truth will haue the victorie. The Heauens, and the Earth shall perish; but the Word of God shall neuer perish.

O M. Harding, O fight no longer against God. It is hard to kicke against the spurre. To maintaine a fault knowen, it is a double fault. Vntruth cannot bee shielded, but by Vntruth. Error cannot be defended, but by Error. And the mouth that speaketh Vntruth, killeth the soule.

God

God direct our Hearts, that wee be not aſhamed of his Goſpell: but that wee may ſee it, and be ſeene to ſee it. God make vs the veſſels of his mercie: that wee may haue pitie of Sion, and build vp againe the broken walles of his Hieruſalem, to the Honor and Glorie of his Holie Name: Amen.

A VIEW OF A SEDITIOVS Bull ſent into England, from Pius Quintus Biſhop of Rome, 1569.

Taken by the reuerend Father in God, IOHN IEWEL, late Biſhop of SARISBVRIE.

Whereunto is added a ſhort Treatiſe of the holy Scriptures.

Both which he deliuered in diuers Sermons in his Cathedrall Church of Sariſbvrie, 1570.

TO THE GODLY READER.

THE preſent ſtate of theſe our daies, and the honourable and reuerent loue, that euery one of vs ſubiects oweth to ſo gracious a Prince, as God in mercy hath ſet ouer vs; hath cauſed this ſmall worke to be preſented vnto thee (gentle Reader.) For it carrieth in it ſelfe, and bringeth vnto thee a ripping vp, and an vnfolding of that ſeditious BVLL of Pius Quintus, that was ſet vp and publiſhed by FELTON, a rebellious traitour, in the twelfth yeere of her Maieſties raigne, to withdraw thee from the obedience and loue that thou oweſt to her Maieſtie, to her Lawes and godly proceedings, and to this Realme thy deare Countrie.

To which is alſo adioned another Treatiſe of the Holy Scriptures. Wherein is ſhewed thee the authority, and the profit, and the pleaſure, and the neceſſity of the word of God.

Both theſe, the reuerend Father in God, D. IEWEL late Biſhop of SARVM, deliuered to that Church and people, in the great care he had to doe his Maſters ſeruice, and to keepe the people committed to his charge, from incurring ſuch offenſe to God, or vndutifulneſſe to her Maieſty, or their owne euerlaſting damnation. His meaning heerein was good toward them: and no doubt but they reapt the comfortable fruit of his godly trauels. The like maiſt thou gather to thy ſelfe, by direction of the ſame his ſpeeches thus drawen into ſhort and compendious forme, if thou wilt read them with diligence and iudgement.

If thou learne to humble thy ſelfe before God, and to ſeeke wiſedome of him: if thou ſearch the Scriptures, and make them thy guides to lead thee thorow the deſert and wide ſea of this life, as thou art aduertiſed by the latter: thou ſhalt ſoone eſpie the danger of all ſuch practiſes towards diſloialty and rebellion, whereto the BVLL drieth thee, which is diſcloſed in the former. For it is not only ſaid by the Wiſe man, The feare of the Lord is the beginning of Wiſedome, but Prou. 1.
alſo ſet downe by the Prophet: They haue reiected the word of the Lord, and what wiſedome is in them? that is, therefore men become fooliſh, and doe ſuch things Ierem. 8.
as are vnmeet, becauſe they care not for the word of God: and therefore Dauid in his experience ſo confeſſeth, that by the commandements of God he was made Pſal. 119.
wiſer than his enemies, and had more vnderſtanding than all his teachers: becauſe the teſtimonies of the Lord were euer with him, and he did meditate them. If thou ſettle thy heart to like & do thoſe things which pleaſe God, if thou haue the loue of his word, he will teach thee the way wherin thou ſhouldeſt walke in obedience to him, and in duty to her Maieſtie our dread Soueraigne his ſeruant.

I truſt thou wilt take good inſtructions out of theſe two Treatiſes to thy duty and zeale to them both: and be thankfull to God for that learned Father, who hath left a light vnto thee, both in example, and by theſe and other his workes, whoſe ſteps if thou ſhalt follow, thou ſhalt liue godly, and die with comfort, as a good ſeruant of thy merciſull God and Father. The benefits of his great trauels taken in time of his life, are thine. And vnto the end he ceaſſed not to continue in the faith which he before profeſſed. For (as I, one of many yet liuing, can teſtifie) in the day and night before his departure out of this world, he expounded the Lords Praier, and gaue ſhort notes vpon the 71. Pſal. to ſuch as were by him. He thought good to ſay ſomewhat at that time, of his Bookes written by him, and ſet foorth in Print, and alſo of his Preaching. In both which ſeruices done by him to the glory of God, and thy comfort, he made proteſtation of his good conſcience, which euen then, as he declared, witneſſed and ſhould witneſſe with him before God, that he delt ſimply and plainly, hauing God only before his eies, and ſeeking the defenſe of the Goſpell of Chriſt, and that the truth thereof might be opened and maintained. And farther gaue thankes to God that made him his ſeruant in ſo great a worke; and then viſited him by this meſſenger of death, whiles hee was doing the meſſage of God, in viſiting his Dioceſſe: that then he called him to reſt from his labours, when his weake bodie was ſpent and worne out in ſetting foorth the glory of God, for which he many times praied, it would pleaſe God to let him be offered in ſacrifice.

Hee was at that time verie feruent in Praier: which hee powred out before the Lord abundantly, and in great faith, crying often: Lord let thy ſeruant now depart in peace. Lord let thy ſeruant now come to thee. I haue not ſo liued that I am aſhamed to liue: neither am I afraid to die, for we haue a gracious Lord. There is laid vp for me a crowne of righteouſneſſe. Chriſt is my righteouſneſſe. Thy will be done, ô Lord, for mine is fraile. With many other ſuch godly ſpeeches. In the extremitie of his diſeaſe he ſhewed great patience, and when his voice failed that he lay ſpeechleſſe, he lifted vp his hands and eies, in witneſſe of his conſent to thoſe praiers which were made. Thus being vertuouſly occupied, and wholly reſting himſelfe vpon the mercies of God through Ieſus Chriſt our Sauiour, he rendred vp his ſoule to God, the 23. of September 1571.

Be thou thankfull to God for giuing his Church ſo worthy an inſtrument of his glory: and be careful to follow the good doctrine, which he left behind him, not onely in this that commeth foorth at this preſent, but in all other his Bookes, which haue beene ſet foorth before, or ſhall bee put foorth heereafter to thy benefit, and increaſe of godlineſſe. 27. Ian. 1582.

Thine in the Lord,

IO. GARBRAND.

A VIEW OF A SEDITIOVS BVLL SENT INTO ENGLAND.

WHiles I opened vnto you the wordes of the Apoſtle, That day ſhall not come, except there come a departing firſt, and that man of ſinne be diſcloſed, euen the ſonne of perdition: which is an aduerſary, and is exalted aboue all that is called God, or that is worſhipped: ſo that he ſhall ſit as God in the Temple of God, and beare in hand that he is God: there came to my hands a Copy of a Bull lately ſent into this Realme by the Biſhop of Rome: I read it, and weighed it thorowly, and found it to be a mater of great blaſphemy againſt God, and a practiſe to worke much vnquietneſſe, ſedition, and treaſon againſt our bleſſed and proſperous gouernment: For it depoſeth the Queenes Maieſty (whom God long preſerue) from her royall ſeat, and teareth the Crowne from her head: it diſchargeth all vs her naturall Subiects from all due obedience: it armeth one ſide of vs againſt another: it emboldneth vs to burne, to ſpoile, to rob, to kill, and to cut one anothers throat: it is much like that box which Pandora ſent to Epimetheus full of hurtfull and vnholeſome euils. Are you deſirous to heare it? It greeueth me to diſcloſe, and your godly eares will hardly abide his vnſeemely ſpeeches. Yet ſeeing he hath written them, and hath conueied his Copies thereof to worke the miſchiefe he hath intended; I may the better rehearſe them vnto you, if withall your diſcretion prouide to ſeaſon them with the feare of God, and with due obedience vnto our dread Soueraigne, vſing theſe two as the holeſome meale of Elizeus to preſerue from infection in the eating of theſe wilde gourds: then ſhal you by this Bull eſpie out Antichriſt, euen that man of ſin, the ſonne of perdition, who is exalted aboue all that is called God, or that is worſhipped. The mater is long: Pope Pius hath beſtowed ſome paines in writing of falſhood; let vs take ſome paines to heare the truth. 2. Theſſ. 2.

But before I lay abroad to your ſight the packet of his groſſe vntruthes, and in the duty of a good Subiect make a true report of that eſtate wherein we liue, aſwell of Religion, as of ciuill policie, againſt the ſlanderous Libell of this man of ſinne; if otherwiſe than my wonted maner hath beene, any hard or ſharpe ſpeech paſſe from me: or if I ſpeake more particularly of perſons ſtanding, and matters well knowen vnto you, than may ſeeme fit for this place, I muſt deſire your pardon, ſeeing the occaſion is ſuch, that it driueth me to be plain & earneſt. For ſhe is the ſeruant of God: ſhe is my gratious Lady, and dread Soueraigne. I haue ſworne truth to her Maieſty. If I knew there were in mine heart, one drop of diſloyall blood towards her, I would take my knife and let it out.

This Title is: Sententia declaratoria contra Elizabeth &c. A Sentence denounced againſt Elizabeth our noble and renowmed Queene, whom God hath mercifully appointed to rule ouer vs in place of her noble Progenitours. A Sentence is the concluſion of Judgement, and the end of controuerſies, wherein many things are to be conſidered: that the Judge be competent, alſo graue, and ſober, and wiſe, and vpright: that he call the partie, and examin the cauſe, and weigh the circumſtances, & haue conference with the learned: that then vpon great aduice and due proofes (ſetting all affection aſide, and hauing God only before his keies, he open his mouth and pronounce Sentence. Now if the Iudge be a party, or haue no iurisdiction ouer them whom he iudgeth, and therfore be not a competent Iudge: if he send forth no proceſſe, keepe no order nor forme of iudgement: if the party be not called: if the matter be not duly examined: if the preſumption be falſe: if there be no proues: if he begin where he ſhould end, and declare a ſentence of his owne affection, without he feare of God, againſt God and againſt his anointed: then he is no Iudge, and his Sentence is no Sentence, but rather a wicked Iudge, and a corrupt Sentence. Theſe circumſtances are ſubſtantiall, and being well conſidered, will make you the better able to iudge of theſe raſh proceedings.

After this his angry Title, his Holineſſe hath thought good to ſhew vs ſome little of his prety imagery, and maketh Peter ſtand on the one ſide with Keies, and a poeſie: Tibi dabo claues regni Cœlorum: I will giue the Keies of the kingdome of Heauen to thee. And leſt you ſhould not yet find which is he, he is marked, Petrus Claniger: Peter the Key-bearer. Paul is placed on the left ſide, with his Sword: his marke is, Paulus Enſefer: Paul the Sword-bearer: and his circumſcription, Paulus Doctor Gentium, & vas electionis: Paul the Doctor of Gentiles, and elect veſſell: and betwæne them both the Popes armes, the triple Miter, the Croſſe Keies, and ſix Gunne ſtones: ſo he maketh the two Apoſtles ſupporters of his Armes, and ſetteth forth himſelfe vnder their name and credit. As if he ſhould ſay, I ſit here in the ſeat of Peter and Paul, euen as did the Phariſees ſometimes: Wee are the ſeed of Abraham, We are the children of the Prophets, We ſit in the chaire of Moſes. But the Apoſtle warneth vs: Such falſe Apoſtles are deceitfull workmen, and transforme themſelues into the Apoſtles of Chriſt: and no maruell, for Satan himſelfe transformed into an Angell of Light.

2. Cor. 11.

What right hath he to carry Peters Keies? Chryſoſtome ſaith: Clauis eſt ſcientia Scripturarum: The Key is the knowledge of the Scriptures: and Tertullian another ancient Writer ſaith: Clauis eſt expoſitio Legi.: The Key is the expoſition of the Law. Againe, what hath he to do with Pauls Sword? that Sword wherewith Paul fought, is the word of God, which is liuely and mighty in operation, and ſharper than any two edged Sword, and entreth thorow, euen to the diuiding a ſunder of the ſoule and the ſpirit, and of the ioints and the marrow, & is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Why bringeth he forth Paul with his naked Sword, and why maketh he ſhew of Peters Keies? In what Pulpit did he euer ſet foot? Where hath he opened the Scriptures of God? Where hath he taught the expoſition of the Law? Where did he euer fight with the Sword of the Spirit? The Sword which he vſeth is the Sword of ambition, and of couetouſneſſe, the Sword of Extortion, the Sword of cruelty and tyranny, wherewith he fighteth againſt all truth, and all equity, and all honeſty. It is the Sword of which the Prophet ſpeaketh: Their tongue is a ſharpe Sword: the Key which he beareth, is the Key of Errour: it is the Key of the bottomleſſe pit. Certainly Chriſt will ſay vnto this Key-keeper; Woe be to thee Scribe and Phariſee, hypocrite, becauſe thou ſhutteſt vp the kingdome of Heauen before men: for thou haſt taken away the key of knowledge, thou haſt not entred in thy ſelfe, and them that came in thou forbadeſt. Let him therefore leaue to deceiue the world any longer vnder the names, and by the countenance of the Apoſtles of Chriſt. S. Hierome ſaith: It is no eaſie matter to ſtand in the place of Peter and Paul, and to hold the Chaire of them now raigning with Chriſt. And againe he ſaith: Non ſunt filij ſanctorum qui tenent loca ſanctorum: They be not euermore the children of holy men, which ſit in the roomes of holy men. Peter was a principall Apoſtle: Paul was a veſſell choſen of God to beare his name before the Gentiles, and Kings, and the children of Iſrael. Did they ſend ſuch Buls into the World? Were they ſuch workers of Treaſon? did they diſquiet the Land by ſtirring vp ciuill wars? Verily theſe holy Apoſtles will reaſon this caſe with Pope Pius. What warrant haddeſt thou to vſe our names? Why doeſt thou make our Images, and ſet them before thy Bulles? What doeſt thou like vnto vs? or what did we like vnto that thou doeſt? Is this our Goſpell? Did we preach thus? Is this that for which we loſt our liues? Thou art not our ſucceſſour: thou doeſt vs wrong: we know thee not. We neuer diſcharged Subiects from their Oath of obedience: we did neuer ſtir vp one Prince againſt another: thou haſt no deed of ours for thine example, thou haſt no word of ours for thy doings: thou doeſt vs wrong, we diſclaime thee, we know thee not. Thus much of his Title and Armes.

Ad Heliodorum. Diſt. 40. ex Hier.

Pius Epiſcopus, ſeruus ſeruorum Dei, ad futuram rei memoriam: Pius Biſhop, the ſeruant of Gods ſeruants, to be kept in remembrance for euer. O how lowly and humble this man ſeemeth! Make words, when he is contented to be a ſeruant, yea a ſeruant vnto ſeruants. He hath made his Stile ſo low, that you would thinke he were put to the worſt and vileſt ſeruice among his fellowes, that he were the common drudge, maintained with caſt apparell, little accounted of, and ready to run and goe at euery bodies commandement. But what ſeruice doth he, either worldly, or heauenly, or bodily, or ghoſtly?

Let

Let Pope Pius tell his owne tale: he saith, Hunc vnum super omnes gentes, & super omnia regna principem constituit: Christ hath appointed him only to be the Prince ouer all Nations, and ouer all kingdomes. Marke his words well, and see how they hang together. He saith: I am a Seruant, and that is not all: I am the Seruant of Seruants, therefore I am no Prince: But as though he were sorry those words had escaped him, he mendeth the matter, I haue power ouer all nations, and ouer all kingdomes. Therefore I am no seruant. If he be a seruant, and so vile a seruant, how is he a Prince? or, if he be a Prince, and so mightie a Prince, how is he a seruant? What shift soeuer he vseth, néeds he must be taken. If he be true in the one, he is false in the other. It is well with him, that he cannot erre, and that his words must be taken as the word of God: that may iudge all men, but all the world may not iudge him: and that he may not (with M. Hardings liking) be accused by *Hicke, Hob, and Haunce, and iudged by Iacke and Gill. Were it not that hee hath giuen himselfe Priuiledge, thus to sit as God in the Temple of God, and to beare in hand that he is God: Were it not that his props and vpholders might to scorne and disdaine the iudgement of the whole world; it would be no hard matter to trip him in his tale, and take him in manifest vntruth. For, when this Seruant sitteth at Table, the Emperor may not sit with him: When he sitteth in Councell, the Emperor sitteth below at his feet: Princes and Kings doe him seruice: they hold his Stirop, lead his Bridle, carrie his Traine, and beare Dishes to his Table: he walketh not forth on foot, but is carried on mens shoulders, in gorgeous Attire, shining and glittering with Gold and pretious Stones. It is worthy the noting which Albertus Krantzius, who writeth the Historie of Germanie, reporteth of Pope Boniface the eight: Virumq; penes se vnum gladij potestatem manere affirmabat, quod ipso apparatu in eo quitum agebatur in vrbe iubilio solenniter fertur ostentasse, primo quidem solemni die in pontificalibus apparens populo, Apostolicam illis benedictionem impartitur: postero autem die imperiali habitu, insula nihilominus Cæsarea insignis, gladium ante se nudatum iussit deferri, & sedens alta voce testatur, Ecce duo gladij hic: Boniface did affirme, that the power of both Swords did remaine in him alone, which thing (they say) he did solemnlie declare in his Attire at the Iubilee, which was then kept in the Citie. For, the first day of that solemnitie, he shewed foorth himselfe before the people in Bishop-like Arraie, and gaue them Apostolike blessing. But the next day he was clothed in Robes like an Emperour, hauing the Imperiall Crowne vpon his head. He commanded a naked Sword to be carried before him, and as he sate spake out in a loud voice, Behold here are two Swords. Vides ô Petre (saith Krantzius) Successorem tuum, & tu salutifer Christe tuum cerne Vicarium. Vide quò ascendit superbia serui seruorum tuorum. Thou seest thy successor ô Peter: and thou ô Sauiour Christ looke vpon thy Vicar. Behold the pride of the seruant of thy Seruants, whither, and to what it is come.

Saxonic. lib. 8. cap. 36.

Ibidem.

No doubt, his Holinesse hath bestowed some studie about the matter, and therefore would faine it should be knowen, and neuer forgotten, but registred Ad futuram rei memoriam, to remaine and be remembred hereafter. Heare it therefore ye men and brethren, yée babes and children. You are the Sonnes of God, you are the children of the Holy Fathers. You shall sée that Babylon, which hath made drunken the Princes of the World with her golden Cup. You shall sée him that doth sit as God in the Temple of God, shewing himselfe that he is God. And that you may take the better view of him, I will lay open before you the manifest vntruths of his Libell, and so make you Iudges of his vniust sentence.

Reuel. 17. 2. Thess. 2.

First, it is vntrue, that he is the Seruant of Seruants, because he writeth himselfe in the same Sentence, Prince ouer all Nations and Kingdomes. Againe, it is vntrue, that he is Prince ouer all Nations and kingdomes, because he writeth himselfe Seruus Seruorum, a seruant vnto Seruants. That also which followeth is false: Regnans in excelsis vni soli Petro Sanctam Ecclesiam Catholicam & Apostolicam commisit gubernandam: He that ruleth the Heauens hath giuen to Peter alone the gouernment of the Holy, Catholike, and Apostolike Church. For where did Christ make this commission to Peter only? where be the words? in what Scripture? in what Gospell or Epistle? where did Christ euer say to Peter, I commit the gouernment of the Church to thée alone? if Pope Pius tale be true, why doth he not proue it? if it be false, how dare he write it? it is not méet the Vicar of Christ should falsifie the words of Christ. Christ spake to all the Apostles, and not to Peter alone, Goe to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel. Christ said to all the Apostles, and not to Peter alone, Goe and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost. Dauid the Prophet spake not of Peter alone, but of all the Apostles, Their sound is gone into the ends of the world. Wherefore doth he then enclose that to Peter alone, which is common vnto all the Apostles? Hee saith, Christ hath giuen charge ouer his Church to Peter alone. But Cyprian saith, Parem tribuit Apostolis omnibus authoritatem, hoc vtique erant cæteri Apostoli quod fuit Petrus, pari consortio præditi & honoris & potestatis. The Lord gaue vnto his Apostles like power, the rest of the Apostles were euen the same that Peter was was endued with like fellowſhip, both of honor and of power. And Hierome ſaith: Lib. 1. aduerſus Iouinianum. Æquo ſuper omnes Apoſtolos Eccleſiæ fortitudo ſolidatur: The ſtrength of the Church is founded equally vpon all the Apoſtles.

He addeth further: Petrique ſucceſſori Romano pontifici: And to the Biſhop of Rome Peters Succeſſor. This is another vntruth, and the cauſe of all his ſtir. This is it, wherefore Peter is ſet ſo far before his fellowes. The Pope maketh Peter a rocke, the other Apoſtle ſmal pæble ſtones to be built vpon him: Peter a ſhæpheard, the other Apoſtles ſhæpe: Peter a Schoolmaſter, the other Apoſtles his Scholars: Peter a Giant, the other Apoſtles little Babes. And all this he doth to enfeoffe the Pope with that fulneſſe of power whereunto he entitleth Peter. To proue whereof M. Harding ſaith, Now we are not bound to obey Peter and Paul, but him that ſitteth in their Chaire. This is their Doctrine, thus they teach: ſo boldly dare they ſet out their blaſphemies againſt God. 4. Vntruth.

The whole Church, (ſaith Pope Pius) is committed to the Pope alone, by the commandement and word of God. What Apoſtle or Euangeliſt euer wrote ſo? where did Chriſt at any time ſpeake of the Pope, or of Peters ſucceſſor, or of the Biſhop of Rome? What Ancient Councell, what old Doctor, what Father, Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Hierome, Chryſoſtome, Baſil, euer ſaid, that the whole Church was committed to the Pope alone? It is not fit the Pope ſhould draw his own Charter. If no Euangeliſt, nor Apoſtle: no ancient Doctor, nor old Councell, will come in and beare him witneſſe, it is not likely he hath giuen true euidence. Yet he ſaith moreouer: In plenitudine poteſtatis tradidit: Chriſt hath giuen this commiſſion in fulneſſe of power. This is a fift vntruth. 5. Vntruth.

It is wonderfull to ſee how much they make of this fulneſſe of power. Abbat Panormitane telleth vs, Plenitudo poteſtatis omnem ſuperat legem poſitinam, & ſufficit quòd in Papa ſit pro ratione voluntas: The fulneſſe of power paſſeth all poſitiue Law: and it is ſufficient in the Pope, that the will ſtand in ſtead of reaſon. Durand doth tell vs, All Biſhops are deriued from the Pope, as members from the head, and all they receiue of his fulneſſe. There was a Councell holden at Laterane in Rome, vnder Leo the tenth, where one Stephanus Patraſenſis gaue forth theſe words: In the Pope is all maner of power aboue all powers, as well in Heauen as in Earth. They tell vs, that whatſoeuer he doe, no man may preſume to ſay, Domine cur ita facis? Sir, why doe you ſo? To make an end of their tales, and vaine ambitions claime, another of his flatterers beareth the world in hand, Poteſt Papa quaſi omnia facere quæ Deus poteſt: The Pope in a maner may doe all things that God may doe. Nay, not ſo only ſaith another, Papa facit quicquid libet, etiam illicita, & eſt pluſquam Deus: The Pope doth whatſoeuer he liſteth, yea, although it be vnlawfull, and is more than God. They ſay, He maketh right wrong, and wrong to be right at his pleaſure. He may command Angels, Archangels, Cherubin and Seraphin. This is the fulneſſe of power whereof they dreame. Who would thus preſume, but that man of Sinne and child of Perdition? let them ſhew, where euer Peter had like fulneſſe of power. If he neuer had it, with what face can they require it? Cyprian told vs, Chriſt gaue like authoritie to all the Apoſtles. The authority of Peter was ſuch as the authority of Iohn and of Iames, and no otherwiſe. All the Apoſtles were the light of the world, all were Miniſters of Chriſt, and diſpoſers of the ſecrets of God, they all had the ſame authority and fulneſſe which Peter had.

Nos nullum laborem intermittimus, We take paines, we ſpare no trauell, we forſake no labor. 7. Vntruth.
Alas good man, I had thought he would haue ſaid, I was often in perils of waters, in perils among the Gentiles, in perils in the Sea, in wearineſſe and painfulneſſe, in watching often, in hunger and thirſt, in faſtings often, in colde and in nakednes. I had thought he would haue ſaid: From Ieruſalem: and round about to Illyricum, I haue cauſed to abound the Goſpell of Chriſt. I haue preached in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon. I haue done the worke of an Euangeliſt. I haue fought a good fight, and haue finiſhed my courſe. I made my ſelfe ſeruant to all men, that I might win the more. I am made all things to all men, that I might ſaue ſome: and this doe I for the Goſpels ſake. He keepeth himſelfe ſafe enough from theſe paines and trauels. Yet we muſt beleeue him, that he ſpareth no labor. He commeth not into the Pulpit, he preacheth not the Goſpell, he ſpareth that labor. He is a Shepheard, but feedeth not the Sheepe, and feedeth not the Lambes: he is a Steward, yet diſpoſeth not the Myſteries of God: this labor alſo he ſpareth. As for ſome other his trauels, we deny them not. He ſendeth his Inquiſitors, Eſpies, Agnos Dei, and Buls. He ſpreadeth rumors, ſtirreth ſedition, raiſeth ſubiects againſt their Princes, & forceth Princes to plague their Subiects. He hath conference with Traitors in England, with Traitors in Ireland, with Traitors in Germany, with Traitors in Heluetia, with Traitors in Denmarke, with Traitors in Poleland. He hath bin cauſe of all that ſpoile and waſte in the noble kingdome of France. He hath loſed and weakned the ſtate of all Chriſtendome: it was neuer ſo weake as it is at this day. And can we thinke all this could be brought to paſſe without paine and trauell? It may appeare he ſpareth no labour. And this doth he (For the Goſpels ſake? and That he may ſaue ſome?) No, but as did Caiaphas, to arraigne Chriſt, to crucifie the Lord of glorie, to cut all thoſe out of the Land of the liuing, that their name may bee no more in memorie, whoſe mouthes the Lord hath opened to publiſh the ſecret of the Goſpell, by whom the word of truth is come vnto all the world, and is fruitfull. Hee is childe to them that murdered the Prophets, and taketh all trauell and paines to fulfill the meaſure of his Fathers.

Sed impiorum numerus tantum potentia inualuit, vt nullus iam in orbe locus relictus ſit, quem illi peſſimis doctrinis corrumpere non tentarint: But, the number of the wicked hath increaſed ſo much, that there is now no place in the world, which they haue not ſought to infect with corrupt doctrine. Now at length it breaketh from them. Here is the matter of all their griefe. When the Scribes and Phariſies perceiued the paſſage and glorie of the Goſpell of Chriſt, and could not ſtay it, they ſaid among themſelues, Perceiue yee how yee preuaile nothing? Behold, the world goeth after him. And againe, What ſhall we do? If we let him thus alone, all men will beleeue in him. Our credit is gone, his Doctrine is receiued, and ours is forſaken. The Prieſts and Saduces tooke it greeuouſly that Peter and Iohn taught the people, and when they ſaw the boldneſſe of them, they conferred among themſelues, ſaying: What ſhall we do to theſe men? let vs threaten and charge them that they ſpeak henceforth to no man in this name. So they called them, and commanded them, that in no caſe they ſhould ſpeake or teach in the name of Ieſus. So did Annas the chiefe Prieſt, and Caiaphas, and Iohn, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high Prieſts, gather themſelues together, to reſiſt the truth then: ſo did the Phariſies then deuiſe, that the light of the glorious Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt might not ſhine, and be knowen to the world. And ſo doth Pope Pius now for the like cauſe, rage, and ſtorme, and ſpeake his pleaſure of vs. They are wicked (ſaith he) their number daily encreaſeth, their Doctrine ſpreadeth far and wide: it doth much harme, it hath preuailed in moſt places: they are a wicked rabble, their Doctrine is corrupt, it hath infected the world. Belike his Holineſſe is much diſquieted, elſe he would write more modeſtly, and make more aduiſed reports of ſuch with whom hee is not acquainted. A man would thinke hee hath to doe with Turkes and Infidels: with ſuch who neither beleeue in God, nor keepe his Lawes, nor dread his Iudgements: That he hath made out Commiſſion againſt Outlaries, who rob, and ſpoile, and murder, and deſtroy, without mercie: againſt ſuch, who haue no regard of honeſty, but being paſt ſhame, maintaine Stewes, and Harlots, euen as his Holineſſe liketh well, and ſuffereth to be done at Rome. But where are they, and who be they, whom he calleth wicked? what ſay they? what doe they wickedly? it is much, to bee accuſed and condemned of wickednes. This hee ſpeaketh and writeth of you and your children, whoſe eies the Lord hath opened to eſpie his errors. You are they whom he accounteth wicked, euen you and all ſuch who (like as you doe) know that Ieſus Chriſt is the power of God, and the wiſedom of God. 1. Cor. 1.

Galat.6. whereby we muſt be ſaued. And with Paul, God forbid that I ſhould reioice, but in the Croſſe of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

We read the Scriptures of God: we ſend the people to the fountaines, there we require them to examine our doctrine: we call vpon the name of the Lord who liueth for euer: we teach the people to make their prayers in a language they vnderſtand: we adminiſter the Sacraments according to Chriſts inſtitution: we ſay, that Chriſt is the only Sacrifice for the forgiuenelle of ſinnes, and, that God hath appointed him euer all things to be the head of the Church: we doe not make our prayers to dead Creatures: we ſeeke no helpe at their hands which neither heare vs, nor can helpe vs. We moue the people to repentance: we rebuke ſinne: we ſeeke reformation of life: we make it manifeſt, that the Pope hath ſhamefully abuſed the whole world: that the man of ſinne, euen the Sonne of perdition ſhall be deſtroied with the Sword of the Spirit: that euery Plant which our heauenly Father hath not planted, ſhall be rooted out, and that the word of the Lord ſhall continue for euer. This is our profeſſion, this is that doctrine which we receiue from God, and learne by the word of truth, which is able to make vs wiſe to ſaluation through the Faith which is in Chriſt Ieſus. This doctrine the Pope calleth wicked. This doctrine (he ſaith) hath done much hurt. Bleſſed be God: For the things that are acceptable to God are declared to vs. The things which eie hath not ſeene, neither eare hath heard, neither came it into mens heart, which God hath prepared for them that loue him, God hath reuealed them to vs by his Spirit. It hath pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſſe of preaching to ſaue them that beleeue. The number of them which are conuerted vnto God by this word, increaſeth, and will more and more increaſe in all places. It is not the counſell or worke of men, for then it would come to nought. But it is of God: the Pope cannot deſtroy it. Chriſt came to put fire on the Earth, it ſhall not be quenched. If we hold our peace, or if we all (whom the Pope thus reuileth) be taken out of the World, the ſtones ſhall cry out, and giue witneſſe to this Doctrine. For God is able of ſtones to raiſe vp children vnto Abraham. He is God alone, he will make his name to be knowne, he will not Giue his glory to another. This maketh vp eight Vntruths, plaine, and euident to be ſeene. Vnto which number he laieth fiue more, all together in one line, ſo that he maketh almoſt a ſeuerall falſhood for euery ſeuerall word.

Miſſæ Sacrificium, preces, ieiunia, ciborum delectum, cœlibatum aboleuit. She (Queene Elizabeth) hath cleane put away the Sacrifice of the Maſſe, Praiers, Faſtings, choice or difference of Meats, and ſingle Life. I beſeech you conſider this ſpeech, and iudge vprightly. You are able to diſcerne truth from falſhood. You haue knowledge of theſe things, be not deceiued. Haue we no Sacrifice? no Praiers? no Faſtings? no difference in Meats? are none vnmarried? be all theſe aboliſhed? I aſke you againe, be they all aboliſhed? when was this done? at whoſe ſute? by what Law, or Statute, or Proclamation, or Parliament? Indeed the Maſſe is aboliſhed through the gratious working of God. It was a worke of his great mercy to doe it away. For it was a dumbe, vncomfortable, and vnprofitable thing. They did tell vs that in their Maſſe they were able to make Chriſt the Sonne of God, and to offer him vnto God his Father for our ſinnes. Oh blaſphemous ſpeech, and moſt iniurious to the glorious worke of our redemption! Shall a vile wretch, a lump of earth, a ſinfull man take vpon him the power of God in Creation, and preſume to make his Creator? Shall he which is conceiued in ſinne, in whom there dwelleth no good, who is altogether vnprofitable, which neuer can recompence his own debt of ten thouſand Talents: who is a ſtranger to the couenant of promiſe, and hath no entrance vnto the Father, but through Ieſus Chriſt; make interceſſion to the Father, that for his ſake, he will looke vpon, and receiue his Sonne, euen becauſe he doth offer him for a Sacrifice? What is blaſphemy, if this be not? Such kind of Sacrifice we haue not.

Chriſt himſelfe is our high Prieſt, which offereth vs vp vnto God, which maketh vs a pure, a liuely, and a well pleaſing Sacrifice: by whom alſo we haue acceſſe through Faith vnto this grace wherein we ſtand, and reioice vnder the hope of the glory of God: by whom we are ſanctified, euen by the offering of the Body of Ieſus Chriſt once made: who take away our ſinnes, and faſtned them vpon the Croſſe. It is therefore the blood of Ieſus Chriſt, which cleanſeth vs from all ſinne. This is our Sacrifice, this is our Propitiation, this is the propitiation and Sacrifice for the whole world. Now then ſaith Pope Pius we haue no Sacrifice? It is the ninth vntruth.

9.Vntruth.

Againe, he ſaith we haue no Praiers. He thinketh we met together, like wilde men, or rather like brute beaſts. You know he ſpeaketh vntruly. Behold the Suffrages, the Pſalmes, the Leſſons taken out of the old and new Teſtament. Conſider the forme and order of our Churches. We make humble confeſſion of our ſinnes, we heare eſpeciall comfortable places of Scripture, which ſhew vs how mercifull God is, to them that truly and earneſtly repent. We giue thankes to God for his mercies and bleſſings which he powreth vpon vpon vs. We pray him to continue his goodnesse towards vs, and to lead vs into all truth. We pray for the Queenes Maiesty, for all that are in authority, for all the people, for those which suffer affliction, for all that either obstinately or ignorantly refuse the comfort of the Gospell. To be short, with one minde, and with one mouth, we praise God, euen the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ, and all the people say Amen. Why should Pope Pius report vntruthes? What meaneth he to say we haue no Praiers? Is it because we haue not his Latine Praiers? The people do not vnderstand them, they are like the chirping of Birds, and the tinckling of Cymbals. Thankes be to God for the Praiers which we haue, and grant that we may hold them vnto the end.

Againe, All Fasting is abolished. So the Scribes and Pharisees said vnto Christ: Why doe thy Disciples breake the Traditions of the Elders? They eat and drinke, they do not fast. Would God we were all more careful than we are of keeping the true fast. The fasting which the Lord hath chosen (saith the Prophet) is it, that a man should afflict his soule for a day, and to bow downe his head as a bull rush, and to lie downe in Sackcloth and ashes? Wilt thou call this Fasting, or an acceptable day to the Lord? Is not this the Fasting that I haue chosen, to loose the bands of wickednesse, to take off the heauy burdens, to let the oppressed goe free, that ye breake euery yoke? Is it not to deale thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poore that wandreth vnto thine house? When thou seest the naked that thou couer him, and hide not thy selfe from thine owne flesh? 11. Vntruth. Matth. 15. Luk. 5. Esai. 58.

In like sort the Apostle Paul, hauing occasion to speake of the true Fast, saith: Bodily exercise profiteth little: but godlinesse is profitable to all things. Whereby we learne, not to esteeme the workes of the body, such as are, watchings, abstaining from meats, often rehearsall of Praiers, and long Praiers, going barefoot, and lying on the ground, and such like (which the body suffereth) as an acceptable Fast: but we require the crucifying of the flesh, with the affections and the lusts, that in the daies of our Fast the Lord be honoured, in that no man doe his owne waies, nor seeke his owne will, nor speake a vaine word. 1. Tim. 4.

And herein we follow the iudgement of the holy Fathers. Chrysostome saith: Ibi est ieiunium, si pecuniam despecis, si ardeas charitate, si famelicos pascas, si gloriam contemnas: There thou doest fast, if thou despise money, if thou be feruent in loue, if thou feed the hungie, and if thou forsake glory. And Origen: Wilt thou that I yet shew what maner of Fast thou must keepe? fast from all sinne, eat none of the meat of malice, eat none of the delicates of pleasure, stir not vp lust with the wine of riotousnesse, fast from doing euill, abstaine from euill words, keep thy selfe from euill thoughts, touch not the stollen bread of corrupt doctrine, desire not the deceitfull meats of Philosophie, which will lead thee from the truth. Such a fast pleaseth God. But to abstain from meats which God hath created to be receiued with giuing thanks of them which beleeue and know his truth: and this to do after the example of them which haue crucified Christ, cannot be acceptable to God. And againe saith Chrysostome: What profit commeth of thy fasting, if thou eat nothing all the day long, and yet plaiest and triflest, yea oft times takest false oathes, and blasphemest, and so doest spend the day? I pray you let vs not neglect our owne saluation: but let our talke rather be of spirituall things, and let some one take the Booke of God in his hand, and call his neighbours together, and with godly speeches water the minde both of himselfe and the congregation: that so wee may escape the snares of the Diuell, and reape much fruit by our fasting, and be partakers of the mercy of God. Thus farre Chrysostome. Hom. 47. in 13. Matt. In Leuit. cap. 16. hom. 10. Hom. 6. in 1. Gen.

Now, what if some few be wanton, and neglect the holesome vse of Fasting? What if godly Preachers exhort the people to put away the abuse, & do teach them out of the word of God, and the ancient writings of holy Fathers, the true order & vse of Fasting? Should Pope Pius therefore vntruly charge her Maiesty, that she hath abolished Fasting daies? You know the Lawes stand in force, which are made for that purpose: and moreouer that common Praiers, and an order for publike Fast to be vsed in time of contagious sicknesse, and other troubles and vnquietnesse, haue been set forth by the Queenes Maiesties speciall commandement. You know the maner and forme of that generall Fast was, first, that it should be kept in euery weeke vpon the Wednesday: secondly, by all persons betweene fortene yeeres of age, and threescore (sicke folkes and labourers, &c. excepted) that it appointed but one only competent and moderate meale, that it leaueth it indifferent in the same meale to eat flesh or fish, so that the quantity be smal, and fit for sober and spare diet, without variety of meat, spices, confections, or wines, but only such as may serue for necessity, comelinesse, and health: and that men of wealth and ability, who by this order did abate the costlinesse of their fare, should increase their liberality towards the poore, with that which they spared: then, that the same day ought to be bestowed in Praiers, study, reading or hearing of the Scriptures, or good exhortations, and other godly exercises: but no part thereof to be spent in plaies, pastimes, or idlenesse, much lesse in leand, wicked or wanton behauiour. This Anno 5. Elizabeth. 20. August.

Fast

Fast was commanded, and set forth in print, this Fast we obserued, and taught the people, that they should answer before God, if in such godly exercises, they either should contemne publike order, or dissemble with God, pretending abstinence, & doing nothing lesse. Let Pope Pius shew what Law of this Realme hath forbidden, or what doctrine of ours hath condemned Fasting. We commend it, and shew the necessary vse thereof.

Coloss. 2. Againe: She hath abolished all choice of meats. I pray you where did God euer command the choice of meats? Paul saith: Let no man condemne you in meat and drinke. And to the Corinth. Meat maketh vs not acceptable to God. And Christ saith: That which goeth into the mouth defileth not a man. What if some eat flesh, whose weake stomacks cannot be nourished with fish? Doe they not kill and eat flesh in the City of Rome? Doth not Pope Pius for money sell licence to eat what a man listeth? The thing is not made holy, because hee selleth it, nor vnholy because it commeth freely. This might be sufficient for answer. But yet, because hee maketh himselfe so privy to our doings, and doth so precisely charge vs with his vaine accusations, let him consider, that we to whom he maketh this report, and sendeth ouer this tale, are English men, acquainted (better then he semeth to be) with the Lawes of our Country. What one Fish day is changed thorow the whole yere? What Lenten, Ember, Saturday, Friday, or other vsuall Fasting day? Our Law saith:

1. Cor. 8. Mat. 15.

Elizab. Anno quinto cap. 5. It shall not be lawfull to any person or persons within this Realme to eat any flesh vpon any daies now vsually obserued as Fish daies. Nay, besides those daies which our forefathers kept, we haue appointed that Wednesday in euery weke throwout the yere, be kept fish day, and that no maner of person shall eat any flesh on the same day. Whereby we haue made nigh fifty fish daies more, than haue bin obserued hereto fore by the Lawes and customs of this Realme. We cannot heare of the like increase of fasting daies procured by the Pope, and kept in the Countries of Spaine, France, Italy, or in his own City of Rome. It

Ibidem. may be he is angry, with the Prouiso in the said Statute: Because no maner of person shall misse-iudge of the intent of this Statute, limiting orders to eat fish, and forbeare the eating of flesh, but that the same is purposely intended and meant politikely, and not for any superstition to be maintained in the choice of meats; be it enacted, that whosoeuer shall by preaching, teaching, writing, or open speech, notifie that any eating of Fish, or forbearing of flesh, mentioned in this Statute, is of any necessity for the saluing of the Soule of man, or that it is the seruice of God, otherwise than as other politike Lawes are and be, that then such persons shall be punished as Spreaders of false newes are or ought to be. Why doth he lay it against

August. ad Casulan. her Maiesty, that shee hath abolished all difference of meats? We professe, as doth S. Augustine, In nostro ieiunio nihil melius est, quàm vt non manducans manducantem ne iudicet: In our Fasting there is nothing worthy better account than this, that he which eateth not, doth not condemne another which eateth. We warne the people in times of abstinence to liue in the obedience of such order, as the Law and Magistrates haue appointed, and that, whiles they forsake a common and necessary diet of flesh, they feed not their fantasie with such costly sorts of Fish, or such dainty banqueting and iunkets, whereby they should giue force to the lusts of the flesh in the day of their Fasting.

13. Vntruth. It followeth: She hath abolished single life in Priests and Ministers. Is it not lawfull for a Minister to be single? you are witnesses to the contrary, you know some vnmarried, and againe you know some that haue wiues, and are married. They which marry do well: God

Heb. 13. grant they do no worse which do not marry. The Apostle saith: Mariage is honourable among all, and the bed vndefiled: but Whoremongers and Adulterers God will iudge. All

2. Cor. 7. haue not the gift of Chastity, saue they to whom it is giuen: for euery man hath his proper gift, one after this maner, and another after that. The holy Patriarches, the Prophets, and

Lib. 3. ca. 30. Hieron. epist. ad Oceanum. Idem lib. 1. aduersus Iouinia. the Apostles of Christ, Peter, Paul, Iames, Philip, and others, had Wiues: they liued in Marriage. Eusebius reporteth out of Clemens Alexandrinus, that Peter when he saw his wife led away to execution, called her by her proper name, and said, O wife, remember the Lord. Hierome saith, if he should name seuerally all the married Bishops, they would be more in number than all the multitude of the Councell of Ariminum. And in another place: Quasi non hodie quoque plurimi Sacerdotes habeant Matrimonia: As though at this day many Priests had not their wiues. We heare of the Bishops in Æthiopia, that they are at this day married. It is not long sithence Priests were married heere in England, and in France, and in Germanie. Will these men be more holy than so many Bishops, and Saints, and Martyrs, and Patriarchs, and Prophets, and Apostles, which by their example haue approued, and commended vnto vs this diuine ordinance?

Let euery man consider the strength of his own vessell, for which he shall render account before God in that Consistory, where we shall be iudged, not by the lawes of Rome, but by the Lawes of God, our owne conscience accusing or excusing vs. Paul saith: If they cannot

1. Cor. 7. abstaine, let them marry: it is better to marry than to burne. The name of Virginity is commendable, dable, but euery thing is not as it sheweth. I protest before the liuing God, which is the Iudge of the quick and the dead, that no filthinesse vnder the Sun is comparable to forced Virginitie. I condemne not, but rather highly commend single life. No doubt there are many true Virgins, holy in body, and holy in spirit: but yet all are not Virgins which liue vnmaried, as Hierome seemeth to note: Eliguntur mariti in sacerdotium, non nego, &c. Such as are maried are chosen into the Priesthood, I denie not. For Virgins are not to be so much accounted of, as Priests. And againe: But why (say you) in giuing of Priestly orders is one, which is a Virgin, often times refused, and another which is maried admitted? It may be, because his doings are not agreeable to his Virginity, or because he is thought to be a Virgin, yet is not: or because his Virginity is infamous. So much saith Hierome, for reason why maried men were preferred to Orders of the Church before others which caried the shew of Virginity. Now to conclude this, we say, our Lawes (after the counsel of the Apostle, and finding so many examples in all ages of the godly which were maried, and the notable inconueniences which grew by forced chastity) haue giuen liberty, that those who haue not the gift of chastity, to auoid fornication, may mary. But no law made among vs, hath forbidden Virginity or single life. This is the thirteenth vntruth: & so haue you in these few words, the number which I spake of: euen fiue vntruths in little more than fiue words.

Lib. 1. aduers. Iouinian.

First, that we haue no Sacrifice. This is not true. For we haue the Sacrifice of the death and blood of Christ, a Sacrifice which lasteth for euer.

Againe, that we haue no Praiers. This is vntrue. For we cal vpon the name of the Lord. We glorifie God euen the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ. God grant all the Churches in Christendome may doe the like.

Againe, that we haue no Fasting. This is vntrue. Our Doctrine requireth fasting: our Lawes command it: we commend it.

Againe, They make no difference of Meats. This is vntrue. For we haue not put down one Fish day: and we haue appointed 50. more than our Forefathers kept.

Againe, Single life is abolished. This is vntrue. For a Minister may liue single, if he will, there is no Law to the contrary. God grant our liues may be single and simple, and pleasing him: else we are like painted graues, faire and holy without, but within full of stinking carrion.

Now let vs proceed. You haue heard 13. vntruths: and may we thinke, that he which hath vttered so much falshood, will stay there?

14. Vntruth.

Eadem occupato regno supremi Ecclesiæ capitis locum in omni Anglia, eiusq; præcipuam authoritatem atq; iurisdictionem monstrosè sibi vsurpans, regnum ipsum rursum in miserum exitium reuocauit: She (the Queenes Maiesty) inuaded the kingdome, and by vsurping monstrously the place of the supreme head of the Church in all England, and the chiefe authority and iurisdiction of the same, hath againe brought the said Realme into miserable destruction.

You must keepe reckoning: for here to the 13. vntruths, he giueth 3. others, more wicked & slanderous than the rest. Hath Queen Elizabeth inuaded the Realme? O vain man! Is it beseeming for Christ Vicar to speake so vntruly? What, sendeth he such tales vnto vs, who know the truth, & can reproue him? Did her Maiesty inuade this Realme? Came she by force and violence to her Crowne? No child so simple, but he may controle him herein. Was not Queen Mary her Sister? Was not King Edward her Brother? was not King Henry her naturall Father? and King Henry the 7. her Grandfather? Is she not the right inheritour of both the houses, Yorke & Lancaster? Hath she not both the Roses, that is, both the Titles to the Kingdome inclosed in one? Did not the whole body of the Counsell take their Oth to her 35. yeares ago? Was not the Crown due to her by inheritance and by succession, and by the Lawes of this Realme? Did not her Father warrant it to her by Will, as to his daughter? Did not Queene Mary by expresse words leaue it to her, as to her Sister? Did not the whole Nobilitie of the Realme confirme it? Did not Queene Maries Bishops knéele downe before her, and acknowledge her to bee their naturall and lawfull Queene? Did not you? Did not all the Commons of this Realme, willingly of your selues, make Bonefires, ring your Bels, and clap your hands for ioy? Did not the Children and little Babes crie out in your streets, God saue Queene Elizabeth?

How then dareth the Pope, a wilfull Frier, a wilfull and vnlearned Frier, how dareth he say, that Queene Elizabeth is no lawfull Queene, but did inuade this Realme with force and violence? O good and gracious Lady! what Host had she? what Captaine? what Souldiers? what weapon was worne? what Sword drawen? what Speare bent? what Banner displaied? what Trumpet sounded? She entred to her right peaceably, and hath raigned in great peace, saue that Pope Pius hath practised her trouble by certaine rebels & traitors. But God doth mercifully preserue her to the confusion of her enemies, to the comfort of her subiects, and the aduancement of his glory. Yong Men and Maidens, Old Men and children may see and say, Pope Pius is a forger, a reporter of vntruth, hath no regard what he saith or doth: that he is past all shame, and hath no feare of God.

15. Vntruth. Againe: Supremi capitis locum vsurpans: Taking vpon her the place of the Supreme head. This is vntrue. Here lay a chase. If the Pope go forward, he wil win the game. Where is she euer called the supreme head? Peruse the Acts of Parlament, the Records, the Rolles, and the Writs of Chancery or Exchequer, which passe in her Graces name: where is she euer called the supreme head of the Church? No, no, brethren, she refuseth it, she would not haue it, nor be so called. Why then doth Christs Vicar blaze and spread abroad so grosse vntruth? why should he say Queene Elizabeth maketh her selfe the head of the Church?

16. Vntruth. Nay yet more: Monstrosè præcipuam eius auctoritatem atq; iurisdictionem vsurpans: Taking vpon her monstrously the chiefe authority and iurisdiction of the same. Here I might well say: O monstrum hominis! O monster in the likenesse of man! He imagineth that her Maiesty preacheth in the pulpits, that she ministreth the Sacraments, that she sitteth in the Consistories & heareth all spirituall causes. Which if she do, she doth more than the Pope doth. It were monstrous to see the Pope in a Pulpit. And it is monstrous to see Antichrist sit in the Temple of God, to see a Bishop girded with both swords, to see a Priest take vpon him the rule of heauen and earth, the seruant of seruants aduanced aboue all the Princes of the world, & to set his foot vpon their necks: a wretched man to claime authority ouer the Angels of God, & a sinful creature to suffer himselfe to be called by the name of God. This is a misshapen wonder, & a monster in nature. Let the Pope therefore look vpon himself, & know what supreme authority & iurisdiction, and ouer whom he taketh it vpon him monstrously.

Queen Elizabeth doth not any thing monstrously. She preacheth not, she ministreth not the Sacraments, she doth neither excommunicate nor absolue from excommunication: she sitteth not to giue sentence in spirituall causes: she challengeth not the dispensation of the keies of the kingdom of heauen. She doth nothing but which she may lawfully do, nothing but whereunto the Lord God hath giuen her especiall warrant. Her Maiestie is supreme Gouernour ouer her Subiects. The Bishops within her Realm are Subiects to her. She gouerneth, they yeld obedience. When occasion is offered to dispose of any thing, specially appertaining to the seruice of God, or to iudge of any controuersie arising in spirituall causes; she commendeth and giueth to her learned Diuines, the due consideration thereof: All other pleas and sutes she causeth to be ended at home, and suffereth no appeales to flie to Rome. Which is done for the ease and quietnes, and wealth of her good subiects. For wherin grew more extremity against plain dealing, simple and honest poore men: whereby were they oftner shifted off, and put from the right of their sute, than by such appeales? when after they had bene haled thorow all the Courts of their owne Country, they were driuen to follow the matter 1500. miles at the Popes Court in Rome.

To be short, Queene Elizabeth doth, as did Moses, Iosua, Dauid, Salomon, Iosias, Iehosaphat, as Constantine, Valentinian, Gratian, Theodosius, Arcadius, Honorius, and other godly Emperours haue done. God hath giuen charge to her of both Tables. In the first she hath charge of Religion, in the other of Ciuill causes. By the Prophet Esay God promiseth to his Church, Kings shalbe thy Nursing Fathers, and Queens thy Nurses. And Dauid saith: Be wise therefore ye Kings, be learned ye Iudges of the earth, serue the Lord in feare. Upon which place, the learned Father Augustine saith: Quomodo ergo Reges seruiunt Domino in timore, nisi ea quæ contra iussa Domini fiunt, religiosa seueritate prohibendo atq; plectendo? aliter enim seruit quia homo est: aliter quia Rex est. Quia homo est, ei seruit viuendo fideliter: quia verò etiam Rex est, seruit ei leges iusta præcipiendo, & contraria prohibendo conuenienti rigore sanciendo, sicut seruiuit Ezechias, &c. How then doe Kings serue the Lord in feare, but in that they do forbid, & in a religious seuerity punish such things as are done against the Lords commandements? for he serueth after one maner as a man, and after another, as a Prince: as a man he serueth the Lord in liuing faithfullie: but in that he is also a King, he serueth him by making Lawes, which command the things that are right, and which with conuenient rigour forbid the contrarie, as Ezechias serued the Lord, when hee destroied the Woods and Temples of Idols, and those high places which were built against the commandements of God; as Iosias serued, doing also the like: as the King of Nineuie serued, gathering together all his City to appease the wrath of the Lord: as Darius serued, giuing authority to Daniel to breake the Idoll, and casting his enemies into the Lions: as Nabuchodonosor serued, of whom we spake before, who by a terrible Law forbad all within his kingdome to blaspheme God. In hoc ergo (saith he) seruiunt Domino Reges, quando ea faciunt ad seruiendum illi, quæ non possunt facere nisi Reges: Herein therefore doe Kings serue the Lord, when they doe those things to serue him, which none may doe but Kings. The Pope therefore writeth vnaduisedly. We know not any so monstrous and vnlawfull doing. It is her office, it is her dutie. I trust God will giue her grace to discharge the same to his glory.

Esay 49. Psalm. 2. Epist. 50. ad Bonifacium Comitem.

Regium

Regium Conſilium ex Anglica Nobilitate conflatum diremit: She hath remooued the Noble men of England from the Kings Counſell. The Poets had a fond deuice of their great God Iupiter, that he held a golden Chain in his hand, and tied to the end of it both the Land and Sea, and coaſts of the whole worlde, and ſo might toſſe and turne, and ſet them higher and lower at his pleaſure. Pope Pius beſtirreth himſelfe, as though he were in Iupiters place, and might by his Bulles and curſes ſet higher and lower, place and diſplace, appoint who ſhall, and againe who ſhall not be in Princes Counſels. Nothing may be done but by his ſufferance. Such a practiſe he hath to make himſelfe King of Kings, and the God of this World. For when he may rule the Counſell, he may rule the King: and being able to rule the King, he may rule the people thorowout the worlde. He ſaith, Queen Elizabeths Counſell is not to my liking. She hath put thoſe from the Counſell, which were of the Nobilitie of England. 17. Vntruth.

Thus he goeth on, and increaſeth his follie. He ſingeth by reports, and ſpeaketh he wotteth not what. Hath her Maieſty remoued all the Nobility? Who would thinke the Vicar of Chriſt would be ſo vaine? You which haue liued in countenance, and haue beene at the Court, and haue theſe many yeares knowen the ſtate of our Country, you know well that this is falſe. The Nobility are all in England, and in Court, and in Counſell, as before. I do not ſpeake of ſuch as became Traitours. You know what vnnaturall attempts were lately made. Their guilty conſcience did make ſome to flie. I ſpeake not of one in durance: I diſpute not his caſe. A Prince ought to be very carefull and iealous, for his preſeruation. It toucheth not himſelfe only, but the welfare of his people. Of theſe I ſpeake nothing. Yet when this Bull was ſtamped at Rome, all were at liberty. Marke the date, the fifth of the Calends of March in the yeare paſt: at which time they were all at liberty and of the Counſell, or at leaſt in good fauour. Since which time, what hath beene wrought by this Bull, I pray you conſider. Remember what enſued the Summer following. The coales were kindled here, but the bellowes which gaue the winde lay at Rome, and there ſate he which made the fire. At what time he wrote this Bul, ſhe had diſplaced none, neither Lord, Baron, nor Earle: nor touched them in their liues, bodies, goods or lands. Indeed Pope Paulus 4. caſt Moronus into priſon, and there kept him all the time of his papacie. Pius 4. toke Caraffa, a chiefe Cardinall, he caſt him into priſon, and in the midnight ſent a ſlaughterman to put him to death. Pope Vrbanus toke ſix Cardinals, and knit them in bagges, and threw them into the ſea. Her milde, gratious, and mercifull nature, hath neuer beene diſtained by any the like cruelty, neither haue any of her Noble men beene ſo by her diſhonoured. Anno Domini 1569.

Againe: Hominibus obſcuris compleuit: She hath made her Counſell of poore, darke beggarly fellowes, and hath placed them ouer the people. What hath Pope Pius to doe with the Counſell of Princes? May not a King chuſe a Counſellour, vnleſſe he allow of him? Men take their owne eies to chuſe their wiues, and Princes take their owne hearts to chuſe their Counſellours. As well he might ſay: No King ſhall haue any Secretary, any Iudge or Iuſtice, or Sergeant, or Atturney, or Solicitour, or man at Law: any Captaine for warres, any Guard to his perſon, any Phyſician to his Body, any Sewer or Caſter, but by his appointment. O what a charge this man taketh! 18. Vntruth.

He calleth her Honorable Counſellours darke, and obſcure and beggarly. What if they had beene ſuch? May not Princes haue any other Counſellours than Dukes and Earles? Cardinal Woolſey was able to do ſomething in this Realme in the late time of King Henry. Of what noble houſe came he? Of what noble houſe came B. Heth, Stephen Gardner, Iohn Bourne, and M. Boxall? Of what honorable parentage, of what noble blood came they? They were of the Counſell: yet who was their Father, Grandfather; what Duke, Earle, Lord, Baron, or Knight? I ſpeake not this in deſpight of their perſons, let no man ſo miſtake mee: ſome of them are yet aliue; I pray for them as for my ſelfe. God direct them to do thoſe things which may be for his glory. He is noble, which is the childe of God, which is borne from aboue: he is honourable, he is noble.

But what are they who are now in authority, whom Pius calleth ſo poore and beggarly? I will not name them. I cannot flatter: it were vnſeemely I ſhould. You know them, and are thankfull to God for them. There is none of them which hath not beene at the leaſt a Knight, or worthy of that degree, aboue theſe twenty yeares: ſo wiſe, learned, vertuous, and godly, ſo carefull of the Common weale as euer were bred vp in this Realme. They haue euer beene in credit, in the countenance and knowledge of the world.

As Pope Pius complaineth now of the Counſellors of England, ſo did the Wolfe ſometimes make complaint to the ſhepheard againſt his Dogs. Thou haſt two vile ill fauoured Curres, they iet vp and down, they barke and howle, and trouble thy flocke, which cannot be quiet nor fed for them. Remoue them away, tie them vp, braine them, hang them, what do they here? The Shepheard answereth; Would you so? nay, I may not spare my dogs, they do me good seruice. Spaniels and Greyhounds are faire and dainty, yet they neuer do me so much good: these watch when I slape, they ease me of much pain, and saue my flocke. If I should tie them vp, thou wouldest be bold with me, and take thy pleasure. I shall not need to applie this. The Queenes Maiestie is our shepheard: we are left by God to her safe keeping. The faithfull Counsellors are like the watchfull Mastiues, they take pains, they ease our Shepheard, they saue the flock. Now you may soon iudge who is the Wolfe. If Pope Pius could place his Pilot in our Ship, he would make vs arriue at what Port he liked.

Seeing Pius hath vpon ghesses or vain reports after this maner vnseemly dealt with the Peeres and Honorable estats of our Country: let vs looke somewhat abroad, and see what worthy wights the Pope hath placed in the Counsels of Kings. And so let vs be aduised by the harmes of our neighbors. Did he not place one Dauid Retchio so high in Scotland, that he toke vpon him to rule the Queene there, and sought all meanes to disgrace and disquiet the Nobles, and to vndoe that Country, and therfore was slain in the Queenes presence? Was not the Cardinall of Lorraine the highest Counsellour in France? Did not Cardinall Granuele beare the whole sway in Flanders? they were appointed by Pope Pius, they were endued with his spirit, they went from his side, they knew what hee would haue done. Haue not they spoiled and wasted those two noble Countries, and brought them to such villany and misery, as they neuer felt before? The King of Spaine suffereth Monkes and Friars to gouerne him and his Country. It is well knowen what good they haue done him. By these few you may see what Counsellours the Pope alloweth, and for what purpose. Yet that we may the better marke the order of their gouernment, and what good Cardinals worke in Princes Counsels, one telleth vs: Legati Romanorum Pontificum sic bacchantur in prouincijs, acsi ad flagellandam Ecclesiam Satan egressus sit à facie Domini: The Popes Legates keepe such reuels in Kingdomes and Countries, as if Satan were sent abroad from the face of the Lord to scourge the Church. He was wise, and did see what was done. If we open our eies and behold the storie and present course of their doings, we may finde the like. What Prince soeuer receiueth them, receiueth traitors and enemies to his estate. They alwaies breed suspicion, stirre vp dissension, increase hatred betweene Prince and Prince, and set them one against another, they seeke to aduance their Master the Pope, they spoile all Churches to furnish one, they be the very plagues and decay of Countries. Let not Pope Pius complaine of the Counsellours of England: no Prince in Christendome this day hath better. God grant them the spirit of vnderstanding and of counsell, God continue them in his feare, and direct them in his glory. If Pope Pius had but one so wise a Counsellour, he neuer would haue sent such Bulles and Babies about the World.

Cornel. Agrip. de Van. Sci. ca. 61. ex Camotense.

Againe: Hominibus hereticis complent. The Counsellours are not only poore and beggarly, but also Heretikes. The accusation of Heresie is heauie, and should not be laid vpon any, but after due proofe. Paul the Apostle was accused for Heresie: but he answered: After that way, which they call Heresie, worship I the God of my fathers, beleeuing all things which are written in the Law and the Prophets. The high Priests and Pharisees called our Sauiour, a Deceiuer. All the Christians of the Primitiue Church were called Heretikes. Misistis per omnem terram, qui circumirent & dicerent impiam haresim surrexisse Christianorum: You haue chosen (saith Iustine the Martyr) certaine men fit for that purpose, and haue sent them ouer the world, to goe about and say there is a wicked heresie of the Christians sprung vp. Euen so it liketh the Pope to speake of them which be in authoritie among vs, and calleth them Heretikes. God forbid his mouth should be a slander, and all bee Heretikes, whom he so calleth. Then as many, as reproue his errours, and refuse to fall down and worship him, shall be Heretikes. They spare not to say so: Qui Romanæ Ecclesiæ Priuilegium auferre conatur, hic proculdubio labitur in haresim: He doubtlesse falleth into heresie, which goeth about to take away the priuilege of the Church of Rome.

Act. 24.

Matth. 27.

Euseb. lib. 4. cap. 18.

Dist. 22. Omnes.

But Heresie is another matter. An Heretike is he which denieth the Articles of our Christian faith. We deny them not, no not any one Article. We hold the Creed of the Apostles, and of the Nicene Councell, and of Athanasius. We hold all the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament. We hold all the ancient Councels. We hold all the ancient Fathers, Augustine, Ambrose, Chrysostome, &c. We condemne all Heresies, which our Fathers condemned. This is our profession, and yet notwithstanding doth the Pope lightly and rashly giue sentence against vs of Heresie. But let him take heed lest whiles he calleth others Heretikes, and reckoneth not the causes wherefore, his Arrow which he hath shot vp, fall vpon his owne head, and he fall into the pit he hath digged for others.

Yet there remaineth one pretence more against her Maiesty: Ad quam velut ad asylum omnium infestissimi perfugium inuenerunt: Vnto whom all such as are the worst of the people resort ſort, and are by her receiued into ſafe protection. Is it not lawfull for the Quéne to receiue ſtrangers without the Popes warrant? This he ſpeaketh of the poore exiles of Flanders and France, and other Countries, who either loſt, or left behind them all that they had, goods, lands, and houſes: not for adultery, or theft, or treaſon, but for the profeſſion of the Goſpell. It pleaſed God here to call them on Land: the Quéne of her gratious pitie hath granted them harbor. Is it become ſo hainous a thing to ſhew mercy? God willed the children of Iſrael, to loue the ſtranger, becauſe they were ſtrangers in the Land of Ægypt. Deut.10. He that ſheweth mercy, ſhal find mercy. If God ſhall turne his hand, thou maiſt be in caſe of pouerty and baniſhment as well as they. I am not a Prophet, nor the ſon of a Prophet, but I doubt the time will come, when men ſhall looke for the Pope at Rome, and not finde him. His ſeat ſhall be remoued, he ſhall not be there. Then ſhall he know what it is to be a ſtranger. He which deuoureth, ſhall be deuoured.

But what is the number of ſuch, who haue come in vnto vs? Are they three or foure thouſand? Thanks be to God this Realme is able to receiue them if the number be greater. You may remember what other ſtrangers arriued within theſe parts not long ſithence: Theſe are few, they were many: Theſe are poore and miſerable, they were lofty and proud: Theſe are naked, they were armed: Theſe are ſpoiled by others, they came to ſpoile vs: Theſe are driuen from their Country, they came to driue vs from our Country: Theſe come to ſaue their liues, they came to haue our liues. The difference is great betwéen theſe ſtrangers. If we were content to beare them then, now let it not grieue vs to beare theſe: It is the commandement of God, that we loue the ſtranger: yet a Prince that doth it, ſhall abide the Popes controlement.

He himſelfe is good to them, and ſpareth the liberties of his City to ſome number, and of worſe condition. For (beſides thoſe which reſort thither out of England, Germanie, France, Spaine, &c.) he giueth harbour to 6000. Iewes, which liue by vſury, and pay him yéerely penſions. He alloweth in his City of Rome 20000. Courteghians or common women. This was the old reckoning. It may be, the number is now improued. All theſe liue by filthineſſe, and yéeld him therefore a penſion of 30000. Ducats.

If the Pope may maintaine ſo many thouſand adulterers, harlots, Iewes, and enemies of the Croſſe of Chriſt, why may not Quéen Elizabeth receiue a few afflicted members of Chriſt, which are compelled to carry his Croſſe? If it be no fault in him to receiue ſo many ſeruants of the Diuell, why may not Quéene Elizabeth receiue a few ſeruants of God? Whom when he thought good to bring ſafely by the dangers of the ſea, and to ſet in at our hauens, ſhould we cruelly haue driuen them back again, or drowne them, or hang them, or ſtarue them? Would the Vicar of Chriſt giue this counſell? or, if a King receiue ſuch, and giue them ſuccor, muſt he therfore be depriued? They are our brethren, they liue not idly. If they haue houſes of vs, they pay rent for them. They hold not our grounds, but by making due recompence. They beg not in our ſtréets, nor craue any thing at our hands, but to breath our aire, and to ſée our Sun. They labour truly, they liue ſparefully. They are good examples of vertue, trauell, faith and patience. The townes in which they abide are happie, for God doth follow them with his bleſſings.

Thus haue I opened nineteéne vntruths all packed in this Bull. If I would haue béene curious or quarrellous, I might haue gathered twice ſo many. But I haue no pleaſure to paſſe further in them. God and man, heauen and earth know they are vntrue. I may ſay to Pope Pius, Thou Son of man how long wilt thou blaſpheme the honour of God? Why haſt thou ſuch pleaſure in vanitie, and ſeekeſt after leaſing? What opinion hath he of our nation? Doth he thinke we are ſo ſimple to be led in a maſſe with ſo vaine fables? Doth he thinke we haue neither eies to ſée, nor hearts to iudge? Doth he thinke his bare word will goe for Goſpell? Would he write thus if he thought there were a God? If he deceiue vs in theſe earthly things which we ſée with our eies, no reaſon we credit him in heauenly things. Chriſt is the truth. It becommeth not his Vicar to ſpeake falſhood. Pſal.4.

Now let vs examine how he wreſteth and corrupteth the Scriptures of God, how he giueth vs a falſe interpretation, and corrupteth them. In this whole Bull he hath one onely place out of the Scripture, only one place, I ſay, & no more: and the ſame he ſetteth downe to maintaine his owne authoritie, and to vphold his power, whereby he ſetteth vp, and depoſeth the Kings and Princes, and States of the World. The words be the firſt Chapter of Ieremy: Behold this day haue I ſet thee ouer the nations and ouer the kingdoms to pluck vp, and to root out, and to deſtroy, and throw downe, to build and to plant. If he abuſe this place of Scripture, which he hath aduiſedly choſen, and ſent ouer, to make thereby ſome ſhew of his Diuelliſh practiſes, to worke rebellion and treaſons among vs: we may well thinke he dealeth the like with other places, when he draweth them to ſerue his turne. Ierem.1.

Hunc vnum ſuper omnes gentes principem conſtituit, qui euellat, deſtruat, &c. He hath appointed him onely (Peter and his Succeſſor the Biſhop of Rome) Prince ouer all nations, to pluck vp, and to deſtroy, to root out and throw downe, to build and plant. No doubt this commiſſion is large. There can be no greater authority giuen in matters of the world. But this Prouerb. 8. authority hath no man. God keepeth it to himſelfe. By me Kings raigne, and Princes decree iuſtice. They beare my name, they draw my ſword, they are my Miniſters to take vengeance on him that doth euill: their hearts are in my hands, I turne them whitherſoeuer it pleaſeth me: I take the praiers and ſupplications, and interceſſion for Kings, and for al that are in authority, that men may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godlineſſe and honeſty.

Daniel 4. Daniel telleth King Nabuchodonoſor, That the moſt High beareth rule ouer the kingdoms of men, and giueth it to whomſoeuer hee will. Wherefore doth he not giue this glory vnto God? Wherefore ſaith he, I will go vp and be like vnto the Higheſt: I will exalt my ſelfe, and ſhew my ſelfe that I am God? I haue (ſaith he) a deed of gift. The words ſet downe by the Prophet Hieremy, are my warrant to place and depoſe whom I will.

And he doth not only ſay thus, but as if it were too ſmall and baſe a title, to ſet the name of God, or of our Sauiour Chriſt, before the words of his priuilege, he keepeth his ſet from the ground, and raiſeth aloft, and ietteth in the aire aboue, as though he were one of Epheſ. 6. the ſpirituall wickednеſſes which are in the high places, and ſaith: Regnans in excelſis, cui data eſt omnis in cœlo & in terra poteſtas, &c. He that ruleth in the heights, to whom all power is giuen both in heauen and in earth, &c. Let him not deceiue you with vaine words. You ſhall witneſſe againſt him, that he taketh the name of the Lord his God in vain. For if any word in that peece of Scripture be ſpoken either of Prince, or remouing of Princes: if the whole ſenſe of thoſe words carry any greater authority to the Pope, than to the Biſhop of any other place, or to the ſimpleſt Miniſter in the world, let me be no more credited. Marke therefore, and ſee how boldly and fondly Pope Pius ſeeketh to mocke the world. Firſt he ſaith: Deus conſtituit me vnum Principem ſuper gentes: God hath appointed me alone, to be Prince ouer the nations. Heere is a ſhameleſſe falſifying of Gods words. The Prophet ſaith: I haue ſet thee ouer the nations. The Pope thruſteth in three words more, Me, Alone, and Prince, that ſo he, and none but he, may reuell and rule in all places. Read the place of the Prophet, if you haue your Bookes. The words are: I ſet thee ouer the nations. They ſay nothing, neither of the Pope, nor of Peters Succeſſour, nor of one alone, nor of Prince. All theſe the Pope hath peeced of his owne deuice.
Prouerb. 30. But Salomon warneth him: Put nothing to his words leſt he reproue thee, and thou be Reuel. 22. found a liar. Alſo S. Iohn telleth him: If any man ſhall adde vnto theſe things, God ſhall adde vnto him the plagues that are written in this Booke. Whoſe words, or what euidence, will he not corrupt, which dareth in ſuch preſumption to handle the word of God deceitfully, and without ſhame ſend it forth ſo into the world?

As for Hieremy the Prophet, vnto whom God ſpake the words, which the Pope ſendeth vs, will Pius ſay that he was a Prince, and had authority ouer nations and kingdomes? will he ſay that Hieremy depriued Princes, and thruſt them from their royal ſeats? Hieremie did no ſuch thing. But all contrary, he ſuffered perſecution, not only of the Princes,
Hier. 20. but of the wicked people. Paſhur ſmote him and put him in the ſtockes. He was in deriſion daily, euery one mocked him. He heard the railing of many, and feare came on him on euery ſide. All his familiars lay in wait for him, that ſo they might preuaile againſt him, and execute their vengeance vpon him. He moneth his caſe before God, ſaying: How is it that I came forth of the wombe to ſee labor and ſorrow, that my daies ſhould be conſumed with ſhame? And in the ſix and twentieth Chapter, all the people were gathered againſt Hieremie in the houſe of the Lord, then the Prieſts and the Prophets and al the people toke him
Hier. 26. and ſaid: Thou ſhalt die the death.

Was all this done vnto him by rebellion as againſt their Prince? was it becauſe he had vſed himſelfe proudly or cruelly in matters of temporall gouernment? was it not rather,
Hier. 19. & 20. becauſe he ſtood in the Court of the Lords houſe, where the Lord had ſent him to Prophe-Hier. 26. cie, and ſaid to all the people the words of the Lord of Hoſts? Was it not becauſe he prophecied in the name of the Lord?

Would Pope Pius be thus ſet ouer nations and kingdomes? would he be ſmitten and
Id. cap. 38. put into the ſtockes, and railed at? Would he haue his daies conſumed in ſhame? would he be let downe with cords into the dungeon where was no water, but mire, and ſo ſticke faſt in the mire? would he haue his friends mone his caſe to the King, and tell what euill hath beene done to him, in that they haue caſt him into the dungeon, and ſay, hee dieth for hunger in the place where he is? would he, I ſay, thus be ſet ouer nations and kingdoms? or will he ſay, that Hieremy ſuffering theſe reproches of the Rulers and the Prieſts and the people, did enioy an earthly peace, and poſſeſſe a worldly kingdome? or will he ſay, that God mocked his Prophet, when he ſaid vnto him, This day I ſet thee ouer nations?

The

The words therefore must néeds haue another meaning, and what that meaning is, who is better able to declare than Ieremy himselfe? The Lord stretched out his hand, and touched my mouth, and the Lord said vnto me, Behold, I haue put my words in thy mouth. I haue ordained thee to be a Prophet vnto the nations. Thou shalt goe to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoeuer I command thee, thou shalt speake. Be not afraid of their faces. For I this day haue made thee a defensed Citie and an iron pillar, and walles of brasse against the whole land, against the Kings of Iuda, and against the Princes thereof: against the Priests thereof, and against the people of the land. For they shall fight against thee, but shall not preuaile against thee. For I am with thee, saith the Lord. Such authority hath he ouer the nations: to be their Prophet, to speake what the Lord commanded, to reproue them without feare. Hierem. 1.

In like authority spake Elias to Achab: I haue not troubled Israel, but thou and thy fathers house, in that you haue forsaken the commandements of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim. In like authority spake Iohn the Baptist vnto Herod: It is not lawfull for thee to haue thy brothers wife. And the like authoritie did God giue vnto Moses: Behold I haue made thee Pharaohs God. Thou shalt speake all that I command thee. And thou shalt say vnto him, The Lord God of the Hebrewes hath sent me vnto thee. As Moses was set ouer Pharao King of Ægypt, and Elias ouer Achab King of Israel, and Iohn ouer King Herod, so was this Prophet set ouer the nations: not to remoue or pull them downe, but to rebuke their errours, and to direct their liues: to plant the truth, to ouerthrow the vanity of men, and to build the feare of the Lord. In all this we finde nothing for the Popes purpose. Mark. 6. Exod. 7.

But, if it were so, and that had béene the meaning of this place, what had that made for him? Was Hieremy his predecessor in the Bishoprieke of Rome? or is he the successor of Hieremy in Israel? was the Prophet called the head of the Church? had he, and did he exercise such iurisdiction ouer Kings and Princes, as the Pope hereby challengeth? if he neuer attempted any such things, how doth Pope Pius maintaine his proceedings by the example of Hieremy? or, if the words will carry no such meaning, why doth he so vainly allege them? One of their own Doctors saith: He speaketh not of the ouerthrowing of the Kingdoms of the world, but of the ouerthrowing of vices, and of the planting of faith and maners. And so Hierome writing vpon the same place: Omnis plantatio, quam non plantauerit pater cœlestis eradicabitur: & ædificatio, quæ super petram non habet fundamentum, sed extructa est in arena, sermone Dei suffoditur atq; destruitur: Euery plant which our Heauenly Father hath not planted, is rooted vp: and that building which is not founded on a Rocke, but is built vpon the Sand, is vndermined, and ouerthrowen with the word of God. Ioh. de Parisijs cap. 15. Hieron. in 1. Hierem.

Such power Hieremies hath God giuen vnto the world who haue ouerthrown and pulled vp the vanities and follies which were growen to a great height in the Church of God. They haue planted faith and maners. They haue opened and preached the truth. The Lord hath prospered their labors, as we sée this day: he hath rooted out those strange plants, and thrown downe the weake foundations with the breath of his mouth. This is the plucking vp, the rooting out, the destroying, and throwing downe: this is the building and planting whereof the Prophet speaketh: as we haue heard it proued by the Prophet himselfe, by the interpretation of Hierome a learned Father, who maketh good this saying with two seuerall places written in the New Testament, and by the confession of their owne Doctor Iohan. de Parisijs, and might be further proued by sundry others.

Yet all this notwithstanding, it must be taken in the sense wherein Pius vseth it, or else some of his predecessors Popes of Rome might likewise be worthily blamed for their doings. Pope Adrian wrote somewhat roundly to the Emperor Fredericke: Imperator quod habet, totum habet à nobis. Sicut Zacharias transtulit imperium à Græcis ad Teutonicos: ita nos possumus illud transferre ab Alemannis ad Græcos. Ecce in potestate nostra est, vt demus illud cui volumus. Progressi constituti sumus à Deo super gentes & regna, vt destruamus, & euellamus, ædificemus, & plantemus: Whatsoeuer the Emperor hath, he hath it of vs. As Pope Zacharie translated the Empire from the Greekes vnto the Germans, so may wee againe translate the same from the Germans to the Greekes. Behold it is in our power to bestow the Empire vpon whom we list. Therefore we are appointed by God ouer nations, and kingdomes, to pull down, to root vp, to build and to plant againe. No mouth would vtter these blasphemies but the mouth of Antichrist. Auentinus in Adriano 4. an. 1154. Hier. 1.

Thus haue we tried the Pope to be a corrupter, and a falsifier of the Scriptures. He putteth in three words, Me, Alone, Prince. He applieth the place to himselfe, and among all other to himselfe alone, and so setteth himselfe aboue Princes. He changeth the rooting out of error, to the ouerthrowing of Princes: and the preaching of the truth, to the deposing of Kings. He forgeth a sense which the spirit of God, and the Prophet Ieremy neuer meant. He saith, Thus saith the Lord, when the Lord neuer spake it. He knew them well, which said ſaid, They wreſt the Scriptures to maintaine their power. This thou ſeeſt O God, and ſuffereſt. He calleth himſelfe the Vicar of thy Chriſt, he abuſeth thy moſt holy word, he deceiueth thy people, he maketh thee to be a falſe witneſſe to his folly; and all this doth he to countenance his ambition and pride.

Now vpon warrant of theſe words ſo fondly applied, he addreſſeth himſelfe ſolemnly to pronounce ſentence: Declaramus prædictam Elizabetheiq; adhærentes in prædictis anathematis ſententiam incurriſſe: We make it knowen, that Elizabeth aforeſaid, and as many as ſtand on her ſide in the matters aboue named, haue run into the danger of our curſe. This is a terrible thunderbolt ſhot in among vs from Rome, in Paper. Theſe clouds are without rain: Theſe Guns will doe no harme. Euen ſo did the Phariſies caſt Chriſt Jeſus out of their Synagogues, and excommunicate him, and accurſe him. So did Diotrephes excommunicate Iohn the Euangeliſt, and did neither himſelfe receiue the brethren, but forbade them that would, and did thruſt them out of the Church. So was Hilary accurſed and excommunicated by the Arians. He laieth his curſe not only vpon the Lords Anointed our bleſſed Queen, but vpon all that follow her godly proceedings, that is, vpon euery one of you, and vpon all other her Maieſties true ſubiects. He knoweth you not, and yet accurſeth you. You are children of God, yet he maketh you the children of the Diuell. The Lord hath ſhewed the light of his countenance vpon you, and hath giuen you his heauenly word, whereby you haue gotten vnderſtanding, and are made wiſer than your enemies, and are taught to refraine your feet from euery euill way, and therefore the Pope crieth out againſt you, and doth reckon you accurſed. But his own words tell vs: Neminem ligare debet iniqua ſententia: A wrongfull ſentence bindeth no man. The curſe ſhall come into his owne boſome. For the Lord our God turneth the curſe vnto a bleſſing to vs, becauſe the Lord our God loueth vs. And, He will ſend a curſe vpon them, and will curſe their bleſſings: yea, he hath curſed them already, becauſe they doe not conſider in their hearts, nor giue glory vnto his name. He hath alſo made them to be deſpiſed and vile before all the people, becauſe they haue not kept his waies.

Epiſt. 3. Ioh. 11. Q. 3. Deut. 23. Malac. 2.

In this caſe Chriſt ſaith: Reioice and be glad. For ſo perſecuted they the Prophets which were before you. Origen ſheweth how all that be like minded vnto Pharao cry out that men are ſeduced, and led out of their way, if Moſes and Aron, that is, if the ſpeech of the Preachers call vpon them to be diligent in the Law of God, and to follow his word. And Chryſoſtome telleth vs, this is no new thing. Ne admiremur quòd ſpiritualibus inſtantes multa patiamur aduerſa, &c. Let vs not maruell, if we abide many aduerſities, becauſe wee follow after and deſire thoſe things which are ſpirituall. For, as the theefe diggeth not, nor laieth his wait at the place, where ſtraw, and chaffe, and feathers are laid, but there, where is gold and ſiluer: ſo is the Diuell moſt out of quiet, with thoſe which take in hand ſpirituall buſineſſe. Theſe things (ſaith our Sauiour) haue I ſaid vnto you, that ye ſhould not be offended. They ſhall excommunicate you: yea the time ſhall come, that whoſoeuer killeth you will thinke that he doth God ſeruice. And theſe things will they doe vnto you becauſe they haue not knowen the Father, nor me.

Origen. hom. 3. in Exod. Chryſoſt. Hom. 1. ad popul. Antiochen. Iohn. 16.

But what are the effects and force? what ſucceſſe take the Popes bleſſings and his curſes? He ſtirred vp the King of France, to plague his ſubiects, and to that purpoſe he bleſſed him and his followers: they and their Country were brought to great miſery. He bleſſed Philip King of Spaine: he hath beene wonderfully troubled by the Moores at home, and liueth in continuall turmoile with his ſubiects in other his dominions abroad. He bleſſed the States of Venice: they are ſtill diſquieted by the Turke. On the other ſide, he hath accurſed England: thankes be to God it was neuer better in worldly peace, in health of body, in abundance of corne and victuals. He hath accurſed the Princes and States of Germanie: they were neuer ſtronger. He bleſſeth his owne ſide: but it decaieth, and withereth. He curſeth the Goſpell, but it preuaileth and proſpereth. The more he curſeth, the more it proſpereth. This is the Lords doing, and it is maruellous in our eies. So doth God turne the Popes curſe into a bleſſing vnto vs. And ſo we may well ſay with Seneca: Cœleſtis ira quos premit miſeros facit; humana nullos. The anger of God maketh thoſe men miſerable vpon whom it lighteth: but ſo doth not the wrath of man.

Seneca in Hercule Oeto.

Quinetiam ipſam pretenſo regni prædicti iure, necnon omni & quecunque dominio, dignitate, priuilegioque priuatam: We alſo make it knowen, that we haue depriued her from that right ſhe pretended to haue in the Kingdome aforeſaid, and alſo from all and euery her authority, dignity, and priuilege. This is the other part of the Popes ſentence. In this his vaine fantaſie, and by this childiſh mockery he thinketh to depoſe Queene Elizabeth from her kingdome. O vaine man! As though the coaſts and ends of the world were in his hands, or as if no Prince in the world might rule without his ſufferance.

So haue the proud Prelates of that See, theſe many yeeres troubled the States of all Chriſtendome, Christendome, and therby bene cause of much slaughter and shedding innocent blood. And so at this present he seeketh to disquiet Elizabeth: Elizabeth, I say, our soueraign and most gratious Lady, a Virgin full of wisdome, vertue, grace and compassion: she is vnto vs as a comfortable water in a dry place, as a refuge for the tempest, and as the shadow of a great rocke in a weary land.

The greatest blessing which God giueth to any people, is a godly Prince to rule ouer them. The greatest misery that can fall vpon a people is to haue a godly Prince taken from them. For by a godly Prince he doth so rule the people as if God himselfe were with them in visible appearance. The Prince walketh in the waies of the Lord: the Nobles follow the steps of the Prince: and the people fashion themselues to the example of the Nobles. The face of a godly Prince shineth as the Sunne beames, and bringeth ioy and comfort to his subiects.

When the Lord was displeased with the people of Israel, he toke Samuel from them, and gaue them Saul to be their King. Saul did wickedly, without Iustice, without Mercy. He deuoured the people like a Lion, he ouerthrew the Tabernacle, and slew the Priests. Then was there no Reuelation: None that did Prophecie, or care for the name of the Lord.

But when God toke mercy vpon the people, he gaue vnto them Dauid, a man after his owne heart. He deliuered him from danger, and toke him out of the Lions Mouth. He crowned him, and did set a Crowne of pure gold vpon his head. Dauid loued the people, he taught them the waies of God, he put down Idolatry, and destroied the Groues, he set vp a Tabernacle to the God of Iacob. Vnder him the people had great prosperity in their houses, and abroad, in their Vines, in their Corne, and in their Cattell, in time of Peace, and in time of Warre.

When it pleased God to send a blessing vpon vs, he gaue vs his seruant Elizabeth to be our Queene, and to be the instrument of his glory in the sight of all the world. Who is so blind which seeth not? who is so vnthankfull that remembreth not what things God hath wrought by her? who seeth not the glorious beames of the truth? who seeth not the wonderfull peace in which we haue liued? who seeth not the wise and safe guiding of the people? One of those alone were a great blessing, but all together are such a blessing, as our Fathers before vs neuer enioied so happily.

As touching religion, let vs thinke of that time of ignorance, wherein we were before. How miserable a case was it to see such deadly dumbnesse in the Church of God? to see the people led away in the darke, they knew not whither? to see the word of life taken away? to see the people fed with fables? to see an Idoll set vp in the place of God? to see Iesus Christ our Sauiour put to silence? In this case were we. This we did see, we did feele this. Out of this deadly dungeon God deliuered vs by the hand of our Queen. By her he restored the truth: by her he sent vs the light of his holy word: by her he hath releaued the hearts of the people. God himselfe hath bene the worker hereof. Elizabeth hath bene his instrument, and the meane by whom he hath done this worke.

And marke the time when she attempted this. Euen at the first entry into her kingdome: at which time the King of Spaine, the King of France, the Queene of Scots, and many of the Nobles and the Bishops of this Realme were against it. She had learned, First to seeke the kingdome of God: she had learned to seeke his glory, and not her owne: she had learned to say as Dauid said, I wil not suffer mine eies to sleepe, nor mine eie lids to slumber, vntill I find out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Iacob. She had learned to say, If God be on our side, who can be against vs? So was her gratious heart consumed with the zeale of Gods house. O who can conceiue the ioy and comfort of the people! It was so great, as no man can declare. They held vp their hands to God, they had not words to giue him, they could not speake for ioy. They reioiced as a Bird doth at the day spring: as Ionas reioiced when he came out of the Whales belly: as Daniel reioiced when he was brought safe out of the Lions den: as the children of Israel reioiced when they came out of Ægypt: as the three children reioiced when they came forth of the burning furnace: so did we reioice and said: This is the day which the Lord hath made, let vs reioice and be glad in it.

Rom. 8.

I need not speake of the continuall peace, which God hath giuen vs al the tims of her gouernment. He that knoweth not the price of peace, and how to esteeme it, let him behold the kingdomes which border next vpon vs, how pitifully they be afflicted. Let him behold Spaine, France, Denmarke, Flanders, and Scotland: and consider what they haue suffered these few yeres past: what houses haue bene ouerthrowen, what Cities haue bene burnt, what blood hath bene shed? how many women haue lost their husbands? how many mothers haue lost their children? and how many children haue bene made fatherlesse?

But

But God, euen our God, gaue vs Quéene Elizabeth: and with her gaue vs Peace, and so long a Peace as England hath seldome seene before.

What should I speake of her wisdome in gouernment? Let vs loke vpon the state as it was before: What hunger was in this land? many of our brethren died for lacke of food. What cruell executions were then in London? there were few streets where was not set vp a gallows or a gibbet. In Oxford two and fifty were executed at one Sessions. What diseases fell vpon vs? the graueſt, and wiſeſt, and richeſt men were taken away. Calais was loſt. A ſtranger and forraine people had the rule ouer vs. All things went againſt vs, becauſe God was not with vs.

But God reſtored by his ſeruant our Quéene thoſe ioies againe, which we lacked. He hath giuen vs ciuill peace among our ſelues, and peace with forraine nations. He hath giuen vs health of body, and ſtore of victuals: diſcharge of debts, and auoiding of ſtrangers: he hath giuen vs mercy in iuſtice, abandoning all cruelty. We are now with God, and all things goe well with vs.

They talke much of an vnbloody Sacrifice. It is not theirs to offer it. Quéen Elizabeth ſhall offer it vp vnto God: euen her vnbloody hands, and vnbloody ſword, an vnbloody people, and an vnbloody gouernment. This is an vnbloody Sacrifice. This Sacrifice is acceptable vnto God. I ſay not, that it is not lawfull for her to put to death. God ſaith: Thine eie Deut. 13. ſhall not pity the wicked, nor ſhew mercy: but thou ſhalt kill him: that all Iſrael may heare and feare, and do no more any ſuch wickednesſe as this, among you. She muſt doe it: if ſhe would not, yet her lawes would ſee offenders puniſhed. But I ſpeake it to ſhew the gratious goodneſſe of her mercifull nature.

Oh how gratiouſly did her Maieſty commend vs her ſubiects, to the carefull and wiſe gouernment of her Counſell, and Iudges, when ſhe ſpake thus vnto them! Haue care ouer my people. You haue my place: Doe you that which I ought to doe. They are my people. Euery man oppreſſeth them, and ſpoileth them without mercy. They cannot reuenge their quarrell, nor helpe themſelues. See vnto them, ſee vnto them, for they are my charge. I charge you, euen as God hath charged me. I care not for my ſelfe, my life is not deare to me, my care is for my people. I pray God whoſoeuer ſucced mee, be as carefull as I am. They which might know what cares I beare, would not thinke I tooke any greatioy in wearing the Crowne.

Theſe eares heard when her Maieſty ſpake ſuch words. I truſt they will worke ſuch affection in your hearts, which heare them reported, as they did in mee when I heard them ſpoken. She loueth her Subiects, and they reuerence her: ſhe is carefull for them, and they are true to her. God continue his bleſſing towards her, and ouerſhadow her with his mercifull hand. For ſhe is the comfort and Diamond of all Chriſtendome. This is ſhe againſt whom Pope Pius rageth and ſtormeth, and hath ſent his curſe, and ſentence of deprination againſt her. If he had been acquainted with our happy eſtate vnder her, he might with better grace haue ſaid to her: Becauſe thy God loueth England, to eſtabliſh it for euer, therfore hath he made thee Queen ouer them to execute iudgement and iuſtice. He might with more
Num. 23. and better aduiſement haue ſaid, How ſhall I curſe where the Lord hath not curſed? or how ſhall I deteſt where the Lord hath not deteſted? He is not ſo wiſe as Balaam, which would not for a houſe full of gold, paſſe the commandement of the Lord, to doe either good or bad of his owne minde.

Præcipimus & interdicimus vniuerſis, & ſingulis proceribus, ſubditis, & populis, & aliis prædictis: neilli eiuſue monitis, mandatis, & legibus, audeant obedire: quiſecus egerint, eos ſimili anathematis ſententia innodamus: We charge and forbid all and euery the Nobles and Subiects, and people, and others aforeſaid, that they bee not ſo hardy as to obey her, or her will, or commandements, vpon paine of like accurſe vpon them. Would you take this man to be the Vicar of Chriſt? He ſeemeth rather to be ſome Maiſter of miſrule, which ſo diſchargeth all maner of Subiects from all maner obedience. For, what order will he leaue vs, when we may not doe thoſe things which we doe vnder her obedience, by charge of her will, or commandements or lawes? His words ſpeake very broad. I command vnder paine of damnation, that no ſeruant obey his Maiſter, no wife obey her husband, no childe obey his Parents, and that no ſubiect obey his Prince. I command and forbid, that you dare not obey her, &c.

But what if you ſhew him of our lawes which Quéene Elizabeth hath made and eſtabliſhed againſt Burglary and robbing by the high way, and any other kind of theft: againſt murder, adultery, and all filthineſſe (as keeping of Concubines and Courteghians) (like to the vſe of his City at Rome?) Keepe them not, ſaith the Pope, vnder pain of my curſe. Again, ſir, by her lawes we are required to reſort to our ſeuerall Churches, there to heare the word of God, to giue thanks vnto him, and to poure out our praiers before him, &c. He yet saith, Obey them not. What shall we doe then for lawes of common peace, and of holding our possessions, and goods to our priuate vse, and so maintaining the good estate of our neighbors? For paying our rents to Land-lords, and custome, and tribute, where tribute and custome are due? Let not any obey these lawes, saith the Pope. Let no man dare obey her, or her will, or commandements, or lawes. Esteeme not her law, as a law; take not her to be your Queene.

Is not this fatherly Counsell? Are they not happy which follow it? What godly creature euer gaue the like? What Patriarch, or Prophet, or Euangelist, or Apostle euer sent the like commissions into the world? Pius will be called the Vicar of Christ. Did Christ euer set vp himselfe against the Prince, did he so teach his Disciples, was it any part of that doctrine he hath left vs?

Pius telleth vs, he is Successor to Peter and Paul, that he is inuested in their authority, and enthronized in their chaire. Let vs conferre the doctrine of Peter and Paul, with that which is written by their Successor. Pius saith of our Soueraigne: Let no man be subiect to her, or obey her. But Peter saith: Submit your selues to all maner ordinance of man for the Lords sake, whether it be vnto the King, as vnto the Superior: or vnto Gouernors, as vnto them which are sent of him for the punishment of euill doers, and for the praise of them that doe well: for so is the will of God. And againe he saith: Feare God, honor the King. Peter saith: It is the will of God, that you obey your Prince. Pius saith, Obey not your Prince, my will is that you obey not. 1. Pet. 2.

Paul hath left words for our obedience. Let euerie soule be subiect to the higher powers, for there is no power but of God, and the powers that be, are ordained of God. Whosoeuer therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist, receiue vnto themselues iudgement. For he is the Minister of God for thy wealth: But, if thou do euill, feare, for he beareth not the sword in vaine. Wherefore ye must be subiect, not because of wrath only, but also for conscience sake. Giue therefore tribute to whom you owe tribute, custome to whom custome, feare to whom feare, honour to whom you owe honour. Now saith Pius, Let no soule be subiect to the higher powers, resist power, resist the ordinance of God, be not subiect neither for wrath, nor for conscience. Yeeld your Prince no tribute, no custome, no feare, and no honor. How agreeth this with the Apostle? whether it be right in the sight of God that you be led by Peter and Paul, the Apostles of Christ, or by Pope Pius, iudge ye. And for what Prince doth Paul require this of the Romans? For Nero, an enemy to God and godlinesse, and all that liued godly: who destroied and burned their City: who slew his mother, and ripped that belly which brought him to life: a Monster in nature, and the most wicked ruler that euer raigned. And yet doth Paul require them to obey him, because he is the Minister of God, &c. Rom. 13.

Who was like to Nabuchadonosor, King of Babylon? he was the rod of the Lords wrath, he oppressed the people of God: fired and raced their City, sacked their Sanctuary, and spoiled their Temple; yet are the people commanded to pray for the life of Nabuchadonosor King of Babylon, and for the life of Baltazar his son, that their daies may be vpon the earth as the daies of Heauen. And againe God speaketh by the Prophet Hieremy: I haue caused you to be carried away Captiues from Ierusalem vnto Babylon. Seeke the prosperity of the City, whither I haue sent you away Captiues, and pray vnto the Lord for it: for in the peace thereof shall you haue peace. If the Apostle withdrew not the Romanes from the subiection of Nero, if the Prophets willed the children of Israel to pray for the life of Nabuchadonosor, who were wicked Princes, will Pope Pius tell the Subiects vnto a godly and vertuous Lady, that they must not obey her? Baruch 1. Hierem. 29.

Into what case doth he lead miserable simple men, that giue him some credit? How doth he amaze them? God telleth vs we receiue to our selues iudgement, if we resist his ordinance. Pius saith, we are accursed, vnlesse we doe resist it. What shall a simple man doe? Which way shall he follow? If he obey God, he must forsake the Pope? Or, if he obey the Pope, he must forsake God. If he obey the Prince, as God willeth him, then the Pope curseth him: Or, if he disobey the Prince, as the Pope willeth him, then doth God condemne him. The commandement of the one is as contrary to the commandement of the other, as light is contrary vnto darknes. But thanks be to God who hath filled vs with the knowledge of his will. We know Pope Pius is no God. We pray for him that he may be the seruant of God.

Paul hath warned vs, If an Angel from heauen, or if any man preach vnto you otherwise than that you haue receiued, let him be accursed. We haue receiued of Paul, and of Peter, and of God himselfe, that we should obey: yet dareth Pope Pius, no Angell, but a man, command vs that no man obey, no not vnder paine of his curse. Accursed is he for so commanding: we haue good warrant to say he is accursed. Galat. 1.

Omnes

Omnes qui illi quomodocunque iurauerunt, à iuramento huiusmodi ac omni prorsus dominij, fidelitatis, & obsequij debito, perpetuò absolutos declaramus: We pronounce, that all, whosoeuer by any occasion haue taken their oath vnto her, are for euer discharged of such their oath, and also from all fealtie and seruice, which was due to her by reason of her gouernement. Doth Pope Pius know what an oath meaneth? Doth he know what it is to sweare by the name of God? An oath is a solemne promise made betwæn men, wherin God (who knoweth the secrets of the heart) is called to witnesse of the doing. As for example: we haue taken this oath: I will be a true and liege Subiect to our Soueraigne Lady Queene Elizabeth: I will neither in word nor deed procure her euill: I will not conceale any treason or conspiracie against her: and this doe I promise, as I hope to be saued by the blood of Iesus Christ: and I take witnesse to this of God, who seeth the singlenesse of my heart, beseeching him to auenge it vpon me, to put my name out of the booke of the liuing, and to giue me no portion in the kingdome of Christ, and of God, if I willingly or wittingly breake this my promise. Such is the oath, which we haue taken to her Highnesse.

This is nothing (saith Pope Pius) I can dispense with it, I am able to dispense against the law of nature, against the Canons of the Apostles, against the new Testament: I can dispense for all things done contrary to the commandements of the old and new Testament: I can dispense against the law of God. I am aboue all generall Councels, my will must be kept for a law. And doth he only say this? Or shall we thinke they be words of reuerence, written by such as are deuout to his holinesse, and that he doth not so much as he may by vertue of his speciall priuilege? Who was it that gaue a dispensation to the brother, that he might marry his owne sister? Who was it that gaue dispensation to Henrie the fift to rise vp against Henry the fourth his own father, and put him from the Empire? What dispensation Pope Pius sent to King Philip God knoweth, but the yong Prince the Kings Son lost his life. I know not what dispensation past lately into Scotland, but the King was strangled, &c. A horrible deed; the world knoweth it was so, what mists and pretences soeuer they make. To worke such practises, the Pope sendeth abroad his dispensations.

Such a dispensation did Pope Pius lately send into England, and discharged the Subiects from their due obedience to our Prince, and thereby made way for them, with his fauour and licence to run headlong into euerlasting damnation. With some weake heads he hath preuailed. It is likely he hath vsed secret conference with them some long time, before they would be drawen to be traitors to their own country, and be emboldned to put themselues in armor, and rob, and spoile, and burne, and kil their country men, and friends, and kinsfolkes, and children, and parents against the law of nature, and the commandement of God.

This was done not long sithence. You cannot but remember it, they were in armes, and had gathered a great compane of Confederates: the banner was displaied in the field. What thinke you was their meaning? Or to what end did they rise? Among al those that liue within this realme, whose person sought they? against whom bent they their speares? And against whose Body drew they their swords? But the Lord preserued his Anointed: he hath placed her vpon his holy hill of Sion: no traiterous malice shall annoy her.

Consider now whence all this rebellion grew. There is no treason, without conference. There, euen there began all our trouble. The master of all this mischiefe sitteth at Rome, as I told you before: the coales were kindled here, but the bellowes were there, and there sate he that blew the fire. We saw the poppets, but the iugler that drew the strings kept himselfe close. They which rebelled brake their oaths, forswore themselues, robbed their country, spoiled townes, burnt the holy Bible the word of God, they cared neither for God, nor man: neither for Prince, nor for law. They were promised furtherance in their doings, by insurrections which should haue bin likewise made in other places of the realm. In all this they toke courage and countenance of Pope Pius. He furnished them with all deuice of counsell, he blessed them in their purpose, he promised them forgiuenesse of their sinnes, for part of their wages.

Miserable man which could find no better company: and in miserable case when he cannot bee vpholden by other meanes than by treason. But most miserable are they which through his wicked perswasions are content to cast themselues, and to seeke how their country may be brought vnder the subiection of forraine enemies, into bondage and miserie. So doth he lose and set at libertie the consciences of men, and flattereth the wicked in their vngodlinesse, as if his dispensation should be their excuse.

It is an old saying: Caueat emptor, let him that buieth take heede. What colour soeuer the Pope setteth on his marchandize, let the buier take hed of them. We haue called God to record vnto our soules: our conscience standeth charged. If we commit periurie, God will auenge it. If we resist the power, we breake the ordinance of God, and then we receiue reiue to our ſelues damnation. Let vs therefore be wiſe and circumſpect. As for Pope Pius word, it is no warrant for vs againſt the iudgement of God. In the day of the Lord, when we would call him forth for our diſcharge, we ſhall not finde him. He is not able to warrant himſelfe.

Yet for his better credit, & to preuaile the more with vs, he ſaith well of himſelfe, and magnifieth and aduanceth his own name, when he telleth vs: I am a Prince: I am aboue nations and kingdomes: I excommunicate Kings and Princes: I depriue them, and put them downe, and root them vp: I haue authority ouer their Subiects, I diſcharge them of their oathes: I curſe them, and giue them vp to the Diuell: I am like to the Higheſt. Theſe are blaſphemous and ghominable words, meet words for him that ſent them: to whom is giuen a mouth to ſpeake great things, and blaſphemies. And thus he imagineth all the World ſhould fall downe before him with a Sanctus. He imagineth he holdeth the Sunne and Moone in his hands, and can rule them as it pleaſeth him: and thus is fallen into a pleaſant phrenſie: he dreameth of great matters, and with his owne breath he bloweth himſelfe big like a bladder.

But this breath is nothing, it is eaſie to let it out, and then the bladder will alſo be as nothing. It will not be ſo eaſie as he thinketh, to haue ſuch place giuen him in the conſciences of men, as he ſometimes had: or to rot out all that profeſſe the Goſpell of Chriſt, or to make, that the name of the holy one of Iſraell ſhall be no more ſpoken of. Yet he attempteth it, and thereto imployeth all his power, and his wiſedome, and his counſell. But he that dwelleth in Heauen, laugheth him to ſcorne, the Lord ſhall haue him in deriſion. As though he were a Samſon, he taketh hold of the pillars, he crasheth them in peeces: but the houſe which he pulleth downe, ſhall fall vpon his owne head. His heart is exalted againſt his fall which is at hand. All his great boaſt is but a could of darkneſſe: a cleare winde will blow it ouer. Pſal. 2.

And now to giue you a ſhort view of the whole matter. Remember that Pope Pius hath ſent vs ouer againſt our gratious Queene, and all her Subiects, a Sentence of his curſe and depriuation. Wherein he hath dealt ignorantly, and contrary to the Lawes, without wit or diſcretion, and followeth no order. For the Sentence which ſhould be kept vntill the laſt, is giuen out before the parties were called, or the cauſe and proofes duly alleged and examined.

Remember, that he is no competent Iudge, that he hath no iuriſdiction ouer vs, that he himſelfe is a party, that he hath béne accuſed and found guilty by the iudgement of the whole world, that he is ouermuch affectionate in the caſe, wherein he ſéeketh to exalt and inrich himſelfe.

Remember, that he hath conueied nineténe vntruthes into this one bundle: that he hath forged a falſe Commiſſion: that he hath corrupted and falſified the Word of God, and hath made God a falſe witneſſe vnto his follies. Remember that he teacheth vs contrary to that we haue receiued of Peter, and of Paul, and of Chriſt, and of God: and that he ſaith: Let no ſoule be ſubiect to the higher powers, let euery ſoule reſiſt the Prince, let him withſtand the ordinance of God, be not obedient neither for wrath, nor for conſcience; giue no cuſtome, nor tribute, nor feare, nor honour vnto her.

Remember, if thou obey thy Prince as God hath commanded thée, thou art accurſed by the Pope: or if thou diſobey thy Prince as the Pope requireth thée, thou art condemned by the iudgement of God.

Remember, that the Pope hath conference with Traitours in all Countries, that hée raiſeth Subiects againſt their Princes, that he cauſeth Princes to plague their Subiects, that he hath no regard of the ſtranger and the fatherleſſe, that he ſuffereth Iewes and Parlots to liue in wealth and peace with him at Rome; and yet will not ſuffer a Chriſtian and lawfull Prince, to liue in the peace of her owne Countrie at home, that he is the procurer of theft and murder, of rebellion and diſcenſion in the Land: that he hath ſent in a Bull to ſhew his meaning, and to worke our diſquiet, ſo bold, and vaine, and impudent a Bull, and ſo full fraught with blaſphemie and vntruth, as neuer before him did any. Let theſe things neuer be forgotten. Let your children remember them for euer.

Let vs and our children with vs pray, God ſaue Queene Elizabeth, and confound all thoſe which riſe vp againſt her. Let vs at the length take knowledge of the Pope, and of his enterpriſe and boldneſſe. He and his Predeceſſours haue deceiued the world, and our Fathers before vs. Let vs be no more children in vnderſtanding. God hath giuen vs the light of his word: we haue by it eſpied wherein they robbed vs, let vs be no more deceiued. I ſay vnto you againe, I beſéech you, let vs at the length take knowledge of the Pope, and of his enterpriſe, and boldneſſe. He and his Predeceſſours haue deceiued the World, and our Fathers before vs. Let vs be no more children in vnderſtanding. God hath giuen vs the light of his Word, we haue by it espied wherein they robbed vs. Let vs be no more deceiued.

And thou O most mercifull Father be our defense in these dangerous times. The Lion rangeth and seeketh whom he may deuoure. Loke downe from thy heauens vpon vs. Giue thy grace vnto Elizabeth thy seruant. Thou hast placed her in the seat of her Fathers: Thou hast made her to be a comfort vnto the people: Thou hast endued her with manifold gifts: shadow her vnder the wings of thy mercifull protection: confound and bring to nothing the counsell of her enemies: direct the worke of thine owne hands: establish that, O God, which thou hast wrought in vs: so we which be thy people, and the sheepe of thy pasture, shall giue thee honour and praise for euer and euer. Amen.

A TREATISE OF THE HOLIE SCRIPTVRES, gathered out of certaine Sermons, which the reuerend Father in God, Bishop IEVVEL preached at Sarisbury:

ANNO DOMINI, 1570.

AMong all his creatures in heauen or earth, God hath not made any like vnto the Sunne in the firmament, the beames whereof are beautifull and pleasant, and doe giue comfort in all places to all things. It reioiceth the whole, and releeueth the sicke: it causeth birds to sing, fishes to play, cattell to stirre, wormes to creepe, grasse to grow, and trees to bring fruit: it renueth the face of the whole earth. Yet a blinde man hath no pleasure in the beauty thereof, because he is blinde, and cannot see it: Yet a dead man hath no warmth by the heat thereof, because he is dead and feeleth it not. Adam was placed in Paradise, in perfect estate, and in the companie of Gods Angels. God walked and did talke with him. He heard the voice and beheld the presence of God. The riuers yelded waters abundantly, the trees brought him food of life. He had plenty without trauell, he had pleasures, ioy, and his hearts desire. But Adam was vnthankfull, he knew not God the worker of his happinesse, he knew not the place in which he was, he knew not his owne estate and blessednesse: therefore the wrath of the Lord grew against him: he fell into the snares of the Diuell, he became mortall, and returned to dust.

What nation in all the World, so happy as Israel? they were deliuered by a mighty hand out of Ægypt, from the tyranny of Pharao, from seruice and villany. Their children were no more slaine before their faces. They passed thorow the bottome of the Sea, as vpon drie land. When they were hungrie, there went forth a winde from the Lord, and brought them Quailes from the sea, and Manna was giuen them from heauen to eat: when they thirsted, the rockes opened and powred out water that they and their beasts might drinke. In battell they were mighty and strong, no power was able to stand against them. The Lord went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way, and by night in a pillar of fire to giue them light. When they called vpon the Lord, he heard them. When they trusted in him, they were not confounded. But they grew vnmindfull of all these mercies, and murmured against the Lord, and against his seruants: therfore God raught forth his hand against them. He sware in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest. He sent his Angell and destroied them in the wildernesse.

Euen so fareth it with all such which regard not the word of their saluation; because they haue eares and heare not, nor will vnderstand with their hearts, the furie of the Lord shall be kindled against them. The Prophet saith in the name of God to Israel: I haue sent vn- Hier. 7.

to them all my seruants the Prophets, yet would they not heare me, nor incline their eare.
2. Esdr. 9. And: Behold, I sow my Law in you, that it may bring foorth fruit in you. But our Fathers which receiued the Law kept it not, neither obserued thine ordinances, neither did the fruit of thy Law appeare. For they that receiued it perished, because they kept not the thing that
1. Sam. 15. was sowen in them. Samuel telleth Saul: Thou hast cast away the word of the Lord, and the Hier. 6. Lord hath cast away thee. Againe Ieremie saith: How do ye say, We are wise, and the Law of the Lord is with vs? They haue reiected the word of the Lord, and what wisdome is in them? Againe: Vnto whom shall I speake, and admonish that they may heare: Behold, their eares are vncircumcised, and they cannot hearken: behold, the word of the Lord is vnto them as a reproch: they haue no delight in it. I will cause a plague to come vpon this people, euen the fruit of their owne Imaginations: because they haue not taken heed vnto my words, nor to my Law, but cast it off.

After this sort doth God shew the cause, why his word taketh not place in vs, because we are wilfull, and will not heare it, nor receiue it, nor take delight in it, nor let the fruit thereof appeare, but reiect it, and make it a reproch, and cast it away from vs: and therefore is it, that the Lord doth cast vs away, that we are vnwise, that we please our selues with our owne deuises, and follow our owne imaginations, and perish, because we haue not vnderstanding to heare the instruction of the Lords word, but like ignorant men disallow it, and cast it behind the backe.

The consideration hereof moueth me to say some what of the holy Scriptures, which are the bright Sunne of God, which bring light vnto our waies, and comfort to all parts of our life, and saluation to our soules. In which is made knowen vnto vs our estate, and the mercie of God in Christ our Sauiour witnessed. That we may the better see the path which we haue to walke in, my meaning is, truly and plainly, and shortly, to shew you, what Authority and Maiesty the Word of God beareth: then, what profit we may reape by it also, how needfull it is, that we be well instructed in the holy Scriptures: and, what pleasure and delectation a Christian conscience may finde in them: and lastly, whether they be darke and doubtfull, or plain and easie for your vnderstanding: that when we know the Maiesty and Authority of the Word, and what comfort and profit God giueth vs by it, we depriue not our selues thereof by our vnthankfulnesse, nor close vp our eies that we see it not: but heare it in reuerence and in feare, that it may be fruitfull in vs, and we receiue it not in vaine.

The authority of the Scriptures.
2. Pet. 1. The Scriptures are the word of God. What title can there be of greater value? What may be said of them to make them of greater authority, than to say, The Lord hath spoken them? That they came not by the wil of men, but holie men of God spake as they were moued by the holie Ghost? At the word or Proclamation of an earthly Prince we stand vp, and baile our bonnets, and giue good eare to it: we are bound so to doe, it is our duty, such honour belongeth to the powers that are placed to rule ouer vs: for they are ordained of God. And whosoeuer resisteth them, resisteth the ordinance of God. If we should haue a reuelation, and heare an Angell speake vnto vs, how carefull would we be to marke, and remember, and be able to declare the words of the Angell? yet is an Angell but a glorious Creature, and not God. And what is a King? great and mighty: yet mortall and subiect to death. His breath departeth, and his name shall perish. Both he, and his word, his power and his puissance shall haue an end. But the word of the Gospell is not as the word of an earthly Prince. It is of more Maiesty than the word of an Angell. The Apostle saith:
Heb. 2. If the word spoken by Angels was stedfast, and euery transgression and disobedience receiued a iust recompence of reward: how shall wee escape if we neglect so great saluation, which at the first began to bee preached by the Lord, and was confirmed vnto vs by them
Esai. 55. that heard him? God saith by the Prophet Esay: My word shall accomplish that which I Esai. 40. will, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it. And the same Prophet saith: The Luke 16. word of God shall stand for euer. And, It is more easie that Heauen and Earth passe away, than that one title of the Law should faile, saith our Sauiour. For it is the word of the liuing & almighty God, of the God of Hosts, which hath done whatsoeuer pleased him, both Iohn 12. in Heauen and in Earth. By this word he maketh his will knowen. I haue not spoken of my selfe (saith Christ) but the Father which sent me, gaue me a commandement, what I
Iohn 15. should say, and what I should speake. And againe: If I had not come and spoken vnto them, they should not haue had sinne: but now haue they no cloke for their sinne. No man hath seene God at any time: He is inuisible, no eie can reach vnto him. The onely begotten Sonne which is in the bosome of his Father, hee hath declared him: hee hath shewed vs the throne of grace, that we may seeke for mercy, and finde grace in time of need: he hath disclosed vnto vs the will of his father. He hath left vnto vs, and ordained that we should heare his holy word.

This

This word the Angels and blessed spirits vsed when they came downe from Heauen, to speake vnto the people: when they came to the blessed Virgin, and to Ioseph, and to others: they spake as it was written in the Prophets and in the Scriptures of God: they thought not their owne authority sufficient, but they take credit to their saying, and authority to their message, out of the word of God. This Word the Prophets vouched and alleged to the people. Albeit they were sanctified in their mothers wombe: albeit God had endued them with his heauenly spirit: although a Seraphin came vnto one of them and touched his mouth with a hot coale: albeit he saw the Lord sitting vpon an high throne: yet they would not speake as of themselues, but onely in the name of the Lord: for thus they vse to say; The Lord hath spoken: This is the word of the Lord. Heare what the Lord saith. Saint Paul, albeit he was taken vp into the third Heauen, and into Paradise, and heard words that are not lawfull for man to vtter, yet he wrot not his owne words to the Churches of Rome, of Corinth, and Thessalonica, and of other places, but deliuered them which he had receiued, and taught them according to the Scriptures.

This word is the true Manna: it is the bread which came down from Heauen: it is the key of the Kingdome of Heauen: it is the sauour of life vnto life: it is the power of god vnto saluation. In it God sheweth vnto vs his might, his wisdome, and his glory. By it he will be knowen of vs. By it hee will bee honoured of his creatures. Whatsoeuer truth is brought vnto vs contrary to the Word of God, it is not truth, but falshood and errour: whatsoeuer honour, done vnto God, disagreeth from the honour required by his Word, it is not honor vnto God, but blasphemy. As Christ saith: In vaine they worship me, teaching for doctrines mens precepts. By Esay God saith: Who required this at your hands? And by Ieremie: I spake not vnto your Fathers, nor commanded them, when I brought them out of the Land of Egypt, concerning burnt Offerings and Sacrifices. But this thing commanded I them, saying? Obey my voice, and I will bee your God, and yee shall bee my people: and walke yee in all the waies which I haue commanded you, that it may bee well vnto you. Againe: What is the Chaffe to the Wheat, saith the Lord? What are your dreames to be weighed with the truth of God? Search the Scriptures: In them ye shall learne to know me, and how you should worship me: in them ye shall finde euerlasting life: the words of the Lord are pure words, as the siluer tried in the furnace: there is no filth, nor drosse remaining in them. They are the storehouse of wisedome, and of the knowledge of God. In respect whereof, all the wisdome of this World is but vaine and foolish.

Matth. 15. Esai. 1. Ierem. 7. Ierem. 23.

Numa Pompilius King of the Romans, Lycurgus King of Lacedemon, and Minos King of Creta, were wise men, and of great gouernment: they deuised Lawes to rule the people, and bare them in hand, that they were taught by reuelation: that so their ordinances might win the more credit, and be established for euer. But where are they now? Where is Numa, Minos, or Lycurgus? where be their Bookes? what is become of their Lawes? They were vnwise, and had no knowledge, nor vnderstanding of God: they and their Lawes are dead, and their names forgotten. But the Law of God came from Heauen indeed, God wrote it with his finger, it is the fountaine of all wisdome, and therefore shall it continue for euer, and neuer haue an end.

Heere let vs behold the great power and worke of God. When Moses receiued the Law, God himself came down in person, with thousand thousands of Angels: the aire was darkned at his presence, the Mount stood all couered with fire, the earth shook, the heauens thundered, the people stood afar off, and fled for feare, and said vnto Moses, Talke thou with vs, and we will heare: but let not God talke with vs, lest we die. This was the first proclaiming and publishing of the Law: such force and credit God gaue to his word, and warranted himselfe to be the Lord.

Exod. 19.

Since that time, so many thousand yeres are already passed. In the meane time the people of Israel were oppressed by Tyrants, were spoiled and chased out of their Country. First by Nabuchodonosor into Babylon: after that by Antiochus into Syria: and lastly, were as vagabonds driuen from Countrie to Countrie. Their Citie Ierusalem was sackt, their houses ouerthrowen, their Temple raced, and not a stone left vpon a stone: their Librarie destroied: their Bookes burnt: the Tabernacle lost: the Couenant broken: No vision, no reuelation, no comfort for the people left, nor Prophet, nor Priest, nor any to speake in the name of the Lord. In all those times of decaies, of sackings, of darknesse, and of misery, what was done with the word of God? It was wickedly burnt by Ioachim King of Iuda: and Antiochus burnt the Bookes of the Law, and cut them in peeces. No man durst be knowen to haue them, and auouch the hauing. So thought they vtterly to deface the glory of God, and abolish all remembrance of his Lawes.

Ierem. 36. 1. Mac. 1.

Then came the Pharisees, they drowned the word of God with their traditions: they take away the Key of knowledge, and entred not in themselues, but forbad them that came in. After them came Heretikes, they denied some one part, and some another part of Scriptures. They razed, blotted, corrupted, and altered the word of God: of the word of God, they made it their owne word, or which is worse, they made it the word of the Diuell.

By the space of so many thousand yeares, the word of God passed by so many dangers of Tyrants, of Pharisies, of Heretikes of fire, and of sword, and yet continueth and standeth vntill this day, without altering or changing one letter. This was a wonderfull worke of God, that hauing so many, so great enemies, and passing thorow so many, so great dangers, it yet continueth still without adding or altering of any one sentence, or word, or letter. No creature was able to doe this, it was Gods worke. He preserued it, that no Tyrant should consume it, no Tradition choake it, no Heretike maliciously should corrupt it. For his names sake, & for the elects sake, he would not suffer it to perish. For in it God hath ordained a blessing for his people, and by it he maketh couenant with them for life euerlasting. Tyrants, and Pharisies, and Heretikes, and the enemies of the Crosse of Christ haue an end, but the word of God hath no end. No force shall be able to decay it. The gates of Hell shall not preuaile against it. Cities shall fall: Kingdomes shall come to nothing: Empires shall fade away as the smoke, but the truth of the Lord shall continue for euer. Burne it, it will rise againe: kill it, it will liue againe: cut it downe by the rot, it will spring againe:

Prou. 21. There is no wisdome, neither vnderstanding, nor counsell against the Lord.

Let vs behold the Nations and Kingdomes which sometimes professed Christ, and are now Heathenish: Illyricum, Epyrus, Peloponnesus, Macedonia, and others. Againe, let vs behold such Kingdomes and Countries, which were in times past heathenish and knew not God: as England, Ireland, Rome, Scotland, and diuers other. They were all without the Gospell, without Christ, without God, and without hope of life. They worshipped Idols, euen the work of their own hands. To them they appointed Priests for their seruice, daies and places for the people to resort together to worship them. Here in England, Pauls Church in London was the Temple of Diana: Peters Church in Westminster was the Temple of Apollo. In Rome they had the Temple of the great God Iuppiter. And in Florence the Temple of Mars, and in other places they had Temples dedicated to other Idols.

Iupiter, Mars, Apollo, and Diana, were vncleane spirits, and filthy Diuels: yet gaue they thankes to them for their peace and prosperity, prayed to them in warre and in misery, and commended vnto them, their wiues, their children, themselues, the safe keping and custodie of their soules. They built gorgeous Churches and Chappels: set vp Images of siluer and gold to them: prayed, lifted vp their hands, did Sacrifice, and offered vp their children to them. A horrible thing to say: yet true it is: the darknesse of those times were such, that men slew their owne children, and offered them vp to Idols. They said, Great is Iupiter: Great is Apollo: and Great is Diana of the Ephesians. These are the Gods of our Fathers, our Fathers trusted in them, they made vs, and haue defended vs, and haue giuen vs victory against our enemies. Whosoeuer denied them, were thought worthy to die.

Thus were the Kings and the Princes, and the people perswaded. And so continued they by the space of some thousand yeares, without controulment, or contradiction. They had great props of Antiquitie, Vniuersalitie, and Consent. Antiquitie of all times. Vniuersalitie of all places, Consent of all the people. So strongly, and so mightily were they founded. Who would thinke such a Religion, so ancient, and so vniuersall, and so defended by common consent, should euer possibly be remoued?

But when the fulnesse of time came, God sent forth his word, and all was changed. Errour fell downe, and truth stood vp: men forsoke their Idols, and went to God. The Kings, and Priests, and People were changed: the Temples, and Sacrifices, and Prayers were changed: mens eies and hearts were changed. They forsoke their Gods, their Kings, their Priests: they forsoke their antiquity, customes, consent, their Fathers, and themselues. What power was able to worke these things? What Emperour by force euer preuailed so much? What strength could euer shake downe so mighty Idols from their seat? What hand of man could subdue and conquer the whole world, & make such mighty Nations confesse they had done amisse? This did the Lord bring to passe by the power of his word, and the breath of his mouth. This was it, that lead captiuity captiue, and threw downe euery high thing that lifted it selfe vp against the Lord: and brought all powers vnder subiection vnto the Lord. It is the image, the power, the arme, the sword, and the glory of God. It is mighty, of great force and vertue, of authority and maiesty, because it is the word of God: therefore the glory thereof is great.

profit h Christi- reape by Scriptures.

Now let vs stand a farre off, and humble our selues, and in reuerence and feare learne to take the fruit and comfort of the same: for so is the will of God, that we may be partakers partakers of his glory. But where ſhall we find entrance into this matter? And how ſhall we be able to come a land? For this is the Sea, and the depth of all the works, of the iudgements, and mercies, and of the kingdome of God. This is a Sea that hath no ſhore, a pit that hath no bottom. The holy Scriptures are the mercy ſeat; the regiſtry of the myſteries of God, our Charter for the life to come, the holy place in which God ſheweth himſelfe to the people, the Mount Sion, where God hath appointed to dwell for euer. The more comfort in them, ſo much the more greedily let vs deſire them: the more heauenly and glorious they are, with ſo much the more reuerence let vs come vnto them.

For conſideration of this matter of the fruit and comfort which God worketh by the word: what may we better call to mind, than that is recorded by S. Paul? Whatſoeuer things are written afore time, are written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might haue hope. All that is written in the word of God, is not written for Angels, or Archangels, or heauenly Spirits, but for the Sons of men, for vs and for our inſtruction: that by them we may receiue ſtrength, and comfort in all aduerſities, and haue hope of the life to come. It is the word of God, God openeth his mouth and ſpeaketh to vs, to guide vs into all truth, to make vs full and ready in all good workes, that we may be perfect men in Chriſt Ieſus: ſo rooted and grounded in him, that we be not toſt to and fro with euery tempeſt. Rom. 15.

The profit which the word of God bringeth, ſhall beſt appeare, if we firſt take a view of our eſtate, what we are, in what place we ſtand, and what enemies make force againſt vs. We are the Sons of Adam, ſtubborne children, the children of vanity, and of wrath: The children of thoſe fathers which forſooke God, and haue erred in their hearts, and were deceiued. God which created man, and breathed into him the breath of life, ſaith: The imagination of mans heart is euill from his youth. Such are we euen by the iudgement of God: and his iudgement faileth not. What error, what Idoll, what wickedneſſe euer hath bin heard, which hath not been forged and wrought in the heart of man? We can neither do, nor ſpeake, nor thinke the thing that is good: our vnderſtanding is heauy, our will froward, our eies blind, and our heart vncleane. We goe aſtray thorow this world as leſt ſhepe, euery man after his owne way. Euen as a leafe is carried vp and downe with a blaſt of winde, ſo are we eaſily driuen into error: in our ſelues we find no ſtay, no ſuccor, nor helpe. Such are we, and ſo weake of our ſelues. Gen. 8.

But where are we? in the world. And what is the world? Some thinke it to be a place full of all delights and pleaſures, a goodly ſtrong and gorgeous palace, and a paradiſe of ioy. Let no man deceiue vs, nay rather let vs not deceiue our ſelues: the world is a ſhop of vanities, it is a dungeon of darkneſſe, a pot full of poiſon, a ſhip full of leakes, a way full of ſnares. It blindeth our eies, beguileth our ſenſes, and helpeth vs forward into all dangers. We are blind our ſelues, and the place wherein we are is nothing elſe but darkneſſe.

Whereunto may I reſemble our caſe? Ieremy the Prophet was caſt into a dungeon. There he ſate without light, and without comfort. His caſe was miſerable, and the place loathſome; yet he knew where he was: he knew what he lacked: he cried vnto the Lord, and was deliuered. Daniel was caſt into the den of Lions, there to be torne in peces and deuoured. But he ſaw his miſery, and the danger in which he ſtood: he ſaw the Lions, the pawes which ſhould gripe him, and the teeth which ſhould teare him. His caſe was miſerable: yet is ours more miſerable. We are in the deepe dungeon of Hell, and thinke we are in ſafety: we are in the middeſt of darkneſſe, and thinke it to be light: we are compaſſed with Lions, with Dragons, and Scorpions, yet thinke not of our miſery.

Who hath not heard the ſtory of Ionas? Ionas was in a Whales belly: The place was very darke: the waues beat on euery ſide: he was drowned, yet touched no water: he was ſwallowed vp, yet not conſumed: he liued without any ſenſe of life: the fiſh was death, the Sea was death, and the tempeſt was death: yet he died not, but liued in the midſt of death: he could not ſee, he could not heare, he knew not to whom he might call for helpe: he was taken and carried away, he knew not whether. Let vs marke well this ſtory, it is a true paterne of our eſtate, and ſheweth what our life is in this world. We are beſet with like dangers, we are driuen with tempeſts, we are drowned in like floods, we liue in the middeſt of horrible darkneſſe, we are caried we know not whether.

The Philoſopher telleth vs, truth and falſhood are nigh neighbors, and dwell one by the other: the vtter porch of the one is like the porch of the other; yet their way is contrarie: the one leadeth to life, the other leadeth to death: they differ little to the ſhew, ſaue that oft times the doore of falſhood is faire, painted, grauen, and beautifully adorned; but the doore or forefront of truth, is plaine and homely. Thereby it happeneth that men be deceiued, they miſtake the doore, and goe into errors houſe, when they ſeeke truth. They call euill good, falſhood truth, and darkneſſe light. They forſake that is good, deny the truth, and loue not

Rom. 10. the light. This moued S. Paul to say of his brethren the Iewes: I beare them record that they haue the zeale of God, but not according to knowledge: they haue the care and feare of God: they are zealous in their doings: they haue deuotion: they pretend conscience:
Rom. 1. they thinke they doe well, and that they please God. When they professed themselues to be wise, they became fooles. They knew not what they did: for if they had had knowledge, they would neuer haue crucified the Lord of glory. But they know not the truth of God: they know not God: they are carried away in the vanity of their own heart. Their praiers are no praiers: The truth they hold is falshood: their faith is no faith: they are sheepe without a shepheard. Thus we haue heard, what we are, and in what place.

Now let vs see what enemies bend their force against vs. We fight against the gates of hell, with the Diuell, the prince of darknesse, the father of lies: with the Diuell, which hath power ouer the children of disobedience, by whose malice death came into the world. Euen that Diuell bendeth his force against vs, which deceiued Adam in Paradise: which hath deceiued the learned Philosophers: and beguiled the Princes, and wise men, and the worthies of the world: which doth abuse, and entice our hands, our eies, our learning, our wit, and our owne heart to deceiue vs. He rampeth as a Lion, and rangeth ouer the world, seeking whom he may deuoure. This is his delight and study. He hath béne a murtherer from the beginning. If this were euer true at any time, our times haue found it most true. We are they vpon whom the ends of the world are come.

Now is this Scripture fulfilled in our eares: Now see we the daies whereof Christ warned his disciples so earnestly: They shall say, Loe here is Christ, and there is Christ. This is Matth. 24. the truth, that is the truth. There shall arise false Christs, and false Prophets, and shall deceiue many, they shall betray the truth. Many shall be offended by them: if it were possible, the verie elect, they whose names are written in the booke of life, should be deceiued. And except those daies should be shortned, there should no flesh be saued: but for the elects sake those daies shall be shortned. The Sunne shall be darkned, and the Moone shall not giue her light. The Sunne is the word of God: the Moone signifieth the Church. The powers of
2. Thes. 2. heauen shall be moued, all the kindreds of the earth shall mourne. Abomination of desolation shall stand in the holy place. Let him that readeth, consider it. This is the mysterie of iniquitie, of which S. Paul speaketh to the Thessalonians, which worketh among them that perish. Thus are we forewarned. God hath giuen vs his word to aduise vs, that we be not cast away vnawares. They that walke in the darke know not whether they go: if the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch: he that is ignorant, shall not be knowne. Christ shall say vnto him, I know you not: depart from me yé cursed into euerlasting fire. Their worme shall not die, and their fire shall not be put out.

In this case, what shall a godly disposed simple man doe? How shall he settle himselfe? To which side may he safely ioine himselfe? If hé make reckoning of learning, there are learned men on both sides: if he make reckoning of vertue, and godly life, there be vertuous men and of godly life on both sides: if he make reckoning of zeale, either side is zealous in the religion they hold: if he make reckoning of the name of the Church, they take it as well to the one side as to the othee: if he make reckoning of the multitude, there are many on either side, but neither side hath so many as hath the Turke. Whither then may a man turne himselfe, and to which side may he safely ioine? In this case we find the comfort and profit of the word of God. In this case S. Paul telleth vs, whatsoeuer things are written Psal. 119. aforetime, are written for our learning: to lighten our eies, to resolue our doubts, and to guide our feet. This light God hath kindled in his mercy, to lighten them that sit in darknesse. Except hé had left vs a sparke of this light, wé had perished, and become like to Sodome and Gomorrah.

David saith, Thy word is a Lanterne to my paths, and a light to my feet. By it I may see the way which is before me: by it I can escape danger, and by it I can keepe the path wherein I ought to walke. When Christ perceiued that the Capernites and the Iewes misliked his doctrine, and went backe and walked no more with him, he said to the twelue;
Iohn. 6. Will ye also goe away? You are my Disciples, whom I haue chosen out of this world: will you also goe away? Simon Peter answered him, Master, to whom shall we goe? thou hast the word of eternall life. If wé forsake thée, who shall instruct vs? thy word is the word of eternall life.

With this word Christ confounded the Scribes and Pharisies, and put them to silence.
Mark. 7. Ye reiect (saith hé) the commandement of God, that ye may obserue your owne tradition. For, Moses said, Honor thy father and thy mother; whosoeuer shall curse father or mother, let him die the death. But ye say, if a man say to father or mother, Corbam, that is, by the gift that is offered by me, thou maist haue profit, he shall be free. With this word he confounded Matth. 21. them, for misusing of the Temple by buying and selling: It is written, Mine house shall be called

called the house of prayer; but ye haue made it a Denne of theeues. With this word he put them to silence, and confounded their error, in that they thought it lawfull for a man to put away his wife for euery fault: From the beginning it was not so. With this word he confounded the Diuell, and chased him from him: It is written, Man shall not liue by bread onlie, but by euery word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. And againe: It is written, Matth. 19. Matth. 4.
Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. And againe: It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serue.

This word confounded the Arians and all sects of heretikes. What is become of Marcion, of Nestorius, of Valentinus, of Menander, of Sabellius, of Eutyches, and others: they are blowen away as smoke before the wind: the word of God hath confounded them, and beat them away. As Dagon fell, and brake his hands and necke, and could not stand in the presence of the Arke of the Lord: euen so shall all faithles fall and hide it selfe in the presence of the truth of God. As the Rod of Moses deuoured the Rods of the Charmers: as the beames of the Sunne driue away and consume darknesse, so shall the word of God chase away errors.

When the two Disciples walked by the way with Christ, they said betweene themselues, after their eies were opened, that they knew him: Did not our hearts burne within vs, while he talked with vs by the waie, and opened to vs the Scriptures? His words did possesse all our senses: this talke was not like common talke, we felt it forcible in vs as the word of God. Israel heard Peter declare vnto them at Ierusalem by proofe of the Scriptures, that Christ was come, they were not able to resist the word of God, but were pricked in their hearts, and said vnto Peter and the other Apostles, Men and brethren what shall we do? we acknowledge our error: the words which you speake are most true: they are the words of life: teach vs and instruct vs what we shall doe. They felt the force of it, and yelded vnto it: they did acknowledge it was the word of God. Luk. 24. Acts 2.

S. Augustine after he had continued long in error, and withdrawne himselfe into a secret place where he might make his praier, and bewaile his ignorance, heard a voice say vnto him: Tolle, lege; tolle, lege, Take vp and read, take vp and read. And he foorthwith tooke vp the Epistles of Saint Paul, and opened them, and secretly read the Chapter which he first lighted on, euen these words: Not in gluttonie, and drunkennesse, neither in chambring and wantonnesse, not in strife and enuying: but put ye on the Lord Iesus Christ, and take no thought for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts of the same. Nec vltra volui legere (saith he) nec opus erat. Statim quippe cum fine huiusce sententiæ, quasi luce securitatis infusa cordi meo, omnes dubitationis tenebræ diffugerunt: I would read no farther, for I needed not. For when I had read to the end of this sentence, all the darknesse of doubtfulnesse vanished away, as if some cleare light of securitie were powred into my heart. It was as if it had bin said: O man acknowledge thy misery: thou art naked, couer thy filthinesse: put vpon thee Iesus Christ. And forthwith, I felt a fire within me, my heart was lightned, the scales fell from mine eies, I was able to see. Thus he was comforted, and staid by this, the word of God. Lib. 8. confessionum. cap. 12. Rom. 13.

This profit of the word S. Cyprian vttereth: Si ad diuinæ traditionis caput & originem reuertamur, cessat omnis error humanus: if we returne to the head, and the beginning of the Lords traditions, all error of man must needs giue place. Theophylactus writing vpon these words in the Gospel by S. Iohn, He that entereth not in by the dore into the Sheepfold, but climbeth vp another way, he is a theefe and a Robber, saith: Non ingreditur per ostium, hoc est, per Scripturas. Non enim vtitur Scripturis testibus, neque Prophetis. Nam profecto scripturæ ostium sunt per quas addiscimur ad Deum: Illa lupos non permittunt intrare: prohibent hæreticos vt nos securi simus: & de omnibus rationem dant de quibus volueri mus. Fur igitur est qui non ingreditur per scripturas in stabulum ouium, & itaque vult deprehenditur. Sed ascendit aliunde, hoc est, aliam sibi viam & insolitam parat. Talis erit Antichristus. He entreth not in by the dore, that is, by the Scriptures. For he doth not vse the Scriptures, nor the Prophets, as witnesses. For indeed the Scriptures are the dore by which we are brought to God: and they suffer not the Wolues to come in, they keepe off Heretikes, that we may be in safetie: and they teach vs the reason of any thing, wherein we would be instructed: therefore he is a theefe which entreth not into the sheepfold by Scriptures. And by the Scriptures it appeareth he is a theefe, that climbeth vp another way, that is, maketh himselfe another away, a way which was not knowen, nor beaten. Such a one shal Antichrist be. What greater profite they bring vs to God: teach vs the truth, and giue vs reason of all things: they keepe vs in safetie: suffer not Wolues to deuoure vs, keepe off Heretikes, bewray a theefe, and make knowen who is Antichrist. Therefore, vpon the Gospell by S. Luke he expounded these words: Let your lights be burning, that is, haue not your being in the darknesse, and be ye not void of iudgement: but take vnto you the light of Gods word: which will teach you what things you should doe, and what things you ought not to doe. Cyprian. ad Pompeium. Theophyl. in 10. cap. Iob. Theophyl. in 12. Luc.

And

And as the word of God is the light to direct vs, and to keepe errours: so is it also the standard and beame to trie the weights of truth and falshood. Chrysostome writing vpon the foure and twentieth of S. Matthew, sheweth it were impossible for a man to say himselfe, and finde out which is the true Church, but by the word of God: For it could not be tried by working of miracles, because the gift of working miracles is taken away: and such false miracles as carrie some shew, are rather to be found among false Christians: nor yet by their conuersation and life, because Christians liue either as ill, or worse than Heretikes. Hom. 49. in opere imperf. Nulla probatio potest esse vera Christianitatis, neque refugium potest esse Christianorum aliud, volentium cognoscere fidei veritatem, nisi tantummodo per scripturas: There can be no triall of true Christianitie, and Christians, which desire to know the truth, whereupon they may build their faith, haue no other refuge, but to trie and learne this by the Scriptures. For (saith he) Heretikes haue the counterfait and likenesse of those things which are proper to Christ. They haue Churches, they haue the Scriptures of God, they haue Baptisme, they haue the Lords Supper, and all other things like the true Church: yea they haue Christ himselfe. Hee therefore that will know which is the true Church of Christ, how may hee know it, but by the Scripeures? Therefore our Lord, knowing that there should bee such confusion of things in the latter daies, commandeth, that Christians which liue in the profession of Christian faith, and are desirous to settle themselues vpon a sure ground of Faith, should goe to no other thing, but to the Scriptures. Otherwise, if they had regard to other things, they should be offended and perish, and not vnderstand which is the true Church.

The Master of the Ship, when he is on the maine Sea, casteth his eie alwaies vpon the Load Star: and so directeth and guideth his waies. Euen so must we which are passengers and strangers in this world, euer settle our eies to behold the word of God. So shall no tempest ouerblow vs: so shall we be guided without danger: so shall we safely arriue in the hauen of our rest. The Prophet Dauid therefore saith: Blessed are they that keepe his testimonies, and seeke him with their whole heart, Their faces shall not be ashamed: they shall not be confounded which haue respect vnto his commandement. Blessed is the man whose delight is in the law of the Lord, and in that law doth exercise himselfe day and night. The Law of the Lord is perfect, conuerting the soule: the testimony of the Lord is sure, and giueth wisdome vnto the simple. This is the rule of our faith: without this, our faith is but a fantasie, and no faith: for faith is by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. Therefore Christ saith, Search the Scriptures, they are they that testifie of me. Iohn. 5. There shall ye find testimony of my doctrine, there shall ye know what is the will of my heauenly Father, and there shall you receiue the comfort for euerlasting life. Againe: He that followeth me Iohn. 8. shall not walke in darknes, but shall haue the light of life. If a man keepe my word, hee shall know the truth, he shall neuer see death. Therefore Baruch saith: O Israel, we are blessed, Baruch. 4. for the things that are acceptable vnto God are declared vnto vs. This is thy blessednesse, herein hath God shewed his fauour vnto thee, he hath reuealed the secrets of his will vnto thee, and hath put his word in thy mouth. He sheweth his Word vnto Iacob, his statutes and his iudgements vnto Israel: hee hath not dealt so with euery nation, neither haue they knowen his iudgements. Therefore the Prophet Dauid teacheth vs to pray vnto God for Psalm. 25. the knowledge of his word: Shew me thy waies O Lord, and teach me thy paths. Take not Psalm. 51. thy holy Spirit from me, and incline my heart vnto thy testimonies: Giue mee vnderstan- Psalm. 119. ding, that I may learne thy commandements: Open mine eies, that I may see the wonders Psalm. 13. of thy Law. And, Lighten mine eies, that I sleepe not in death: that I may discerne betweene safety and danger, that I may know truth to be the truth, and error to be error.

Thus I haue declared part of that profit which groweth to vs by the word of God: but it doth not only direct our iudgement in the triall of truth, but doth also graffe in vs a boldnesse and constancie in the defence of the truth. Salomon saith, A foole changeth as the Eccle. 27. Moone: He is alwaies vnstable and inconstant, he knoweth not, neither what to doe, nor what to beleeue: he is sometimes full, and sometimes empty: and turneth and changeth as the Moone: He buildeth and laieth his foundation vpon the sand: therfore his house falleth to the ground. He halteth on both sides: sometimes worshippeth God, and somtimes worshippeth Baal: he is neither hot nor cold: he ebbeth and floweth like the waues of the sea, he doubteth & staggereth, and resteth in nothing. He knoweth not the truth, he knoweth not that the scriptures are the word of God; so he wandreth in the darke, and knoweth not the way in which he walketh. He hath no feeling, no part, no vnderstanding. He is vnfaithfull towards God, & keepeth no faith towards man: he is wauering in al his waies. And why? Because he knoweth not the will of God, nor hath the light of his word to guide his feet.

But a wise man is one and stedfast as the Sun. He buildeth his house vpon a rocke, and that rocke is Iesus Christ the Son of God. Therfore his house is neuer shaken down. Be the storme or tempest neuer so rough, yet it shal stand fast like mount Sion, because his trust is in the name of the Lord. He knoweth that his name is written in the Booke of life, hée knoweth that he belongeth to the Lords Sheepfold, & that no man can take him away out of the Lords hand. In this boldnesse Dauid saith: Though I should walke thorow the vallie of the shadow of death, I will feare no euill: for thou art with me: thy rod and thy staffe they comfort me. Psalm.23. And againe: The Lord is my light and my saluation, whom shall I feare? Psalm.27. And againe: Except thy lawes had beene my delight, I should now haue perished in mine affliction: Psalm.119. When Ezechias heard the proud message of Senacherib sent to him and his people by Rabshaketh, that they should not obey Ezechias nor trust to him, when he said, The Lord will deliuer you: and, Let not thy God deceiue thee, in whom thou trustest: he went vp into the house of the Lord, and praied vnto the Lord, to saue him and his people out of their hands, that all the kingdomes of the earth might know, that he is God alone. 2.Kings 19. Euen so the Apostle: Whether we liue or die, we are the Lords. Rom.14. And in this boldnesse our Sauior Christ setled himselfe to beare their reproches, and to carry his Crosse: Father, if thou wilt, take away this Cup from me; neuertheless, not my will, but thine be done. Luk.22. Thus they that are taught by the Word of God, to put their trust in the Lord, and are thereby rooted and setled in him, cannot be remoued by any practise of Sathan, but stand fast, and continue for euer.

Which shall more plainly appeare, if we loke backe into the times of persecution, and behold the boldnesse & constancy of the Saints of God. They were brought before Magistrates, cast into prisons, spoiled of their goods, cruelly murdered. Some were hanged vpon gibbets, some run thorow with swords, some torne with wild horses, some drowned in the water, and some burnt in the fire. They were hated of all men for the name of Christ. They were despised as the filth of the world, and dung of the earth. Yet continued they faithfull and constant. They armed their hearts with the comfort of Gods word: thereby were they able to resist in the euill day. They were faithfull vntill death, therefore God gaue them a Crowne of glory.

When they were called before Kings, and Princes, and others of authority, and commanded to forsake the truth they had learned, and the comfort which they toke in the truth, they answered in this maner: O my gratious Lord, I would faine doe your commandement: I am your subiect: I haue done faithfull seruice with my body, and with my goods; but I cannot serue you against God: He is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords: He is my Lord, before whom I stand: I haue put my life in his hands. He hath forbidden me to doe this thing which you command: I cannot therefore doe it. Judge vprightly, whether it be meet to obey you, rather than God. My liuing, my wife, my children, and my life, are deare vnto me. I am a man like others, and haue mine affections. Yet neither liuing, nor wife, nor children, nor my life is so deare vnto me as the glory of God. I am but a poore worme, yet am I the worke of his hands. God hath put his word in my mouth: I may not deny it. I may not beare false witnesse against the Lord. My life is not deare vnto me in respect of the truth. I know if I should deny him to saue my life, I should lose it: and if I lose my life for his sake, I shall find it. That which your authority shall lay vpon me, is not done without his will. All the haires of my head are numbred. I owe you obedience, I will not resist your power, for if I should resist, I should resist the ordinance of God. I am subiect to you for conscience sake. I will forsake my country, my goods, my children, and my selfe at your commandement. I will say to mine own flesh, I know thee not: only I cannot forsake my Lord God.

Deare sir, you fight not against me. Alas, what am I? What can I doe? You fight against God, against the most holy, against him, which can command your life to goe out of your body: it is a hard thing for you to kicke against the spur. It is no hard matter for you to kill me: for so mighty a Prince to kill so wretched a worme. But this I declare to you, that my blood which you shed is innocent, and shall be required at your hands.

It may please God to giue vnto you repentance, and the knowledge of the truth. If my blood may be a meane thereto: if my blood may open your eies: if my blood may soften your heart: it could neuer be spent in a better cause: blessed bée the name of God which hath made me his instrument for your so happie conuersion: this is the only thing wherein I cannot yéld. The Lord hath spoken vnto me: I haue heard his voice: my heart hath felt it: my conscience knoweth it: I cannot deny it. No sword can cut me from it: no water can drowne it: no fire can burne the loue I beare vnto it: there is no creature in heauen or earth, that can carrie me from that blessed hope I haue conceiued by his Word.

So constant is he that hath learned the word of God, and hath set his delight vpon it, and is through it assured of the will of God. Heauen shall shake, the earth shall tremble, but the man of God shall stand vpright. His foot shall not faile: his heart shall not faint: he shall not be moued. Such a ground, such a foundation, such a rocke is the word of God.

Blessed

Blessed is the man whose hope is in the name of the Lord. He shall build vpon a sure place: he laieth his foundation vpon the corner stone. He needeth no army to make him strong: he needeth no friends to comfort him in aduersity. His strength is within, the gates of Hell shall not preuaile against him. His comfort is inwardly, within his heart. He speaketh to God, and God vnto him. His eies behold the kingdom, & power, and glory of God.

The authority of the Fathers.

But what say we of the Fathers: Augustine, Ambrose, Hierome, Cyprian, &c? What shal we thinke of them, or what account may we make of them? They be Interpretors of the word of God. They were learned men, and learned Fathers: the instruments of the mercy of God, & vessels full of grace. We despise them not, we read them, we reuerence them, and giue thankes vnto God for them. They were witnesses vnto the truth, they were worthy pillars and ornaments in the Church of God. Yet may they not be compared with the word of God. We may not build vpon them: we may not make them the foundation & warrant of our conscience: we may not put our trust in them. Our trust is in the name of the Lord.

And thus are we taught to esteeme of the learned Fathers of the Church, by their owne iudgement: by that which they haue written, either for the credit of their owne doings, or of the authority which they haue thought due to the writings of others. S. Augustine said of the Doctors and Fathers in his time: Neque quorumlibet disputationes, quamuis Catholicorum, & laudatorum hominum, velut Scripturas Canonicas habere debemus: vt nobis non liceat, salua honorificentia quæ illis debetur, aliquid in eorum scriptis improbare, aut respuere: si forte inuenerimus, quod aliter senserint, quàm veritas habet. Talis sum ego in scriptis aliorum, tales esse volo intellectores meorum: Neither weigh we the writings of all men, be they neuer so worthy and Catholike, as we weigh the Canonicall Scriptures: but that sauing the reuerence that is due vnto them, we may mislike and refuse somewhat in their writings, if we find that they haue thought otherwise, than the truth may beare. Such am I in the writings of others, and such would I wish others to be in mine. Some things I beleeue, and some things which they write, I cannot beleeue. I weigh them not as the holy and Canonicall Scriptures. Cyprian was a Doctor of the Church, yet he was deceiued: Hierome was a Doctor of the Church, yet he was deceiued: Augustine was a Doctor of the Church, yet he wrote a Booke of Retractations, he acknowledged that he was deceiued. God did therefore giue to his Church many Doctors, and many learned men, which all should search the truth, and one reforme another, wherein they thought him deceiued. S. Augustine saith: Auferantur de medio charta nostra, procedat in medium codex Dei: audi Christum dicentem, audi veritatem loquentem. Take away from amongst vs any our own Bookes: let the Booke of God come amongst vs: heare what Christ saith: hearken what the truth speaketh. He is the wisedom of his father, he can not deceiue vs. Again he saith: Audi, Dicit dominus; non, Dicit Donatus, aut Rogatus, aut Vincentius, aut Hilarius, aut Ambrosius, aut Augustinus: Heare this, The Lord saith: heare not this, Donatus saith, or Rogatus, or Vincentius, or Hilarius, or Ambrose, or Augustine saith. All these were learned, most of them were holy: yet saith Augustine, we may not yeld to that which is said by learned men: but we must yeld our full consent & beleefe to the word of God. Origen saith: Necesse nobis est in testimonium vocare sanctas Scripturas. Sensus quippe &c. We must needs call to witnesse the holy Scriptures: for our iudgements and expositions, without those witnesses, carrie no credit. Marke well: our words and expositions and constructions, vnlesse they be warranted by the Scriptures, are not enough, they carry not credit. Augustine saith: Nos nullam Cypriano facimus iniuriam, cùm eius quaslibet literas, &c. We offer no wrong to S. Cyprian, when we seuer any his Letters or Writings from the Canonicall authority of the holy Scriptures. Thus speaketh Augustine a Doctor of the Church, of Cyprian another Doctor also of the Church. Cyprian was a Bishop, a learned Father, a holy man, and a Martyr of Christ: yet saith Augustine, his word is not the Gospell: his word is not the word of God: there is no wrong done to him, though his writings carry not like credit as the holy Scripture.

I could shew many the like speeches of the ancient Fathers, wherein they reuerence the holy Scriptures, as to which only they giue consent without gainsaying: which can neither deceiue nor be deceiued. In this sort did Origen, and Augustine, and other Doctors of the Church speake of themselues and of theirs, and the writings of others, that we should so read them, and credit them, as they agreed with the word of God. Hoc genus literarum non cum credendi necessitate, sed cum iudicandi libertate legendum est: This kind of writings is to be read, not with a necessitie of beleeuing them, but with a liberty to iudge of them. S. Paul saith: Though that we, or an Angell from heauen preach vnto you otherwise, than that which we haue preached vnto you, let him be accursed. But of which place, S. Augustine speaketh thus: Siue de Christo, siue de eius Ecclesia, siue de re quacunque alia, quæ pertinet ad fidem, vitamque nostram, non dicam, si nos, sed si Angelus de cælo nobis annuntiauerit præter quam quod in Scripturis legalibus & Euangelicis accepistis, anathema sit. Whether it be of Christ, or of his Church, or of any thing else whatsoeuer, pertaining either to our life, or to our faith: I will not say, if I my selfe, but if an Angell from heauen shall teach vs otherwise than yee haue receiued in the Bookes of the Law, and in the Gospels, hold him accursed.

Now to conclude this matter, the same Father saith: Ecclesiastici Iudices, vt homines plerunque falluntur: The Iudges or Doctours of the Church, as men, are often deceiued. Aug. lib. 2. cap. 2. contr. Cresc.
They are learned: they haue preheminence in the Church: they are Iudges: they haue the gifts of wisdome and vnderstanding; yet they are often deceiued. They are our Fathers; but not Fathers vnto God: they are starres, faire, and beautifull, and bright; yet they are not the Sunne: they beare witnesse of the light, they are not the light. Christ is the Sunne of righteousnesse, Christ is the light, which lightneth euery man that commeth into this World. His word is the word of truth. He is the day-spring which hath visited vs from an high: he came downe from the bosome of his Father: he shall guide our feet into the way of peace. Of him God the Father spake: This is my welbeloued Sonne in whom I am well pleased, heare him. He is the Lambe without spot: out of his mouth goeth a two edged sword. This is he in whom all the ends of the world shall be blessed, heare him, giue heed to his saying, embrace his Gospell, beleeue his word. Thus much touching the credit and authority which is to be giuen to the writings of ancient Fathers. Matt. 3.

S. Paul speaking of the word of God, saith: The whole Scripture is giuen by inspiration of God, and is profitable to teach, to improoue, to correct, and to instruct in righteousnesse. 2. Tim. 3.
To teach the truth, to improoue falshood, to correct all vice, to instruct in all vertue. Againe: I am not ashamed of the Gospell of Christ: for it is the power of God vnto saluation, to euery one that beleeueth. S. Basil saith: The Scripture of God is like an Apothecaries shop, full of medicines of sundry sorts, that euery man may there chuse a conuenient medicine for his disease. There are salues and ointments to cure all maladies. Whosoeuer cannot be cured by the word of God, his disease is growne desperate, and past cure. Rom. 1. Basil. præfat. in Psal.

Many thinke, the Apostles speech is hardly true of the whole Scripture, that all and euery part of the Scripture is profitable. Much is spoken of Genealogies, and Petidegrees, of Lepers, of Sacrificing Goats, and Oxen, &c. these seeme to haue little profit in them, but to be vaine and idle. If they shew vaine in thine eies, yet hath not the Lord set them downe in vaine. The words of the Lord are pure words, as the siluer tried in a furnace of earth fined seuen times. There is no sentence, no clause, no word, no syllable, no letter, but it is written for thy instruction: there is not one iot, but it is sealed and signed with the blood of the Lambe. Our imaginations are idle, our thoughts are vaine: there is no idlenesse, no vanity in the Word of God. Those Oxen and Goats which were Sacrificed, teach thee to kill and sacrifice the vncleannesse and filthinesse of thy heart: they teach thee, that thou art guilty of death, when thy life must be redeemed by the death of some beast: they lead thee to beleeue the forgiuenesse of sinnes by a more perfect Sacrifice, because it was not possible that the blood of Bulles and Goats should take away sinnes. That leprosie teacheth thee to know the vncleannesse and leprosie of thy soule. Those Genealogies and Petidegrees lead vs to the Birth of our Sauiour Christ. So that the whole word of God is pure and holy: No word, no letter, no syllable, no point or prieke thereof, but is written, and preserued for thy sake. Psal. 12. Heb. 10.

Art thou a King? Reade the Scriptures, thou shalt finde who hath stablished thine estate: and what duty thou owest to God. God there telleth thee: By me Kings rule, and Princes decree iustice. I haue giuen thee authority: thou carriest my sword: I haue put a crowne vpon thy head: thou art my seruant, walke before me, let thy heart bee perfect in my sight. Prou. 8.

Art thou a Subiect? Read the Scriptures, they will teach thee to know thy duty. There Paul biddeth thee, Giue tribuite to whom tribute: custome to whom custome: feare to whom feare: honour to whom honour is due. Ye must be subiect, not because of wrath onely, but for conscience sake. For he beareth not the sword for nought: for he is the minister of God to take vengance one them that doth euill. Rom. 13.

Art thou a Minister? Read the Scriptures, they will teach thee thy duty. The Prophet saith to thee: Crie aloud, spare not: list vp thy voice like a trumpet, and shew my people there transgressions. The Apostle saith vnto thee: Preach the word, bee instant, in season and out of season. Watch in all things, doe the worke of an Euangelist, make thy ministery fully knowen. Thou shalt giue an account for the soules of the people, there blood shall be required at thy hands. Esa. 48. 2. Tim. 4.

Art thou a Father? hast thou children? Read the Scriptures, they will teach thee: If thou hast sonnes instruct them. Againe: Hee that teacheth his sonne, grieueth the enemy, and before his friends he shall reioyce of him. Giue him no liberty in his youth, and winke not at his folly. Chastise thy childe, and be diligent therein, lest his shame grieue thee. Eccles. 7. Eccles. 30. 1. Sam. 2.

Elie the Prophet, by ſparing his wanton children, caſt away himſelfe and his children. They were ſlaine, the Arke of God was taken, and old Elie fell downe and brake his necke.

Art thou a Childe? Haſt thou a Father? Reade the Scriptures, they will teach thée:

neere vnto all them that call vpon him, yea, to all that call vpon him in truth.

Art thou a sinner? hast thou offended God? Read the Scriptures, they will teach thee. Hate the euill, and loue the good. And againe: Flie from euill and doe good, and dwell for euer. Amos 5. Psal. 37.

Rise vp and goe to thy Father, and say vnto him, Father, I haue sinned against Heauen, and against thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy sonne. Luke 15.

Doest thou despaire of the mercy of God? Read the Scriptures, they will teach thee. Christ telleth thee: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. Againe: Come vnto me all ye that are weary and laden, and I will ease you. Matth. 9.

At what houre soeuer a sinner doth repent him of his sinne from the bottome of his heart, I will put all his wickednesse out of my remembrance, saith the Lord. Matth. 11. Ezech. 18.

Againe: I desire not the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turne from his way, and liue. Ezech. 33.

And, The Lord is good to all, and his mercies are ouer all his workes. Psal. 145.

Art thou going out of this life? Read the Scriptures: they will teach thee: I am the Resurrection and the Life: hee that beleeueth in me, though hee were dead, yet shall hee liue; and whosoeuer liueth and beleeueth in me, shall neuer die. John 11.

Say with S. Paul: Christ is to me both in life and in death aduantage. I desire to be loosed and to be with Christ. Philip. 1.

What should I say more of the Scriptures, how profitable and comfortable they be in all cases and parts of our life? in aduersity, in prosperity, in life and in death, they are our especiall comfort. If we must fight, they are a sword: if we hunger, they are meat: if we thirst, they are drinke: if we haue no dwelling place, they are a house: if we be naked, they are a garment: if we be in darkenesse, they be light vnto our going.

They are comfortable to Kings, to Subiects, to Old men, to Young men, to Man and to Wife, to Father and to Childe, to Master and to Seruant, to Captaine and Souldier, to Preacher and People, to the Learned, to the Vnlearned, to the Wise, and to the Simple.

They are comfortable in peace, in warre, in heauinesse, in ioy, in health, and sickenesse, in abundance, in pouerty, in the day time in the night season, in the towne, in the wildernesse, in company, and when thou art alone. For they teach faith, hope, patience, charity, sobriety, humility, righteousnesse and all godlinesse. They teach vs to liue, and they teach vs to die.

Therefore hath Paul said well: The whole Scripture is profitable. It is full of great comfort. It maketh the man of God absolute, and perfect vnto all good workes. Perfect in faith, perfect in hope, perfect in the loue of God, and of his neighbour: perfect in his life, and perfect in his death. So great, so large and ample, and heauenly, is the profit which we doe reape by the word of God.

Now it followeth, that we consider how necessary & needfull it is for vs to be guided by the word of God, in the whole trade of our life. The necessity of the Scriptures. The word of God is that vnto our soules, which our soule is vnto our body. As the body dieth when the soule departeth, so the soule of man dieth, when it hath not the knowledge of God. Man liueth not by bread onely, but by euery word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Deut. 8. Behold saith God, I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst of water, but of hearing the word of the Lord. Amos 8. Their tongue shall wither, their heart shall terue, they shall die for hunger: They shall wander from Sea to Sea, and from the North vnto the East, shall they run to and fro to seeke the word of the Lord, and shall not finde it. They shall stumble at noone daies, as at the twilight they shall grope for the wall like the blinde: and truth shall fall in their streets. Esa. 59. For how shall they be saued vnlesse they call on the name of the Lord? How shall they call on him, in whom they haue not beleeued? How shall they beleeue in him of whom they haue not heard? and how shall they heare without a Preacher? and how shall they Preach except they be sent? Rom. 10. Chrysostome therefore saith: Neither can it bee, I say, it cannot bee, that any man shall attaine to saluation, except he be alwaies occupied in spirituall reading. The Wise man saith: Where there is no Prophecie, the people decay. Prou. 24. When the Scriptures are not opened, when there is none that can edifie, exhort, and comfort the people by the Word of God, they must needs perish: for they know not the way in which they should walke: they know not whom to honour, nor vpon whose name they should call: they know neither what to beleeue, nor what to doe. Hell hath enlarged it selfe, & hath opened his mouth without measure, and they that are wilfull and ignorant, the children of darkenesse, goe down into it. They become thrall, and captiues vnto Satan. Their heart is bound vp, they vnderstand nothing: their eies are shut vp, they can see nothing: their eares are stopt vp, they can heare nothing. They are carried away as a pray into Hell, because they haue not the knowledge of God.

So doth Christ tell the Sadducees: Ye are deceiued, because you know not the Scriptures, nor the power of God. Matth. 22. Thus he teacheth, that error is the childe of ignorance. The cause why you are so deceiued, is because you know not the Scriptures: you haue hated the light, and loued darknesse: you haue neither knowen the Father nor me. He that knoweth not the truth of God, knoweth not God. Herein, in this case there is no plea of ignorance. Ignorance shall not excuse vs. Chrysostome saith: Dices, non legi: non est hæc excusatio, sed crimen: Thou wilt say, I haue not read the Scriptures: this is no excuse, but a sinne. Againe he saith: This is the working of the Diuels inspiration, he would not suffer vs to see the treasure, lest we should get the riches. Therefore he counselleth vs, that it vtterly auaileth vs nothing to heare the Lawes of God, lest that vpon the hearing hee may see our dooing follow. Gregory saith: Qui ea quæ sunt Domini, nesciunt, à domino nesciuntur: Whoso know not the things that pertaine vnto the Lord, bee not knowen of the Lord. Origen also giueth reason of this practise of Satan: Vnto the Diuels it is a torment aboue all kindes of torments, and a paine aboue all paines, if they see any man reading the Word of God, and with feruent study searching the knowledge of Gods Law, and the mysteries and secrets of the Scriptures. Heerein standeth all the flame of the Diuels: in this fire they are tormented: for they are seased and possessed of all them that remaine in ignorance.

Hom.17.ad Hebræos.
Hom.2.in Mat.
Greg.in Pastor. lib.1.cap.1.
Hom.27.in Numeri.

Carneades a Philosopher, was wont to say of his Master and Reader Chrysippus, If it had not bene for Chrysippus, I neuer had bene any body. He was my Master and teacher: he made me learned: whatsoeuer I haue, I haue it of him. How much better may we vse the like words of the Scripture? and say, Vnlesse it were for the word of God, our wisdome were nothing, and our knowledge were nothing. Whatsoeuer we haue, we haue it by the word. Without it, our praier were no praier: without it, our Sacraments were no Sacraments: our Faith were no Faith: our Conscience were no Conscience: our Church were no Church. Take away the light of the Sunne, and what remaineth but darknesse? Heauen and Earth are darkned. No man can see his way or discerne the things about him. Euen so, if the word of God be taken away, what remaineth, but miserable confusion, and deadly ignorance?

When the Philistines had shorn the haires of Samson, they fell vpon him, take him, bound him, and plucked out his eies: they daunced about him, and made scorne and games of him. We are Samson, the strength of our haires is the knowledge of the will of God: It is laid vp in our heads, in the highest and principall part of vs: if that be shorne off, if we be kept from hearing, reading, and vnderstanding of the word of God; then will error, superstition, and all wickednesse get the vpper hand, and fall vpon vs, and binde vs, and plucke out our eies, and make scorne of vs, and vtterly destroy vs.

When the people of Ierusalem were besieged and wanted food to eat, they fed on Rats and Mice, and many vnholesome and filty things. A woman was driuen for want of meat to doe a cruell part vpon her owne Child: she toke her own babe, which was the fruit of her owne body, killed it, cut it in peces, dressed it, and fed vpon it: a loathsome meat, especially, for a mother to eat her owne child. But she was driuen to it by extremity and hunger: it was so cruell a thing to lacke wherewith life might be preserued

Euen so fared it with vs, and our Fathers, after it pleased God to take away his Gospel, and to send a famine of hearing the Word of the Lord. We were driuen to eat those things which were loathsome and horrible to behold, we were driuen to feed vpon our owne children, euen the phantasies and vanities of our own heart. There was no substance in them, they could not feed vs.

In this case were the children of Israel, when they grew weary of the Word of God, and left the ordinances set downe vnto them. God had no pleasure in them, their praiers and sacrifice were not accepted. I can not suffer, saith the Lord, your new Moones, nor Sabbaths, nor solemne daies. Who hath required this of your hands?

Esay 1.

In such case were the Scribes & Phariseis, when they forsoke to be guided by the word of God, and toke away the key of knowledge, they fed vpon their own deuises, they neglected the commandements and will of God, and followed their owne Traditions. Therefore Christ reproued them: O Hypocrites, Esaias prophecied well of you, saying: This people draweth neere vnto mee with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is farre off from me. But in vaine they worship me, teaching for doctrines mens precepts.

Matth.15.

Therefore if we seke to know the Sacraments of the Church, what they are: if we would be instructed in the Sacrament of Baptisme, or in the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ: if we would learne to know our Creatour, and to put the difference betweene the Creatour and a Creature: if we desire to know what this present life is, and what is that life which is to come: if we would beleeue in God, and call vpon the name of God, and doe worship vnto God: if we would be setled in perfect zeale and true knowledge if we would haue an vpright conscience towards God: if we would know which is the true Church of God, it is very needfull that we heare the word of God. There is no other word that teacheth vs vnto ſaluation.

is

Now it remaineth we ſpeake of the delectation and pleaſure which the word of God giueth. The word of God is full of ſad and graue counſell, full of the knowledge of God, of examples of vertues, and of correction of vices, of the end of this life, and of the life to come. These are the contents of the word of God. These things (ſay you) are great and weighty of themſelues: there is no vanity or pleaſure in them. Ioy and pleaſure by reading the Scriptures.

They are great and weighty, I grant, and becauſe they are ſo weighty, they be the more worthy, that we heare them. But we muſt take a delight and ſettle our fantſie, that it may like of the weight and greatneſſe. They were vnto the Prophet Dauid, More ſweet than hony, and the hony combe. If we taſt them with ſuch an affection as he did, we ſhall feele and ſee the great, and weighty, and heauenly pleaſure which is in them.

Many are delighted in the ſtories of Iulius Cæſar of Alexander the Great, of mighty and victorious Princes. They haue pleaſure to read of their wars, of their victories, and of their triumphes. And many take their pleaſure in trauell to farre Countries, to ſee the diuers faſhions and behauiour of men.

If it were poſſible we might ſtand vpon ſuch a Hill, from which we might at once ſee all parts of the World, the Cities and Townes, and Mountains, and Forreſts, and Caſtles, and gorgeous buildings, and all the Kings and Princes of the World, in their Princely eſtate: if we might ſee the variety of the whole World, how ſome liue quietly in peace, others are turmoiled in warre: ſome liue in wealth: others in pouerty and miſery: ſome riſe, others fall. To ſee and behold ſo great variety of things, it cannot be but it would delight vs.

Such a Hill, from whence we may take view of ſo great variety, ſuch a ſtory in which we may read of noble Princes, of their Wars and Victories, is the Word of God. Vpon this Hill you may at once behold all the workes of his hands, how he made Heauen and Earth: the Sunne and the Moone: the Sea and Floods: the Fiſhes in the Water: the Fowles in the Aire: and the Beaſts in the Field. Vpon this Hill you may ſtand and ſee his Angels, and his Archangels, and bleſſed Spirits, how ſome of them fell, and ſome continued in glory: how God hath ſent them in meſſage, how they haue come down from Heauen to ſerue the ſonnes of men.

Heere you may read of the warres of the God of Hoſts, how he hath pitched his tents in the middeſt of his people, and hath gone before them, and fought for them. How the Amorrheans and Canaanites were rooted out: how the Amalekites were ouerthrowen by the lifting vp of Moſes hands in praier: how the wall of Iericho fell downe flat at the ſound of a Trumpet, and the ſhooting of the people: and how 185. thouſand Aſſyrians were ſlane in one night by the hand of one Angell, when God raught out his hand from Heauen to giue victory to his people.

Heere may you ſee how God plagued and ouercame his enemies: how he drowned Pharao in the red ſea, and his horſes, and men, and Chariots all together. Heere may you ſee Nabuchodonoſor a mighty Prince, ſo bereft of his wits, that he forſooke his Palaces, and the company and order of men, and liued in the fields after the maner of beaſts. Heere may you ſee how God ſtrucke King Antiochus and King Herod with filthy diſeaſes, and cauſed lice to eat their fleſh. How he ſent downe fire and brimſtone from Heauen and deſtroied Sodome and Gomorra, for their ſinnes. How he made the earth open and ſwallow vp Dathan and Abiram: how King Ozias was ſtricken with Leproſie, and carried from the Temple, and cut off from his kingdome. What ſtories of any Princes or people in any age can report vnto vs ſo ſtrange battels, ſo mighty conqueſts, ſo wonderfull deliuerance in extremities, ſo dreadfull ſubduing of the enemies, as the hand of God hath wrought, and the ſtory of the Scriptures declareth vnto vs?

This word alſo ſheweth the goodneſſe and mercy of God towards the people which put their truſt in him. How he made them terrible to their enemies: how he made their enemies their foot ſtole: how he led them ſafe thorow the red Sea: how he ſent his Angel to goe before them, and guide them: how he gaue them Water out of a Rocke, and rained downe Bread from Heauen: how hee brought them into a Land that flowed with Milke and Hony, and ſware vnto them, that he would be their God, and they ſhould be his people.

In this word, are to be ſeene wonderfull and ſtrange works of God, ſuch as are beyond the courſe of nature, and paſſe the reaſon of man. That the Sea parted, and ſtood on both ſides as a high wall: that at the word of Ioſua, the Sunne ſtood ſtill, and went not on his courſe: Ezechias ſpake the word and required it, and the Sunne went backe ten degrees! At the word of Elias, fire came downe from heauen to conſume his Sacrifice. Heere may you ſee an Aſſe open his mouth and ſpeake, and reproue his Maſter: there ſeruants of God Ioſ. 10. 2. King. 20.

walke in a hot burring furnace without hurt: Daniel in the den among Lions, and not deuoured: Peter in the raging Sea, and not drowned: Lepers cleanſed: the lame to goe: the dumbe to ſpeake: the deafe to heare: the blind to ſée: the dead to riſe out of their graues and liue: ſimple and vnlearned men to ſpeake in ſtrange tongues: the Diuell to goe out of the poſſeſſed, and to ſay, I know thou art Chriſt the Sonne of God.

Héere may you ſée twelue poore ſilly men without ſpeare, or ſword, or force, make conqueſt and win the whole world. No power could repreſſe them, no might could withſtand them. It is reckoned a great matter for a King or a Nation to yéeld ſubmiſſion vnto another King or Nation. It muſt therefore bée a matter of great wonder to ſée all Kings throw downe their Maces, and all people to yéeld before ſo few, ſo ſimple, ſo vnarmed, and to acknowledge they imbraced lies, and liued in ignorance: and that theſe twelue are the ſeruants of the higheſt: and to ſée how God hath choſen the fooliſh things of this world, to ouerthrow the wiſe: and the weake things of this world, to confound the mighty things. Such force did God giue to their words. He made them the ſonnes of thunder: they ſhoke the foundations of the world: they threw downe whatſoeuer ſtood againſt them.

Héere may you ſée the fight of Gods elect children. How they patiently ſuffered afflictions in their bodies, rather than they would deny the truth of God: they gaue their backes to the ſcourge, their neckes to the ſword, their bodies to the fire. No tyrant, no menacings, no racke, no torment, no ſword, no death could remoue them from the loue of the Goſpel which they had receiued. The more of them were cut downe, the more did ſpring vp: the more were killed, the more were left aliue. Auguſtine ſaith: Ligabantur, includebantur, torquebantur, vrebantur, & multiplicabantur: They were bound, and ſhut vp, and racked, and burnt, and yet were increaſed. This is the victory that hath ouercome the world. For the Lord anſwered S. Paul: My power is made perfect through weakneſſe. It liueth in death, it is made whole and ſound by wounds and ſtripes: it is increaſed by thoſe meanes, whereby men deſtroy it. Iacob ſaw a ladder ſtand vpon the Earth, and the top of it reach vp into heauen, and the Angels of God goe vp and downe by it. This was but a dreame and viſion in his ſléepe, yet when he awoke he toke pleaſure and comfort of this viſion.

2. Cor. 12.

We haue not only the delight of this with Iacob, but we haue other far greater viſions. We ſée Eſay beholding the Lord as he ſate vpon an high throne: we ſée Paul taken vp into the third heauens: we ſée the glory of God appeare, and heare the voice which came out of the cloud, ſaying: This is my well beloued Son in whom I am well pleaſed, heare him. We ſée Ieſus Chriſt the Sonne of God, borne of a Virgin, and how he made himſelfe of no reputation: and tooke on him the forme of a ſeruant, and was made like vnto man, and was found in ſhape as a man. That he humbled himſelfe, and became obedient vnto the death euen the death of the Croſſe. We heare him cry with a loud voice: My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken mee? We heare him ſay: Father for giue them: for they know not what thy doe. And, Father, into thine hands I commend my ſpirit.

Héere, we may ſée, the Sunne to be darkned, that the Moone giueth no light: the Earth to ſhake, the Rockes to cleaue aſunder, the Vaile to rent, the Graues to open, and Chriſt riſe from the dead, and goe vp into Heauen, and ſit at the right hand of his Father.

Héere may we ſée the ouerthrow of Babylon, which made all Nations to drinke of the wine of the wrath of hir Fornication. How ſhe is deſtroied with the breath of Gods mouth. Héere we behold the Reſurrection of the dead: and foure and twenty Elders ſit before God on their ſeats, and the ancient of daies ſit vpon his throne, and the iudgement ſeat, and the Bookes opened, and all fleſh appeare before him, and how ſome are taken into euerlaſting life, and ſome are ſent into euerlaſting death.

Reuel. 14.

What tongue is able to expreſſe theſe pleaſures and delights, which are laid open to vs in the Word of God? We buy Images and Pictures, and Mappes of men, and of diuers things and Countries: But what Mappe or Picture can ſhew vs the like variety and change of things?

We purchaſe Lands, and haue a liking ſo to doe. Héere we are taught, how we may come to that land which ſhall ſtand with vs, and in which we ſhall continue for euer.

To ſée any one of theſe, it were great pleaſure, either the creation of Heauen and Earth or the Angels and Archangels, and bleſſed ſpirits: or the battels of the God of Sabaoth: or Amalech daſht in peeces like a Potters veſſell: or the wals of Iericho, blowen downe with the ſound of a Trumpet: or Pharao drowned in the Sea: or Nabuchodonoſor eating graſſe among the beaſts: or Antiochus ſmitten from heauen: or Sodome and Gomorrha burnt with fire and brimſtone: or the earth to open and ſwallow vp the wicked: or the ſea to ſtand like a wall: or water to come out of a ſtone: or bread to come from Heauen: or the Sunne to ſtand ſtill, or to change his courſe: or an Aſſe to ſpeake and teach his Maſter: or fire to be extreme hot, yet not burning: or Lions hungry, yet not eating their meat: or the ſea tempeſtuous, peſtous, yet not drowning: or blind to ſee, deafe to heare, dumbe to ſpeake, dead to riſe: or ignorant men to ſpeake in languages they neuer learned: or the Diuell to roare, and confeſſe Chriſt: or God ſitting in his Maieſty, and Chriſt at his right hand: or Babylon throwen downe, and become a Tabernacle of foule ſpirits, and a den for the Diuell: or Chriſt to ſit in iudgement, and giue ſentence vpon the quicke and the dead: to ſee any one of all theſe wondrous workes of God, it were great pleaſure.

How can it be then, but that we reioyce and take delight to ſee ſo many, ſo great, ſo maruellous, ſo heauenly, and ſo glorious wonders in one heape all together? How far would we ride, or goe, to ſee the triumph of a mortall King? Here is to be ſeene the triumph of God, the Lord of Lords, and the King of Kings: how he hath made the name of his Sonne triumph ouer principalities and powers, and ouer the whole world. Here is a Paradiſe full of delights, no tongue is able to ſpeake them, they are ſo many: No heart is able to conceiue them, they be ſo great.

Here is a ſhop, wherein is ſet out the wiſedome, and knowledge, the power, the iudgements and mercies of God. Which way ſoeuer we looke, we ſee the workes of his hands. His workes of creation, and preſeruation of all things: his workes of ſeuere iuſtice vpon the wicked, and of gratious redemption to the beleeuer. If we deſire pleaſant muſicke, or excellent harmony: it ſpeaketh vnto vs the words of the Father, and the conſent of the Sonne: the excellent reports of the Prophets, Apoſtles, Angels and Saints of God, who haue borne all taught by the holy Ghoſt. If we would learne, it is a ſchole, it giueth vnderſtanding to the ſimple. In it there is, that may content the heart, the eare, the eie, the taſte, and the ſmelling. It is a ſauor of life vnto life. Oh taſt ye and ſee how gratious the Lord is, ſaith the Prophet Dauid. So manifold and maruellous are the pleaſures which are giuen vs in the word of God. God hath made them, and wrought them all for the Sons of men. Pſal. 34.

Thus haue I performed promiſe, and ſimply and homely opened thoſe foure things which I toke in hand. I haue declared what waight and Maieſty the word beareth: what huge harueſt of profit we may reape by it: how needfull it is for vs trauelling thorow the wilderneſſe of this life: and what repaſt and pleaſure we may finde in it.

But all this notwithſtanding, ſome take exception, and ſay: the Scriptures are darke and doubtfull, the matters are deepe, the words are hard, few can vnderſtand them. One taketh them in this ſenſe, another in a ſenſe cleane contrary. The beſt learned cannot agree about them: they are occaſion of many great quarrels: Iohn ſeeth this booke ſealed with ſeuen ſeales: and an Angell preaching with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the booke, and to looſe the ſeales thereof? No man can open it, no man can read it. S. Peter ſaith: Among the Epiſtles of Paul, ſome things are hard to be vnderſtood, which they that are vnlearned and vnſtable, peruert as they doe all other Scriptures, vnto their owne deſtruction. And S. Paul ſaith: God dwelleth in the light that none can attaine vnto; whom neuer man ſaw, neither can ſee. Reuel. 5. 2. Pet. 3. 1. Tim. 6.

Therefore, although the Maieſty bee neuer ſo waighty, the profit, the neceſſity, and the pleaſure neuer ſo great: yet it is not good for the people to read them. Pearls muſt not be caſt before Swine, nor the bread of the children vnto dogs. Thus they ſay. Indeed the word of God is Pearles: but the people are not Swine. They may not read them (ſay ſome): they are not able to weeld them: the Scriptures are not for the people. Hereof I will ſay ſomething, and a word or two of the reuerence and feare, with which we ought to come to the hearing of them.

They ſay, the Scriptures are hard, and aboue the reach of the people. So ſaid the Pelagian Heretike Iulian, whom S. Auguſtine therefore reproueth: Exaggeras quàm ſit difficilis pauciſque conueniens eruditis, ſanctarum cognitio literarum: Ye inlarge and lay out with many words, how hard a matter the knowledge of the Scripture is, and meet only for a few learned men. You ſay the Scriptures are hard, who may open them? There is no euidence or triall to be taken by them: they are fit only for a few learned men, they are in no wiſe fit for the people. Thus ſaid Iulian an Heretike. Aug. lib. 5. ca. 1. contra Iulianum.

But God himſelfe, and the ancient Fathers of the Church ſaid otherwiſe. God ſaith in Deuteronomy: This commandement which I command thee this day, is not hid from thee, neither is it far off. It is not in heauen, that thou ſhouldſt ſay, Who ſhal go vp for vs to heauen and bring it vs and cauſe vs to heare it, that we may doe it? Neither is it beyond the Sea, that thou ſhouldeſt ſay, Who ſhal go ouer the Sea for vs, and bring it vs, and cauſe vs to heare it, that we may doe it? But the word is very neere vnto thee: euen in thy mouth, and in thy heart, for to do it. Thou needeſt not run hither and thither, nor wander ouer the Sea, nor beat thy braines in ſearching what thou ſhouldeſt doe, or by what meanes thou maiſt liue vprightly: the Word and commandement of God will teach thee ſufficiently. The Prophet Dauid ſaith; The commandement of the Lord is pure, and giueth light vnto the Deut. 30. Pſal. 19.

Pſal. 119. eies. And, Thy word is a Lanterne vnto my feet, and a light vnto my paths. Thy word is not darke, it is a light vnto my path, it giueth light vnto the eies. What is cleare if the light be darke? Or, what can he ſee, which cannot ſee the light.

Humane knowledge is darke, and vncertaine. Philoſophy is darke, Aſtrology is darke, and Geomatry is darke. The Profeſſors thereof often times runne a maſket: they leſe themſelues, and wander they know not whither. They ſeeke the depth and bottome of naturall cauſes: the change of the elements: the impreſſions in the aire: the cauſes of the rainbow: of blazing Stars, of thunder, and lightning, of the trembling, and ſhaking of the earth, the motions of the planets, the proportions and the influence of the celeſtiall bodies. They meaſure the compaſſe of heauen, and count the number of the ſtars: they goe downe and ſearch the Mines in the bowels of the earth: they rip vp the ſecrets of the Sea. The knowledge of theſe things is hard, it is vncertaine. Few are able to reach it. It is not fit for euery man to vnderſtand it.

But the holy ſpirit of God, like a good teacher, applieth himſelfe to the dulneſſe of our wits. He leadeth not vs by the vnknowne places of the earth, nor by the aire, nor by the clouds: he aſtonieth not our ſpirits with naturall vanities. He writeth his law in our hearts: he teacheth vs to know him, and his Chriſt: he teacheth vs, that we ſhould deny
Tit. 2. vngodlineſſe and wordly luſts, and that we ſhould liue ſoberly, and righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world: he teacheth vs to looke for the bleſſed hope, and appearing of the glory of the mighty God, and of our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt. This matter is good, and it is plain: the words are plaine, and the vtterance is plaine. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Propterea Spiritus
Hom. 3. de Lazaro. gratia diſpenſauit illa, temperauitq; quo Publicani, Piſcatores, &c. Therefore hath the grace of the holy Spirit diſpoſed and tempered them ſo, that Publicanes, and Fiſhers, and Tentmakers, Shepheards, and the Apoſtles, and ſimple men, and vnlearned, might be ſaued by theſe bookes: that none of the ſimpler ſort might make excuſe by the hardneſſe of them: and that ſuch things as are ſpoken, might be eaſie for all men to looke on: that the labouring man, and the ſeruant, the widow woman, and whoſoeuer is moſt vnlearned, may take ſome good, when they are read. For they whom God euer from the beginning endued with the grace of his ſpirit, haue not gathered all theſe things for vaine glory, as the Heathen writers vſe, but for the ſaluation of the hearers.

Some things in the Scriptures are hard, I deny it not. It is very expedient that ſomwhat ſhould be couered, to make vs more diligent in reading, more deſirous to vnderſtand more feruent in praier, more willing to aſke the iudgement of others, and to preſume the leſſe of our owne iudgement. Gregory ſaith: Magna vtilitatis eſt ipſa obſcuritas eloquiorum
In Ezech. hom. 6. lib. 1. Dei. Facit enim, &c. The hardneſſe which is in the word of God is very profitable: For it cauſeth a man to take that profit by paines, which he could not take with negligence. If the
Lib. 4. ca. 13. in Iohan. vnderſtanding were open and manifeſt, it would be little ſet by. Cyrillus ſaith: Omnia plana & recta ſunt illis, qui cognitionem inuenerunt: fatuis verò etiam facilima obſcura videntur: All things are plaine and ſtraight to them, that haue found knowledge: but to ſuch as are fooles
Cyril, in Io 14. the moſt eaſie places ſeeme hard. And againe: Ea quæ perſpicua ſunt, difficilia ſunt hæreticis. Quomodo enim in maleuolam animam intrabit ſapientia? Thoſe things which are plaine, are hard vnto Heretikes. For how can wiſdome enter into a wicked heart? It is true which Saint Peter hath ſaid, ſome things are hard to be vnderſtood. But it is alſo true, that they which peruert them vnto their owne deſtruction are vnlearned, and vnſtable: that is, they to whom they are hard, haue not their eies opened, that they may ſee the light of the word: or they be wicked, and turne the truth of God into lies, and abuſe the Scriptures to their owne damnation. The Howlet ſeeth not by the brightneſſe of the Sunne, not becauſe the Sunne beames are darke, but for that his eies are weake, and cannot abide ſo cleere light: it is therefore but a pretence and colour for their ignorance, and a meanes to deceiue the people more boldly with their errors, when they charge the word of God with darkneſſe and hardneſſe.

Exod. 20. For how many hundred places are there which be as cleere as none day? God ſaith: I am the Lord thy God, thou ſhalt haue none other Gods before me. Thou ſhalt make thee no grauen Image, neither any ſimilitude of things that are in Heauen aboue, neither that are in the Earth beneath, nor that are in the waters vnder the earth, thou ſhalt neither bow Wiſd. 14. downe to them, neither ſerue them. Againe he ſaith: That is curſed that is made with hands, both it, and hee that made it: hee, becauſe hee made it; and it, becauſe it was Pſal. 97. called God, being a corruptible thing. And againe: Curſed be all they that worſhid carued Images, and delight in vaine Gods. This is the word of God. What darkneſſe is in any of theſe ſayings?

Exod. 22. God ſaith: If thou lend money to my people, to the poore with thee, thou ſhalt not be as Ezec. 18. an vſurer vnto him: yee ſhall not oppreſſe him with vſury. Againe: If a man hath not giuen forth forth vpon vsurie, neither hath taken any increase, &c. he shall surely liue: but he that hath giuen forth vpon vsury, or hath taken increase, shall he liue? He shall not liue. And, The wages of sinne is death. And, The soule that sinneth, it shall die. And againe: This ye know, that no whoremonger, neither vncleane person, nor couetous person, which is an Idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdome of Christ, and of God. Let no man deceiue you with vaine words: for, for such things commeth the wrath of God vpon the children of disobedience. These are the words of God, and what darknesse is in them. Rom. 6. Ezech. 18. Eph. 5.

S. Paul saith: If it be possible, as much as in you lieth, haue peace with all men. Abhor that which is euill, and cleaue to that which is good: auenge not your selues, but giue place vnto wrath. Againe: Let euerie soule be subiect to the higher powers, there is no power but of God. He is the Minister of God for thy wealth: but if thou doe euill, feare: for he beareth not the sword for nought. These be the words of God, what darknesse is in them? Saint Iohn saith: Christ is the Lambe of God, which taketh away the sinnes of the world. And, The blood of Iesus Christ his Sonne, cleanseth vs from all sinnes. S. Peter saith, His own selfe bare our sinnes in his bodie on the tree, that we being deliuered from sinne, should liue in righteousnesse. Christ saith: Aske, and it shall be giuen you: seeke and ye shall find: knocke, and it shall be opened vnto you. And againe: Come vnto me all ye that are weary and laden, and I will ease you. The Prophet saith: Whosoeuer call on the the name of the Lord, shall be saued. These be the words of God. What darknesse is in them? What eie so simple, but he may see them. Rom. 12. Rom. 13. Ioh. 1. 1. Ioh. 1. 1. Pet. 1. Luk. 11. Matth. 11. Ioel. 2.

The waies of the Lord are straight, and his words plaine, euen vnto the simple. Chrysostome saith: Omnia clara & plana sunt in scripturis diuinis: quæcunque necessaria sunt, manifesta sunt: All things are cleare and plain in the holy Scriptures: Whatsoeuer things there are necessary for vs, are also manifest. Some things are couered, as men couer precious stones, and precious garments. They are couered, and yet we see them. We see them, and yet they are couered. Yet all things that are necessary are plaine and open. Clemens saith: Nullus celatum est uerbum, lux est communis, omnibus illucescit hominibus, nullus est in verbo Cymmerius: The word of God is hid from no man: It is a light common vnto all men: there is no darknesse in Gods word. Marke, it is a common light, and shineth to all men. It is as bright and beautifull as the Sun, there is no dungeon or darknesse in it. So saith Irenæus: Scriptura in aperto sunt, & sine ambiguitate: & similiter ab omnibus audiri possunt: The Scriptures are plaine, and without doubtfulnesse, and may be heard indifferently of all men. All men may heare them, euen all sorts of men without exception. Hom. 3. in 2. ad Thessa. Clem. Alex. in Orat. ad gen. Lib. 1. cap. 31.

Where be they then which say it is not lawfull for the people to haue the word of God, and that the Scriptures are not meet for their reading? they are bread: they are drinke: they nourish vnto euerlasting life: great crueltie it is to starue Gods people to death. Are they vnfit to haue the Scriptures, because they be poore? Christ saith: The poore receiue the glad tidings of the Gospell. And, Blessed are the poore in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heauen. They want riches, and worldly glory, but God giueth his feare and grace to them, as well as to the rich. Are they vnfit to read the Scriptures, because they are not bred vp in other learning? S. Paul saith: I esteemed not to know any thing among you, but Iesus Christ, and him crucified. The Prophet Dauid saith: Blessed is the man O Lord, whom thou teachest in thy Law. And Christ saith: Thou hast hid these things from the wise, and men of vnderstanding, and hast opened them vnto babes. The Apostles were sent into all the world to preach the Gospell vnto euery creature, to learned and vnlearned, to poore and rich. There is no man too poore, none too rich, none too yong, none too old. Whosoeuer hath eares to heare, he hath learning enough to be a hearer. Mat. 11. Matth. 5. 1. Cor. 2. Psalm. 94. Matth. 11.

As for the wisest and learned men, in matters of this world, they haue not alwaies proued the readiest and most willing to set forth the glory of God. They haue not borne the masterst scholars for this schoole. Who were they that resisted Moses and Aaron, the seruants of God? Not the people, but the wisest and best learned in Ægypt. Who where they that stood against Elias? not the people: but the learned and wise men, and the Prophets, and Priests of Baal. Who were they that stoned and killed the Prophets? not the people: but the chiefest and wisest in Israel. Who were they that resisted Christ, and his Gospell, and sought to deface the glory of God? not the people: but the Scribes and Pharisies, and high Priests, and all the troupe of their Clergy. They called Christ, a deceiuer: and Beelzebub: a companion of Publicans and Harlots: They laid in wait euery where to entrap him: they sued him to death.

Saint Paul saith for conclusion in this matter: It is written, I will destroy the wisedome of the wise, and will cast away the vnderstanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? Where is the Scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made the wisedome of this world foolishnesse? For seeing the world by wisedome knew not God, in the wisedome of God 1. Cor. 1.

God, it pleased God by the foolishnesse of Preaching, to saue them that beleeued. Brethren, you see your calling, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called, but GOD hath chosen the foolish things of the world, to confound the wise: and God hath chosen the weake things of the world, to confound the mighty things, and vile things of the world, and things which are despised hath God chosen. Marke, saith he, how mercifully God hath dealt with you. Few of the learned sort, few such as are counted wise, embrace the Gospell with you, or ioine with you in Faith, or keepe you company. God hath let them be deceiued in their wisedome. They take themselues to be wise, and yet are become fooles. And contrary to worldly iudgement, God hath made you, which were weake and simple, and of no reputation, wise, and righteous, and sanctified, and redemed in Christ Iesus. And Christ saith: Except ye be conuerted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdome of Heauen. Mat. 18.

Therefore the godly Father Chrysostome calleth vpon the people, to read and heare the Scriptures. Audite seculares omnes: comparate vobis Biblia, animæ pharmaca. Si nihil aliud vultis, vel, nouum Testamentum acquirite: Apostolum, Euangelia, Acta, continues & sedulas doctores: Heare me ye men of the world: get ye the Bible, that most holesome remedie for the soule; if ye will nothing else, yet at the least, get the new Testament, S. Pauls, Epistles, the Gospels, and the Acts, that they may be your continuall and earnest teachers. Hom. 9. in ep. ad Colos.

And againe: Neque in hoc tantùm concessu, sed domi quoque, vir cum vxore, pater cum filio, inuicem de his frequenter loquantur, & vltrò, citroque suam & ferant & inquirant sententiam, velintque hanc probatissimam inducere consuetudinem: Hearken not hereto, only here in the Church, but also at home, let the husband with the wife, let the father with the child, talke togither of these matters, and both to and fro, let them both enquire, and giue their iudgements; and would God they would begin this good custome. Chrysost. hom. 2. in Ioan.

In like sort saith Origen: Vtinam omnes, faceremus illud quod scriptum est, Scrutamini Scripturas: Would God we would all do accordinglie as it is written, Search the Scriptures. Orig. in Esai. hom. 2.

It were a token that we doe loue Christ. Then would the Father loue vs, and Christ would loue vs, and shew himselfe vnto vs: and he, and his Father would come vnto vs, and dwell in vs. Chrysostome saith: Hoc omnium malorum causa est, quod Scripturæ ignorantur: This is the cause of all ill, that the Scriptures are not knowen. To know nothing of Gods Lawes, saith he in another place, is the losse of saluation; ignorance hath brought in heresies, and vitious life: ignorance hath turned all things vpside downe. S. Hierome expounding those words of the Apostle: Let the word of Christ dwell in you plenteously, saith: Hic ostenditur, verbum Christi, non sufficienter sed abundanter etiam laicos habere debere, & docere se inuicem, vel monere: Here we are taught, that the Lay people ought to haue the word of God, not only sufficiently, but also with abundance, and to teach, and counsell one another. Hom. 9 ad Colos. Hom. 3. de Lazaro. Hierom. in 3. cap. Ep. ad Colos.

And now to conclude what the learned Fathers, and ancient Doctors haue said in this matter. Theodoretus saith: Passim videas hæc nostratia dogmata non ab ijs solùm teneri, qui sunt ecclesiæ magistri, populorumque præceptores, sed ab ipsis quoque sutoribus, fabris ferrarijs, lanificibus, &c. Ye may commonly see, that our doctrine is knowen, not only of them that are the Doctors of the Church, and the Masters of the people: but also euen of the Tailors, and Smiths, and Weauers, and of all Artificers: yea, and further also of women, and that not only of them that be learned, but also of labouring women, and Sewsters, and Seruants, and handmaides: neither only the Citizens, but also the Country folkes doe verie well vnderstand the same. Ye may find, yea, euen the very Ditchers, and Deluers, and Cowheards, and Gardiners, disputing of the holy Trinity, and of the creation of all things. Thus we see there was a time, before ignorance crept into the Church, and got the vpper hand, when the word of God was not counted hard, and darke, and doubtfull: when children, and women, and seruants, and men of the Country had the knowledge of God, and were able to reason of the workes of God. Then went it well with them: they could not easily be deceiued, because they had that word which bewraieth the theefe: they carried with them like money changers the waights, and touchstone, and were able to trie coines whether they were true or false. Such were the people, such was the state of Gods Church in those daies. Lib. 5. de curandis Græcor. affect.

Gold, and siluer, and lands, and possessions, are the portions but of few. They are not common to all alike. The wise man saith: House and riches come by inheritance of the Fathers. But the Word of God, the Law, and the Prophets, the Apostles, the Euangelists, the gift of the spirit, and the knowledge of God are giuen vnto all men: they are made common for all men. If the word were ordained but for a few, then Christ was giuen into the world but for a few. The heauen was made but for a few. The mercy and loue of God was but for a few. But the mercy of God is ouer all, and vpon all, and for all. All haue right to heare the word of God, all haue nede to know the word of God. All haue sinned, Prou. 19. Rom. 3.

and are depriued of the glory of God. Therefore Chriſt calleth all, Venite ad me omnes, &c. Mat. 11.
Come vnto me all ye that be weary and laden. Yong men and old men: men and women:
rich and poore come to me. God is no accepter of perſons. It is not the will of your Father Acts 10.
which is in Heauen, ſaith Chriſt, that one of theſe little ones ſhould periſh. Who will, that Matth. 18.
all men ſhall be ſaued, and come to the knowledge of the truth. God will looke to him that is 1. Tim. 2.
poore, and of a contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at his words. God will regard ſuch a one, and Eſay 66.
make him a fit veſſell to receiue his truth. Vpon him that is ſuch a one ſhall the ſpirit of wiſedome and vnderſtanding, the ſpirit of knowledge, and of the feare of God reſt. Not only vpon the rich, the wiſe, and the learned: but vpon him that is poore, and of a contrite heart, and trembleth at his words. Vpon him that humbleth himſelfe vnder the mighty hand of God. He is the Temple and the Tabernacle of the holy Ghoſt. He that is humble in heart, ſhall be ſaued. God reſiſteth the proud, but giueth grace to the lowly.

Therefore Chriſt ſaid: I giue thee thankes O Father, Lord of heauen and earth, becauſe Mat. 11.
thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and men of vnderſtanding, and haſt opened them vnto babes. Euen to ſuch as haue no learning, which reioyce in nothing but in thee. The wiſe and learned of the world cannot heare them, cannot ſee them: but they to whom it pleaſed thee to giue vnderſtanding. It is thy mercy. Fleſh and blood cannot reach the knowledge of thy will. The ſpirit of the Father hath reuealed it. Chriſt ſaith: My ſheepe Iohn 10.
heare my voice, and I know them, and they follow me. They will not follow a ſtranger. My people are ſimple as ſheepe: they are rude, and know not what they doe. Yet they know my voice, and follow me: they know their Shepheard from a theefe: they follow not the call and voice of a ſtranger. So we ſee that God chaſeth no man away from hearing his word: he loatheth not the poore, becauſe of his pouerty, he refuſeth him not: for he is the God of the poore: they be his creatures. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Deus in Scripturis, quaſi amicus familiaris loquitur ad cor doctorum, & indoctorum. Almighty God, in the Scriptures, ſpeak- Aug. ep. 3. ad Voluſianum.
eth as a familiar friend without diſſimulation, vnto the hearts, both of the learned, and of the vnlearned. He abaſeth himſelfe, and ſpeaketh to their capacity: for his will is, that all ſhould come to the knowledge of the truth, and be ſaued.

Now let vs conſider with what feare and reuerence we ought to come to the hearing or reading of the word of God: The Angell of the Lord appeared vnto Moſes in a flame of Exod. 3. fire, out of the mideſt of a buſh. When Moſes turned aſide to ſee, God ſaid vnto him, Come not hither: Put thy ſhooes off thy feet, for the place whereon thou ſtandeſt is holy ground.
Againe, when God had appointed to ſpeake vnto the people from Mount Sion, he ſaid to Moſes: Goe vnto the people, and ſanctifie them to day, and to morrow, and let them waſh Exod. 19.
their clothes, and let them be ready on the third day: for the third day the Lord will come downe in the ſight of all the people vpon mount Sinai.

The word of the Lord is the Buſh, out of which iſſueth a flame of fire. The Scriptures of God are the Mount, from which the Lord of Hoſts doth ſhew himſelfe. In them God ſpeaketh to vs. In them we heare the words of euerlaſting life. We muſt be ſanctified, and waſh our garments, and be ready to heare the Lord. We muſt ſtrip off all our affections: we muſt fall downe before him with feare: we muſt know who it is that ſpeaketh:
Euen God the maker of Heauen and Earth: God the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt:
God, which ſhall iudge the quicke and the dead: before whom all fleſh ſhall appeare.

His word is holy. Let vs take heed into what hearts we beſtow it. Whoſoeuer abu-ſeth it, ſhall be found guilty of high treſpaſſe againſt the Lord. We may not receiue it, to blow vp our hearts, and war proud with our knowledge: We may not vſe it, to maintain debat & cõtention: we may not vſe it to vaunt our ſelues, or to make ſhew of our cunning.

The word of God teacheth lowlineſſe of minde: it teacheth vs to know our ſelues. If we learne not humility, we learne nothing. Although we ſeeme to know ſomewhat, yet know we not in ſuch ſort as we ought to know. The Scriptures are the myſteries of God let vs not be curious: let vs not ſeeke to know more than God hath reuealed by them. They are the ſea of God: let vs take heed we be not drowned in them. They are the fire of God:
let vs take comfort by their heat, and warily take heed, they burne vs not. They that gaze ouer hardly vpon the Sun, take blemiſh in their eie-ſight.

When the people of Iſrael ſaw the Manna in the deſart, they ſaid, Man Hu? what is this? ſo they reaſoned of it, when they toke it vp in their hands, and beheld it. They aſked one another, what good it would doe. The Scriptures are Manna, giuen to vs from Heauen, to feede vs in the deſert of this world. Let vs take them and behold them, and reaſon of them, and learne one of another what profit may come to vs by them: let vs know, that they are written for our ſake, and for our learning, that through patience and comfort of the Scripture we may haue hope. They are giuen vs to inſtruct vs in faith, to ſtrengthen vs in hope, to open our eies, and to direct our going.

If

If we withhold the truth in vnrighteouſneſſe: if we know our Makers will, and doe it not: if the name of God be ill ſpoken of through vs; the word of God ſhall be taken away from vs, and giuen to a nation which ſhall bring forth the fruits thereof: God ſhall ſend vs ſtrong deluſion, that we ſhall beléeue lies: our owne heart ſhall condemne vs: and wée ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes.

Therefore wee ought diligently to giue héede to thoſe things which wée heare: we muſt

Let vs be pure in ſpirit, and méeke in heart: let vs be gentle, as becommeth the Lambes of Chriſt: and as his ſheepe, let vs heare his voice, and follow him. Let vs be of a contrite ſpirit, and tremble at the words of God: let vs when we know God, glorifie him as God. So ſhall God looke vpon vs: ſo ſhall the ſpirit of wiſdome and vnderſtanding, and of counſell, and of knowledge, and of the feare of God reſt vpon vs: ſo ſhall we be made perfect to all good workes: ſo ſhall we reioice in his ſaluation, and with one mouth glorifie God euen the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF S. PAVL TO THE Theſſalonians.

Chap. I.

PAul and Syluanus, and Timotheus, vnto the Church of the Theſſalonians, which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Ieſus Chriſt: Grace be with you and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

THE Apoſtle Paul preached the Goſpell of our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt vnto the Theſſalonians, as he did alſo in other places from Ieruſalem, round about to Illiricum. But his trauell had not like ſucceſſe in all places. For in Damaſcus the Gouernour of the people vnder King Aretas, laid watch in the City of the Damaſcens, and would haue caught him. At Lyſtra they ſtoned Paul, and drew him out of the City, ſuppoſing he had bene dead. At Philippi, he and Silas were drawen into the market-place vnto the magiſtrates, and accuſed that they troubled their City, they were beaten with rods, and caſt into priſon. The Corinthians receiued the doctrine of the Goſpell, and made much of the profeſſours therof. But they fell ſone from their good beginning. They walked like men in enuying, in ſtrife, and diuiſions. Some called themſelues after Paul, ſome after Apollo, ſome after Cephas, and ſome after Chriſt. They ſtirred contention about Meates: they abuſed the Lords Supper, and they were doubtfull of the Reſurrection of the dead. In like maner the Church of God which was gathered at Rome grew proud, and high minded, and boaſted themſelues ouer the Iewes. The Galathians forſoke the good way of the Goſpel whereunto they were called, and wherin they did walke. They gaue eare to falſe Prophets. Therefore the Apoſtle telleth them, I am in feare of you, leſt I haue beſtowed on you labour in vaine. 2. Cor. 11. Act. 14. Act. 16. Gal. 4.

But the Theſſalonians, after they had heard the glad tidings of the Goſpel, they receiued it gredily, and laid it vp cloſe and ſafe in their hearts. Albeit the Iewes withſtood them and vexed them ſore, albeit falſe brethren vſed diuers ſecret meanes to draw them from the loue of the truth: yet they kept ſtill their ſtedfaſtneſſe: and could not be driuen from their faith, neither by cruelty of perſecution, nor by ſubtilty of crafty perſwaſion. Paul being at Athens a place farre diſtant from thence, ſendeth Timothy to know in what caſe they ſtood. So carefull was he for that houſe which he had built: for the fire which he had kindled: for the grafts which he had planted: and for the children which he begot among them. When Timothy made report of their conſtancy, that they continued ſtedfaſt in thoſe things which they had learned, he writeth this Epiſtle to commend them, and to exhort them to abide ſteadfaſt in their faith: that they become not like the fooliſh Iſraelites, which longed after the fleſh pots of Egypt, and were vnmindfull of their deliuerance from bondage vnder Pharao: that they returne not like filthy Dogs to their vomit, and like vncleane ſwine to their puddles of mire: that they looke not backe againe after they haue put their hands to the Lords plough, and ſo make themſelues vnworthy the kingdome of God.

He giueth many leſſons and inſtructions to godlineſſe: that they would walke worthy of God, and bring forth the fruits of the Goſpel. There were among them that liued idly, and did trouble the Church without a cauſe: whom he reproueth, willing them to be quiet, and to meddle with their owne matters, and worke with their hands. Others mourned ouer the dead without meaſure, euen as if they had no hope: whom he inſtructeth in the reſurrection, and comforteth with the ſpæch of the bleſſed comming of our Lord, when we which liue ſhall be caught vp to mæt him, and ſo we ſhall euer be with the Lord. Others reaſoned fondly of the latter day, when it ſhould be, when the ſon of God ſhould appeare, and when the world ſhould haue an end: as if man might reach to the knowledge hæreof. But them alſo he reproueth, and warneth that they take care rather to watch and loke for the Lords comming, that they may be found ready, hauing their loines girded, and their lampes burning.

Many are deſirous to ſæ the countenance of S. Paul, to ſæ his ſword, or the relikes of his blod, which was ſhed at his death, or of his vpper garment, or of his coat, or of the haire of his head: and for purpoſe to ſæ ſuch things, many take painfull pilgrimage to far places, where they are dereined. How much better may they be ſatisfied by reading the ſtory of his life ſet downe in the ſcriptures? In theſe his Epiſtles written to the Churches of God, he is to be ſæne in more excellent ſhew, than when he was yet in body. For hære is to be ſæne his heart filled with the holy Ghoſt, and the care which he had for all Saints: how he did trauell in birth of them againe, that Chriſt might be formed in them, and how he did wiſh himſelfe ſeparate from Chriſt for their ſake. The matter of this Epiſtle is plaine, and treateth not of dæpe and profound myſteries. The maner of vtterance which the Apoſtle vſeth, is open and euident. So that the whole Epiſtle is full of ſwæt and holſome doctrine, wherein the ſimpleſt may find great comfort.

Paul and Syluanus and Timotheus. Theſe two were companions vnto Paul in his iourneis, and in the worke of his miniſtery. Whom hære he ioyneth in his Letter to the Congregatien at Theſſalonica, to witneſſe their conſent and agrément with him, that they all with one mouth, and with one hand, and heart, ſet forth the glorious Goſpell of our Sauiour Chriſt. And that therefore they alſo which are called to the fellowſhip of the Goſpell, ſhould bæ like minded, being one body and one ſpirit in Chriſt Jeſus: and the children of one Father, in whom there is no diſſenſion, but all peace and conſent and vnity.

Vnto the Church of the Theſſalonians, which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Ieſus Chriſt. There are ſundry ſorts of Churches. There is a Church of the wicked, whereof the Pſal. 26. Prophet ſaith, I haue hated the aſſembly of the euill, and haue not companied with the wicked. Two hundred and fifty Captaines, men of renowme, and famous in the Congre-

Act. 4. them vpon the face of the earth. The Scribes and Phariſeis and high Prieſt held a Counſell, and conferred among themſelues. But, againſt the Lord, and againſt his Chriſt. Iohn Reuel. 2. is commanded to writ vnto the Angell of the Church of the Smyrnians: Theſe things ſaith he which is firſt and laſt, which was dead, and is aliue. I know the blaſphemy of them, which ſay they are Iewes and are not, but are the Synagogue of Satan. They reuile you, and ſpeake all maner of euill againſt you for my names ſake. They charge you with teaching falſe doctrine, & ſay you haue departed from the church: that they are the ſæd of Abraham, the children of promiſe, the true worſhippers of God, and which walke in the ſteps of their forefathers. But their boaſt hæreof is vaine. It profiteth them nothing, that Abraham was their Father, that the couenant was made with them, that they were circumciſed, that a Law was giuen vnto them. Let them not truſt in their Fathers, let them not truſt in lying words, & ſay, The Temple of the Lord, The Temple of the Lord, this is the Temple of the Lord. If they were Abrahams children, they would doe the workes of Abraham. If God were their Father, then would they loue Chriſt his ſon, & ſæk to ſet forth his glory. If they were of the ſhæpfold of God, they would heare his voice. They are of their Father the Diuel, & the luſts of their Father they will do. They are in name the ſeruants of Chriſt, but ſerue Antichriſt. They call themſelues Iews, but are the Synagogue of Satan. For (ſaith Rom. 2. the Apoſtle) he is not a Iew, which is one outward: neither is that Circumciſion which is out-
Leo epiſt. 83 ad Paleſtinos. ward in the fleſh: but he is a Iew which is one within, & the Circumciſion is of the heart, in Hom. 19. in Matt. in opere imperf. the ſpirit, not in the letter, whoſe praiſe is not of men, but of God. Of theſe which are ſuch, Leo ſaith: Eccleſiæ nomine armamini, & contra Eccleſiã dimicatis? Ye arme your ſelues with the name of the church, & yet ye fight againſt the church. And Chryſoſtom ſaith: The name only of Chriſt doth not make a Chriſtian, but he muſt alſo haue the truth of Chriſt: for there are many which walke in the name of Chriſt, but few which walk in his truth. It is therfore

manifeſt, as Lyra ſaith: That the Church is not among men, by reaſon of any Eccleſiaſticall or ſecular authority or dignity: becauſe many Princes and high Prieſts, and others of the inferiour ſort haue forſaken the faith. Though they pretend ſhew of holineſſe, though they draw to themſelues credit by long continuance, though their numbers be great, and they conſent together: yet if they haue forſaken the faith, if they hold not the truth of Chriſt, if they fight againſt and perſecute the Church, if their Circumciſion be not the Circumciſion of the heart, and in the ſpirit; if they heare not the voice of the ſhepheard, if they loue not Chriſt Ieſus the Sonne of God, and ſet not forth his glory, if they ſeeke to ſtop the courſe of the Goſpell, if they ſeeke to get a name among men, if they reſiſt Moſes and Aaron: they haue only a painted vizard, and carry onely an empty name of the Church: they call themſelues ſo, and are not. Lyra in 16. Matth.

But the Church of God is in God the Father, and in the Lord Ieſus Chriſt: it is the company of the faithfull, whom God hath gathered together in Chriſt by his word and by the holy Ghoſt to honour him, as he himſelfe hath appointed: This Church heareth the voice of the ſhepheard. It will not follow a ſtranger, but flieth from him: for it knoweth not the voice of ſtrangers. Of this Church S. Hierom ſaith: Eccleſia Chriſti in toto orbe Eccleſias poſſidens, ſpiritus vnitate coniuncta eſt, & habet vrbes Legis, Prophetarum, Euangelij, & Apoſtolorum. Non eſt egreſſa de finibus ſuis, id eſt, de Scripturis: The Church of Chriſt which containeth the Churches thorow all the World, is ioyned together in the vnity of the ſpirit, and hath the Cities of the Law, of the Prophets, of the Goſpell, and of the Apoſtles. This Church goeth not foorth, or beyond her bonds, that is, the holy Scriptures. It is the pillar of the truth: the body, the fulneſſe, and the ſpouſe of Chriſt: it is the vine, the houſe, the city, and the kingdome of God. They which dwel in it, are no more ſtrangers & forrenners, but Citizens with the Saints, and of the houſhold of God, and are built vpon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Ieſus Chriſt himſelfe being the head corner ſtone, in whom all the building coupled together, groweth vnto an holy Temple in the Lord. This Church Chriſt loued, and gaue himſelfe for it, that he might make it vnto himſelfe a glorious Church not hauing ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing: but that it ſhould be holy and without blame. Such a Church was the Church of God at Theſſalonica, ſuch a Church are they whoſoeuer in any place of the World feare the Lord, and call vpon his name. Their names are written in the Booke of life: they haue receiued the ſpirit of adoption, by which they crie Abba Father: they grow from grace to grace, and abound more and more in knowledge and in iudgement: they caſt away the workes of darkneſſe, and put on the armor of light: they are made abſolute and perfect vnto all good workes: they are euermore comforted in the mercies of God, both by the holy Scriptures wherein God declareth his gratious goodneſſe towards them, and by the Sacraments: which are left vnto the Church to be witneſſes and aſſured pledges for performance of the promiſe of Gods good will and fauour towards them. Hieron. in Mich. lib. 1. cap. 1. Ephe. 2. Ephe. 5.

Grace be with you, and peace, &c. God giue you the forgiueneſſe of your ſinnes, and the peace and comfort of your conſcience. God let all his bleſſings fall vpon you, that you may ſee the riches and the treaſures of his mercy: that you may be filled with all fulneſſe in the ſpirit: that you may behold the glory of the kingdome of God: and thoſe things may be reuealed vnto you by his ſpirit, which he hath prepared for them that loue him. Without this grace you can doe nothing, you can neither feele the burden of your ſinnes, nor ſeeke to be eaſed of them, nor perceiue when they are forgiuen: you cannot rent your heart, & ſet apart from you the vanities and luſts of the fleſh, which doth euermore fight againſt the ſoule: you cannot diſcerne the word of God, and by it enter the way to euerlaſting life: you cannot abhorre that which is euill, and cleaue vnto that which is good: without the grace of God you cannot continue ſtedfaſt and conſtant in faith, and in hope of the mercies of God through our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt.

VERSE. 2. We giue thankes to God alwaies for you all, making mention of you in our praiers.

3. Without ceaſing, remembring your effectuall faith, and diligent loue, and the patience of your hope in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, in the ſight of God euen our Father.

4. Knowing, beloued brethren, that ye are elect of God.

5. For our Goſpell was not vnto you in word onely, but alſo in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance, as yee know after what maner we were among you for your ſakes.

We giue thankes, &c. Paul teacheth what is the office of a good Minister. He must euer carry in remembrance the state of the Congregation ouer which the Lord hath placed him. He must giue thankes to God in their behalfe, and pray for them, that God will bleſſe that which he hath begun, and confirme them vnto the end, that they may be blameleſſe in the day of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: that he will behold them from aboue, and bleſſe his inheritance, and guid the ſhepe of his paſture. Your effectuall faith: Faith is not idle, it worketh and is forcible, it breaketh out like fire: it is alwaies fruitful through loue. Faith without workes is no faith, it is dead and bringeth death. And diligent loue: Loue is painful, and full of trauell: it thinketh not euill: it ſeketh not her owne things: it is bountifull. This loue had the Theſſalonians to the Saints of God, which ſuffered affliction in all places for the Goſpels ſake. Many were ſpoiled of their goods, caſt out of their houſes, and baniſhed from their Country. Euen as at this day for the like cauſe many of our brethren the good ſeruants of God are driuen into baniſhment, caſt into priſons, put to the ſword, or conſumed in fire, in thoſe places, where the God of this World hath ſo blinded their eies, that the light of the glorious Goſpell of Chriſt ſhould not ſhine vnto them. It is high time in ſuch caſes for charity to ſhew her ſelfe. She cannot diſſemble, nor deſpiſe the teares of her brother. It ſheweth forth as the morning light: it taketh from her ſelfe, to releeue them which are in need. It dealeth bread to the hungry, and bringeth the poore that wander vnto her houſe, and couereth the naked, and hideth not her face from her owne fleſh.

Pſal. 41. Vnto them that haue this loue the Lord giueth his bleſſing: Bleſſed is hee that conſidereth the poore and needy, the Lord ſhall deliuer him in the time of trouble. And Chriſt ſaith:

Matth. 5. Bleſſed are the mercifull, for they ſhall finde mercy.

And the patience of your hope. How many are the troubles which the children of God ſuffer in this life! Let vs behold the times which were before vs. Abel was innocent and iuſt, yet was he ſlaine by the hands of his brother, and without a cauſe. The Prophet Da-

Pſal. 44. uid ſaith of the Prophets and holy men of God: and the ſame words ſaith the Apoſtle of

Rom. 8. the Church of Chriſt vnder the Goſpell: For thy ſake are we killed all the day long: we are

Ierem. 6. counted as ſheepe for the ſlaughter. Ieremy ſaith: Thy Word is vnto them as a reproch, Ierem. 15. And again: For thy ſake I haue ſuffered rebuke. What villanies were brought againſt our Sauiour Chriſt? They reproched him in ſpeeches, brought falſe accuſations, and falſe witneſſe againſt him, & killed the innocent, in whoſe mouth there was found no guile. When S. Paul appealed to the witneſſe of Timothy who did fully know his doctrine, maner of liuing, purpoſe, faith, long ſuffering, loue, and patience: and that he knew alſo the perſecutions and afflictions, which came vnto him, and which he ſuffered at Antiochia, Iconium and at Lyſtra, after he had thus remembred his perſecutions and his owne innocency, he

2. Tim. 3. ſaith: All that will liue godly in Chriſt Ieſus ſhall ſuffer perſecution.

What then hath the godly to leane vnto, but hope? The Prophet Dauid therfore ſaid:

Pſal. 23. Though I ſhould walke thorow the vally of the ſhadow of death, I will feare no euill, for

Iob. 13. thou art with me. Therefore ſaid Iob: Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him. For he

Phil. 1. that putteth his truſt in the Lord ſhall neuer be confounded. In this hope ſpake S. Paul:

Rom. 14. Chriſt is to me both in life and death aduantage. Againe: Whether we liue or die, we are

Gal. 6. the Lords. And againe: God forbid that I ſhould reioyce, but in the Croſſe of our Lord Ie-

Rom. 8. ſus Chriſt. And to the Romans he ſaith: There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus. This is the foundation of faith, euen a ſtrong rocke which ſhall continue for euer. Neither tribulation, nor anguiſh, nor perſecution, nor famine, nor any danger can remoue the faithfull from this hope.

But the wicked and vnſtable fall from their hope, and their fall is miſerable. They haue heard the word of God that teacheth vnto ſaluation, but did not regard it, they haue forgotten the workes of the Lord, and receiued his grace in vaine. For when they haue heard the word, the Diuell commeth, and taketh away the word out of their hearts, leſt they ſhould beleeue, and be ſaued. And the end of theſe men is worſe than the beginning.

It was not ſo with the Theſſalonians. They receiued the word of God willingly, and it was fruitfull in them, ſo that thereby they increaſed in faith, in loue, and in hope. Their faith the Apoſtle calleth forcible or effectuall: their loue diligent and painefull: their hope mighty through patience, whereby they ouercome all maner of danges: and reioyceth on their behalfe, becauſe he found ſo great ſucceſſe of his trauell in the Goſpel amongſt them.

Knowing that you are elect of God. You were blinde, the children of wrath, without vnderſtanding, without God, and without hope. But God hath had mercy vpon you, and hath giuen you grace to know your calling. Herein it appeareth that you are the choſen Iohn 10. of God, and of the flocke of Chriſt. My ſheepe (ſaith he) heare my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I giue vnto them eternall life, and they ſhal neuer periſh, neither ſhall any plucke them out of mine hand.

For

For our Goſpel was not vnto you in word only, but alſo in power, and in the holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance. That you haue yelded obedience vnto the word, and that my miniſtery hath bene effectuall amongſt you, it commeth not of any power in your ſelues, or in me, it is the worke of God. He hath bleſſed my miniſtery, he hath bleſſed your hearts. It is the gift of God, leſt any man ſhould boaſt thereof. Hereof he ſpeaketh to the Corinthians: Who is Paul then, and who is Apollos, but the miniſters by whom ye beleeued, and as the Lord gaue to euery man? I haue planted, Apollos watered, but God gaue the increaſe. 1. Cor. 3.
It is he which hath the key of Dauid, which openeth, and no man ſhutteth, and ſhutteth, and no man openeth. Without him we can doe nothing. He guideth vs and all our counſels, and leadeth vs into all truth. No man can come vnto mee (ſaith Chriſt) except the father which hath ſent me draw him. Iohn 6.
And by the Prophet Ezechiel God ſaith: I will giue you a new heart, and a new ſpirit will I put within you. I will put my ſpirit within you, and will cauſe you to walke in my ſtatutes, and you ſhall keepe my iudgements and doe them. Ezechi. 36.
And by the Prophet Ieremy: I will put my Law in their inward parts, and write in it their hearts. Ier. 31.
Therefore Dauid maketh his prayer: Teach me O Lord, giue me vnderſtanding and I will keepe thy Law. Pſal. 119.

The words of the Preacher enter in at the eare. The ſpirit of God conueieth them into the heart. Auguſtine ſaith: Auditur euangelium: quidam credunt, quidam non credunt: qui credunt intus à patre audiunt & diſcunt; qui non credunt, foris audiunt, intus non audiunt, neq; diſcunt. Hoc eſt, illis datur vt credant, illis non datur. The Goſpell is declared. Some there are which beleeue, ſome there are which beleeue not. They which beleeue, heare it inwardly by the Father, and ſo learne it. They which beleeue not, heare it only with their outward ſenſe, and not with inward feeling, and therefore learne it not. As much to ſay, To them it is giuen, to beleeue: to the other it is not giuen. De prædeſtinat. Sanctorum. cap. 8.
In the Acts of the Apoſtles Lydia a woman of the City of the Thiatyrians heard the preaching of the Apoſtle Paul: But it is ſaid, Whoſe heart the Lord opened, that ſhe attended vnto the things that Paul ſpake. Acts 16.
The people which ſaid vnto Peter and the other Apoſtles, Men and brethren what ſhall we doe? did heare all the words of Peter: but they had another teacher, that gaue force vnto the word and made it fruitfull in them, and therefore it is ſaid, They were pricked in their hearts. Acts 2.
This alſo appeared in the Diſciples which walked towards Emmaus: they heard Chriſt open the ſcriptures vnto them, they reaſoned with him, yet vntill their eies were opened they knew him not. His word crept into their eares, but it was the ſpirit of God which wrought within them, which inflamed their hearts, and made them to know him. Luk. 24.

Thus God bleſſeth his word, and maketh it yeld fruit in ſuch meaſure, as his wiſdom hath appointed. His bleſſing appeareth greater, when many are conuerted: yet is his word all one, and the power thereof no whit ſhorter when it is vtterly refuſed, or receiued but of few. Surely (ſaith God) as the raine commeth downe, and the ſnow from heauen, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth and maketh it fruitfull, that it may giue ſeed to the ſower, and bread to him that eareth: ſo ſhall my word be that goeth out of my mouth. It ſhall not returne vnto me void, but it ſhall accompliſh that which I will, and it ſhall proſper in the thing whereto I ſent it. Eſa. 55.
It is the word of the liuing God, which is bleſſed for euer. And bleſſed is that heart which can receiue it, which God inſtructeth, and giueth knowledge of his word, which doth ſo learne it, that he is aſſured of the truth therof, and nothing doubteth but it is indeed the word of life; which ſaith thereof, this is the way, in which if I walke, I ſhal certainly goe forward to the City of my God: this is the truth, if I hearken vnto it, I ſhall neuer be deceiued. Whoſoeuer findeth himſelfe indued with this grace, he doth as plainly and euidently iudge of the words of God, and trie out the trueth thereof, from the deuiſes and doctrines of men, as a man of clare eie ſight is able to iudge of colours, & to know one colour from another. Yea, in this is the knowledge of that more certaine, becauſe colour doth fade and alter, and many times one colour thereby waxeth like another: but the truth of God doth neuer alter. It continueth one thorow all ages. It is the word of euerlaſting life. Heauen and earth ſhall periſh, but one tittle thereof ſhall not bee left. The truth of God ſhall be eſtabliſhed for euer. The humble ſhall heare it, and be glad.

As ye know after what maner, we were among you for your ſakes You know how I behaued my ſelfe, and after what maner I haue liued among you. You know my firſt comming and entry vnto you. You know what doctrine I haue taught, and what hath bene my converſation of life, I neuer deceiued any, nor offered wrong vnto the ſimpleſt. I ſought not you, nor yours, but thoſe things which are Ieſus. I haue liued by the labour of my hands, in watchings, in hunger, in cold, and nakednes. God hath ordained, that they which teach the Goſpel, ſhould liue by the Goſpell. Who feedeth a flocke and eateth not of the milke of the flocke: but I haue not vſed this liberty. For I haue a great care leſt by any meanes I should offend you. Yet would I neuer flatter any in that thing they had done amisse: I neuer spared to rebuke ill. If I should seare, or seeke to please men, I were not the seruant of Christ. I seeke not mine owne glory, but the glory of him that sent me, who also hath made me a minister of his Gospel. I haue forsaken all things, my goods and life, my flesh and my body: and am daily in perils, compased daily by persecution, and see death daily before mine eies, for the loue I beare to you, and for the care I haue of the Church. You are the Lords shæpe, I am your shepheard: you are the house of God, I am your builder: you are Gods Orchard, I am your ouerséer and workeman. I shall giue an account for your soules. You know how tenderly I haue loued you in the Lord. Your griefe hath bæne my griefe, your ioy hath bæne my ioy. I haue praied for you day and night, and haue giuen thankes to God for you, and reioyced in your behalfe. What is more dære to a man than life? yet haue I desired to yéld vp my life, that you might liue. I haue bén ready to suffer death, if thereby I might doe you good. These things you cannot but remember, your conscience beareth mé witnesse, that I haue thus liued among you for your sake.

VERS. 6. And ye became followers of vs, and of the Lord, and receiued the word in much affliction, with ioy of the holy Ghost.

He commendeth the godly for the practise of that which they haue learned and séene in him, in that they haue receiued the Gospell, and framed their liues accordingly, and haue continued stedfast in the same in the midst of persecution. Herein he doth not only lay out himselfe and the other Apostles for an example: but telleth them that this way is also troden out by our Lord himselfe. Who as he is the way, and the light that lightneth euery man which commeth into the world, so did he beare his crosse, and did lay downe his life for his shæpe. Therefore he said to his Disciples, The Disciple is not aboue his master, nor the seruant aboue his Lord. It is enough for the Disciple to be as his Master is, and the seruant as his Lord. If they haue called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more them of his household? Mat. 10,

But this is reckoned vnto them for happinesse. Blessed are you when men reuile you, and persecute you, and say all maner of euill against you, for my sake, falsly. Reioyce and be glad, for great is your reward in Heauen. For so persecuted they the Prophets which were before you. They slew them, and drowned them, hewed them with swords, and cut them in péces with sawes. If any man (saith our Sauiour) will follow me, let him forsake himselfe, and take vp his crosse, and follow me. So far must the children of God be from the loue of this world: in such sort must he forsake his owne life, and endure affliction, that will come vnto Christ. Matth. 5. Mat. 16.

In the old law, the Priests went on, and carried the Arke before, and the people came after: In token that they should giue good example, and the people should follow them. The Priest was appointed to be a shrill trumpet sounding in the eares of the people: and the people were commanded to prepare themselues for the battell of the Lord of hosts. Therefore saith S. Paul, so haue I followed the Lord, and so haue you followed me: and receiued the word (not in affliction only, but) in much Affliction. Where he describeth the vnmercifull hearts, and tyrannous hate of the wicked against all those that follow the Lambe, and receiue the word of God with gladnesse. No torment so cruell, no deuice so strange, no maner of death so horrible, which hath not bæne, or which is not laid vpon them. Their bodies be cast into prisons: they are stript out of their houses, and spoiled of their goods. Thus doe the enemies of God worke tyranny and much affliction vnto the godly. They consume their bodies in fire, shed their blood without measure, throw out their bones and scatter them vpon the face of the earth, and this doe they, not as against murtherers, robbers, adulterers, or such like, but only because they receiue the word, and beare a loue to the truth, and cannot deny the power thereof.

With ioy of the holy Ghost. This is that which passeth all naturall sense and wisdome. Many séeme to take in good part, and abide patiently afflictions, losse of goods, imprisonment, and losse of life. But no man can reioyce in the suffering of these things, but the child of God: no man, but whom Christ hath chosen out of the world: but whose name is written in the booke of life: but he, in whom the spirit beareth witnesse with his spirit that he is the child of God. He knoweth that throw many tribulations he must enter into rest. He knoweth, the wicked could haue no power ouer him, vnlesse it were giuen them from aboue: he knoweth that all is done for the best to them that loue God: and that God could dispose meanes, if it were so expedient, to bring to nought all the deuices of the vngodly.

When the seruants of God were cast into the hot burning furnace because they would not worship the golden Image, that the king Nabuchodonosor had set vp: who would haue thought, that the fire could not burne? or that their bodies should not haue bén consumed?

ſumed: yet did God in the middeſt of the fire preſerue them ſo, that not one haire of their head was burnt, neither were their coats changed, nor any ſmel of fire came vpon them. Let vs neuer forget this notable example of Gods power to deliuer his ſeruants, that we may euer be earneſt and carefull to profeſſe our faith in him, and to ſtriue vnto the death for the ſetting forth of his glory. Dan. 3.

It fareth euen ſo with the children of God in the perſecution of this world: troubles, miſeries, and aduerſitie compaſſe them, as the fiery furnace compaſſed thoſe three men of God. But God couereth them with his mercy, as with a cloud, that nothing ſhall hurt them. I ſay not, all that ſtand in like defence, ſhal in like ſort be ſo preſerued, that their bodies ſhall not be pierced. For God ſuffereth the wicked to deſtroy and kill his ſeruants, and to conſume their bodies to duſt and aſhes. Yet are his ſeruants warned not to feare them. When the Apoſtles were beaten becauſe they had ſpoken in the name of Ieſus, They departed from the Councell, reioycing, that they were counted worthy to ſuffer rebuke for his name. We reioyce (ſaith Saint Paul) in tribulations, knowing that tribulation bringeth foorth patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not aſhamed, becauſe the loue of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt which is giuen vnto vs. Act. 5. Rom. 3.

The comfort which is giuen in this caſe to the godly, is hidden within them. For to him that ouercommeth ſhall be giuen a white ſtone, and in the ſtone a new name written, which no man knoweth ſauing he that receiueth it. The afflictions of this preſent time, are not worthy the glory, which ſhall be ſhewed vnto vs. When our Sauiour did ſee the time of his paſſion draw nere, he ſaid to his Diſciples, You are they which haue continued with me in my temptations. Therefore I appoint to you a kingdome, as my Father hath appointed vnto me, that yee may eat and drinke at my Table in my kingdome, and ſit on ſeats, and iudge the twelue tribes of Iſrael. And in his ſermon vpon the mountaine, he ſaith, Bleſſed are they which ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſſe ſake, for theirs is the kingdome of Heauen. The caſe ſhall be altered. It ſhall be betweene them and their perſecuters as it was betweene Lazarus and the rich man. When the wicked and cruell tyrants ſhall ſee them in the preſence of the throne of God, becauſe they came out of great tribulation, & haue waſhed their long robes, and haue made them white in the blood of the Lamb: the God of Abraham ſhall ſay vnto the wicked: Sons, remember that you in your life time receiued your pleaſures, and likewiſe theſe men paines: now therfore are they comforted, and you tormented. They are taken out of affliction into reſt, from their bonds into liberty, out of priſon into a kingdome, out of miſery vnto glory, from life vnto death. The promiſe of this comfort is often renued. The Prophet Dauid ſaith: They that ſowe in teares, ſhall reap in ioy. Our Sauiour telleth his Diſciples, Ye ſhall weepe and lament, and the world ſhall reioyce: and you ſhal ſorrow, but your ſorrow ſhall be turned to ioy. S. Iohn heard a voice from heauen, ſaying, Bleſſed be the dead, which hereafter die in the Lord. Euen ſo ſaith the ſpirit, for they reſt from their labours, and their workes follow them. He is commanded to write vnto the Angell of the Church of the Smyrnians. Feare none of thoſe things which thou ſhalt ſuffer. Behold it ſhall come to paſſe, that the diuell ſhall caſt ſome of you into priſon, that you may be tried, and ye ſhall haue tribulation ten daies: be thou faithfull vnto death, and I will giue thee the crowne of life. Thus God ſuffereth his ſeruants to be ſifted, and to be tried as pure gold in the furnace, and receiueth them as a ſweet ſmelling ſauour of burnt ſacrifice. And this is it whereof the Apoſtle putteth the Theſſalonians in remembrance, that they are ſtrengthned by the holy ghoſt, not only to abide ſuch afflictions as they ſuffer becauſe they haue receiued the Goſpell: but alſo to reioyce, becauſe they are aſſured whatſoeuer ſhall happen vnto them, they be the children of God. VERS. 7. So that you were as examples to all that beleeue in Macedonia and Achaia.

8. For from you ſounded out the word of the Lord, not in Macedonia and Achaia only: but your faith alſo which is toward God, ſpread abroad in all quarters, that we need not to ſpeake any thing.

9. For they themſelues ſhew of you what maner entring in wee had vnto you, and how you turned from Idols to God, to ſerue the liuing and true God.

10. And to looke for his ſonne from heauen, whom he raiſed from the dead, Ieſus, which deliuereth vs from the wrath to come.

The countries round about them were drawen by the example of the Theſſalonians, to beleeue the Goſpell preached vnto them. You are (ſaith he) as the bright Sun beames: they behold you, and reioyce of you, euen as of the morning light. You are an holy City

ſet vpon an hill, you cannot be hid, your faith is a paterne of faith, your life is a paterne of life vnto them. They haue learned of you how to guide their waies. You haue called them backe from error, and from vngodlineſſe, to ſerue the true and liuing God. You are made vnto them a ſweet ſmelling ſauor of life vnto life. For ſo it hath pleaſed God to make his Goſpel knowen in all places through you, and to make you the builders of his Church. When they behold your godly converſation which is in Chriſt, they are aſhamed of themſelues. When they behold your light, they find fault with their owne darkneſſe. O, ſay they, this is a holy people, this is a people that feareth God. Let vs heare them what they teach: let vs lead our liues in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe as they doe.

Let vs by hearing theſe words enter into our ſelues. God hath giuen his light to ſhine vpon vs, he hath bleſſed vs with the knowledge of his Goſpell. Let vs take heede, we turne not the light into darkneſſe, nor the truth of God into lies. Many thouſand eies are ſet vpon vs, to looke vpon and behold vs. Let vs be an example of godlineſſe. Let vs be as a light to them that yet abide in darkneſſe. Let not the name of God be euill ſpoken of through vs. His name is holy. Wo be vnto the world (ſaith Chriſt) becauſe of offences: Matth. 18. for it muſt needes be that offences ſhall come, but wo be vnto that man by whom the offence commeth. Whoſoeuer ſhall offend one of theſe little ones, it were better for him, that a milſtone were hanged about his necke, and that he were drowned in the depth of the ſea. It were better for that man, if he had neuer beene borne. For the blood of them that periſh by his offence, ſhall be required at his hands. The wrath of God is reuealed from heauen againſt thoſe that are ſuch, becauſe they withhold the truth in vnrighteouſneſſe. The kingdome of God ſhall be taken away from them, and giuen to a nation that will bring forth the fruits thereof.

It followeth: From you ſounded the word of the Lord, not in Macedonia and Achaia only, &c. If a man carry in his hand a light burning candle, it giueth not light to him only that carrieth it, but to all thoſe which be in the houſe, and they alſo ſee it which are without. Euen ſo, if any be the child of knowledge, and carry about him the light of God, he doth not only taſte of the comfort thereof himſelfe, and worke comfort to thoſe that appertain to the Church of God: but lightneth alſo the hearts of Pagans and Infidels, which are abroad. Such as are bathed or perfumed with precious ointments, or powders, haue not only the pleaſure to themſelues, but the ſauor thereof caſteth it ſelfe out, and is pleaſant to all thoſe which ſtand by. The Goſpel is the light of God: It ſhineth in the darkneſſe of this world, It is the ſweet incenſe and ſauour of God: Whereſoeuer the breath therof is receiued, it bringeth life.

But your faith alſo, which is toward God, ſpred abroad in all quarters. As the lightning is ſeene from one part of the aire to the other, and as the ſound of great noiſe ſpreadeth it ſelfe far and wide, ſo doth the light of good converſation in the godly ſhew it ſelfe forth. And therefore he telleth them, they haue filled all the Country of Macedonia with knowledge, and with wonder at their faith, and ſtedfaſtneſſe in the truth. As if he had ſaid, Great is the renowne of your King Alexander, and your country is famous. He hath ouerrun the whole world and ſubdued it. He hath conquered Græcia, Aſia, Arabia, Phrygia, Armenia, Scythia, and India. Kings and Princes fell downe before him. The whole world ſtood in awe of his name. Yet Alexander had but the power, and force of men. He had great treaſures of gold and ſiluer. He had numbers of Horſes, and Camels, and Elephants. He had ſwords, billes, ſpeares, and darts, and ſuch like artillery and armour. Theſe were the things wherewith he ouercame his enemies. Hereby both he and his people were renowned.

What then may be ſaid of the battell which you haue fought? or of the victory which you haue gotten? you haue won, that Alixander could neuer win. You haue ouercome your ſelues. You haue ouercome the world. He conquered the bodies of many, and had them at commandement. But their ſoules ſtood out, and would not be conquered. You haue ſubdued your ſoules, and brought them to the obedience of the Goſpell. You haue ouerrun all the country, and triumphed among the people. And all this is brought to paſſe, without force, without policy, without armour, without artillery, onely by your patience and ſuffering for the Goſpell ſake.

That we need not to ſpeake any thing. To make the commendation of their faith more euident, he telleth them, the fame of their zeale and conſtancy is knowen in all places. Whithereſoeuer I goe (ſaith he) they know you, and ſpeake of you, and hearken to you. Hereby appeareth how needfull it is, that chiefe townes and cities be well gouerned, that vice in them be ſeuerely puniſhed, that vertue and godlineſſe be maintained, and the people inſtructed, becauſe the examples of ſuch places doe ſpread abroad in all quarters nigh them.

They

They themſelues ſhew of you, what maner of entrance we had vnto you. After what ſort you receiued me, and how deare I was vnto you. All places were laid and beſet for me to ſeeke my life, but you enlarged your ſelues toward me, and toke me in. When I was in priſon, you came to me, and feared no man: you were not aſhamed of my bonds, you were ready to loſe your owne liues to ſaue me. This is ſpoken of to your great praiſe.

And how you turned to God from Idols, to ſerue the liuing and true God. Here are ſet downe in few words the ſumme and parts of Chriſtian Religion. The firſt is to forſake all Idols, to turne from them: then to turne vnto God, and to put all our truſt in him: laſtly, to ſerue the liuing and true God. The ſeruice of God and Idols cannot ſtand together. No man can turne vnto God, that turneth not from Idols. This is a wonderfull effect of the Goſpell, to forſake Idols and ſerue God: to leaue cuſtomes and the vſage of forefathers, and giue eare to the truth. To loue from the heart, that which thou didſt ſometimes hate: and to deteſt from the heart, that which thou didſt ſomtimes loue, is ſtrange and wonderfull. But to doe this for Chriſt, which was borne of poore Mary, whom the wiſe, and learned, and mighty men of this world diſpiſed, which was crucified and hanged betweene two theeues, whom they ſcorned vpon the Croſſe: to follow, or beleeue, or put truſt in him: to call him the power and the wiſdome of God, to confeſſe him to be, in whom all Iſrael ſhal be bleſſed, & in whom all the world ſhal be ſaued: to giue body or life for his ſake, is a ſtrange myracle. No King, no Prince, no law, no wiſdome of man can worke this, and bring it to paſſe. This is the Lords doing, and it is marueilous in our eies. And this doth he in thoſe only which receiue the word of the Goſpell with ioy of the holy Ghoſt.

And to looke for his ſonne from heauen, whom he raiſed, &c. The holy Scriptures doe not onely teach vs to turne vnto God, but alſo what it is that God giueth vnto all them which ſeeke him; Euen that they be deliuered from the wrath to come: & for whoſe ſake he deliuereth vs; For Ieſus his ſon whom he raiſed from the dead. Therefore he telleth them, howſoeuer they be reiected or deſpiſed as fooliſh among men, if they continue in the things which they haue learned, they ſhal be wiſe vnto ſaluation. That therefore they lift vp their heads, and looke for their Redeemer: That they ſay, Thy Kingdom come, &, Come Lord Ieſus: becauſe he is appointed by God to be the Iudge of the quicke & the dead: & he ſhall come in the glory of his Father; and deliuereth from the wrath to come all thoſe that truſt in him. For among men there is none other name giuen vnder Heauen, whereby we muſt be ſaued. This is the depth of all knowledge and the comfort which paſſeth all vnderſtanding, that againſt all temptations and afflictions which oppreſſe our conſcience, or vex and trouble our bodies, we may grow ſtrong by faith in the ſonne of God Chriſt Ieſus, and aſcertaine our ſelues of his comming from Heauen for our deliuerance.

Vers 1. For you your ſelues know, brethren, that our entrance vnto you was not in vaine.

He taketh witneſſe of them, of his diligence and paines taken in the fulfilling of his miniſtery: ſeeing it hath ſo good ſucceſſe among them, that they by the preaching of the Goſpel haue forſaken ſuperſtition, and are turned vnto, and doe now ſerue the true and liuing God, and doe beleeue for giuenneſſe of their ſinnes, and deliuerance from the wrath to come, by Ieſus Chriſt.

It is a great and deadly ſmart to the faithfull ſeruant of God, to ſee the people wilfull, and to deſpiſe the word of their ſaluation. Whereof Eſay complaineth: I haue ſpred out my hands al the day long to a rebellious people, which walked in a way that was not good, euen after their own imaginatiõs. They ſtopped their eares, & would not heare, nor be reclaimed, nor returne, that they might be ſaued. And Ieremy: O that my head were full of water, and mine eies a fountain of teares, that I might weep day & night for the ſlaine of the daughter of my people, for they be adulterers, & an aſſembly of rebels. Sword & deſtruction commeth vpon them, & they will not ſee: Oh that they would giue eare and repent in time! Againe: My people is fooliſh, they haue not knowen me: they are fooliſh children and haue no vnderſtanding: they are wiſe to do euil, but to do wel, they haue no knowledge. Dauid crieth out: O ye ſons of men, how long will ye loue vanity and ſeeke after lies? Why forſake you the truth of God, and haue no regard to his mercy? So our Sauiour mourneth ouer Ieruſalem: O Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, which killeſt the Prophets, and ſtoneſt them that are ſent to thee, how often would I haue gathered thy childrē together, as the hen her brood vnder hir wings, and ye would not? How carefully and tenderly haue I ſought thy ſaluation? How often haue I called vpon thee, ſent vnto thee my ſeruants, and powred out my bleſſings before thine eies? So bitter & mournful a thing is it to all thoſe that ſeeke the glory of God, to see no fruit follow of their labours, to see the people continue ignorant, and wilfull, and to seeke their owne destruction,

Therefore they turne themselues vnto God, which is the father of lights, and God of all comfort, in whose hand are the hearts of the people, that his word may haue free passage and be glorified: that God will open vnto them the dore of vtterance, to speake the mysterie of Christ, and publish the secret of the Gospell boldly: that he will giue power to his word declared by them, and assist them with his holy spirit: that he will open the eies of the Psal. 51. people, that they may see: and turne their hearts, that they may be conuerted. So did Dauid make his praier: Open thou my lips, O Lord, and my mouth shall shew foorth thy praise. Albeit my mouth is simple, and rude, and barbarous; yet if thou wilt, it may be an instrument to declare thy glory. Then shall I teach thy waies vnto the wicked, and sinners shall be conuerted vnto thee. Be fauourable vnto Sion, build the walles of Ierusalem. Thus doe they lift vp their hands, and call vnto God, that he would send downe his ligt into the hearts of the people, that what they heare, they heare not in vaine, but may receiue it, and vnderstand it, and keepe it. For vnlesse God direct the heart, and make it fit to receiue instruction, the Preacher, though he be neuer so desirous to doe good, doth labour in vaine.

God only disposeth the waies of men, it is he which trieth the corne from the chaffe: He knoweth whom he will bring to be of his fold, and make to heare his voice. Many times he blesseth his word with great increase among them, which at the first despise it, and entreat cruelly the Preachers, and messengers thereof. When Paul disputed, and exhorted the Iewes, and the Grecians at Corinthus, and found little fruit of his labour, and that there were few or none that liked his Doctrine, and many enemies which resisted and blasphemed it, he purposed to depart and goe away from them: Then the Lord said vnto Paul, in
Act. 18. the night by a vision, Feare not, but speake, and hold not thy peace. For I am with thee, and no man shall laie hands on thee to hurt thee: for I haue much people in this City. They shall heare thee: If not now, yet they shall heare thee at some other time. They shall beare thy sayings in mind. I will be with thee, I wil open their hearts, and make them obedient to the Gospell, and they shall be turned vnto me. Thou shalt see the fruit of thy labour, and that thy comming vnto them hath not borne in vaine.

VERS. 2. But euen after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated at Philippi (as ye know) we were bold in our God, to speake vnto you the Gospell of God with much striuing.

The story of these his persecutions is written in the xvi. of the Acts. He was stript naked, and scourged with rods, and cast into prison, and put in hazard of life. Yet notwithstanding he were thus euill entreated at Philippi, when he came to Thessalonica hee was nothing discouraged, but proceeded more boldly than before, and went into the synagogue
Act. 17. of the Iewes, and disputed three Sabbath daies, and taught them that Christ is that Messias, euen the Son of God.

But, that we may the better conceiue how mightily God worketh, and what great strength he giueth to weake creatures, when he appointeth them to set forth his glory, let vs behold this boldnesse of the Apostle in speaking the Gospell vnto them. To whom did he speak? to the Iewes, the enemies of the Crosse of Christ. Where? not in hugger mugger, and in corners: but openly, in their synagogue, for he feared no man. What time chose he? then, when all the Iewes were assembled together. How often? three Sabbath daies together. In what City? in Thessalonica, the greatest, and most famous City of all that Country. How was he entreated? there arose great trouble and contention. They resisted him spake against him, and sought to destroy him. For what cause? what had he deserued? what had he taught? the Gospell of God, and of Christ, of the kingdome, and of the life to come. The Gospell in which God offereth his grace, and reconciliation, and comfort, and peace, and saluation.

Who would thinke such ioyfull tidings should not be welcome? what eie would not willingly open it selfe to behold the brightnesse of the Sunne? what eare will refuse to heare God speake? But it hath alwaies been so. There haue euer been some, that haue loued darknesse, rather than light. The world shall neuer be without some Annas, or Caiaphas, or Iudas, or Pilate. The children of the Diuell shall alwaies set themselues against the children of God.

The cause of tumults and troubles proceedeth not from the Gospell. The Gospell of Christ, is the Gospel of peace. But the enemies of the Gospel are stirrers of vnquietnesse and inflamers of war. Abel was simple, Cain spightful. Iacob smoth, Esau rough and hairy. Dauid gentle, Saul cruel. Ioseph innocent, his brethren wicked, and fell vpon him. The Apostles humble in heart and peacemakers, the Pharisies blood thirsty, & sought to put them to death. The like examples are before vs this day. The whole world is in an vproare, and great troubles and afflictions are in all places. No man is able to declare the miſery thereof. Let no man therefore ſlander or forſake the Goſpell. It hath bene ſo from the beginning, and from time to time.

Such troubles, confuſion, and miſery, are wrought not by the Goſpell, or them that receiue the Goſpell: but by thoſe which reſiſt it. They practiſe all meanes, and turne all things vpſide downe, rather than it ſhould take place. The wicked are angrie therewith, they gnaſh their teeth and conſume away. This is the cauſe, for which the children ſhall riſe Matth. 10. againſt their parents, and ſhall cauſe them to die. Cain murdered Abel, becauſe God had reſpect vnto Abel and to his offering. Eſau could not abide Iacob, becauſe Iſaac had giuen him his bleſſing. The brethren of Ioſeph ſought to make him away, becauſe God had a fauour vnto him. Saul was wrathfull againſt Dauid, becauſe God gaue him great gifts of courage, and ſtrength, and wiſedome. The Ægyptians loathed the children of Iſrael, becauſe they were Gods people. The Galathians reſiſted Paul, becauſe he preached the truth. Therefore 1. Tim. 4. (ſaith S. Paul) wee labour and are rebuked, becauſe wee truſt in the liuing God, which is the Sauiour of all men; ſpecially of thoſe which beleeue. Like wiſe ſaith our Sauiour: They Ioh 16. ſhall excommunicate you, yea the time ſhall come, that whoſoeuer killeth you, will thinke he doth God ſeruice. And theſe things will they do vnto you, becauſe they haue not known the father nor me.

Euen ſo ſtandeth it with the Church of God this day. There is nothing new that is vnder the Sunne. Whatſoeuer is done now, hath bene done afore. Who will lift vp his eies, and looke to the doings of men, ſhall ſe Cain riſe vp againſt Abel, Eſau againſt Iacob, the cruell brethren againſt Ioſeph, Saul againſt Dauid, Pharao againſt Moſes, the Ægyptians againſt the people of God, the High Prieſts and the Phariſeis, againſt Chriſt and all that will be his Diſciples: they change peace into warre, they turne iudgement into gall, and the fruit of righteouſneſſe into wormwood, they reſiſt the truth of God, to eſtabliſh deuices and doctrines of men. But bleſſed be God, they ſhall not preuaile. He giueth vs peace. He hath made vs turne our ſwords into mattockes. He hath taught vs all together with one mouth, and one heart, to praiſe him, euen the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. His truth is mighty, and ſhall preuaile.

Vers. 3. For our exhortation was not by deceit, nor vncleanneſſe, nor by guile.

4 But as we were allowed of God, that the Goſpell ſhould be committed vnto vs, ſo wee ſpeake, not as they that pleaſe men, but God, which trieth our hearts.

God (ſaith he) hath choſen me from my mothers wombe, and ſet me a part to the office of an Apoſtle. He hath appointed me to carry his name before the Gentiles. Therefore as he hath giuen me charge to preach the Goſpel, and to bring the people vnto him from the power of Satan: ſo I ſpeake, truly, faithfully, ſincerely, not as the words of men, but as the words of God. I haue vſed no deceit, nor taught you to follow traditions of men in ſtead of the commandements of God. In like ſort ſaith he to the Corinthians: I haue receiued of 1. Cor. 11. the Lord, that which I alſo haue declared vnto you. And againe: We are Ambaſſadours for 2. Cor. 5. Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you through vs. For this cauſe he ſaith vnto them: See- 2. Cor. 4. ing that we haue this miniſtrie, as we haue receiued mercie, we faint not, but caſt from vs the cloaks of ſhame, and walk not in craftineſſe, neither handle we the word of God deceitfully: but in declaration of the truth, we approue our ſelues to euery mans conſcience in the ſight of God. In theſe ſpeeches he aſketh credit, becauſe of his vpright handling of the word: and chargeth the falſe Prophets for marring the word of God with vncleane and deceitfull corruptions and gloſſes.

In foren Countries, women that haue no naturall beauty of their owne, vſe to paint and colour their faces, that whereas they lacke beauty indeed, yet they may ſeeme beautifull. Euen ſo is it often times in matters of Religion. Such as hold not the trew Religion, as it is taught by the word of God, and hath ben practiſed in thoſe Churches, which the Apoſtles planted and among thoſe Chriſtians which liued nigheſt vnto that time when the Apoſtles preached: becauſe they know, their Religion which they profeſſe now will not agree with that, they deale deceitfully and with guile. Theſe be falſe Apoſtles, and deceitfull workemen. They beguile our ſenſes, and blind our eies. They call vs to worſhip an Idoll, in ſtead of the true and liuing God. They lead vs out of the light into darkneſſe, from the truth into errour, from knowledge vnto ignorance. They forbid lawfull matrimony, and call it filthineſſe, and allow open ſtewes and harlots as a thing which nothing impaireth their holineſſe.

I will not ſpeake all that I might, nor in ſuch ſort as the matter occaſioneth. Yet can I not but ſay ſomewhat of their ſpirituall craftineſſe, in abuſing and beguiling the people of God.

The Ægyptians furniſhed richly and decked their Churches beautifully, and all in the honour of a Cat. Many things among theſe men carrie great ſhew of holineſſe, which are nothing elſe, but cloakes of their ſhame, and manifeſt proofe that they are not allowed of God, but are crept in by deceit, and by guile.

Single life carrieth a faire ſhew. But O mercifull God! what ſhame and villanies haue béne couered with this cloake? Pius ſecundus ſaw ſomewhat, when he ſaid, As Marriage was taken away from Prieſts vpon great conſiderations, ſo now vpon other greater conſiderations it were to be reſtored to them againe. Hierome ſaw ſomwhat when he wrot thus: Platina in Pio 2.

Videas nonnullos accinctos renibus, pulla tunica, barba prolixa, à mulieribus non poſſe diſcedere, ſub eodem manere tecto, ſimul inire conuiuia: ancillas iuuenes habere in miniſterio, & præter vocabulum nuptiarum omnia eſſe matrimonij: You may ſee ſome (that pretend grauity) are girded and goe in blacke, and haue long beards, who can in no wiſe leaue the company of women, but keepe houſe with them, and banket with them. They take yong maides into their ſeruice, and do all things as if they were married, ſaue that they lacke the name of marriage. Caſtitatem docent, & caſtitatem non ſeruant, ſaith Origen: They teach chaſtitie, and yet keepe not chaſtitie. And Epiphan. They refuſe marriage, but not luſt or pleaſure. Ad ruſticum Gallum. Orig. tract. 24. in Matth. Epiph. contra Origenian. hæreſ. 42.

Images are faire and beautifull. The Churches are decked and beſet with them. But they are a cloake of ſhame. They are ſet in place of teachers. The Prieſts are ignorant, and liue in idleneſſe, and ſend the people to learne at pictures. They call them lay mens Bookes: yet, What profiteth the Image? ſaith Abacuc) for the maker thereof hath made it an Image, and a teacher of lies. And Ieremy ſaith, The ſtocke is a doctrine of vanitie. Abac. 2. Ierem. 10.

What is their meaning to ſpeake and pray in the Church in a ſtrange tongue? This is a cloake of their ſhame. Their Prieſts be ſo vnlearned, they can ſcarſe vnderſtand Engliſh, yet they ſaue their credit, ſeeing they are able to read Latine. And hereby they couer all their blaſphemies and ſuperſtitions: becauſe the people cannot vnderſtand, and therefore not reproue them.

I ſpeak nothing of their relikes, pilgrimages, purgatory, and ſuch other cloakes of ſhame, which they vſe to hide their couetouſneſſe, and thereby draw vnto themſelues the riches of the whole world. They cannot ſay with the Apoſtle, our exhortation was not by deceit, nor vncleanneſſe, nor by guile.

I know there are ſome, that lay it vnto our charge, as the falſe Apoſtles did vnto Paul, that we vſe the word of God deceitfully: they find fault with our tranſlations of the Scriptures. They ſpare not to ſay, there be a thouſand faults in the New Teſtament. Yet would they neuer ſet downe 500, or 100, or 50, or 25, or 5.

If there be errors in the Tranſlation, I know they were men which tranſlated it, and might erre like men. May no tranſlation be allowed that is not altogether perfect? as if the Greeke tranſlation were without fault, or as if many faults were not in the common vulgar tranſlation in Latine, or in the tranſlation of Hierom. What then? muſt the Greeke tranſlation be forbidden? Muſt Hieromes tranſlation, or the vulgar tranſlation be forbidden? As for the old Latine cõmon tranſlation, though many learned men haue ſhewed the groſſe errors thereof: yet haue they well prouided for it in the Councell at Trident: Ne quis veterem vulgatam editionem reijcere quouis prætextu audeat, vel præſumat: Let no man dare or preſume (ſay they) by any maner of colour, to refuſe the old common tranſlation of the Bible. Yet is no tranſlation of ours ſo corrupt, as that which they haue thus priuileged. But if it were true which they falſly report: reaſon would, they did correct the errors, and ſo ſet it abroad. But thus they beare you in hand, that they may bring you in hatred of it, and pull you from the reading of the Scriptures. I will not ſay in what ſort they abuſe the word of God. What ſpeake I of abuſing? May they doe manifeſtly againſt, and contrary to the word. The word of God teacheth vs forgiueneſſe of our ſinnes by the blood of Jeſus Chriſt once offered. They teach contrary, that the ſame blood is daily offered, and Chriſt as often new borne, as pleaſeth the Prieſt to ſay Maſſe. The word of God forbiddeth to make any grauen Image, to bow downe to it or worſhip it. They teach contrary, that Images are to be worſhipped, and euen with ſuch honour, as is due to the paterns themſelues. The word of God teacheth vs to pray in a knowen tongue: they teach the contrary, and account it for hereſie to pray in a knowen tongue. The word of God chargeth all ſtates of men to be ſubiect to their Prince or higher power: They withdraw their obedience vnto ciuill Magiſtrates, and teach the people to reſiſt authority. Eraſmus ſaith in his notes vpon theſe words of Chriſt; Let theſe goe their way: Noui quendam magni nominis Theologum, &c. I know a Diuine of great fame and account for his learning, which did wreſt theſe words of Chriſt, to In Eraſ. annot. 18. Iohn.

defend the immunity or lawleſſe eſtate of clergie men. But this did he ridiculè, fondlie or peeuiſhlie: ſaith Eraſmus.

It would be ouer long to declare vnto you the ſolish or rather blaſphemous applying of the Scriptures, to approue their geſtures at Maſſe, and the ſoueraignty & chiefty that they challenge. One of their Biſhops in the late councell of Trent ſaid of Paulus Tertius then Pope, Papa lux venit in mundum, the Pope which is the light, is come into the world. Which are the words of the Euangeliſt, declaring the Godhead of Chriſt. Cornelius Epiſc. Biſont.

By theſe few it may appeare how vniuſtly they charge vs with corrupting the word of God. And how truly this fault is to be laid vnto them, which either abridge the ſenſe of the Scripture, or reach it further than it yeeldeth, or vtterly refuſe to ſtand to the authority thereof, and in no caſe can like that the people of God ſhould read the Scriptures: and haue adiudged them heretikes, and conſumed their bodies in the fire, which haue defended in ſpeech, and ſought to maintaine the doctrine of truth ſet down in the holy Scriptures.

The Apoſtle ſaith: He was allowed of God. They that enter into the miniſtry, muſt be allowed, not of men only, but of God. Therefore whoſoeuer taketh that charge ouer the people, muſt looke narrowly into himſelfe, and ſee whether his calling be of God. If he haue not a teſtimony that God hath called him inwardly, all other outward calling is to ſmall purpoſe. God is a righteous Iudge. He will ſay to the conſcience and to the heart of ſuch a one, Friend how cameſt thou in hither without thy wedding garment? Who brought thee in? Giue an account of thy ſtewardſhip. Thine account is great.

And becauſe ſome are this day to be admitted into this office, let vs pray vnto God for them, that God will allow them, that he will giue them hearts to conceiue, and tongues to ſpeake the truth of God, that they may be the ſeruants of Chriſt, and diſpoſers of the myſteries of God: that they may be the ſalt of the earth, and the light of the world: that they may lay out the Lords mony to his aduantage: and ſo it may be ſaid vnto them: Thou haſt been faithfull in little, I will make thee ruler ouer much, enter into thy maſters ioy. Matth. 25.

VERS. 5. Neither yet did we vſe flattering words, as you know, nor coloured couetouſneſſe, God is record.

VERS. 6. Neither ſought we praiſe of men, neither of you, nor of others.

The ſeruant and meſſenger of God muſt ſo ſpeake, as God ſpeaketh. God ſpeaketh deeply, and to the heart. He lanceth the ſpirit, and woundeth the inward parts. He biddeth Eſay ſhew the people their tranſgreſſions, and the houſe of Iacob their ſinnes: God himſelfe ſaith: I viſit the ſinne of the fathers vpon the children, vnto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me. Againe he ſaith: If ye ſhall diſpiſe my ordinances, either if your ſoule abhor my lawes, ſo that ye will not doe all my commandements, I will ſet my face againſt you, and you ſhall fall before your enemies, and they that hate you ſhall raigne ouer you. But vnto thoſe that repent them of their ſinnes, and turne vnto him, God ſaith: Turne vnto me, and ye ſhall be ſaued. Againe: Thou diſobedient Iſrael, returne ſaith the Lord, and I will not let my wrath fall vpon you. So muſt the miniſter of God, he muſt ſhew forth the mercy of God, and not hide his iudgements. He hath the Lords buſineſſe in hand, he may not doe it negligently. A flatterer maketh it his greateſt care to pleaſe men, he ſeeketh their fauour, he feareth to diſpleaſe, and dareth not ſpeake that, that will be euill taken. When he ſeeth a theefe, he runneth with him, and is partaker with the adulterers: he ſoweth pillowes vnder the armes of ſinners. Whoſoeuer ſaith, nay, his nay is ready: and if any ſay, yea, he is ready to ſay, yea. He changeth often as the Weathercocke. He dareth not ſtrine againſt the ſtreame. His heart is at the will of others. He ſeeketh ſome gaine, he ſeeketh his owne glory, & not the glory of God. They which are ſuch, are called in the ſcriptures, hirelings, dumbe dogs, that cannot barke. They deny God, betray his truth, and deceiue the people. They locke vp the truth in lies. Of ſuch the ſpirit of God ſaith: Woe vnto them that haue a double heart, and to the wicked lips. And: A double minded man, is inconſtant in all his waies. And: He that is not with me is againſt me: And, He that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth. And: How long halt ye betweene two opinions? if the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal be he, then goe after him. And againe: What communion hath light with darkneſſe? and what concord hath Chriſt with Belial? Curſed is he which flattereth the people, and is vnfaithfull in the Lords worke. Eccle. 2. Iames 1. Luke 11. 1. King. 18. 2. Cor. 6.

Nothing is ſo requiſite in the ſteward of God, as that he be found faithfull, and that he ſpeake thoſe things whereunto the Lord hath ſent him, boldly. That they keepe not backe the meſſage giuen them of God, nor feare to doe their errand, for any malice of men. Who is it (ſaith S. Peter) that will harme you, if you follow that which is good? notwithſtanding, bleſſed are ye, if ye ſuffer for righteouſneſſe ſake: yea, feare not their feare, neither be troubled. If the Apoſtle ſpeake this comfort to all Chriſtians, which haue a care to ſerue God, 1. Pet. 3.

and thereby exhorteth them to ſtedfaſtneſſe, and to ſanctifie the Lord in their hearts, and to be ready to giue an account of their faith, and of the hope that is in them: how much more ought Preachers and they which are appointed to the Miniſtery lay aſide all feare and flattery of men? Woe vnto them that goe down into Ægypt for helpe. The Ægyptians are men, and not God; and their Horſes fleſh, and not ſpirit: and when the Lord ſhall ſtretch out his hand, the helper ſhall fall, and he that is holpen ſhall fall, and they ſhall all together faile.

Chriſt telleth his Diſciples, they are ſalt, and they are light. Salt muſt néds be ſharpe to a rotten wound. Light muſt néds be painfull to a ſore eie. A good Phyſitian muſt néds trouble and diſquiet his ſicke Patient, before he can heale his diſeaſe: and a good Surgion muſt néds launce and rip vp feſtered wounds. We are Surgions, we are Phyſitians. The word of God is committed vnto vs, that by vs it might be applied to ſeaſon the earth, and that the light therof ſhould ſhine forth in all the world. Crie out aloud, liſt vp thy voice as a trumpet. If the trumpet giue an vncertaine ſound, who ſhall prepare himſelfe to the battell? When God had called Ieremie to the office of a Prophet, and ſaid: Thou ſhalt goe to all that I ſhall ſend thee, and whatſoeuer I command thee, ſhalt thou ſpeake: He ſaid further: Feare not their faces, leſt I deſtroy thee before them. For behold this day, I haue made thee a defenſed City, and an iron pillar, and wals of braſſe againſt the whole land. Thou ſhalt not bend, thou ſhalt not yéld. Thou ſhalt be a conſuming fire, they ſhall be ſtubble before thée. Likewiſe ſaith God to Abraham: Feare not Abraham, I am thy buckler, and thine exceeding great reward. When Moſes ſought to refuſe the meſſage, and thought himſelfe ouer ſimple to goe vnto Pharao, God anſwered, Certainly I will be with thee. And after he ſaith: I haue made thee Pharaos God, he ſhall tremble and quake at thy voice. So ſaith Chriſt: What I tell you in darkneſſe, that ſpeake you in light, and what yee heare in the eare, that preach yee on the houſes. And feare ye not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoule: but rather feare him which is able to deſtroy both ſoule and body in hell.

The conſideration héreof euer moued the Prophets and Apoſtles to warrant their ſayings with authority from God, and to ſet apart all feare when they ſpeake in his name. When Ahab reproued Elias: Art thou he that troubleth Iſrael? He anſwered: I haue not troubled Iſrael, but thou and thy Fathers houſe, in that yee haue forſaken the commandements of the Lord, and thou haſt followed Baalim. The Prophet Eſay is bold with the Princes of Iudah and Ieruſalem, and ſaith: Heare the word of the Lord, O Princes of Sodome, hearken vnto the Law of our God, ô people of Gomorrha. Iohn the Baptiſt, nothing feared to tell Herod a mighty Prince, It is not lawfull for thee to haue her to wife. If Balaac would giue me his houſe full of ſiluer and gold, ſaith Balaam, I cannot paſſe the commandement of the Lord, to do good or bad of mine owne mind: What the Lord ſhall command, that ſame will I ſpeak. Moſes was bid to tell Pharao: The Lord God of the Hebrewes hath ſent mee vnto thee. Chriſt calleth Iames and Iohn, the ſonnes of Zebedeus, Boanerges, which is, the ſonnes of thunder, becauſe they ſhould not flatter, but raiſe tempeſt, and lighten and thunder in the eares and hearts of their hearers.

S. Paul ſaith: I am not aſhamed of the Goſpell of Chriſt, for it is the power of God vnto ſaluation to euery one that beleeueth. It is the word of God, and ſhall endure for euer. He hath not giuen vs the ſpirit of feare to flatter, but the ſpirit of might and of power, to ſpeake roughly and courageouſly, where occaſion ſo requireth. And therfore ſaith: If I would pleaſe men, I were not the ſeruant of Chriſt. But I preach Gods doctrine, and not the doctrine of men: I ſéke to pleaſe God, and not men.

Rom. 1.

The Phariſies ſought to pleaſe men, and to deceiue the people. They taught them to walke in the waies of their forefathers, to beléeue, as they beléeued, to do as they had done. They flattered them, and ſaid, You are the Church of God, You are Gods people, You are the ſonnes of Abraham, You cannot erre, You cannot be deceiued. They that in this ſort flatter the people & deceiue them, they ſerue not Ieſus Chriſt, but their belly, and through flattery and faire ſpéch ſeduce the hearts of the ſimple.

Nor coloured couetouſneſſe. The Scribes & the Phariſies deuoured vp widowes houſes vnder pretence of their long prayers. They prayed, and made money of their prayers. They gaue almes, and made money of their almeſgining. They faſted and made money of their faſting. This did the Scribes and the Phariſies. Their doings continue ſtill. They be dead, their name is taken away, but their profeſſion abideth. As they made gaines of their prayers, and almes, and faſting, ſo do ſome now make great gaines, and wax rich vnder pretence of holineſſe. They haue brought in a profeſſion of wilfull chaſtity, and forbidden marriage in ſome whole eſtate of men. No doubt chaſtity is a holy thing. But they haue giuen licence for money, to ſuch as would, to forſake their vow of chaſtity. They haue forbidden to eat certaine meats vpon certain daies. God left meats as frée to the choice of euery man, as he left his ſun to ſhine frély to the vſe of all men. And they make frée liberty for money, to eat what euery man liketh. They make money of Purgatorie, money of Pardons, and money of their Maſſes. They make money of Peter and of Paul, of the Apoſtles and Martyrs, and of Chriſt himſelfe. Theſe are they of whom S. Peter ſpeaketh: Through couetouſneſſe ſhall they with fained words make merchandiſe of you. 2. Pet. 2. One ſaith of them: Curia Romana non captat ouem ſine lana: The Court of Rome careth not for that ſheepe, that hath no fleece. I will not lay forth at large, how they do all things for couetouſneſſe. I haue no pleaſure in ſpeaking ill. God grant vs to deliuer the Goſpell aright, that we vſe not the truth of God for a cloke of couetouſneſſe.

Neither ſought we praiſe of men, neither of you, nor of others. This is another hinderance of the courſe of the Goſpell, when the Miniſters thereof loue the praiſe of men more than the praiſe of God. How can ye beleeue (ſaith Chriſt) which receiue honor one of another, and ſeeke not the honour that commeth of God alone? Ioh. 5. How farre the Apoſtle was from this ambition, it appeared. For he was reuiled and euill ſpoken of, and counted the filth and out caſt of the World.

VERS. 7. When we might haue been chargeable, as the Apoſtles of Chriſt: but we were gentle among you, euen as a nurce cheriſheth her children.

8. Thus being affectioned to you, our good will was to haue dealt vnto you, not the Goſpell of God only, but alſo our owne ſoules, becauſe yee were deare vnto vs.

9. For ye remember, brethren, our labour and trauell: for we laboured day and night, becauſe we would not be chargeable vnto any of you, and preached vnto you the Goſpell of God.

10. You are witneſſes, and God, how holily, and iuſtly, and vnblameably, wee behaued our ſelues among you that beleeue.

I might haue required meat and drinke, and other things neceſſary at your hands. For who feedeth a flocke, and eateth not of the milke of the flocke? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? who goeth a warfare at any time of his own coſt? who muzleth the mouth of the Ox that treadeth out corne? We plant the vineyeard of the Lord of hoſts. We feed Chriſts flocke. We go to warfare, and ſtand in the watch and defenſe of your ſafety. We are the poore Oxen that tread out the corne, which will feed you to ſaluation. We are your ſeruants, we labour to doe you good, we are ordained to miniſter in the Church of God. It were great reaſon we ſhould reape your carnall things, which haue ſowen to you ſpirituall things. The workman is worthy his wages. Yet taught I the Goſpell freely, and without reward, and was ready to giue my blood, my life, and my ſoule out of my body for your ſakes. What could you aſke of me more? what greater gift could I beſtow vpon you?

VERS. 11. And ye know how that we exhorted you, and comforted, and beſought euery one of you (as a father his children.)

12. That ye would walke worthy of God, who hath called you to his kingdome and glory.

I take care of you as of mine own ſoule, and deale with you by all waies of comfort, and exhortation, that you would take heed vnto your ſelues, and your calling. I do put you in minde, that you were placed in the middeſt of the vnfaithfull people, which knew not God: and that they watched you and your doing: that their eie was vpon your houſhold, your wiues, your ſeruants, and your children: vpon your ſelues, and your words, to eſpie if they might finde any occaſion to ſpeak euill of you. I did beſeech you by the glorious comming of our Lord & Sauior Jeſus Chriſt, that the name of God might not be ill ſpoken of through you. You cannot deny this. You muſt needs confeſſe, you haue thus beene taught. Ignorance cannot be your excuſe. What remaineth then? but that you performe it. For, The ſeruant that knoweth his maſters will, and doth it not, ſhall beaten with many ſtripes.

As a father his children. What maner care is it that the father taketh of his children? Many men are fathers of children: but what man taketh the care he ought to take for them? Paſtours or teachers of the people ſhould be affected towards their people, as fathers are to their naturall children.

Let ſuch as are fathers, and haue children, know in what ſort they muſt be carefull. Your children are a good bleſſing of God, they be members of the body of Chriſt, and the ſonnes of God. The kingdome of heauen belongeth to them. God hath appointed his Angels to guide and lead them, and to ſhield them from euill: and their Angels be in the preſence of God, and doe behold the face of their Father which is in Heauen. They be freſh plants of the Church. Who knoweth what necessarie instruments they may be in the Common wealth, and in the house of God? It is not enough to feed them, and to nourish their bodies with necessary sustenance. For this do the Heathen that know not God: and the sauage and brute beasts, and the birds which haue no vnderstanding. They bred vp their yong ones, and are tender and painfull to prouide for them. The Asse though she be dull; the Beare and Lion, though they be wilde and cruell, yet seeke they farre and neere to get wherewith to helpe their yong. Therefore if there be any, or can be any, which doth forsake and leaue his owne, he is more beastly than the foolish Asse, and more vnnaturall than most cruell Beares, and Lions, and Tigres.

But in this part men are for the most part ouer carefull. For this cause many build their houses with blood, and seeke possessions by iniquity: they ioine house to house, and field to field, and will dwell alone vpon the earth: they oppresse the poore and needy, and do wrong to the widow and the fatherlesse: they make money their God, and spoile one another: and all to prouide for their children. This is the couer and cloake for all their mischiefe, they may not leaue their children vnprouided. Vnhappie are the fathers, which in this sort care for their children by the ruine and spoile of the needy and innocent, and so breake the commandement of God: because their portion shall be with the wicked in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. And vnhappy are their children, because they are partakers of their fathers wickednesse, and therefore shal also be partakers of punishment with them.

Psal. 37. The Prophet Dauid saith: I haue seene the wicked strong, and spreading himselfe like a greene Bay tree. Yet he passed away, and loe, he was gone, and I sought him, but he could not be found. His rot was deepe, his stocke strong, his branches broad, he spread ouer and shadowed the whole Countrey, yet he passed away. He departed, his sonnes died, his house soone decaied, and his name was in little time quite forgotten.

Oh how much better then is it to furnish the minds of your children, and to instruct them in godlinesse, to teach them to know God, to lead their life vertuously, and to rebuke them, and correct them for dealing ill!

The beginning of wisedome is the feare of God. Let them then learne what that good and acceptable will of God is. Shew them the way in which they should walke, that they goe neither to the right hand, nor to the left. The word of God is pure and giueth vnderstanding to the simple: it is a light to their footsteps: it teacheth those that are yong to amend their waies.

Matth. 21. When Christ came into Ierusalem, the yong children receiued him. They cried Ozanna to the sonne of Dauid: Blessed is he that commeth in the name of the Lord. Christ giueth witnesse of them: By the mouth of babes and sucklings, hast thou set foorth thy praise. The words of the little and simple children were able to confound the wisedome of the Pharisies. Thus were they taught from their cradle, so carefull were their godly Parents for them.

Contrariwise, they cannot haue any wisedome, that despise the Law of the Lord. They become blinde, and wicked, and abhominable in all their waies. They haue no sense nor feeling of the will of God. They cannot know light from darknesse, nor God from Belial.

2. King. 2. Such were the little children that mocked the Prophet Elizeus, and said to him, Come vp thou bald head, Come vp thou bald head. Their bringing vp was no better. Their wicked Fathers had taught them nothing else but wantonnesse. But the wrath of God fell vpon them, and there were destroied by two Beares two and forty of them.

Another care which a Father ought to haue of his children, is to lead them vp in the studie of vertue, and of godly life. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. They

Matth. 5. which keepe not this way, are the children of wrath. Herein standeth the whole profession

1. Thess. 4. of a Christian life. For God hath not called vs to vncleannesse, but vnto holinesse. This is the will of God, and this is our promise made vnto him, that we serue him in holinesse and righteousnesse all the daies of our life, that we increase in vertue, and grow from grace to grace.

A good and louing Father, which sendeth his sonne to a dangerous iourney, either by sea or land, first instructeth him with aduice, and telleth him in what sort he shall auoid perils. Take heed, saith he, the way is perillous, which thou must passe. The sea is terrible. The waues rise vp as high as Heauen, and by and by thou shalt see a pit as low as Hell. The sands may swallow thee, the rockes may destroy thee. Thou shalt passe by huge mountaines, and thorow wildernesse, where theeues will assault thee. Thy heart will quake. Thou shalt crie for succour, and find no man to helpe thee. In these and these places hath many a good mans child beene cast away. Oh take heed my sonne, thou art the staffe and the comfort of mine age: If ought come to thee otherwise than well, I shall soone after end my daies in sorrow.

If

If a Father be thus careſull, that his child ſhould eſcape worldly dangers, he muſt bee more careſull of ſpirituall dangers, in which whoſoeuer is loſt, is loſt for euer. Therefore, thus will he ſay to him: Oh my ſonne, vnderſtand what God hath done for thy ſake. Take heed to thy ſelfe. The world is all ouer ſtrawed with ſnares. The Diuell rangeth, and ſeeketh whom he may deuoure. Giue no ground to him, but reſiſt him, and he will flee from thee. Be ſtrong in faith. The name of the Lord is a ſtrong tower of defence. Call vpon him in the day of thy trouble, and he will deliuer thee. He will giue thee of his ſpirit.

Take heed my Son, and be not deceiued: let no wilfulneſſe caſt thee away. If ſinners entice thee, be not a companion of them in wickedneſſe. Faſhion not thy ſelfe to the likeneſſe of this world: for the world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof. He that loueth this world, the loue of God is not in him. Be not like vnto them that periſh. Thou waſt conceiued, and borne in ſinne, thou art by nature the child of wrath. But God made thee meet to be partaker of the inheritance of the Saints in light, and hath deliuered thee from the power of darkneſſe, and hath tranſlated thee into the kingdome of his deere Sonne. Receiue not this grace in vaine. Caſt away the workes of darkneſſe, and put on the armour of light. Be renued in thy heart and in thy ſpirit, that it may appeare I haue been careſull for thee. Thus a good father ſeeketh to traine vp his ſonne, and to nurture him.

Beſides theſe, fathers muſt alſo be careſull for their children, to giue them correction, and chaſtiſement. God knoweth the mould of mans heart. He ſeeth our inward parts. He hath ſaid it in the beginning: The imagination of mans heart is euill from his youth. He did ſee that all the imaginations of the thoughts of his heart were only euill continually. Gen. 8. Gen. 5. Behold mans nature, and conſider it euen from our firſt birth. How full of affections, how wayward is the yong child, which lieth in the cradle! His body is but ſmall, but he hath a great heart, and is altogether inclined to euill. And the more he waxeth in reaſon by yeares, the more he groweth proud, froward, wilfull, vnruly, and diſobedient. If this ſparkle bee ſuffered to increaſe, it will rage ouer, and burne downe the whole houſe. We are not borne good, but by edutation we are changed, and become good.

Therefore the wiſe man ſaith: Fooliſhneſſe is bound in the heart of a child: but the rod of correction ſhall driue it away from him. Prou. 22. And againe: The rod and correction giue wiſedome: but a child ſet at libertie maketh his mother aſhamed. Prou. 29. And in the ſame Chapter: Correct thy ſonne and he will giue thee reſt, and will giue pleaſures vnto thy ſoule. He that ſpareth the rod hateth the child. For, If thou bring vp thy ſonne delicately, he ſhall make thee afraid: and if thou plaie with him, he ſhall bring thee to heauineſſe. Bow downe his necke, whiles he is yong, and beat him on the ſides while he is a child, leſt he wax ſtubborne, and be diſobedient vnto thee, and bring ſorrow to thine heart, ſaith Salomon. Eccle. 30.

Who hath not heard the ſtory of Elie and of his Sonnes? It is worthy to be remembred for euer. He had wicked children, they feared not God, but brake his commandements, and offended the people. Their father heard of their doings, but toke no care for it: he ſuffered them, and let them alone. So long, that God grew diſpleaſed thereat, and called vnto Samuel, and ſaid: Behold, I will doe a thing in Iſrael, whereof whoſoeuer ſhall heare, his two eares ſhall tingle. In that day I will raiſe vp againſt Elie all things which I haue ſpoken concerning his houſe: when I begin I will alſo make an end. And I haue told him, that I will iudge his houſe for euer, for the iniquitie which he knoweth, becauſe his ſonnes ran into a ſlander, and he ſtaied them not. And it came to paſſe ſhortly after: The Arke of God was taken by the Philiſtines, and the two ſonnes of Elie, Hophni and Phinees died. And Elie alſo when he heard the report thereof, fell from his ſeat backward, and his necke was broken. Such ſhame and confuſion came vpon him. This was the hand and iudgement of God: in ſparing his children, he caſt away his children and himſelfe all together. 1. Sam. 3. 1. Sam. 4.

But Iob dealt far otherwiſe with his children, his eie was vpon them, and he toke care leſt they ſhould offend God. He ſanctified them, and offered burnt offerings for them daily. For Iob thought, it may be that my ſonnes haue ſinned, and blaſphemed God in their hearts. Therefore he praied for them. My ſonnes (ſaith he) are yong and tender, and lacke diſcretion. The waies wherein they walke are ſlippery, they may ſone be deceiued and run into danger. O Lord be thou their guide, bee thou vnto them a Tower of defence, let thy holy ſpirit goe before them to direct them in all their waies. So mindfull was he of his children. Iob 1.

Infancie is the firſt part of our life, and as it were the foundation thereof. Where a vertuous and a godly childhood goeth before, there a godly and vertuous age followeth after. Contrariwiſe, when the Fathers are not careſull to teach their children to know God, and to know themſelues: when they doe not bred them vp in vertue: nor reproue them when they doe amiſſe; they become corrupt in their vnderſtanding, and abominable in their doings, void of all knowledge, and grace, and of reuerence, or feeling of nature.

VERS.

VERS. 13. For this cause also thanke we God, without ceasing, that when you receiued of vs the word of the preaching of God, ye receiued it not as the word of men, but as it is indeed, the word of God, which also worketh in you that beleeue.

As the Ministers duty is to teach the word of God, and diuide it aright, without deceit or guile: so ought the people to receiue it with reuerence, and to giue obedience vnto it. But herein haue we not power of our selues, our readinesse commeth of God; vnlesse it please God to worke within vs, and to remoue the vaile, and to mollifie our hearts, whatsoeuer we heare, it moueth vs not, it helpeth not our vnbeléefe, it bringeth vs not to the obedience of Christ.

If an earthly Prince speake, or send message vnto vs, we giue all shew of reuerence, and heare him with all diligence. This word is not of flesh and blod, it proceedeth not from Kings, or Emperors, or from Parliament, or from Counsels of men: but from God the Father, and from Iesus Christ. When this word is read, Princes and Emperors stand vp, and lay downe their sword, and vncouer their head, and bow their body, and doe reuerence, because they know it is the word of God, which God himselfe vttered, that it should be as the dew of Heauen to moisten our soules, as a well of water springing vp to euerlasting life: as a sauour of life vnto life: and the very power of God vnto saluation to euery one that beléeueth. Without this word we can receiue no comfort, we cannot see the light, nor grow in faith, nor abide in the Church of God. It is the word of reconciliation. By it God maketh attonement betweene himselfe, and the Sonnes of men.

Therefore when the Epistles, the Psalmes, the Chapters, and the Gospell are read in our hearing, let vs remember whose word we heare. Let vs thinke thus with our selues: These are the words of our gratious God. By God openeth his mouth from heauen aboue. He speaketh to me, that I may be saued: he speaketh to me, to kéepe me from error; to comfort me in the aduersities & troubles of this life: and to lead me to the life to come.

What is the cause why so many so little regard the word of God; why they doubt it, and suspect it; why they are so sone weary of it, and beare it not that reuerence, that belongeth to it? Because they thinke not, neither from whom it commeth, nor with whose blod it is sealed, nor to whose benefit it is written. Let vs not be ashamed to giue place to the word of God, to awake our senses, and to submit them, and our wisedome, and learning, and bodies, and soules vnto it. Let vs not harden our hearts. Let vs humble our selues before
2. King. 15. God, and say, Behold heare am I, let him doe to me as seemeth good in his eies.

Which also worketh in you that beleeue. Whosoeuer heareth the words of God, and doth them not, shall be likened to a foolish man that builded his house vpon the sand. If yee Iohn 13. know these things (saith Christ) blessed are yee, if yee doe them. The same word of God which Paul taught the Thessalonians, which was preached by Peter, and the rest of the Apostles to the faithfull, which Christ receiued of his Father, and deliuered to his Church, is this day by the mercy of God purely, and truly set downe vnto you. By it you are required to amend your liues, and comforted in the promises of God to the forgiuenesse of your sinnes. If there be any, in whom it worketh not this effect: if there be any, which (though they heare it,) beléeue it not, nor are thereby renued in their mindes: it is a token, that they haue not receiued the loue of the truth of the Gospell: they despise the word of saluation, and it shall iudge them in that day.

VERS. 14. For Brethren, you are become followers of the Churches of God, which in Iudea are in Christ Iesus, because yee haue also suffered the same things of your owne country men, euen as they of the Iewes.

15. Who both killed the Lord Iesus and their owne Prophets, and haue persecuted vs, and God they please not, and are contrarie to all men.

16. And forbid vs to preach vnto the Gentiles, that they might be saued, to fulfill their sinnes alwaies. For the wrath of God is come on them to the vtmost.

Wherein became they followers? In suffering as they did. This is the badge, and cog-
Luk. 9. nizance of the Sons of God. Christ saith: If any man will come after me, let him denie himselfe, and take vp his Crosse daily, and follow me. They followed others, not in pleasure, and glory, but in trouble and persecution. For that was the way of the Prophets, and Apostles, and of Christ himselfe.

Esay the Prophet, was cut in sunder with a saw. What more cruell death? His body was rent, his bowels torne, & yet he not quite dead. In such sort it liked the cruell tormenters to sport themselues. Why? what had he done? he was a Prophet. They néded no other matter against him. It was enough, that they found him to be a prophet. Ieremy was stoned to death.

death. Wherefore? Becauſe he called the people to repentance, that they might be ſaued: becauſe he was a Prophet. Amos was ſlaine with a bar, poore old man. No reuerence giuen to his gray head, no regard or pity was taken of him. Wherefore? Becauſe he rebuked iniquity: becauſe he was a Prophet. Zacherie was ſlaine when he was in his prayers, and doing ſacrifice in the holy place, betwéen the entrance and the altar. Wherefore? Becauſe he declared the truth: becauſe he was a Prophet.

This hath béen the malice and hatred of the Diuell. The Prince of the darkneſſe of this world hath raged ſo euen from the beginning. By this meanes he hath ſought to deface the truth and glory of God, and to eſtabliſh his owne kingdome in ſhedding the blod and murthering the Saints of God.

The Churches of God in Iudea were miſerably vexed and afflicted, they were hated of all men, and counted vnworthy of life. Wherefore? Becauſe they turned to the true and liuing God, and did beléeue in the name of Jeſus Chriſt. Therefore they were ſtript, ſpoiled, headed, quartred, drowned, burnt and put to moſt reprochfull death. Who would become their followers? Who would willingly learne to be ſo perſecuted, and made gazing ſtockes to all the world? yet this diſcouraged not the Theſſalonians. They were a thouſand miles diſtant from Iudea, but were ioined in fellowſhip of the Goſpell, and in brotherly loue vnto them. They heard of their mildneſſe and of their conſtancy, and were ſtirred vp by their example. They did hearken after them, and were carefull for them, as for their brethren, and the members of the ſame body.

You haue heard what numbers of late haue béen perſecuted and put to death among vs. Wherefore? Becauſe they turned from Idols to ſerue God as hée hath commanded, and did put their truſt in him. You haue heard how patiently and meekly they went to their death, and what a plentifull harueſt God hath raiſed of their blod. For the death of his Saints is precious in the ſight of the Lord. Their blod cannot be ſpent in vaine. We muſt remember their patience and zeale, and the cauſe why they ſuffered. We muſt not deſpiſe, or ſet light by the Goſpell of Jeſus Chriſt, for which they ſo ioyfully gaue their liues.

And it is not enough that we bé mindfull of ſuch examples as we haue had at home: We muſt alſo carefully conſider of other Churches abroad. God hath kindled a fire: hée will haue it burne. O what torments do our brethren daily ſuffer! What cruelty is deuiſed daily againſt them? I ſpeake not of death only, but of rackings, and wonderfull extremities, more painfull than death. Wherefore are theſe things done vnto them? Becauſe they are turned to the true and liuing God, and beléeue in the name of Jeſus Chriſt. Some they hang by the hands, and draw vp with a pully, and bind great waights of lead at their héeles to rent them, and teare their bodies aſunder. Some they haue tied vnto great péeces of timber, and haue put fire at the ſoales of their fét. They haue opened their mouthes, and made them draw in Lawne into their body. A thing moſt cruell, and yet which they haue practiſed: the maner whereof hath béen thus reported. They lay it ſo far in the mouth, that a mans breath eaſily draweth it into his body, and ſo it is conueied into the ſtomacke. When it is well ſetled, then commeth the tormentor and taketh the Lawne by the other end, and raſheth it ſuddenly with ſuch a force, as it ſéemeth he doth plucke out the very heart and entrailes: ſuch a rare and ſtrange kind of cruelty as is not practiſed vpon moſt notorious rebels and traitors. As for death, forty or fifty at one time haue béene heaped together, and burnt in one fire. They haue ſet vpon the ſeruants of God, and compaſſed the Church where they haue aſſembled together to pray vnto God, and murthered them in their innocency, whiles they lifted vp pure hands vnto God. The French King, by the counſell of ſuch as hate the Goſpell of Chriſt, ſent his cruell ſouldiers, and murthered his ſubiects at Valois. He ouerthrew their houſes, burnt their Towne, deſtroied man, woman and child: ſpoiled their corne, and turned their trées vpſide downe. Hée walled, defaced, and vnpeopled it, not for that they were théeues or rebels: but becauſe they beléeued in the name of Chriſt. Conſider how many are murthered in Flanders, and in the kingdome of France. They are not ſo far from vs, as Iudea from Theſſalonica. They ioine next vnto vs. God is bleſſed in his Saints, and holy in all his workes, no cruelty is able to quench his truth. There is no counſell, which ſhall preuaile againſt the Lord. Hée giueth increaſe, and placeth children in ſtead of their fathers. The more are ſlaine by the enemies, the more ſpring vp by the working of his Spirit. The more are hewen downe, the more multiply. We may not be ſtrangers in this caſe. It behoueth vs to conſider the afflictions of our brethren. They belong vnto vs: We muſt pray to God for them, that he will put an end to their miſeries: otherwiſe, we haue not the ſpirit of God, wée beare no loue, nor care for his houſe.

Of your countriemen. This was the greateſt, and heanieſt part of their troubles. For what what a hearts greefe is it to the Father, if his ſonne riſe vp againſt him? or to the Son to ſee his father ready to betray him, and to ſeeke his blood? Where this is done, hee will ſay, O father I am thy Son, alas what haue I done to haue thy diſpleaſure? death is bitter, but thy diſpleaſure is more bitter than death. It were a cruell thing, that any man ſhould kill another: what is it then, if thou ſhouldſt kill thine owne child? yet if thou be ſo bent, take my life and ſpare my conſcience: ſpare my ſoule, that I may deliuer it vp into his hands that hath giuen it mee. I would be obedient vnto thee, thou art my father, but I may not diſobey God. He is the father of fathers. He hath ſaid: He that loueth father or mother more than me, he is not worthy of me. It is a miſerable caſe when perſecution groweth ſo hot, that the child is driuen to forſake his father, or the father his child: yet ſo doth the world blind many, and Satan ſo poſſeſſeth their harts, that he turneth their loue into hatred, and ſhutteth their ſenſes, and choaketh and dammeth vp the ſprings of nature. They become ſo blinde, and ſo vnſenſible, that they neither faile their owne fleſh, nor know their owne blood. They thinke in ſo doing they doe God good ſeruice. They are enemies to the truth. They are the enemies of the Croſſe of Chriſt: their end is deſtruction.

Matth. 10.

And forbid vs to preach vnto the Gentiles, that they might be ſaued. This is the end whereunto the Goſpell is giuen, that the people ſhould be ſaued. S. Paul ſaith: God will that all men ſhall be ſaued, and come to the knowledge of the truth. Therefore our Sauior appointed his Apoſtles to this office of preaching his word, ſaying: Goe and preach the Goſpell vnto all nations. Goe vnto the loſt ſheepe of Iſrael. He ſaith: It is not the will of my Father that one of theſe little ones ſhould periſh. Whoſoeuer beleeueth and ſhall be baptized, ſhall be ſaued. S. Iames exhorteth the faithfull: Receiue with meekneſſe the word that is graffed in you, which is able to ſaue your ſoules. By it we heare the ſweet voice of our Sauiour: Come vnto me all yee that trauell and be heauily loaden, and I will refreſh you. By it, we heare the mercifull calling of God: Turne vnto me, and yee ſhall be ſaued: By it we are warned to depart from the company of ſuch as are enemies to the truth: and to haue no fellowſhip with the vnfruitfull workes of darkneſſe: Saue your ſelues, ſaith S. Peter, from this froward generation: By it we are taught to beleeue that Jeſus Chriſt is the Sonne of God: that his name is Jeſus, becauſe he ſhall ſaue his people from their ſinnes: and that there is not ſaluation in any other beſides him. For faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. This is therefore the duty of the Preacher, to preach vnto the people: that ſo they may be ſaued: that they may know the waies of God, that they may repent them of their ſinnes, and be renued vnto godlineſſe.

Acts 2.

Who would thinke there were any that would hinder the courſe of the Goſpell? or forbid to preach it vnto the people? The Apoſtle here laieth that fault to the Iewes: That they forbid him to preach to the Gentiles. The ſame fault Chriſt found in the Scribes and Phariſies: Woe be to you, interpreters of the Law: for yee haue taken away the key of knowledge: yee entred not in your ſelues, and them that came in yee forbad. Such there haue been alwaies, and ſuch there are now. O ſay they, why ſhould the people know theſe things? what ſhould they meddle with the Scriptures? let them doe their buſineſſe, and apply their occupations. It is not reaſon, nor fit, that euery one ſhould be learned. When they thinke they know ſomewhat, they become proud, and deuiſe hereſies and maintaine them: as if God had not left them to inſtruct the people: or, as if the holy Scriptures, and not the malice of Sathan, were the cauſe of hereſies.

Luk. 11.

But God hath ſaid: Gather the people together: men, and women, and children, and thy ſtranger that is within thy gates, that they may heare, and that they may learne, and feare the Lord your God, and keepe and obſerue all the words of this Law. The Prophet Dauid thought it meet the people ſhould know the Scriptures, therefore ſaid: Bleſſed is that man whoſe delight is in the Law of the Lord, and in that Law doth exerciſe himſelfe day and night. And againe: Wherewith ſhall a yong man redreſſe his waies? In keeping thy words.

Deut. 31.

When Chriſt himſelfe came firſt into the world to plant his Church, he vouchſafed the poore and ſimple the knowledge of his truth, and ſhewed it firſt vnto them. The firſt that had tydings of his birth, were not Scribes and Phariſies, but a company of poore ſhepheards. The firſt that receiued his Goſpell and taught it in the world, were not Doctors or learned men, but fiſhers, and toll-gatherers, and of baſe condition. The firſt that met him with triumph at Ieruſalem, and ſang Ozanna, were not Biſhops and Prieſts, but babes and infants. They that followed him moſt, and beleeued, were not the greateſt men of power and policie, but ſuch, as the Phariſies termed, a curſed people, which knew not the Law. The firſt that told the Apoſtles the reſurrection of Chriſt, were not the ſageſt and wiſeſt men, but two or three ſilly women. The firſt that were conuerted to the faith after his reſurrection, reſurrection, were not any of the great learned or otherwiſe eſteemed, and knowen amor g the people, but about 3000. poore, ſilly, ſimple men, ſo baſe, and ſo out of knowledge, that not one of their names could euer be knowen.

Why ſhould any man reſiſt the wiſedome of God: and deny the people the bread whereon they ſhould feed: the light by which they may ſafely walke: the hearing and reading of the word, by which they may be turned to God from Idols to ſerue the liuing and true God? They haue cruell hearts, and are enemies to the glory of God, and to the ſaluation of his people, which in ſuch ſort deny them the knowledge of the Scriptures.

To fulfill their ſinnes alwaies. They haue refuſed the word of reconciliation, they are not contented that they haue ſtoned the Prophets, and killed them that were ſent to them, but they yet reſiſt the holy Goſpell, and deuiſe meanes to keepe all others from the comfort thereof. This is a token of Gods heauy diſpleaſure vpon them, that they repent not of their former euils, but grow worſe and worſe. When the Scribes and Phariſies ſeemed to miſlike the cruelty of their fathers, and ſaid, if they had been in their daies, they would not haue been partners with them in the blood of the Prophets; our Sauiour maketh their hypocriſie knowen, that herein they ſhould be like to their fathers, for they ſhould kill and crucifie the Prophets and wiſe men, and ſcourge them in their ſynagogues, & perſecute them from City to City, and ſaid to them: Fulfill ye alſo the meaſure of your fathers. The cauſe Matth. 23. of this iudgement of God in giuing ouer the wicked to increaſe the heape of their ſinnes, the Apoſtle ſetteth downe to the Romanes: As they regarded them not to know God, God Rom. 1.
deliuered them vp to a reprobate mind to doe thoſe things which are not conuenient. For ſo he ſometimes puniſheth our ſinnes, and ſuffereth the wicked to heape ſinne vpon ſinne, that ſo their damnation may be the greater.

For the wrath of God is come on them to the vtmoſt. Though God bee patient, and long ſuffering, becauſe he would haue all men come to repentance: yet in whom his mercy taketh no place to worke their amendment, vpon them hee powreth out his wrath and indignation to the vtmoſt. He meaneth not, that all the whole nation of the Iewes were ſo caſt out of the fauour of God, that neuer any of them ſhall be ſaued: for in another place hee ſaith: Hath God caſt away his people? God forbid. For I my ſelfe am an Iſraelite, of the Rom. 11.
ſeed of Abraham, of the tribe of Beniamin. God hath not caſt away his people, which he knew before. But miſerable ſhall be their end, and a terrible damnation ſhall they haue, whoſoeuer withſtand the truth of God, and to the reſt of their wickedneſſe, ioine ſuch a hatred, and deſpightfull contempt of the poore, and ſimple ſort of the people, that they keepe them from the holeſome words of doctrine, and forbid ſuch as are willing to preach vnto them. This is their condemnation, that light came into the world, and they loued darkneſſe better than light. They perſecute vs (ſaith S. Paul) and forbid vs to preach vnto the Gentiles, that they might be ſaued: to fulfill their ſinnes alwaies: for the wrath of God is come on them to the vtmoſt.

VERS. 17. Foraſmuch brethren, as wee were kept from you for a ſeaſon, concerning ſight, but not in heart, we enforced the more to ſee your face with great deſire.

18. Therefore we would haue come vnto you, (I Paul, at leaſt once or twice) but Satan hindred vs.

He told them before how deerly and tenderly hee loued them, exhorting, comforting, and beſeeching euery one of them, as a Father his children. Hee taking care, leſt by any meanes they ſhould doubt of his great good will towards them. And therefore doth both witneſſe the ſame, and ſhew them through what cauſe, he hath ſtaied from them. Such a zeale, and care had he ouer the people. O in what caſe then are they, that are careleſſe and make no regard of the people of God! which hunt after many liuings, and bend not themſelues to doe good; which ſerue their owne belly, and ſeeke to be rich, and eat vp the people of God, as if they were bread. They cannot ſay, they haue a deſire to ſee the face of their flocks, and that their heart is with them. Howſoeuer they find time for other matters, they can neuer take time to know their charge, and to doe the worke of their Miniſterie among them. They care not for them, they thinke not of them. They plant not, they water not, they watch not, they giue no warning of the dangers at hand: they teach them not to deny vngodlineſſe and worldly luſts, and to liue ſoberly, and righteouſly, and godlily in this preſent world.

It were happy, if all ſuch were remoued out of the Church of God. They deſtroy the ſoules of many, and lead them to deſtruction by their negligence. What account ſhall they giue vnto God for the ſoules of their brethren? Where ſhall they ſtand, or what will they ſay, when hee ſhall bid them make a ſtrait account of their ſtewardſhip? This is the practise of Satan. He vseth all meanes to snare vs, and withdraw vs from that blessed hope. Sometimes he letteth the increase of the Gospell, by raising vp tumults, and disquieting the Church of God, and stirring the hearts of such as are in authoritie to persecute by all meanes the teachers of the Gospell of Christ. Againe, when God giueth peace and quietnesse to his Church, he leadeth the ouerseers of the people to a forgetfulnesse of their dutie: to seeke the pleasures & delights of this life, and to haue no regard of the worke of the Lord. Such occasions the Diuell seeketh, to hinder our saluation, and to withstand the truth and glory of God.

VERS. 19. For what is our ioy or crowne of reioicing? are not euen you it in the presence of our Lord Iesus Christ at his comming?

20. Yea, ye are our glory and ioy.

The greatest comfort to him that laboureth, is to see that his labour commeth to good effect, and worketh that which he purposed. He hath before approued his diligence and shewed the mercy of God in making his word fruitfull, by opening their hearts that it might sinke into them, and take rot in them. Therefore now he exhorteth them to continue stedfast: that so he may present them vnto God, and be partaker with them of euerlasting glory. This ought to be the care of all such which are ministers, they should seeke aboue all things to bring the people to such perfection of vnderstanding, and to such godlinesse of life, that they may reioice in their behalfe, and so chearfully wait for the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ.

CHAP. III.

VERS. 1. Wherefore since we could no longer forbeare, we thought it good to remaine at Athens alone.

2. And haue sent Timotheus our brother, and Minister of God, and our labourfellow in the Gospell of Christ, to stablish you, and to comfort you, touching your faith.

I know your faith in Christ Iesus is many waies assaulted. The enuious man will take all occasions to sow darnell among the Lords corne. He will seeke to take away the good seed that is sowed in your hearts. You are deare vnto me. Your wounds are my wounds, and your griefe, my griefe. Therefore, since I my selfe am hindred that I cannot come vnto you, to be with you in your afflictions, I send vnto you my fellow labourer in the Gospell. I haue but one with me, whom I loue tenderly, and trust him as mine owne soule: him I send vnto you. I leaue my selfe destitute, and without a companion, among the Infidels, here at Athens, in a City much giuen to Idolatry, and which cannot abide the name of Christ. Thus haue I burthened my selfe to releeue you, and taken from my selfe to comfort you. I haue beene careleſse of my selfe, and carefull for you, and for the Church of God, which is among you.

The Apostle had sent Timothie to other places, to the Corinthians, and to the Philippians. He alwaies found him constant in faith, and zealous to doe good vnto the Saints: And now commendeth him to this congregation, and calleth him brother, a minister of God, and his labour-fellow, that so, they might conceiue his great care for them, which sent so worthy a man vnto them: and also that they would esteeme him, and haue him in reputation, to hearken vnto Timothie, and to doe in all things, as he should direct them.

Such as S. Paul nameth Timothie, should all they be, which are sent vnto the people. They must hold the faith of Christ vnfainedly, and professe it boldly: they must be called, and allowed of God to his seruice: and must not be idle, but painfull, and labouring to build vp the house of God, and to gather in his haruest: that they may truely be called the Ministers of God, and labourers in the Gospell.

They that are called to this seruice, must not thinke it enough, that they serue God, as men of other trades doe. For Princes, and all sorts of people owe seruice and homage vnto God, to serue him in holinesse and righteousnesse all the daies of their life. This seruice of godly conuersation, and obedience, must Ministers also most carefully performe. But the especiall seruice, which belongeth to their calling, is to carry the arke of the couenant before their people, to doe their message truly when they are sent. To teach, to instruct, to exhort, to comfort, to rebuke in season and out of season: to plant, to weed, to graffe, to build, to hold vp their hands and to pray for the people. To doe this seruice for kings, for subiects, for rich, for poore, for the wise, for the simple: for the godly, and for the wicked: to establish them, and comfort them touching their faith.

Paul calleth himselfe often, The seruant of God, and the seruant of our Lord Iesus Christ. He reioiceth in this seruice, and reckoneth it in part of his glory. If we consider the paines and trauels which he take, we ſhall know; what diligence all others that are called to the ſame ſeruice ought to ſhew. Thus he writeth of himſelfe: I am debter both to the Græcians and to the Barbarians, both to the wiſe men, and to the vnwiſe. Therefore as much as lieth in mee I am ready to preach the Goſpel to you alſo that are at Rome. Againe: Though I bee free from all men, yet haue I made my ſelfe ſeruant vnto all men, that I might win the more. And vnto the Iewes I became as a Iew, that I may win the Iewes: to them that are vnder the Law, as though I were vnder the Law, that I may win them that are vnder the Law. I am made all things to all men, that I might by all meanes ſaue ſome. Againe: We preach not our ſelues, but Ieſus Chriſt the Lord, and our ſelues your ſeruants for Ieſus ſake. Againe: We are reuiled, and yet we bleſſe: we are perſecuted, and yet ſuffer it. I ſeeke not my ſelfe, ſaith he, but God. I ſeeke not to ſeeke mine owne affections, but to ſet forth his glory. Thus in his owne example he teacheth vs, that in the ſeruice of the Church of God, we muſt endure all paines, and not refuſe to follow our calling for any reproach or ſhame or villany, which may be wrought againſt vs by men. Rom. 11. 1. Cor. 9. 2. Cor. 4. 1. Cor. 4

VERS. 3. That no man ſhould be mooued with theſe afflictions: for yee your ſelues know, that we are appointed thereunto.

Thinke not that you ſhall enioy the pleaſures of this world, if you be the faithfull ſeruants of Chriſt. Chriſt ſhed his blood for thee, that thou ſhouldeſt not refuſe to giue thy blood for him. Drinke the cup of bitter gall, whereof Chriſt began to thee: and carry thy croſſe, that thou maieſt follow him. If thou bee aſhamed of the croſſe, thou art aſhamed of Chriſt: if thou be aſhamed of Chriſt, hee will be aſhamed of thee before his Father in Heauen: The croſſe cannot hurt thee, for Chriſt hath ſanctified it in his blood. Behold not the ſword, which ſtriketh thee, but thinke on the crowne of glory, which thou ſhalt receiue. Gold is clearer after it hath beene put into the fire. Be thou gold, and the fiery perſecution ſhall not hurt thee. Let not the feare of death put out thy faith. Truſt in the Lord, be ſtrong, and he ſhall eſtabliſh thy heart. Be rooted and built in Chriſt, and eſtabliſhed in the Faith. Then ſhall thy heart reioyce, and no man ſhall take thy ioy from thee.

VERS. 4. For verily, when wee were with you, we told you before that wee ſhould ſuffer tribulations, euen as it came to paſſe, and ye know it.

God giueth vs warning to be ready to ſuffer afflictions for his name. My ſonne, if thou wilt come into the ſeruice of God, ſtand faſt in righteouſneſſe and feare, and prepare thy ſoule to temptation. And in the Prouerbes: My ſon, refuſe not the chaſtening of the Lord, neither be grieued with his correction. For the Lord correcteth him whom he loueth, euen as the Father the Child in whom he delighteth. As many as I loue, I rebuke and chaſten, ſaith Chriſt. Therefore the Apoſtle telleth the Hebrewes: If you be without correction whereof all are partakers, then are yee baſtardes, and not ſonnes. In the tenth of Matthew, our Sauiour warneth his Diſciples hereof: Behold, I ſend you as ſheepe in the middeſt of Woolues. Thus God ſcholeth and nurtereth his people, that ſo thorow many tribulations, they may enter to their reſt. Frankincenſe when it is put in the fire, giueth the greater perfume: ſpice if it be pounded, ſmelleth the ſweeter: the earth when it is torne vp with the plough, becommeth more fruitfull: the ſeede in the ground, after froſt and ſnow, and winter ſtormes, ſpringeth the ranker: the nigher the vine is pruned to the ſtocke, the greater grape it yeeldeth: the grape when it is moſt preſſed and beaten, maketh the ſweeteſt wine: fine gold is the better when it is caſt in the fire: rough ſtones with hewing are ſquared, and made fit for building: cloth is rent, and cut, that it may be made a garment: linnen is buckt, and waſht, and wrung, and beaten, and is the fairer. Theſe are familiar examples to ſhew the benefit and commodity which the children of God receiue by perſecution. By it God waſheth and ſcoureth his congregation (ſaith Saint Paul) in tribulations, knowing that tribulation bringeth foorth patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not aſhamed. The power of God is made perfect in weakneſſe. And all things turne vnto good to them that feare the Lord. Eccleſ. 2. Prou. 3. Reue. 3. Hebr. 12. Matt. 10. Rom. 5.

VERS. 5. Euen for this cauſe, when I could no longer forbeare, I ſent him that I might know of your faith, leſt the tempter had tempted you in any ſort, and that our labour had beene in vaine.

6. But now lately when Timotheus came from you vnto vs, and brought vs good tidings of your faith, and loue, and that ye haue good remembrance of vs alwaies deſiring to ſee vs, as we alſo doe you.

7. Therefore brethren we had conſolation in you, in all our affliction and neſſitie through your faith.
8. For now are we aliue, if yee ſtand faſt in the Lord.
9. For what thankes can we recompenſe to God againe for you, for all the ioy wherewith we reioyce for your ſakes before our God?
10. Night and day praying exceedingly, that we might ſee your face, and might accompliſh that which is lacking in your faith.

The Apoſtle continueth in declaring his earneſt affection towards them, and how greatly he reioyced to heare of their conſtancy in the faith, and of their loue and agrement together: for he feared it might haue happend to them, as it had done to others. He preached to the Galathians, but they gaue eare to falſe Apoſtles, and went backe from that he had taught them. Gal. 4. I am in feare of you (ſaith he) leſt I haue beſtowed on you labour in vaine. Gal. 5. And. Ye did run well, who did let you, that you did not obey the truth? It is not of the perſwaſion of him that calleth you. The Diuell hath bewitched you, and beguiled your eies. Such is the ſubtilty and the power of Satan in the children of diſobedience. Iudas was an Apoſtle equall with Peter and the other Apoſtles. The Diuell entred into his heart, and bewitched him, and then he became the child of deſtruction. Iulian the Apoſtata, was a Chriſtian, and a Reader in the Church, but became an enemy of Chriſt, and when he was ſtricken in the field by myracle from Heauen, he threw vp his blud in deſiance of Chriſt: ſo had the Diuell bewitched him, and changed his heart to wickednеſſe. It might haue bene that their weakneſſe ſhould in like ſort haue bene ouercome, when the Tempter tempted them. And ſo the gold which he had left with them might haue bene turned into droſſe, and the light into darkneſſe, and the kingdome of God taken away from them. For then had his labour bene in vaine, and they had receiued the word to their owne damnation. For it had bene better for them not to haue knowen the way of righteouſneſſe, than after they haue knowen it, to turne from the holy commandement giuen vnto them.

The Diuell is the tempter. His ſtrength and practiſe is not alwaies by force of armes, but by ſubtile perſwaſions and other ſleights. He reaſoneth with Eue, why ſhe would not taſte of the apple, which was ſweet, pleaſant and delicate: and telleth the poore woman, God did nothing but mocke her: For God knew, what day they ſhould eat thereof, their eies ſhould be opened, and they ſhould know as much as God. He came to Chriſt, and ſaid; Command that theſe ſtones be made bread: and, Caſt thy ſelfe downe, if thou be the ſonne of God: then thou ſhalt be worſhipped, and taken for a great Prophet. He tempted Dauid after this ſort: Pſal. 73. Why wilt thou ſerue God? he hath aduanced thine enemies, and hath forſaken thee, and left thee in miſery. I fretted (ſaith Dauid) at the fooliſh: Theſe are the wicked, yet proſper they alway, and increaſe in riches. Certainly I haue clenſed my heart in vaine, and waſhed my hands in innocency, for daily haue I beene puniſhed, and chaſtned euery morning. Mine heart was vexed: ſo fooliſh was I and ignorant. I was a beaſt beaſt before thee. He tempted Iob the faithfull ſeruant of God, and told him, that he was righteous and holy, and gaue almes in vaine: that God had no regard to his praiers, and would not heare them.

This tempter waiteth all occaſions to draw vs from our faith and ſtedfaſtneſſe in the Lord. Yet is he neuer ſo buſie, as when any perſecution is raiſed againſt the truth. Then is he in his ruffe. Then plaieth he his part, and leaueth nothing vndone, whereby he may moue vs to forſake the truth. Wilt thou (ſaith he) be ſo fooliſh to loſe thy life, and knoweſt not wherefore? Art thou wiſer than thy forefathers? Why ſhouldeſt not thou be contented to doe as thy father and mother, and friends, and kinſfolkes? Thinkeſt thou they haue not as good care of their ſoules, as thou haſt of thine? Wilt thou make them Pagans and Infidels? Doeſt thou thinke they are damned? Be wiſe, and caſt not thy ſelfe away. Fleſh is fraile, life is ſweet, death is dreadfull; but to die in the fire, to be burned aliue, to ſee thy armes, and thy legges quite burnt from thy body, and that yet thou canſt not die, this is moſt terrible, thou canſt neuer abide it.

Behold ſo many Kings, and Princes, Noble men, Cardinals, Biſhops, Doctours, and learned men, and whole Kingdomes and Countries of the contrary opinion. Be not wilfull. Thinke not thy ſelfe wiſer than all the world. What were it for thee to come to the Church, and to ſhew thy ſelfe obedient, and to doe, as others doe? It is a ſmall matter, to loke vp, and hold vp thy hands at the ſacring. If it be an offence, thou ſhalt be excuſed, becauſe thou art forced to doe it by authority. God is mercifull, he will forgiue thee. Thus and thus doth Satan tempt vs, and fitteth vs, to lead vs from our ſtedfaſtneſſe. Theſe deuices he practiſed of late daies before our eies, with many conſtant profeſſors of Chriſtian Religion, but through the mighty power of God, they quenched all his firy darts, and through many tribulations entred into glory.

Thankes be to God, which doth make vs able through his grace, not onely to beléeue in him: but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake. He is faithfull, and will not ſuffer vs to be tempted, aboue that we are able, but will euen giue the iſſue with the temptation, that we may bée able to beare it. He hath bidden vs call vpon him, in the day of trouble, and he will deliuer vs. Commit thy way vnto the Lord, and truſt in him (ſaith the Prophet) and he ſhall bring it to paſſe. Pſal. 37. I haue ſet the Lord alwais before mee, for hee is at my right hand: Therefore I ſhall not ſlide. Pſal. 16. And againe: The Lord is with mee: Therefore I will not feare what man can doe vnto mee. It is better to truſt in the Lord, Than to haue confidence in Princes Pſal. 118.

When our Sauiour foretold his Diſciples of the troubles to come, he alſo maketh comfort to them of the ſtrength, and the helpe which they ſhall receiue of God, ſaying: When they deliuer you vp, take no thought how, or what yee ſhall ſpeake: for it ſhall bee giuen you in that houre, what yee ſhall ſay. He telleth them by whom they ſhall bée perſecuted: Yee ſhall be betrayed alſo of your parents, and of your brethren, and kinſmen, and friends. And in what ſort: They ſhall lay hands on you, and perſecute you, and deliuer you to the Synagogues, and into Priſons, and bring you before Kings and Rulers. And for what cauſe: For my names ſake. Then what the Godly in this caſe muſt doe: Feare them not. He that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaued. Laſt of all, he promiſeth to be with them and to ſtrengthen them. This ſhall turne to you for a teſtimoniall. Lay it vp therefore in your hearts, that you premeditate not what you ſhall anſwer. For I will giue you a mouth and wiſedome, where againſt all your aduerſaries ſhall not be able to ſpeake, nor reſiſt. Matth. 10. Luke 21. Matth. 10. Luke 21.

Thus were the things ſpoken of, long before, which we haue ſéene lately done. Whoſoeuer will ſet downe the ſtory thereof, now they are paſſed, muſt néeds declare it in the maner as it was fore-ſpoken. Their owne kinſfolkes, and friends betraied many, and brought them to the Biſhops, who deliuered them into priſons, for the name of Chriſt, and for the loue of his truth. The bleſſed witneſſes or Martyrs of God, feared not, but endured. Many were ſimple, young men, young maydens, men and women of great age, labouring men and men of occupations. Yet God gaue them ſuch a mouth, and ſuch wiſedome, as all their aduerſaries were not able to ſpeake againſt it, nor reſiſt it. Who readeth that Scripture diligently, and conſidereth this ſtory of our time aduiſedly, cannot confeſſe but that the light of Gods Goſpell is come among vs. And that we are they vpon whom the latter end of the world is come, and in whom he doth ſhew forth the great might of his power.

Therefore ſuch temptations as Satan vſeth cannot make the man of God fall from his ancker hold. His hope is ſafely laied vp in his breaſt. He knoweth not in whom he putteth his truſt. And therefore ſaith, I preſume out of knowledge. I eſteeme not to know any thing, ſaue Chriſt Ieſus, and him crucified. I beléeue not in my fathers, I reuerence them and loue them, but I beléeue only in God. I feare not the ſword, I feare not what man can doe vnto mée: but I feare him, that can kill my body and ſoule. It is better for mée to abide the fire, and loſe my life, that I may liue for euer, than to deny God for ſafegard of my life, and be caſt into hell fire. If there be ſo many partakers of their errours, and ſo few that cleaue to the truth, the multitude of them ſhall not ſaue me: and it is no triall of Gods truth, whether it be receiued of many or of few. Cardinals, and Biſhops, and Doctours may be wiſe and learned. So were Annas and Caiaphas, the high Prieſts, and Scribes and Phariſeis, which did put to death the Lord of glory. I dare not doe ill, becauſe other men doe it. I may not tempt God. My conſcience is truly aſſured by Gods word what is idolatry, and the diſhonour of God. If I ſhould come into the Church, and make ſuch ſhewes as you aduiſe me, and be partaker with Idolaters, I ſhould doe hurt to others in mine ill example: I ſhould doe againſt mine owne conſcience, which would be a heauy witneſſe againſt me, both whiles I liue in this World, and in the dreadfull day of Iudgement.

VERS. 11. Now God himſelfe, euen our Father, and our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, guide our iourney vnto you.

12. And the Lord increaſe you, and make you abound in loue one toward another, and toward all men, euen as we doe toward you.

13. To make your hearts ſtable, and vnblameable in holineſſe before God euen our Father, at the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt with his Saints.

I haue planted you, you are my children, whom I haue begotten in Christ. I loue you, and haue care ouer you. I haue an exceeding desire to see your face. But Satan hath withstood my purpose, and found meanes to keepe me from you. I commit my voyage to God: if it please him, that I may come vnto you, to reioyce with you, & comfort you. He knoweth what is good for me, and what is profitable for you. The cause is his owne. He will doe all things to his glory. He will tread Satan vnder our feet. We cannot purpose any dispose of our selues. I know that the way of man is not in himselfe, neither is it in man to walk and to direct his steps. Iere. 10.

The Lord increase you, in all godlinesse, that you may abound more and more, euen as you haue heard of vs how you ought to walke. You are but a little flocke, God increase your number, and make all them partakers of his kingdome with you, which beare of your faith and conuersation in Christ.

To make your hearts stable and vnblamable. That nothing moue you or trouble you: that your hearts and consciences be quiet: that you may stand vpright, and shew your selues in great confidence before his iudgement seat: that when you shall see Gods hand stretched out, and his plagues prepared against the wicked, you be not afraid. This is the hauen of rest, whereto no man commeth but he that hath a quiet conscience: this is the tabernacle of the highest, wherin they shall dwell: this is the holy mountaine, wherein they shal rest, that walk vprightly, and worke righteousnesse, and speake the truth in their heart.

Here let vs consider the rages and tempests of a troubled minde, and of an vnquiet conscience: which knoweth that God is an auenger of all wickednesse, and that death is the due reward of sinne: which acknowledgeth himselfe to be a sinner, and findeth no way how he shall escape hell fire. This man when he thinketh with himselfe of these things, he cannot but be amazed and disquieted aboue measure. The sound of the trumpet is euer in his eares, he heareth the voice of the Iudge, saying: Stand forth sinner: now declare how thou hast vsed thy body, giue a reckoning of thy whole life. Then his conscience beginneth to quake and tremble. Then he needeth no witnesse to accuse him, nor Iudge to condemne him. He is both witnesse and Iudge against himselfe.

The danger hereof may somewhat appeare in those which are taken and prisoned, and arraigned before a Iudge. When he knoweth himselfe guilty, heareth the euidence proued against him, seeth the Iudge seuere to deale iustice without mercy, and therfore is assured of death: what griefe and torment feeleth he at heart: what would he not giue? what would he not doe to escape the danger?

But the danger whereunto God iudgeth vs is greater, and the maner of his iudgement is straiter. Here the Iudge may be deceiued, he is but a man: but there God is the Iudge, who is the searcher of the heart and reines, and no man shall be hid from his heat. Here nothing can be done without euidence, without witnesses and proofe: before God, he that hath offended shall accuse himselfe. This is the case of conscience. It selfe is witnesse, it self calleth for iudgement to condemnation. His conscience shal make the sinner say, I haue offended against God: I haue despised his word, and would not giue eare to learne it. I would not know the time of Gods mercy, and of my visitation: I liued in fornication: and committed theft: and kept wrongfully other mens goods: I was disobedient to parents: nurtured not my children in the feare of God: kept not my heart from doing iniquity: I abused my goods, my wits, my senses, and the good grace of God: I haue sinned against Heauen, and against God, and am not worthy to be called his sonne: the wrath of God is worthily fallen vpon me, Hell fire is my meed: the mercy of God cannot saue me, for my sin is greater, than that it can be forgiuen. Mine owne heart and conscience, Heauen and Earth, the Angels and Archangels, God himselfe, and Christ the Redéemer of them that beléeue in him, are against me: I cannot cast mine eies to any place, but euer I see my damnation before me. Then doth he tremble with agony, and stand in feare. His heart daseth and beateth, as the waues of the sea. He feeleth vproare, war, lightning, thunder, death, and hell in his heart: he shall flie when no man followeth him. He shall say to the hils and rockes, Fall on me, and hide me from the presence of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lambe. Such is the terror of an vnquiet minde. Though all the Princes in the World, would ioyne themselues to do it, the wicked can neuer inioy peace. God keepe vs far from such agonies, and giue vs pure hearts, and cleere consciences.

Chap. IIII.

Vers. 1. And furthermore we beseech you brethren, and exhort you in the Lord Iesus, that ye increase more and more as yee haue receiued of vs, how yee ought to walke and to please God.

2. For

2. For ye know what commandements we gaue you by the Lord Ieſus.

WE command you not, nor vſe any force, but intreat you with all patience and meekneſſe, that ye will loue your owne ſoules, and thinke and doe thoſe things which pleaſe God. You are they to whom the promiſe was made. God hath called you out of darkneſſe into his marueilous light. He hath not dealt ſo with euery nation, neither haue they knowen his iudgements.

We come not to you in our owne name. We haue charge to preach the Goſpell to all nations. Therefore we ſpeake vnto you in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. We ſhew you the way that you may walke in it: we declare vnto you the will of God, that you may be ſaued. For yet will the Lord wait that he may haue mercy vpon you; and therfore will he be exalted, that he may haue compaſſion vpon you, ſaith the Prophet Eſay. We haue opened vnto you the whole treaſure of Gods mercy. We haue lead you to the throne of grace, and made you ſee the Lambe of God that taketh away the ſinnes of the World. We haue preached vnto you remiſſion and forgiueneſſe of your ſinnes through his name. If you haue heard vs and beleeue, you ſhall be ſaued. If any man preach vnto you otherwiſe than that you haue receiued, let him be accurſed. Eſay. 30.

How ye ought to walke and pleaſe God. It is not enough that ye beleeue: ye muſt alſo walke and liue according to knowledge. This is the will of God. For we are his workmanſhip created in Chriſt Ieſus vnto good workes, which God hath ordained that we ſhould walke in them. For the grace of God hath appeared, that bringeth ſaluation vnto all men, and teacheth vs that we ſhould liue ſoberly, and righteouſly, and godly in this life. Looking for the bleſſed hope, and appearing of the glory of the mighty God, and of our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt. In this ſort hath our teaching beene among you: That you might ſhew forth your faith by your workes: That it auaileth you nothing to ſay you haue faith, if you haue no workes; becauſe the faith that hath no workes, is dead. This we are taught by the words of our Lord Ieſus: he ſaith; Not euery one that ſaith vnto mee, Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdome of heauen, but he that doth my Fathers will that is in heauen. Againe: Euery tree that bringeth not foorth good fruit, is hewen downe, and caſt into the fire. The ſeruant that knoweth his maſters will, and doth it not, ſhal be beaten with many ſtripes. Thus hath our Lord commanded vs to be like our father which is in heauen: to let our light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee our good workes. Thus the Apoſtle taught: Thus the church of God this day teacheth. It requireth faith, as the inſtrument, and meanes to apply the merits and paſſion of Ieſus Chriſt for our ſaluation: and good workes, as fruits and witneſſes of our faith. Whoſoeuer learneth aright, and beleeueth the Goſpel as he ought, groweth, and goeth forward from vertue to vertue. If he were ignorant before, he commeth thereby to knowledge. If hee were weake, he groweth in ſtrength. If he were wicked, he turneth vnto godlineſſe. Eph. 2. Tit. 2. Matth. 7.

VERS. 3. For this is the will of God, euen your holineſſe, and that ye ſhould abſtaine from fornication.

4. That euery one of you ſhould know how to poſſeſſe his veſſell in holineſſe and honour.

God requireth true and vnfained holineſſe. Waſh you, ſaith the Prophet Eſay, make you cleane, take away the euill of your workes, from before mine eies, ceaſe to doe ill. This is the commandement of God, that ſo we ſhould be partakers of his heauenly nature. As he which hath called you is holy, ſo be yee holy in all maner of conuerſation, ſaith Saint Peter. Eſay 1. 1. Pet. 1.

Abſtaine from fornication. Nothing ſo much hinderth true holineſſe as fornication, vncleanneſſe, wantonneſſe, and ſuch like. Euery ſinne that a man doth, is without the body, but he that committeth fornication, ſinneth againſt his owne body. God is the auenger of ſuch. He will iudge the adulterers and fornicatours. Be not deceiued: Neither fornicatours, nor adulterers, nor wantons, nor buggerers ſhall inherit the Kingdome of Heauen.

Know to poſſe his veſſell. That is, his body. And the body is the temple of the Holy Ghoſt, as he ſaith to the Corinthians: And therfore glorifie God in your body, and in your ſpirit, for they are Gods. In this body we ſhal riſe out of our graue, and appeare before the iudgement ſeat of God; in this body, we ſhall ſit vpon the twelue ſeats, and iudge the twelue tribes. God ſhall crowne it with glory and honour. Keepe this veſſell cleane, it is pretious: keepe it in honour, keepe it in holineſſe. Make not the member of Chriſt, a member of the Diuell. Shame not your bodies, ſhame not your ſelues. 1. Cor. 6.

VERS. 5. And not in the luſt of concupiſcence, euen as the Gentiles which know not God.

Giue not your ſelues ouer to filthy affections, as the Horſe and Mule which haue no vnderſtanding, and as the Gentiles which haue no feare of Gods iudgement. Their heart and minde is vncleane. They know not God, they know not themſelues. They know not the difference of this life, and of the life to come. Therefore they know not ſinne, or if they know it, they refraine it not, but follow the luſts of their corrupt nature, and giue themſelues to wantonneſſe, to worke all vncleanneſſe, euen with greedineſſe. Thus the Apoſtel ſetteth downe, what is the fruit of ignorance: and whereto a man groweth, that knoweth not God. That deuotion therefore, which ſome ſay is the daughter of ignorance, hath no likeneſſe with true holineſſe. For this is life eternall, ſaith Chriſt, that they know Iohn 17. thee to be the only very God, and whom thou haſt ſent, Ieſus Chriſt.

VERS. 6. That no man oppreſſe or defraude his brother in any matter, for the Lord is an auenger of all ſuch things, as we haue alſo told you before-time and teſtified.

Let no man defraud his brother, neither by falſe weight, nor by falſe meaſure, nor by lying words. Let your meaſures, and weights, and words be true: let your gaines be iuſt and true, that God may bleſſe them. His bleſſing will make you rich, and whatſoeuer he bleſſeth not, ſhall waſte and conſume, and doe you no good. Doe vnto others as you would they ſhould doe vnto you. This is true dealing, and vpright.

If thou ſpeake more than is true, if thou take more than thy ware is worth, thy conſcience knoweth it is none of thine. God will deſtroy all the workers of iniquity. He that delighteth in ſinne hateth his owne ſoule. The mouth that accuſtometh to lie, ſlaieth the ſoule.

Defraud not thy brother: he is thy brother, whether he be rich or poore: he is thy brother, and the ſonne of God. Wilt thou doe wrong to thy brother? Wilt thou oppreſſe the ſonne of God, and that euen in the ſight of God? God is his father, he will not leaue it vnpuniſhed in thée. If he be ſimple and vnſkilfull, abuſe not his ſimplicity. God is the God of rigteouſneſſe. Deale iuſtly, that thine owne conſcience accuſe thée not. Teach not thy ſonnes nor thy ſeruants to deceiue others, and to gaine by wickedneſſe, After they haue learned of thée to deceiue others, they will deceiue thée alſo. Iob praied daily for his children. Bée thou alſo carefull that thy children and ſeruants deceiue no man, nor hurt any. Their ſinnes ſhall be laid to thy charge. Why aſkeſt thou of God, that he will fée de thée, and giue thée thy daily bread, and waiteſt not vpon his will, but fédeſt vpon the bread of iniquity? This meat will not nouriſh thée, this wealth will not ſtand by thée, for Prou. 20. God will not proſper it. The wiſe man ſaith: The bread of deceit is ſweet to a man, but afterward his mouth ſhall be filled with grauell. Ill gotten goods haue an ill end. God hath Agge. 1. ſaid by the Prophet Aggeus: Yee haue ſowen much, but you haue brought in little: Yee brought it home, and I did blow vpon it. We haue examples héereof daily. We haue ſéene great heapes of wealth ſuddenly blowen away, and conſumed to nothing: great houſes decaied, and the hope of the wicked quite ouerthrowen.

Héere wil I ſpeak ſomwhat of the vnhappy trade of Vſury, becauſe therein ſtandeth the moſt miſerable and ſhamefull deceiuing of the brethren. I will not ſpeake all that may bée ſaid, for it would be to long and ouer wearifome. I will haue regard of that ſhall be agréable, and profitable, and behouefull for you to heare. And that you may the better conſider héereof, and ſée the whole matter of Vſury, I will ſhew you firſt, what Vſury is: Then, whence it ſpringeth and what are the cauſes of Vſury: Thirdly, what commeth of it, what hurt it worketh to the Common-wealth: and I will lay forth ſuch reaſons, as may make any good man abhorre it: Then I will declare, what the holy Fathers, and the Apoſtles, and Martyrs, and Chriſt, and God himſelfe haue thought and ſpoken of Vſury.

Many ſimple men know not what is Vſury, nor neuer heard of the name of it. The world were happy, if no man knew it. For euill things doe leſſe harme when they be moſt vnknowen. Peſtilences and plagues are not knowen, but with great miſery. But that you may learne to know it, and the more to abhorre it, this it is.

Vſury is a kind of lending of mony, or corne, or oile, or wine, or of any other thing, wherin, vpon couenant and bargain, we receiue againe the whole principal, which we delinered and ſomewhat more, for the vſe and occupying of the ſame. As, if I lend 100. pound, and for it couenant to receiue 105. pounds, or any other ſumme, greater than was the ſumme, which I did lend. This is that, that we call Vſury. Such a kind of bargaining as no good man, or godly man euer vſed. Such a kind of bargaining as all men that euer feared Gods iudgement haue alwaies abhorred, and condemned. It is filthy gaines, and a worke of darkneſſe. It is a monſter in nature: the ouerthrow of mighty kingdoms the deſtruction of flouriſhing ſtates, the decay of wealthy Cities, the plagues of the world, the miſery of the people.

people. It is theft, it is the murdering of our brethren, it is the curſe of God, and the curſe of the people. This is Uſury. By theſe ſignes and tokens you may know it: for whereſoeuer it reigneth, all thoſe miſchiefes enſue. But how and how many waies it may be wrought, I will not declare. It were horrible to heare: and I come now to reprowue Uſury, and not to teach it.

Let vs ſee then what is the cauſe hereof, and whence it groweth, who is the mother, the nurſe, or the bréder of Uſury. For it groweth not euery where, nor among all men. Many hate it, and deteſt it, and had rather die, than line of ſuch ſpoile. It is not of God; for God ſtraitly forbiddeth it. Neither is it found among the children of God; for loue ſéketh not her owne profit, but to doe good to her neighbour.

Whence then ſpringeth Uſury? Some ſhewed. Euen thence, whence theft, murder, adultery, the plagues and deſtruction of the people doe ſpring. All theſe are the workes of the Diuell, and the workes of the fleſh. Chriſt telleth the Phariſies, You are of your father the Diuell, and the luſts of your Father you will doe. Euen ſo may it truly be ſaid to the Uſurer, thou art of thy father the Diuell, and the luſt of thy father thou wilt doe, and therefore thou haſt pleaſure in his workes. The Diuell entred into the heart of Iudas, and put in him this grédineſſe, and couetouſneſſe of gaine, for which he was content to ſell his Maſter. Iudas heart was the ſhop, the Diuel was the foreman to worke in it. S. Paul ſaith: They that wil be rich, fall into tentation and ſnares, and into many fooliſh and noiſome luſts, which drowne men into perdition, and deſtruction. For the deſire of money is the roote of euill. And S. Iohn ſaith: Whoſoeuer committeth ſinne is of the Diuell. Thus we ſée that the Diuell is the planter, and the father of Uſury.

1. Iohn 3.

Couetouſneſſe, deſire of mony, vnſatiable grédineſſe, deceitfulneſſe, vnmercifulneſſe, iniury, oppreſſion, extortion, contempt of God, hatred to the brethren, and hatred of all men, are the nurſes and bréders of Uſury. It ſpringeth from Satan, and groweth, and is watered, and fed and nouriſhed by theſe cruell and damnable monſters.

Let vs ſée farther, what are the fruits which come of Uſury. For perhaps it doth ſome good, and you may thinke that many are the better for it. Theſe therefore are the fruits. It diſſolueth the knot and fellowſhip of mankind: it hardneth mans heart: It maketh men vnnatural, and bereaueth them of charity and loue to their déereſt friends. It bréedeth miſery, and prouoketh the wrath of God from Heauen. It conſumeth rich men, it eateth vp the poore, it maketh bankrups, and vndoeth many houſholds. The poore occupiers are driuen to flée, their wiues are left alone, their children are helpleſſe, and driuen to beg their bread, through the vnmercifull dealing of the couetous Uſurer.

When Dauid laieth out the wickednes of the Country where he was perſecuted, hée ſaith of them: Non defecit Vſura, & dolus in plateis eorum: Vſury and deceit departeth not from their ſtreets, one ſéketh to ſpoile and eat vp another. Theſe are the commodities and the fruits of Uſury. Such is Uſury in the midſt of a City, and ſuch good it worketh, as fire doth, when it is ſet to the roofe of a houſe; or as the plague doth, when it is taken to the midſt of the body, and toucheth the heart.

Pſal. 54.

We haue heard whence Uſury ſpringeth, and what hurt it doth. Which whoſoeuer conſidereth, may find cauſe enough to loath it, and forſake it. One aſked of Cato, What it was to commit Vſury. What is it (ſaith he againe) to kill a man? He that is an Uſurer, is a murtherer. The ſame Cato ſaith: Our fathers puniſhed a theefe, with paiment of the double of that hee had taken; but the Vſurer was alwaies condemned to pay foure times the value. They were wiſe men. They thought that an Uſurer was much worſe than a Théefe.

For a théefe is driuen by extremity and néed: the Uſurer is rich and hath no néed. The théefe ſtealeth in corners, and in places where he may be vnknowen: the Uſurer openly and boldly at all times, and in any place. The théefe, to releeue his wife and children: the Uſurer, to ſpoile his neighbour, and to vndoe his wife & children. The théefe ſtealeth from the rich, which haue enough: the Uſurer from the poore that hath nothing. The théefe fléeth and will be ſéene no more: the Uſurer ſtandeth by it, continueth, and ſtealeth ſtill: day and night, ſléeping and waking, he alwaies ſtealeth. The théefe repenteth of his déed, he knoweth he hath done wrong and is ſorry for it: the Uſurer, thinketh it is his owne, that it is wel gotten, and neuer repenteth, nor ſorroweth, but defendeth, and maintaineth his ſin impudently. The théefe, if he eſcape, many times becommeth profitable to his country, and beſtoweth himſelfe painfully in ſome trade of life: the Uſurer leaueth his merchandize, forſaketh his houſbandry, giueth himſelfe to nothing, whereby his country may haue benefit. The théefe is ſatiſfied at length: the Uſurer hath neuer enough. The belly of the wicked will neuer be filled. As the Sea is neuer filled with water, though all the ſtreames of the world run into it: ſo the grédineſſe of an Uſurer is neuer ſatiſfied, though he gaine neuer so vnreasonably. The Sea is profitable: the Usurer is hurtfull and dangerous. By the Sea we may passe, and come safely to the Hauen: but no man passeth by Usury without losse or shipwracke.

Now heare what the godly and learned Fathers of the Church haue thought of Usury. No doubt they were godly men, and wrot hereof, as God had inspired them, and as others before them had done. Augustine saith: Quid dicam de Vsuris, quas ipsæ leges, &c. What shal I speake of Vsury, whereof the Lawes and Iudges require that restitution be made? is he more cruel which stealeth something away from the rich man, or he that killeth a poore man with Vsury? Marke this, an Usurer, saith Augustine, is cruell. Why? he killeth. Whom? the poore man, whom in charity he is bound to releeue. Aug. Macedon. Epist. 54.

Ambrose hereof saith: Vsuras solvit, qui victu indiget: an quicquam gravius? &c. He that lacketh wherewith to keepe life, payeth yon Vsury. What heauier case may there be? He seeketh to be healed, and you poison him: he asketh you bread, and you giue him a knife, he desireth you to set him at liberty, and you bring him to further bondage. And againe: Thou Vsurer growest wealthy by other mens heauinesse: thou makest gaines of their teares and weeping: thou art fed with their hunger: thou coinest thy money of the skins of those men whom thou destroiest: how thinkest thou thy selfe to be rich, and yet beggest an almes of him that is poore? And the same father saith further: Ab hoc Vsuram exige, quem non sit crimen occidere: Whomsoeuer it is lawfull to kill, thou maiest lend him thy mony to Vsury. For he that taketh Usury, killeth without a sword. These be holy Fathers, and worthy of credit: they shew vs, that Usury is as bad as to kill and murther a man wilfully. Lib. de Tobia cap. 3. Ibid. cap. 15.

Chrysostome likewise: In his sensibilibus pecuniis prohibuit ne quis vsuram acciperet, &c. God hath forbidden that no man shall take Vsury, in this sensible, or common money. Why? because either of them is much hindred. He that oweth mony is made poorer, and hee that lendeth it, by this kind of enriching himselfe encreaseth the number of his sinnes. Againe he saith: Sicut fermentum modicum quod mittitur in multam farinam, totam conspersionem corrumpit, &c. Euen as little leauen leaueneth the whole lumpe of dowe, euen so Vsury, when it commeth into any mans house, draweth all his substance, and changeth it into debt. Hom. 41. in 18. Genes. Hom. 12. in 5. Mat.

He that is an Usurer, wisheth that all others may lacke, and come to him and borrow of him: that all others may lose, so that he may haue gaine. Therefore our old forefathers so much abhorred this trade, that they thought an Usurer vnworthy to liue in the company of Christian men: they did excommunicate him. They suffered not an Usurer to be a witnesse in matters of Law. They suffered him not to make a Testament, and to bestow his goods by will. When an Usurer died, they would not suffer him to be buried in places appointed for the buriall of Christians. So highly did they mislike this vnmercifull spoiling, and deceiuing our brethren.

But what speake I of the ancient Fathers of the Church? there was neuer any religion, nor sect, nor state, nor degree, nor profession of men, but they haue disliked it. Philosophers, Greeks, Latines, Lawyers, Diuines, Catholikes, Heretikes, all tongues and nations haue euer thought an Usurer as dangerous as a theefe. The very sense of nature proueth it to be so. If the stones could speake, they would say as much.

Therefore our Sauiour saith: Doe good, and lend, looking for nothing againe. He saith not, lend and loke not for your principall againe. But loke for no gaine thereby, loke not to receiue more than thine owne for the vse and occupying of it. Defraud not another: thou wouldest not another should defraud thee. Oppresse him not, haue pity on his wife and children: thou wouldest not haue thy wife and children vndone. In Leuiticus God saith: If thy brother be impouerished and fallen in decay, thou shalt take no Vsury of him, nor vantage, but thou shalt feare thy God, that thy brother may liue with thee. God saith, thou shalt take no Usury. And he hath power and authority to command. And in Exodus: If thou lend mony to my people to the poore with thee, thou shalt not be as an Vsurer vnto him, ye shall not oppresse him with Vsury. Shew them mercy for my sake, they are my people. I can inrich him, I can impouerish thee. I set vp, and throw downe whom I will. When thy neighbour needeth thy help, and seeketh comfort at thy hands, afflict him not as an enemy, oppresse him not like a tyrant. Luke 6. Leuit. 25. Exod. 22.

Ezechiel the Prophet setteth downe the wrath of God against Usurers: He that hath giuen foorth his mony vpon Vsury, or hath taken increase, shall he liue? he shall not liue, saith the Lord. He shall perish in his owne sin, his blood shall be vpon his head. Therfore when he reckoneth the offences of Ierusalem, and declareth the heauy plagues that are prepared against that wicked City, he saith: Thou hast taken Vsury and increase, and thou hast defrauded thy neighbours by extortion, and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God. Behold Ezech. 18. Ezech. 22.

hold therfore I haue ſmitten thine hands vpon the couetouſneſſe, that thou haſt vſed. Thou haſt done iniury to my people, that thou mighteſt make thine owne gaine. Thy wrongs and oppreſſions done by Vſury riſe vp into heauen, therefore I will gather thee, and blow the fire of my wrath vpon thee, ſaith the Lord.

Thus hath God ſpoken, euen the Lord of heauen and earth, which can ſcatter thy gold in the winde, and blow it to nothing. Thus he ſpeaketh to thee, that heareſt, and readeſt his word, which knoweſt that his will is, thou ſhouldeſt not lend thy mony to Vſury. Thou doeſt oppreſſe (ſaith he.) Whom? thy brother, for whom Chriſt vouchſafed to ſhed his bloud. And what brother? him that was poore, which came to thee for need, to ſeeke thy helpe. How? wickedly, cloſely, ſlilly, craftily, deceitfully, like an hypocrite, vnder colour to doe him good. Wherewith? with thy mony, thy gold, and ſiluer, which God hath giuen thee to releeue the poore and needy withall.

God hath ſaid, thou ſhalt not take Vſury, and what art thou that deſpiſeſt the voice of the Lord? whoſe words wilt thou heare, that wilt not heare the word of God? remember the words, you cannot forget them. Thou ſhalt not take Vſury of thy brother, he is poore and fallen in decay: thou ſhalt not be an Vſurer vnto him: thou ſhalt not oppreſſe him with Vſury. For it is cruelty, and abhomination in the ſight of God: therefore will God poure out his wrath, and conſume the Vſurer: he ſhall not enter into the Tabernacle of the higheſt, he ſhall haue no part in the kingdome of Chriſt, and of God, but ſhall be caſt into the vtward darkneſſe.

But ſome will ſay, all kinds of Vſury are not forbidden. There may be caſes where Vſury may ſtand with reaſon & equity. And herein they ſay ſo much as by wit may be deuiſed, to paint out a foule, and vgly Idol, and to ſhadow themſelues in manifeſt and open wickedneſſe. Whatſoeuer God ſaith, yet this or this kind of Vſury, ſay they, which is done in this or this ſort, is not forbidden. It profiteth the common wealth, it releeueth great numbers. The poore ſhould otherwiſe periſh, no man would lend them.

By like good reaſon, there are ſome that defend theft, and murder. They ſay, there may be ſome caſe, where it is lawful to kill or to ſteale: for God willed the Hebrews to rob the Ægyptians, and Abraham to kill his owne ſonne Iſaac. In theſe caſes their robbery and the killing of his ſonne were lawfull. So ſay they. Euen ſo by like reaſon doe ſome of our Country-men maintaine Concubines, Curtizans, and Brothell-houſes, and ſtand in defence of open Stewes. They are (ſay they) for the benefit of the Country: they keepe men from more dangerous inconuenience: take them away, it will be worſe. Although God ſay, There ſhall be no whore of the daughters of Iſrael, neither ſhall there be a whore-keeper of the ſonnes of Iſrael: yet theſe men ſay all manner of whoredome is not forbidden. In theſe and theſe caſes it is not amiſſe to allow it. Deut. 23.

God ſaid to Saul: Goe and ſtrike Amalek, and deſtroy ye all that pertaineth to them, and haue no compaſſion on them, but ſlaie both man and woman, both infant and ſuckling, both Oxe and Sheepe, both Camel, and Aſſe. So ſtrait, and preciſe was Gods commandement. Forth marcheth Saul, ſetteth vpon his enemies, God aſſiſteth him, and giueth him the victory. When he tooke Agag priſoner, and ſaw him to be a goodly tall Gentleman, he had pity on him, and ſaued him aliue. And the beſt and faireſt of the ſheepe, and Oxen, and other cattell, he did not deſtroy, although he knew well, that God had commanded him to kill man and beaſt, euery one without exception. Then came Samuel vnto him, and ſaid: Oh why haſt thou not done as thou wert commanded? Heere let vs marke the wicked anſwer of Saul, in defence of his wilfull diſobedience. It had beene great pity to haue ſlaine Agag ſo comely, and tall a Gentleman. I haue taken him, and kept him priſoner. And if I ſhould haue deſtroied this goodly cattell, they had come to nothing. It was better to ſaue them for the victualling of my ſouldiers: and the faireſt of them may be offered in ſacrifice. So breake he the commandement of God vnder pretence of doing honour to God. 1. Sam. 15.

But Samuel ſaid, hath the Lord as great pleaſure in burnt offerings and ſacrifices, as when the voice of the Lord is obeied? behold, to obey is better than ſacrifice. And to diſobey his holy will, is to renounce and forſake him.

So may we ſay to the Vſurer. Thou haſt deuiſed caſes, and colours to hide thy ſhame, but what regard hath God to thy caſes? what careth he for thy reaſons? the Lord would haue more pleaſure, if when thou heareſt his voice thou wouldeſt obey him. For what is thy deuice againſt the counſel, and ordinance of God? What bold preſumption is it for a mortall man to controll the commandements of the immortal God? and to waigh his heauenly wiſdome in the ballance of humane fooliſhneſſe? When God ſaith, Thou ſhalt not take Vſury, what creature of God art thou, which canſt take Vſury? When God maketh it vnlawfull, what art thou, oh man, that ſaieſt, It is lawfull? This is a token of a deſperate minde. It is found true in thee, that Paul ſaid, The loue of mony is the roote of all euill. Thou art so giuen ouer vnto the wicked Mammon, that thou carest not to doe the will of God.

Wilfulnesse and presumption, are tokens that such men are impudent, and past shame. He that offendeth of simplicity, may finde mercy. But they which of pride and boldnesse goe against the knowen truth, and doe that thing which they know to be ill, and deuise shifts to colour that, which all reason, and learning, of God, and men, and nature it selfe haue condemned, they are fallen into temptation and snares, and into foolish lusts which drowne them in destruction.

God is the Lord. We are but seruants: he hath made vs, and not we our selues: we are but as clay in his hands: we can not repeale the Law that God hath established: we must obey it. We may not doe the things that seeme good in our owne eies, they may deceiue vs: but we must doe whatsoeuer God biddeth vs to doe, and forsake to doe those things which he forbiddeth.

Thus much for an entry to those, which can bring so good reasons, for so ill a matter.

Many defend their Vsury, by that liberty which they thinke they haue, to vse their goods in such sort, as seemeth best to themselues, and is most to their aduantage. May I not, say they, do with mine own goods what I will? This would they not say, if they were of him, which hath said by his holy Apostle: Let euery man, as he hath receiued the gift, so minister
1. Pet. 4. the same one to another, as good disposers of the manifold grace of God. It is the law of nature, that no man abuse the things that are his, to the hurt and hinderance of another. May a man take his owne dagger, and therewith commit murther? or may a man take of his owne fire and therewith burne his neighbours house? He that said, Thou shalt not kil, hath also said: Thou shalt not steale: Thou shalt not commit Vsury: Thou shalt not defraud thy brother in bargaining. He is not vnrighteous, that he will iudge the murtherer, and will not condemne the Vsurer. In that day the Vsurer shall know, whose mony it was, wherewith he defrauded his brother. His mony shall not helpe him, he shall haue no shift to conueigh himselfe from the wrath of God: he and his mony shall perish together.

But the Vsurer will say. The poore man came to me, I was not in hast to seeke him. He moned his case to me. I toke pitty of him, and lent him mony. Since then he and all his haue beene the better. Here you shall see the great kindnesse and pitifull heart of this rich Vsurer. He draweth his purse, giueth out his goods, and helpeth the poore, and the poore is much eased by him. But alas what helpe is this? euen such as he findeth, that in the midst of his fit of an ague drinketh a great draught of cold water. No doubt he is refreshed, and cooled, and for that present time much the better. But after a while when his heanes renue the heat increaseth: his heart panteth, his pulse beateth, his mouth is dray, his tongue burneth: he is more terribly tormented, than euer before. So fareth it with him that borroweth mony vpon Vsury. He looketh in his hand, and seeth somewhat it is not his owne: yet is he refreshed therewith, and much eased. The yere passeth, the day of paiment draweth on, the creditor calleth for mony: then, then the heats, and fits, and agonies begin to grow. Then must pot and pan trudge to redeeme his body. Then he feeleth more cruell torments than euer before.

Thus doth the gentle Vsurer helpe to releeue the poore in time of his necessity: as if a man would cure a sore finger by cutting off the arme: or as if he would cure the blemish of the eie sight, by the pulling out the eies: or as if he would quench thirst by giuing poison to drinke: or, as if to saue one from drowning in a boisterous tempest, he would cast him ouer the boat into the sea.

The Scorpion imbraceth a man swetly with his legs, but in the meane while striketh him deadly with his taile. His face looketh amiable, his taile poisoneth. So an Vsurer looketh faire, and giueth good words: but at the end he vndoeth.

Who is stung by an Adder, he perceiueth no hurt: But feeleth a gentle beating of his veines with some delight, whereat he reioyceth. After this he falleth into a slumber: then the poison worketh, ouercommeth him, and killeth him. Euen so he that borroweth vpon Vsury, findeth himselfe wonderfully amended, and reioyceth: but he is stung, and hath a deadly stroke. The poison will grow ouer him, he shall die in a slumber, and be vndone before he is aware. So necessary is an Vsurer for to releeue the poore and needy, as rust is to helpe iron, and as the moth is to helpe a garment: it eateth him thorow from one side to another. Therefore saith Ambrose: Talia sunt vestra diuites beneficia. Minus datis, & plus exigitis. Talis humanitas, vt spolietis etiam dum subuenitis. Such are the benefits that you rich men bestow: you giue out little, and require much againe. Such is your kindnesse, that you vndoe them whom yee helpe. And thus much of the ease that poore men find in borrowing vpon Vsury. They are bitten, and stung, and eaten vp and deuoured by it. Most men confesse that this kind of Vsury is forbidden, because it releeueth not, but spoileth and consumeth.

meth. God take the liking of it out of all mens hearts, then ſhall they be the better able to iudge of the other ſorts, which they yet thinke allowable.

What if one rich man lend money to another? What if a Merchant take money to Vſury of a Merchant, and both be the better, and both be gainers? Here is no ſting, nor biting. What ſhall we thinke of this? What if a Theefe or a Pirate take Vſury of a Pirate or a Theefe, and both be partakers of the gaine, and be both of them holpen? Let no man miſlike the compariſon. For, as I ſaid before, a Pirate or a Theefe is not ſo noiſull, as an Vſurer. Here, ſay you, he that lendeth is a gainer, and he that borroweth is a gainer. It doth good to both. If both be gainers; who is the loſer? for Vſury neuer palleth, without working loſſe. Take this as a rule, There is neuer Vſury without loſſe.

Here, I pray you to lend me your minds, and conſider what I ſay. A Merchant taketh vp of his neighbor a hundred pounds, and muſt anſwer againe a hundred and ten pounds. He beſtoweth it all in Corne, and buieth for his hundred pounds, a hundred quarters of Corne. He ſendeth it to the Market, the people haue néede of it, and buy it. If he ſold it for eight groats a buſhel, he might make vp his hundred pounds, and be a gainer. But vnleſſe he make vp a hundred and ten pounds to diſcharge his Vſury, he muſt néedes be a loſer and vndone. But vndone he will not be: he will rather vndoe many others. Therefore he ſetteth price at three ſhillings the buſhel, and ſo maketh his money, and paieth the Vſurer, and ſaueth himſelfe, and is no loſer. Who then paieth the ten pounds? who is the loſer? Any man may ſee. The poore people which buy the corne. They find it, and ſéele it in euery morſell the eat. Thus, if the Merchant borrower be not hindred by the Vſurer: yet the people that buieth his wares are plaged. Thus it is no hard matter to find, that howſoeuer Vſury be vſed, it is alwaies dangerous, and beguileth the people, and is therefore the deſtruction and ouerthrow of the common wealth.

But, ſaith he, why ſhould I not make mony to yéeld me gaines, as well as my wares? I lend my ſhop for a yéere, or two, or three, ſo many pieces of Veluet, Satins, Taffata, Grograine, Chamblet, Hollands, &c. And for the vſe he ſhall pay me by the yeere forty pounds, and in the end reſtore me my ſhop, ſo many péeces of Veluet, &c. ſo long, ſo broad, of the ſame making, ſo good, ſo fine as were the other. This, ſaith he, is lawfull, therefore the other is lawfull.

No, no, this is not lawfull. It is not lawfull ſo to ſet out thy ſhop. It is Vſury, it is forbidden. But he that taketh the ſhop ſhal be a gainer: who ſhall be the loſer then? They that buy the wares muſt néeds buy at the dearer price. We may not allow one ill thing by the allowance of another. He ſhould rather ſay, Vſury taken vpon wares, is not lawfull: therefore Vſury for bare mony is leſſe lawfull. Hierome vpon Ezechiel ſaith: Putant quidam Vſuram tantùm eſſe in pecunia: quoa prænidens Scriptura diuina, omni rei auſert ſuperabundantiam, vt plus non accipias, quàm dediſti. Some thinke there is no Vſury, but in money. This did the holy Scriptures foreſee, and therefore taketh away the increaſe or gaines in any maner of thing: and requireth that thou receiue no more, than thou didſt deliuer. Lib. 6. in 18. Ezech.

An occupier waxeth old, his occupying is done. He hath in ſtocke two hundred pounds: he commeth to a yong man, wiſe, of good credit, and of honeſt dealing, and ſaith: I giue thee this money freely, it ſhall be thine for euer, vpon this condition: That thou giue mee twenty markes by the yéere during my life. This may be done, it is no Vſury. Wherefore? it is a plaine gift with a condition. The principall is gone from me for euer: I haue no right vnto it, it is none of mine. If I die to morrow before I receiue any peny, my executors cannot claime any thing. But in Vſury it is otherwiſe. The Vſurer requireth his whole ſome againe, and ſomewhat more for the vſe and occupying. Therefore this is a guift, and not Vſury.

Againe, I lend my neighbour twenty pounds vntill a day. He hath it freely, and frindly without any Vſury. Yet I ſay to him. Neighbour, you muſt néedes keep day, for the next day after I muſt diſcharge a paine, I ſtand bound for a paiment. I haue no more but this which you borrow. If I miſſe, I forfet fiue pounds. I pray you be carefull for it. The day commeth any neighbour commeth not: I lacke my mony, and becauſe I lacke it, I loſe fiue pounds. He commeth afterward and offereth me mine owne mony Then, ſay I, Neighbor, I haue loſt fiue pounds by your negligence and ſlackneſſe, I hope you will not ſuffer me to be a loſer for my gentleneſſe. This is intereſt, it is no Vſury.

Here, by the way, you may learne wherefore it is called intereſt, becauſe he may ſay, Interfuit mea habuiſſe: It behooued me, it ſtood me vpon to haue it, and now by your default I ſuſtaine loſſe. It is good to know the one from the other. This kind of dealing is Intereſt, and not Vſury. In Vſury I ſéeke to be a gainer: in intereſt I ſéeke only to be no loſer; gaine or profit I ſéeke none. And hereof I may lawfully ſéeke to be anſwered: it ſtandeth with equity, and conſcience, and good reaſon. This is intereſt, & no Vſury, that a man who requireth no gaine, should seeke to saue himselfe harmelesse. Beare patiently with mee, if I be long. My desire is, you should vnderstand this whole matter, and be able to know one thing from another: That so, no man may excuse his Vsury by name of interest: and others be not offended, nor reckon all men to be Vsurers, which lend forth their mony, or any waies dispose of their stocke.

A poore Orphane left in his Cradle hath a hundred pounds stocke. This stocke may bee put out to Vsury. And the Vsury is allowed. This is a deed of charity, it is no Vsury, as shall appeare. For, if the hundred pounds should lie still without increase, and be bestowed from yeere to yeere to the vse of the child, the whole stocke would be spent, before the child should come to yeeres. But if the stocke be put to occupying, and into an honest mans hands, something will grow to the reliefe of the Orphane, and yet his stocke remaine whole. This is charity to releeue the Infant, that cannot releeue himselfe. The like is, in using the stocke of a man that hath not his wits, and is not able to dispose of his goods. Or, if a Merchant by sickenesse, or maime, or any other hinderance, be not able to follow his businesse, he desireth another to vse and occupy for him, and to doe with his stocke, as it were his owne, only to maintaine him with the increase therof. This is not Vsury. Why? because he that taketh the stocke of the Orphane, or of the mad man, or of the diseased merchant, is not bound to answer all aduentures, and casualties that happen. As, if to like vse I take a stocke in cattell, and they die without my default: or a stocke in mony or wares, and the wares be burnt by fire, or the money stollen without my default, I am not bound to answer the principall: therefore it is no Vsury.

But he that taketh money to Vsury, whether he gaine or lose, or whatsoeuer happen vnto him he must answer the whole stocke he borrowed. And this it that vndoeth so many, and maketh them bankrupts. But this happeneth not in this case. He that occupieth the Orphanes mony or stocke, is charged only to vse it as his owne, and no otherwise. If it perish, or decay, or miscarry without his default, he is not bound to answer it. Therefore, as I said, it is no Vsury.

Yet, say they, farther for defence of Vsury: It is suffered in other countries, in France, Spaine, Italie, Rome, &c. the lawes permit it. And what law doth suffer it? I trow, not the law of God, for that law straitly forbiddeth it. But what speake I of the Law of God? the Ciuill law condemneth Vsury, the Canon law condemneth it, the Temporall law condemneth it, and the law of Nature condemneth it. And how is that sufferable by any Law, that by so many Lawes is condemned? or how is he worthy to liue among men, that despiseth the authority of so many Lawes? or what will you iudge of that man, that will be tempered and ordered by no Law? neither by Ciuill, nor by Cannon, nor by Temporall, nor by law of Nature, nor by law of Men, nor by law of God. I say not, how may wee thinke him to be a man of God? But, how may we thinke such a one to be a man? for it is the part and duty of a man to be ruled by law and reason.

But it is euery where, and therefore to be suffered. Too true that it is common euery where. Would God it were false. It vndoeth all the world. So the Diuel is euery where and suffered: so are the Stewes suffered in France, Spaine, Italie, Lombardie, Naples, Venice, and in Rome. Rome is called the holy City, the most holy hath his seat there, and yet suffereth he the Stewes in Rome. So were the Canaanites among the people of God and suffered. But they were as goades in their sides, & as thornes in their eies. As these were suffered, and as the Stewes are suffered, and as the Diuel is suffered: so and no otherwise are Vsurers. Such good, and no better doe they. For they are the children of the Diuell: their houses be the shops, wherein the Diuell doth his worke of mischiefe. They be Canaanites, and enemies of Gods people. They be goades in our sides, and sharpe thornes, and prickles in our eies. God grant that the Law may espy them: and the people abhorre them: and they may repent and loath their wickednesse.

Some other are bold to take authority for Vsury from Christ himselfe. He saith: The kingdome of Heauen, is as a man that going into a strange countrie, called his seruants, and deliuered to them his goods, and vnto one he gaue fiue talents, and to another two, and to another one. And said vnto them occupie vntill I come. The first did so, the second accordingly. They increased his stocke, and are commended for their Vsury. The third wrapt his talent in a Napkin, and kept it together. His master returned, and chid him, and said: Wherefore gauest not thou my mony into the banke, that at my comming I might haue required it with vantage? Therfore Vsury is allowed by the mouth of Christ. The two first are commended, not for any thing else, but for the gaine they made by Vsury. The third is rated & rebuked, not for theft, nor adultery, but because he laid not out his stocke to Vsury.

What? and is Vsury allowed & allowed by the witnesse of Christ? How can that be? for Christ, as we heard before, doth plainly forbid it. How is it then? what is the meaning of

of this parable? This it is. When Chriſt deliuered his Goſpell vnto his Diſciples, he gaue them charge to be diligent, and to multiply and increaſe the number of them that ſhould beleeue. To this purpoſe he ſaith, be as carefull in this buſineſſe for the glory of God, and the ſaluation of your brethren, as worldly wiſe men shew themſelues in taking wicked Mammon. Behold the Vſurers, they occupie their ſtock, and make it grow, and ſo of fiue pounds make ten, and of ten make twenty pounds, and ſo they become rich. So deale you in the gifts and knowledge that God hath beſtowed on you, giue them to the exchangers, put them out to Vſury, increaſe the Lords ſtocke. If they be diligent and faithfull in the things of this world, how much more ought you to be ſo in heauenly things?

This therefore is the meaning: Couetous men, and the children of this world be wiſe in their generation: You are the children of light, be you alſo wiſe, and doe you ſo likewiſe in your office and ſeruice, as you ſee them do. So he ſaith: Behold the fowles of Heauen, Matth. 6.
learne how the Lilies of the field grow. What of this? The Lilies are but graſſe: the Fowls of the aire are but Birds. The mercy of God in his prouidence and care, wherin he giueth vs all things needfull, is made plaine by example of theſe, and therby our diſtruſt and ouermuch carefulneſſe reproued. So doth Chriſt ſpeake this parable of the Vſurer, that as he is diligent in doing ill, ſo we ſhould be painfull and ready to do well.

But ſhall Vſurie therefore be lawfull, becauſe Chriſt draweth a compariſon, or maketh an example by an Vſurer? If it were ſo, we ſhould do many things otherwiſe than well. For in the Scriptures we are often times required to take example of thſe things which are ill. In the ſixteenth of Luke, Chriſt biddeth his Diſciples take example of the vnfaithfull ſteward, to be prouident and careful as he was. Doth he therefore commend the falſhood of the Steward? or ſhall falſhood therefore be lawfull? S. Paul ſaith: The day of the Lord 1. Theſſ. 5.
ſhall come, euen as a theefe in the night. Is theft therefore lawfull? S. Iames ſaith: The Diuels Iames 2.
beleeue, and tremble: take example of the Diuels. They beleeue, but their bare, baine, and dead faith, in which they can do no good, cannot ſerue them. Euen ſo ſhall not your faith if it be dead, and void of all good workes, ſaue you. God himſelfe to reprooue the vnthankfulneſſe and forgetfulneſſe of his people, which did ſo often forſake him, and followed Baal and Aſtaroth, ſaith in this maner vnto them: What nation did euer forſake their gods? Doth he in this ſpeech approue, that the Idols of the Heathen are gods? or becauſe God taketh example of idolatrie, ſhall idolatrie therefore be lawfull? he biddeth his ſeruants to be as faithfull and willing, and ready to ſerue him the God of heauen and earth, as the Gentiles were in ſeruice of their Idols, the workes of their owne hands. As God did will the Iſraelites to take example of the Idolaters: and as Chriſt biddeth take example of the falſe ſteward; and as Iames of the Diuels: ſo is this parable an example of that which is commendable: that is, the diligence of the ſeruants. Vſurie is no more allowed by this, than idolatry and falſhood and the Diuell, is by the other. Some will ſay, I haue no trade to liue, I muſt needs giue my money to Vſurie, or elſe I muſt beg. This is it that I ſpake of: This sheweth that deſpaire and miſtruſt in the prouidence of God, is the mother of Vſurie. If this were cauſe why he ſhould be an Vſurer, if this be well ſpoken for defenſe of his wickedneſſe, why may not the theefe, or the baud, or the inchanter, by like anſwer excuſe themſelues, and ſtand in defenſe of their doings? Auguſtine therefore ſaith: Audent etiam fœneratores dicere, non In Pſal. 128.
habeo aliud vnde viuam, &c. The Vſurers are bold to ſay, they haue no other trade whereby to liue. So will the theefe tell me, when I take him in his theft. So will he ſay that breaketh into other mens houſes. So will the baud ſay, that buieth yong maidens to vſe them to filthineſſe. So will the wicked enchanter, that ſelleth his ſin. If we reproue any of all theſe, they will anſwer, that this is their maintenance, and that they haue not any other way to liue. But Auguſtine ſaith: Quaſi non hoc ipſum in illis maximè puniendum eſt, quia artem nequitiæ delegerunt vnde viuerent, & inde ſe volunt paſcere, vnde offendant eum a quo omnes paſcuntur. As if they were not therefore moſt worthy to be puniſhed, becauſe they haue choſen a trade of wickedneſſe to liue by: and will maintaine themſelues by that thing, wherewith they diſpleaſe him by whom all are maintained. How much better would it be with them, if they did ſerue god truly in ſuch place and calling, whereto they might moſt ſet forth his glory, and do ſuch things as ſhould be profitable to themſelues and others?

The ſeruant of God knoweth, there is no want to thoſe that feare him. He knoweth the Lord hath care ouer him, and therefore caſteth his care vpon the Lord. He ſaith as the Prophet: The Lord is my ſhepheard, I ſhall want nothing. And: The Lord is the defen- Pſal. 23.
der of my life, of whom then ſhall I be afraid? I truſted in thee, O Lord, and ſaid, Thou art Pſal. 27.
my God. My times are in thy hand. Pſal. 31.

Thus much I thought expedient to ſpeake of the loathſome and foule trade of Vſury. I know not what fruit will grow therby, and what it will worke in your hearts. If it pleaſe God, it may do that good that I wiſh. I haue done my duty: I call God for a record vnto my seule, I haue not deceiued you. I haue spoken vnto you the truth. If I be deceiued in this matter, O God thou hast deceiued mée. Thy word is plaine. Thou saist: Thou shalt take no Vsury: thou saiest, He that taketh increase shall not liue. What am I, that I should hide the words of my God, or kepe them back from the hearing of his people? The learned old Fathers haue taught vs, it is no more lawfull to take Vsury of our brother, than it is to kill our brother. They that be of God, heare this, and consider it, and haue a care that they displease him not. But the wicked that are no whit moued, and care not what God saith, but cast his word behind them: which haue eies and sée not, & eares, yet heare not: because they are filthy, they shall be filthy still. Their greedy desire shall increase to their confusion, and as their money increaseth, so shall they increase the heapes of their sinnes. Pardon me if I haue béene long, or vehement. Of those that are Vsurers I aske no pardon.

I heare that there are certaine in this City, which wallow wretchedly in this filthinesse, without repentance. I giue them warning in the hearing of you all, and in the presence of God, that they forsake that cruell and detestable sinne. If otherwise they continue therein, I will open their shame, and denounce excommunication against them, and publish their names in this place, before you all: that you may know them, and abhorre them, as the plagues and monsters of the world: that if they be past all feare of God, they may yet repent and amend for worldly shame.

Tell mée thou wretched wight of the world, thou vnkind creature, which art past all sen'e and féeling of God, which knowest the will of God, and doest the contrary: how darest thou come into the Church? it is the Church of that God, which hath said, Thou shalt take no Vsury; and thou knowest he hath so said: how darest thou read or heare the word of God? It is the word of that God which condemneth Vsury; and thou knowest, he doth condemne it: how darest thou come into the company of thy brethren? Vsury is the plague and destruction and vndoing of thy brethren; and this thou knowest: how darest thou loke vpon thy children? thou makest the wrath of God fall down from Heauen vpon them: thy iniquities shall bée punished in them to the third and fourth generation: this thou knowest: how darest thou loke vp into heauen: Thou hast no dwelling there: thou shalt haue no place in the tabernacle of the highest. This thou knowest. Because thou robbest the poore, deceiuest the simple, and eatest vp the widowes houses: Therefore shall thy children be naked, and beg their bread: therefore shalt thou and thy riches perish together.

John 5. But Christ saith: The houre shall come, and now is, when the dead shall heare the voice of the Sonne of God, and they that heare it shall liue. Zacheus was a receiuer of tribute, and Luke 9. was rich, when he receiued Iesus to abide in his house: He stood forth, and said vnto the Lord: Behold Lord, the halfe of my goods I giue to the poore: and if I haue taken from any man by forged cauillation, I restore him foure-fold. Then Iesus said vnto him; This day saluation is come into this house, forasmuch as he also is become the son of Abraham. God may make his word worke so in the hearts of Vsurers, that they may also receiue Iesus, and forsake Vsury, and restore foure-fold if they haue deceiued any, and so may also receiue saluation. Let vs increase in that Vsury which is to the glorie of God. He hath giuen vs knowledge, and many excellent graces. Let vs put them forth, let vs occupie that talent which he hath left vs. He will returne, the day of his comming is at hand. He will require his talents, we must answer them. Let vs restore them with increase, that our seruice may be allowed, and we receiued into his tabernacle.

VERS. 7. For God hath not called vs vnto vncleanesse, but vnto holinesse.
8. He therefore that despiseth these things, despiseth not man, but God, who hath euen giuen you his holy spirit.

Leuit. 11. Let euery man possesse his vessell in holinesse and honour, for this is the will of God:
Luke 6. hereto are yée called. I am the Lord your God, saith he, be sanctified therefore, and be holy, for I am holy. So our Sauiour to his Disciples: Be mercifull, as your father also is mercifull. Vnmercifulnesse, cruelty, vncleanesse, fornication, vsury, and such like, are not of
2. Tim. 2. God. They answer not their calling that commit any maner of sinne. If any man therfore purge himselfe from these, hee shall bee a vessell vnto honour, sanctified and meet for the Lord.

It behoueth euery man when he is in secret and alone, to bethink himselfe whereto God hath called him. The Magistrate thus; I am called to doe iustice, to be mercifull to the widow, to haue pity vpon the fatherlesse; I am the minister of God, for the wealth of them that do well: and to take vengeance on him that doth euill. The minister and preacher thus; I haue charge giuen me to lead the people of God to the way of righteousnesse, I am called to do the worke of an Euangelist, to preach the word in season, and out of season, to shew the people their offences, & to reproue them with all earnestnesse, to teach them that they denie all vngodlinesse, and turne wholly vnto God: for necessitie is laid vpon me: and wo is me if I preach not the Gospell. The subiect must thus think with himselfe, I owe obedience to my Soueraign, I must be subiect, not because of wrath only, but also for conscience sake. If I resist, I resist the ordinance of God, and shall receiue to my selfe damnation. 1. Cor. 4.

It behoueth all men when they fele themselues led to any euill purpose, to bethinke themselues: Alas what meane I? why should I do it? This is not the will of God: God hath not called me to vncleannesse, but vnto holinesse: God is my God, I am his creature, I must serue him with my heart. The eyes of the Lord are ouer the righteous, and his eares open to their prayers: but the face of the Lord is vpon them that do euill.

He therfore that despiseth these things, despiseth not man, but God. Alas what are we? we are but vnprofitable seruants: we are the voice of the crier in the wildernesse. By vs it hath pleased God, to make his name knowen thorow all the World: we are your brethren, and your seruants for Christs sake. We are your helpers, by whom you are called to the faith. We preach not our selues, but Iesus Christ. We speake vnto you in the name of God. If you despise vs in doing this seruice toward you, you despise not vs, but you despise God, who hath sent vs, and God can in due time auenge your vnthankfulnesse. Who hath giuen you his holy spirit. You haue receiued the spirit of wisdome and vnderstanding you know these things are true, you cannot deny them. If you shall now offend, you shall offend against Gods spirit, which is giuen vnto you.

VERS. 9 But as touching brotherly loue, you need not that I write vnto you: for ye are taught of God to loue one another.

Loue is the bond of vnitie, of perfection, of knowledge, of wisedome, and of all godlinesse. Paul the more to set forth the sweetnesse, and comfort therof, calleth it, brotherly loue. Brethren are bound to loue one another. God, and nature, and bringing vp, do bind them. Many brethren haue endangered themselues to saue their brethren. It were a monster in nature, that one brother should kill another. You are all brethren, and haue one father, euen God. How then can you hate and trouble your brethren? Hereto Christ calleth vs: A new commandement giue I you, that ye loue one another: as I haue loued you, that ye also loue one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye haue loue one to another. Hereof the Prophet Dauid saith: Behold, how good and how comely a thing it is, brethren to dwell euen together. There is peace, there is comfort, there is heauen, there is God himselfe among them. This is the duty of the children of God, to loue together, as the parts and members of one body, as brethren, and as the sonnes of one father. Iohn 13. Psal. 133.

Here let vs consider one great disorder among vs that are Christians. If an action or matter at Law grow betweene man and man, then forthwith is the bond of brotherly loue broken: They are no longer friends. If he stand against him in suit of Law, he will haue no more to do with him, will not pray with him, nor drinke in his companie, nor talke together with him. Whensoeuer he seeth him, his heart riseth at him, as if he did see his enemie. This should not be so, it is a disorder in Christian behauiour.

Next after the Gospell, the Law is the greatest comfort that God hath giuen to the sons of men. It remedieth iniuries, and giueth to euery man, that is his. He that goeth to a Iudge, goeth to him that is the minister of iustice, and that sitteth in the rome of God to do right. For the seat of iustice, is the seat of God. If there were no Law to be ministred, but euery man might do what he would, and recken all his owne, whatsoeuer he could get or come by: what a life would it be? How should any man be master of that he hath? Who can imagine what iniuries, cruelties, murthers, and streames of blod would follow? Thankes be vnto God, who in mercy hath giuen vs a Law, and iustice to guide vs by.

Let vs be content to seke helpe at this Law without wrath or malice: let vs come to it, as we would come to our father. Let vs aske counsell at it, as we would at the mouth of God. As euery man thinketh it lawfull to vse his owne, or to require his owne: so let euery man be content, to leaue that he holdeth, when Law saith, it is none of his. The law is no breach of charitie, it is the bond and knot to kepe men in loue. A sonne may attempt law with his father, yet doe it in such duty as becommeth a sonne. A subiect may attempt law with his Prince, and yet lose and reuerence his Prince, as becommeth. Who vseth the law otherwise, doth abuse it. All strife and contention must be laid aside. Loue may auoid wrong, loue may require right, loue may stand forth, and seke defense before a Iudge. Loue is patient and gentle, it enuieth not, it doth not boast it selfe, it is not puffed vp, it disdaineth not, it seketh not her own things, it is not prouoked to anger, it thinketh not euill, it reioiceth not in iniquity, but it reioiceth in the truth. It suffereth all things, it beleueth all things, it hopeth all things, it endureth al things. Such is the nature of loue, such it is, whersoeuer it is, when it seketh right, when it defendeth it self against challenge of doing wrong.

VERS. 10. Yea, and that thing verily you do vnto all the brethren which are thorowout all Macedonia: but we beſeech you, brethren, that you increaſe more and more.

You loue the brethren, not only thoſe that are with you, and whom you know; but all, whatſoeuer they be, and in what place ſoeuer, though ye know them not. Some loue none but ſuch as are of their ſort, and deuotion, and ſect, and fellowſhip. If any be of an other mind, than they are of, they can not loue them. This loue is not of God, it is carnall and proceadeth but from the fleſh. Whoſoeuer carrieth the name of Chriſt, is our brother, wee muſt loue him for Chriſts ſake. Chriſtian loue doth loue thoſe that are enemies, and doe not loue vs: it bleſſeth them that ſpeake ill of vs, and praieth for them that perſecute vs.

Oh that theſe words of Paul might truly be ſpoken of vs, As touching brotherly loue, we need not write vnto you! Oh that God would touch our hearts with his holy ſpirit, that we were all ſo knit together, and loued one another, as he hath commanded vs! Then ſhould we taſte that peace that paſſeth all vnderſtanding: then would it appeare, how ioyfull a thing it were for brethren to dwell together in vnitie: then ſhould wee taſte of the comfort of the ſonnes of God. And alas, what is our life, or what is our profeſſion without
1. Cor. 13. loue? What is the Sun without light? What is the fire without heat? Though I ſpeake with the tongues of men, and of Angels (ſaith the Apoſtle) and haue not loue: I am as ſounding braſſe, or as a tinkling Cymball. And though I had the gift of prophecie, and knew all ſecrets, and all knowledge, yea, if I had all faith, ſo that I could remoue mountaines, and had not loue, I were nothing.

That you increaſe more and more. When of this world ſeeke to increaſe in their wealth and riches. They neuer thinke their ſtore ſo great, but it may abide to haue more laid to it. Wicked men ſtand not at a ſtay, they ceaſe not to doe ill, they heape ſinne vpon ſinne, and draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and ſin with cart ropes, vntill they come to the height
1. Cor. 4. and extremity of wickednes. So you increaſe in euery thing that is good. The kingdome of God is not in word, but in power. A child that ſtaieth at one ſtature, and neuer groweth bigger, is a monſter. The ground that proſpereth not, and is not fruitfull, is curſed. The tree that is barren, and profiteth not, is cut downe. This muſt all know, men, and women, and babes, and infants. They muſt all walke on ſtill in the way of godlineſſe, and increaſe and goe forward therein. Vnleſſe we goe forward, we ſlip backe. If we wax weary to doe the worke of God, God will forſake vs.

VERS. 11. And that ye ſtudie to be quiet, and to meddle with your own buſineſſe, and to worke with your owne hands, as we commanded you.

12. That yee may behaue your ſelues honeſtly towards them that are without, and that nothing be lacking vnto you.

Let no man among you be a buſie bodie in other mens matters. Be not eaues droppers, and harkning what is ſaid or done in your neighbours houſe. Wide eares and long tongues dwell together. They that loue to heare all that may be told them, doe alſo loue to blab out all they heare.

Study to be quiet, and meddle with your owne buſineſſe. The Church of God, is as the body of man. In a mans bodie euery part hath his ſeuerall office, the arme, the legge, the hand, and foot doe that, whereto they are appointed: and doing the ſame, they liue together in peace. But if the arme would take in hand to doe that is the dutie of the legge, or the foot that is the part of the hand, it would breed great diſorder in the whole body. So if euery man in the Church of God, ſeeke to doe that to them belongeth, the Church ſhall flouriſh, and be in quiet. But when euery man will be buſie, and take vpon him to looke into other: when euery priuate man will gouerne, and the Subiect take in hand to rule the Prince; all muſt néds come to wracke and decay. Buſie bodies euer finde fault with their brethren and neighbours, with the State, the Clergie, the Common wealth, the Church, the Gouernment, and with the Prince. They are an vnquiet kind of men euer looking for that they may miſlike, and neuer contented. From theſe men come priuie whiſperings, ſlander, backbiting, mutinies, conſpiracies, treaſons, depoſing of Princes, and vtter decay of common wealths. Theſe are the fruits of curioſitie.

And to worke with your owne hands. God hath ordained that all ſorts of men ſhould labour, and eat their bread in the ſweat of their browes. And heare the Apoſtle doth not only charge them to worke, but that they worke with their owne hand. Thou that haſt hands, and ſetteſt them not to worke, thou that abuſeſt the grace of God by thy idleneſſe, ſhalt giue an account thereof. What filleth your priſons? What dubbeth and enricheth your gallowes, but idleneſſe? When your children come to theſe places, and ſée they muſt muſt liue no longer, whereof complaine they, but of idleneſſe? then they curſe the time, and their Father and mother that brought them vp in idleneſſe.

Though kings, and princes, and counſellours, and preachers, and magiſtrates dig not, and plow not, nor doe any handy worke, yet they breake not therefore the commandement of God, they breake not this rule of the Apoſtle. The head walketh not as the fæt, nor trauelleth as the hands: yet is it not idle. There is no labour comparable to the labour of a Prince: Day and night, ſleeping and waking, he is full of cares, & full of paines. The noble man and magiſtrate, if he regard his countrie, be carefull for the lawes, aid the poore, repreſſe tyrannie, comfort the weake, puniſh the wicked, is not idle. The miniſter, if he applie his booke, be diligent in praier, exhort, and teach publikely, and priuately, is not idle. Theſe labours are greater, than all the labours of the bodie.

VERS. 13. I would not, brethren, haue you ignorant concerning them which are aſleepe, that ye ſorrow not euen as other which haue no hope.

14. For if wee beleeue that Ieſus is dead, and is riſen, euen ſo them that ſleepe with Ieſus will God bring with him.

Herein ſtandeth the comfort of Chriſtian Religion. Were it not for the hope of the ſecond life, the godly in this world were in worſe caſe than the dumbe and brute beaſts. When Chriſt appointed his Diſciples to go and preach, he ſaid, I ſend you as ſheepe in the middeſt of wolues. They will ſcourge you, you ſhall be hated of all men. As the Goſpell encreaſed in any place, theſe words were fulfilled. The godly were put to death for the name of Chriſt. The father did ſee his ſonne ſlaine before his face, and the ſonne his father cruelly tormented. Hence grew great mourning and heauineſſe. Oh, ſaid they, he was a reuerend ſage father: oh he was a wiſe yong man, learned, zealous, and a great ſtay in the Church. Why would God take him before his time? There is not now any one left, whom wee may behold, or heare, or follow. We are left comfortleſſe, and without hope. After this ſort it is likely the Theſſalonians mourned, when they beheld the perſecution of the Church of God among them. Herein they grew towards miſtruſt, and to be like the Heathen, which had no hope. S. Paul thought good to reforme this erreur. And becauſe this abuſe grew of ignorance, for that they knew not the happie eſtate of ſuch which die in the Lord; hee ſaith, I would not haue you ignorant, what is become of them, and what God hath done for them. He hath tried them as gold, and hath made them worthy for himſelfe. Therefore you ought rather to reioice, there is no cauſe at all of mourning. When Chriſt ſaw his Diſciples heauy and ſad becauſe of his departure, he ſaid: If ye loued me, ye would verily reioice, becauſe I ſaid, I goe to the Father: for my Father is greater than I. I ſhall ſit at the right hand of my Father in glory, then ſhall euery knee bow vnto mee, and euery tongue ſhall confeſſe my greatneſſe. Therefore if ye loued me, you would reioice in my behalfe. It is ignorance that maketh you heauy, becauſe you know not whither I goe. Iohn 14.

When Ioſeph was ſold into Ægypt, good father Iacob thought he was dead, and therefore mourned day and night. Nothing could comfort him. Alas, ſaith he, that I haue liued to ſee this day: O Ioſeph my ſonne, my ſonne Ioſeph, oh that I might giue my life to redeeme thee. Now ſhall my hoarie head goe downe to the graue in heauineſſe. But when he heard that Ioſeph liued, & did ſee him with his eies: When he did ſee that he was a Prince, next in place to the King, and had all the Countrie at commandement; then he knew he had mourned without a cauſe. Then his heart leapt within him, his eies guſht out with water, he wept for ioy. Ignorance, as we ſee, made him heauy, knowledge of the truth as it was, reioiced his heart, and made him glad.

There is great error and darkneſſe, and ignorance, in mans life. We reioice when we haue cauſe to mourne, and mourne many times when we haue cauſe to reioice. Therefore he ſaith, I would not haue you ignorant. Be not deceiued. God hath giuen you eies to ſee the right way: God hath giuen you eares to heare counſell: and a heart to know reaſon, and to vnderſtand and iudge. God hath giuen you the Scriptures, and by them the knowledge of his will. He hath giuen you a face to looke vp to heauen, and the ſpirit of life hath he powred into you, that you ſhould not by any meanes be deceiued.

That yee ſorrow not as other that haue no hope. He doth not forbid naturall affection. Our parents, and our children are deare vnto vs. They are our fleſh and blood, and the chiefe and principall parts of our body. Any part of our body can not be cut off, but wee ſhall feele it. The father if he feele not the death of his ſonne: or the ſonne, if he feele not the death of his father, and haue not a deepe feeling of it, he is vnnaturall. Dauid mourned for Ionathan. The whole land mourned for Ioſias. Paul ſaith, God haue mercy vpon Epaphroditus, (he was ſicke, very neere vnto death) and not on him only, but on me alſo, leſt I ſhould haue ſorrow vpon ſorrow. If God had taken Epaphroditus out of life, no doubt Paul would haue ſorrowed. What néd more examples? Chriſt mourned for Lazarus, and ſhed teares for him. Then ſaid the Iewes, Behold how he loued him. Iohn 11.

We are not therefore forbidden to mourne ouer the dead: but to mourne in ſuch ſort as the heathen did, we are forbidden. They, as they did neither beléeue in God, nor in Chriſt, ſo had they no hope of the life to come. When a Father ſaw his Sonne dead, he thought he had bén dead for euer. He became heauy, changed his garment, delighted in no company, forſook his meat, famiſhed himſelfe, rent his body, curſed his fortune, cried out of his gods. Oh my deare ſonne, (ſaith he) how beautifull, how learned, and wiſe, and vertuous waſt thou! Why ſhouldeſt thou die ſo vntimely? why haue I offered ſacrifice, and done ſeruice to my gods? they haue made mée a god recompence. I will truſt them no more, I will no more call vpon them. Thus they fell into deſpaire, and ſpake blaſphemies.

Therefore, ſaith Paul, you may mourne, as did the holy men of God: but in ſuch ſort as the vnfaithfull ſorrow for their dead, you may not mourne. You are the ſonnes of the holy Fathers: faſhion not your ſelues therefore like to the heathens, do not as they did, neither in feaſts, nor in mariages, nor in your attire, nor in your mourning, nor in your paſtimes. But behaue your ſelues as becommeth the children of the moſt high.

But why may not Chriſtians mourn, and continue in heauineſſe? Becauſe it is no new thing, for a man to die: becauſe he goeth the way of all fleſh. Againe, they that depart this life, are not dead, they are not gone for euer, as the heathen imagined. They are laid downe to take reſt quietly for a time. The death of a godly man, is nothing elſe, but a ſléepe. So ſaith our Sauiour of Lazarus, Our friend Lazarus ſleepeth: howbeit, Ieſus ſpake of his death. Iohn 11. Act. 7. So it is ſaid of Steuen. And they ſtoned Steuen, who called on God, and ſaid, Lord Ieſus receiue my ſpirit. And hee kneeled downe, and cried with a loud voice, Lord lay not this ſinne to their charge; and when he had thus ſpoken, he ſlept. Whoſoeuer dieth in the peace of conſcience, he may ſay, I will lie downe and take my reſt. Thus doth the man of God repoſe himſelfe. For Chriſt is vnto him both in life, and in death aduantage. Rom. 14. He ſaith with the Apoſtle: Whether we liue, we liue vnto the Lord; or whether we die, we die vnto the Lord: whether wee liue therefore or die, we are the Lords. He goeth into his graue as into a bed: he forſaketh this life, as if he lay downe to ſléepe. He ſhall ſhake off his ſléepe, rouſe himſelfe, and riſe againe. As wée wake out of ſléepe, wée know not how: ſo ſhall wee riſe againe, though wée know not how. As we are much refreſhed, and our bodies ſtrengthened by ſléepe: ſo ſhall wée riſe againe in much more ſtrength, and our corruption ſhall put on incorruption, and our mortalitie, immortalitie. So often then as we goe to our beds, let vs thinke of our reſurrection from death. Who is ſorrie to goe into his bed? What father lamenteth to ſée his child lie quietly, and take his reſt? Why then ſhould he ſo mourne for his death? Wherein God dealeth mercifully with him, and doth tranſlate him to the glory of the ſonnes of God, where is no death, nor feare: but wée ſhall be made like to the Angels of God.

The bodie rotteth in the ground: yet God preſerueth it, that it ſhall not periſh. His ſpirit ſhall returne to it againe, and it ſhall liue. God is able to bring this to paſſe. He hath promiſed ſo to do. He hath done it already, and will do it againe. Luke 7. When Chriſt came neere to the gate of the Citie of Nain, there was a dead man carried out, the onely begotten ſonne of his mother, which was a widow, and much people of the Citie was with her, and when the Lord ſaw her, he had compaſſion on her, and ſaid vnto her, Weepe not. And hee went, and touched the coffin, and they that bare it ſtood ſtill, and he ſaid, I ſay vnto thee, yong man ariſe. And hee that was dead ſate vp, and began to ſpeake, and hee deliuered him to his mother. Lazarus was laid in his graue, he had bene foure daies dead, his body did ſtinke: Iohn 11. Yet when Chriſt cried with a loud voice, Lazarus come foorth: then he that was dead, came foorth, bound hand and foot with bands, and his face was bound with a napkin; Ieſus ſaid vnto them, Looſe him, and let him go. Matth. 27. Saint Matthew ſaith: The graues did open themſelues, and many bodies of the Saints which ſlept aroſe, and came out of the graues after his reſurrection, and went into the holy Citie, and appeared vnto many. Theſe few ſtories witneſſe vnto vs the riſing againe of our bodies vnto life. But what doe I ſpeake of the bodies of men? They are the houſes of God, the temples of the holy Ghoſt, God hath appointed vnto them a kingdome.

Who conſidereth not the ſwallowes and other birds? They ſleepe all the winter long. But when the ſpring commeth, they come to life againe, and are ſéene abroad. What creatures ſo little, ſo vile, and ſo little worth as the flie? yet by thoſe ſo baſe, and contemptible things, doth God teach vs to know our ſelues and our eſtate. The greateſt part of the winter, they are as dead. They créepe into chinkes and corners, as into their graue, and lie there without life, without feeling. Proue it, who liſt, he ſhall ſée it ſo. The body is dead, the wings moulted. Yet the very ſame flie ſo little, and ſo vile, ſhall be reſtored againe at the ſpring, and ſhall liue in the warme weather, and haue the ſame wings, and the ſame fact and the ſame body. If we be hard of beléefe, to giue credit to the word of God, theſe are manifeſt proofes to teach vs the reſurrection of our bodies. If God doe ſo much for the flies, which are ſo vile a creature: how much rather will he quicken vs againe, whom he hath choſen out of this world to liue with him for euer?

The Word of God is almighty. He ſhall but ſpeake, and it ſhall be done. The Trumpet ſhall ſound, and the dead ſhall returne to life. I am ſure, ſaith Iob, that my redeemer liueth, and that I ſhall riſe out of the earth in the latter day, and ſhall be couered againe with my ſkin, and ſhall ſee God in my fleſh. Whom I my ſelfe ſhall ſee, and mine eies ſhall behold, and none other for me. This is my hope laid vp in my boſome. Saint Paul willeth Timothie neuer to forget his doctrine: Remember that Ieſus Chriſt made of the ſeed of Dauid, was raiſed againe from the dead according to my Goſpell. This is the foundation, the beginning, and the ending of Religion. If the ſpirit of him that raiſed vp Ieſus from the dead dwell in you, he that raiſed vp Chriſt from the dead, ſhall alſo quicken your mortall bodies, becauſe that his ſpirit dwelleth in you. 2. Tim. 2. Rom. 8.

This is an Article of our faith. We beléeue the reſurrection of the body, euen of this bodie, in which we liue, and which we carry about with vs. All fleſh ſhall ſée the ſaluation of our God. This is the hope of Chriſtians, the reſurrection of their fleſh. Set your affections on things which are aboue, not on things which are on the earth. For ye are dead, ſaith the Apoſtle, and your life is hid with Chriſt in God. When Chriſt which is our life ſhall appeare, then ſhall ye appeare with him in glorie. Colloſſ. 3.

Therefore let not your hearts be dull through vnbeléefe. As God was able to ſaue the bodies of his ſeruants, that they were not hurt in the fire, as he was able to kéepe Ionas ſafe in the Whales belly: ſo can he preſerue our bodies ſafe in the earth. Yea, much better: becauſe the fire naturally conſumeth, and the fiſhes belly deſtroieth thoſe things which they rauine: but the earth naturally preſerueth that which is earthly.

As our God is of power, to diuide the waters, to make the Sea ſtand like a wall, and giue paſſage to his people: as he can change the courſe of the heauens, and make the Sunne goe backe, as he can draw water out of the hard rockes: ſo is he of power to raiſe our dead bodies againe vnto life. If he made the earth, the water, the aire, the heauens, and all creatures in them of nothing: he is much more able to reſtore againe thoſe bodies which haue bén. We looke, ſaith Paul, for the Sauiour, euen the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, who ſhall change our vile bodie, and make it like his glorious bodie, according to the working whereby he is able to ſubdue all things to himſelfe. The Prophet Eſay comforteth the people of God in their afflictions: Thy dead men ſhall liue: euen with my bodie ſhall they riſe: awake and ſing, ye that dwell in the duſt: for thy dew is the dew of hearbs, and the earth ſhall caſt out the dead. Againe: The earth ſhall diſcloſe her blood, and ſhall no more hide her ſlaine. Therefore ſaith our Sauiour: This is the Fathers will, which hath ſent me, that of all which he hath giuen me, I ſhould loſe nothing, but ſhould raiſe it vp againe at the laſt daie. Againe he ſaith: The houre ſhall come, in the which all that are in the graues ſhall heare his voice. And they ſhall come foorth that haue done good, vnto the reſurrection of life: but they that haue done euill, vnto the reſurrection of condemnation. And againe: I am the reſurrection and the life: he that beleeueth in me, though he were dead ſhall liue, and whoſoeuer liueth and beleeueth in me ſhall neuer die. Philip. 3. Eſay 26. Iohn 6. Iohn 5. Iohn 11.

For, if we beleeue, that Ieſus is dead, and is riſen: that he was deliuered to death for our ſinnes, and is riſen againe for our iuſtification: if we beléeue that hée is aſcended vp into Heauen, and ſitteth at the right hand of God his father: he will alſo raiſe vp our mortall bodies, and bring vs with him. Now, Chriſt is riſen from the dead, and was made the firſt fruits of them that ſleepe. He is our head, we are his body: We are fleſh of his fleſh, and bone of his bone. He hath giuen vs his Spirit to dwell in vs. But if any man hath not the Spirit of Chriſt, the ſame is not his. Chriſt our head, liueth. His body then can not be dead. Where I am, ſaith he, there ſhall alſo my ſeruant be. Wherefore if we be dead with Chriſt, we beleeue that we ſhall liue alſo with him. 1. Cor. 15. Rom. 8. Iohn 12. Rom. 6.

What then ſhall become of the Infidels, which haue no faith, which haue not the ſpirit of God? Shall not they riſe againe? Yes verily. They ſhall riſe, but not with Chriſt. They ſhall not riſe the reſurrection of the iuſt. Some ſhall riſe vnto life, ſome vnto death: ſome to ſaluation, others to damnation: ſome to glory, others to ſhame. We muſt all appeare before the iudgement ſeat of Chriſt, that euery man may receiue the things which are done in his bodie, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or euill. The wicked ſhall riſe vp againe with their bodies, and their portion ſhall be with the Diuell and his Angels: they ſhall come forth of their graues, to the reſurrection of condemnation, their bodie and ſoule 2. Cor. 5.

shall be cast into hell fire. Their worme shall neuer die: their fire shall not be quenched. It had bene better for them, they had neuer bene borne.

VERS. 15. For this say we vnto you, by the word of the Lord, that we which liue, and are remaining in the comming of the Lord, shall not preuent them that sleepe.

16. For the Lord himselfe shall descend from Heauen with a shout, and with the voice of the Archangell, and with the trumpet of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first.

This that we declare vnto you is not of our selues. It is the truth of God, it shall stand good and be found true for euer. God will raise our bodies out of the graue, and restore them from death to life. You may not reason how, or in what order this shall be done: or, who shall be the first, or the second, or the third, that shall rise vp in the resurrection. Such que-
1. Cor. 15. stions are vnfit and not to be moued. We shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eie. At that houre, some shall be aliue, and some shall be dead. For he shall come to iudge both the quicke and the dead. We that are remaining in the comming of the Lord, shall not preuent them that sleepe. Neither is their part better in the resurrection, that shall then be found aliue: nor their part worse, that haue bene dead many yeres before. For they which were dead shall as soone be partakers of the glorie of the sonnes of God, as the other.

Touching the state of men that shall liue in the end of the world, Christ saith: As the Matth. 24. daies of Noah, so likewise shall the comming of the sonne of man be. I doubt not but you remember the storie, what dreadfull plague of raine and tempest fell, when all the world was drowned, and destroied with water. Vice and vngodlinesse increased, and all flesh had corrupt his way vpon earth. They had no shame, there was no feare of God before their eies. Gods wrath was kindled against them. He sent Noah a preacher of righteousnesse to reforme them, to tell them of the destruction at hand, that they might repent, and be saued. But they regarded it not. They laught Noah to scorne, and grew desperate, and continued in sinne. Suddenly all the fountaines of the great deepe were broken vp, and the windowes of heauen were opened. As they were eating and drinking, buying and selling, building, purchasing, stirring and trauelling: as they were in the midst of their ioies, and trauels, and pleasures, the raine came vpon them, and the flods grew so great, that it destroied the whole world, except Noah and a few of his companie. Their lands, their goods, Cities, Castles, nor any other their pleasure or wealth could saue them: so shall it be in the comming of Christ.

As it was in the daies of Lot, and as it befell to Sodom, and Gomorrha: they liued and increased in filthinesse. Their hearts were blind and regarded no counsell. Their bodies were filthie: their soules, their liues, their houses and Cities were full of filthinesse. The Angell of God departed from them, Lot went out from among them: and fire came downe from Heauen and consumed them to ashes, and carried them downe quicke into hell. There was no father left to lament his child, no child left to lament his father. So shall it be at the comming of Christ. He shall come as a theefe, suddenly, when no man looketh for his comming: he shall come at such season, when mens hearts will be aslepe, and thinke not of him.

2. Pet. 3. S. Peter saith: There shall come in the last daies, mockers, which will walke after their lusts, and say, where is the promise of his comming? for since the fathers died, all things continue alike from the beginning of the creation. They scorne the threatnings of Gods iudgement. When shall the world come to an end? We haue winter and sommer, raine, snow, day and night as before. The Sunne keepeth his course: the flods run: the trees beare fruit: all things are as they haue bene. O, saith Peter, know this, that God hath made the heauen and earth, and all the furniture in them. They are his creatures: he doth hold them vp, and preserue them by the power of his word. When God shall withdraw his word, they shall decay, and haue an end. As for our Lord, he shall come, and not tarry: at his comming Heauen shall depart away as a scrole that is rolled, the element shall melt with heat, and the earth with the workes that are therein, shall be burnt vp and consumed before his face. Deceiue not your selues with lying words. For when you say, peace, peace, and all Matth. 24. things are safe, then shall suddaine destruction come vpon you. Then two men shall be in the fields: the one shall be receiued, and the other refused. Two women shall be grinding at the mill: the one shall be receiued, and the other refused. So shall also the comming of the sonne of man be.

The number of the faithfull that shall remaine at his comming, shall not be many. So Luke 18. saith Christ: When the sonne of man commeth, shall he find faith on the earth? S. Iohn prophecying of that day, ſaith: The Sunne was as blacke as ſackcloth of haire, and the Moone Reu. 6.

was like blood. The beauty of the Church ſhall be defaced, the light of the Goſpell ſhall be put out. Then ſhall few be left of thoſe that ſhall behold the glory of God. Theſe ſhall giue witneſſe vnto the truth. And albeit they be but few, yet are they enow to condemne the vngodlineſſe of the wicked. We ſhall not goe in routs: for we ſhall be but few. We ſhall then be in the body, and liue in this world, and loke vp, and ſée theſe things: yet when the Lord ſhall come, we ſhall not preuent them that ſléepe. Although we liue, and they were dead, yet ſhall they be as ready as we.

Why? For the Lord himſelfe ſhall deſcend with a ſhout, &c. Here is laid before vs, the true maner of the terrible iudgement of God. For our better vnderſtanding, let vs compare heauen with earth, and the iudgement of God with the iudgement of men. The Iudges ſit on high, accompanied with noble men, and Iuſtices, attended on with Conſtables, and Baillieffes, and the State and preſence of the Country: the théefe is brought with pinyond, and bound in chaines and fetters. The poore wretch ſtandeth in great feare: his conſcience accuſeth him, and ſaith, Thou didſt ſteale, thou art worthy to die. The voice of the Iudge is as a blaſt of thunder: the face of the Iudge terrible to him, as hell fire. But the innocent that is wrongfully impriſoned, and hath not offended, he ſéeth himſelfe cléere, his conſcience excuſeth him, and therefore reioiceth at the comming of the Iudges. He thought it long before they came. Theſe, ſaith he, will ſtrike off my ſhackles, and ſet me at liberty. Their voice vnto him, is as the voice of life: he beholdeth them, and they are as the Angels of God.

Such ſhall be the ſhew and ſight of the Sonne of God: he ſhall come downe with Maieſtie from Heauen: the Trumpet of God ſhall ſound, and be heard from the one end of the heauen, to the other: and whoſoeuer ſhall heare it, ſhall quake for feare. Then ſhall hée be the Iudge ouer all flesh. Then he ſhall ſhew himſelfe to bée King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. Then ſhall he not come in humility, méekneſſe, and mercy: but with dread and terror of iudgement, and iuſtice. Not with twelue poore Apoſtles: but with twelue thouſand Angels to attend vpon him. Not in the preaching of the Goſpell, and calling ſinners to repentance: but, in the ſound of a Trumpet, wherewith all the corners of the earth ſhall be amazed. Then ſhall he not ſay, Come vnto me all yée that trauell, and be loaden, and I will refreſh you: I am ſent to the loſt Shéepe of Iſraell. He ſhall not ſay, Father forgiue them, for they know not what they doe. But, You haue béen aſhamed of mée, and of my word, before men: therefore now will I be aſhamed of you before my heauenly Father.

Then ſhall they that deſpiſe the word of God, know what they deſpiſed: and the blaſphemers ſhall reape the fruit of their blaſphemy. Then the careleſſe Shepheard which hath not fed the Lords ſhéepe, but neglected them, and left them at all aduentures: which hath betraied his flocke, and giuen them to be a préy vnto the Wolfe, ſhall receiue a iuſt reward for his treaſon. Then the adulterer, oppreſſor, and Vſurer, ſhall haue their life laid open before them. Then ſhall euery eie ſée him. They ſhall ſee him, whom they pearced thorow: Reu. 1.
they ſhall ſée his wounds, which they did not regard. They ſhall ſée his Sword ready drawen to ſlay all his enemies, and ſhall fall downe for feare of him that ſitteth vpon the throne, and of the Lambe.

But the hearts of the righteous ſhall reioice. They ſhall lift vp their heads, and ſée him in whom they haue truſted. Then they ſhall ſay, This is the day which the Lord hath made, let vs reioice and be glad in it. Come, let vs reioice vnto the Lord, let vs come before his face with praiſe: let vs ſing loud vnto him with Pſalmes. Such ſhall be the ſtate and countenance, and honor, and maieſtie of our God, when he ſhall come downe from Heauen for our deliuerance.

And the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe, firſt. The earth ſhall open and yéeld forth her dead bodies: that ſo they may be ready with vs that remaine, to goe before the preſence of our Iudge. Which are dead in Chriſt. Who are they? They whom he choſe out of this world: and which haue choſen God for their portion: whom God hath ſealed vnto the day of redemption. Which haue ſaid, Chriſt is to me both in life, and death, aduantage. And, I liue, not I now, but Chriſt liueth in me. And againe: Whether we liue or die, we are the Lords. Which ſay, I haue bound my ſelfe to ſerue the Lord, all the daies of my life.

They are dead in Chriſt which commend themſelues wholly vnto him, and ſay, O Lord in thée haue I truſted, let me neuer be confounded. I deſire to be loſed, and to bée with Chriſt. Into thy hands O Lord, I commend my ſpirit, thou hath redéemed mée, O Lord of truth. To be ſhort, whoſoeuer liueth in the Lord, he dieth in the Lord. He in whom Chriſt liueth, which hath a taſte and féeling of Chriſt in his heart: he that reioiceth in Chriſt, and loketh for that bleſſed hope, and appearing of the glory of the mighty God, and of our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt: hée is a ſhéepe of his paſture, he is a member of his body, hée is the apple of his eie: hée liueth, and dieth in Chriſt. Bleſſed is hée that ſo liueth, and ſo dieth, for hée shall rise with Christ in the resurrection of the righteous, and shall haue his part in the land of the liuing.

Vers. 17. Then shall we which liue and remaine, be caught vp with them also in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the aire: and so shall we euer be with the Lord.

18. Wherefore comfort your selues one another with these words.

We which shall see all these things, shall also be caught vp our selues. But here you must note, that Paul speaketh not this of his own person, and of them that liued in his time, as if they should continue aliue vnto the end, or that the world should haue an end, before they should die: but he sheweth what shall be the state of such, whosoeuer shall then remain aliue. And againe, marke, that he saith not, we which liue and remaine, shall die forthwith, or, our bodies shall be turned into dust, and so our soules alone goe to meet the Lord: but, whether we be standing, or sitting; doing well, or ill occupied; we shall be caught vp. For the trumpet shall suddenly blow, and then the dead shall rise, and we shall be changed. So
1. Cor. 15. saith S. Paul. Behold, I shew you a secret thing, we shall not all sleepe, but we shall all be changed. In a moment, in the twinckling of an eie shall they that are dead arise, and we shall be changed. This our mortall body shall be changed, and shall put on immortalitie: this corruptible body shall be changed, and put on incorruption. Christ will change our earthly bodies, to the likenesse of his glorious heauenly body. Then shall our flesh be pure,
1. Cor. 15. and heauenly, and spirituall, and we shall be able to beholde the glory of God. Then shall be brought to passe, the saying that is written, Death is swallowed vp into victory. O death, where is thy sting? O graue, where is thy victory?

To meet the Lord in the aire, &c. This is a comfortable end of all troubles and persecutions which the godly suffer in this life, that they be receiued into the glory of God, and that both their body and soule doth liue with him, and enioy his presence for euer. Then shall they eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God. They shall hunger no more, nor thirst any more, neither shall the Sun light on them, nor any heat. God shall wipe away all teares from their eies. Then shall they see those ioies, which eie hath not seene, nor eare hath heard, nor hath entred into the heart of man. Such an end shall they haue, whosoeuer feare the Lord.

Comfort your selues one another with these words. You see the turmoiles, and troubles of the world, what vexations and afflictions Satan raiseth vp against all those that will liue godly. Open and notorious sinners are forborne. Theft, adultery, vsury, extortion, wilfull murther, rebellion, treason, are many times pardoned, and vnpunished; but true religion, which is the turning from Idols to serue the true and liuing God, and faith in Iesus Christ, that by him we shall be deliuered from the wrath to come, findeth few friends, and seldome escapeth without strange and most cruell torments. What is this, but to crucifie Psal. 2. the Lord of glory, and to set Barrabas a murtherer at liberty? Dauid saith: The Kings of the earth band themselues, and the Princes are assembled together against the Lord, and against his anointed. They seeke to spoile the vine of the Lord, and to destroy his little flocks. They vse all meanes to put out the light of the Gospell. But be you of good cheare, continue you stedfast in the truth, your redemption is euen at hand. You shall be caught vp into the clouds, to meet the Lord, and so shall abide with him for euer. Let euery neighbour comfort his neighbour, and euery father his child: let vs all one comfort another with these words.

Chap. V.

Vers. 1. But of times, and seasons, brethren, you haue no need that I write vnto you.

2. For ye your selues know perfectly, that the day of the Lord shall come, as a theefe in the night.

3. For when they shal say, peace, and safety, then shall come vpon them sudden destruction, as the trauell vpon a woman with child, and they shal not escape.

Matth. 24. When the Disciples came vnto Christ apart, and said: Tell vs when these things shall be, and what signe shall be of thy comming, and of the end of the world? he answered, Take heed lest any man deceiue you. It is not for you to know the Acts 1. time, or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power. For of that day and houre knoweth no man, no, not the Angels which are in Heauen, neither the Son himselfe saue
Mark. 13. the Father. Vex not your spirit in vaine. Seeke not for that you may not know, you shall not be able to find it.

Therefore saith Paul: I need not to write of times and seasons, in which these things shall be done. Your selues haue been taught the word of God, you haue learned what his will will is: you know the day of the Lord ſhall come vpon you as a thefe. And how commeth a thefe? not in the day time, not when a man hath company about him, not when he is watched: but in the night, in the darkneſſe, when all light is out, when the good man of the houſe taketh his reſt, when the ſeruants are aſleep. Euen ſo, when the light of the truth is taken away, when the heart of the good man of the houſe is at reſt, and his eies are darkned, that they cannot ſee: and all his ſenſes drowned in worldly pleaſures; when we care for nothing, and thinke of nothing, when we ſay, peace, and ſafety: then will the Sonne of man come to iudgement, then ſhall deſtruction ſuddenly fall vpon vs. Therefore let vs be ready, for in the houre that we thinke not, will the Sonne of man come.

Marke that Paul ſaith, Ye haue no need that I write vnto you of times and ſeaſons: and that our Sauiour ſaith, it is not for you to know the times, or the ſeaſons. What may we thinke then of them, that write bookes and Almanackes, and ſay, ſuch a yere, and at ſuch a time, Chriſt ſhall come, and with theſe ſpeches fray and mocke the world? Paul was the Apoſtle of Chriſt, an elect veſſell of the holy Ghoſt, he ſaid, I haue no need to write of it, you cannot know it. What need is there now that ſuch bookes and pamphlets ſhould be written? why ſhould the world be troubled with ſuch vanities?

Spare me your patience, and giue me leaue a little to deale with theſe wiſards. Tell me, thou that doeſt meaſure and behold the compaſſe of Heauen, and markeſt the coniunctions, and oppoſitions, and aſpects of the ſtars: and by that wiſedom canſt foretell the things that ſhall be done hereafter: where learneſt thou this ſkill? how commeſt thou by this deepe knowledge? Paul was taken vp into the third heauen, and heard words which cannot be ſpoken, which are not lawfull for man to vtter: yet he knew not this ſecret, nor might not know it. What art thou then? art thou greater than the Apoſtle of Chriſt? haſt thou ben taken vp into ſome place higher than the third heauen? haſt thou heard ſuch words, as are not lawfull to vtter? if it be ſo, why doeſt thou vtter them? wilt thou take that vpon thee, which the holy Apoſtle dareth not? art thou of Gods priuie Counſell? the Angels, and Archangels know not hereof: and ſhall we thinke that thou knoweſt it? Art thou wiſer than an Angell? Conſider thy ſelfe, thou art a miſerable man, thy breath fadeth as the ſmoake. Thou art nothing but duſt and aſhes: thou canſt not attaine to the knowledge hereof.

And what is that, which thou boaſteſt? the knowledge of that terrible day, when all fleſh ſhall appeare before the Iudge: euen of that time, which God hath put in his owne power. O vaine man, thou knoweſt not thine owne day, thou knoweſt not when thy ſoule ſhall be taken from thee. By what helpes, and meanes cameſt thou vnto this knowledge? by reading the writings of the Apoſtles? by reading the Goſpell of Chriſt, or any part of the word of God? No, God wot, thou haſt no great ſkill in this learning. Thou haſt it from Manilius, Maternus, Albumazar, or Haly. What is Manilius, Maternus, Albumazar, and Haly? What are they? But Heathens, Painims, and Infidels. Were they not void of all knowledge of God? were they not the enemies of the Croſſe of Chriſt? theſe neuer beleeued in God, how could they then know that day, when he would iudge the world? Let thy common reaſon reforme thee. Can Saturne and Mars know this, when the Angels of God cannot know it?

To what end write they thus? to giue a token of their knowledge? Nay, hereby they proclaime and publiſh their folly and want of knowledge. Theſe two hundred yeres, there haue euer ben ſome, which haue aduentured to tell ſuch newes, and to ſay, in this yere, or that yere, you ſhall haue domes day. Such a day will Chriſt come to iudgement, and the world ſhall haue an end. They haue appointed many ſuch yeres, and daies, and houres. The yeres be gone, the daies be paſt, and the houres be ſlipt away, but the world abideth, and giueth witneſſe of their folly.

But the meaning of theſe men is good. Hereby they moue the people to repentance. For, when men thinke the end of the world is at hand, they will beare the leſſe affection to the things of this world. This is not the way to teach repentance, and amendment of life. The people may not be taught by lies and fables. If this had ben good for them, God himſelfe would haue vſed it. God graunt them grace to repent, which thus preſume of knowledge, and reach ſo high, and yet know nothing.

Let vs yet reaſon further with them. How haue they this knowledge? of certainty, or by coniecture? If of certainty, then it muſt needs be ſo, it can not faile, nothing can let it. But you will ſay, it is a coniecture, it may ſo be, and it is likely: for ſuch a day, ſhall be a coniunction of Saturne and Mars in a fiery houſe: and therefore all things ſhall be conſumed with fire. Alas, what hath Saturne or Mars to do with the day of the Lord? They are but creatures, they are no gods. They are ſtars made to giue vs light, why ſhould they lead vs into darkneſſe? in the day of the Lord they ſhall be melted and periſh with fire.

Why

Why then trouble they the worlde with such vanities, and set those things down for truth, wherof they haue no certainty, but only a ghesse and coniecture?

And what time chose they to cast abroad these newes? the same, in which the Gospell through the mercy of God, is well knowen of most men. Euen now tell they these tales, when all men know, that Christ saith, the Angels in heauen know not of that day and houre. The Angels behold the face of God, and stand in his presence, yet know they not the day of the Lord. This is a secret, which God reuealeth not vnto any.

Children can reproue this folly in them, and say: Mitte arcana dei, cælumque inquirere quid sit: Seeke not to know the secrets of God, nor what maner thing the Heauen is. Know thy selfe, that thou art but a mortall man crauling on the ground like a worme. He that will stare vpon the Sunne, may be blind and lose his eies. God hath giuen thee knowledge in measure: thou canst not know, as much as thou wouldest. Know that is fit for thee to know, and speake that is lawfull to be spoken. Thinke of the commandements of God, to follow them. Search not into his workes, to be curious in them. For he that is curious in searching the Maiestie of God, shall be oppressed and confounded by his glory.

Thus much we may well know, that the Lord will come, that all flesh shall appeare before him: that the world, the heauen, the earth, the Sun, and the Mone shall haue an ende: that the day of the Lord shall come suddenly, as a Theefe in the night. This warning God hath giuen vs, that we should not be taken vnawares, but that we repent, and stand in readinesse, and watch, and pray, that we may be caught vp into the clouds to meet our Redeemer.

Vers. 4. But you brethren, are not in darknesse, that that day should come on you, as it were a theefe.

5. Yee are all the children of light, and the children of the day, we are not of the night, neither of darknesse.

6. Therefore let vs not sleepe as doe other: but let vs watch and be sober.

7. For they that sleepe, sleepe in the night, and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night.

8. But let vs, which are of the day, be sober, putting on the brest-plate of Faith and Loue, and the hope of saluation for an helmet.

9. For God hath not appointed vs vnto wrath, but to obtaine saluation by the meanes of our Lord Iesus Christ.

10. Which died for vs, that whether we wake or sleepe, we should liue together with him.

Your conuersation is in heauen, from whence you looke for the Sauiour, euen the Lord Iesus Christ. Ye were once darknesse, but now you are light in the Lord, walke as children of light, approuing that which is pleasing to the Lord. That day shall be dreadfull, and come suddenly vpon the wicked: but to you it shall not come sudden, which feare the Lord, and put your trust in him, and take all care to be in readinesse at his comming. Arme your selues strongly: the enemie seeketh to ouerthrow you. Your enemie is the Diuell with all his force. Your strength standeth not in your owne prowesse, or manhood, but in the mighty power of God: put on therefore the brest-plate of faith and loue, he that beleeueth shall be saued, he that abideth in loue, abideth in God, and whosoeuer putteth his trust in him, shall not be confounded.

Here I may take occasion to say somwhat of the troubles of war, how Satan seeketh by it to disquiet the Church of God. Who hath not heard what force is this day raised in this Realme? who hath not heard of it? but let it not trouble you. God will turne all to his glory. I loue not to speak of such things. Yet somwhat I must speak therof, the time inforceth me.

This is the first disturbance and breach of that blessed peace in which God hath so long and so quietly preserued this realme, since the time that her Maiesty came to the Crowne. It giueth great occasion to the enemy, to breake in vpon vs: it is the spoiling of our Country. The barbarous souldiers rush into mens houses, and take out what they list. They draw their sword, bend their force, ioine themselues to war against the Lord, and against his Anointed. They haue torne, and defaced, and burnt in fire the holy Bible, the Gospell of our saluation: and would set vp the loathsome seruice of the Masse.

What hath the word of God offended? why should it be torne in peeces? why should it be burnt? what word is in it, which is not the word of life? it is the power of God vnto saluation, to them that beleeue. And where should the word of God haue place, where should it be heard, but in the Church of God? O cursed hands that so despightfully rent it? Woe worth that vnhappy fire that burnt it.

As

As for the Maſſe, would God they that ſo much deſire it, knew what it is. Would God they knew how the people of God are mocked by it, and how the precious blood of our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt is blaſphemed by it: would God they knew how greeuously God is offended with them in this thing, wherein they thinke, they pleaſe him ſo highly. But the Maſſe, and Gods word cannot dwell in one houſe together: the one is ſo contrary to the other.

God forgiue them, and lay it not to their charge. For they know not what they doe. They are driuen on to worke the things which others haue moſt wickedly deuiſed. There is no doubt, but God will confound their enterpriſe. For this is his owne cauſe, this quarrell is pickt againſt his Church, and againſt the knowledge and ſetting forth of his Goſpell: and therefore againſt the ſetting forth of his glory. Onely let vs lift vp our hands vnto heauen, and call for helpe from aboue. Let vs ſay vnto him, Riſe vp for our ſuccour, Pſal. 44. and redeeme vs for thy mercies ſake. Let vs ſay, They haue caſt thy ſanctuary into the fire, Pſal. 74. and raced it to the ground, and haue deſtroyed the dwelling place of thy name. Ariſe oh God, maintaine thine owne cauſe: remember thy daily reproch by the fooliſh man. Let vs ſay, Saue, oh Lord, Quæne Elizabeth thy ſeruant, eſtabliſh that good thing which thou haſt begun: open the eies of all people, that they may ſee thy ſaning health, and enioy it through hearing thy Goſpell, which thou haſt made knowen vnto vs: ſaue thy people, which truſteth in thee, breake the cords of the wicked in ſunder. Let vs comfort our ſelues with theſe words, that God hath not appointed vs to wrath, but to obtaine ſaluation, by the meanes of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. He hath ouercome the world: let vs be of good chere. And let vs walke as the children of light: let vs walke honeſtly, as in the day. Then whether we wake or ſleepe, whether we liue or die, we ſhall liue together with him.

Vers. 11. Wherefore exhort one another, and edifie one another, euen as ye doe.

This is the bond of true loue and Chriſtian friendſhip, that euery man be carefull of his brother, as of himſelfe: that euery man, exhort and teach the things that are good, and rebuke others in ill: that euery man ſeeke to bring home the loſt ſheepe, and to reſtore him to his maſter. Therefore Chriſt ſaith: If thy brother treſpaſſe againſt thee, goe and tell him Matth. 18. his faults, betweene him and thee alone: if he heare thee, thou haſt woone thy brother. For what knoweſt thou, whether thou ſhalt ſaue thy brother? Brethren, ſaith S. Iames: If any Iam. 5. of you hath erred from the truth, and ſome man hath conuerted him, let him know that hee which hath conuerted the ſinner, from going aſtray out of his way, ſhall ſaue a ſoule from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ſinnes.

Therefore ſaith the Apoſtle: Exhort one another, and edifie one another. Let the father exhort his ſonne: Oh ſonne, walke vprightly before God, liue honeſtly and vertuously in the ſight of all men, doe thoſe things that are good: thou art the child of God, be holy in ſpirit, and holy in body, becauſe he is holy. Say to the adulterer, O brother be not deceiued. Whoſoeuer is an adulterer hath no inheritance in the Kingdome of Chriſt and of God: God hath ſaid of them that are ſuch, They ſhal not enter into my reſt. Say to the ſwearer, Oh take not the name of God in vaine, for God will not hold him guiltleſſe that taketh his name in vaine. He that ſweareth, and nameth God continually, he ſhall not be faultleſſe. Eccleſ. 23. A man that vſeth much ſwearing ſhalbe filled with wickednes, and the plague ſhall neuer goe from his houſe; Nor from his cattell, nor from his corne, nor from his ſeruants, nor from his children, nor from himſelfe. His houſe ſhall be full of plagues.

Say to the Vſurer, Oh heare the voice of the Lord, thus ſaith the Lord, before whom thou ſhalt ſtand to giue an account of thoſe things which thou haſt done in this life: Thou ſhalt not giue thy money to Vſury. He that careth not for theſe words, but doth otherwiſe ſhall not eſcape vnpuniſhed. Say to the rich man: Oh put not your truſt in riches. Lay vp your treaſure in heauen: lay it vp in the boſome of the poore, and it ſhall make interceſſion for thee. Put thy truſt in the liuing God, which giueth vs abundantly all things to enioy. Thy houſe, thy land, thy mony thy gold and ſiluer ſhall not continue: thou ſhalt goe the way of all fleſh, and thy riches ſhall not be able to deliuer thee in the day of wrath.

Say to the learned man, to the wiſe man, and to the man whom God hath endued with worldly power: What haſt thou that thou haſt not receiued? Be not high minded. It is the gift of God. It is not thine. Thou ſhalt giue a reckening of all that thou haſt receiued. Abuſe it not to the diſhonour of God. It is of charity, that I ſpeak vnto thee. Thou art my brother, God hath a care ouer thee: it is his will, that one of vs ſhould exhort another. Oh why ſhould thy life giue offence to any man? why ſhould the name of God be ill ſpoken of through thee? He hath made thee to be a veſſell of honour, thou belongeſt to his fold, why ſhouldeſt thou be loſt, and periſh in thy wilfulneſſe?

VERS. 12. Now we beſeech you, brethren, that ye know them which labour among you, and are ouer you in the Lord, and admoniſh you.

VERS. 13. That ye haue them in ſingular loue, for their workes ſake. Be at peace among your ſelues.

They which exhort you, and warne you, and are ouer you in the Lord: they be ſhepheards, and huſbandmen, and watchmen for you. They fæd the Lords flocke, plow the Lords ground, and watch the tower of the God of hoſts. You are Gods ſhéepe, ye muſt be fed, elſe you cannot liue. You are a field, you muſt be plowed, elſe you will be ouer growen with brambles, and ſtand vnfruitfull, and lie waſte. You are the Lords tower, you muſt be watched, elſe the enemy will breake in vpon you, and ſo you ſhould be deſtroied. They labour and trauel in your behalfe: they muſt giue an account for your ſoules: they are ambaſſadours ſent from God: they come to tell you the truth: they preach not themſelues, but Chriſt Jeſus: they ſpeake to you in the name of the Lord. Although you recken them fooles, vnlearned, and ſimple, they are the meſſengers of the great King: euen of him that
1. Cor. 11. is Lord ouer all. S. Paul ſaith: It pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſſe of preaching to ſaue them that beleeue. The heauenly treaſure is brought to you, in poore, broken, earthy veſſels. The veſſels are ſimple, but the treaſure is heauenly. The meſſenger is weake, but his word is the word of life, which can caſt downe euery high thing that is exalted againſt the glory of God. Whatſoeuer they ſéeme to you: they are the eies of the Church, and the mouth of God. Chriſt ſaith vnto them, whom he appointeth to this miniſtery: As my fa-Iohn 20. ther ſendeth mee, ſo ſend I you. They haue the ſame commiſſion be they neuer ſo poore. He Luke 10. that heareth you, heareth mee, and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth mee: and he that deſpiſeth mee, deſpiſeth him that ſent mee, ſaith Chriſt.

Some there are, that thus ſay: O that I might heare Chriſt, or Peter, or Paul! I would verily beléeue what they ſhould preach. This is fondneſſe, and curious vanity. For whenſoeuer thou doeſt heare the miniſter of God breake vnto thée the word of life, and teaching thée the truth of the Goſpel, thou heareſt Paul, and Peter, and Chriſt himſelfe. If thou deſpiſeſt the word of God ſpoken vnto thée by him, and the grace which God offereth thée by him, thou deſpiſeſt Chriſt himſelfe, and heapeſt vp the heauy diſpleaſure of God againſt thée. God will giue thee ouer into a reprobate minde: thou ſhalt haue eies, yet ſhalt not ſée: thou ſhalt haue eares, yet ſhalt not heare: thou ſhalt die in thy ſinne. It ſhall be eaſier for Sodom at that day, than for thée. Therefore acknowledge them, giue credit to their meſſage, they watch, and take paines for you.

What ſhall we ſay of them that labour not? that doe neither teach, nor exhort, nor re-
Eſa. 56. proue, nor correct: that haue no care to do their meſſage, and no regard to the people? What may I ſay of ſuch? God himſelfe ſaith: They are dumbe dogges, and cannot barke: they lie and ſleepe, and delight in ſleeping: they all looke to their owne way, and to their owne aduantage, and euery one for his owne purpoſe. Chriſt calleth them théeues and robbers.
1. Cor. 9. They are vnſauoury ſalt, profitable for nothing, but to be caſt forth and troden vnder the feet of men. Woe is vnto mee, ſaith Paul, if I preach not the Goſpell. Woe to the ſeruant that wrappeth his talent in a napkin, and increaſeth not his maſters gaine. God grant ſuch idle and ſlothfull miniſters, grace to know their office, and to doe it. If not, God giue the people grace to know them, and ſhun them, and to flie from them.

1. Tim. 5. That ye haue them in ſingular loue, for their workes ſake. Ye telleth Timothy, The elders that rule well, are worthy of double honour, ſpecially they which labour in the word and doctrine. Reuerence them, and loue them. Loue them for your owne ſakes: you haue life and comfort by them. Honour them for their office ſake: They are your fathers, they haue begotten you in Chriſt, they carry the keies of the kingdome of heauen: They are the Stewards of Gods houſe, and the diſpoſers of his myſteries. Honour them, and loue them for Gods ſake: He hath ſent them, and hath put his word in their mouth. He hath ſaid to them, Goe ye into all the world, preach the Goſpel vnto euery nation. Goe ſpeake to the heart of Hieruſalem, that they may féele the weight of thy words, and repent. Loue them therefore. For they loue you in Chriſt, and are ready to giue their liues for your ſake,
Gal. 4. The Galathians, ſo reuerenced and loued S. Paul, that he ſaith: Ye receiued me as an Angel of God. For I beare you record, that if it had beene poſſible, yee would haue plucked out your eies, and haue giuen them mee.

Be at peace among your ſelues. You are the ſonnes of God. God is the God of peace. Diſcord, contention, and vnquietneſſe are fit for the children of Satan. Liue in godly vnity, as becommeth the children of peace.

VERS. 14. We deſire you, brethren, that ye admoniſh them that are vnruly: comfort the feeble minded: beare with the weak: be patient towerd all men.

15. See

15. See that none recompence euill for euill vnto any man: but euer follow that which is good, both towards your ſelues, and towards all men.

There are ſome which walke among you inordinately: They breake the bond of peace: they ſow diuiſions and diſcord betweene the brethren: they draw diſciples after them: and diſquiet the Church of God: they command that hath beene forbidden by God, and forbid that God hath commanded. Warne them that are ſuch, ſay vnto them as did S. Paul to the Corinthians: We haue no ſuch cuſtome, neither hath the Church of God. Woe to him by whom offence commeth. Say vnto them as Ioſuah ſaid to Achan: Inaſmuch as thou haſt troubled vs, therefore God will trouble thee this day. After this ſort admoniſh them, and lay open their wilfulneſſe, and blaſphemy before their eies: That they may ſee the blindneſſe of their hearts, and in what ſort their life is diſordered, and ſo repent, and be ſaued. 1. Cor. 11. Ioſuah 7.

But what greater diſorder can there be, than that of theirs, who haue this day aſſembled themſelues in force and in armour? Which haue lifted vp their ſword againſt their Soueraigne, and diſturbed the peace of this Realme, and haue miſled the people, & ſought to ouerthrow the Church of God? Let vs admoniſh them, if we may ſpeake with any that are ſo ill diſpoſed, and ſhew them the danger that hangeth ouer their heads. Let vs ſay to them, Thou haſt done wickedly in the ſight of God, thou haſt reſiſted the ordinance of God, becauſe thou haſt reſiſted the power which he hath ordained: thou haſt ſtricken with the ſword, therefore thou ſhalt periſh by the ſword: thou haſt diſquieted the Iſrael of God, therefore God ſhall diſquiet thee. Such rebels are vnruly. They riſe vp againſt their Prince, as did Dathan and Abiram againſt Moſes: they aduance themſelues againſt God, as did Lucifer, therefore ſhall they be caſt downe aliue into Hell.

Comfort the feeble minded: and thoſe that be heauy in heart: which ſuffer impriſonment, and liue in pouerty, and are grieued, and cannot helpe themſelues. Say vnto them, as S. Iames: Bleſſed is the man, that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he ſhall receiue the crowne of life, which the Lord hath promiſed them that loue him. Say vnto them as S. Peter: This is thankes worthy, if a man for conſcience toward God endure griefe, ſuffering wrongfully. Comfort them with the words of the Prophet: They that ſow in teares, ſhall reape in ioy. Comfort them with the words of Chriſt: Bleſſed are ye which weepe now, for ye ſhall laugh. Iam. 1. 1. Pet. 2. Pſal. 126. Luke 6.

See that none recompence euill for euill to any man. Though you ſuffer many things at the hands of the wicked, yet you may not be followers of that euill, which is in them. Auenge not your ſelues, but giue place vnto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, ſaith the Lord. Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him: if he thirſt, giue him drinke. Herein ſhall it appeare if we loue our neighbour as our ſelfe: if we patiently abide iniuries, and ſeeke to doe good to them that grieue and oppreſſe vs. I ſay vnto you, ſaith Chriſt, loue your enemies: bleſſe them that curſe you, doe good to them that hate you, and pray for them that hurt you, and perſecute you: that you may be the children of your father that is in heauen: for he maketh his ſunne to ariſe vpon the euill, and the good, and ſendeth raine on the iuſt, and vniuſt. Rom. 12. Matth. 5.

Vers. 16. Reioyce euermore.

They ioy of the wicked ſhall haue an end. They reioyce in their goods, in their wiſdom, in their peace and worldly ſafety, and in the multitude of their children, or deſcent of their petidegree. This ioy is tranſitory, it fadeth and abideth not. The world paſſeth (ſaith S. Iohn) and the luſt thereof. They reioyce in their wickedneſſe, the Lute and the Harpe, Tabret and Pipe, and wine are in their feaſtes; but they regard not the worke of the Lord. They eat vp the people as it were bread: they doe whatſoeuer they can deuiſe againſt the ſeruants of God: but the latter end of their ioy ſhall be heauineſſe, as it is ſaid: Woe be vnto you that laugh now, for you ſhall weepe and lament. 1. Iohn 2. Luke 6.

But the ioy of the righteous is euerlaſting. Their heart ſhall reioyce, and no man ſhall take their ioy from them. They haue comfort in this, that their names are written in the booke of life. They know the Lord is at hand, therefore they are careful for nothing, but reioyce alwaies in the Lord. S. Peter therefore ſaith: You are kept by the power of God through faith vnto ſaluation, which is prepared to bee ſhewed in the laſt time: wherein ye reioyce, though now for a ſeaſon (if need require) ye are in heauineſſe, through manifold temptations. Againe: Ye reioyce with ioy vnſpeakable and glorious, receiuing the end of your faith, euen the ſaluation of your ſoules. This is the happineſſe, the ioy, and the comfort that the godly haue, and ſhall continue with them. 1. Pet. 1.

Vers. 17. Pray continually.

It is the part of a good Chriſtian, & a wiſe man to know himſelf: and to know the nature of this fleſh, which we beare about with vs, which fighteth alwaies ſo mightily againſt the spirit: to know the waiwardnesse and crokednesse of our heart, and the weaknesse and vanity of our minde. Many are so farre from this, that they thinke all their ability is of themselues. I haue, saith he, iudgement, I haue the light of reason, I haue sense, I haue vnderstanding and counsell, and the ordering of mine owne way. Thus say they that neither know God nor themselues.

But we must humble our selues vnder the mighty hand of God, and acknowledge that we are nothing. We must confesse with S. Paul: I know that in me, that is to say, in my flesh, dwelleth no good. And againe: It is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth; but in God that sheweth mercy. Our Sauiour saith: That which is borne of the flesh is flesh: and that that is borne of the spirit is spirit. And God saith: The imagination of mans heart is euill, from his youth. He hath made vs, and not we our selues: he knoweth vs, and not we our selues. This is his saying, and his iudgement of vs. This we finde true. For our will is froward, and our vnderstanding blinde. Therefore saith the Prophet: O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himselfe, neither is it in man to walke and direct his steps. And Salomon: The steps of man are ruled by the Lord: how can a man then vnderstand his owne way? And the Prophet Ieremy: Behold, as the clay is in the potters hand, so are you in my hand, O Israel. I mould you, and forme you to my glory.

Rom. 7. Rom. 9. Iohn 3. Gen. 8. Ier. 10. Prou. 20. Ier. 18.

When the Apostle putteth the Corinthians in minde of that good successe which God gaue vnto his ministery among them, he saith: Such trust haue we through Christ to God: not that we are sufficient of our selues to thinke any thing as of our selues: but our sufficiency is of God. Christ sheweth this to his Disciples: I am the vine, you are the branches: hee that abideth in mee, and I in him, bringeth foorth much fruit: for without mee yee can doe nothing. To the Colossians saith Paul: It is God which worketh in you, both the will and the deede, euen of his good pleasure. It is God that disposeth our goings, and turneth our hearts, as seemeth best to him. He is able to make of the stones in the stretes children vnto Abraham: hee is able to take away our stony heart, and to giue vs a heart of flesh.

2. Cor. 3. Iohn 15. Colos. 2.

The consideration hereof leadeth vs to seeke helpe and comfort by praier at the hand of God. And then because we stand in continuall need of Gods helpe, either to giue vs something that is good, or to deliuer vs from that is euill, the Apostle biddeth vs pray continually. The eares of the Lord are open to the praiers of the righteous. Therefore Christ saith: Aske, and it shall be giuen you: Seeke, and ye shall finde: Knocke, and it shall be opened vnto you. God will giue you your hearts desire. Let vs therefore goe boldly to the throne of grace, that we may receiue mercy, and finde grace to helpe in time of neede.

Matth. 7. Heb. 4.

Dauid praied vnto God: Open thou mine eies, lighten my darkenesse: direct my feete into the way of peace: incline my heart, O Lord, vnto thy testimonies: stablish, O God, that which thou hast wrought in vs: take not thy holy spirit from vs: be thou our helper in troubles. O forsake vs not vtterly. He found no way to attaine vnto knowledge of the will of God, vnlesse God would open his vnderstanding, and endue him with his spirit. Faith is the gift of God, or else was the Apostles praier in vaine: Increase our faith. Our Sauiour teacheth vs to pray in this maner: Hallowed be thy name, thy kingdome come, thy will be done: because without the grace and mercy of God, we can doe nothing to the setting forth of his glory.

Luke 7.

VERS. 18. In all things giue thankes: for this is the will of God in Christ Iesus toward you.

These three are the badges or cognisance of a Christian souldier: to reioyce in the mercy of God: to be feruant in praier: and to giue thankes to God in all things. The heathens, which haue no part in the Kingdome of Christ, are thankfull for their life and liberty, and wealth, and glory, and worldly prosperity. But Christians ought to be thankfull in persecution, in thraldome, in aduersity, in shame, in misery, and in death it selfe. Who would thinke that a Lyon, which by nature is fierce and cruell, should yeld forth hony? yet Samson found hony in the body of a Lion. Who would thinke it likely that a man should be preserued in the belly of a fish? Ionas was swallowed vp of a Whale, and yet not hurt. Who would thinke that a man might be saued in the middest of burning fire? yet the three seruants of God walked in the fire safely, and came safe forth againe. We know, saith the Apostle, that all things worke together for the best, vnto them that loue God. The Apostles reioyced in their persecution, that they were counted worthy to suffer rebuke for Christs sake. And Paul speaking of this perfection in the godly, saith: We reioyce vnder the hope of the glory of God. And not so only, but also we reioyce in tribulations.

Iudg. 14. Rom. 8. Rom. 5.

Who hath not heard of the patience of Iob? His heards of cattell were driuen away: his houses consumed with fire: his children slain: his body stricken with a scurfe or mangines:

his wife loathed him, and his friends forſoke him. What did Iob in all theſe miſeries? What thought he? or what ſpake he? let his patience in ſuffering, & his words of thankſgiuing teach vs how to beare aduerſity. The Lord (ſaith he) hath giuen, and the Lord hath taken it: bleſſed be the name of the Lord. Againe: Though he ſlay mee, yet will I truſt in him. Who is able to expreſſe the manly comfort of his heart? which ſaid, I will truſt in him though he kill me. He is my God, I am his creature. His will be done. I will alwaies giue him thankes, and praiſe his holy name. By theſe we are learned to giue thankes in pouerty, in afflictions, in miſery, & in all things, though they are heauy & grænous vnto vs. Iob. 1. Iob. 13.

What are we then that are neither thankfull for riches, nor for health, nor for our pleaſures, nor in the abundance of all things? yea, which abuſe the good gifts of God to diſhonour God, who hath giuen them vnto vs? The earth is the Lords, and all that therein is: the world, and they that dwell therein. He openeth his hand, and filleth all things liuing with his good bleſſing. Let vs looke vp into the heauens: there is God the father of lights, from whom euery good and perfect gift commeth: there is our redeemer Ieſus Chriſt, in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdome and knowledge. When we turne in our beds: when we ſæ our fare, and the furniture of our table: when we ſæ our ſeruants, and children about vs: when we ſæ our money and houſes, & lands; let vs thinke with our ſelues, how many good men, and faithfull ſeruants of God lacke the ſame, and haue not receiued theſe bleſſings in ſuch meaſure as we. In all theſe things God ſpeaketh to vs, and ſaith, I haue giuen them thæ, thou haſt them at my hands: vſe them well, and be not vnthankful.

If I would ſtand hærein, and declare what cauſes we haue to giue thankes vnto God, I ſhould neuer make an end. There is no beaſt on the ground, no fiſh in the ſea, no bird in the aire, no ſtar in the heauens, no leafe of the træ, no corne of the field, no ſand on the ſhore, no drop of water, no ſparkle of fire: but God hath created them all for the ſonnes of men. So much are we bound alwaies to giue thankes to God, and to ſay as the Prophet: O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the world! Let vs confeſſe before the Lord his louing kindneſſe, and his wonderfull workes before the ſonnes of men. Pſalm. 8.

But who is able to render thankes ſufficient to God, for that he giueth vs the knowledge of his Goſpell, and maketh vs know the ſecrets of his will. This is a great bleſſing, and far aboue all the other comforts of this life. They that haue not this, are in darkneſſe, and in the ſhadow of death. To be ſhort: euen in death, we haue to praiſe God: we muſt ſay, I thanke thæ, O God, for thou haſt deliuered him from the body of this death, thou haſt tranſlated him vnto thy ſelfe, that ſo he may remaine with thæ in thy glory. Thus whitherſoeuer ye turne, what ſtate or part of life or death ſoeuer ye conſider; whether it be trouble or peace: things preſent or things to come, heauen or earth, life or death, you ſhall alwaies finde cauſes to be thankfull.

VERS. 19. Quench not the ſpirit.

He meaneth by the ſpirit, the gifts and graces of the ſpirit. The ſpirit of God is the ſpirit of wiſdome, and the ſpirit of truth. No man, ſaith S. Paul, can ſay that Ieſus is the Lord but by the holy Ghoſt. Againe: The ſpirit helpeth our infirmities. And againe: The ſame ſpirit beareth witneſſe with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God. It is he that leadeth vs into all truth, that openeth our hearts to vnderſtanding, and guideth our fæte into the way of peace. O, ſaith he, deſpiſe not the wiſdome of the ſpirit: refuſe not his helpe, but ſæke it that you may be ſtrengthened: comfort your ſelues in his teſtimony of your adoption: quench not the light he hath kindled in your hearts: diſdaine not his leading: abuſe not his mercy: abuſe not the time of your viſitation: let not ſo great mercy of God be beſtowed on you in vaine: fulfill not your owne wils, abſtaine from fleſhly luſts: walke in the ſpirit: deſire the beſt gifts, and let euery man, as he hath receiued the gift, ſo miniſter the ſame to another, as good diſpoſers of the manifold grace of God. 1. Cor. 12. Rom. 8. Ibid. 1. Pet. 4.

VERS. 20. Deſpiſe not prophecying.

Prophecie is the preaching and expounding of the word of God: and he is called a Prophet and doth prophecy, that openeth vnto vs the will of God. This is not meant of fond and vaine, and lying prophecies, as were thoſe of Merline, and ſuch like, which tell you tales of Lions, and Beares, and Goats, of the Sunne, of the Moone, and many ſtrange deuices. Such prophecies muſt be deſpiſed: they are workes of darkneſſe: and forged by the Diuell to make vproares, and to begnile the people.

But, deſpiſe not prophecying. That is, deſpiſe not to heare the word of God: turne not away thine eare from vnderſtanding. God giueth power to his word, that it may worke according to his good pleaſure. It will let thæ ſæ the weakneſſe of thine errour, and ſettle thæ in the way wherein thou ſhouldeſt walke. If it had bæne dangerous for the people to heare the preaching of the Goſpell, he would not haue ſent his Apoſtles into all the world.

If Lydia ſhould not haue liked to heare Paul prophecy, how might ſhe haue knowen God? If thoſe great numbers, which heard Peter, and were conuerted, had deſpiſed prophecying, and would not haue heard him open the Goſpell vnto them, they had neuer conſidered the great mercy of God, nor ſought to be inſtructed in their ſaluation. Faith commeth by hearing. This hath beene the meanes by which Chriſt hath giuen knowledge to Kings, and
1. Cor. 1. Princes, and all nations. It hath pleaſed God, ſaith S. Paul, by the fooliſhneſſe of preaching to ſaue them that beleeue. Deſpiſe not then to come to the church of God, to pray in the congregation of the faithful, to heare the Scriptures of God read and expounded, it is the bleſſing of God offered vnto thee. Where there is no prophecy, the people periſheth. He that deſpiſeth it, ſhall be deſpiſed of the Lord: he ſhall be caſt into darkneſſe, becauſe he would not delight in the light.

VERS. 21. Trie all things, and keepe that which is good.

Trie all things. God hath giuen you the ſpirit of diſcretion, and of iudgement. Be wiſe, and know what is that good and acceptable will of God. Be not deceiued with words of mans wiſdome. Let not the baſeneſſe or ſimplicity of any, cauſe you to refuſe the meſſage which he bringeth: and carry not your ſelues to liking of all that whatſoeuer ſhall be told you of ſuch as beare great ſhew and countenance. This was it that deceiued the people of God, they gaue eare to falſe teachers, which lead them to worſhip the workes of their own hands. Therefore, they ſaid vnto the ſtone, Thou art our father, thou haſt deliuered vs: they fell downe before it, worſhipped it, beleeued in it: they ſlew the Prophets of God, and ſtoned to death ſuch as were ſent vnto them.

The Scribes and Phariſeis ſeemed ſo graue and wiſe, that the people thought nothing good but what they allowed. They were altogether appliable to beleeue, to doe, to ſpeake, Matth. 7. and to thinke, whatſoeuer the Phariſeis willed them. Chriſt ſaith vnto them: Beware of falſe Prophets, which come to you in ſheepes clothing, but inwardly they are rauening
1. Iohn 4. Woolues. S. Iohn therefore ſaith: Dearely beloued, beleeue not euery ſpirit, but trie the ſpirits whether they are of God: for many falſe Prophets are gone out into the world. And further directeth vs, how we ſhould trie them: Hereby ſhall ye know the ſpirit of God: euery ſpirit that confeſſeth that Ieſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is of God. Againe, hereby
2. Ioh. may you try them: Whoſoeuer tranſgreſſeth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Chriſt, hath not God. He that continueth in the doctrine of Chriſt, he hath both the father and the ſon. If there come any vnto you and bring not this doctrine, receiue him not to houſe, neither bid him, God ſpeed. Hereby S. Paul requireth the Galathians to trie betweene him, and Galat. 1. the falſe Apoſtles. If any man preach vnto you otherwiſe, than that ye haue receiued, let him be accurſed. For now, doe I preach mans doctrine or Gods? The Sadduces erred touching the Reſurrection, becauſe they ſearched not the Scriptures. God teacheth vs by Eſay 8. the Prophet Eſay, to make triall of Teachers and doctrines. When they ſhall ſay vnto you, enquire of them that haue a ſpirit of diuination, and at the ſoothſayers, which whiſper, and murmur; ſhould not a people enquire at their God? from the liuing to the dead? To the law, and to the teſtimony: if they ſpeake not according to this word, it is becauſe there is no
1. Tim. 1. light in them. Paul putteth Timothy in minde wherefore he left him at Epheſus, to command ſome, that they teach none other doctrine. And to warne both the teachers and the hearers, that they giue no heed to fables and genealogies, which are endleſſe, which breed queſtions, rather than godly edifying, which is by faith. Thus are the people of God called to trie the truth, to iudge betweene good and ill, betweene light and darkneſſe. God hath made them the promiſe of his ſpirit, and hath left vnto them his word. They of Berea, when they heard the preaching of Paul, ſearched the Scriptures daily, whether thoſe things were ſo, as he taught them, and many of them beleeued. So doe you: giue heed to inſtruction, and yet receiue not all things without proofe and triall, that they are not contrary to the holſom doctrine of the word of God.

Keepe that which is good.

When you haue tried and found out the truth, be conſtant and ſetled in it. A wauering minded man is vnſtable in all his waies. Follow the truth, and be not carried about with euery winde of doctrine. The Diuill will come in the name of God, and change himſelfe into an Angell of light. Let him not take the loue of the truth from you. Let him not remoue you from faith and a good conſcience: returne not like ſwine vnto your mire. God hath purged your hearts, and made them cleane. Except they be preſerued and kept occupied, the vncleane ſpirit will returne, and enter in, and dwell in you: ſo the laſt ſtate of you ſhall be worſe than the firſt.

We haue great cauſe to harken diligently to the Apoſtle, to keepe that is good. We ſee this day great confuſion in all places. Satan would faine entangle vs againe with the error of the wicked, and ſeeketh to draw vs from our ſtedfaſtneſſe. Now is the time wher-in God maketh ſome triall of his ſeruants: now iniquity ſéeketh to haue the vpper hand. They ſeduce the people, and ſay, Here is Chriſt, there is Chriſt: here is the Church, there is the Church. God giue vs his holy ſpirit to guide vs in iudgement, that we may diſcerne the truth from falſhod, and knew the bleſſed and gratious wil of God: that we may walke in his waies, and ſerue him in reuerence and feare all the daies of our life.

In this world, as there is a Iacob, ſo is there an Eſau: as there are many that loue Chriſt with an vnfained heart, ſo are there many that ſerue Antichriſt: and as there be many true profeſſors of the truth of God, ſo are there many deſpiſers of the ſame. This we may ſée here at home within this realme. We may ſée it, and mourne, and lament for it in our hearts.

Their practiſes are opened: thy haue broken out into open rebellion, to the breach of the peace both of God and man. They ſay with their lips, God ſaue Quéene ELIZABETH: yet they hold vp their ſword againſt her. Alas what hath ſhe deſerued at their hands? She hath alwaies dealt mercifully, without cruelty, without ſhedding of blod. God preſerue her, that ſhe may long raigne ouer vs, and bring all her enemies to confuſion.

What pretence make they for this their doing? That héereby they ſéeke to haue religion reformed. Thankes be to God: religion is reformed far better than our fathers knew it theſe many hundred yéeres. If thoſe which liued before vs, might haue ſéene and heard as we ſée and heare, they would haue reioyced, and thought themſelues happy.

But they would haue the Maſſe. What find they or ſée they in it, wherfore they ſhould ſo deſire it? Try all things, ſaith Paul. Therefore, examine, and try the Maſſe. What do we learne by it? what doctrine, what godlineſſe in life, what comfort for ſalnation? It is a dumbe and deadly ſeruice. The people are forced to be at it, it is the very key of their religion: the people are bound to be preſent at Maſſe: yet they neither receiue any thing, nor eat, nor heare, nor vnderſtand any thing. You are wiſe, you haue reaſon, you are the children of God: be you Iudges herein, and iudge vprightly, for it is Gods cauſe. Will they call this the Lords ſupper? Is this the Sacrament of our redemption? Is this that, which Paul receiued of the Lord, and deliuered vnto the Church? Is this the ſhewing forth of the Lords death vntill he come?

They would haue the Popes authority reſtored. What is the Pope? They ſay, he is the ſucceſſor of Peter. What doth the Pope as Peter did? or what did Peter as the Pope doth? Yée is a mortall man. And curſed are they of God, that put their truſt in man. Yée fédeth not the flocke, he teacheth not the ſimple, he ſtrengtheneth not the weake: I will ſay no more. God make him a ſeruant of Chriſt, and a faithfull diſpoſer of the myſteries of God.

They are offended at the marriage of the Miniſters of the Church. Yet Gratian their great maſter ſaith: Copula ſacerdotalis, nec Legali, nec Euangelica, nec Apoſtolica authoritate prohibetur: The mariage of Prieſts is not forbidden by any authority, either of the Law, or of the Goſpell, or of the Apoſtles. The holy Fathers that liued in the Apoſtles time, and ſhortly after, report, that Peter, and all the other Apoſtles, excepting only Iohn, were married, and had wiues: the Prophet Eſay was maried, and yet he ſaw the Lord ſitting vpon an high throne. Moſes was married, and yet he ſaw God face to face. Will they reforme the Prophets, and the Apoſtles? Will they account that to be vnholy, which the Apoſtle calleth honorable in all men? Ignatius the ſcholar of S. Iohn ſaid: I wiſh to be found meet for God, as was Peter and Paul, and the other Apoſtles that were married. 26. Qua. 2. Sors. Ignat. ad Philadelphenſes.

They paint their banner with the Croſſe, and fiue wounds. Why bring they thoſe armes againſt vs? Doe not we beléeue the Croſſe of Chriſt? doe not we reioyce and comfort our hearts by the remembrance of his wounds? doe not we read, and ſhew forth to the people the ſtory of his paſſion? God knoweth it, and you can beare vs witneſſe, and they cannot deny it, that we make this worke of our redemption, wrought by the paſſion of our Sauiour Chriſt, the chiefe and principall rocke and foundation of our faith. Therefore ſay wée with the Apoſtle, God forbid that we ſhould reioyce in any thing, but in the Croſſe of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Nay rather, they are become our enemies becauſe we beléeue in Ieſus Chriſt crucified: Becauſe we ſay, as Gods word teacheth, that Ieſus Chriſt is the only aduocate to the Father for our ſinnes: and, that he hath with one offering conſecrated for euer them that are ſanctified: and, that the blood of Ieſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth vs from all ſinne. For this cauſe are they become our enemies. Heb. 10. 1. Iohn 1.

Let vs nothing feare their treacheries and attempts: let vs kéepe that is good: and hold it faſt vntill death. Now we haue taſted the word of God, and haue receiued the comfort of the Goſpell, let vs not deſpiſe it, nor be weary of it. Let vs pray vnto God, that he eſtabliſh the loue of his truth in vs: and that he will open the eies of their hearts, and bring them to be partakers of thoſe mercies, which yet through ignorance they haue deſpiſed.

VERS.

VERS. 22. Abstaine from all appearance of euill.

Keepe your selues not only from doing those things which are euill: but also from all appearance of euill. Offend not the conscience of thy brother, that he may haue no occasion to thinke euill of thee. Commit not adultery, and withdrawe thy selfe from the company of such vnthrifty, and light, and suspected persons. Be not like to them that are such. Lay not out thy mony to Vsury, nor doe any thing, whereby others may thinke so of thee. Beware of vncharitable conueiance of thy mony. Be not Idolaters. And leaue off to doe any thing that may bring you into suspicion of Idolatry. Giue not that honour vnto any creature, which is proper to God. Haue no fellowship with their workes, beare no appearance of liking their euill. Goe not as they goe: liue not as they liue. S. Paul reproueth the Galathians: Yee obserue daies and moneths, and times, and yeares. I am in feare of you, lest I haue bestowed on you labour in vaine. So doth he the Colossians also: If yee be dead with Christ from the ordinances of the world, why as though yee liued in the world, are ye burdened with traditions? as touch not, taste not, handle not. So doe the Idolaters: you should not be like vnto them. They are the children of darkenesse, you are the sonnes of light. They will not be like vnto you, and forsake their false gods: Why should you become like vnto them, and forsake the God that made the heauens, and the earth? You can not make them ashamed of their errors, and imbrace the truth. Why then should you betray the truth, and be partakers with them in error?

Col. 2.

The Christians in old time began to weare Garlands made of Bay. What harme might be in that? What is a Garland, but a furniture for the head? What is Bay, but a little tree, or bush? Yet the Fathers that liued with them to teach them, said it was not lawfull: not for that the thing it selfe was ill of it selfe, but for that they would not seeme to follow Idolaters. It had some appearance of euill. It was a ceremony, and solemne fashion among the Heathen: they would not bee imboldned: and it would offend the hearts of many of the faithfull, to see Christians follow the fashion of the Heathen.

Machab. 1.

When King Antiochus sent vnto Hierusalem, and to the Cities of Iuda, that they should follow the strange lawes of the Country: many chose rather to die, than to be defiled with vncleane things, and to breake the holy couenant, which God had giuen them.

Daniel 6.

Darius made a decree, whosoeuer should aske a petition of any God or man for thirty daies, saue of the King, he should be cast into the denne of Lions. Daniel would not be kept so long from the seruice of God. He would not dissemble: he would not hide his zeale: nor shew any appearance of ill. He prayed and praised God, as he did before, and opened his chamber windowes, that it might be seene.

Polycarpus might haue saued his life, if he would haue dissembled. He would not, he could not. He saw it would haue beene an appearance of euill, and a discourage vnto the brethren: therefore spake boldly, Christianus sum, I am a Christian. And being required to speake ill of Christ, said, Octoginta & sex annos seruio ei, & nihil me laesit vnquam: quomodo possum maledicere ei, & blasphemare regem meum, qui salutem mihi dedit? I haue serued Christ these fourescore and sixe yeeres, and he did neuer any thing hurt me: how may I speake ill, and blaspheme my king, which hath giuen me saluation? This is my faith, Christ is my God: this is my religion: I am not ashamed to suffer death, rather than I will deny him, who suffered death in his owne body to saue mee.

Euseb. lib. 4. cap. 15.

Rom. 14. 1. Cor. 8.

It is good, saith S. Paul, neither to eat flesh, nor to drinke wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weake. Againe he saith: Now when yee sinne so against the brethren, and wound their weake conscience, yee offend against Christ. Wherefore if meat offend my brother, I will eate no flesh while the world standeth, lest I should offend my brother. He that hath once made a shipwracke, standeth watchfull euer after, not onely to escape that rocke, or sand, whereat he had bene before, but all other the like rockes and sands whatsoeuer.

Therefore, Abstaine from all appearance of euill: bee not like the wicked of this world. You are the salt of the earth. You should not be partners of their corruption, but ponder and season them. You are the light of the world: you may not be partners of their darknesse, but lighten and guid them. Dissemble not: Serue God in the simplicity of your heart, and in the sight of all the world. Let it be written in your forehead what you thinke in your heart. Why should any man be ashamed of Gods truth?

VERS. 23. Now the very God of peace sanctifie you thorowout: and I pray God, that your whole spirit, and soule, and body, may be kept blamelesse vnto the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Our God is the God of peace. He giueth peace & quiet to his church. He doth muzzel the Lion, Lyon, amaze the tyrant, make blunt the ſword, and quench the fire prepared againſt his ſeruants. He giueth his Sons peace and quietneſſe, among themſelues. He abhorreth diſcord and malice betweene brethren. God is loue, ſaith S. Iohn: And he that dwelleth in loue, dwelleth in God and God in him. He that loueth not his brother, abideth in death. God hath made vs all members of one body. There is no reſpect of perſons with him, no difference of learned and vnlearned, wiſe or ſolish, rich or poore. His will is, that we all ſhould be as one, of one minde, and that we ſhould all thinke one thing, and ſpeake one thing: that we ſhould be one fold vnder one shepheard, and with one mouth glorifie the father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. For this peace Chriſt praied: Sanctifie them through thy truth. Bleſſe them, take away all bitternesſe, and ſwelling from amongſt them. Make them Citizens of thy heauenly Hieruſalem, that they may liue in peace, and loue one another, and delight one in other. That they all may be one, as thou, ô father, art one in me, and I in thee.

1. Iohn 4. 1. Iohn. 3. Iohn 17.

God is the God, and giuer of peace. Whence then commeth diuiſion and diſſenſion of minds? What is the cauſe that the whole world is ſo shaken with ſects and troubles? All are not the children of peace. Chriſt himſelfe the Lamb of God, in whoſe mouth there was no guile, came vnto his owne, and his owne receiued him not. Cain is alwaies againſt Abel. Eſau will neuer loue Iacob. The darkneſſe and the light can neuer agree. This is the cauſe of all vnquietneſſe and trouble. Theſe things, ſaith Chriſt to his Diſciples, haue I ſpoken vnto you, that in me yee might haue peace. in the world you ſhal haue affliction. The wicked ſhall not only hate, but betray, and cauſe them to die, which profeſſe the name of Chriſt. Whoſoeuer killeth you, will thinke he doth God ſeruice. And theſe things will they doe vnto you, becauſe they haue not knowen the Father, nor me. The ſetting forth of the Goſpel of Chriſt, is that which the world cannot abide. It reuealeth things that were hidden, it diſcloſeth the couetouſneſſe of thoſe, who kept the people in ignorance, to make gaine and merchandiſe of their ſoules: it ouerthroweth mighty buildings and holds of Merits, of Pardons, of Maſſes, of Purgatory, which by the policy, and wiſdome, and power of this world were exalted againſt God. This is the only cauſe of all this ſtrife and trouble.

Iohn 16. Ibid.

We haue need of peace, of the peace of conſcience within our ſelues: of peace, from the rage and fury of the world: and of peace and loue among thoſe that are of Gods houſhold. Let vs ſeeke peace at the hands of God, and he will eſtabliſh vs in the peace of his Goſpell, and ſo giue vs the reſt and peace of our ſoules.

Sanctifie you throughout. The God of peace bleſſe you, and keepe you vnder the ſhadow of his wings, that your whole ſpirit, and ſoule, and body, may be kept blameleſſe vnto the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Here marke, that the Apoſtle diuideth man into three parts: The ſpirit, the ſoule, and the body. So that he ſeemeth to make the ſpirit one thing, and the ſoule another. How is it then that we diuide man into two parts, the ſoule and the body, and ſay that he doth ſtand but of two parts? There is no difference, the matter is all one. For Paul diuideth the ſoule into two parts. The firſt is reaſon and vnderſtanding, which he calleth the Spirit: The other is, will and affection, which he calleth the Soule. For as God hath giuen vs reaſon to ſee what is good: ſo hath he giuen vs will to ſeeke after that which is good. Reaſon hath eies: Will is blind, and cannot ſee the way. Therefore Will muſt be led and guided by Reaſon. Reaſon muſt goe before, Will muſt follow after. Therefore Reaſon is compared to the husband, and Will to the Wife. If Will take in hand to rule Reaſon, it is no leſſe diſorder, than if the wife will aduenture or take vpon her to rule her husband. Therefore in this place Reaſon, which is the principal part of our ſoule, is called the Spirit; and Will, which is the other part, is called the Soule. So the ſpirit is not a ſeuerall ſubſtance, but the ſoule and the ſpirit are one ſoule, euen as the body and the fleſh are one body. Thus therefore Paul praieth for the Church, The God of peace ſanctifie you throughout, that your ſpirit, your reaſon and vnderſtanding: your ſoule, your will, and affection: your body and your fleſh, may altogether be pure and holy: that they may be found innocent, and vpright in the day of the Lord.

VERSE. 24. Faithfull is he which calleth you, which will alſo doe it.

He hath begun a good worke in you, he will finiſh it. He will lead you from vertue to vertue, from ſtrength to ſtrength, from glory to glory. He hath called you, he will alſo keepe you faithful vntil the day of the appearing of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. You are Chriſts ſheepe. No man ſhall take you out of his hands. He hath not loſt one of all them, whom his father had giuen him. He knoweth his ſheepe. None ſhall be confounded that put their truſt in him. There is no condemnation to them that be in Chriſt Ieſus. He is faithfull, he will performe this vnto you: not for your merits, but for his owne name, and for his mercy ſake. Becauſe he is faithfull, he will not deſpiſe the worke of his owne hands.

VERS. 25. Brethren, pray for me.

I wrestle not with flesh and blood, but with the Prince and power of darkneſſe. My enemies are ſtrong, they are the enemies of the Croſſe of Chriſt; I am weake, and of no reſiſtance. Our ſufficiency is of him. Without him we can doe nothing. Pray for me, that he will put his word into my mouth, that I may be a veſſell of his glory to preach forth the glad tidings of his Goſpel: that I may be a faithfull Miniſter of the new Teſtament: that I may diſcloſe the myſtery of our redemption: that his holy ſpirit will aſſiſt me; and make my trauels fruitfull.

VERS. 26. Greet all the brethren with an holy kiſſe.

27. I charge you in the Lord, that this epiſtle be read vnto all the brethren, the Saints.

Salute one another in token of true and vnfained loue. And withhold not this Epiſtle from any of the brethren. It is written for their ſakes. Let them heare it, that they may take comfort by it. How agreeth Paul in this charge, with them, that in no caſe would haue the people read the Scriptures? That ſay, Ignorance is the mother of deuotion. It is the word of God the father: why ſhould not the people of God vnderſtand it? It is the water, that ſpringeth out to euerlaſting life: why ſhould the people of God be driuen away, and not ſuffered to drinke thereof? It is the light of the world: why ſhould the people be hoodwinkt, and kept that they ſhould not looke vp and ſee it? why ſhould they ſit, and periſh in the darkneſſe of death? It is the wil of God that all the people ſhould know him, from the leaſt to the greateſt among them. S. Paul ſaith: Whatſoeuer things are written afore time, are written for our learning, that we throught patience and comfort of the Scriptures might haue hope. Chriſt ſaith: This is life eternall, to know thee to be the only very God, and whom thou haſt ſent Ieſus Chriſt. Let vs not forget theſe words of Paul. I charge you in the Lord, by his death, by his Croſſe, by his blood, by the day of his appearance, that this Epiſtle be read to the learned, and vnlearned; to the wiſe and ſimple; to the maſters, and to the ſeruants: to all our brethren, to all the Sons of God.

Rom. 15.

Iohn 17.

VERS. 28. The grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt be with you. Amen.

God open your eies, that you may behold the way of righteouſneſſe, and direct you, that you may walke in it. Through his grace you haue receiued the word, and it hath bene fruitfull in you: and by the ſame grace, you ſhall continue in it for euer. His grace, and bleſſing, and mercy bee with you all. Amen.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF THE APOSTLE S. PAVL to the Theſſalonians.

Chap. I.

PAVL, and Syluanus, and Timotheus, vnto the Church of the Theſſalonians, which is in God our father, and in our Lord Iesus Chriſt.

IN the former Epiſtle hee wrote ſomwhat touching the latter day, and the comming of our Lord to iudgement, and ſaid, that, that day ſhall come as a theefe in the night: and therfore exhorted them to watch, and pray, and to prepare themſelues to be in a readineſſe. The falſe Apoſtles did fondly, and malitiouſly miſtake his words: and deuiſed meanes thereby to diſquiet the minds of the faithfull, and to trouble the Church of God. Thus could the Prince of darkneſſe, the old Serpent, and deceiuing ſpirit, turne the truth of God into occaſion of ſlander. In the meane while the Apoſtle was far off from them at Athens. But when he heard of their caſe, hee ſent vnto them this other Epiſtle, wherein he declareth more plainly that matter which before ſeemed doubtfull, and ſeeketh to ſatiſfie their hearts, and to remoue them from all that error which they had conceiued.

In diſcourſe hereof, he taketh occaſion to ſpeake of Antichriſt, of whom we heare much, and haue had warning often. He telleth vs, that he ſhall come in working of ſignes, and wonders: that he is the man of ſin, which ſhall thruſt himſelfe into the place of Chriſt. He ſheweth who is Antichriſt, and how we may know him: what things he ſhall doe, what credit he ſhall haue in the world: and by what power he ſhall be ouerthrown, and confounded. After this he ſpeaketh of idleneſſe, and of bodily labour, and requireth euery man to liue in the ſweat of their browes, and in painful trauel, as God hath ordained. Other comfortable, and neceſſary doctrine is deliuered in this Epiſtle, as will appeare. The whole matter of the Epiſtle is ſo fit for theſe daies in which we liue, as if it were purpoſely written for vs. For we liue in the latter age of the world: and it cannot be, but the end of all things is at hand, and that the glorious appearing of our Lord ſhall be ſhortly.

Paul, and Syluanus, and Timotheus. This Epiſtle was ſent, not only from Paul, but alſo from Timothy, and Syluanus. Theſe three were all guided by one ſpirit, and had all one like care for the Church of God. Therefore he writeth thus: Paul, and Syluanus, and Timotheus, the ſeruants of God, choſen from our mothers wombe, and appointed to publiſh the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt, and to carry his name before Kings, and Princes: and eſpecially, I Paul, which am your father, and haue begotten you in Chriſt: which was ſometimes a blaſphemer, and did perſecute the faithfull: whom it pleaſed God to make a choſen veſſell for himſelfe: which am alſo hated of my brethren and kinſmen after the fleſh, for the Goſpels ſake: and which am ready to giue my life for your behalfe.

Vnto the Church of the Theſſalonians, which is in God our father, &c. You are (ſaith he) the beloued of God, you are his people, and he hath aſſured his mercy vnto you: you haue the promiſe, and the earneſt of the life to come. Here let vs marke the ſtate of that country, as it was then, and compare it with it ſelfe as it is now. Then it was the Church of God: for otherwiſe S. Paul would not ſo haue called it, according to the grace of God giuen vnto him he laid the foundation, he planted and watered their harts, and God gaue the increase. So that they receiued the word in much affliction: and the word of the Gospell sounded from them, not only in Macedonia, and Achaia, but their faith towards God was spred also abroad in all quarters. In such sort were they a Vessell sanctified vnto honour, full of blessing, and full of the mercy and grace of God.

But what is become of that country? In what case standeth the Church of Thessalonica at this day? It is now the Synagogue of Satan, vnder the tyranny of the Turke, and such as are enemies of the Crosse of Christ. Such a change hath the right hand of the Lord wrought in that place, which hath somtimes bin his holy Tabernacle. I thought good to marke this, that we might vnderstand how vaine a thing it is, to put confidence in Cities or Churches, or in the names of our fathers.

The Church of Thessalonica, whose foundation was surely built by S. Paul himselfe, for which he was so carefull, vnto which he wrote speciall letters to commend their increase in godlinesse, and their stedfastnesse in the Gospell, is forsaken, and laid waste. If the worke which the spirit of God wrought by the Apostle be decaied, whose worke may we thinke shall stand? Ieremy spake vnto the people of the Iewes, saying: Trust not in lying words, saying, The Temple of the Lord, The Temple of the Lord, this is the Temple of the Lord. That temple God himselfe commanded to be built, the forme and fashion thereof God himselfe deuised, and appointed; therein he placed his Tabernacle, and set vp his Mercy seat; therein he shewed forth his Maiesty, and the glory of his countenance. Yet, all this notwithstanding, God said by the Prophet, Trust not in these words, they be lying words, and will deceiue you. Ierem. 7.

As the Prophet spake of the Temple at Ierusalem, so may it be said of any other Church throughout the world. So may it be said of the Church of Rome. We may say, Trust not in lying words, saying, The Church of Rome, the Church of Rome. Say not thus with your selues, The Church of Rome is built vpon a rocke, so surely that it cannot be moued, or that no wind can shake it: say not, The faith of that Church can neuer faile. These be lying words, trust not in them, for Christ neuer spake any such thing of the church of Rome It neuer had promise of more speciall priuiledge, than was giuen to the Church at Thessalonica. Read the Scriptures, behold the words of our Sauiour, and consider them, you shal find no speech made of the Church of Rome, nor any promise, or peece of promise, wherein he bindeth himselfe more to the Church of Rome, than he hath done to other Churches, or to this of Thessalonica.

Thessalonica was beautifull in the sight of God, the Lord of Hosts had pitched his tents round about her, the name of the most holy was placed in the middest of her, she enioyed like spirituall peace and prosperity, as did the Ierusalem of the Almighty: she was as a City fenced within it selfe: but the Lord hath taken away the light of his countenance from her, she hath forsaken the waies of righteousnesse, she hath left off to serue the Lord, and is become the place which the Lord hath forsaken: there is scarse any remnant left there of those which call vpon the name of our saluation, and loue the Lord Iesus with an vnfained heart. This is the Lords doing, and it is maruellous in our eies. And is his hand shortned, that he cannot, or is his zeale abated that he will not, in like seuerity deale with such as forsake him? If he spared not the naturall branches, if Ierusalem were ouerthrawen because of her iniquities, it cannot be, that he will spare other places, that doe the like, but that they shall also be cut off. This is it that our Sauiour hath said in the Gospell by S. Matthew: Therefore say I vnto you, the kingdome of God shall be taken from you, and shall be giuen to a nation, which shall bring foorth the fruits thereof. Such terrible, and dreadfull examples hath God laid before our eies, to keepe vs in his feare, and in awe of his iudgements. Mat. 21.

VERSE. 2. Grace be with you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Iesus Christ.

This is the salutation of Paul in all his Epistles: to say, I wish that the blessing, and fauour, and loue of God may light vpon you. But for the better consideration hereof, and that we may know how earnestly we ought to pray vnto God for this grace and peace, the Apostle wisheth to the Churches; let vs looke into our selues, and see how miserable we are, if we be left void of this grace, & if God take his holy spirit away from vs. By nature what are we other, than the bondslaues of sin? We are not able to lift vp our eies vnto heauen, nor to beleeue in God, nor to praise him, nor to call vpon his name. We are not sufficient of our selues to thinke any thing as of our selues. Vnlesse he open our lips, we cannot shew forth his praise: Vnlesse he heale our deafnesse, we cannot giue eare to his word: Vnlesse he giue vs vnderstanding hearts, we cannot take knowledge of his will. Destruction, & vnhappines, saith the prophet Dauid, are in their waies, & the way of peace Psalm. 14.

haue they not knowen, there is no feare of God before their eies: ſpeaking of ſuch as had not receiued the fauour and grace of God to guide and direct them. And by the Prophet Malachie God vttereth his diſpleaſure againſt them, ſaying: I haue no pleaſure in you, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, neither will I accept an offering at your hands. Malac. 1.

Therefore the Apoſtle praieth, that they may receiue ſuch meaſure of Gods grace as may quench in them the fierie darts of the wicked, and enable them to hold faſt that worthy thing, that is committed vnto them, and may keepe them holy and vndefiled, againſt the glorious comming of our Lord and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt.

VERS. 3. We ought to thanke God alwaies for you brethren, as it is meet, becauſe that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the loue of euery one of you towards another aboundeth.

4. So that we our ſelues reioice of you in the Church of God, becauſe of your patience, and faith in all your perſecutions, and tribulations, that yee ſuffer.

God hath wrought this good worke of faith, and loue, and patience in your hearts: he will make it proſper, and increaſe. It is he which hath put this fire in you, and he will make it burne. He hath laied his leauen in the dough or meale of your heart, and will make it heaue, and worke, vntill all be leauened. He will make you abound more and more, and will bring to a good end the thing he hath begun.

Your faith groweth exceedingly. That is the will of God, that we wax and increaſe in all holineſſe. Hereby we know, whether we be of God or no. We may not ſtand at a ſtay, but muſt be renued. On ſaith: In via virtutis qui non proficit, deficit: Whoſoeuer mendeth not himſelfe in the practiſe of vertue, he groweth worſe. God hath placed vs in a race to run; we muſt ſo run, that we may attaine the price. We are grafts of the Lords planting, we muſt grow to the heigth and breadth of a tree, and bring forth fruit. We are pilgrims and ſtrangers, and paſſe by the wildernеſſe of this world, into our heauenly reſting place: we may not ſtay by the way, but muſt remoue our tents, and continually march on forward, vntill that day come, when we ſhall enter into the land of promiſe.

So that we our ſelues reioice of you in the Church of God, &c. Your faith is not onely true, and pure, but ſetled, and conſtant. For you continued ſtedfaſt in the middeſt of perſecution: you haue beene tormented, and ſuffered afflictions in your body, by the hands of Tyrants: yet could they neuer remoue you from the faith in our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, nor from your obedience to the will of God. You know, that all which will liue godly in Chriſt Ieſus, ſhall ſuffer perſecution. Yet are you comforted, and ſay as the Prophet Dauid: The Lord is with me, therefore I will not feare, what man can doe vnto me. You cannot forget who it is that ſaid: Whoſoeuer ſhall confeſſe me before men, him will I confeſſe alſo before my father which is in Heauen. But whoſoeuer ſhall denie me, I will alſo denie him before my father which is in Heauen. Hee that loſeth his life for my ſake, ſhall find it. Hee that endureth vnto the end, he ſhall be ſaued. And againe: Bleſſed ſhall yee be, when men reuile you, and perſecute you, and ſay all maner of euill againſt you, for my ſake, falſely. Reioice and be glade, for great is your reward in Heauen. For ſo perſecuted they the Prophets, which were before you. 2. Tim. 3. Pſal. 118. Matth. 10. Matth. 5.

VERS. 5. Which is a manifeſt token of the righteous iudgement of God, that yee may be counted worthy of the kingdome of God, for the which yee alſo ſuffer.

6. For it is a righteous thing with God, to recompence tribulation to them that trouble you.

7. And to you, which are troubled, reſt with vs, when the Lord Ieſus ſhall ſhew himſelfe from Heauen, with his mightie Angels,

8. In flaming fire, rendring vengeance vnto them, that doe not know, and which obey not the Goſpell of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

9. Which ſhall be puniſhed with euerlaſting perdition, from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glorie of his power.

10. When he ſhall come to be glorified in his Saints, and to be made marueilous in all them that beleeue, becauſe our teſtimony towards you was beleeued in that day.

Many are the troubles which the righteous men do ſuffer, but the Lord will deliuer them. After Paul and Barnabas had preached the glad tydings of the Goſpell, they confirmed the diſciples hearts, and exhorted them to continue in the faith, and ſaid, that we muſt thorow many afflictions enter into the kingdome of God. We muſt not therefore be afraid Act. 14.

for any terror of them which trouble vs for righteousnesse sake: but rather looking ouer, and beyond them, we must reioice, and giue thankes to God, who hath made vs worthy
2. Cor. 5. not only to beleeue in him, but also to suffer for his sake. For we know, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle be destroied, we haue a building giuen of God, an house not made with hands, but eternall in the heauens. These persecutions and tribulations, which you suffer, are a manifest token (saith the Apostle) of Gods loue towards you. For, Whom the
Heb. 12. Lord loueth, he chastneth: and he scourgeth euery sonne that he receiueth. The Prophets, and Apostles, and Martyrs, which were not only reuiled, and scourged, but beheadded, cut in peeces, drowned in the waters, consumed in the fire, or by any other deuices of Tyrants, cruelly put to death, did by this way receiue the manifest token of their happy and blessed estate, and by this way did enter into the kingdome of God. Athanasius an ancient father reckoneth the suffering of persecution, to be a speciall note of a Christian man, saying: Cadi Christianorum proprium est: cedere autem Christianos, Pilati & Caiaphæ officia sunt: It is the Athanas. ad solitariam vitam agentes. part of Christians to be persecuted: but to persecute the Christians, it is the very office of Pilate and Caiaphas.

The Lord is not vniust, but all his workes are righteousnesse and truth. Their little and short tribulation in this life prepareth an eternall, and exceeding waight of glory vnto his seruants. Though they sow in teares, they shall reape in ioy. They shall be taken vp into Heauen, and shall see God face to face, and shall be crowned with glory and honour. As for the vngodly, it is not so with them, they may flourish for a time, and haue great power and authority in this world, but the Lambe shall ouercome them, and their end shall be ac-
Psal. 11. cording to their workes: Dauid saith, Vpon the vngodly, he shall raine snares, fire, and brimstone, storme and tempest: this shall be their portion to drinke.

When the Lord Iesus shall shew himselfe from Heauen. There are many which are ashamed of Christ, and of his word, in the presence of such as are enemies to the crosse of Christ, and haue countenance and authoritie in this world. But a time shall come, when Christ will shew himselfe from Heauen, accompanied with his holy Angels: Then will he also be ashamed of them, and put them from his presence: then will he render vengeance to them that haue hated his truth: they shall then know whose members they haue killed, and whose word and Gospell it was, which they so despightfully reproched. Then the smoke of their torments shall ascend euermore, and they shall haue no rest, day nor night. In this maner shall God triumph in victorie ouer the wicked, by iudging them to euerlasting destruction: and will shew himselfe wonderfull in giuing rest, and ioy, and glory, and euerlasting blessednesse to all those which loue his truth, and beleeue in him.

VERS. 11. Wherefore we also pray alwaies for you, that our God may make you worthy of this calling, and fulfill all the good pleasure of his goodnesse, and the worke of faith with power.

12. That the name of our Lord Iesus Christ may be glorified in you, and you in him, according to the grace of our God, and of the Lord Iesus Christ.

God blesse that good thing which he hath begun in you, and keepe you stedfast in the truth, that you loke not backe now, after you haue put your hand to the plough, and that you giue no place to their dangerous and subtile perswasions, who persecute you: take heed to your selues, and beware, that you put not the word of God from you. He hath shewed you his goodnesse and mercie, in that he hath deliuered you from the power of darknesse, and hath translated you into the kingdome of his deare sonne. I make my praier to God without ceasing, for you alwaies, that he will make you worthy of this heauenly calling, and that he will euer more and more fill you with the riches and abundance of his goodnesse and mercy, that through him you may be made perfect in all good workes.

CHAP. II.

VERS. 1. Now I beseech you brethren, by the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ, and by our assembling vnto him:

2. That ye be not suddenly mooued from your minde, nor troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as it were from vs, as though the day of Christ were at hand.

YOu are the children of those fathers which haue fallen from their stedfastnesse, and haue borne led into errour: beware lest you also be caried away with euery blast of false doctrine. The Diuell is subtil, his baits are pleasant; you are weake and simple, he will soone deceiue you. Here let vs consider how easily man may be deceiued, that so we may know the corruption and weaknesse of our nature, and therefore what cause we haue euer to walke warily, to take heed to our steps, and to pray vnto God that he will incline our hearts vnto his teſtimonies. When I ſay, man may be deceiued; I meane not boies or children, or fooles, or the ſimpler ſort of men: but the learned, the wiſe, the politike: the Kings and Princes of the world: the teachers, and rulers alſo of the people. When Adam was yet in paradiſe, and made the ruler ouer all the beaſts of the field, and was full of the graces and bleſſings of God, he ſone departed from the counſell of God, and gaue eare to the Serpent: ſo eaſily was he deceiued. Iſrael was as the apple of the Lords eye, a people whom the Lord loued, and to whom he gaue their hearts deſire. He deliuered them from Pharao, and with an outſtretched arme led them thorow the red ſea. Who would thinke ſo great mercies would euer be forgotten? or that ſuch a people, ſo well inſtructed in the knowledge of God, and ſo often put in mind of their dutie, ſhould either the moſt part, or all of them turne from God? Moſes was abſent but a while: he went aſide to receiue the Tables of couenant, in the meane time they made vnto themſelues a molten Calfe, and worſhipped it, they offered vnto it, and ſaid: Theſe be thy Gods, O Iſrael, that Exod. 32.

haue brought thee out of the land of Ægypt. So eaſily were the wiſeſt of them, and Aaron, and the whole multitude deceiued.

Their children after them forſooke the Lord, and ſerued Baal, and Aſtaroth. They ſaid to Iudges 2.
a tree, Thou art my father, and to a ſtone, Thou haſt begotten mee. They haue turned their backe to mee, and not their face; ſaith God by the Prophet Ieremie. And was this the Ier. 2.
offence but of ſome ſmall number of them? were they but few, or of the baſer & ſimpler ſort, whom the wicked ſpirit had thus ſeduced, to make them forſake the true and liuing God, and to giue the glorie due vnto him, to dumb creatures, and to the works of their owne hands? No, they departed from God in great multitudes, with full conſent, and vnitie; they warranted their doings by antiquitie, and by the cuſtome of their fathers before them. The Prophet ſaith: According to the number of thy Cities were thy Gods, O Iudah: and to Ier. 11.
the number of the ſtreets of Ieruſalem, haue ye ſet vp altars of confuſion, euen altars to burne incenſe vnto Baal. And in another place he ſaith: A great multitude, euen all the people that Ier. 44.
dwell in the land of Ægypt in Phathros anſwered Ieremie, ſaying: The word that thou haſt ſpoken vnto vs in the name of the Lord, we will not heare it of thee. But we will do whatſoeuer thing goeth out of our owne mouth, as to burne incenſe to the Queene of heauen, and to poure our drinke offerings vnto her, as we haue done, we and our fathers, our Kings and our Princes, &c. Thus, euen among that nation, which God hath choſen vnto himſelfe, the Apoſtaſie was ſo great, the departure from true holineſſe was ſo vniuerſall, that not only euery citie, but euery ſtreet was defiled with their Idolatrie. And, beſides the women which burnt incenſe to other gods; a great multitude, yea, all the people with one conſent cried out againſt their Preacher, refuſed to heare the word of God, and maintained their ſuperſtition.

The like may be ſaid of the Scribes and Phariſies. They were wiſe, they were learned, and caried great ſhew of holineſſe: yet they loued darkneſſe better than light: they were blind leaders of the blind, they deſpiſed the commandements of God, for their own traditions: and not only they, but Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and people of Iſrael gathered themſelues together againſt the Lord, and againſt his Chriſt. What ſhould I ſpeake of thoſe Churches which the Apoſtles of Chriſt planted, and watered, and confirmed in the truth? At Corinth Paul preached the Goſpel, they receiued it gladly: he thanketh God on their behalfe, That in all things they were made rich in him, in all kind of ſpeech, and in all knowledge. Yet ſone after they abuſed the holy myſteries, they denied the reſurrection of the dead, they became carnall, and had enuying, and ſtrife, and contention among themſelues. The Galathians reioiced ſo much in him, that he writeth thus of them: I beare you record, that if it had been poſſible, you would haue plucked out your owne eies, Galat. 4. and haue giuen them to mee. Yet they did not abide in the truth, but gaue eare to falſe Apoſtles, and were deceiued. Therefore he reproueth them, ſaying: O fooliſh Galathians, Galat. 3.
who haue bewitched you, that you ſhould not obey the truth? Are yee ſo fooliſh, that after yee haue begun in the ſpirit, yee would now be made perfect in the fleſh? Yee did run well: Galat. 5.
who did let you, that yee did not obey the truth? I am in feare of you, leſt I haue beſtowed Galat. 4.
on you labour in vaine.

This frailtie and weakneſſe of our corrupt nature, hath ſhewed it ſelfe forth, and hath appeared in all ages. We, and our fathers, haue gone aſtray, and haue followed after lies. Pſal. 14.
The Lord hath looked downe from Heauen vpon the children of men, to ſee if there were any that would vnderſtand, and ſeeke God. All are gone out of the way: they are all corrupt: there is none that doth good, no not one, ſaith the Prophet Dauid. Therefore the Apoſtle beſeecheth the Church at Theſſalonica, that they ſettle themſelues vpon a ſure foundation, and that they be not remoued from the truth. He putteth them in mind what they haue heard, and of whom they haue heard it, & exhorteth them to continue ſtedfaſt therein.

Neither by ſpirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as it were from vs. Let no man intice you from the loue of the truth, nor withdraw you, or remoue you from that bleſſed hope vnto which you be called, neither by pretence of reuelation, which any would ſeeme to receiue of the ſpirit of God: nor by pretence of any word of mine, as if I had ſo ſpoken: nor by any letter, giuen vnto you in my name, as if I had ſo written. In theſe words, he doth not only ſtrengthen them againſt ſuch practiſes of craftie and falſe teachers: but giueth them therewithall a teſtimonie of their conſtant abiding in the trueth of the Goſpell.

Otherwiſe, if the ſeducers had preuailed; and if the Theſſalonians had yelded vnto them, and receiued their errour, hee would then haue framed his ſpeech vnto them after this maner: Oh ſuffer your ſelues to be abuſed. You doe not run well, you haue loſt the high way. Giue place to the ſpirit of God, ſubmit your ſelues vnder his mighty hand, refuſe not the calling whereby hee hath called you. I could ſpeake ſuch things, wherewith you would be better pleaſed: but your caſe is ſuch, it requireth rather ſtrong, and plaine, and ſharp reprehenſion, whereby you may be brought to conſider, and amend your errors, than faire, and ſmothed ſpeech, which might hold you ſtill in your follie.

Seeke therefore the kingdome of God, and the glory thereof, and ſeeke not your ſelues. Weigh truth and falſhood in an indifferent ballance, ſo ſhall the heauier weight of the one ſoone beway the lightneſſe of the other. What thing in the world ſo maſſie, and ſo weightie, as is the truth? Harden not your hearts, as did your Fathers in the wilderneſſe. It is no ſinne to yeld vnto God: it is no ſhame to lay apart all affection, and to change your minde to the deniall of all vngodlineſſe, and imbracing of true holineſſe. The wiſe man Eccle. 4. ſaith: There is a ſhame that bringeth ſinne, and a ſhame that bringeth worſhip and fauour. In this ſort it is likely the Apoſtle would haue ſpoken, if need had ſo required. But now ſeeing them forcibly aſſaulted, and that yet they ſtriued with ſuch good courage againſt the perſwaſions of the wicked; hee commendeth their ſtedfaſtneſſe, and exhorteth them by theſe words, not to yeld vnto their perſecutors, nor to goe from their faith in Chriſt Ieſus.

Neither by ſpirit: that is, by reuelation of the ſpirit. The ſpirit of God wrought mightily, and beſtowed ſundrie and great giftes vpon men. Chriſt ſaid to his Diſciples, Matth. 10. When they deliuer you vp, take yee no thought, how, or what yee ſhall ſpeake: for it ſhall be giuen you in that ſame houre, what yee ſhall ſpeake. For it is not yee that ſpeake, but the Iohn 14. ſpirit of your father, which ſpeaketh in you. And againe, ſaith he: I will pray the father, and he ſhall giue you another comforter, that he may bide with you for euer: The ſpirit of truth, whom the world cannot receiue, becauſe the world ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him: but yee know him: for he dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you. The holy Ghoſt ſhall be with you, to aſſiſt you, to teach you all things, to direct your counſels, to lead you into all truth, and to preſerue you from all errour.

Now, as the ſpirit of God was among the faithfull, and diſtributed to euery man ſeuerall gifts, as it ſeemed beſt to profit withall: ſo did the ſpirit of Satan wait vpon the wicked, and poſſeſſed their hearts and bodies, and cauſed them to imagine, and to do thoſe things which were vnſeemely. He vſed them as inſtruments to diſquiet the Church of God, and to caſt into it the ſeed of errour, of vntruth, and diſſention. Of ſuch ſpirits Saint Iohn
1. Ioh. 4. giueth warning, ſaying: Beleeue not euery ſpirit, but trie the ſpirits, whether they are of God: for many falſe prophets are gone into the world. At what time Achab would not beleeue the anſwer which the Prophet Micheas made him; there came forth a ſpirit, and ſtood
1. Kings 22. before the Lord, and ſaid: I will go out, and be a falſe ſpirit in the mouth of all his Prophets. This ſpirit euer walketh vp and downe, ſeeking whom he may deuoure, and blindeth the mindes of many, that the light of the glorious Goſpell of Chriſt may not ſhine vnto them. Take heed that you be not deceiued by any ſuch, which ſhall ſeeke to abuſe you, by pretence of reuelation. Though they ſhall take vpon them to tell you of the day or houre of the comming of our Lord, beleeue them not: for the falſe ſpirit is in the mouth of ſuch Prophets.

Nor by word: or, if any ſhall report, and goe about to perſwade you, that I haue ſo ſpoken, or taught in the congregations: or will boldly countenance out ſuch matters, and tell you, ſaying, I was preſent, I heard his words and remember them, this was the doctrine which Paul preached: refuſe him that is ſuch a one, for hee bringeth not the truth vnto you, but deceiueth you with lying and vaine fables. Nor by letter, as it were from vs. Againe, it may be, they which lie in wait to deſtroy you, for their better way, will counterfet letters, and ſend them vnto you in my name. This is a token in them that they be paſt ſhame: bee not you caried away by any ſuch pretence from that which wee haue preached vnto you. Wee haue not taught you that the day of Chriſt is at hand. Oh then be not ſo ſoone remoued away vnto an other Goſpell, by them which trouble you, and intend to peruert the Goſpell of Chriſt.

Many

Many ſuch ſleights and falſe deuices haue bẽ vſed by deceiuing ſpirits, to blinde the eies of the ſimple. There haue bẽne ſome, which haue ſet abroad their owne fantaſies vnder the names of Adam, the firſt man that God created vpon the face of the earth, and of Cain and Seth. Others haue called their owne dreames, the Goſpell of Thomas, and of Bartholmew, and of Barnabee, and of the Apoſtles of Chriſt. S. Auguſtine ſaith of the Manichees: Manichei legunt Scripturas Apocryphas, neſcio à quibus ſutoribus fabularum, ſub nomine Apoſtolorum Scriptas: The Manichees read ſecret hidden Scriptures, written, I know not by what coblers of fables, vnder the name of the Apoſtles. Such writings were neuer written by them, whoſe name they beare: but were wickedly and falſly counterfetted vnder their names by ſundry Heretikes. Auguſt. contra Fauſtum, lib. 22. cap. 80.

This is that, whereof our Sauiour gaue vs warning: Take heed that no man deceiue you: for many ſhall come in my name, ſaying; I am Chriſt: and ſhall deceiue many. Againe he ſaith: If any ſhall ſay vnto you; Lo, heere is Chriſt, or there, beleeue it not: for there ſhall ariſe falſe Chriſts, and falſe Prophets. Into what ſhape cannot he transforme himſelfe? In whoſe name will not he craftily ſet forth his errours, which dareth falſely ſet himſelfe in the place of the ſonne of God? This hath euermore bẽne the practiſe of that old Serpent, to change himſelfe into the likeneſſe of an Angell of light: and vnder the credit of holy men, to deceiue the world with vnholy and vnholeſome things. Since the time that the Church of God hath departed from her firſt faith, and would no longer bee guided by the voice of the Goſpell; what, and how great forgeries haue there bẽne wrought? What Epiſtles, and Canons, and Decretals, haue bẽne deuiſed to maintaine ſeuerall parts of falſe Religion, and publiſhed vnder the name of Clemens, Cletus, Anacletus, and of others, whereof theſe holy Fathers neuer thought! Thus haue they cloaked themſelues vnder the couert of the Apoſtles, and of the Fathers of the Primitiue Church, and haue ſought to win credit in the world by falſe ſhew of antiquitie. Matth. 24.

It is certaine that the ſonne of man ſhall come with his holy Angels, and ſhall reward euery man according to that he hath done in this life. Then will he giue ſentence againſt the wicked, and will place the faithfull at his right hand. In that day the heauens ſhall paſſe away with a great noiſe, and the elements ſhall melt with feruent heat, the earth alſo and the workes that are therein, ſhall bee vtterly burned. In that day wee which liue, and remaine, ſhall be caught vp together with them (that are dead in Chriſt) in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the aire. But of that day and houre knoweth no man: no not the Angels of heauen, but my Father only, ſaith our Sauiour Chriſt. 2. Pet. 3. 1. Theſſ. 4. Matth. 24.

Now, it remaineth, that we ſee, by occaſion of this practiſe of the falſe Prophets, or falſe Apoſtles, of whom Saint Paul heere warneth the Theſſalonians, how the wicked abuſe the holy Scriptures, and vnderſtand them contrary to their meaning. Saint Peter ſaid, The day of the Lord will come as a theefe, in the night, euen as Paul had written vnto this people: as alſo it is ſpoken in the words of Chriſt: They ſhall ſee the ſonne of man come in the clouds, with power and great glorie. The falſe Apoſtles vſe the ſame words, and wreſt them to euill purpoſe: and take vpon them to iudge of the end of the world, and at what time the comming of Chriſt ſhould be. 2. Pet. 3. Matth. 24.

Chriſt ſaid: Deſtroy this temple, and in three daies I will raiſe it vp againe. There aroſe certaine, that did beare falſe witneſſe againſt him, ſaying, We heard him ſay, he would deſtroy this temple made with hands. They remembred, that temple was fortie and ſix yeares a building, and thought it impoſſible that he could reare it in three daies. They tooke his words otherwiſe than he meant. They thought of the materiall temple of ſtone in Hieruſalem, and he ſpake of the temple of his bodie. Iohn 2.

Againe, Chriſt ſaith, Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I build my Church. Theſe are the words of Chriſt ſpoken vnto Peter, after he had witneſſed of him, that he is Chriſt the ſonne of the liuing God. Hereof they ſay, Peter is the rocke: and the Biſhop of Rome, is Peters ſucceſſour: he is the rocke vpon which the Church is builded, and ſhall ſtand ſtedfaſt for euer. But they vnderſtand the words contrarie to the meaning. For, alas who would conceiue, that God would build his Church vpon a man, or vpon any creature? Chriſt only is that rocke whereupon his Church is ſetled. Other foundation can no man lay, than that is laid, which is Ieſus Chriſt. Therefore Chryſoſtome expoundeth thoſe words, Super hanc Petram ædificabo Eccleſiam meam: Id eſt, ſuper fidem atque confeſſionem: I will build my Church vpon this Rocke: that is, vpon this faith and confeſſion. Likewiſe Saint Auguſtine: Super hanc petram, quam confeſſus es, &c. Vpon this rocke which thou haſt confeſſed, vpon this rocke which thou haſt knowen, ſaying, Thou art Chriſt the ſonne of the liuing God, will I build my Church. That is, I will build my Church vpon my ſelfe, which am the ſonne of the liuing God. I will not build my ſelfe vpon thee, but I will thee vpon me. Matth. 16. 1. Cor. 3. Chryſ. hom. 55. in Mat. Hom. 13. de verba dom. ſec. Mat.

Ioh. 3. Chriſt ſaith, Except a man be borne againe, he cannot ſee the kingdome of God. Theſe words are moſt true. For by our owne nature, we be the veſſels of Gods wrath, and the children of damnation. Vnleſſe we be regenerate, and borne anew of water and of the holy Ghoſt, we cannot be ſaued. Yet Nicodemus a wiſe man, a Phariſie, and a ruler of the Iewes miſtook this ſpeech: it ſeemed ſtrange vnto him how a man might be borne, when he is old. Can he enter (ſaith he) the ſecond time into his mothers wombe, and be borne? how can theſe things be? Ieſus anſwered, and ſaid vnto him, Art thou a maſter of Iſrael, and knoweſt not theſe things? This new birth muſt be from aboue, euen by the working of the holy Ghoſt.

Ioh. 6. Againe Chriſt ſaith: Except yee eat the fleſh of the ſonne of man, and drinke his blood, you haue no life in you. The Iewes heard him, but miſtooke his words. They did not vnderſtand his meaning. Therefore they ſaid: This is an hard ſaying, who can abide the hearing of it? They reaſoned among themſelues, how it might be, that either he could giue them his fleſh to eat: or, that they could take his fleſh and eat it, or take his blood to drinke it. But when Ieſus knew, that his Diſciples murmured at it, he ſaid vnto them; Doth this offend you? It is the ſpirit that quickneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing. Hereof Auguſtine Auguſt. in Pſal. 98. ſaith: Acceperunt illud ſtultè, &c. They tooke the ſaying of Chriſt fooliſhly, they thought of it carnally, and imagined that the Lord would cut off ſmall peeces from his body, and giue it to them. Therefore they ſaid; This ſaying is hard. They were hard, and not the ſaying. For if they had beene meeke, and not hard, they would haue ſaid to themſelues: This is not ſpoken without ſome cauſe: There is ſome myſterie hidden vnder his words.

Ibid. And againe he ſaith: Spiritualiter intelligite quæ locutus ſum. Non hoc corpus, &c. Vnderſtand thoſe things ſpiritually, which I haue ſpoken vnto you. You ſhall not eat (with the mouth of your body) this body that you ſee, nor ſhall you drinke that blood which they ſhall ſhed, that ſhall crucifie me. I haue commended vnto you ſome Sacrament: vnderſtand it ſpiritually, and it ſhall quicken you.

Thus we ſee the true meaning of Chriſt words, and after what groſſe maner the Capernaits vnderſtood them. Let vs beware we fall not into like errour. Chriſt ſpake truly of his body, when he called it a temple. The Iewes deſtroied it, and in three daies he did raiſe it vp againe. Miſtake not his words, be not deceiued. It is true that he ſaid: Vpon this rocke will I build my Church. Miſtake him not: Chriſt himſelfe is the rocke, and not Peter. It is true, that a man muſt be borne anew, or elſe he cannot be ſaued. Miſtake not this: hereby is meant not a bodily birth, but a renuing of the ſoule of man. It is truly ſaid, that Chriſts fleſh is that bread, that came from heauen, and giueth life to the world: but miſtake it not, for this bread filleth not the body, but the minde: it requireth the hunger of the inner man. Euen ſo is it true that the Apoſtle ſaith of the day of the Lord. Take heed you miſtake him not, and fall into the errour of the falſe Apoſtles, which take vpon them to appoint the time, and houre, when the ſonne of man ſhall come vnto iudgement.

VERS. 3. Let no man deceiue you by any meanes: for that day ſhall not come, except there come a departing firſt, and that that man of ſinne be diſcloſed, euen the ſonne of perdition.

The Church of God hath euer beene vnder perſecution and afflictions, as may appeare by the ſtories of all ages: but God hath not failed to comfort them, and worke their deliuerance. Iſrael was in great bondage vnder Pharao. They were put to great ſlauery, to chop ſtraw, and to bake bricke, &c. Their male children were ſlaine before their faces. This was done vnto them that ſo they might be rooted out, and their name quite put out from the earth. It was high time for the Lord to put to his hand. They called vpon him in their troubles, and he heard them. Then ſent he Moſes and Aaron, and deliuered them: he opened the red ſea, and gaue them paſſage.

When the Philiſtines oppreſſed them, God ſent them Gedeon, Barac, Iehu, Debora, and Samſon, whom he indued with wiſdome, and courage, and power to ouercome their enemies, and to ſet them at liberty. What ſhould I ſpeake of Nabuchodonoſor, Antiochus, Nero, Iulian, and other tyrants? They oppreſſed the ſeruants of God, and kept them in great miſerie. But God looked downe from heauen, and was their helper in the time of need: he brake the cords aſunder, and deliuered them. The more crueltie was intended or practiſed againſt them, the more glorious did God ſhew himſelfe, in the ouerthrow of their enemies. Great oppreſſions, and cruell perſecutions were done vpon the Saints of God, by theſe, and other wicked Princes But the moſt cruell of any, that euer were, or are, or ſhall be, is the crueltie of Antichriſt. By him the Church of God ſhall ſuffer great tribulation, ſuch as was not from the beginning of the world. And then ſhall his furie increaſe, and his tyranny be the greater, when his kingdome ſhall decay, and the daies of his deſolation ſhall be at hand. Primaſius ſaith: Tunc cadet Babylon, quando nouiſſimè poteſtatem perſequendi ſanctos acceperit: Then ſhall Babylon come to the ground, when ſhe ſhall laſt of all take power to perſecute the Saints of God. Primaſ. in Apoc. ca. 16. For then will God ariſe, and will iudge his owne cauſe, he will deliuer the afflicted, and will ſlay Antichriſt with the breath of his mouth. Hereof S. Gregory ſaith thus: The Church after theſe daies of her affliction, ſhall afterward notwithſtanding be ſtrengthned with great power and might of preaching. Greg. in Iob. ca. 29. lib. 19. cap. 9.

Except there come a departing firſt. There muſt firſt be a departing from faith in the Church of God, and then ſhall be the comming of the Lord. There was one generall departing in the daies of Noah. All fleſh had corrupt their waies: there was not any that did ſeke after righteouſneſſe. Then came the day of the Lord vpon them: he powred out the waters, and they preuailed vpon the earth, ſo that both man, and cattell, and worme, and the fowle of the heauen were deſtroied. There was a generall departing of the Iewes, and people of God at Hieruſalem. They made the houſe of God a den of theeues: they ſaued a theefe, and crucified the Lord of glory. God had no delight in them, neither regarded their ſacrifices. Chriſt ſaid vnto them: O Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, thou that killeſt the Prophets, and ſtoneſt them which haue been ſent vnto the, how often would I haue gathered thy children together, euen as a hen gathereth his chickens vnder her wings, and yee would not? Behold, your houſe is left vnto you deſolate. They ſhall not leaue in thee one ſtone vpon another becauſe thou knoweſt not the time of thy viſitation. Matth. 23. Luke 19. Such a departing it ſhall be, whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, and ſo generall, that the ſonne of man when he commeth ſhall hardly finde faith vpon the earth.

But this departing is diuerſly taken. Some vnderſtand it of the Empire, that the kingdomes and countries which were before in ſubiection to that eſtate, ſhall depart from it, and that then Antichriſt ſhal ſpring vp. Others thinke, that this is ſpoken of that departing wherein the godly haue carried themſelues from the obedience of the Church of Rome. But others more truly ſay, it is the departure from the doctrine, and religion, and loue, and obedience of the Goſpell of Chriſt: whereof in another place he ſaith: In the latter times 1. Tim. 4. ſome ſhall depart from the faith, and ſhall giue heed to ſpirits of error, and doctrines of Diuels, forbidding to marrie, and commanding to abſtain from meats, which God hath created to be receiued with giuing thankes of them which beleeue and know the truth. Theſe men ſhall haue a forme of godlineſſe, but ſhall deny the power thereof. They ſhall turne their eares away from the truth, and will incline their hearts to beare fables.

The words of the Apoſtle are plaine, to ſhew that there ſhall be a departing. But, as we ſee, it is not agreed vpon, what maner of departing this ſhall be, nor by whom it ſhall be wrought. Our aduerſaries lay it vnto vs, ſaying, you haue wrought this departing: you haue departed from the Church of Rome, you are they of whom S. Paul hath ſpoken: you are the founders of Antichriſt: ſo ſay they. But would to God, they and their fathers, and the Church of Rome had not wrought this departure. Bernard beheld the ſtate, and pride, and diſorders of the Church of Rome in his time, therefore ſaid: Supereſt vt reuelatur homo peccati, filius perditionis: non modò dæmonium diurnum, ſed & meridianum: quod non ſolùm transfiguratur in angelum lucis: ſed extollitur ſupra omne quod dicitur Deus, aut quod colitur: It remaineth, that the man of ſinne, that is, the ſonne of perdition, be reuealed: euen the Diuell which flieth not only in the day, but deſtroieth in the noone day: which is not onlie changed into an Angell of light, but is exalted aboue all that is called God, or that is worſhipped. And Gregory did ſee who they were that ſhould worke this departing, and make way for Antichriſt: therefore ſaid: Ego fidenter dico, &c. I ſpeake it boldlie: Whoſoeuer calleth himſelfe the vniuerſall prieſt, or deſireth ſo to be called (as doth the Pope) in the pride of his heart, he is the forerunner of Antichriſt. Bern. Serm. 6. in Pſal. 91. Greg. lib. 6. epiſt. 30.

Now, that we may yet better know what maner of departure that ſhall be, let vs conſider, what S. Paul ſpeaketh of the Church of God, which was in his time. Vnto the Corinthians he ſaith: If all prophecie, and there come in one that beleeueth not, or one vnlearned, he is rebuked of all men, he is iudged of all men, and ſo are the ſecrets of his heart made manifeſt, and ſo will he fall downe on his face, and worſhip God, and ſay plainlie, that God is in you in deed. How is it then Brethren? When you come together euery one of you hath a pſalme, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a reuelation, hath an interpretation: let all things be done vnto edifying, &c. For God is not the author of confuſion, but of peace, as we ſee in all the Churches. Bleſſed were they of God. All things among them were done to edifying. The holy Scriptures were read openly in the preſence of the people: the people reuerently kept ſilence, and giue eare, and vnderſtood the will of God, and ſubmitted themſelues vnto it. The praiers were in a knowen tongue, ſo that the vnlearned might vnderſtand them, and ſay, Amen. The holy myſteries were duly miniſtred. The people receiued the Sacra- 1. Cor. 14.

ment of the Lords Supper vnder both kinds, as Christ had instituted: and did all communicate together. Chrysostome writing vpon that Chapter, saith: Verè tum Ecclesia cælum fuit, &c. Verily the Church then was a heauen, the spirit of God ordering all things, and directing all the heads of the Church.

Chry. hom. 36. in 1. ad Cor.

In the time of Tertullian, the Christians still kept this maner. Therefore he saith: Cœtus ad diuinarum literarum commemorationem, fidem sanctis vocibus pascimus, spem erigimus, fiduciam figimus: We meet together at the reading of the holie Scriptures: wee nourish our faith with those heauenly words: by them we raise vp our hope, and settle our affiance and trust. Augustine, Chrysostome, Origen, and other ancient and godly fathers commended the reading of the Scriptures vnto the people, called vpon them to read them themselues, or to get others to read vnto them: And that they would heare them not only in the Church, but also at home in their houses. They taught them, the hurt and danger of ignorance, that ignorance of the Scriptures hath bin the cause of heresies, and that it hath brought in corruption of life and of maners. This was the order and vsage of the Church in the time of the holy Apostles, and of our first fathers. The people were guided by the word of God, they were made partakers of the holy mysteries, and all things were done in the Church to edifying. And the same order is this day restored, and practised in our Churches.

Tertul. in Apologetico.

Let vs loke into the Church of Rome, and behold the vsage and behauiour thereof. Where shall wee find that heauenly comelinesse which S. Paul requireth? Where is the comfortable reading of Scriptures? Where is the people taught their saluation in Christ Iesus? where is the brotherly meeting of all the congregation at the communion of the Lords Supper? May wee say of Rome that it holdeth fast the forme and fashion of that Church which Christ and his Apostles left vnto vs, and which the holy Ancient fathers continued? nay, rather, we may say of them with Chrysostome: They may haue the chests and cofers wherein the treasure was sometimes kept, but the treasures they haue not. Wee may say, It is not now a house of praier, but a den of theeues. We may say, It shall no more be called Bethel, the house of God, but Bethauen, the house of vanitie, or of lying.

Iupiter and Bacchus, and the Idols of the heathen, were not so dishonored of their worshippers, as the Almighty and euerlasting and only true God is dishonored in that Synagogue. I speake of it, as it is now, and as it hath bin these many yeeres. For in the time of our elder fathers, it had great testimony of true holinesse. Ignatius called it castissimam, most chaste. Tertullian said, it was a happy Church, because the Apostles of Christ suffered martyrdome in it, and left their whole doctrine vnto it. And in like sort did others giue vnto Rome as it was in those times reuerend and worthy commendation. But now, saith he: O Roma, à Roma quantum mutata vetusta est! nunc caput es scelerum, quæ caput orbis eras: O Rome, how much art thou changed from the old Rome! Thou which hast been the chiefe in all the world, art now the chiefe in all naughtinesse. They haue forsaken the trade of life, and the loue of the Gospell, which they of old time had in Rome; and therefore cannot be inheritors of their commendation.

When Chrysostome considered the state of the Church as the Apostle speaketh of it vnto the Corinthians, and did see, how far the Church in his time swarued from that, hee said: Nunc verò vestigia tantùm rerum illarum tenemus: We haue now only the bare signes of those things. Againe: Videtur Ecclesiæ hodiè, mulieri quæ mansitudine veteri excidérit similis, quæque Symbola tantùm, &c. The Church which is now, may be likened to a woman, which hath forsaken her wonted modestie. And hath only certaine outward shewes of that first felicitie, and keepeth still the hutches and boxes of precious things, but lacketh the treasure which was in them. To such a woman may the Church this day be likened. I speake not this of the gifts: (for the matter were not so great, if we wanted them only:) but of life and of vertue. And againe he saith: Scrinium aliud paterni thesauri exinanitum hodiè dicam, &c. I will tell you of one other box of that treasure which our father left vnto vs, which is emptie, and hath nothing left in it at this day. In times past they did sing all together; so doe we also: but then they were all of one mind, and of one heart: at this day you shall not find one man that agreeth with himselfe, there is such war and discord in all things euery where. The name of peace is common in all places, but peace it selfe is no where to be found. Then men did vse their houses like Churches: now men doe vse the Church, as they vse their house, nay, more prophanely than any house. Thus Chrysostome blamed the Church in his time, and laieth out their departing from the faith. He liued about 411. yeeres after Christ.

Chrys. est. in 14. 1. Corinth.

What may wee thinke, he would say of the Church that hath bin of latter yeeres, if hee had liued to see the deformitie and abuses thereof? Where, besides that they are not of one mind and of one heart, they suffer not the people all together to sing the praises of God: Where they haue not only emptied such bores or hutches, wherein Christ left great treasures vnto his Church, but haue made light account of them, and haue cast away the very paterns and Images of true godlineſſe. They driue away the people from reading the Scriptures, and reckon that as vnlawfull, as to caſt the bread of the children vnto dogs, or Pearles before Swine. They lead men from truſt in the blod of Chriſt, and teach them to beleeue ſuch things, and to put confidence in thoſe creatures, which cannot profit, or helpe them at all. You may remember what prayers they vſed. But bleſſe your eares: for they are words full of horrible blaſphemy. They ſaid to the holy and bleſſed Virgin Marie, the mother of our redeemer and Sauiour: In te virgo Maria confidimus, in te ſperamus, nos defendas in æternum. Our truſt and hope we put in thee O Virgin Marie, defend vs euerlaſtinglie. They ſay: O felix puerpera noſtra pians ſcelera: O happie mother which doeſt purge vs from our ſinnes. And: Sanctæ Mariæ merita ducant nos ad regna cæleſtia: The merits of holy Marie bring vs to the heauenlie kingdome. Againe: Tu mediatrix Dei & hominum, aduocata pauperum, refugium peccatorum: Thou art the mediatour betweene God and man, the aduocate for the poore, the refuge of all ſinners. O mercifull Chriſt, what is become of thy paſſion! where is the price of thy blod! how are we led away from thee to ſeeke redemption in a creature! Againe they ſay vnto her: Thou art the Lady of Angels: thou art the Queene of heauen. Command thy Sonne: ſhew thy ſelfe to be a Mother. He is thy ſonne, thou art his mother: the mother may command, the child muſt obey. Againe, they turne all that is ſpoken in the whole booke of the Pſalmes of the Prophet Dauid, either of God, or of Chriſt, and apply it to the Virgin Marie, and call that Pſalter, Pſalterium beatæ Marie, the Pſalter of bleſſed Marie. Who will take the paines to peruſe it, ſhall find that comfortable ſpeech of our Sauiour, Come vnto me all yee that are wearie and laden, and I will eaſe you, thus blaſphemouſly abuſed in the ſecond Pſalme: Venite ad eam omnes qui laboratis, & tribulati eſtis: & refrigerium & ſolatium dabit animabus veſtris: Come vnto her all yee that trauell, and be heauily loaden: and ſhe will giue reſt and comfort to your ſoules. Another ſaith, the kingdome of God is of two parts, of iuſtice and of mercy. He reſerueth iuſtice to himſelfe: and the other part, that is, mercy, he hath yelded vnto his mother. Therefore one of them plaieth the Proctor, and taketh vpon him to ſhew the difference of theſe two courts, ſaying: A foro iuſtitiæ Dei appellandum eſt ad forum miſericordiæ matris eius: You muſt appeale from the Court of Gods iuſtice, to the court of his Mothers mercie. And is there not good cauſe, he ſhould giue vs this counſell, if it be true that he hath written? Nulla gratia venit de cœlo ad terram, niſi tranſeat per manus Marie. Eſt enim mediatrix ſaluationis, iuſtificationis, reconciliationis, communicationis. No mercy commeth from heauen to the earth, but it muſt paſſe by the hands of Marie: For ſhe is the mediator of our ſaluation, of our iuſtification, of our reconciliation, and of our participation. What is blaſphemy, if this be not blaſphemy? They which will ſeeme ſomwhat to bluſh at theſe things, will perhaps excuſe this, and call it ſpirituall alliance. Vnhappy are they, and heauy iudgement ſhall abide them, that in ſuch ſort daily and ſcorne the price of our redemption. O let vs open our eies: we are the Sons of God. God hath giuen vs eies to ſee, and eares to heare, and hearts to vnderſtand. Let vs iudge vprightly. It is Gods cauſe. Whoſoeuer conſidereth theſe, and ſuch other great errors, muſt needs confeſſe that the Church of Rome hath wrought that departing whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. In the late Councell of Trident, Cornelius the Biſhop of Bironto did ſomething plainly acknowledge the great Apoſtaſie, and departing of the Church of Rome, both in matters of faith, and in conuerſation, and life. Theſe be his words: Vtinam a religione ad ſuperſtitionem, &c. Would God they were not gone whollie with generall conſent from religion to ſuperſtition. from faith to infidelitie: from Chriſt to Antichriſt: from God to Epicure: ſaying with wicked heart and filthy mouth, There is no God. Neither hath there been this great while any Paſtor or Pope, that regarded theſe things. For they all, both Pope and Cardinals, and other, ſought their owne: and not ſo much as one of them, ſought for the things, that pertaine to Ieſus Chriſt. Yet ſay they, there can be no departing from faith in the Church of Rome, the faith thereof cannot faile: for Chriſt hath ſaid: I haue praied for thee, that thy faith faile not. And againe: The gates of hell ſhall not preuaile againſt it. Therefore in that place there can be no decay. This is the ſaying of ſome, who humble not themſelues to know their error: who loue the praiſe of men more than the praiſe of God: whoſe glorie is their ſhame, which mind earthly things.

Matth. 16.

The Apoſtle ſaith, there ſhall be a departing: that it ſhall be, not among the Iewes, and Infidels, but among thoſe which were reckoned to be of the houſhold of faith, and the children of God. What is it from which they ſhall depart, or wherein the decay ſhall be? Doth he meane their riches, their gold, and ſiluer, and bread, &c. No, but the doctrine of the Goſpell, and faith in Chriſt. The pure words, which as ſiluer from the earth are tried, and purified ſeuen times in the fire: the well of water which ſpringeth vp into euerlaſting life, ſhall decay in the houſe of God. The people ſhall ſhut their eares that they may not heare the truth, and ſhall giue head vnto ſpirits of error, and doctrines of diuels, which ſpeake lies through hypocrisie. And let them not say, the Church of Rome can not erre. For, where did Christ euer giue, or where haue the Apostles euer made mention of any such priuiledge

1. Pet. 2. granted to that Church? S. Peter saith: There were false prophets also among the people, euen as there shall be false teachers among you: which priuily shall bring in damnable heresies, euen denying the Lord that hath bought them, and bring vpon themselues swift damnation; and many shall follow their damnable waies, by whom the way of truth shall be euill
Acts 20. spoken of. Paul warned the Church of God at Ephesus, not only that after his departing
Luke 18. grieuous wolues should enter in among them: but also, that of themselues should men arise speaking peruerse things, to draw disciples after them. When Christ said; When the Son of man shall come, shall he find faith vpon the earth? And when he told his disciples that the Matth. 24. abomination of desolation shall stand in the holy place: when he warned them in this sort: Then if any shall say vnto you, Loe, here is Christ, or there, beleeue it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false Prophets, and shall shew great signes and wonders, so that if it were possible the verie elect should be deceiued: It is most euident, he spake of that departing which should come, and should appeare in the Church of God: which departing our forefathers did behold, and marke in their times: and which hath of late yeres appeared so manifestly, that no man, who is not wilfully blind, can doubt thereof.

S. Paul knew not any such state of the Church of Rome, or any especiall grant made vnto
Rom. 11. it, in such sort, that it should neuer erre. For vnto the Church of Rome he writeth: Boast not thy selfe. Bee not high minded, but feare. For if God spared not the naturall branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee. Through vnbeleefe they are broken off, and thou standest by faith. Behold therefore the bountifulnesse and seueritie of God: Towards them which haue fallen, seueritie: but, towards thee, bountifulnesse, if thou continue in his bountifulnesse: or els thou shalt also be cut off. That is, If he spared not the Iewes his own people, how will hee spare thee that art but a stranger? If thou continue not, thou shalt be cut off. It may be thou shalt also depart from the faith, as the Iewes haue done: then shalt thou be as a withered branch, and shalt not draw any moisture from the rot: then will God also forsake thee: and thy end shal be worse than the beginning. I trow in saying thus, he said not, Thou shalt not erre. If the Church of Rome cannot erre, what need haue they of that Church, either of the scriptures, or of the fathers, or of Councels? Perhaps through this pride, they grew first to despise the holy Scriptures, and would not direct their waies by them. They are high minded, and boast themselues, that they are as mount Sion, which shall not be moued. Yet our Sauiour likeneth the Church somtimes to sheepe; as in the fifteen of S. Matthew: I am not sent, but vnto the lost sheepe of Israel. Somtimes to children, which are simple, and soone beguiled. Somtimes to a Vine, which is weake, and easily throwne downe: somtimes to the Wine, which wareth, and is also in wane, and many times giueth no light. The ancient fathers compare the Church of God to no one thing so vsually, as to a ship. And who knoweth not how a ship is tolled hither and thither: how it is in danger of sands, and of rocks, & of pirates and in danger of drowning by leaking? If the sheep were not a straying kind of cattell, what should they need a shepheard? If little children could guide themselues, what need had they of a guider? If the Vine did not hang down and lie on the ground, what need were there of props, or of one to set it vp? If there were no feare for the passage of a ship, if it could not miscarry, what should it need a Pilot? Let no man therefore say, the Church is safe for euer, it cannot erre, it cannot decay. Such words are deceiueable, and lying words. For, false Prophets shall come. There shall be a desolation: there shall be a departing, euen in the house of God: and that day of Christ shall not come, except there come a departing first. And that, that man of sinne be disclosed, euen the sonne of perdition.

VERS. 4. Which is an aduersarie, and exalteth himselfe against all that is called God, or that is worshipped: so that he doth sit in the Temple of God, shewing himselfe that he is God.

This the Apostle speaketh of Antichrist. Hee is the man of sinne, and the son of perdition. It will be somewhat hard to treat of this matter, and to open the words of this Scripture. Whatsoeuer I shall speake, it will be ill taken of many, and many will doubt of the truth of my speeches; such affection they beare to him whom the Apostle discipbereth to be Antichrist. Albeit, whatsoeuer I wil vtter in opening the Apostles words, shalbe such, as the holy scriptures and learned writings of the holy Fathers haue left vnto vs, and the Church of God hath proued, and at this day doth proue to be true. God promised, that Christ should come into the world, euen the Shiloh, vnto whom all the people should be gathered: and that he should be the hope of Israel, and deliuer his people from their sinnes. God made promise of him to Adam, & to Abraham, Dauid, &c. The Scriptures are full, & the prophets make often mention of this promise. Old men, and yong men, and all the people waited for the fulfilling thereof therof, and ſaid: Send him whom thou wilt ſend. And againe: Ye heauens ſend the dew from aboue, and let the clouds drop downe righteouſneſſe: let the earth open, and let ſaluation and iuſtice grow foorth: And againe: God will come and ſaue you. Thus was euery eie bent vpon him, and euery heart waited for his comming. But when the fulneſſe of time was come, God ſent foorth his Sonne made of a woman: that wee might receiue the adoption of the ſonnes. He was in the world, and the world knew him not. He came vnto his owne, and his owne receiued him not. Light came into the world, and men loued darkneſſe better than light. They to whom the promiſe was made, and which wished for him, and made all their common talke of the hope of his comming, when he came knew him not, they reuiled him, and ſaid: Behold a glutton, and drinker of wine, a friend vnto publicans and ſinners. They called him Beelzebub: and a falſe prophet, and a ſeducer of the people. Him they did take by the hands of the wicked: they betraied him, they denied the holy one and iuſt: they hanged on a tree, and killed the Lord of life. Such was the receiuing of Chriſt. This did they to him through ignorance. It was not giuen them to know the ſecrets of the kingdome of heauen. They haue not knowen the Father, nor whom he hath ſent, Ieſus Chriſt. Therefore ſaith he: I confeſſe vnto thee Father, Lord of heauen and earth, that thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and learned, and haſt reuealed them to babes: euen ſo Father, becauſe it ſo pleaſed thee.

Exod. 4. Eſa. 45. Eſa. 35. Galat. 4. Iohn 1. Iohn 3. Matth. 11. Luke 10.

Now, as the comming of Chriſt was, ſuch is the comming of Antichriſt. God hath foretold of his comming. Daniel hath foretold. Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, Paul and Iohn haue foretold it, the Scriptures, and old Fathers make often mention hereof. There is none, neither old nor yong, neither learned nor vnlearned, but he hath heard of Antichriſt. They hate his name, and deteſt him, before they know him. But here you may marke the wonderfull ſleight and ſubtilty of Sathan. The world ſhall loke after the comming of Antichriſt. He ſhall not faile but come. All men ſhall carry hatred againſt him, and reckon him abominable, and yet their eies ſhall be blinded, and their hearts deceiued, ſo that they ſhall not know him. They ſhall hate his name, and imbrace his doctrine: he ſhall couer himſelfe with a cloake of holineſſe. They ſhall thinke they doe good ſeruice vnto Chriſt, but ſhall therein doe ſeruice vnto Antichriſt.

Dan. 9.

The diuers fantaſies of men haue deuiſed many ſundry fond tales of the perſon of Antichriſt. Some ſay he ſhould be a Iew, of the tribe of Dan. Some, that he ſhould be borne in Babylon: ſome, that he ſhould be bred vp in Bethſaida and Corazin: ſome, that he ſhould riſe vp in Syria: ſome, that Mahomet is Antichriſt: ſome, that he ſhould ouerthrow Rome: ſome, that he ſhould build vp the City of Hieruſalem: ſome, that Nero was Antichriſt: ſome, that he ſhould be borne of a Frier and a Nunne: ſome, that he ſhould continue but three yeares and a halfe: ſome, that he ſhould turne trees vpſide downe, with the tops in the ground, and ſhould force the rots to grow vpward, and then ſhould flie vp into heauen, and fall downe, and breake his necke. Theſe tales haue been craftily deuiſed to beguile our eies, that whileſt we thinke vpon theſe gheſſes, and ſo occupy our ſelues in beholding a ſhadow or probable coniecture of Antichriſt, he which is Antichriſt indeed may vnawares deceiue vs.

Except that man of ſinne be diſcloſed. The Apoſtle ſemeth to teach vs of Antichriſt, as if he ſhould be one man, becauſe he calleth him, The man of ſinne. But we may not ſo take him. The maner of the Scripture is often times, and in diuers places it ſpeaketh that of many, which ſeemeth to be ſpoken but of one. So doth Daniel ſet forth the kingdome, and all the kings of Perſia, in the name and likeneſſe of a Beare, and ſo deſcribeth the ſtate of other whole kingdomes in ſuch particular names. And ſo doth the ſpirit of God in the Reuelation ſet downe vnder the name of the Beaſt, the ſucceſſion and continuance of many. Hee meaneth not therefore, that Antichriſt ſhall be any one only man, but one eſtate of kingdome of men, and a continuance of ſome one power and tyranny in the Church.

Dan. 7. Reuel. 13.

We read of Pharao a cruell tyrant, that he did perſecute the people of God in Ægypt. And of Nabuchadonoſor, that he oppreſſed them, and brought them captiues into Babylon. And of Antiochus, that he likewiſe fought againſt them, and did ouercome them, and led them captiues into Macedonia. They all were mighty and cruell tyrants: Yet one other ſhall come, whoſe cruelty ſhall be heauier, and whoſe continuance ſhall be longer then was the cruelty or continuance of any of theſe. Who ſhall worke his purpoſe, not in Ægypt nor in Babylon, nor in Macedonia; but in the holy place, euen in the Church of Chriſt, and in the houſe of God. And this ſtate, and continuance of perſecution in the Church, is the ſtate of Antichriſt.

But what ſhall be doe whereby hee may be knowen? Paul ſaith: Which is an aduerſary: This ſhall be the marke whereby you may know him, he ſhall ſet him ſelfe againſt God, and againſt Chriſt, for he is an enemy of the Croſſe of Chriſt. Why then (ſay you) are not the Iewes, and Mahomet, and the Turke, either all, or the moſt wicked of them, ſo called, ſeing they vtterly refuſe all Chriſtian Religion? Becauſe none of theſe ſit in the Temple of God; which is the place, where Antichriſt ſhall aduance himſelfe: and becauſe Antichriſt ſhall not in open ſhew ſet himſelfe againſt Chriſt as doth Mahomet, and the Turkes: but ſubtlely and craftily like an euill and vngratious ſeruant. He will not openly ſpeake his blaſphemies, or ſpit at the Goſpell of God, or defie the name of Chriſt: but hee wil call himſelf, The ſeruant of God: perhaps; The Vicar of Chriſt; and perhaps, The ſeruant of Gods ſeruants: or perhaps, The head, or the chiefe member of the Church He ſhall ſay, he is led with the zeale of Gods houſe, and ſhall doe nothing leſſe: for, hee ſhall ſeeke himſelfe. He ſhall ſay, he ſeeketh the glory of God, when all that he doth is for the enriching and ambitious inlarging of his owne worldly pompes and vanities.

In matters of Princes, if any man take vpon him the name of an Emballador, or deputie to a Prince, hauing no commiſſion thereto, and in this boldneſſe preſume to leuie and raiſe a power, and force the ſubiects to follow him: although hee worke all this vnder the name, and by the colour of the Princes authoritie (as is the maner of Rebels to do) yet hee is a Traitor, and his doings are not well thought of, becauſe he dealeth in the Princes matters without warrant from the Prince. Euen ſo Antichriſt, he ſhall come in the name of Chriſt, yet will he doe all things againſt Chriſt, and vnder pretence and colour of ſeruing Chriſt, hee ſhall deuoure the ſheepe and people of Chriſt: hee ſhall deface whatſoeuer Chriſt hath taught: hee ſhall quench that fire which Chriſt hath kindled: hee ſhall rot vp thoſe plants which Chriſt hath planted: hee ſhall vndermine that houſe which Chriſt hath built.

Hee ſhall be contrary to Chriſt: his faith contrary to the faith of Chriſt: and his life contrary to the life of Chriſt. Is any man deſirous to know Antichriſt? His comming ſhall be notable, it ſhall aſton the world. By this marke you may know him: Hee ſhall be contrary to Chriſt. To ſhew you at large this contrariety by compariſon of things contrary in Chriſt and Antichriſt, would aske long time. It ſhall be ſufficient, we conſider only ſome few wherein they are manifeſtly contrary, that by them, iudgement may be made of the reſidue.

Heb. 10. Saint Paul ſaith: With one offering hath he conſecrated for euer them that are ſanctified.
Ibid. And againe: We are ſanctified by the offering of the Bodie of Ieſus Chriſt once made. What is hee then that ſaith, I make Prieſts to offer a daily Sacrifice, for the ſinnes of the people: by whom the offering vp of the body of Chriſt is made euery day? He is contrary to Ephe. 1. Chriſt, he is Antichriſt. Saint Paul ſaith: God hath appointed Chriſt ouer all things to bee the head of the Church. What is he then, which ſaith: I am the head of the Church? which ſaith: All the Churches of God are knit in me: You muſt vnderſtand as I vnderſtand: you muſt heare with mine eares, and ſee with mine eies: I will gouerne, and direct you? He is Matth. 26. contrary to Chriſt: This is Antichriſt. Chriſt ordained that the Communion ſhould bee miniſtred vnder both kinds. What is hee then that deliuereth it to the people but vnder one kind? He is contrary to Chriſt. He breaketh the firſt inſtitution of the Lords Supper: He is Antichriſt.

Iohn 18. Chriſt ſaith: My kingdome is not of this world. What is hee then which ſaith: I am Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, I haue right to both ſwords: My power and authoritie reacheth ouer all the kingdomes of the world? Hee is contrary to Chriſt; hee is Antichriſt.
Iohn 13. Chriſt waſhed his diſciples feet. What is hee then, that giueth his feet to be kiſſed of Kings Matth. 17. and Emperors? He is contrary to Chriſt; he is Antichriſt. Chriſt paid tribute to Cæſar.
Mark. 10. What is he then, that exempteth himſelfe, and his Clergie from the temporall ſword and authoritie? He is contrary to Chriſt; he is Antichriſt. Chriſt allowed marriage, and reproued fornication. What is he then that alloweth fornication, and forbiddeth marriage?
Iohn 5. He is contrary to Chriſt; he is Antichriſt. Chriſt ſaith: Search the Scriptures. What is he then, which ſaith, Giue not that which is holy to dogs, neither caſt pearles before Swine: ye may not ſearch the Scriptures? He is contrary to Chriſt; he is Antichriſt. Theſe be the certaine and vndoubted markes of Antichriſt.

So that he doth ſit in the Temple of God. That is, he is bold and without force of any danger. He is not driuen to hide himſelfe in a corner: he is exalted in the eie, & in the heart of the world. He beareth rule in the conſcience of men. He hath the keies to open and ſhut at his pleaſure. He maketh Kings and Princes become his ſubiects. He ruleth them: not by ſword or ſpeare only, but by pretence of Religion: he telleth them, all things are put in ſubiection vnder his feet: that he is the Vicar of Chriſt: that his word muſt be taken as the word of God. So, he ſitteth in the Temple of God, as if he were God.

The godly Preachers ſit alſo in the Temple of God: they are the Miniſters of Chriſt, and diſpoſers of the ſecrets of God. There they expound the Scriptures, and ſhew the word and acceptable will of God. There they exhort, and teach, and reprooue, and correct, and inſtruct the people in righteouſneſſe. Antichriſt ſitteth not in the Church after this ſort. He teacheth not, nor exhorteth the people. He maketh that no part of his office. How ſitteth he then? What ſhall he ſay? What ſhall he doe? The Apoſtle telleth vs: He exalteth himſelfe againſt all that is called God, or that is worſhipped. He ſhall be honoured with the honour that is due vnto God. He ſhall ſhine and glitter in golde and precious ſtones. He ſhall be caried vpon the ſhoulders of men, and waited vpon by Kings, and Princes, and great Eſtates. So ſhall he be contrary to Chriſt.

Chriſt was humble and lowly. The Prophet in his owne perſon ſpeaketh of him: I am a worme, and not a man: a ſhame of men, and the contempt of the people. And the Apoſtle ſaith: He humbled himſelfe, and became obedient vnto the death, euen the death of the Croſſe. Behold his parents, his birth, his cradle: behold his life, his diſciples, his doctrine, and his death. All were witneſſes vnto his humilitie. He ſaith of himſelfe: The ſonne of man hath not whereon to reſt his head. And to his Diſciples he ſaith: The Kings of the Gentiles raigne ouer them, and they that beare rule ouer them are called gracious Lords: but you ſhall not be ſo. And againe: Learne of me, that I am meeke and lowly in heart: and yee ſhall finde reſt vnto your ſoules. Pſa.22. Phil. 2. Mat. 8. Luk. 22. Mat. 11.

Now on the other part take view of Antichriſt. Behold his birth, his place, his chaire, his eſtate, his doctrine, his diſciples, and all his life. You ſhall ſee nothing but pompe and glory. Gregory calleth him the king of pride. He is proud in life, proud in doctrine, proud in word, and proud in deedes. He is like vnto Lucifer, and ſetteth himſelfe before his brethren, and ouer nations and kingdomes. He maketh euery knee to bow downe to him and worſhip him: hee maketh Kings to bring him water, to carry his traine, to hold his cup, to beare his diſh, to lead his bridle, and to hold his ſtirrup: he claimeth power ouer heauen and earth: he ſaith, he is Lord ouer all the world, the Lord of Lords, and the King of Kings: that his authority reacheth vp into heauen, and downe into hell: that he can command the Angels of God: that he condemneth whom he will condemne: that he maketh Saints at his pleaſure: that, whatſoeuer he bleſſeth, is bleſſed: and that it is curſed whatſoeuer he curſeth.

He ſelleth merits, the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: the ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead. He maketh merchandize of the ſoules of men. He laieth his filthy hands vpon the Lords Anointed. He remoueth Kings, and depoſeth the States and Princes of the world. This is Antichriſt. This is his power. Thus ſhall he worke and make himſelfe manifeſt. So ſhall he ſit in the Temple of God. The people ſhall wonder at him, and ſhall haue him in reuerence: They ſhall ſay, Who is like vnto the beaſt? Who is ſo wiſe, ſo mighty, ſo godly, ſo vertuous, ſo holy, ſo like vnto God? So intolerable and monſtrous ſhall be his pride.

It were much for him to ſit in the ſeat and to occupy the rome of an earthly King or Emperour. But hee ſhall take vpon him the authoritie and the name of God, the name of the liuing Lord, the name of God which hath made Heauen and earth, euen the name of God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And in this pride he ſhall exceed all others that haue beene wicked. The Phariſeis and the Scribes were wicked; yet none of them did ſit in the Temple of God, ſhewing himſelfe that he was God. Arius, Neſtorius, Montanus, Valentinus, were wicked heretikes; yet they neuer toke vpon them the name of God. What ſhould I ſay of this blaſphemy? or in whom may we finde the like? Mahomet was a Turke, and a falſe Prophet, and a deceiuer of the people; yet hee toke not vpon him the name of God. This point and reach of vngodlineſſe belongeth only to Antichriſt. He ſhall ſit in the place of God in iudgements: hee ſhall ſhew himſelfe out of that place as if he were God. Irenæus ſaith: Quum ſit ſeruus, tamen adorari vult vt deus. Whereas he is but a ſeruant, he will be worſhipped as if he were God. Ireneus li. 5. cap. penultimo.

But ſome will ſay, Antichriſt ſhall be mortall as other men, borne of a mortall Father, and Mother: hee ſhall know, that he ſhall die: and that hee is but duſt, and ſhall returne againe into duſt: that he cannot make himſelfe, no that he cannot make the leaſt, and vileſt of all creatures. How then will he proclaime himſelfe to be an immortall God? How, will hee call himſelfe God that made heauen and earth? or, God which had no beginning, nor ſhall haue any end? No, this is not the meaning of theſe words. He ſhall not ſo thinke of himſelfe, nor ſo ſay. I will tell you after what ſort hee ſhall ſit in the Temple of God, and how the world ſhall receiue him, and reuerence him as God. He ſhall take to himſelfe that ſupreme authoritie, and prerogatiue, which appertaineth onely to GOD by nature. Although hee bee but a man, yet in office hee will be accounted as GOD. Hee ſhall compare his lawes, with the lawes of GOD. Hee ſhall ſay, his word is the word of GOD. Whatſoeuer hee ſaith, hee ſhall ſay, it is the voice of the ſpirit of GOD: of the ſame authoritie, that is the Goſpell of Chriſt: no man may breake it: no man may touch the credit thereof: if any man withstand it, he must thinke he doth sacrilege, committeth blasphemy, and sinneth against the holy Ghost. Againe, he shall breake the lawes of God to vphold his owne, and shall pull downe God to set vp himselfe. Such shall be the power and authoritie of Antichrist: so shall he possesse the consciences of the people: so shall he sit as an Idoll in their hearts: so shal he stand in the place of God, and shew himselfe that he is God. The people shall receiue his doctrine, and beleeue his word.

Reue. 13. They shall fall downe before him and worship him. They shall say, Who is like vnto the beast? What creature is so beautiful as he? They shal honor him as God. But what is he, which hath suffered himselfe to be so called? Who is he which hath bin called by the name of God? of all the creatures which haue professed the faith of Christ, of all the Kings, or Bishops, or Priests, or lay people that euer were in the Church of God, who euer required to be called by the holy name of God? or, who euer liked well of them which so called him? who hath beene so wicked? who hath euer so much forgotten himselfe? In what place hath he dwelt? Or what hath he beene?

Heere, mee thinketh I see the secret motions of your heart. You looke that I should name the Bishop of Rome, that it is he which hath suffered himselfe to be called by the name of God, I will not tell you in mine owne words. Vnlesse the Bishop himselfe so speake, I will not tell you. Marke then, and witnesse of my indifferencie, whilest I speake hereof, that I follow not affection, but deale vprightly. Therefore, I say againe, vnlesse the Bishop himselfe, suffer himselfe to be called by the name of God, I will not say of him so. Then let vs see what he hath written of himselfe, and what he hath suffered others to write. Pope Nicholas saith: Constat secundum pontificem a pio Principe Constantino Deum appellari. It is well knowne, that the Pope, of the godly Prince Constantine was called God. And therefore Pope Pius in his Bull saith: Nemo audeat obedire. No man dare obey her, or her will, or commandements, or lawes vpon paine of our curse.

Dist. 96. Satis euidenter.

Bulla Pij V. contra Eliza.

The Pope was well content to suffer Christopher Marcellus, one of his parasites in the Councell of Laterane, to say vnto him: Tu es alter Deus in terris. Thou art another God in earth. The Pope is content in such sort to haue a diuision of tenures made betweene him and God, as the Poet some time flatteringly wrote: Diuisum imperium cum Ione Cæsar habet. The Emperour parteth his rule, and holdeth halfe with Iupiter. In the extrauagants it is set downe. Dominus Deus noster Papa. Our Lord God the Pope. Marke these words. Our Lord God the Pope. In them the Pope is called Lord, and is called God. Oh mercifull Lord God, which from the heauens beholdest this vanitie, how great is thy mercie in suffering this? I deuise not this. His owne bookes, his owne doctors, his owne decrees and decretals speake it and set it downe. Credere dominum deum nostrum Papam non potuisse statuere, prout statuit, Hereticum censeretur. To beleeue that our Lord God the Pope might not decree, as he decreed, it were a matter of Heresie: it is so written there, he hath heard it, he hath seene it, he knoweth it is so, yet he suffereth it to goe a broad, and thereby suffereth himselfe to be called God.

In concilio Later. sess. 4.

Extrauag. Ioh. 22. cum inter. in Glossa.

Ibid.

He hath burnt many Saints of God, and holy men for no other cause, but for the profession of the Gospell. He hath in many places burnt the holy Bible, and such bookes as teach nothing but Godlinesse. Where did hee euer burne? what speake I of burning? where may it appeare that euer he controuled any for so writing, or called in such speeches?

One of them seemeth to take shame of this shamelesse and blasphemous stile or title. He seeketh friendly to temper, and qualifie, and take vp the matter. Nec Deus es, nec homo, quasi neuter es inter vtrumque: Thou art neither God nor man: in a maner thou art neither of both: but rather a meane betweene both. That is, thou art not so high as God, nor yet so base as man. Whom then shall wee imagine him to bee? Is hee an Archangell, or Angel, or a spirit of the aire? God giue him grace to see his own vanitie: that hee may know hee is but a miserable and mortall man: that hee may know that a time shall come when his hypocrisie and dissimulation shall bee disclosed. God giue him grace to become Godly: as becommeth the man of God. That hee may indeed bee the Minister of Christ, and a disposer of the secrets of God: That hee may serue GOD in truth, in holinesse and righteousnesse all the daies of his life. But you say, the Pope at this day is not called God. Hee rather abaseth himselfe, and writeth himselfe by a title of humilitie, and is called so: Seruus seruorum: The seruant of seruants. Bee it so, that hee is so called, and so written. Yet hee is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. This seruant saith, I doe make holy the vnholy: I do iustifie the wicked: I do forgiue sinnes: I open, and no man shutteth. This seruant can say, Whosoeuer obeieth not mee, he shall be rooted out. This seruant may dispence for any commandement of the old and new Testament. This seruant hath Christs lieutenantship not onely ouer things in Heauen, ouer things in Earth, and ouer things in Hell: but also ouer the Angels both good and bad. No man may iudge this seruant,

ſeruant. For they ſay: Papa ſolutus eſt omni lege humana. The Pope is exempted from all law of man. And againe: Nec totus clerus, nec totus mundus poteſt Papam iudicare aut deponere. Neither all the Clergy, nor all the whole world, may either iudge or depoſe the Pope. Such a power this ſeruant of ſeruants claimeth to himſelfe. What greater power may be giuen vnto God? What Angell, what Archangell euer had the like power? 9. Qne. 3. Cuncta. Pet. de palude de poteſt. Pp. Artic. 4.

And this power euen at this day Pope Pius challengeth as proper to his ſeat. That he hath the autority which is due to Chriſt, ouer his Church that no man may iudge him, nor ſay he doth erre, nor aſke why he doth ſo. He is inueſted in the priuiledge of his Church, and loſeth no one iot of his dignity. It is yet good at this day which hath bene ſet downe: Sacrilegij inſtar eſſet diſputare de facto Papæ: It is ſinne, as great as Sacriledge, or Church-robbing, to reaſon of any the Popes doings. Theſe be their owne words. God knoweth, before whom we ſtand this day, they be their owne words, and not mine. Thus doth hee ſit in the Temple of God, ſhewing himſelfe that he is God. Diſtinct. 40. Non nos: in gloſſ.

And therefore may we ſay, as ſometime ſaid Euſebius: Hoc eſt argumentum, eos odiſſe Deum, quòd velint ſeipſos appellari Deos: This is an euident token, that they hate God, becauſe they will haue themſelues called by the name of God. Or as Gregory, who ſpeaking of Antichriſt, ſaid: Cùm ſit damnatus homo, & nequaquàm ſpiritus, Deum ſe eſſe mentitur: Whereas he is a curſed man, and not a ſpirit, he faineth himſelfe, by lying, to be a God. Euſeb. de præparat. lib. 7. Greg. in Iob. lib. 25. ca. 14.

VERS. 5. Remember yee not, that when I was yet with you, I told you theſe things?

Before I departed from you to go farther, to plant the Goſpel in other Churches, I told you that Antichriſt ſhould come, & that he ſhould oppreſſe & confound the church of Chriſt. Paul was choſen to be an Apoſtle. The office of an Apoſtle was not to reſt in any one certain place, but to paſſe from country to country, from land to land, and to fill all the world with knowledge of the Goſpell: and therein appeareth the difference betwixt an Apoſtle and a Biſhop: A Biſhop had the charge of one certaine Church, an Apoſtle had the charge ouer all the Churches.

But Paul was not tied to any one Citie, or Iland, or Country. He had authority to Preach to all Cities and Countries: to all Lands and Ilands from the Eaſt to the Weſt. So did Chriſt appoint his Apoſtles: Go yee into all the world, and Preach the Goſpel vnto euery creature. Mark. 16. They were not ſent to Ieruſalem, nor to Samaria, nor to Epheſus, nor to Rome only: but into al the world. The whole world was their dioceſſe, and their prouince. So ſpeaketh the Prophet Dauid of them: Their ſound is gone forth thorow the earth: and their words into the ends of the world. Pſal. 19. This was the commiſſion which our Sauiour gaue vnto Iohn, and to Iames, to Paul, and to Peter, and to the reſt of the Apoſtles; that they ſhould goe into all the world. Therefore if any of the Apoſtles ſhould haue ſtaid in one only place, and haue gone no further, he had offended, and done otherwiſe than Chriſt commanded.

Here we ſee how foully they are deceiued, which ſay, Peter was Biſhop of Rome, and did ſit there fiue and twenty yeers. They that ſay ſo, know not what they ſay. It is an errour. Chriſt made Peter an Apoſtle, and not to ſit as a Biſhop at Rome. He ſaid vnto Peter, Goe into all the world; thou ſhalt be a witneſſe vnto me, vnto the vtmoſt coaſts of the earth: I ſend thee vnto all the Churches, and not to one alone. The like charge receiued Paul: he trauelled from Damaſcus to Arabia: from Arabia to Ieruſalem: from Ieruſalem to Illyricum: from Illyricum to Rome, and ſo from country to country, and from coaſt to coaſt, to make a pleaſant perfume of the Goſpell of God, in all the world, that it might be vnto them a ſauour of life vnto life. Therefore ſaith he to the Theſſalonians: Yee remember, that when I was with you, I told you theſe things. The ſpirit of God warned me to goe farther. Other Churches required my preſence: I was debter vnto them as vnto you. Yet before I left you, I told you what dangers ſhould inſue. It was mine office: I was bound ſo to doe, leſt you might be deceiued. I told you Antichriſt ſhould come, euen that man of ſin; the ſonne of perdition, which ſhould deſtroy himſelfe and others alſo. I told you he ſhould be an aduerſary of the Goſpel of Chriſt: that he ſhould aduance himſelfe ouer all the kings and powers of the world: that he ſhould ſit as God in the holy place: that the people ſhould giue him place to ſit in their hearts, and in their conſciences.

This warning the Apoſtle gaue to the Theſſalonians. The like warning hee gaue to other Churches where he taught the Goſpell: and the ſame is alſo ſpoken vnto vs. They knew by his teaching that Antichriſt ſhould come. We know by the marks which he hath giuen to know Antichriſt, that he is already come: and that, the very ſame is come, which the Apoſtle deſcribeth: that he is growen vnto his fulneſſe, and hath ſtalled himſelfe in the place of God.

VERS. 6. And now yee know what withholdeth, that he might be reuealed in his time.

Paul ſæmeth not in theſe wordes to ſay, what letteth the comming of Antichriſt: but what ſhall ſtay the comming of Chriſt. For ſo he maketh entry into his matter: I beſeech you, by the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, that yee be not troubled, as though the day of Chriſt were at hand. Let no man deceiue you by any means. For the day of Chriſt ſhall not come, except there come a departing firſt, and that Antichriſt be diſcloſed. Euen ſo here he ſaith, ye know what withholdeth Chriſt, and why he commeth not: Euen this, that Antichriſt might firſt be reuealed in his time. His time is appointed. The ſpring commeth not, vntill the winter haue gone before: the night goeth before, and then the day commeth. And ſo ſhal not the glorious maieſty of Chriſts comming appeare, before the dreadfull and dangerous daies of Antichriſt ſhall come. There ſhall be no deliuery, vnleſſe bondage goe before.

Antichriſt ſhall bring the world into bondage: he ſhall do violence to the ſaints of God: he ſhalbe as a continual ſtorme, and darknes in the church. The godly ſhal looke vp to heauen, and call for aid: they ſhall cry vnto the Lord, and he will hoare them. They ſhall ſay, O come Lord Ieſus, thy kingdome come, confound thine enemies. Then will he not ſtay: he will appeare, and ſhew himſelfe in glory. In the meane while this is the cauſe of his ſtay, this letteth his comming: Antichriſt muſt firſt come. This I take to be the Apoſtles meaning. It agreeth with the beginning. It is ſimple, cleare, & plain, & without danger of error.

Antichriſt ſhall appeare, not when he will: but he ſhalbe reuealed in his time. His time is the time of darkneſſe: when ſheapheards and the guides of the people ſhall be careleſſe: when the word ſhalbe loathed: when the light ſhalbe put out: when ſuperſtition ſhal raigne: when ignorance ſhal haue the vpper hand: when the creature ſhal not be knowne from the Creator: when there ſhalbe no feare of God, no regard of godlineſſe: when the people ſhall not know neither wherefore they pray, nor whom they worſhip, nor in whom they beleeue; then ſhall it appeare that Antichriſt is come, then he ſhall ſhew himſelfe: this is his time.

VERS. 7. For the myſtery of iniquity doth already worke, onely hee which now letteth, ſhall let till he be taken out of the way.

The myſtery of iniquity doth already worke. Let vs not be deceiued. Antichriſt ſhall certainely come, and ſhall draw many into errour. As it was with Chriſt at his comming; he was in the world, he did the workes of his Father, yet few knew him: So ſhall it bee with Antichriſt; he ſhall be in the world, hee ſhall worke his iniquitie, and few ſhall know him. Paul liued more than fiftæne hundred yeares paſt, yet then hee ſaid the myſtery of iniquity doth already worke. The diuel is not idle, ſaith he, Antichriſt euen now worketh, when as the blood of Chriſt was freſh: when as yet the Apoſtles, & many other witneſſes of our redemption by Chriſt, were liuing. And S. Iohn ſaith: Euen now are there many Antichriſts come already. So ſone was his foundation caſt, his plot laid, his way prepared, and his worke begun. So long ſithence did Paul ſæ ſome which delighted in the workes of darkneſſe: which were the enemies of the croſſe of Chriſt, which ſerued their bellie, and not the Lord: euen then did he ſæ, that græuous wolues, not ſparing the flock, ſhould enter in among them. All theſe were the forerunners, and the harbingers of Antichriſt.

1. Ioh. 2.

We may not thinke that Antichriſt ſhall come as a robber by the high waies, or like a murtherer, or like a tyrant that burneth our houſes, or ſacketh our Cities, or deſtroieth our fields, or pulleth downe all that is before him. We may not looke that he ſhould ſay, I am Antichriſt, I am that man of ſinne, I am the ſonne of perdition, I am the aduerſarie, and am contrary to Chriſt. Hee ſhall not ſhew forth himſelfe in ſuch a ſort, he ſhall not ſo ſpeake of himſelfe. He is ſubtle and cunning, he ſhall deceiue the learned and the wiſe: he ſhall caſt himſelfe into a colour of holineſſe: he ſhall faſt, he ſhall pray, he ſhall giue almes, and ſhew mercie: he ſhall walke as if he were a diſciple of Chriſt: hee ſhall counterfeit an Angell of light. He ſhall goe before, and the world ſhall follow him. So ſhall the myſterie of iniquitie worke. His life, his religion, his doctrine, ſhall be cloſe and hid, and ſecret. Antichriſt worketh in myſterie. Hierome ſaith: Ingemuit totus orbis, & Arianum ſe eſſe miratus eſt. The whole world mourned, and did marueil that they were poſſeſſed with the errour of Arius: that they denied the Diuinity of Chriſt before they were ware. This was a myſterie. So ſhall the learned and wiſe be deceiued. They ſhall honor Antichriſt vnwares. They ſhall ſay, We defie him, and deteſt him, and yet ſhall fall downe and worſhip him. This is a myſtery. So ſecret ſhall his dealing be, it ſhall not be knowne to many.

Hieron. dial. cont. Luciferian. cap. 7.

He ſhall walke in craftineſſe, and handle the word of God deceitfully: hee ſhall mingle his lies with the truth of God: hee ſhall mingle his poiſon with the holeſome food of our ſoules, ſoules, ſo cloſely and ſubtelly, that it ſhall hardly be eſpied: he ſhall goe forward by little and little, and ſo win credit, and conuey himſelfe into the hearts of the people. This is a myſtery. Chriſt ſaith: A man ſowed good ſeed in his field, but while men ſlept, there came his foe, and ſowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. They grew together, Mat. 13.

and had both one like colour. The houſeholder willed them to let both grow together till harueſt come, leſt with the tares, they plucke vp the wheat alſo. So ſhall be the comming of Antichriſt. He ſhall come whiles men ſlæp, in the night of blindneſſe, and of negligence, and of ignorance: and ſhall ſow his tares with the Lords wheat. They ſhall both grow vp together. The day of the Lord ſhall reueale them, and ſet each part by it ſelfe. This is a myſtery: and as it is ſecret, ſo it is long in working. This myſtery began in the daies of the Apoſtles, and continueth on ſtill vnto our time: It is ſtill in worke.

But who be they, which follow his lore: which yeld themſelues to him, and which ſhall be deceiued? Are they poore men, or Artificers, or labourers? Or are they vnlearned and ignorant men? No, no, he ſhall deceiue Prieſts, Biſhops, Archbiſhops, Princes, Kings, Emperors, the graueſt, the beſt learned, the wiſeſt, the mightieſt men in the world. He ſhall blinde their eies and amaze their hearts. They ſhall run to him out of all parts of the earth: they ſhall fall downe before him: they ſhall aſke counſell of him: they ſhall ſay, Thou art the Doctour of Doctours, thou art the Father of Fathers, thou art the comfort of the Church, thou art the light of the world, thou art moſt holy: all law, and all knowledge is hid in thy breaſt: we beſeech thy holineſſe, ſhew vs thy way, expound thou the law vnto vs, teach vs how we may be ſaued: thou haſt the key of knowledge, thy word is the word of truth. So ſhall they crepe to Antichriſt, ſo ſhall they powre out their ſoules before him, ſo ſhall they ſæke counſell at his mouth, ſo ſhall they fetch light at the Prince of darkeneſſe.

This myſtery, ſaith Saint Paul, doth already worke, it ſhall increaſe and go forward and grow to a perfection. A Thorne when it is yong is ſoft and gentle, yee may thruſt at it with your finger, it will not hurt you: but after, it waxeth and groweth hard and ſtubborne, it will pierce the fleſh and draw blod. A Beare when he is yong is harmeleſſe and innocent, yee may dandle it, and dally with it, as with a whelp, it hath no chambers to gripe, no teeth to bite, nor pawes to teare: but after, it will grow, and become fierce and cruell like the ſire. A Serpent when it is yong, is little and pretty; it hath no ſting, nor poiſon: you may take it in your hand and lay it in your lap, it will not hurt you. After, it will increaſe in venome, and grow in miſchiefe, and be like it ſelfe: then it will ſhake the ſting, and caſt poiſon, and proue dangerous.

Such a Thorne, ſuch a Beare, ſuch a Serpent is Antichriſt. At the firſt he ſhall ſeeme ſoft and gentle, and pretty and innocent. After, he ſhall grow fierce, and arme himſelfe with ſting and poiſon. But a Thorne though it be ſoft, is a Thorne: a Beare though he be little, is a Beare: a Serpent, though he be pretty, is a Serpent. Euen ſo Antichriſt, though he ſeeme gentle, milde, and ſimple, yet is he Antichriſt. He groweth by degrees, he will be like his ſire, his pawes will be dreadfull, his mouth will be deadly.

Whoſoeuer know the nature and working of an earthquake, how it groweth and how it worketh, know that at the firſt it is ſome little winde, gathered and kept in ſome hollow places of the earth: there it lieth cloſely ſometimes for many yeeres, without giuing forth any noiſe, without ſtirring or ſhaking. One may walke ouer it and perceiue nothing. After, it groweth ſtrong and violent, it ſeeketh a way out, it forceth it ſelfe, it gathereth ſtrength, and commeth abroad, it will ſtay no longer. But it breaketh, it teareth the earth, and renteth rockes, ouerthroweth mountaines, ſhaketh downe townes and Cities, ſwalloweth vp whole riuers: it inflameth the aire, raiſeth thunder, roareth vp into heauen, and aſtonieth the world. Such is the working of an earthquake: ſo great and mighty at the end, ſo little and ſimple at the firſt. Such ſhall be the myſtery and comming of Antichriſt. At the beginning he ſhall be like a little winde, he ſhal enter into the hollowneſſe and darkneſſe of the Church, but after he ſhall ſhake the whole world. He ſhall ſhew forth himſelfe at the firſt with countenance of deuotion and holineſſe, that he may cloſely and priuily and ſecretly wreath in himſelfe. Few ſhal be able to vnderſtand the myſtery of his dealing: After, he ſhall be opened, and appeare as he is.

Who would thinke there were any euill in forcing of virginity, chaſtity or ſingle life? He that is vnmarried, careth for the things of the Lord, how he may pleaſe the Lord, that he may be holy both in body, and alſo in ſpirit. Would God it were ſo with all, that haue taken the profeſſion of ſingle life. But the colour is faire. Hence hath it growen, that Biſhops, and Prieſts, and yong men, and maydens haue continued ſingle. This ſeemed ſtrange, and a miracle, and a matter of great holineſſe. But this is a myſtery: this is a way to bring in Antichriſt. Marke what S. Paul ſpeaketh hereof: They ſhal forbid to marry: 1. Tim. 4.

Of whom speaketh he? Of Antichrist, and his disciples. They shall forbid lawfull marriage, as vnholy, and as a state of life vnfit for their holinesse. Yet Christ Iesus the Sonne of God did neuer forbid it. His Apostles were married and had wiues.

This, saith S. Paul, is a marke of Antichrist, by this shall he be knowen. Forbidding of marriage is a doctrine of diuels: Not of Christ or of God, but of diuels. It is a gulfe, it is a sea, it is a world, it is a hell of iniquitie: and the vilest vilanie that euer crept into the Church of God. Hierome expounding the words of Daniel: He shall haue no regard to the desires of women, saith Facilior interpretatio est, de Antichristo, quod ideo simulet castitatem vt plurimos decipiat: The better exposition hereof is to apply these words to Antichrist, for that he shal pretend chastitie, that he may deceiue many. This is the mysterie of iniquitie. This is the practise of Antichrist. He shal come with a cloake of counterfeited chastitie, not with true chastitie, both in body, and also in spirit; but with counterfeit chastitie, and so shall deceiue the hearts of many.

Hieron. in 11. Daniel.

Who would thinke there were any euill in single communion? or why may not euery body follow his owne deuotion, and receiue the sacrament when he will? what harme is herein? It may seeme to be done for the reuerence vnto the Sacrament, lest it should grow in contempt, if it were vsed often. These reasons are faire and fresh; but this is a mysterie, and a practise of Antichrist. For by this meanes haue they shut out the faithfull people of God, and made them negligent and careless for the receiuing of the Lords supper: they abused the Church of the liuing God: they turned the remembrance of the death of Christ into a Maygame: they made the people commit horrible and open idolatrie, to worship the creature in stead of the Creator, which is God blessed for euer.

Who would thinke there were any euill in the keyes of the Church? they are the expounding of the law, and the disclosing of the will of God. They are the chiefest comfort of our conscience. But Antichrist shall take these keies vnto himselfe, and shall build vp his owne kingdome with them. He shall shut that God hath opened. And shall open that God hath shut. This is also the mysterie of iniquitie.

Who would thinke there were any euill in godly prayers of the Church? Christ saith: Watch and pray, for you know not in what houre your master will come. And againe: Pray thou to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth thee in secret shall reward thee openly. And againe: Aske, and ye shall receiue: seeke, and ye shall find: knocke, and it shall be opened vnto you. Saint Paul saith: Pray without ceasing. The Prophet Dauid saith: The Lord is nigh vnto all them that call vpon him, to all that call vpon him faithfully. For the Lord will heare the prayers of his Saints, and deliuer them when they call vpon him. These prayers shall Antichrist take to worke his iniquitie: and vnder pretence of them shal deuour widdowes houses: and shall make a net of them to fish and drag for al the riches of the world. This is also the mysterie of iniquitie.

Matt. 24. Matt. 6. Matt. 7. 1. Thess. 5. Psal. 145.

Who would thinke there were so great euill in the doctrine of Purgatorie? What if one thought that his father or friend died in some veniall sinne, and were chastised somewhile in Purgatorie fire, and that he might be released by prayers? for this idlly pretence and imagination haue they theref. What if one should so think? what hurt were it? Brethren, this is the mysterie of all mysteries, and the secret of al secrets. In this standeth the countenance, and all the welfare of Antichrist. He hath imparied the whole kingdome of Purgatorie to himselfe, and hath made it more gainefull than heauen and earth. There he selleth prayers: there he maketh port sale of Buls and pardons: there he selleth forgiuenesse of sinnes: à culpa & pœna. He selleth the merits of God, the blood of the martyrs, the workes of supererogation, the merits of his fratries, the blood of Christ. There he selleth paradise, deliuerance or assurance from hell, and entrance into heauen, he maketh merchandise, of the soules of the people. This is the alonely mysterie aboue all other mysteries.

Who would thinke there were an euill in the name of the Church? it is the witnesse-bearer vnto the Gospell. It is the pillar of truth. It is the spouse of Christ. Yet saith Christ; Antichrist shall come in my name. He shall seeme holy, he shall talke of the Gospel, he shall carrie the face of the Church, and deceiue many. This is a mysterie.

Who would think it a matter of so great inconuenience, for a man to call the Bishop of Rome the greatest Bishop, or the chiefest Patriarck, and the highest Iudge: and to say that all appeales lie vnto him? What hurt may this be? it seemeth a small matter, a matter of nothing. But it is a practise, it is a secret, and a mysterie. Hence flowed all the streames of vanitie and presumption wherein he aduanceth himselfe. Hence it is, that he saith, I am aboue Kings and Emperours. I am aboue generall Counsels. I am aboue the whole Church of Christ. I am aboue the Angels of God. I haue power to command and to Countermand them at my pleasure. I am the successor of Peter. I am the Vicar of Christ.

No

No man may iudge me whatſoeuer I do. I cannot erre. General Councels might erre, the Apoſtles might erre: the Angels of God might erre: but I cannot erre. I haue the fulneſſe of power. The whole world is my dioceſſe. Whoſoeuer is ſaued, is vnder me. Whoſoeuer is not vnder me is curſed of God. I am the light of the world. I can in a maner doe whatſoeuer God can doe. All theſe ſpeaches are written, are printed, are publiſhed, and proclaimed abroad. This is a myſtery of iniquitie, this is a deepe ſecret. Theſe are the verie waies and ſteps of Antichriſt. God giue vs eies to ſee them, and hearts that we may diſcerne them.

Paul did ſee the myſtery working euen in that time he liued. Iohn ſaith: Diotrephes loueth to haue the prehemmence: Exalt vp himſelfe aboue his brethren, to be the head of the Church, and to beare a maſtery. So Paul eſpied contentions in Corinth: Euery one of you ſaith, I am Pauls, and I am Apollos, and I am Cephas, and I am Chriſts. Theſe were the beginnings of Antichriſt. But Paul ſaith: We preach not our ſelues, But Chriſt Ieſus the Lord, and our ſelues your ſeruants for Ieſus ſake. So the true Diſciples of Chriſt reckon not themſelues any thing, but the members one of another; but the miniſters by whom the people beleeue, but witneſſes choſen before of God, but ſuch as are commanded to preach, but Gods labourers. Epi. 3. Ioh. 1. Cor. 2. 2. Cor. 4.

Now let vs conſider theſe markes of Antichriſt. Was there euer any, which hath forbidden lawfull marriage? and accounted it a ſtate of life which is vncleane, and not meete for his holineſſe: and deceiued the world with counterfet chaſtitie: the ſame is Antichriſt. For Hierome telleth vs, Antichriſt ſhall pretend chaſtity, that he may deceiue many: and Paul calleth forbidding of marriage, the doctrine of diuels.

Was there euer any which hath ſhut forth the faithfull from the holy Communion, and hath made them careleſſe for the receiuing thereof: which hath defaced the Sacrament, abuſed the Church of God, and cauſed the people to giue the honor of God vnto a creature? This is the working of the myſtery of iniquitie: he is Antichriſt.

Was there euer any which toke the keies of the kingdome of heauen, and wrought to himſelfe therewith a principality or kingdome in earth: was there euer any which hath ſhut them out from the kingdome of God, to whom God hath opened it, and hath ſet free the conſciences of thoſe ſinners whom God hath not loſed? He is Antichriſt.

Was there euer any which beguiled the people, which deuoured widowes houſes vnder colour of long prayers, and hath vſed them as a net to fiſh for the treaſures and riches of all the world? He is Antichriſt.

Was there euer any which ſold Buls, and pardons, and forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and the merries of God, and the merits of men, and the blood of the martyrs, and the paſſion of Chriſt the Son of God? Was there euer any that ſold Paradiſe, and Heauen, and made ſale of the ſoules of the people, and all for money? The ſame is Antichriſt.

Was there euer any which came in the name of Chriſt, with the ſhew of holineſſe, with the countenance of the Church, and hath ſhewed himſelfe in all his life and doctrine contrary to Chriſt? He is Antichriſt?

Was there euer any which hath ſaid, I am aboue Kings and Emperors, and the States of the world: I am aboue Councels, I am aboue the whole Church of Chriſt, and aboue the Angels of God: No man may iudge me: I cannot erre: Whoſoeuer ſhall be ſaued muſt be vnder me: If any ſhall not obey me, they are curſed before God: God and I haue one iudgement ſeat, we ſit together, I can doe whatſoeuer God can doe? He that thus ſaith is Antichriſt. The myſterie of iniquitie doth worke alreadie, ſaith the Apoſtle. He ſhall not open himſelfe. Whatſoeuer he doth, he doth it in ſecret. So ſhall he aduance himſelfe: ſo ſhall he ſpeake great things and blaſphemies againſt the higheſt; ſo ſhall he prenaile and proſper: ſo ſhall he darken the heauens, and draw the third part of the Starrs after him: ſo ſhall he ſit in the holy place, euen in the ſeat of God and all this ſhall he worke vnder pretence of humilitie, and ſhall call himſelfe the ſeruant of ſeruants.

Onely he which now withholdeth, ſhall let till he be taken out of the way.

Now the Emperor holdeth the whole power and authoritie ouer the world: but it ſhall be taken away from him, and then ſhall Antichriſt come, when all ſtops and lets ſhal be remoued. Who is he that doth ſtop him and let his comming? The Emperor of Rome. So ſaith Tertullian, ſo Auguſtine, Ambroſe, and Chryſoſtome. Antichriſt ſhall poſſeſſe a great part of the Romane Empire: yet ſo long as the Emperor ſhal ſtand and proſper, he wil not ſuffer any part of his Empire to be abated. So long as the Emperor ſhall be able to beare himſelfe, Antichriſt ſhall neuer be able to grow. But a time ſhall come when the Empire of Rome ſhall be rent aſunder, then the authoritie of the Emperor ſhall decay, then Antichriſt ſhall gather ſtrength, and ſhall place himſelfe where the Emperor was: A traitor can not vſurpe the Crowne ſo long as the right king is able to ſtand and maintaine his ſtate, Antichrist is a traitor. A traitor both to God and man. When the Empero⁊ shall fall and decay, then he shall rise vp. When the Empero⁊ becommeth weake, then he shall grow strong. Therefore Paul saith, Antichrist shall not come yet, for the Empero⁊ letteth him. The Empero⁊ shall be removed, and then shall Antichrist come.

But before I proceed to say more of this division of the Empire; that we may come to the bottome of this matter, and so see the meaning of this prophecie euidently laid open before vs, I will shew more plainly, and particularly of Antichrist, who he shall be. It is a hard and doubtfull thing, as are all prophecies; but marke well, that shall be spoken. I will speake nothing without good warrant and authority of the old writers and fathers. I will tell you the conditions of Antichrist, and where he shall dwell: that knowen, it shall be no hard matter to know the rest.

Who shall he be then, or of what condition, that we may know him? Some haue said, he should be a Iew of the tribe of Dan: some, that Nero the bloody tyrant should rise againe and he should be Antichrist: some, that he should be a mighty persecuto⁊, which should rage and range ouer the whole wo⁊ld, race Towers and Castles, set on fire the church and Oratories, and kill whomsoeuer he meeteth. Hippolytus saith, he shall be begotten by the Diuell, and himselfe shall be a diuell. These deuices were imagined and written many hundred yeares sithence, as euery body were best able to deuise. But these are fables, and haue no ground. To say the truth, Antichrist shall neither be a Iew, no⁊ Nero, no⁊ one begotten by the Diuell. He shall be a Christian, he shall be a Bishop, and a holy Father, and a Bishop of great shew and countenance in the wo⁊ld. Marke, he shall not be a King, no⁊ an Empero⁊, no⁊ a tyrant, no⁊ a tempo⁊all Prince, but a Bishop.

But how may this be known, that we may be certaine of it? For you will charge my sayings with partiality, as if what should be spoken by me, might proceed of displeasure and malice. Who then hath so spoken or written, that we may beleeue him? Heare Gregory himselfe a Bishop of Rome, what he recorded of this matter well nigh a thousand yeares agoe. Rex superbiæ propè est, & quòd dici nefas est, sacerdotum est præparatus exercitus: The King of pride (that is, Antichrist) is euen at hand, and an armie of Priests is prepared: which is a wicked, or horrible thing to be spoken. Loe, both the King, which is Antichrist: and his gard to wait vpon him, a company of Priests and Clerkes, of Monks and Friers to attend vpon him. And vpon whom shall an armie of Priests attend, but vpon a Bishop.

Greg. lib. 4. Epist. 38.

If you say, this is no plaine proofe, but forced, and wrested, because he nameth not a Bishop but a King of pride: heare him againe: Fidenter dico, quòd quisquis se vniuersalem sacerdotem vocat, vel vocari desiderat, in elatione sua Antichristum præcurrit: I speake it boldly, whosoeuer either calleth himselfe the vniuersall Priest, or desireth so to bee called (as doth the Pope) in the pride of his heart hee is the forerunner of Antichrist. In this place, he doth not only tell vs, Antichrist shall be a Bishop, but also what maner of Bishop. He shall be a Bishop, and that Bishop, which shall claime vniuersal authority. Such a Bishop as shall say: It is of the necessitie of saluation, that euery soule be subiect to me. Which shall say, it is plaine, that the Church is one, because in the vniuersall Church, there is one supreme head, that is, the Pope.

Greg. lib. 6. Epist. 30.

Sibylla saith, this king, shalbe πλιοκεφαλος that is, shal haue a white head: and shall be called by a name much like to Pontus. In which two marks of his head and name, whom can we find but a Bishop? who weareth solemnly a white miter of silver, and adorned with pretious stones, and in Latine is named pontifex. Againe, Ioachimus Abbas saith, he shall exalt him selfe aboue all that is called God: for he only shall be called holy Lord, and most holy Pope. So that for our direction, we heare not only of a King of pride, and his gard of Priests: but we are learned, that this king shall haue a white head, and a name much like pontius; that is, shall be pontifex, a Bishop. Gregory moreouer hath said, he shall call himselfe, or desire to be called, an vniuersall priest: and Ioachimus an Abbat hath told vs Antichrist shall be called, holy Lord, and most holy Pope.

Oraculorum cap. 8.

But where shall Antichrist be resident? In what place shall we seeke him? for, if we looke for him in one place, and he be in another, we shall not finde him. Where then is he stalled, in what City? in what Church? Som say in Babylon, som in Syria, som in Chaldea, some in Ierusalem vpon mount Sion, some in one place, som in another. These are but guesses, and beare no waight. Paul telleth vs, he shal creepe into the Empire of Rome. So saith the Apostle, and so the fathers. The Empire shall be made waste, and then Antichrist shall come, and inuade the Church. But the Empire was great and wide, it reached ouer a great part of the wo⁊ld. It did containe England, France, Spaine, Germanie, Poland, Denmarke, Italie, Illyricum, Macedonia, Thracia, Græcia, Asia, Armenia, Ægypt, Mauritania, and the rest of Africa. All these were parts of the Empire of Rome. In what part, or in what City, or in what Church of all theſe ſhall he ſit? S. Iohn ſaith: The ſeuen heads, are ſeuen mountaines, on which the woman ſitteth. Antichriſt ſhall ſit in a Citie built vpon ſeuen hilles. Where ſhall we find ſuch a Citie in the whole world? Is it Hieruſalem, or Athens, or Conſtantinople, or Antioch? Where we find a City ſo built, that City is the place of Antichriſt. There is none but one. The ſpirit of God cannot lie. But which is that one? All writers, as well olde as new, call that City, Rome. Rome is built vpon ſeuen hils. They be yet ſtanding. The names of the hils are knowne to be theſe; Palatinus, Quirinalis, Auentinus, Cœlius, Viminalis, Exquilius, Ianicularis. The Poet ſpeaking of this City, ſaith: Septemq; vna ſibimuro circundedit arces: And this one City hath compaſſed in to it ſelfe with a wall ſeuen high places. Therefore Plutarch calleth it ἑπτάλοφον, of ſeuen hils. They haue vſed in Rome, in their generall proceſſions in gang weeke to goe to theſe ſeuen hils, and to doe ſome ſolemne peece of ſeruice at euery of them. Rome is the City of ſeuen heads. Rome is the City built vpon ſeuen hils: therefore the City which Iohn deſcribeth: and therefore it is the Tabernacle, and ſtall in which Antichriſt ſhall ſit. Reuel. 17.

Sibylla wrote two thouſand yeares ſithence, That the greateſt terror and fury of his Empire, and the greateſt woe that he ſhall worke, ſhall be by the banks of Tyber. And who is there that hath heard any thing of the ſituation of Rome, that doth not know it is built on the banks of Tyber? Irenæus, who liued well neere fiftéene hundred yeares agoe, ſaith, the name of Antichriſt, expreſſed by that number, ſhall be Latinus, that is, he ſhall ſit in a City called Latium, that is, Rome. Ioachimus Abbas ſaith: Antichriſtus iampridam natus eſt Romæ, & altius extolletur in ſede Apoſtolica: Antichriſt is long ſince borne in Rome, and yet ſhall be aduanced higher in the Apoſtolike ſee. Bernard ſaith: Beſtia illa de Apocalypſi cui datum eſt os loquens blaſphemias, & bellum gerere cum ſanctis, Petri cathedram occupat, tanquam Leo paratus ad prædam: The beaſt that is ſpoken of in the booke of Reuelations, vnto which beaſt is giuen a mouth to ſpeake blaſphemies, and to keepe warre againſt the ſaints of God, is now gotten into Peters chaire, as a Lion prepared to his prey. Theſe words are cleere as the Sunne beames. Syb. oracul. cap. 8. Iren. lib. 5. cap. vltimo. Bern. Epiſt. 125.

Saint Iohn ſaith: Antichriſt ſhall ſit in a Citie built vpon ſeuen hils. That Citie is the City of Rome. Dame Sibylla ſaith: His greateſt worke ſhall bee by the banks of Tyber. That City ſo built, is the City of Rome. Irenæus ſaith, the name of Antichriſt ſhall be Latinus: this name belongeth to the Biſhop of Rome. Bernard ſaith: The beaſt that is ſpoken of in the Reuelation, is gotten into Peters chaire. Iohn liued 1560. yeares ſince: Sibylla 2000. Irenæus about 1500. Ioachimus Abbas 300. Bernard liued about foure hundred yeares ſithence: and by the teſtimonie of all theſe, Antichriſt ſhall be a Biſhop, and placed at Rome.

You marueil at this, how it ſhould be poſſible that Antichriſt ſhould ſit in Peters chaire: you heare who hath ſaid it: and no wonder at all; for he ſhall ſit in the place of God, in the holy place, in the Church of Chriſt. So doth Auguſtine gather vpon the Apoſtles words: Non enim templum alicuius idoli, aut dæmonis, templum Dei Apoſtolus diceret: For the temple of an Idoll, or of a Diuell, the Apoſtle would neuer call the temple of God. And Hierome ſaith: Antichriſtus ſedebit in templo Dei, vel Hieroſolymis (vt quidam putant) vel in Eccleſia (vt verius arbitramur) oſtendens ſe tanquam ipſe ſit Chriſtus & filius Dei: Antichriſt ſhall ſit in the Temple of God, either at Hieruſalem (as ſome imagine) or in the Church (as we more truly think) ſhewing himſelfe as if he were Chriſt, and the ſonne of God. Againe he ſaith of him: Antichriſt ſhall tread vnder his feet all approoued and true religion. And S. Hilarie ſaith: Annè ambiguum eſt, Antichriſtum in iis eſſe ſeſſurum? Is there any doubt but Antichriſt ſhall ſit in the ſame houſes? He ſhall ſit in thoſe houſes and buildings, with which you are in loue, and which you honour. And againe he ſaith: Sub ſpecie Euangelicæ prædicationis, Chriſto contrarius erit: vt dominus noſter Ieſus Chriſtus denegetur, quum prædicari creditur: He ſhall be contrary to Chriſt, vnder the colour of preaching the Goſpell: ſo that our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ſhal then be denied, when a man would thinke he is preached. Thus we haue ſéene who ſhall be Antichriſt, and in what Church he ſhall be: that hee ſhall be a Biſhop, and ſhall bee ſtalled or placed in Rome. Decinit. Dei lib. 20. ca. 19. Ad Algaſiam. Hieron. Quæſt. 11. Ibid. Hil. contra Auxentium. Ibid.

Now to returne againe to the words of the Apoſtle: Only he which now letteth, ſhall let till he be taken away.

Now the Emperor hath the rule ouer the world. Let him kéepe it. There ſhall a time come when he ſhall loſe his poſſeſſions: then Antichriſt ſhall appeare. When the Empire ſhall be diſmembred, and the kingdomes belonging to him ſhall depart from him, then ſhall be the comming of Antichriſt. Who will looke into the ſtory of things and times paſt, ſhall perceiue the meaning of the Apoſtle: and how the Empire of Rome, being ſo great, is conſumed and brought to nothing: and in what ſort Antichriſt, which was once ſo poore, and ſimple, ſo little regarded and obſcure, might grow to bee ſo great, and aduance himſelfe abone Kings and Princes. The impouerithing of the one was the enrichyng of the other.

I told you that the Empire of Rome contained ſometimes a great part of the world, as England, France, Spaine, Germanie, &c. Where is England now? It is diuided from, and is no part of the Empire. Where is France, Spaine, Italie, Illyricum? Where is Rome it ſelfe? They are taken away from it, and are now no part of the Empire. Where is Macedonia, Thracia, Græcia, Aſia, Armenia, &c. We cannot thinke of them but with heauines. They bee now vnder the Turke: they are taken away, and are no part of the Empire. What is become of the great countenance which the Emperor had in all the world? He is now in compariſon no body. What part of all the Empire is left vnto him? Not one. He hath not left him one City, or towne. What is become of al which did belong to him? They are diſſolued, taken from him, and his eſtate is brought to nothing.

In the meane while Antichriſt increaſed, and grew to wealth by ſpoile of the Empire. The Biſhop of Rome hath at this day many Countries and Lordſhips. Poore Peter had none. How then came he by them? By the ſpoile of the Empire. He hath the title of Forum Iulium. Where hath he it, but of the ſpoile of the Empire? Where hath he ſo many Countries, beginning at Luke and onward to the Alps, but by the ſpoile of the Empire? He hath Rauenna, Forum Sempronij, Beneuentum and Spoletum. All theſe he hath by the ſpoile of the Empire. He claimeth the kingdome of Naples and of Sicile, he is the Lord Paramount. King Philip is his vaſſall, and paieth him tribute. He hath Rome it ſelfe. It did belong vnto the Emperor. How grew it to the Biſhop? whence hath he it? by the ſpoile of the Empire. We ſee then, that the Emperor is abated: that the Biſhop is increaſed, and ſo increaſed, that he hath made the Emperor to be his man, to beare his traine, to wait vpon him, to knele downe, and to kiſſe his fot. This could he neuer bring to paſſe, whiles the Empire ſtood whole, and the Emperor was able to make his part good. But theſe things were done
Reue. 17. that it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken: The kings of the earth ſhall giue their ſtrength and power to the beaſt, &c. That they may agree together, and giue their kingdome vnto the beaſt, vntill the words of God be fulfilled. Who that beaſt ſhall be, Auguſtine writing vpon the Pſalmes very well declareth: Ita traditur de Antichriſto, quòd omnes reges ſuperaturus ſit, & ſolus regnum obtenturus: Thus it is written of Antichriſt, that he ſhall conquer all
Aug. in Pſa. 9. kings, and obtaine the kingdome himſelfe alone. And who it is vnto whom the kings of the earth haue giuen their kingdome, and which doth obtaine the kingdome himſelfe alone, if any man doubt, let him be aduiſed by this ſaying of them, which knew it well, and were Iohan. de Pariſ. de poteſtat. regia. ca. 22. not enemies to the Biſhoprick of Rome. Iohan. de pariſijs ſaith: Some thinke that by reaſon of this donation (of Conſtantine) the Pope is the Emperor, and the Lord of the world: and that hereby he hath power both to ſet vp: and alſo to put downe kings, as an Emperor. And if this be too little, to ſay thus vpon heare ſay, the ſame ſaith further plainly: Omnis poteſtas ſæcularis immediatè data eſt Papæ: All maner temporall power was giuen immediatlie vnto the Pope. What other thing is it that Innocentius ſaith? The Emperor holdeth his Empire of the Pope: and therfore he is bound to ſweare homage and fealtie to the Pope, as the vaſſal is bound to his Lord. In this right Pope Adrian ſaid: Behold, it is in our hand to beſtow the Empire vpon whom we liſt. Were not the ſtate of the Empire now decaied: were not the prophecie of the Apoſtle now fulfilled: were not the Emperor (howſoeuer he haue in a miſterie a bare name left) taken away, as well in reſpect of the Countries which hee did hold, as of the authoritie, the rule, and power which hee had ouer the world; theſe proud ſpeeches could neuer haue beene ſuffered.

Now then ſeing the Empire is ſo decaied, and abaſed, and the Biſhop of Rome ſo highly aduanced into his ſeat and authoritie (ſo highly I ſay) that ſome are bold to ſay: The Pope hath the Princehood of all the whole world: and; The Pope is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords: Let Gregorie, who hath otherwhere giuen great light to this prophecie, ſhew vs
Greg. lib. 33. ca. 22. in Iob. heere by alſo to know who is Antichriſt. He ſaith: Antichriſtus veniens, ipſas etiam ſummas huius ſæculi poteſtates obtinebit: Antichriſt when he ſhall come, ſhall conquer the higheſt eſtates and powers of this world.

Dan. 7. This whole matter is alſo expreſſed in the ſeuenth of Daniel: The fourth beaſt was fearful, and terrible, and very ſtrong: it had great iron teeth: it deuoured and brake in peeces, and ſtamped the reſidue vnder his fet: and it was vnlike to the beaſts that were before it: for it had ten hornes. And behold, there came vp among them another little horne, which had eies like a man, and a mouth ſpeaking preſumptuous things. This beaſt is the Empire of Rome, the greateſt Empire that euer was. It was diuided into ten, or, into ſundry kingdomes, as I ſhewed you, and as we ſee this day. The little horne is Antichriſt. The Empire ſhall be diuided and weakned, then Antichriſt ſhal come. He ſhal ſpeake words againſt
Dan. 7. the moſt high, and ſhal conſume the Saints of the moſt high, and thinke that he may change times and lawes, and they ſhall be giuen into his hand. Daniel, ſaith he, ſhall ſpeake words

againſt the moſt high, and ſhall thinke he may change times and lawes, and they ſhall bee giuen into his hand. Wherein hee ſheweth not onely the pride and preſumption of Antichriſt, but that he ſhall alſo preuaile for a time. Such a one there hath been, and yet is. Hee blaſphemeth God, murdereth the ſaints, hath changed times and lawes, the Lawes of God, and the Lawes of nature. He is Antichriſt.

To make an end of this part for knowledge of Antichriſt, who he ſhall be, in what place he ſhall dwell, and of that which ſhould let his comming: let vs remember hee ſhall be no Iew nor heathen, but a Chriſtian, and no King or temporall wight, but a Biſhop, an vniuerſall Prieſt, and moſt holy Pope. As Hierome vpon the words of the Prophet, O Paſtor & Idolum, &c. O Idoll ſhepheard, that, &c. ſaith: Paſtor ſtultus & imperitus haud dubitem quin ſit Antichriſtus, qui in conſummatione mundi dicitur eſſe venturus: I doubt nothing but that this fooliſh and vnskilfull ſhepheard is Antichriſt, which ſhould come towards the end of the world. Hieron. in 11. Sachar. And further ſaith: Tam ſceleratus eſt paſtor vt non Idolorum cultor, ſed ipſe Idolum nominetur: dum ſe appellat deum & vult ab omnibus adorari: This ſhepheard is ſo wicked that he is not called a worſhipper of Idols, but an Idoll it ſelfe: becauſe hee calleth himſelfe God, and will be worſhipped of all men. Ibid.

Let vs remember we may not ſeeke him in the ſtreets, or in market places, or in woods, or in the wilderneſſe: but in the temple of God. There ſhall he ſit, and hold the ſterne, and deuiſe Lawes and Cannons: and ſhall rule the hearts and conſciences of the people: there ſhall he ſhew his power, and put on him the cloake of ſimplicitie, and of truth, and of holineſſe.

S. Auguſtine ſaith, Antichriſt ſhall not only ſit in the Church of God, but alſo ſhall ſhew himſelfe in outward appearance, as if he himſelfe were the Church it ſelfe. Non in templo Dei, ſed in templum Dei ſedeat, tanquam ipſe ſit templum Dei, quod eſt Eccleſia: Not, that he ſitteth in the Temple of God, but he ſitteth as the Temple of God, as if hee himſelfe were the Temple of God, which is the Church. De Ciuit. dei li. 20. ca. 19. Let vs remember what ſhall let his comming, euen the ſafety of the Emperor, and his continuance in that full power and eſtate wherein hee then was. The decay of the Empire ſhall make way for Antichriſt. If therefore it bee weakned, and hath been weakned any time ſithence, if the kingdomes of the world be diuided from it, that is an euident token that the comming of Antichriſt is not ſtopped, but he hath come and ſhewed himſelfe, and by little and little euer ſince ſuch decay of the Empire, hath inlarged himſelfe & eſtabliſhed his power ouer all Countries and nations, as Chryſoſtome ſaith: Donec illius Imperij timor fuerit, &c. As long as the Empire ſhall be had in awe, no man ſhall ſtraightway ſubmit himſelfe to Antichriſt: but after that the Empire ſhall be diſſolued, Antichriſt ſhall inuade the ſtate of the Empire ſtanding void: and ſhall labour to pull vnto himſelfe the Empire both of man and God. Chryſo. hom. 4. in 2. Theſſ. 2.

VERS. 8. And then ſhall that wicked man be vttered, whom the Lord ſhall conſume with the ſpirit of his mouth, and ſhall deſtroy him with the appearance of his comming.

Antichriſt ſhall be opened by little and little. All his deuiſes and practiſes ſhall be diſcloſed: that they may appeare and be ſeene of the world. Hee is in this place called ὁ ἄνομος, a man without order. This is another peculiar note of Antichriſt. He ſhal ſeeke to be free, and goe at libertie: he ſhall be tied to no law, neither of God, nor of man. Let vs once againe looke into the ſtate of the Church of Rome to ſeeke out this lawleſſe man. There he ſitteth that ſaith, I cannot erre. Why is it ſaid, Papa ſolutus eſt omni lege humana? The Pope is exempted from all law of man? And againe: why muſt we expound any fact of the holy father for the beſt? and, if it be theft, or any other thing, that of it ſelfe is euill (as adulterie or fornication) we muſt thinke it is done by the ſecret inſpiration of God. Againe, why ſay they the doings of the Pope are excuſed, as Sampſons murthers: as the Iewes robberies: and as the adulteries of Iacob. And againe: why ſay they? Neither all the Clergie, nor all the whole world may either iudge or depoſe the Pope? but becauſe he is lawleſſe. Extra. de conſtit. licet. 9. qu. 3. cunct. Io. de pariſijs, de pot. reg. & papali. Diſt. 40. non nos: in gloſſa. Pet. de Palude de pot. Pp. Art. 4.

Why is it ſaid: In ijs quæ vult, eſt ei pro ratione voluntas, nec eſt qui dicat illi, domine cur ita facis? In ſuch things as he willeth, his will ſtandeth in ſtead of reaſon, neither may any man ſay vnto him, O ſir, why doe ye this? but, becauſe he is lawleſſe. Why is it ſaid of him, although all the world would iudge in any matter againſt the Pope, yet it ſeemeth we ought to ſtand to the iudgement of the Pope. For he ſeemeth to haue all lawes in the cheſt of his boſome, but becauſe hee is ὁ ἄνομος, that lawleſſe man? Why is it, notwithſtanding the Pope draw innumerable companies of people by heaps with him into hell, that yet no mortall man may once dare reprooue him, but becauſe he is that lawleſſe man? Extra. de tranſlat. Epiſc. quanto in gloſſ. Diſtinct. 40. ſi Papa. in gloſſa. Ibid. De tranſl. Epiſc. ca. quanto gloſſa. tit. 7.

Why is it ſaid: Papa etiam rerum naturam immutat, ſubſtantialia alicuius rei applicando alteri & de nihilo poteſt facere aliquid, & ſententiam quæ nulla eſt aliquam facere. Ille enim poteſt ſupra ius diſpenſare, & de iniuſtitia facere inſtitiam, corrigendo iura & mutando: The Pope may alſo change the very nature of things, in applying the ſubſtantiall parts of one thing to another: and of nothing can make ſomething: and of no ſentence, may make a ſentence: for he may diſpenſe aboue the law, and of wrong may make right, by correcting and changing the lawes. One Zabarella ſaith, they perſwaded the Biſhops, that they might doe all things: and therefore whatſoeuer they lifted, yea, ſuch things as are not lawfull. How could this haue bin wrought, but that the Scriptures ſhould be fulfilled? This is he whom Paul deſcribeth, that wicked lawleſſe man. Thus he reigneth and ruleth without law, without reaſon, without feare of God without regard of man. He is exempted from all law, & his word is law to bind all the world. This is Antichriſt. This is he of whom Daniel prophecied: He ſhall thinke he may change lawes and times: the times of nature and the lawes which God himſelfe hath ordained. This is he which hath carried himſelfe ſo long time vnder the colour of holineſſe: this is he, which hath beguiled and blinded the eies of the world.

Dan. 7.

But bleſſed be the name of our God, which is the God of truth, and the God of lights: his tyranny and treachery is now reuealed, and therefore not regarded. Oh what mountaines of mony made he ſomtimes of pardons! His pardons were reputed the only ſafety, and comfort of mens ſoules. He was not reckoned a Chriſtian, whoſoeuer ſought them not. No man might lacke them, neither in his life, nor after his death. But where are they now? what is become of them? who buyeth them? who regardeth the hauing of them? who repoſeth his truſt in them? children make ſport of them, and play with them in the ſtreets. They ſee the filth of them, and the folly, and abhorre them. How commeth this ſo to paſſe? The man of ſinne is reuealed.

What a kingdome made he of Purgatory? He ſhut out thence whom he liſted: and releaſed ſuch as were there at his pleaſure. He claimed power ouer the quicke and dead: he ſold the yeeres, the daies, and the moneths by round reckoning, a hundred, fiue hundred, and a thouſand, and thouſand thouſands yeeres of pardon. Of which folly his owne Canoniſts were aſhamed. One of them ſaith: Nam quod dicitur Petro: Tibi dabo claues, &c. Touching that Chriſt ſaid vnto Peter: Vnto thee will I giue the keies, &c. We muſt vnderſtand this authoritie with a corne of ſalt (otherwiſe it may bee vnſauorie.) Therefore certaine of the Popes pardons that promiſe twentie thouſand yeeres, are fooliſh and ſuperſtitious.

Io. Maior in 4. ſenten. diſt. 20. qu. 2.

This was not giuen for nothing, but ſold for mony. Who had ought to giue, had ſpéedie diſpatch: but poore ſoules that had nothing, or no friends to pay for them, ſhould lie ſtill. This was a wealthy kingdome. But now where is Purgatorie? who regardeth it? who careth for it? Children ſcorne it in their ſtreets, and know it is a fable. How commeth this ſo to paſſe? The wicked, or lawleſſe man is reuealed.

He was able to rule the whole world with a becke. His word ſtood as the word of God: no Prince nor Emperor durſt withſtand it. It was thought impoſſible that he ſhould erre. But now the world ſaith, his word is deceiuable and vaine: he erreth, and hath liued in great error. Now few men will beléeue him: no Prince will truſt his word: howſoeuer they (whoſe eies God hath not yet opened to ſée the truth) truſt him in religion, in worldly matters they will not truſt him. How commeth this ſo to paſſe? The man of ſinne is reuealed.

What ſhall I ſay more? Behold round about the world all places, and euen Rome it ſelfe. The poore maſſing Prieſt ſtandeth a cold, and can get no hire: the Popes Pals lie a rotting: his Buls goe a begging: his wares ſtand vpon his hand: no wiſe man will buy them. Why? how commeth this ſo to paſſe? The man of ſinne is reuealed, all his deceit and treachery is reuealed.

The Pope ſtirreth, and ſtriueth at this day all that he can. He excommunicateth, and curſeth: he ſendeth out his Buls: he bloweth vp ſeditions: he bréedeth treaſons: he raiſeth ſubiects againſt their Princes: he ſetteth Princes vpon their ſubiects: he impriſoneth, and murdereth the Saints of God: he ſhaketh and enflameth the whole world in his quarrels. But all in vaine. Why ſo? how commeth this to paſſe? There is no counſell, no wiſedome, no fire, no ſword, that ſhall preuaile againſt the Lord. The man of ſinne, and his errors are reuealed. Men ſée and know, and deteſt the blindneſſe wherein they were led: the people forſake him ouer and ouer the world.

Whom the Lord ſhall conſume with the ſpirit of his mouth, and ſhall aboliſh with the brightneſſe of his comming.

VERS. 9. Euen him whoſe comming is by the effectuall working of Satan, with all power and ſignes, and lying wonders.

10. And in all deceiueableneſſe of vnrighteouſneſſe, among them that periſh, becauſe that they receiued not the word of the truth, that they may be ſaued.

By

By the order of the Apoſtles words I ſhould now ſpeake of the ouerthrow of Antichriſt: how, and by what power he ſhall be confounded. But, becauſe the two verſes next following, ſpeake yet of the ſtate of Antichriſt, by whoſe meanes he ſhall come: and of what countenance he ſhall be: and with whom he ſhall preuaile; it ſhall be good we conſider theſe things firſt, and then ſhew how he ſhall be deſtroied.

When Chriſt came into the world, he came in the name of his father, to ſaue the loſt ſheepe of the houſe of Iſrael, and to gather the flocke that was ſcattered. Antichriſt ſhall come in the name of the Diuell, to ſcatter and diſperſe, and conſume the flocke of Gods ſheepe. His comming ſhall be by the effectuall working of Satan. And what, or who is Satan? He hath been a murderer from the beginning: through his enuie came death into the world: he is the Prince of this world: the Prince of darkneſſe: the father of lies: the ſpirit of pride: which hath ſaid, I will aſcend aboue the height of the clouds, and I will be like the moſt high. He ſhall worke and inflame the heart of Antichriſt, and fill it with his ſpirit, and wickednes, and ſhall make him the man of ſinne, and the ſonne of perdition, full of vanitie, and of pride, and of vngodlineſſe, that he may mocke the world, and blind the hearts of the people.

His comming ſhall be by the working of Satan: yet he ſhall make ſhew as if he came in the name of Chriſt. He ſhall come with fatherly lokes, with holy countenance, and ſhall ſet himſelfe in the holy place: but his whole endeuour ſhall be to deface the kingdome of Chriſt. Which he ſhall practiſe to doe, not by the leading of any Angell, or Archangell, or by the power of God, but by the effectuall working of Satan. He ſhall alleage the Doctours and Fathers: he ſhall alleage Peter and Paul, the holy Apoſtles of Chriſt: he ſhall alleage Chriſt, and God himſelfe, as though his doings were warranted by them: he ſhall ſay, I am the buttreſſe and pillar of the Church, my word is the word of God: he ſhall ſet vp maſſes and ſacrifices of his owne: he ſhall take away the word of God: he ſhall teach the people to giue diuine honour to a weake creature.

But S. Paul in this place diſcloſeth him, and his doings, and laieth them open to the eies of the faithfull. He worketh not the work of an Euangeliſt, as did Peter, or other the Apoſtles; he taketh not power and authoritie either of God, or of Chriſt: but his comming is by the operation of Satan. Therefore he foreſheweth, Antichriſt ſhall command to abſtaine from meats. He ſhall ſay, Touch not, taſte not. He ſhall alſo forbid to marrie. He ſhall ſay, marriage is vnholy, and vnlawfull, not conuenient, not meet for holy profeſſion. Who would not thinke it a holy thing, to abſtaine from meats, and to chaſtiſe the body? Who would not thinke it a holy thing, to abſtaine from marriage, and to thinke of thoſe things which belong to God? Hauing holineſſe and deuotion are a pleaſant ſacrifice to God. But yet it is not all ſo. Some ſhall ſpeake lies through hypocriſie, forbidding to marrie, and commanding to abſtaine from meats. They ſhall depart from the faith, and giue heed to the ſpirits of errour, and doctrines of diuels. He ſaith, it is the diuels goſpell. They are canons and rules of Antichriſt. Satan ſhall inſtruct him, Satan ſhall be the authour and founder of that religion. 1. Tim. 4.

With all power, and ſignes, and lying wonders, and in all deceiueableneſſe of vnrighteouſneſſe. He ſhall need to be of great power and force that ſhall incounter with God. Therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, he ſhall come with miracles and deuiſes of Satan. Chriſt foretold that falſe Chriſts ſhall riſe, and falſe Prophets, and ſhall ſhew ſignes and wonders, to deceiue, if it were poſſible, the very elect. Againe he ſaith: Many will ſay to me in that day, Lord, Lord, haue we not in thy name Prophecied? and by thy name caſt out diuels? and by thy name done many great workes? And then will I profeſſe to them, I neuer knew you, depart from me ye that worke iniquity. Theſe things ſhall Satan bring to paſſe vnder my name. Mark. 13. Matth. 7.

The Apoſtles wrought myracles, thereby to confirme the Goſpel which they preached. As the Euangeliſt writeth: The Lord wrought with them, and confirmed the word with ſignes that followed. And as the Apoſtle: Saluation at the firſt began to be preached by the Lord and was confirmed vnto vs by them that heard him, God bearing witneſſe thereto, with ſignes and wonders, and with diuers miracles, and gifts of the holy Ghoſt, according to his will. So ſhall Antichriſt worke miracles to ouerthrow the Goſpell. As Iannes and Iambres withſtood Moſes; ſo doe theſe alſo reſiſt the truth, men of corrupt mindes, reprobate concerning the faith. But they ſhall preuaile no longer, for their madneſſe ſhall be knowen to all men, as theirs alſo was. Mark. 16. Heb. 2. 2. Tim. 3.

Aaron caſt forth his rod before Pharao and his ſeruants, and it was turned into a Serpent: And the Charmers of Ægypt did in like maner with their enchantments. Aaron ſmot the water, and all the water that was in the riuer, was turned into blood. And the enchanters of Ægypt did likewiſe with their ſorceries. And as Aaron cauſed Frogges to come and couer the land: ſo the ſorcerers did likewiſe with their ſorceries. But the illuſions Exod. 7. Exod. 8. Wiſ. 17.

of the Magicall arts came to nought (saith Salomon) and it was a most shamefull reproch for boasting their knowledge. So shall Antichrist come in working signes and lying wonders, as did Iannes and Iambres, to deface the Gospell and glory of God.

It is not said, he shall worke wonders, but false lying wonders. But how can his miracles bee false? If false, how be they miracles? If miracles, how be they false? They shall be false after two sorts: some are called false miracles, because they seeme to be miracles, and are not. Some are called false miracles, because they be used falsly to maintaine his falshood.

Of the first sort of false miracles, we haue seene an infinite number in the dates of our fathers in the kingdome of Antichrist. Then was there appearance of spirits, and visions of Angels: our Lady came swimming downe from heauen, poore soules came creeping and crying out of Purgatory, and letted abroad, and kept stations, casting flakes of fire, and beset high waies, and bemoned their cases, the paines and torments were so bitter. They sought for helpe, and cried for good praiers, they cried for Diriges, they cried for Masses of Requiem, for Masses of Scala cœli, for trentals of Masses. Hereof grew portsale of pardons, and hereof grew the Prouince of Purgatory, the most gainfull country, that euer was vnder the Citie of Rome.

But these miracles were no miracles at all. They were deuised by subtle varlets, and lazy lorданes for a purpose, to get money. Often times the spirit hath been taken and laid in the stockes: the Angel hath beene stript: good Lady hath beene caught: the conueiance and the miracle hath appeared: the engines, and sleights, and the cause, and the maner of the working hath beene confessed. In those daies, Idols could goe on foot: Rodes could speake: Bels could ring alone: Images could come downe and light their owne candels: Dead stockes could sweat and bestir themselues: they could turne their eies: they could moue their hands: they could open their mouthes: they could set bones, and knit sinewes: they could heale the sicke, and raise vp the dead. These miracles were conueiances and subtleties, and indeed no miracles. The trunkes by which they did speake, the strings and wires with which they moued their faces and hands: all the rest of their treachery hath beene disclosed. These be the miracles of which Paul speaketh: Miracles in sight, but indeed no miracles. The other sort of false miracles, is, when such things as bee indeed wrought and done, are vntruely applied by Antichrist to maintaine his falshood. God giueth reconcile to the diseased: the deafe receiue their hearing: the blind receiue their sight: He asswageth the tempests, and quieth the rage of fire, that it continue not. These things are done by the finger of God. Antichrist draweth vs from so thinking of the mercy of God, and telleth vs we haue other friends to whom we are beholding, which haue done so and so for vs. It was this Saint, saith he: it was that Saint, that toke pitie of your case, and wrought the remedy for you. It was Apollonia, it was Genouefa, it was Sitha, it was our Lady. Such a Saint is able to doe much: such a Saint can worke miracles.

Hereof grew inuocation of Saints. Hereof it came to passe that each Saint was assigned and allotted to his sundry charge and seuerall office apart: Saint Blase for the choaking: S. Roche, for the pestilence: Anthonie, for the burning: Valentine, for the falling sicknesse: Romane, for madnesse: Apollonia, for the tothach: Petronilla, for agues: and others, for other purposes. Wherein it was wisely foreseene, that they were so limitted and ordered, lest perhaps else any one might be ouer saucy, and incroach vpon, and trouble his fellowes. It was also foreseene, that all Saints should not haue power to worke in all places. Some wrought at Canterburie, some at Walsingham, some at Yorke, some at Buxton, some in one place, some in another, some in the townes, some in the fields. Euen as Hieremy said among the Iewes: According to the number of thy Cities, were thy gods. Hereof grew Pilgrimages, and Worshipping of Images: and kissing of Reliques. Hereof grew oblations and enriching of Abbies. Euery man had his peculiar Saint, on whom he called. Euery countrie was full of Chapels: euery Chapell full of miracles: and euery miracle full of lies. Iere. 11.

These miracles are wrought by Antichrist. They are his tooles wherewith he worketh, they are his weapons wherewith he preuaileth. They are full of lying, full of deceitfulnesse, and full of wickednesse. So shall Antichrist prenaile, and rule ouer the world. By these miracles he shall possesse the eares, the eies, and the hearts of many, and shall draw them after him. He shall shadow the Moone, and darken the Sunne, and make the third part of the Starres of Heauen to follow him. He shall change light into darknesse, and darknesse into light. He shall worke in all things at his pleasure. If a man see well, he shall make him blind. This is a miracle. Such as are whole he shall make sicke: he shall infect them with leprosie which before were cleane. This is a miracle. He shall change the sense and feeling of nature, he shall make the Sonne hate the Father: and shall make the Father hate the Sonne, yea, to ſeeke the death of his Sonne. This is a miracle. He ſhall make the people miſlike and doubt the worde of God, and imbrace his follies. This is a miracle.

These be the workes of Antichriſt, which he ſhall bring to paſſe. This ſhall he worke in all deceiueableneſſe of vnrighteouſneſſe. He ſhall come with all kinds and ſhifts of deceit. He ſhall come with ſhew of praying, with vizard of faſting, with companies of Monkes, Friers, Chanons, and all kind, and colour of holineſſe. He ſhall ſeeke to preuaile by threatning, and by flattering, by faire meanes, and by foule. He ſhall excommunicate, and releaſe from excommunication: he ſhall promiſe forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and life euerlaſting. He ſhall make boaſt of the Fathers, and ancient Doctours: he ſhall make boaſt of the vniuerſall conſent: he ſhall boaſt of generall Councels: he ſhall boaſt of Chriſts Apoſtles, and of the Goſpell of Chriſt, and of the worde of God. So ſhall he falſely and deceitfully worke himſelfe credit, and beguile the world, in abuſing the holy name of God. No kinde of deceitfulneſſe or ſubtletie, but he ſhall vſe it. So ſhall he make the people ſeeke vpon him, and Kings, & Emperours to fall downe before him, and to ſay, Who is like vnto the beaſt? Who is ſo wiſe, ſo learned, ſo holy, ſo wealthy, ſo mighty, and ſo catholike? Without him no man is to be reckoned holy or learned. Without him no man may traffike, buy nor ſell. Without him no man may read publikely in Vniuerſities: no man may preach to the people: no man may be accounted a Chriſtian: no man may hope to be ſaued without him, without his leaue and liking. Such wonders, ſuch miracles ſhall he worke, ſo ſhall he conquer and ſubdue the world.

Now, who they be which ſhall be deceiued, in whom ſhall he preuaile? Among them that periſh, becauſe they receiued not the loue of the truth that they might be ſaued. They ſhall be deceiued by him, Which periſh, whoſe hearts are not marked with the ſpirit of God: Whoſe names are not written in the booke of life: in whom the God of this world hath blinded the mindes, that the light of the glorious Goſpell of Chriſt ſhould not ſhine vnto them: they ſhall follow him, and ſhall be the children of damnation, and ſhall haue their reward with him. Be he Learned or Vnlearned: be he King or Subiect: albeit he be holy, albeit he be catholike: Antichriſt ſhall come vnto him in all deceitfulneſſe of vnrighteouſneſſe, becauſe he hath not receiued the loue of the truth that he might be ſaued.

Here marke, he doth not ſay, Becauſe they receiued not the truth: but: he ſaith, Becauſe they receiued not the loue of the truth. Many in our daies can ſpeake thus, I am not Rom. 1.

name vnder heauen, whereby we muſt be ſaued: neither is there ſaluation in any other Acts 4.
than by Jeſus Chriſt, whom we haue learned by the Goſpell: Many will confeſſe, there was neuer more, nor better teaching ſince the time of the Apoſtles. They ſeeme to receiue the truth. But they are like the Horſe and Mule, in whom is no vnderſtanding. They receiue it, becauſe the Prince receiueth it, and becauſe the politike Lawes of countries eſtabliſh it. They are carried away with the ſway of the world. They heare it with their eares: (Nay, I would God they would lend their eares to the hearing of it) but with their hearts they doe not heare. They haue no feeling of the worde of God, and of the truth. They weigh it not, they loue it not. They conſider not what it is, nor from whom it is ſent. They know not that it is the water of life, and the bread which is ſent from Heauen. They haue no taſte, no ſauour, nor pleaſure in it.

Therefore it ſhall be taken from them, and giuen to a nation which ſhall bring forth the fruits thereof. They ſhall be caſt into vtter darkneſſe, and the laſt ſtate of them is worſe than the firſt. It had been better for them not to haue knowen the way of righteouſ- 2. Pet. 2.
neſſe, than after they haue knowen it, to turne from the holy commandement giuen vnto them. It ſhould not be charged vpon them for their damnation: for our Sauiour ſaith,
If I had not come and ſpoken vnto them, they ſhould not haue had ſinne: but now haue Ioh. 15.
they no cloake for their ſinne. They finde no ſweetneſſe in the worde of God: they are not conuerted by it that they may be ſaued: they haue no pleaſure in the waies of the Lord, they haue no comfort to know his will. These be the bondſlaues of Sathan: theſe bee they vpon whom ſhall come the abomination of deſolation: theſe bee they againſt whom Sathan and Antichriſt ſhall preuaile, becauſe they haue not receiued the loue of the truth. They haue not receiued it into their hearts, that they might be ſaued. They had no hearts to feele it, they had no eies to ſee it.

VERS. 11. And therefore God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, that they ſhould beleeue lies.

12. That all they might be damned which beleeued not the truth, but had pleaſure in vnrighteouſneſſe.

The ſpirit of God, is the ſpirit of truth, and giueth light into our hearts, and maketh vs behold that bleſſed hope, and reioice in the knowledge of his will. Therefore the Prophet Pſal. 51. Dauid maketh praier: O God, renue a right ſpirit within mee; and, take not thy holy Pſal. 13. ſpirit from mee. And againe: O Lord my God, lighten mine eies that I ſleepe not in death.
Pſal. 36. And againe he ſaith: With thee is the well of life, and in thy light ſhall we ſee light. Without
1. Cor. 2. this ſpirit wee are but fleſh and blod: euen void of ſenſe and vnderſtanding. The naturall man perceiueth not the things of the ſpirit of God: for they are fooliſhneſſe vnto him. No man knoweth the things of God, but the ſpirit of God. And thoſe things which God hath prepared for them that loue him, he hath reuealed vnto vs by his ſpirit. Chriſt
Ioh. 6. ſaith: No man commeth to me, except the Father draw him. Vnleſſe a man be borne from aboue, vnleſſe God print and ſeale his heart with his finger, he ſhall not be able to ſee the kingdome of God.

Now, if we haue the word of God before our eies, and regard it not, nor be thankfull for it, nor ſet price by it, God in his iuſtice will withdraw it from vs. Then ſhall we delight in darkneſſe, and haue pleaſure in errour: our latter end ſhall be more dreadfull than was our firſt beginning. This is it which Paul ſaith, God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion. That is, his holy ſpirit, the ſpirit of truth, ſhall depart from their hearts, and the power of Satan ſhall dwell with them, and wholly poſſeſſe them. This is the iuſt iudge-
Ioh. 3. ment of God. And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loued darkneſſe rather than light. They forſake the light, and delight in darkneſſe, and this is their condemnation. They will not vnderſtand, nor ſeeke after God, that they may Pſal. 109. be reformed. The Prophet ſaith: Becauſe he loued curſing, it ſhall come vnto him; and becauſe he loued not bleſſing, ſo ſhall it be far from him. God will ſtrike them with blindneſſe. They ſhall be aſtonied. They ſhall fall into rebuke and the ſnares of the Diuell. They ſhall be drowned in perdition and deſtruction.

So great ſhall be the power of errour. Men ſhall not only be deceiued, but ſhall be deceiued mightily and ſtrongly. They ſhall deſire to be deceiued, and ſhall beare a deadly hatred againſt him whoſoeuer ſhall ſeeke to reforme them. They ſhall harden their hearts againſt God and his holy word: they ſhall ſtop their eares, and not hearken to his counſell: they ſhall not open their eies to behold the deſtruction which is to come vpon them. So great and ſo mighty ſhall be the deluſion. So deadly ſhall be the cloud and blindneſſe of their hearts. They ſhall be giuen ouer into a reprobate mind. They ſhall be filthie, and increaſe in filthineſſe. Such ſhall be the power of Satan, ſuch ſhall be the power of errour and deceitfulneſſe. They ſhall deſpiſe the glorious Goſpell of Chriſt: Therefore God ſhal forſake them, and giue them ouer to follow Antichriſt.

God hath this day ſent the light and comfort of his holy word into the world. Many godly men haue deſired to ſee that we ſee, and to heare that we doe heare. Bleſſed be the name of the Lord, which hath in mercie viſited vs. We beſeech him to bleſſe the worke that Such is the power of Satan, ſo ſhall he ſtop their eares, that they ſhall not heare nor vnderſtand what is ſpoken in the name of the Lord.

Paul is a true Prophet, and foretold long before that which we may now behold with
1. Tim. 4. our eies: In the latter times, ſome ſhall giue heed vnto ſpirits of errour. They ſhall be as men without ſenſe or feeling, they ſhall forſake the truth, and betake themſelues to follow lies and fables. Euen they ſhall doe this, which ſhall ſit in the Church of God, who ſhall

1. Cor. 11. Paul telleth the Corinthians: As often as yee ſhall eat this bread, and drinke this cup, yee ſhal ſhew the Lords death till he come: That this inſtitution of Chriſt ſhould bee kept in the Church vntill the end of the world. The Apoſtles receiued this order: the holy Fathers and Martyrs vſed it. But now many, euen too too many, will not ſo haue it, nor ſo vſe it. They will not follow the example of the Fathers, nor of Martyrs, nor of the Apoſtles, nor keepe the ordinance of Chriſt: ſo ſtrong a deluſion hath bewitched them.

The

The people of God were taught to praie in the vulgar tongue, that their hearts might giue conſent, and their mouth ſay, Amen. This order did Peter, and Paul, and Iohn, and Iames, and the godly fathers kepe. There is not one of them that toke order for the contrarie: but now there are ſome riſen vp, which in deſpight of Chriſt and his Apoſtles ſay, praiers ſhall be made in a ſtrange tongue, either Latine or Greeke. The people ſhall not vnderſtand what they heare. They ſhall not know what it is which they themſelues ſay: their hearts cannot giue conſent thereto, their mouths cannot ſay, Amen. The example of the Apoſtles, the commandement of Chriſt, the comfort of the people, the confuſion of the Church nothing moueth them: ſo great and mightie is the power of errour.

The people worſhip a creature in ſtead of the Creator, who is God ouer all bleſſed for euer. They ſee they doe amiſſe, yet continue in it, and find no fault. They ſee wherein their fathers were deceiued, yet they ſay, they could not be deceiued. They ſee many and foule abuſes, yet ſeeke not to redreſſe them. For they ſay, We will walke in the waies of our forefathers: we will beleeue as they beleeued, howſoeuer they beleeued. We will doe as they did, whatſoeuer they did: we will not heare the word of the Lord. Thus ſhall they delight in darkneſſe, and loath the light: they will be deceiued, and will not ſee the truth. So mightie and ſo terrible is the power of errour.

They be learned in Philoſophie and in the tongues: they be learned in the Lawes: they be learned in Phyſicke: learned in the Doctours: and learned in Stories. They are ſkilfull to buy and ſell, to purchaſe land to enrich themſelues, and to prouide for their children. They haue knowledge in all things elſe. But themſelues, and the truth of God, and the way to ſaluation they haue not knowen. A theefe when he is taken, blucheth. A harlot is aſhamed of her filthineſſe, and a drunkard of his beaſtlineſſe. But they that are ſuch, haue hardned their faces, they cannot bluſh. Whatſoeuer they haue ſaid, or done, either openly, or in ſecret, by hypocriſie or crueltie, by rauine or treacherie, in offering pardons to ſale, in deceiuing the people of God, in accuſing the righteous, and condemning the innocent: they cannot repent, they know no ſhame. So great is the power of errour. Chriſt ſaith vnto them, The Publicans, and the Harlots ſhall goe before you into the kingdome of God. Matth. 21. They conſider that they haue done amiſſe: but you are wilfull in your blindneſſe. Oh the depth of the wiſedome and knowledge of God. Who is wiſe and conſidereth this? They ſtriue againſt the manifeſt truth, they ſtriue againſt their owne conſcience, they ſtriue againſt the ſpirit of God. This is that ſinne which ſhall neuer be forgiuen, neither in this world, nor in the world to come.

Therefore ſaith Paul, that all they might be damned, which beleeued not the truth. All ſhall be damned, which beleeued not. Then let no man ſay, I will follow the example of my Fathers, I will do as the greater part doth. So many, and ſo many, for ſo many yeeres, in ſo many places haue beene on this ſide. The iudgement of God ſtandeth not in the multitude, but in the truth. Whoſoeuer ſhall ſet themſelues againſt his holy will, be they neuer ſo many, they ſhall be damned. Let ſuch marke well what Ignatius, who liued in the time of the Apoſtles hath ſaid. Audiui quoſdam dicentes, ſi non inuenero Euangelium in antiquis, non credam. Talibus autem ego dico: quia mihi antiquitas Ieſus Chriſtus eſt, cui non obedire, manifeſtus & irremiſſibilis interitus eſt. Ignatij Epiſt. 5. ad Philadel. I haue heard ſome which ſay, vnleſſe I finde the Goſpell in them of old time, I will not beleeue it. But vnto ſuch I ſay, that Ieſus Chriſt is, vnto me antiquitie, whom to diſobey is manifeſt and vnpardonable deſtruction. Let no man ſay, I hope I doe well, my meaning is good, I haue a deſire to pleaſe God: I beleeue well, I do my conſcience: If I do amiſſe, God will regard my ſimplicitie. Let no man ſo ſay. Saint Auguſtine ſaith: It is certaine that a fooliſh faith not onely doth no good, but alſo hurteth. If thou beleeue not the truth, thou dwelleſt in lying: thou art the child of the Diuell, which is a liar, and the father thereof. The mouth which ſpeaketh lies ſlaieth the ſoule. Thy faith is no faith, it is but a wilfull opinion, it is but an errour, for it is not according to the truth, it is not built vpon the rocke, it is not grounded on the word of God. Change thine errour. Faith is by hearing, and hearing by the word of God: receiue the truth, beleeue the truth, and loue the truth. Otherwiſe, if thou refuſe the bread of life, and feed on poiſon: if thou forſake the water of life, and dig vnto thy ſelfe a Ceſterne that will hold no water, thou ſhalt lead thy daies in wilfulneſſe, and ſhalt die in ſinne; thy bloud ſhall be vpon thine owne head. Thou ſhalt not ſee the glory of God, death and damnation ſhall be thy meed, becauſe thou haddeſt pleaſure in wickedneſſe, and didſt not giue thy heart to receiue, and loue, and beleeue, the truth.

Aug. quæ. 43. in Queſtion. veter. & Nou. Teſtam. Wiſ. 1. Rom. 10.

Now it remaineth, that we heare how Antichriſt ſhall be ouerthrowen. We haue ſeene his pompe and pride, his might and power, that he ouer looketh all the world, bindeth all Kings, and Princes, and nations, to kepe his Lawes, and is himſelfe exempted from all Lawes of God or man. So mightie and ſo maruellous is his power. Who can declare it?

He is called of his owne ſide, Stupor mundi, The gaze-ſtock, or wonder of the world. Something leſſe than God, ſomething more than man. But, being in all this eſtate, in the middeſt of his Pontificalibus, ſo faſt mortized, ſo high built vp to the ſkies, ſo ſurely ſheared, ſo ſtrongly beſet on euery ſide, he ſhall be ſuddenly ſhaken downe, and become the ſhame of the world.

How may this be done? being ſo mortized, ſo built, ſo ſhoared and ſo beſet, who ſhall ſhake him downe? What power ſhall conſume him? ſhall it be the great power of Kings, Reu. 17. or of Emperors? They ſhall giue their power and authoritie to the Beaſt, and fight with the Lamb, that is, againſt Chriſt. Shall it be the authoritie of Biſhops and Cardinals, and great Clerks? All they are linckt and ioined to him. Shall it be by the wiſedome and drift of Counſellours, and men of Law? They be the ſaid men, and ſworne to him. Shall it be the violence and conſpiracie of the people? They ſhall kneele downe to him, and honor him, and reuerence him as an Angell of God. If neither the power of Doctors, nor of Biſhops, nor Archbiſhops: if not the power of Counſellours, and men at Law: if not the power of the Kings and Princes of the world: if not the power and commotion of the people: if all theſe ſhall not abolith him, what power then is it, wherewith he ſhal be conſumed? It ſhall be the power of God which ſhall be reuealed from aboue, The Lord ſhall conſume him with the ſpirit of his mouth.

Theſe words are diuerſly taken. Some expound them thus: God ſhall appoint the great Angell Michael to ſet vpon Antichriſt, and he ſhall deſtroy him. Others take theſe words to be ſpoken of the day of iudgement, and then this ſhall be fulfilled when Chriſt ſhall ſay, Depart from mee yee curſed into euerlaſting fire: that, this is the ſpirit of the Lords mouth wherewith hee ſhall be conſumed. But the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the Preaching of the Goſpell. That God by his word, which is mighty to do all that whereunto hee appointeth it, ſhall make his doings manifeſt, and let all the world ſee, that hee was not ſent of God: that hee did neuer ſet forth the glory of God: that hee hath not ſought the ſaluation of the people: that in matters of faith, and in all his life he is aduerſary to Chriſt. This is that breath that ſhall deſcrie his errours and vanities, that is that ſpirit which ſhall conſume the kingdome of Antichriſt. This ouerthrow is already begun, as our eies may behold this day.

Eſa. 11. In like ſort ſpeaketh Eſay the Prophet: Hee ſhall ſmite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips ſhall he ſlay the wicked. Princes make their conqueſts by power and ſtrength, by fire and ſword, and engines of war; but God ſhall beat downe his aduerſary with the rod of his mouth: by the true Preaching of his word. His word is mighty, it is his ſword, it is his mace: it is the rod of his mouth: it is the breath of his lips. It is of great force, no ſtrength ſhall withſtand it, it ſhall ſmite the earth, it ſhall
2. Cor. 10. ſlay the wicked. S. Paul ſaith: We doe not war after the fleſh, for the weapons of our warfare are mightie through God to caſt downe holds. This ſword hath hewen downe, in manie places, the cruelty, tyranny, ſimony, inſatiable grædineſſe, the errours, ignorance, darkneſſe, vanities, hypocriſie, ſuperſtition, and idolatry, which haue bene brought into the Church and vſed by Antichriſt. Theſe were the pillars, and ſtrength, and glory of his kingdome.

And here marke the Apoſtles ſpæch. He ſaith not, God ſhall conuert Antichriſt, or change his heart that he may be ſaued: but he ſaith: Whom the Lord ſhall conſume. Gods word is almighty. By his word hee can doe whatſoeuer pleaſeth him. He can make the deafe to heare, and the blinde to ſee. He was able to call the theefe vpon the Croſſe vnto repentance. He was able to raiſe vp Lazarus out of his graue. He is able of ſtones to raiſe vp children to Abraham. He can throw downe euery high thing, that is exalted againſt the glory of God, and will bring Kings and Princes, and the Rulers of the earth to the obedience of Chriſt. But of Antichriſt it is ſaid, The Lord ſhal conſume him. Such is the hardneſſe and blindneſſe of his heart, he will not receiue the loue of the truth, he will not beleeue the truth of God, that he might be ſaued. Therefore diſtruction ſhall come vpon him.

Hereby we are taught what to thinke, or hope of reformation of the abuſes and errors of the Church of Rome. They haue bene aduertiſed of them not only by the profeſſors of the Goſpell: but alſo many of themſelues haue ſpoken for reformation of ſundry abuſes. They haue kept many Counſels and Aſſemblies. They haue promiſed redreſſe. They haue ſit in conſultation many yeres. What one thing haue they reformed? See and looke ouer their acts and ſeſſions. They be abroad in print. Hitherto they haue reformed nothing, no, not their pardons: no, not their ſtewes: they haue hardned their hearts, and ſet themſelues againſt the Highest. Therefore ſhall the glory of the Lord ſhew it ſelfe in their deſtruction. With the breath of his lips they ſhall be conſumed and brought to nothing.

And ſhal abolith with the brightneſſe of his comming. The Lord ſhal come, and ſhal make his enemies his footſtoole. Then the Sun ſhall be black as a ſackcloth, and the Moone ſhall be like blood. There ſhall be an earthquake: kings, and great men, and rich men, and euery bond man, and free man ſhall hide themſelues in dens: they ſhall ſay to the hils, and mountaines, and rocks, Fall vpon vs and hide vs from the preſence of him that ſitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lambe. Then ſhall Antichriſt be quite ouerthrowen. Then his kingdome ſhall be vtterly aboliſhed and haue an end. Then it ſhall appeare, who hath ſought the glory of Chriſt, who hath followed the doctrine of the Goſpel, and who hath done the true endeuour of a faithfull ſhepheard: then it ſhall appeare who is the woolfe, who ſcattereth and ſpoileth the flocks. S. Hierome ſaith: Circumdabit eum calix dexterę domini, &c. The cup of the Lords right hand (which is the Lord and Sauiour) ſhall compaſſe him about, when he ſhall ſlay him with the breath of his mouth, and ſhall deſtroy him with the brightneſſe of his comming. Then all the ignominie and ſhame which he hath heaped vp vpon himſelfe with thoughts, deeds, and words, ſhall fall vpon his glory and pomp: inſomuch that he ſhall be afterwards as vile and contemned of all men, as he was before reputed or highly eſteemed of them. Hieron. lib. 2. in 2. Abac.

This might ſuffice touching the ruine and fall of Antichriſt; Yet I will adde to that hath bin ſpoken, the maner of the fight, and of the victory, and of the triumph which ſhall follow. The fight is doubtfull and dangerous: the victory ſhall be glorious: the triumph ſhall be ioyfull. Here let vs call to remembrance the wars which Tyrants & vngodly Princes haue made againſt the people of God, and what hath followed. Senacharib the great King of the Aſſyrians, came vp againſt Ieruſalem with horſes and chariots, and infinite numbers of pickt ſouldiers. The whole Countrie of Iewrie was in an agonie: all the people were aſtonied with feare, to ſee ſo many enemies, and themſelues ſo few: to ſee the enemies ſo ſtrong, and themſelues ſo weake. They knew not, neither where to ſeeke aid, nor how to eſcape the preſent danger. Suddenly the Lord ſent his Angell from Heauen to releeue his people. In one night he ſmote in the campe of the Aſſyrians, an hundred fourſcore and fiue thouſand, which were all dead coarſes. The reſidue were ſcattered, and ran away ſtraggling: they knew not where to hide their head. King Senacherib went his way and returned. And when he was in ſafety at home, and worſhipping his God Niſroch, in the Temple, Adramelech and Sharezer his ſonnes ſlew him. 2. King. 19.

Remember the cruell wars which Nabuchadonoſor King of Babylon made againſt Gods people. He toke their City, ſpoiled their Temple, ſacked Ieruſalem, and gaue the prey to his ſouldiers. He toke the Nobles and gentlemen, and merchants, and yeomen, and led them captiues. Some of them he toke with him to Babylon, and ſome he ſold for money: ſo great and ſo terrible was his victory. In the middeſt of all his pompe, God bereft him of his wit, and aſtonied him with deadly madneſſe. He was driuen from men, and did eat graſſe as the Oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heauen, till his haires were growen as Eagles feathers, and his nailes like birds clawes. He imagined that he was an Ore, that he had hoofe and horne, and haire as Oxen. Here therefore forſooke his palace, his Princely apparrell, and daintie fare, and lay abroad, and fed with beaſts. So did God auenge the cauſe of his people. Daniel 4.

Who hath not heard of the war which Pharao had againſt the Iſraelites? the battell was ſtrange, and the victory ſudden. The people of God was beſet with dangers on euery ſide, the wildernеſſe had ſhut them in. Before their faces they ſaw the raging ſea, that they could not eſcape it; behind their backs, they did behold Pharao with his army march after them: if they went forward, they muſt nèeds be drowned: if they retired, they muſt nèeds be ſlaine. Their enemies were mighty, and they were weake. Suddenly God diuided the waters, and made the Sea dry land, ſo that the children of Iſrael went thorow the midſt of the Sea vpon dry ground, ſafely as thorow a meadow. Pharao followed after with his ſword and ſpeare to worke his furie. Then the Sea returned to his courſe, and drowned the chariots, and horſemen, and all the hoſt of Pharao, there remained not one of them aliue. Their carcaſes lay afloat vpon the water, and were caſt in heapes vpon the ſhoare. Such ſhall be the end of thoſe that hate the Lord. So ſhall he make his name triumph ouer all the world. Exod. 14.

Let vs imagine a battell of two mighty Princes, both of great power, and of great courage, they mèet together in the field, they ioine battell, both ſides encounter together, either part is bent to beat downe the other: what an horror is it to heare the braying of Horſes, the ſound of Trumpets, the thunder of drums, the roaring of guns, the claſhing of ſwords, the groaning and mournfull voice of them which are ſlaine, and the crying and trembling of the people? Now let vs by this make ſome reſemblance of the battell betweene Chriſt and Antichriſt, betweene Chriſt the Son of God, and Antichriſt the ſonne of the Diuell. Either of them is well prepared. They are both mighty, and haue both of them ſouldiers, and knights to attend vpon them.

Antichriſt

Antichrist shall come from the earth, for all his glory is vpon the earth, his power shall be the power of Satan. Christ shall come from the heauens aboue, euen from the bosome of his father. What cognisance shall they giue? how and by what difference shall their souldiers be discerned? the ensigne of Christ shall be euerlasting truth: the ensigne of Antichrist shall be falshood and vanity, and all deceitfulnesse. By these markes shall either be knowne. With what souldiers shal they make their field? they that shall follow Christ are poore and simple, who haue forsaken themselues, their goods, and their liues, and tremble at the word of God. The men of war which fight with Antichrist and follow him, shall be mighty Kings and Princes, and powers, and states of the world, as S. Iohn hath said. And Gregory hath said: An army of Priests is prepared to wait vpon the king of pride. And hereby may you know him.

Reuel. 7.

What armour shall they haue, and with what weapon shall they fight? Antichrist shall furnish his men with speare, and sword, and fire. He shall reioyce in killing, in burning, and in sheding of blood. Christ shall send his men into the field naked, and armed with patience. They shall take vp their Crosse and follow him, ready to suffer whatsoeuer shall be laid vpon them. Their weapons shal be prayers and weeping. What shal be the pretence of this fight? Antichrist shal come in his owne name, to maintaine and exalt himselfe. Christ shall come in his fathers name, to maintaine the glory of his father. What shal they seek? wherefore fight they? what is it they shall desire to maintaine? Antichrist shall desire to maintaine his owne traditions, Christ shall maintaine the holy word of God. Christ shall procure the glory of his father: Antichrist shall maintaine his owne glory. In what place shall this battell be? vpon what downes or plaine, or in what Country? neither in hill, nor in any plaine, but in the hearts of the people. There shall the war be. There shall it bee fought. If it were possible the elect should be confounded. His assault shall be so terrible, that many shall be offended in Christ: many shall deny Christ: many shall be ashamed of him: and the loue of many shall way cold. But blessed is he which continueth to the end.

We haue heard briefly of Christ and Antichrist, their estates, their seuerall cognisance, what bands of men they shall haue, what armour they shall beare, by what title they shall claime, what they shall seeke, and where the fight shall be, that it shall be made in the consciences of the people. There shall Antichrist sit, there shal he be worshipped as God: there they shall call him the holy and most holy Father: there shall be giuen to him the power of heauen and earth: there he himselfe shall rouze himselfe, and bee setled, and shall say, I sit as a Prince, I shal neuer be remoued, I cannot fal. But Christ shal blow him down with the breath of his mouth, and shall abolish him with the brightnesse of his comming. Christ shall haue the vpper hand, and destroy him. Euen that Christ whom they made the reproch and scorne of the people, whom they reuiled calling him drunkard, and companion vnto publicans and harlots, which was so poore and simple, which was oppressed and afflicted, and yet opened not his mouth; which was brought as a sheepe to the slaughter, and was killed.

Reu. 1. S. Iohn had a reuelation, and did see Iesus Christ the sonne of God. And, Hee had in his right hand seuen starres, and out of his mouth went a sharp two edged sword. It was sharpe and mighty: it entreth thorow euen to the diuiding asunder of the soule and the spirit, and of the ioynts and the marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. So we see the breath of the mouth of Christ is a sword. This sword shal ouerthrow Antichrist. Remember how Dagon fell on his face vpon the ground before the Arke of the Lord, how he could not stand, how at that presence, the head, & the two palmes of his hands were cut off vpon the threshold with a fall. So shall Antichrist fall at the presence of Christ. His armes and his head shall be broken off, and he shall not stand. Remember that Aaron cast forth his rod before Pharao and his seruants, and it was turned into a Serpent: so did the charmers of Ægypt. They cast downe euery man his rod, and they were also turned into Serpents. But Aarons rod deuoured their rods, and consumed them to nothing. Euen so shall the truth of Christ consume and bring to nothing the falshood of Antichrist. All his glory shall be scattered as the chaffe which the wind driueth away, as a thin fome is scattered away with a storme, and as the smoke which is dispersed with the wind, and as the darknesse which cannot abide in the sight of the Sun: it shall be consumed, it shall be defaced, it shall not stand. At the name of Iesus euery knee shall bow, and euery tongue shall confesse that Iesus Christ is mighty, to the glory of God the father: that he is worthy to receiue glory, and honour, and power.

Heb. 4.

1. Sam. 5.

Exod. 7.

But who may better disclose this mystery, and the fall of Antichrist, than Iohn the Euangelist, which leaned on Iesus bosome, whom Iesus loued, and which was indued with wisedome from aboue? Let vs heare him. I saw (saith he) an Angell flie in the middest of heauen, hauing an euerlasting Gospell to preach vnto them that dwell on the earth, and to euery nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, ſaying with a loud voice, Feare God, giue glory to him: for the houre of his iudgement is come, and worſhip him that made heauen and earth, and the ſea and the fountaines of waters. And there followed another Angel ſaying, It is fallen, it is fallen, Babylon the great City: for ſhe made all nations to drinke of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. And the third Angell following them, ſaid with a loud voice, If any man worſhip the Beaſt and his image, and receiue his marke in his forehead, or on his hand, the ſame ſhall drinke the wine of the wrath of God, and ſhall be tormented in fire and brimſtone, before the holy Angels, and before the Lambe; they ſhall haue no reſt day nor night.

Again, the ſeuenth Angel powred out his viall into the aire, and there came a loud voice out of the Temple of heauen from the throne, ſaying, It is done. That is, it is concluded, iudgement is giuen, it ſhall ſtand for euer. And there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and there was a great earth-quake, and the great City was rent into three parts, and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to giue vnto her the cup of the wine of the fierceneſſe of his wrath. Then one of the Angels talked with me ſaying, Come I will ſhew thee the damnation of the great whore that ſitteth vpon many waters, with whom haue committed fornication the kings of the earth; and the inhabitants of the earth are drunken with the wine of her fornication. And, in the ſame Chapter he ſaith: Theſe haue all one mind, and ſhall giue their power and authority to the Beaſt, that is, to Antichriſt. Thus the kings and all princes (as ſquires to his body) ſhal fight againſt the Lamb. But the Lambe ſhall ouercome them: for he is Lord of Lords, and King of Kings. Reu. 16. Reu. 17.

I ſaw another Angell comming downe from heauen, hauing great power, ſo that the earth was lightned with his glory, and he cried out mightily with a loud voice, ſaying: It is fallen, it is fallen, Babylon the great City (the harbour and palace of Antichriſt) and is become the habitation of Diuels, and the hold of all foule ſpirits. And I heard another voice from heauen ſay, Goe out of her my people (beleeue her not, doe not as ſhe commandeth you) that ye be not partakers in her ſinnes, and that ye receiue not of her plagues. For her ſinnes are come vp into heauen, and God hath remembred her iniquities. Reward her euen as ſhe hath rewarded you, and giue her double according to her workes: and in the Cup that ſhe hath filled vnto you, fill her the double. In as much as ſhe glorified her ſelfe, and liued in pleaſure, ſo much giue you to her torment & ſorrow. For ſhe ſaith in her heart, I ſit being a Queene: the world is mine, no ill ſhall touch me. Therefore ſhall her plagues come at one day, death, and ſorrow, and famine, and ſhe ſhall be burnt with fire; for ſtrong is the Lord God which will condemne her. And the kings of the earth, which haue committed fornication, and liued in pleaſure with her, ſhall bewaile her, when they ſhall ſee the ſmoke of her burning: and ſhall ſtand afar off for feare of her torment, ſaying, Alas, alas, the great City Babylon, the mighty City; for in one houre is thy iudgement come. And the marchants of the earth ſhall weepe and waile ouer her: for no man buieth their ware any more: the ware of gold and ſiluer, and of pretious ſtone, and of pearles, and of fine linnen, and of purple, and of ſilke, and of ſcarlet, of all maner of Thime-wood, and of all veſſels of Iuory, and of all veſſels of moſt pretious wood, and of braſſe, and of yron, and of marble, and of Cinnamone, and odors, and ointments, and frankincenſe, and wine, and oile, and fine flower, and wheat, and beaſts, and ſheepe, and horſes, and chariots, and ſeruants, and ſoules of men: no man any more ſhall buy her parchment, wax, and ſeales: no man ſhall buy her orders, her diſpenſations, pluralities, totquot, non reſidence, Perinde valere. No man ſhall buy her Concubines, her oile, ſalt, holy water, holy bread: no man ſhall buy her pals, her Agnos Dei, her Iubilees, Maſſes, trentals, and pardons: no man ſhall any more buy of her, forgiueneſſe of their ſinnes, and life euerlaſting. No man ſhall regard her, no man ſhal buy, or ſeeke to get this merchandiſe of her any more. Reu. 18.

The merchants of theſe wares ſhal ſtand a far off, for feare of her plagues, and ſay, Alas that great City that was clothed in reines, and ſcarlet, and purple, and gold, and diamonds, and pretious ſtones, in one houre is all thy glory ſtript from thee. O what City vnder heauen was like vnto thee! thou waſt the great City, the noble, and the holy City. Then a mighty Angel toke vp a ſtone, like a great milſtone, and caſt it into the ſea, ſaying: With ſuch violence ſhall the great City Babylon be caſt, and ſhall be found no more. She ſhall be out of remembrance, they ſhall ſeeke the place where ſhe ſtood, and not find it. The voice of harpers and muſicians, ſhall be no more heard in her. The light of a candle ſhall ſhine no more in her: her merchants, officers, and dataries, were the great men of the earth, and by her enchantments were all nations deceiued. And in her was found the blood of the Prophets, and of the ſaints, and of all that were ſlaine vpon earth.

After I heard a great voice of a great multitude in heauen, ſaying Halleluiah, ſaluation, and glory, and honor, and power be to the Lord our God. For he hath condemned the great whore, whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath auenged the blod of his ſeruants ſhed by her hand. And againe they ſaid, Halleluiah: And the ſmoke roſe vp for euermore, and the foure and twenty Elders fell downe, and worſhipped God that ſate on the throne, ſaying, Amen, Halleluiah. Then a voice came out of the throne, ſaying, Praiſe our God all ye his ſeruants both ſmall and great. And I heard like the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of ſtronge thundrings, ſaying Halleluiah: for our Lord God almighty hath reigned. Let vs be glad and reioyce, and giue glory to him: for the is fallen, ſhe is fallen, Babylon that great City, there ſhe lieth, the mother of filth and fornication. There lieth Antichriſt the man of ſinne, the Son of perdition, which is an aduerſary, which hath ſit in the Temple of God, and exalted himſelfe aboue all that is called God: that wicked and lawleſſe man lieth there. The Lambe, the rote of Ieſſe, the Lion of the tribe of Iuda, hath ouercome, and gotten the victory. He is worthy to receiue the glory and honor. Then ſhall the Apoſtles, and the Prophets, and the Angels ſay, Praiſe, and honor, and glory be vnto him, that ſitteth vpon the throne, and vnto the Lambe for euermore. We thanke thee, we giue thankes to thee O God, which art, and was, and ſhall be. Thou haſt auenged the blod of the Prophets and Martyrs, thou haſt deſtroied them that haue defiled the earth. Thy name be bleſſed for euer. Amen, Halleluiah. Such glee and triumph ſhall be in heauen for the ouerthrow of Antichriſt.

Thus haue I by occaſion of the Apoſtles words ſpoken of the comming, and of the kingdome of Antichriſt. And, leſt wee might be deceiued as touching his perſon, I haue ſaid what he ſhould be, what things he ſhall doe, of what eſtate he ſhall be, what countenance he ſhall carry, in what place he ſhall ſit, at what time ſhall be his comming, by what meanes he ſhall preuaile, who they be that ſhall beleeue in him, what power ſhall beat him downe, what end he ſhall haue, what triumph ſhall follow vpon his fall.

I haue told you, that hee ſhall bee the ouerthrow of the world, the confuſion of the Church, the Sonne of perdition: that he ſhall deſtroy himſelfe, and be the deſtruction of others.

I haue told you, he ſhall be a reuerend father, and weare a miter, and be a Biſhop, and a Biſhop of Biſhops. So ſaith Gregory, ſo Ierome, ſo Auguſtine, and Bernard, and others. And cannot we tell who it is, that calleth himſelfe an vniuerſall Biſhop, the Biſhop of all Churches? Doe we not heare of ſuch a one? Doe we not know him? Whatſoeuer he be, whereſoeuer he dwell, what countenance ſoeuer he beare, he is Antichriſt. I haue told you, he ſhal ſit in the Temple of God, in the conſciences of the people: that the people ſhal heare, credit, follow, and honor him, as if he were God: and thinke it ſinne and damnation to breake his lore.

I haue told you where he ſhall be ſtalled, where his chiefe place ſhall be, whence he may be ſeene. S. Iohn ſaith, he ſhall ſit in a City built vpon ſeuen hils: that City is the City of Rome. Rome is ſo built, Rome is ſet vpon ſeuen hils. Dame Sibylla ſaith, Antichriſt ſhall ſit by the water of Tyber: and Tyber is a riuer, that runneth by Rome. Ioachimus Abbas ſaith, Antichriſt is long ſince borne at Rome, and ſhall be aduanced in the Apoſtolike See. He is borne, and ſheweth himſelfe, not at, Babylon, not at Conſtantinople, but at Rome. Theſe be plaine ſpeeches. If any man doubt this, let him read their bookes, they be extant abroad. Antichriſt ſhall ſit in Peters chaire, and Rome ſhall be the ſeat of his kingdome.

I haue told you, he ſhall come when the ſtate, and maieſty of the Empire ſhall be weakned. Antichriſt ſhall poſſeſſe the Emperors lands, and beare the ſword, and weare his Crowne, and ſhall make the Emperor fall downe and worſhip him, and kiſſe his feet. Hath there euer bin any ſuch Biſhop in the world? Hath there (I ſay) euer bin any ſuch? If euer there were any ſuch. S. Paul ſaith, the ſame is Antichriſt.

I told you, the world ſhall fall downe, and reuerence him, and ſhall ſeeke life and ſalvation at his hands. Iohn ſaith, they ſhall cry, Oh who is like the beaſt, who is like our Holy Father? who is ſo wiſe, ſo learned, ſo holy? they ſhall follow him whitherſoeuer he will lead them: they ſhall eat whatſoeuer he will giue them. And they which ſhall doe thus, are ſuch as haue no feeling, no care, no loue to the truth of God. Therefore God forſaketh them, and leaueth them to follow lies. I told you, he ſhall preuaile by falſhood, and by fained miracles: by Buls, by Pardons, by Purgatories, and by ſuch other deuices and ſhifts of Satan.

I told you, he ſhall be contrary to Chriſt, in Sacraments, in ſacrifice, in praiers, in life, in doctrine, in religion, in the whole forme and order of the Church. He ſhall ſhut that Chriſt hath opened. He ſhall open that Chriſt hath ſhut. He ſhall curſe that Chriſt hath bleſſed: and bleſſe that Chriſt hath curſed. No man ſhall be accounted faithfull, no man Catholike, no man the ſon of the Church, no man may be ſaued without him. Such credit and countenance ſhall he beare.

I told you, hée ſhall be confounded and beaten downe by the force and power of Gods mighty word. His word is omnipotent. It ſhall diſcloſe the workes of darkneſſe: it ſhall hew downe Idolatry, Superſtition, and the whole kingdome of Antichriſt, as our eies doe ſée this day. Bleſſed be God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: his mighty hand hath wrought theſe things. He hath triumphed the name of his Chriſt: he will bleſſe the things he hath begun. He will ouerthrow the whole power of Antichriſt, by his preſence, and by the glory of his comming. Then ſhall it appeare who is the ſucceſſor of Peter, who is the true vicar of Chriſt, and who is Antichriſt.

VERS. 13. But we ought to giue thankes alwaies to God for you, brethren, beloued of the Lord, becauſe that God hath from the beginning choſen you to ſaluation, through ſanctification of the ſpirit, and the faith of truth.

14. Whereunto he called you by our Goſpell, to obtaine the glory of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

God hath choſen you from the beginning, his election is ſure for euer. The Lord knoweth who are his. You ſhall not be deceiued with the power and ſubtilty of Antichriſt, you ſhall not fall from grace, you ſhall not periſh. This is the comfort, which abideth with the faithfull, when they behold the fall of the wicked. When they ſée them forſake the truth, and delight in fables. When they ſée them returne to their vomit, and to wallow againe in the mire. When we ſée theſe things in other, we muſt ſay, Alas, they are examples for me, and they are lamentable examples. Let him that ſtandeth, take héed that hée fall not. But God hath loued me, and hath choſen me to ſaluation. His mercie ſhall goe before me, and his mercie ſhall follow in me. His mercie ſhall guide my feet, and ſtay me from falling. If I ſtay by my ſelfe, I ſtay by nothing, I muſt néeds come to ground. Although all the world ſhould be drowned with the waues of vngodlineſſe, yet will I hold by the boat of his mercie, which ſhall ſafely preſerue me. If all the world be ſet on fire with the flame of wickednes, yet will I creepe into the boſome of the protection of my Lord, ſo ſhall no flame hurt me. He hath loued me, he hath choſen me, he will keepe me. Neither the example, nor the company of others, nor the entiſing of the Diuell, nor mine owne ſenſuall imaginations, nor ſword, nor fire is able to ſeparate me from the loue of God which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. This is the comfort of the faithfull. So ſhall they waſh their hands in the blood of the Lambe.

Therefore ſaith Paul, you are my children: I haue begotten you in Chriſt, God hath giuen you vnto me, he hath made the Goſpell which is come vnto you by my miniſterie, fruitfull in you; I ought to giue God thanks alwaies for you. Whatſoeuer falleth vpon others, although others fall and periſh, although they forſake Chriſt, and follow after Antichriſt, yet God hath loued you, and giuen his Son for you, he hath choſen you and prepared you to ſaluation, and hath written your names in the booke of life.

But how may we know that God hath choſen vs? how may we ſée this election? or how may we feele it? The Apoſtle ſaith, Through ſanctification, and the faith of truth: theſe are tokens of Gods election. Haue you receiued the Goſpell? it is the light of the world, it teacheth vs to know that God is God, and that we are his people. The credit you giue to the Goſpell, is a witneſſe of your election. We beléeue whatſoeuer God ſpeaketh, becauſe it is the word of God: For his word is truth. We beléeue that Chriſt is the Lamb of God, that he hath taken away the ſinnes of the world: becauſe it is the word of God. Ioh. 1.
We beléeue that the blood of Jeſus Chriſt cleanſeth vs from all ſinne: becauſe it is the word of God: 1. Ioh. 1.
We beléeue, Chriſt came to ſaue ſinners: becauſe it is the word of God. We beléeue, God Matth. 9.
will defer his wrath, & will ſhew mercy for himſelfe, for his own names ſake: becauſe it is Eſai. 48.
the word of God. We beléeue, they that truſt in the Lord, ſhall not be confounded: becauſe Pſal. 22.
it is the word of God. We beléeue, we are ſaued by grace through faith, and that not of Ephe. 2.
our ſelues, it is the gift of God: not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt: becauſe it is the word of God. We beléeue, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: and againe, that Heb. 11.
faith commeth by hearing: and againe, that it is the gift of God: becauſe it is the word of Rom. 10.
God. It is the truth. We beléeue that Antichriſt ſhall be confounded, and bereft of all his Philip.
glory: becauſe the word of the Lord hath ſpoken it. His word is righteouſneſſe and truth. Reu. 18. 19.
We will alwaies beléeue that is true, therefore we cannot but beléeue the word of God.

Faith knoweth no falſhood, it beholdeth the truth only, and not all truth, but the truth of God. It is not ſetled vpon vanities, nor vpon errors. Vnleſſe it be truth by the word of God, whatſoeuer thou holdeſt in opinion, is not to be called faith. The Turke is ſetled in errors, he perſwadeth himſelfe he is rightly ſetled, hée calleth his opinions, Faith and beléefe. Yet this is not faith, becauſe it is not the faith of truth, it hath not the word of God to aſſure it. Therefore when men will ſay, Beléeue our Maſſes, beléeue our Sacrifices: beléeue our transubstantiations, and our reall presences: beleeue vs whatsoeuer we say, beleeue that we cannot erre, beleeue that you are in a good beleefe, if you say you beleeue as the Church beleeueth, though you know not how or what the Church beleeueth. They abuse and mocke the people of God. There is no truth in this doctrine. It neuer past out of the mouth of God. God ordained not Masses, nor that the Priest should offer sacrifice for the quick and dead. Therefore it is no matter of faith, it is folly, and vanity, it is vngodlinesse, it is error, it hath no substance. He that receiueth such doctrine, maketh much of a shadow, he cannot hold it.

Faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. The word of God is truth. The Gospell is the word of God, and the power of God to saue them that beleeue. The beleefe of the Gospell is laid vp in our hearts by the spirit of God. He bringeth vs to the knowledge of the truth. This spirit beareth witnesse vnto our spirit, that we are the sonnes of God.

This spirit teacheth vs to withdraw our minds from worldly cares, to call our doings to a reckoning, to thinke of the dreadfull day of iudgement, to repent for our former sinnes, and to serue God in holinesse and righteousnesse. This spirit sheweth vs the mercy of God, helpeth vs to pray, and praieth for vs, is our comforter, helpeth our infirmities, and maketh vs know the things that are giuen vs of God. This did Dauid see, when he praied: Create a cleane heart in me, O God, and renue a right spirit within me. My heart is sinfull, my heart is foule. Renue it with thy spirit: thy spirit is right, he shall make my heart cleane. Againe, Take not thy holy spirit from me. I am thy seruant, and the son of thy handmaiden, turne thy face away from my sinnes: behold me, and receiue me in thy mercy. Restore me to the light of thy countenance. Open thou my lips, and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise: stablish me with thy free spirit. This strength we gather in God by his spirit. This comforteth vs in all temptations, and beareth witnesse with our spirit, that we be the children of God: that God hath chosen vs, and doth loue vs, and hath prepared vs to saluation: that we are the heires of his glory: that God will keepe vs as the apple of his eie, that he will defend vs, and we shall not perish.

VERS. 15. Therefore, Brethren, stand fast, and keepe all the instructions which yee haue been taught, either by word or by our Epistle.

God hath set you in a race: Let no man hinder you, let no man keepe you from the goale. Stand fast, and keep that doctrine which you haue receiued. When I was present with you, I taught you by word of mouth: when I was away from you, I taught you by letters. I am carefull for you. I beare you in my heart: and loue you in Christ Iesus. He hath giuen me charge ouer you, he will require you at my hands: I haue cleansed and garnished your hearts by the word of truth; take heed, take heed the wicked spirit come not, and bring seuen spirits worse than himselfe, and enter in, and dwell with you, and the end of you be worse than the beginning.

Remember Lots wife: she went not forth straight in the way appointed her, but loked backe behind her, and she became a pillar of salt: and so continueth vntill this day. A terrible example to those, which haue set their hand to the plough, and loke backe againe, and haue made themselues vnworthy the kingdome of heauen. God will forsake such, & make their hearts hard as a stone. You are the corne of the Lords field, God hath blessed you: grow then and be fruitfull vntill the harnest, that you may be gathered into the Lords barne. You are the light of God, which God himselfe hath kindled: let no puffe of wind put you out. You are the house of God, God hath built you vpon a rocke: let no violence, nor tempestuous weather beat you downe.

I haue spoken to you, I haue written to you: I haue shewed you the whole counsell of God. The word which I spake to you, is the word of God. I testifie before the Lord, and call God to witnesse vnto my soule, that it is the truth of God, and not any deuice of man. You did beleeue it, you receiued it not as the word of men, but as it is indeed the word of God. Become not now vnfaithfull, although you spy many infirmities in your teachers: although you see them fall into offences, and war couetous, & giue euill example in their life and conuersation. Although you see the faith of many shaken, and that they haue put away from them a good conscience, and turne backe from the loue of the Gospell, which they once seemed to professe, and so are gone out from among you: yet stand you vpright. Hold fast the doctrine which you haue receiued: and continue in the things which you haue learned, and be perswaded that they are able to make you wise vnto saluation, through the faith which Matth. 18. is in Christ Iesus. Christ saith, Wo be to the world because of offences, whosoeuer shall offend one of these little ones, which beleeue in me, it were better for him, that a millstone were hanged about his necke, and that he were drowned in the depth of the Sea. And

And againe hee ſaith: Bleſſed is he which is not offended in me. Therefore worke your owne ſaluation in trembling and in feare. Bleſſed is he that abideth with Chriſt in temptations, and continueth faithfull vnto the end. Matth. 11.

VERS. 16. Now the ſame Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, and our God, euen the Father, which hath loued vs, and hath giuen vs euerlaſting conſolation, and good hope through grace;

17. Comfort your hearts, and ſtabliſh you in euery word and good worke.

After his exhortation that they would ſtand faſt, and continue faithfull vnto the end; he turneth himſelfe to God, and praieth him to looke vpon them mercifully downe from heauen, and to fulfill the worke begun, and to increaſe and multiply his grace in them. So ought all Preachers and Seruants of God to doe in their Sermons. For, alas what are wee? What is our word? What is our labour, without the aſſiſtance of God? We are onely the voice of a Crier in the wildernesſe: wee call vpon the people to prepare the way of the Lord, and to make his paths ſtraight: wee giue warning, that the Lord is euen at hand. He that teacheth is nothing: he that planteth is nothing: he that watereth is nothing: our tongue is nothing: our word is nothing: our wit is nothing: Peter is nothing: Paul is nothing. It is God which openeth the hearts of the people, and maketh them tremble at his words. It is God which giueth the increaſe, and maketh his word to bee of force.

The Prophet ſaith: The Lord gaue the word: great was the companie of Preachers. It is the worke of God, both to make his word mighty, and to make the people to receiue it, and yeld vnto it. He giueth vs hearts to feele the comfort of his word, & to yeld our obedience in doing, as the word requireth. For he is the father of lights, from whom all gifts are powred downe vpon vs. We are the children of Adam: wee are fleſh and blood, and nothing but vile clay and aſhes. Our eies are dim, our ſenſes dull, and our hearts heauy. Chriſt telleth vs truly: Without me yee can doe nothing: neither heare the word, nor beleeue it. Pſal. 68. Ioh. 15.

I marke your preſence, that you are many gathered together this day in this place. Euerie man ſeemeth to ſtand with bent countenance, and earneſt lookes, and deſirous to learne. And albeit, I which ſpeake am but a worme, vnworthy to creepe vpon the earth, yet the word which wee haue heard is the word of God, the word of comfort, and the word of life. But God knoweth in all this company how many haue eares to heare. In the Acts of the Apoſtles, when God opened their hearts, they vnderſtood the Scriptures. Before, they heard, and knew not what they heard. Paul preached: Lydia, a woman which ſold purple, heard him: the Lord opened her heart, that ſhee hearkned vnto Paul. Then ſhee vnderſtood his words, and beleeued. This comfort is of God, who hath loued vs, and hath giuen vs euerlaſting conſolation; he will giue you vnderſtanding hearts, and will ſtabliſh you in euery word, and good worke. Act. 16.

CHAP. 3.

VERS. 1. Furthermore Brethren, pray for vs, that the word of the Lord may haue free paſſage, and be glorified, euen as it is with you.

PRay for me, that I may be a faithfull ſeruant, doing the will of God from my heart, that he will open my mouth boldly to publiſh the ſecret of the Goſpell, and to declare the riches and glorie of his kingdome. For of my ſelfe I am nothing. I haue not the key of Dauid. I cannot giue light vnto the world, and am not able to open the hearts of the people. That the Word of God may haue free paſſage. He ſaith not, pray for vs, that my word may haue paſſage: or that my name may be ſpoken of and glorified: or that the people may behold my doings, and talke of mee. For we preach not our ſelues, but Chriſt Ieſus the Lord, and our ſelues your ſeruants for Chriſts ſake. I am but an vnprofitable ſeruant. I am the poore Dre that treadeth out the wheat: I am a poore Crier, to proclaime the will of the Lord. 2. Cor. 4.

Pray you that the word of the Lord may haue free paſſage, that the Goſpell of Chriſt may be glorified, that the hearts of the people may be ready and greedy to receiue it, that the kingdome of Heauen ſuffer violence, and the violent take it by force: that the word may ſo poſſeſſe the hearts of the people, as fire hath paſſage thorow ſtubble: that it may ſhine as the Sun beames ouer all the world: that it may be knowen from Eaſt to Weſt, and from North to South. In this ſort pray, that the word may haue a glorious entrance into you, and alſo among other. Herein ſhall appeare the loue you haue to the Saints, and the zeale you beare to the houſe of God, when you wiſh others to be partakers of this bleſſednes with you: when you ſeeke not your owne glory, but the building of the Church of Chriſt: when you pray that God will be mercifull vnto others, as vnto you: that a light may be giuen to them that sit in darknesse, and in the shadow of death: that they may know the time of their visitation.

Such a praier made Dauid, God be mercifull vnto vs, and blesse vs, and cause his face
Psal. 67. to shine among vs: that they may know thy way vpon earth, thy sauing health among all nations. Let the people praise thee O God, let all the people praise thee. Thus did Hieremy
Lam. 5. pray: Turne thou vs vnto thee, O Lord, and we shall be turned. Giue vs a new heart and a new spirit, incline our hearts vnto thy testimonies, that we may know and feare thy Matth. 6. name. So did Christ teach vs to pray: Hallowed be thy name, among the Infidels which know thee not: let thy name be had in reuerence among all people. Thy kingdome come, thy will be done. There is no other God but onely thou, let all the earth come and worship thee. Euen so must we also pray, that the word of God may haue free passage, and his name be glorified in all places.

VERS. 2. And that we may be deliuered from vnreasonable and euill men: for all men haue not faith.

3. But the Lord is faithfull, which wil stablish you, and keep you from all euill.

4. And we are perswaded of you through the Lord, that yee both do, and will doe the things which wee command you.

5. And the Lord guide your harts to the loue of God, & the waiting for of Christ.

From vnreasonable and euill men. Which conspire against the Lord and his Anointed: which blaspheme that good name that is called vpon vs. Such were Iannes and Iambres, Iere. 44. which resisted Moses in the time of the Law. Such were they in the time of the Prophets, which said: The word that thou hast spoken vnto vs in the name of the Lord, we will not heare it of thee. But we will doe whatsoeuer thing goeth out of our owne mouth, as to burne incense to the Queene of Heauen, as we haue done, both we and our Fathers, our Kings and Matth. 15. our Princes. Such were in the time of the Gospell the Scribes and the Pharisies: Which made the commandement of God of no authoritie by their tradition. Which turned darknesse into light, and light into darknesse. Such was Alexander the copper smith. Such were others. The whole Scriptures are full of such. They were false Prophets, false Apostles, false Brethren. They caused diuision in the Church. They went out to preach in the name of Christ, but inwardly they were rauening wolues.

Such were in the daies of our fathers, and such there are in our daies: such Iannes and Iambres, such idoll worshippers, such scornes of Gods word, such Scribes and Pharisies, such Alexanders, such false Prophets, false Apostles, and false Brethren, we haue more than a good many in our daies. They pretend the Gospell: no man more. In companie of Protestants, they will be Protestants; in companie of others, they are quite become contrarie. They come to the Church, and receiue the holy Communion: they resort secretly to corners, where they heare Masse. They like the one, and like the other. They like the light, and they loue darknesse, and make no difference betweene them. These are ready to serue Christ, and also readie to serue Antichrist: faithfull neither to God, nor to Baal. And this is among many counted the highest point of wisedome, to be able so to colour and hide himselfe, that you shall not know what profession he is of, to what Church he ioineth himselfe, what Religion he holdeth, whose word or Gospell he followeth, in what God he beleeueth. Such there are. And they only be the singular men, reckoned the fine witts, and cunning fellows of the world. This is to be lamented, that in a Christian estate, there should be any such: that they at whose hands God shall require a straiter account, than of others, because he hath giuen them the vse of greater talents, either of wit or of learning, or of preferment, or of riches, should so misspend the good gifts of God, or vse his talents to such euill purpose, that they more than all other, should deuise meanes how to denie Christ among men, and, as much as in them lieth, to seeke to crucifie againe the Lord of glorie.

The Iewes deale not so wickedly, the Turkes deale not so traitorously. The Iew, although his case be miserable, and his heresies most dangerous; yet he is earnest in his follie: he will not dissemble his profession. The Turke is faithfull vnto Mahomet, and will not denie, or forsake him.

These false brethren, and dissembling Christians are worse than Iewes and Turkes. They are void of conscience, void of faith, void of feare, of shame, and of the grace of God. They are filthie swine, shamelesse dogges, and the enemies of the crosse of Christ. These hinder the passage of the Gospell, and blaspheme the holy word of their saluation, and do all that in them lieth to abolish the light of Gods truth. S. Paul telleth vs: All men haue not faith: many hearts be naked and void of faith, many seeme to liue, and yet are dead.

Howsoeuer these men carie out their doings in this life, they cannot mock God. He knoweth who are his. Chriſt ſhall ſay vnto theſe cunning witted diſſemblers; Depart from me ye hypocrites, I know you not. You ſhall receiue your portion with the Diuell & his Angels.

Pray that we may be deliuered from ſuch vnreaſonable and euill men, that they ſtop not the free paſſage of the Goſpell: that they may haue no power againſt the glory of God. Then ſhall it appeare, that God is faithfull in all his words, and holy in all his workes: that his truth and mercy ſhall laſt for euer. He will eſtabliſh vs in all goodneſſe, and defend vs from all euill: he will keepe vs from all the power of Satan: he will keepe vs from all temptation, that the wicked ſhall not preuaile againſt vs.

And we are perſwaded of you through the Lord, that yee both doe and will doe the things which we warne you of. You know what commandements wee gaue you by the Lord. I ſpake vnto you the will of God, and not mine owne. I was vnto you but a meſſenger, to deliuer vnto you ſuch an errand as God ſent vnto you: I hope yee haue receiued it in ſuch dutie as becommeth, and that you both doe, and will hereafter obey it. I am your Phyſitian: The receit which I haue giuen you, is ſoueraigne, and ſhall worke your health: I truſt it tarrieth with you, and you broke it well. I haue ſpoken vnto you in the name of God: his name is holy. He will cauſe that my labour ſhall not be in vaine, but will make it fruitfull in you. Although all men haue not faith, yet all men are not void of faith. Although there be many, the children of this world, yet there be ſome the children of light: he that is of God, heareth the word of God. They that be the ſonnes of God are obedient to the wiſdome of God their father. God guide your hearts, that you may loue him, that you may know what good God hath wrought vnto your ſoules: that you may ſee the deapth of his mercy: that in all your tribulation and aduerſitie vnder the croſſe, and in your death, you may looke for the day of Chriſt: when the trumpet ſhall be ſounded, the graues ſhall be opend, the dead bodies ſhall come forth, and wee ſhal be taken vp into the clouds: then ſhall hee change our vile body, that it may be like his glorious body: then ſhall wee be like the Angels of God, wee ſhall ſee God face to face, and reſt with him for euer.

VERS. 6. We warne you brethren in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, that yee withdraw your ſelues from euery brother that walketh inordinately, and not after the inſtruction which he receiued of vs.

The kingdome of God is like to a draw net caſt into the Sea, that gathereth of all kind of things: it is like a field, wherein groweth both corne and weeds. Many Virgins went out to wait vpon the Spouſe, ſome were wiſe, ſome were fooliſh: ſome had oile in their Lamps, ſome had none. Many came to the mariage, ſome had their wedding garment, ſome lacked it. Many are called, but few are choſen. Some beare the name of Chriſtians, yet liue in Uſurie, to the ſpoile and vndoing of their brethren. Some beare the name of Chriſtians, yet liue in adulterie and fornication, as the heathen which know not God. Theſe be they, through whom the name of God is euill ſpoken of. Matth. 13.

Therefore ſaith Paul, I warne you, that you withdraw your ſelues from euery brother, that walketh inordinately. Forſake him, refuſe his companie, eat not with him, drinke not with him, that ſo he may be aſhamed of his filthineſſe. Receiue him not to your houſe, nor bid him God ſpeed. For he that biddeth him, God ſpeed, is partaker of his euill deeds. Haue you no fellowſhip with the vnfruitfull workes of darkneſſe, but euen reproue them rather. A little leauen doth leauen the whole lump. The wrath of God ſhall come, not only vpon thoſe which commit wickedneſſe, but alſo vpon all thoſe which conſent to the working thereof. Among the Corinthians one had committed inceſt, and taken his fathers wife. Saint Paul ſaith, Let ſuch one be deliuered vnto Sathan, for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit may be ſaued in the day of the Lord Ieſus. Deliuer him vp to Satan. 1. Cor. 5.

Marke his words, and in what caſe he ſpeaketh them. For, they that delight in wickedneſſe, and are ſold ouer vnto ſinne, which are filthie, and increaſe in filthineſſe; they are not of God, they haue no part in the Church of God. The Diuell and Satan hath power ouer them, therefore deliuer them vp vnto Satan. The reward of ſinne is death: the ſoule which hath ſinned, ſhall die. For this cauſe hath the Church of God ordained excommunication; that he which hath done wickedly may be aſhamed: that others who are guiltleſſe may be afraid: and that the heauie diſpleaſure of God may be auoided.

We warne you (ſaith he) in the name of our Lord. You know mee, and my name, and that I am an Apoſtle of Chriſt. But the commandement which I giue you, is in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. I warne you by the glorious day of his comming, that you withdraw your ſelues from euery one that liueth inordinately. Receiue him not to your companie, bid him not God ſpeed, that you be not partakers of his euill, that he may know his filthineſſe, and be aſhamed. Yet let vs pray for ſuch, that they may be ſorie, that they may know whom they haue offended, and turne againe vnto the Lord. For, God would not the death of a ſinner, but that he repent of his wickednesse, and liue. The mercy of God is aboue all his workes.

VERS. 7. For yee your ſelues know, how yee ought to follow vs: for we behaued not our ſelues inordinately among you.

8. Neither tooke we bread of any man for nought: but we wrought with labour and trauell night & day, becauſe we would not be chargeable to any of you.

9. Not becauſe we haue not authoritie, but that we might make our ſelues an example vnto you, to follow vs.

10. For euen when we were with you, this we warned you of, that if there were any, which would not worke, that he ſhould not eat.

11. For we heare, that there are ſome which walke among you inordinately, and worke not at all, but are buſie bodies.

12. Therefore them that are ſuch, we warne and exhort by our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, that they worke with quietneſſe, and eat their owne bread.

13. And ye, brethren, be not wearie in well doing.

Here Paul maketh his ſpeech againſt thoſe, who vnder the pretence of the Goſpell liued idlely, and would not labour. Take an example of mee, I liued not idlely, I earned my bread, I was not chargeable to any. Do you as you haue vs for an example. So ought the ſeruants of God to liue, that their well doing may be a paterne for the people to follow.

1. Tim. 3. Saint Paul telleth Timothie, A Biſhop muſt be vnreproueable. He ſaith not, without ſinne: for no man is without ſinne: but, without rebuke. And againe: Let no man deſpiſe thy

1. Tim. 4. youth, but be vnto them that beleeue, an example in word, in conuerſation, in loue, in ſpirit, in faith, and in pureneſſe. And vnto Titus the Biſhop of Candia he ſaith: In all things ſhew thy ſelfe an example of good workes, with vncorrupt doctrine, with grauitie, integritie, and with the holſome word, which cannot bee condemned, that he which withſtandeth may be aſhamed, hauing nothing concerning you to ſpeake euill of. So, in this place to the Theſſalonians, he ſaith, You behold my converſation, how I haue liued among you. Be yee followers of mee: let mee be the patterne for you to follow. Such ſhould be the ſpeech of all thoſe who are Biſhops and Miniſters in the Church of God. They muſt walke ſo vprightly, that they may be vnto all others the paterns of good life, of liberalitie, of mercie, and of loue. They muſt carrie the arke of the Lord, that the people may follow them.

We behaued not our ſelues inordinately, &c. Whereas I was an Apoſtle of Chriſt, the firſt fruits of the Goſpell, a choſen veſſell, called from aboue, and ſet apart from mine owne buſineſſe, to be the embaſſadour of God into the world, and had ſo much to do: yet I vſed my hands, and pained my bodie, to get my bread. I liued like one of Adams children in trauell of my bodie, and ſought my bread in the ſweat of my browes. Not that I might not lawfully haue liued vpon you, and haue required my maintenance at your hands. It was lawfull for mee to haue done ſo, for the workman is worthy of his hire. God hath appointed, that he which teacheth the Goſpell, ſhall liue by the Goſpell.

1. Cor. 9. This matter S. Paul reaſoneth with the Corinthians: Haue we not power to eat and drinke? or haue we not power to lead about a wife, a ſiſter, aſwell as the reſt of the Apoſtles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas? Who goeth a warefare at any time at his owne coſt? Who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milke of the flock? I might eat and drinke at your charge, and require charges of you for mee, and mine. I am the ſouldier of God; Chriſt is my captaine: I haue planted the vine of the Lord of hoſts among you: I haue fed you, you are the ſhepe of the houſe of Iſraell. The hire due to the ſouldier, the fruit whereof he ſhould eat which keepeth the vine, and the milke which Chriſts ſhepe yeeld to their feeder, is nothing elſe but your charitable benevolence towards the ſeruants of Chriſt. Againe: It is written in the law of Moſes; Thou ſhalt not muſſell the mouth of the Oxe that treadeth out the corne. He trauelleth for thee, that thou maiſt liue. Suffer him to licke a little for his paines. We are the Lords Oxen, we threſh forth his corne. If we haue ſowen vnto you ſpirituall things, is it a great thing if we reap your carnall things? We are Gods huſbandmen, we trauell and take paines, we plough, we ſow, we harrow, we are abroad in wind and weather, in ſtorme, in haile, in lightning and thunder. No man knoweth the care the poore huſbandman taketh. Winter, nor Summer, our worke is neuer at an end. Now if we by our labour miniſter to you the bread which commeth from heauen, is it much that you giue vs the bread of the earth? Do you not know, that they which wait at the altar, are partakers with the altar? If thatis ſo ſeemed good vnto God, it is his appointment, he hath eſtabliſhed

it by his law, and it is moſt agreeable to the law of reaſon and nature.

Yet this is alſo to be weighed in the conſideration hereof, that whoſoeuer aſketh the pay a ſouldier, muſt buckle his armour, and goe a warfare. He that drinketh the wine, muſt plant the grape: he that requireth milke, muſt feed the flock: he that will not be muzled, muſt threſh the corne: he that reapeth carnall things, muſt ſow ſpirituall things: he that requireth the bread of the earth, muſt miniſter to his hearers the bread of heauen: he that will liue of the ſacrifice, or of the altar, or of the Goſpell: muſt offer the ſacrifice, wait vpon the altar, and teach the Goſpell. He that teacheth not the Goſpell, nor careth for the teaching: he that ſerueth not the Altar, nor careth for the ſeruing: he that goeth not on warfare, that planteth not, that feedeth not, that threſheth not, that ploweth not, that trauelleth not, that taketh no paines, that abideth not lightning, thunder, wind, weather, ſtorme and haile: he that carethnot to do theſe things: I can make no account of him. He is not within Pauls reckoning. The workman is worthy of his hire. But what right hath he to the hire which is not a workman?

I might, ſaith he, haue receiued maintenance at your hands. But I take nothing, that I might bee an example for you to follow, that none ſhould liue idlely, but that they worke with quietneſſe, and eat their owne bread. Idleneſſe is the mother of all miſchiefe. An idle packe, is as if he were already dead. His feet ſerue him not to trauell: his hands help him not to worke: his eies ſerue him not to ſee his eſtate: his heart regarded not the time and miſerie of his age. Beggerie falleth vpon him, & gnaweth his bones, but he feeleth it not. For he is, as if he were alreadie dead. Salomon ſaith: He that followeth idleneſſe, Prou. 12.
hath no vnderſtanding. And againe: He that followeth idleneſſe, ſhall be filled with pouer- Prou. 28.
tie. He is vnprofitable to himſelfe, and vnto others. His children ſhall beg at euery dore. Prou. 28.
Againe, he ſaith: The ſlothfull will not plough becauſe of winter: he ſhall beg in ſummer, Prou. 20.
but haue nothing. That is, men that haue receiued increaſe of Gods bleſſing by taking paines, ſhall denie bread vnto ſuch, and vpbraid them for their idleneſſe, and ſo driue them to labour. They will ſay, as it is deuiſed that the ant ſaid, in like caſe, to the graſhopper: In the Summer thou diddeſt nothing but ſing, therefore thou maiſt ſtarue in the winter. Theſe extremities be great, if a man will weigh them aduiſedly. Yet Eccleſiaſticus ſaith Eccle. 23.
farther: Idleneſſe bringeth much euill. It is an euill teacher. He that doth nothing is ill occupied. The mind of man is euer ſtirring and doing ſomewhat. If it be not doing well, it is doing ill. Water is cleare, and faire, freſh and comfortable: yet if it ſtand ſtill in a hole, or be kept long in a veſſell, whence it hath no iſſue, it will rot and ſmell, and be vnholeſom. Euen ſo it fareth with the ſonnes of Adam, if they haue nothing to do, no way to beſtow their wit, they will rot and proue vnholeſome, and deuiſe miſchiefe all the day long.

What is it that filleth the priſons and bringeth ſo many to the gallowes, and cauſeth ſo many parents to bewaile the vntimely death of their children, but idleneſſe? When the poore wretches haue receiued their iudgement, and come to the place of execution, and ſtand on the ladder, what counſell giue they to yong men, and to children, but to beware of idleneſſe? what is cauſe of ſuch, and ſo many diſeaſes in the body? Aſke the Phyſitians, and they will tell you, idleneſſe. Whereof riſe mutterings in Cities againſt Magiſtrats? Whereof riſe rebellions in Kingdomes againſt Princes? You can giue no greater cauſe thereof, than idle- Ezec. 16.
neſſe. Behold (ſaith the Lord) this was the iniquitie of thy ſiſter Sodome, pride, fulneſſe of bread, and a bundance of idleneſſe. This was it that called for fire downe from heauen, and Matth. 12.
walked ſo many cities into aſhes. Chriſt ſaith: Of euery idle word that men ſhall ſpeake, they ſhall giue an account thereof at the day of iudgement. If we ſhall make account for our idle words, what ſhall we doe for our idle hands, for our idle feet, for our idle body, for our idle ſoule? What account for all our idleneſſe, ſhall we make at the day of iudgement?

We warned you, ſaith the Apoſtle, that if any would not worke, the ſame ſhould not eat. This is a hard ſaying. Yet ſaith Paul, I my ſelfe haue kept it. I haue fulfilled it in mine own body. He doth not ſay, if any be ſicke, or weake, or impotent, and cannot worke, but if any be idle, and froward, and will not worke: to ſuch a one giue not to eat. That ſo he may ſee the danger of idleneſſe, and worke with his hands the thing which is good, that he may Ephe. 4.
haue to giue him that needeth. It is not lawfull to giue them the bread of the Church, and the almes ordained for releefe of the poore. This bread they may not eat.

But you will ſay, Kings and Counſellors, Biſhops, Preachers, and all other ſorts of learned men, neither plough, nor ſow, nor hedge nor ditch, nor vſe ſuch painfull labour of the body: they ſit at reſt & liue idlely. They that ſo thinke are deceiued. The toile which Princes take, and the great cares wherewith they are occupied, paſſe all other cares in the world. Saint Paul calleth the office of a Biſhop, a good worke. If a Biſhop, or Miniſter ſtudy the 1. Tim. 3.
Scriptures, preach the Goſpell, catechize the children, and take a care of the ſoules of Gods people: if he ſow the Lords Field, feede the Lords Flocke, threſh the Lords Corne, 2. Cor. 11.

and walke before the people carefully: if hée haue the care of the churches, and can ſay with
2. Cor. 11. the Apoſtle, Who is weake, and I am not weake? Who is offended, and I burnt not?
2. Tim. 4. Any offence that is giuen to my brother, is to mée as a fire, or as a torment. If he be inſtant in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon: if he doe the worke of an Euangeliſt, and make his miniſtery fully knowen; he ſhall finde himſelfe occupied, and not be idle.

The Maſter of the ſhip ſeemeth to be idle, to ſit ſtill, and to doe nothing. He ſtirreth not the pumpe, he driueth not the oares, he ſoundeth not the déepe, he rideth not the ropes, hée ſcaleth not the ſhrowds, hée runneth not hither and thither, forward or backward, vnder the hatches, or aboue. Yée ſitteth ſtill, holdeth his peace, and looketh vpon the load ſtar, and in appearance doth nothing. But his labour paſſeth all the reſt. Without his labour, all the paines, which the other Marines take, were loſt. Were it not for his labour, the ſhip would ſone ſtrike vpon rockes, and be ſtaied in the ſands, and they all ſhould periſh. Euen ſo fareth it in the ſtate of Princes, and of their Counſellours, they ſéeme to do nothing, yet they do all things, which is for the peace, and the wealth, & the ſafegard of all the people.

Be not weary in well doing. Many occations to diſcourage you to doe well: the world is full of lets; but be you ſtedfaſt, vnmoueable, and abundant alwaies in the worke of the Lord, foraſmuch as you know that your labour is not in vaine in the Lord. Stand faſt, and kéepe the inſtructions, which you haue béene taught. Diſtribute to the neceſſity of the Saints. Doe good vnto all men, eſpecially to them that be of the houſhold of faith. Liue not after the luſts of men in wantonneſſe, drunkenneſſe, and gluttony, and in abominable idolatrie. Though they ſpeake euill of you becauſe you run not with them vnto the ſame exceſſe of riot: though the diuell caſt you into priſon, and there you haue tribulation, be you faithfull vnto death. They that haue afflicted you ſhall giue an account to the righteous Iudge: and the afflictions which you ſuffer in this preſent time are not worthy of the glory which ſhall be ſhewed vnto you.

VERS. 14. If any man obey not this our ſaying, note him by a letter, and haue no company with him, that he may be aſhamed.

15. Yet count him not as an enemie, but admoniſh him as a brother.

You haue béene taught not onely what you ſhall beléeue, but alſo how yée ought to liue: be yée doers of the word, and not hearers onely. If any deſpiſe and will not follow our doctrine, forſake him, and let him haue no fellowſhip with you: that ſo he may be aſhamed, and repent, and turne againe to the obedience of Chriſt. But lay apart all bitternéſſe, and anger, and wrath. Remoue him, but hate him not. Will the ſinne that is in him by all the meanes you can, for it is the worke of the diuel: but recouer againe the man that did offend, and reſtore him, if it be poſſible, by exhortation, and by your praiers made for him: for he is the creature of God.

Heere I haue good occaſion to ſpeake of excommunication, a principal part of the diſcipline of the Church: a matter which many know not, which ſome doe foulely abuſe, and ouer lightly giue forth, and which many regard not as they ought. It cutteth vs off from the body of Chriſt, and remoueth vs from the fellowſhip of the Goſpell. Let no man deſpiſe it: It is the ſword of God, the power of the holy Ghoſt, the diſcipline of Chriſt, it is an ordinance which the Church hath receiued from aboue.

By it the goats are diuided from the lambs, the wéed from the good corne, and the ſonnes of God from the ſonnes of Belial. It hath continued from the beginning and hath béene vſed in the Church of Chriſt, in the Synagogue of the Iewes, in the law of Moſes, and before Moſes receiued the law: among the Patriarchs, and the Prophets, and the Apoſtles of Chriſt.
Matth. 18. Chriſt ſaith: If thy brother treſpaſſe againſt thee, in doing any wickednéſſe, go and tel him his fault betweene thee, and him alone: if he heare thee, thou haſt wone thy brother. But if he heare thee not, take yet with thee one or two: and if he will not vouchſafe to heare them, tell it vnto the Church: publiſh it, and make it knowen: And if he refuſe to heare the Church alſo: if he continue wilfull, and ſtand in his wickednéſſe: Let him be vnto thee as a Heathen man and a Publican. This forme of excommunication our Sauior hath ſet downe, whereby the wicked and vngodly are remoued from the Church of Chriſt.
1. Cor. 5. So Saint Paul ſpeaketh of him that liued in filthinéſſe, with his fathers wife. That they giue him no comfort in wickednéſſe, but take away the euill from among them. Let ſuch a one, ſaith hée, bee deliuered vnto Satan, for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit may be ſaued in the day of our Lord Ieſus. Company not together with fornicatours. If any that is called a brother, be a fornicatour, or couetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with ſuch a one eat not. Let him be put away from the company of
1. Tim. 1. the faithful. So did S. Paul excommunicate Himenæus, and Alexander, and deliuered them to Satan, that they might learne not to blaſpheme.

In

In the law of Moſes God commanded the children of Iſrael to put out of the hoſt euery leper; that they ſhould neither eat, nor drinke, nor walke abroad, nor come to Church, nor offer Sacrifice, nor make their prayers with the people. Such one, whitherſoeuer he went, hid his face, rent his clothes, gaue warning to auoid his companie, and to flie from him, becauſe he was foule and filthy. His hands were filthy, and made the water vncleane, his breath was corrupt, and infected the aire. So miſerable was his caſe. This was a kind of excommunication: in ſuch ſort were the filthy diuided from the cleane. Num. 5.

God alſo ſet downe this ordinance to Abraham, that euery vncircumciſed manchild, ſhould be cut off from his people, becauſe hee hath broken the couenant. This ordinance of excommunication God hath appointed againſt Idolaters, againſt fornicators, and craftie deceiuers, and other ſuch like offenders in the ſeuen and twentieth of Deuteronomie: Curſed bee the man that ſhall make any carued or molten Image, an abomination vnto the Lord, the worke of the hands of the craftſman, and putteth it in a ſecret place. And all the people ſhall anſwer and ſay, Amen. Curſed be he, that maketh the blind goe out of the way: and all the people ſhall anſwer and ſay, Amen. This is excommunication. This is the vſe of the keies. This is that, of which Chriſt ſpake: He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me: and he that deſpiſeth me, deſpiſeth him that ſent me. And, Whoſoeuer ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted: and whoſoeuer ſinnes ye retaine, they are retained. Whatſoeuer ye bind on earth, ſhall be bound in heauen: and whatſoeuer ye looſe on earth, ſhall be looſed in heauen. That which you ſay, ſhall be confirmed: it ſhall continue and ſtand for euer. Gen. 17. Luke 10. Iohn 20. Matth. 18.

If any therefore be excommunicate from the Church, and remoued from the fellowſhip of the Goſpell, and from the hope of the life to come; let him humble himſelfe, and pray vnto God, that he will open his eies, and that he may ſee in what caſe he ſtandeth. Let him lay forth his heart in the ſight of God, and conſider his fault, & behold his miſery, and think thus with himſelfe: I was ſometimes the child of God, and a member of his body: I was a branch of the Vine, which God hath planted: and a ſhep of his paſture. But now alas I am diuided from the paſtures of life. I am fruitleſſe and withered, and cut off from that bleſſed Vine. I receiue no moiſture from that heauenly rot: I am no more a member of the body of Chriſt. I am out of Paradiſe, and haue no ioy, or pleaſure, I am out of the Temple and cannot offer any ſacrifice: I am fallen from that heauenly Hieruſalem, from the Citie of God, from the fellowſhip of the Saints, and cannot kneele downe, nor lift vp my hands, nor make my prayers. God will not heare me, I am none of his: I am as a heathen and a publican, I can not thinke of thoſe things which are on high aboue.

But why art thou cut off from thy brethren, and baniſhed out of the flocke of Chriſt? Becauſe of thine vngodlineſſe, and loſneſſe of life. Becauſe thou haſt offended heauen and earth: and haſt offended againſt the Church of God, and liued in fornication, and adulterie: and both thy body and thy minde are defiled: thou art vnworthy to dwell in the houſe of God: his houſe is holy.

By what authority is this done? Thou muſt not thinke that the Iudge, or the Officer doth it. It is not the iudgement of any mortall man. It is the iudgement of the Almighty, and euerlaſting God. It is his hand that bringeth this to paſſe againſt thee. It is his word, it is his key. His hand is mighty, his worke ſhall ſtand, his word is forcible, his key is the key of Dauid, it openeth, and no man ſhutteth; it ſhutteth, and no man openeth. God is departed from thy heart: his ſpirit will not dwell in a filthy ſoule: there is no agreement betweene God and Belial. Thy ſoule is void of grace, and of the feare of God.

What becommeth of thee in this caſe? Whither doeſt thou goe, into what miſerie doeſt thou fall? Into the gulfe of death: into the ſeat of peſtilence, and the power of Satan, and the ſnares of the Diuell, and into a reprobate minde. Thy heart followeth him: thy ſoule ſerueth him. He is the father of all the children of diſobedience, and his children follow him. Thou art filthy, and increaſeſt in filthineſſe, the feare of God is not before thee, thou doeſt not acknowledge thy ſinne, becauſe of the blindneſſe of thy heart.

Wreake not thy ſelfe vpon thy neighbor, that accuſed thee; nor vpon the Iudge, that pronounced ſentence againſt thee. The ſentence is none of his: this is not his worke, he hath not iudged thee. The hand of God is ſtretched forth to thy puniſhment: it is thine owne life and wickednеſſe which forceth iudgement vpon thee. The Iudge ſitteth in the place of God, in the ſeat of iuſtice: he cannot bleſſe that God hath curſed: he muſt needs doe right and equitie. He ſeeth the abomination of thy life, he ſeeth the filthineſſe which thou haſt done in the houſe of GOD, and therefore ſaith: In nomine Dei, &c. In the name of the liuing God, and of Ieſus Chriſt, before whom I ſtand, and before whom all fleſh ſhall appeare: by the authoritie of his word, and by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, I diuide thee from the fellowſhip of the Goſpell, and declare, that thou art no more a member of the bodie of Chriſt, thy name is put out of the bookes of Life: thou haſt no part in the life to come: thou art not in Chriſt, and Chriſt is departed from thee. I deliuer thee to Sathan, the Prince of darkneſſe. Thy reward ſhall be in the lake that burneth with fire and brimſtone. Thou ſhalt ſtarue and wither, and not abide. The grace of God is taken out of thy heart. The face of the Lord is againſt all them that doe euill, they ſhall not taſte of his mercie.

As for the Iudge and Miniſter, which giueth ſentence againſt thee, he mourneth and lamenteth for thee. When he ſtriketh thee, he ſtriketh himſelfe. We are all one fleſh, and one blood, and all together make one body, and are one anothers members. Therefore, when he doth excommunicate thee from the brethren, he cutteth of an arme from his owne body. Ieremie dealt roughly with the people that offended God, and threatned them, that the enemy ſhould come vpon them, the ſword ſhould deuoure them, and they ſhould be vtterly deſtroied; yet he wiſht that he had a ſtreame of teares, that his heart might haue wherewith to mourne for their tranſgreſſions.

Pſal. 59. Pſal. 35. Pſal. 69. Pſal. 109. Dauid praieth that God wil ſtretch forth his hand vpon the wicked: Scatter them abroad by thy power, and put them downe, oh Lord our ſhield, Againe: Let them be chaffe before the winde, and let the Angell of the Lord ſcatter them. And againe: Let their table bee a ſnare before them, and their proſperitie their ruine. Againe: Let his praier bee turned into ſinne. Aid him not, heare him not when he calleth vnto thee. Yet he ſaith: I ſaw the tranſgreſſors, and was greeued, becauſe they kept not thy word. I pined away and conſumed to death, the griefe was ſo deadly vnto my ſoule.

Luke 19. Chriſt cried out woe vpon Corazin, and Bethſaida: vpon the Scribes and Phariſies: yet when he came nigh to Hieruſalem he wept ouer it: Saying, Oh if thou haddeſt euen now at the leaſt in this thy day knowen thoſe things, which belong vnto thy peace! but now are they hid from thee. Thine enemies ſhall make thee euen with the ground, they ſhall not leaue in thee a ſtone vpon, a ſtone, becauſe thou knoweſt not the time of thy viſitation.

2. Cor. 11. Euen ſuch a ſorrow alſo had S. Paul for thoſe that offended God: Who is weake, and I am not weake, who is offended, and I burne not? My body is ſhaken, my heart is wounded for them, ſuch a care haue I for the Church of God.

Euſe. lib. 3. cap. 23. It is reported of Iohn the Euangeliſt, that he commended a yong man to the education of a certaine Biſhop nigh to Epheſus: and when hee heard that he was fled and followed the company of ſuch as were diſſolute, riotous, and giuen ouer to all maner leaudneſſe; he was carefull for him, and ſought him out. And came to the place, where hee & his ill company were. When the yong man knew him, hee was aſtonied, and fled away from him. But the old man followed him, and cried, Oh my child turne againe, turne vnto mee, I am thy Father, I haue begotten thee in Chriſt Ieſus. I come not to hurt thee, there is yet hope of ſaluation, I will make anſwer vnto Chriſt for thee. Fall to the ground, hold vp thy hands, aſke mercie of GOD, he is mercifull and will receiue thee. At theſe words the yong man caſt downe his weapons, and trembled, and wept bitterly, and was conuerted.

2. Sam. 18. When Dauid heard of the deſtruction of that wicked wight Abſalon, he wrung his hands and wept, ſaying: O my ſon Abſalon, my ſon, my ſon Abſalon, would God I had died for thee, O Abſalon, my ſon, my ſon. Such a care, ſuch a loue, and zeale hath a godly miniſter ouer his people, if he be a true paſtor, which hath taken his calling from God, and hath due conſideration of his charge.

He weepeth for the ſinnes of the people, as did Ieremie: he guſhed out into teares, and conſumeth away, as Dauid, becauſe of the vngodly: he is wounded at heart, & trembleth, as Paul, to ſee them periſh. He ſeeketh for them, calleth after them, that they may returne to him, as did Iohn the Euangeliſt: and is willing to die for their ſake, if ſo be hee might redeeme them, as Dauid was for Abſalon. The people are his children, he is their father. Albeit they be wicked, and filthy; yet he preſenteth himſelfe before God for them, and poureth forth his praiers: and ſaith, Sanctifie them O Lord, ſanctifie them with thy truth, thy word is truth. Let their hearts feare the wrath to come, and thy heauy diſpleaſure, which they haue deſerued, and hangeth ouer their heads. They are thine, ſaue them, and let not Satan preuaile againſt them. Turne them O Lord, and they ſhall be turned. Giue them a new heart, and renue a cleane ſpirit in them, that they may feare thee all the daies of their life. Turne away the captiuity of their ſoules. Bring them to the fellowſhip of the Goſpell: make them liuely ſtones meet for thy building, build vp the walles of Hieruſalem. So carefull is a good miniſter for the people of his charge, be they neuer ſo vngodly. Yea the more they lacke the comfortable grace of God, the more muſt be his care for them. This is that S. Paul ſaith, haue no company with ſuch, to incourage him; yet count him not as an enemy, but admoniſh him as a brother.

VERS.

Vers. 16. Now the Lord of peace, giue you peace alwaies by all meanes. The Lord be with you all.

17. The ſalutation of me Paul, with mine owne hand, which is the token in euery Epiſtle: ſo I write.

18. The grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt be with you all.

I néed not commend peace vnto you. It is the guard and ſtrength of mighty Princes: it is the Nurſe and foſterer of the Church of God: it is the wealth and proſperitie of the world: it is the comfort and quietneſſe of our conſcience: it is truce taken with God and man, and our owne ſelues. I néed not to tell you who is the worker of peace. You know God is the God of peace. Worldly peace ſéemeth to be made by the will and liking of men: but God moueth their hearts, and eſtabliſheth it. But the peace of the heart, and quietneſſe of minde paſſeth all vnderſtanding. The power, and wiſdome, and ſtrength, and riches of all the world are not able to make it. It is the glorie of God, that he alone is the God of peace.

I pray for you, that nothing may be done among you, to the hinderance of peace: but that it abide with you alwaies, not for a while, not in proſperitie only: but in perſecution, in your death, and for euer. If God be with you, you ſhall haue peace. And if you loue one another and kéepe his word, God will come to you, and loue you, and abide with you, and giue you the comfort of his peace.

The ſalutation of me Paul. He gaue them warning before of falſe Apoſtles, who came in his name, and pretended his word, or his letter: therefore now telleth them, how they ſhall know certainly, whether ſuch Epiſtles as they receiue, be his, written, or ſent by him. In euery Epiſtle, that I ſend, ſaith he, to the Churches, or to any the brethren, I writ mine owne name, and ſend this greeting written with mine owne hand, which now I ſend to you all: The grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt be with you all. Amen.

CERTAINE SERMONS OF BISHOP IEWEL.

Ioshva 6.

NOw Hiericho was ſhut vp and cloſed, becauſe of the children of Iſrael, none might goe out, nor enter in.

2. And the Lord ſaid vnto Ioſhua, Behold I haue giuen into thine hand, Hiericho, and the King thereof, and the ſtrong men of war.

3. All yee therefore, that be men of war, ſhall compaſſe the Citie, &c.

IN diuers maners God ſpake and opened himſelfe to our Fathers: by viſions and dreames, by Sacraments, by Angels, by plaine expreſſe words, by Allegories, by ſecret and myſticall vnderſtanding, where one thing is couered vnder another. And all this did hee, that he might condeſcend to our capacitie: that wee might be conuerted and ſaued: that we might be guided in the right way, and not goe aſide, neither to the right hand, nor to the left. By viſion God ſpake to Ezechiel, as appeareth in the firſt Chapter of his prophecie: The wheeles which he ſaw were horrible to behold, they were full of rings, and the rings were full of eies: the foure beaſts were alſo terrible, they had faces like a man, like a Lion, like a Bullocke, and like an Eagle. Ezek. 1.

In dreame God ſpake to Samuel, ſaying: Behold, I will doe a thing in Iſrael, whereof whoſoeuer ſhall heare, his two eares ſhall tingle, &c. 1. Sam. 3.

Touching Sacraments God himſelfe ſaith: Thou ſhalt ſhew thy Sonne in that day, ſaying, This is done, becauſe of that which the Lord did vnto me when I came out of Ægypt. Thou ſhalt ſet apart vnto the Lord all that firſt openeth the wombe, &c. And when thy Sonne ſhall aske thee to morrow, ſaying, What is this? thou ſhalt then ſay vnto him, With a mighty hand the Lord brought vs out of Ægypt, out of the houſe of bondage. For when Pharao was hard hearted againſt our departure, the Lord then ſlue all the firſt borne in the land of Ægypt, from the firſt borne of man, euen to the firſt borne of beaſt: therefore I ſacrifice vnto the Lord all the males that firſt open the wombe; but all the firſt borne of my ſonnes I redeeme. Exod. 13.

Sometimes he ſpake by Angels, as by ſundry examples it may appeare. Sometimes by himſelfe in his owne perſon, as he ſpake to Moſes face to face. Sometimes by plaine expreſſe words: Thou ſhalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoule, and with all thy might. Deut. 6.

And againe: Thou ſhalt haue none other Gods before my face; Thou ſhalt make thee no grauen Image, &c. Deut. 5.

Theſe are plaine words: theſe are the words which our Lord God hath ſpoken. Sometimes he expreſſed his holy will, not in words, or viſions, or in ſuch ſort as I haue ſhewed, but only by ſome myſticall or ſecret Allegorie, by ſome deed which the people ſaw done before their eies: of which kind is this which wee haue now to conſider. Therefore hath God ſaid by the Prophet: What could I haue done any more to my vineyard, that I haue not done vnto it? What ſhould I do, but it hath been done? What ſhould I ſay, but it hath been ſaid? What warning ſhould I giue, but it hath been giuen? I haue been carefull for my people, that they ſhould repent and turne to me, that all Iſrael ſhould be ſaued. If they periſh, I am free from their deſtruction: they periſh in their owne wilfulneſſe, they haue none excuſe. Eſai 5.

Now touching an Allegorie, whereof we are at this preſent to ſay: God opened his mind ſomtimes not by words, but by ſome notable kind of deed: and the people heard God ſpeake vnto them, not with their eares, but with their eies. The people of Iſrael as they were paſſing thorow the wilderneſſe, lacked water to drinke, and were like to periſh; there ſtood a mighty great Rocke of hard ſtone, which Moſes ſmot with his rod, it opened and yalded out a great ſtreame of water; the whole people dranke of it, and was refreſhed: the ſame people being likewiſe in the ſame wilderneſſe vtterly void of bread, & all other ſuſtenance, was like to famiſh; God ſent them Manna from Heauen aboue, they gathered it, they ground it, and they ate of it: it was ſweet and delicate, and full of comfort.

This was an Allegory, that is to ſay, a ſecret and myſticall kind of vtterance. For, by this Manna, and by this Rocke, the people was led to vnderſtand and thinke on that bread
2. Cor. 10. and that water that ſhould come from heauen. S. Paul ſaith; the Rocke was Chriſt: his ſide was clouen, his blod iſſued out, it is a water ſpringing vp into euerlaſting life, we drinke of it, and liue for euer.

So likewiſe that Manna was the body of Chriſt, the people did eat of it, and liued by it. Chriſt had not yet taken vpon him a naturall body, yet they did eat his body: he had not yet
1. Cor. 10. ſhed his blod, yet they dranke his blod. S. Paul ſaith: All did eat the ſame ſpirituall meat, that is, the body of Chriſt: and all did drinke of the ſame ſpirituall drinke, that is, the blod of Chriſt, and that as verily and as truely as we do now; and whoſoeuer then did ſo eat Chriſt, liued for euer, not becauſe the Rocke was turned into his fleſh, or the water into his blod: it was an Allegory, as all other Sacraments be: the people hereby was taught to conſider of other things.

When the people was ſtung with Serpents in the wilderneſſe, and were ſwollen, and heaued vp, and periſhed in the wilderneſſe without hope of cure, Moſes erected vp a braſen Serpent vpon a pole: the people beheld it, their anguiſh abated, their ſwelling ſlaked, and they were healed: Chriſt was this Serpent, he was lifted vpon the Croſſe: whoſo truſteth in him ſhall neuer be aſhamed.

In certaine of their ſacrifices they had a Lambe, they ſtickt him, they killed him, and made ſacrifice of him: this Lambe was Chriſt the Sonne of God, he was killed, ſtickt, and Matth. 3. made a ſweet ſmelling Sacrifice for our ſinnes. Of him ſaith God himſelfe: This is my be-Iohn 1. loued Sonne, in whom I am well pleaſed. Of him ſaith Iohn: Behold the Lambe of God, Act. 4. which taketh away the ſinnes of the World. Of him Saint Peter ſpeaketh: Among men there is none other name giuen vnder Heauen, whereby we muſt be ſaued. In his righteouſneſſe only we are receiued as righteous, his blod cleanſeth vs from all ſinne, there is no other Sacrifice wherewith we may be reconciled to God our heauenly Father: All theſe were Allegories, that is to ſay, certaine reſemblances and ſignifications of ſecret matters. That ſtriking of the Rocke, that feeding vpon Manna, that lifting vp of the Serpent, that killing of the Lambe, were certaine myſticall kindes of ſpeaking. And let no man thinke theſe things are impertinent, or from the purpoſe: they are incident vnto the matter, and grow neceſſarily of the things we haue to ſpeake of.

When Ioſhuah that noble and worthy Captaine by Gods ſpeciall conduct had paſſed thorow the water of Iordan, and taken poſſeſſion in the Land of Canaan, a Land flowing with milke and hony, there to plant the people of Iſrael according to the promiſes that God had made them; the Citizens of Hiericho that ſtood in the frontiers of the Countrey, rampired their wall, and placed their artillery, and appointed themſelues to reſiſt him, and to withſtand his force. To aſſault this Citie, Ioſhuah practiſed a ſtrange kind of battery. He commanded that the Arke of Gods Maieſty ſhould be caried reuerently about the walles ſeuen daies together, and that the whole hoſt in armour ſhould goe before it: that after them ſhould follow ſeuen Prieſts with ſeuen Trumpets, that all the reſt of the people ſhould follow after the Arke: and that thus they ſhould doe euery day once. The ſeuenth day he increaſed their labour, and bade them to goe about ſeuen times in like order. The people within laughed them to ſcorne to ſee their folly. At the ſeuenth and laſt turne, Ioſhuah commanded them all to make a ſhout. Straightway after ſo long ſilence, they lifted vp their voices, and ſhouted with a great ſhout, ſo many hundred thouſands of men, women, and children: the Trumpets blew in euery corner, the whole Heauen and Earth was full of their noiſe, and the wall fell downe flat.

Here let vs conſider and glorifie the power of God: there was neither mine, nor ramme, nor other engine, nor warlike force, nor worldly policy practiſed: onely at this roare and ſound of Trumpets, and voices of men, the rampiers were broken, the walles fell downe, and ſunke, and were made euen with the ground: the Souldiers went ouer and ſlew without mercy, man, woman, and child, and cattell, and whatſoeuer creature they found before them: they fired the Citie, and conſumed it, and burnt it to aſhes.

Then Ioſhua ſware at that time, ſaying, Curſed be the man before the Lord, Whoſoeuer hereafter ſhall take in hand to reſtore this City of Hiericho: Let him lay the foundation thereof in the death of his eldest Sonne, and in the death of his yongest child let him close vp and finish the gates: let him neuer more reioice in the fruit of his body, but let him liue as a man accursed in the middest of the people: let his name and memorie, and all his posteritie perish with him. This was the tenor of Iosh uas curse.

Sir hundred yeres after, in the time of the wicked King Achab, one Hiel (hauing no regard to his curse) set vpon to reedifie Hiericho: and it came to passe euen as it was foresaid by Iosh ua, Gods curse fell vpon him, he buried his eldest Sonne, he buried his yongest Sonne, he was left without comfort, euen as a man that the Lord had cursed: for Gods will was that Hiericho should lie wast, and desolate for euer, as an euerlasting remembrance of his wrath, that all people should feare to withstand his will. This is the plaine story only, according to the letter. 1. King. 16.

But as touching the Allegorie, or the matter which therein lieth couered, it hath a farre deeper meaning. This Hiericho whereof the story speaketh, was a citie in Canaan, in a low, sower, barren ground, in the middest of a rotten and pestilent water, by reason whereof before the same water was cured by the Prophet Elizeus, the men that dranke thereof died of sundry diseases, and the women also became vnfruitfull. This City withstood the people of God, and laboured to keepe them from their inheritance that God had giuen them. 2. King. 2.

That Hiericho, of which we haue now to consider, is a spirituall power of darkenesse, that resteth only in flesh, and in worldly promises, that withstandeth Gods people, and exalteth it selfe against God. For euen in this life, as there is a Ierusalem, so is there a Hiericho: as truth hath her house, so is there also a house wherein falshood and errour dwelleth. As there is a glorie of the light, so is there a power of darkenesse. This Hiericho of falshood and darkenesse God ouerthroweth when it seemeth good in his sight, with the breath of his mouth, and with the blast of his holy word he doth ouerthrow it, and whosoeuer will seeke to reedifie it shall be accursed.

There things therefore I haue thought good by Gods sufferance to treat of.

1. First, how high this Hiericho is built, and how strongly it is fenced, and yet how easily it is ouerthrowen.

2. How vainely, and how miserably they lose their labour, that seeke by any meanes to reedifie it.

3. What good remedies may be deuised, that this Hiericho be not reedified againe.

Whatsoeuer my simple learning or vtterance shall be, yet I doubt not, but the very bare consideration hereof, of it selfe, vnto the godly must needs be comfortable.

They that goe downe to the Sea in ships, and occupie by the great waters, they see the workes of the Lord, and his wonders in the deepe. For God is marueilous in the surges and tempests of the Sea: he is marueilous in the firmament of Heauen: but much more marueilous is he in the surges and stormy tempests of his Church. Here may we behold the worke of his hands. This is the shop of his power, of his wisedome, of his light, & truth, and righteousnesse, and patience, and mercy. Here may we see the children of light, and the children of darkenesse: the vessels of honor, and the vessels of shame: the assaults of falshood, and the glorie and victorie of truth. Here shall we see how God leadeth euen into Hell, and yet bringeth safely backe: how he killeth, and yet reuiueth: how he refuseth the full, and feedeth the hungrie: how he is the ruine of many, and the resurrection of many. Here may we see the wonderfull waies, and the vnsearchable iudgements of God. It is a place full of terrour, and a place full of all comfort. In respect hereof the Prophet Dauid saith; O Lord our Lord, how wonderfull is thy name in all the world! Againe he saith: One thing haue I desired of the Lord, that I will require, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the daies of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to visite his Temple. Psal. 107. Psalm. 8. Psalm. 27.

Hiericho was a mighty strong Towne, well manned, well victualed, well walled, well fenced: and in affiance thereof it withstood the whole power of Gods armie. Iosh ua (notwithstanding he had great force of armed men) during the assault, suffered no man to vse his weapon: he willed them all to walke quietly, and silent, without doing violence: his strength was not in the number and courage of men, but only in the Arke, that is, in the presence and power of God.

Thus it fareth often times in spirituall warfares: falshood is armed, and truth goeth naked: falshood maketh outcries, and truth saieth little: falshood is bold, and truth is outfaced. Blindnesse of it selfe naturally is hardy and venturous: and falshood is wily and shifting. When the high Priests and Captaines of the Temple, and the elders were come to lay hands on Christ, he said vnto them: This is your verie houre, and the power of darkenesse. Their hearts were darkned, their eies were blinded, they saw not their waies, they knew not their dangers, they would not vnderstand, they would not bee taught: malice and frowardnes had made them blinde, therefore the feare of God was not before their eies. Luke 22.

Pſal. 2. Luke 19. Ierem. 44. Herein ſtood their power, therefore they were bold, and ſaid: Let vs breake their bands, and caſt their cords from vs. Therefore they ſaid: We will not haue this man to raigne ouer vs. Therefore they ſaid: The word that thou haſt ſpoken to vs in the name of the Lord, we will not heare it of thee. Thus cried they, becauſe of the blindneſſe which was in them, and becauſe of the folly of their hearts.

Yet is there no ſouldier ſo ſtout in defence of Hiericho, as he that thinketh his cauſe is good, and that his doing pleaſeth God well, and therefore is moued thereto in conſcience. None ſo deſperate & wilful for the falſhood and darkneſſe of Hiericho, as ſuch who haue zeale without knowledge, as are blinde, and follow their blinde guides: who when they ſlander, or perſecute, or kill others for righteouſneſſe ſake, thinke they make a ſacrifice vnto God, and that God is highly pleaſed with their doing. Such were they that cried againſt Chriſt: Iohn 19. Crucifie him, Crucifie him: And, Matth. 26. He hath blaſphemed. Therefore Chriſt maketh his prayer Luke 23. for them: Father, forgiue them; for they know not what they doe. They know not me, they know not whence I come, nor who it is that ſent me, they take light for darkneſſe, and Prou. 3. darkneſſe for light. Therefore the wiſe man ſaith: Leane not vnto thine owne wiſedome, Prou. 14. do not the things that ſeeme right in thine owne eies. There is a way which ſeemeth right to a man, but the iſſues therof are the waies of death. It ſameth Catholike, it ſameth holy, but 1. Cor. 2. the end thereof leadeth to death. S. Paul ſaith of the Iewes: If they had knowen the wiſedome of God, they would not haue crucified the Lord of glorie. If their eies had bin open to ſee him, if their heart and vnderſtanding had bin open to know him, they had not bene guilty of innocent blood, they would not haue betraied the Lord of glory.

But Hiericho is not onely thus ſenſed with blinde zeale and wilfull ignorance, but alſo often times hath helpe of mans ſtrength, and the fauour and ſuccour of worldly power. The Egyptians had mighty Chariots, ſtraked & barred with iron, in the ſtrength whereof they put their truſt. The people of Babylon built themſelues a Tower as high as the Pſal. 2. Heauens, to ſhew forth their pride, and get themſelues a name. Hereof Dauid ſaith: The Kings of the earth band themſelues, and the Princes are aſſembled together againſt the Lord, and againſt his Chriſt. He ſaith not, the vulgar people, or a ſort of Raſcals onely, but Kings and Princes, and they which beare authoritie in the world, aſſembled themſelues againſt the Lord, and in this power they thinke they are inuincible.

Exod. 5. When Moſes and Aaron did the meſſage of God vnto Pharao, ſaying: Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael; Pharao ſaid: Who is the Lord, that I ſhould heare his voice, and let Iſrael goe? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Iſrael goe. What is his power? What hurt can he doe? I know him not, I care not for him, Iſrael ſhall not depart my country. So ſaid Dan. 3. Nabuchodonoſor: Who is that God, that can deliuer you out of mine hands? In like ſort did 1. Kings 19. Sennacherib king of the Aſſyrians vant himſelfe in the pride of his ſtrength, & did defiance againſt the God of Iſrael: Thus ſhall ye ſpeake to Ezechiah King of Iuda, and ſay, Let not thy God deceiue thee, in whom thou truſteſt, ſaying, Ieruſalem ſhal not be deliuered into the hand of the King of Aſſur. Haue the gods of the Heathen deliuered them which my fathers haue deſtroied? Reue. 18. And euen ſo doth S. Such courage haue the Citizens of this ignorant Hiericho taken in the ſtrength of mans arme, & in the help of worldly policy.

Then they fell to ſword and perſecution, and all kind of torments and cruell death: the 1. Cor. 4. people deſpaired, the verie elect began to faint: S. The Prophet Dauid prayeth vnto God Pſal. 74. againſt ſuch: Ariſe O God, maintaine thine owne cauſe: remember thy daily reproach by the fooliſh man. So ſtrong is the hold of this ſpirituall Hiericho: and ſo ſtoutly it fighteth againſt the Lord.

Albeit Hiericho was ſo ſtrong, and the walles therof ſeemed inuincible, ſuch as no power could pierce, yet at the ſound of ſeuen trumpets, and the ſhout of the people, they fell downe flat to the ground. So mightily did God in ſuch weake meanes ſhew forth his wonderfull and fatherly care to worke the reſt and peace of his people. Pharao had Iſrael euen in his mouth as a pray, the Sea was before them, and the hils on each ſide: they were vnarmed, he had the power, and all the policie of his countrie: it ſeemed impoſſible they ſhould euer maruellous workes of God, how it was now performed which God had said vnto Pharao: Thou shalt perish from the earth: and indeed for this cause haue I appointed thee, to shew my power in thee, and to declare my name throughout all the world. Therefore they reioiced in God, and feared him, and made him sacrifice.

Nabuchodonosor when he fell vpon Iurie, made the whole countrie to shake with the terrour of his name. He was like to a mighty great tree, whose height reached to the heauens, and the sight thereof thorow all the world: yet suddenly was this mighty tree hewen downe, as the holy one that came downe from heauen had said: Hew downe the tree, and Dan. 4.
destroy it. Nabucodonosor was driuen from men, and had his dwelling with the beasts of the field, and did eat grasse and fodder as the oxen, seuen yeeres, till his haires were growen as Eagles feathers, and his nailes like birds clawes. The power of Senacherib was terrible, the people of Israel were not able to withstand it, he did glory in the pride thereof, he said no God was able to deliuer Ierusalem, nor to saue it out of his hands: yet suddenly the An- 2. It were an infinite labour, and yet very comfortable, to consider, how marueilously God in the old times hath ouerthrown his enemies, and deliuered his poore seruants.

Dauid to saue his life, was faine to runne from king Saul, and remained in a mountaine 1. Sam. 23.
in the wildernesse of Ziph, and Saul sought him euery day, but God deliuered him not into his hand. Dauid was not only without aid or hope of aid, but also without sustenance, and loked when he should be taken, and thought it not possible to escape: for Saul and his men compassed Dauid and his men round about to take them. But there came a messenger to Saul, saying: Haste thee, and come for the Philistines haue inuaded thy land. Wherfore Saul returned from pursuing Dauid. And thus poore Dauid was deliuered. God is a helper in due season, he commeth with aid when things are desperate, he helpeth when there is no hope of helpe elswhere: the counsels, attempts, and policies of the wicked are in vaine. He that Psal. 2.

most gone, my steps had welneere slipt: for I fretted at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked, &c. Then thought I to know this, but it was too painfull for mee, vntill I went vp into the Sanctuarie of God, then vnderstood I their end. Surely thou hast set them in slipperie places, and castest them downe into desolation. How suddenly are they destroied, perished, and consumed! As for mee, it is good to draw neere vnto God? therefore haue I put my trust in the Lord God, that I may declare all thy workes.

A King is strong, a woman is strong, and wine is strong, but truth doth abide and is strong for euer. Truth is great and strongest. Whither may a man go from the spirit of the Lord? or whither may a man fly from his presence? If he ascend vp into heauen, the Lord is there; or if he descend into hell, the Lord is there also. The face of the Lord is vpon them that doe euill. When they shall say, peace and safetie, then shall come vpon them sudden destruction.

Let no man be deceiued, and thinke that these things are wrought by the power of starres, or by the pleasure of princes: it is God that ruleth the world, and not the starres. It was not Iosuah that ouerturned the wals of Hiericho, nor the crie of the people, and sound of the trumpets. It was neither Constantinus, nor Iouinian, nor Valentinian, nor Theodosius, that planted the Gospell, and changed the hearts of the people. These were vertuous and godly Emperours, yet those changes were not made by their power, but it was God which sent forth his spirit, and renued the face of the earth. Christ Iesus the sonne of righteousnesse had loked vpon them: The morning starre from an high, had risen ouer them. God princes, and good rulers are the good instruments by whom God setteth forth his glory, their hearts be in the hands of God, he bendeth them, & inclineth them to his purpose: but the truth of the Gospell is not planted and setled in our hearts, neither by the will of man, nor by the authority of princes. No creature can claime part of this glorie, this glory belongeth vnto God: but vnto vs, and to our fathers, to our kings, and to our prophets, Baruch. 1.

Thus is the prince of darkeneſſe caſt out, thus is the Goſpell of Chriſt caried throwout the world: this is the ouerthrow of Hiericho: this is the might of Gods hand.

But is Hiericho ſo laid flat, that no man will attempt or wiſh to reſtore it? Verily, it was afterward reſtored in the daies of Achab: but he that reſtored it was accurſed. Euen ſo it fareth with this ſpirituall Hiericho, it is neuer ſo blowne downe, but ſome would wiſh to raiſe it vp. God deliuered his people out of Egypt, and yet there were that looked backe, and wiſht to be there againe: & when they had Manna in their mouthes, they thought it a lothſome & a ſquamiſh meat, and wiſht for their Onyons and Onions: and hauing the Angels of God to goe in viſible forme before them to be their guides both day and night, yet wiſhed to be vnder Pharao, in the houſe of bondage, to be tormented with labours, to liue in tyrannie and oppreſſion, where they had their children ſlaine before their faces.

Notwithſtanding God had deliuered his people from the captiuity of Babylon, yet the greateſt part of them remained ſtill there, and would neuer returne to ſee Ieruſalem.

And this doe they, becauſe they know not how amiable the Tabernacles of the Lord are, becauſe they did neuer taſte and ſée how ſwéet the Lord is.

Three ſpeciall helpes the Diuell hath vſed to further this purpoſe of reſtoring Hiericho. Firſt, the hard heart, and blindneſſe of the people: ſecondly, the eloquence, and ſubtill perſwaſion of the learned: thirdly, the ſword and violence of tyrants. Of theſe three the firſt is the greateſt, for blindneſſe and ſtubbornneſſe will preuaile, where cunning and tyranny can doe nothing. Hereof the Prophet Ieremie complaineth: My people is fooliſh, they haue not knowen me: they are fooliſh children, and haue none vnderſtanding: they are wiſe to doe euill, but to doe well they haue no knowledge. Of this ſort our Sauiour ſpeaketh: This peoples heart is waxed fat, and their eares are dull of hearing, and with their eies haue they winked, leſt they ſhould ſee with their eies, and heare with their eares, and vnderſtand with their hearts, and ſhould returne, that I might heale them. Of this ſort Eſai reporteth: It is a rebellious people, lying children, and children that would not heare the Law of the Lord, which ſay vnto the Seers, ſee not: and vnto the Prophets, prophecy not vnto vs right things: but ſpeake flattering things vnto vs, prophecy errors, depart out of the way, go out of the path, cauſe the holy one of Iſrael to ceaſe from vs. Through blindneſſe and ſtubbornneſſe, all the children of Iſrael murmured againſt Moſes and Aaron: Wherefore now hath the Lord brought vs to this land to fall vpon the ſword? were it not better for vs to returne into Ægypt? Therefore the Lord ſaid, I will doe to them as they haue ſpoken, they ſhall not ſée the land, whereof I ſware to their fathers, but their carcaſes ſhall fall in this wildernéſſe, they ſhall not enter into my reſt: with this blindneſſe God doth punish thoſe which obey not his word. The Lord ſhall ſmite thee (ſaith Moſes) with madneſſe and blindneſſe, and with aſtonying of heart; thou ſhalt grope at noon daies, as the blind groupeth in darkneſſe. I will take my ſpirit from thée, I will command the clouds, that they ſhall not giue thée raine: thou haſt forſaken me, and I will forſake thée: I will cauſe the Sunne to goe downe at noon: and I will darken the earth at clére day, ſaith the Lord. I will ſend a famine vpon the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirſt for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord: they ſhall ſeeke the word of the Lord, and ſhall not find it. S. Paul told the Iewes at Antiochia; Seeing you put the word from you, and iudge your ſelues vnworthy of euerlaſting life: loe, we turne to the Gentiles: you ſhall be left in your filthineſſe.

Now, what ſhall be done to theſe hard hearted and blind builders of the ſpirituall Hiericho? Chriſt telleth vs, It ſhall bee eaſier in that day for them of Sodom, than for that Citie, which will not receiue the Diſciples. And againe: Except yee beleeue that I am he, you ſhall die in your ſinnes. The end of ſuch is worſe than the beginning. All thoſe plagues and vtter deſtruction came vpon Hieruſalem, becauſe ſhe knew not the time of her viſitation, euen the day of Gods mercy, as they were foretold by the Prophet Ieremie: Behold, that which I haue built will I deſtroy, and that which I haue planted will I plucke vp, euen this whole land. So doth God plague one ſinne with another, and letteth them which are filthy grow in filthineſſe, becauſe of the hardneſſe of their heart which cannot repent: whereby they heape vnto themſelues vengeance againſt the day of the Lords wrath: ſuch are not worthy to ſée Hieruſalem: therefore are they left to periſh in Hiericho.

As for the eloquence and deceitfull perſwaſion of the learned, I will ſay nothing. Notwithſtanding it hath bin, and is ſo vſed to the reſtoring of Hiericho, that a blind man may perceiue it, and all the world may rue it. One ſaid ſometimes, that, were the matter neuer ſo falſe, he would proue it by eloquence to be true. Another ſaid, the Sunne and Moone ſtand ſtill, and the earth goeth about. Another ſaid, that ſnow was blacke and that he was able well to proue it, and there were many which beléeued them. Such were they of whom it is written in the Prophet Eſay: that ſpake good of euill, and euill of good: which put darkneſſe for light, and light for darkneſſe, and put bitter for ſweet, and ſweet for ſower. So they mocked the eies of the ignorant, and abuſed the gifts of God. Thy wiſedome and thy knowledge (ſaith the Prophet) they haue cauſed thee to rebell, and thou haſt ſaid in thine heart, I am, and none elſe: thou art wearied in the multitude of thy Counſels: let now the Aſtrologers, the Star-gazers, and Prognoſticators ſtand vp, and ſaue thee from theſe things that ſhall come vpon thee.

We may anſwer ſuch learned diſputers, as Dauid anſwered the proud Goliah: Thou commeſt to me with a ſword, and with a ſpeare, and with a ſhield: that is, with great eloquence and ſhew of learning: but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hoſts, the God of the hoſt of Iſrael, whom thou haſt railed vpon. By the Prophet Ieremie thus ſaith the Lord: Let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſedome, nor the ſtrong man glory in his ſtrength, neither the rich man glory in his riches: but let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he vnderſtandeth and knoweth me. Again: It is written (ſaith the Apoſtle) I will deſtroy the wiſedome of the wiſe, and will caſt away the vnderſtanding of the prudent. And Eliphas ſaith: He taketh the wiſe in their craftineſſe, and the counſell of the wicked is made fooliſh: hée will open their errors, he will bewray their craftineſſe, he will ouerthrow the cunning deuiſes of their wit: theſe helpes ſhall not ſuffice to build vp curſed Hiericho.

Now to ſpeake of the third helpe of the power of Princes, whom the wicked builders of this ſpirituall Hiericho haue in all ages deceiued. The authority of a Prince is great, he is the ſeruant of God, he carrieth the ſword for God to take vengeance on him that doth euill. Prou. 16. Salomon ſaith: The wrath of a King is as Meſſengers of death. Vnto them theſe builders haue recourſe, and accuſe the ſeruants of the Lord, which haue waited vpon Ioſhuah, and haue done the Lords will, vpon this wilfull and rebellious City.

The Heathen and Infidels vſed this helpe againſt the Chriſtians, they accuſed them before Kings, that they were wicked, that they worſhipped ſtrange gods, that they liued in adultery, and inceſt, that they killed their children, and did feed vpon mans fleſh. Before them they charged the Chriſtians with diuiſions and ſchiſmes, ſaying: You Chriſtians agree not among your ſelues, you haue ſo many ſects, and one ſect is at defiance with another, and condemneth one another: therefore your religion is not true, it is not of God. Since the time we forſooke our gods, theſe and theſe euils are come vpon vs. They charged Chriſtians that they were ſtirrers vp of rebellion, and that they diſquieted the minds of the people. Let theſe Chriſtians, ſaid they, be caſt to the Lions. Such complaints were brought before Kings and Princes againſt the Chriſtians of the Primitiue Church, and theſe falſe charges haue bin thought true: therefore were there ſharpe lawes made againſt them. It was commanded, that no man ſhould ſpeake in the name of Chriſt, and who did not obey this, ſhould die the death.

Who is able to expreſſe the miſeries, which followed in the execution of thoſe Lawes? There was no ſword nor weapon, no racke nor torment, no fire nor water, but they were prepared for, and ſtained with Chriſtian blood. Souldiers were kept in whole garriſons: Princes made Leagues, kept Counſels, deuiſed new and cruell lawes, vſed conſpiracies, practiſed all kinds of ſtrange and terrible deaths for the defence of Hiericho: they killed Chriſtians by thouſands. Maximianus burnt in one Temple twenty thouſand, aſſembled together to celebrate the memory of the Natiuity of Chriſt. Dioclesian made proclamation for the ouerthrowing of the Chriſtian Churches throwout all the Romane Empire: hee cauſed the Bookes of holy Scripture to bee burned in the open market place: and diſplaced with great ignominy ſuch Chriſtians as were Magiſtrates, and all other that bare any office. Theſe thought, that hereby the Goſpell of Chriſt ſhould bee aboliſhed, and quite ouerthrowen.

But the Lord, which was mighty to ſaue Daniel in the middeſt of the Lions, and Ionas in the whales belly, and his three ſeruants in the flaming fire, and Iſrael in the red Sea: whoſe eies are ouer the righteous, and which is nigh vnto all that call vpon him; was alſo able to make his owne cauſe good, to giue courage to his ſeruants, and trembling and anguiſh of mind to their enemies. For the more his ſeruants were diminiſhed, the more they increaſed: and the more tyrants preuailed, the more they were weakned. He that ſhould die, was bold and careleſſe: he that ſhould kill, was fearefully amazed: the tormentor mourned, the condemned reioiced: the dead had the glory, the tyrants the ſhame: their ſacrifices ceaſed, their Temples were forſaken, their gods laught to ſcorne, their Prieſts were wood, and lacked their large offerings: the Lord did let the curſe fall vpon them, which hee made by his ſeruant Ioſhua, and which ſhall come vpon all thoſe that will ſeeke to raiſe vp Hiericho.

To rehearſe the examples of Gods mighty hand, and to declare what he hath done in all ages, to ſhew forth his power, no tongue is able: yet is it expedient to giue forth one or two examples thereof. Licinius an vngodly Emperor, after he had extended his force againſt the Chriſtians to ſuppreſſe them, and gaue greateſt ſhew of his fauor to ſuch about him, as could beſt deuiſe new and ſtrange torments, felt the plagues of God, was ſundry times vanquiſhed by Conſtantinus, to whom he yelded himſelfe, and led a priuate life in Theſſalia, vntill at length, he which had bin before the enemy vnto all learning, was ſlaine by his owne ſouldiers. The palme of the hand which Balthazar ſaw write vpon the plaſter of the wall, did more amaze him, his countenance was more changed, and his thoughts more troubled therewith, than if he had bin aſſaulted with the force of a hundred thouſand men.

Tripart. Hiſt. lib. 1. cap. 8. Carion. lib. 3. Dan. 5.

King Pharao firſt ſaid to the meſſengers of God, Moſes and Aaron, I know not the Lord, I care not for him. But when he felt the ſmart of Gods hand, he cried out vnto them: The Lord is righteous, but I and my people are wicked: pray yee vnto the Lord (for it is enough) that there be no more mighty thunders, and haile, and I will let you goe, and you ſhall tarie no longer. Exod. 9.

1. Mach. 1. Antiochus placed Idols in the Temple of God, and blaſphemed his name, and brought Ieruſalem

Ierusalem into bondage, he burnt the Bookes of the Law in the fire, and cut them in peeces, that so the name of God might no more be remembred: but when the torments which God cast vpon him began to vex him, then he began to leaue off his great pride and selfe-will: when he was plagued, and came to the knowledge of himselfe with the scourge of God, when he himselfe might not abide his owne stinke, he said: It is meet to be subiect vnto God, and that a man which is mortall, should not thinke himselfe equal to God through pride. Then he prayed to the Lord, then he deliuered the Iewes, then he would restore the Temple, then he would also become a Iew himselfe, and goe thorow all the world, and preach the power of God. 2. Mach. 9.

Maximianus practising the like attempts, was likewise stricken: his flesh was eaten with lice, his body rotted inwardly, he was not able to abide the smell of himselfe. Then he confessed his errour, found his guilt, called in his proclamation, staied his sword, and (albeit it were against his minde) commanded that the Christians should haue their Bookes, and vse their Churches, and heare the Scriptures, and call vpon the name of Christ, as they had done before. Eusеb. lib. 8. ca. 10. & 19.

Iulian of all other began most politikely and subtilely, and therefore most mightily, to set vp Hiericho: He gaue commandement that no Christian mans child should go to schole, deuising thereby to keepe them rude and barbarous: that no Christian should beare office, or liue in any maner authority, thereby to make them vile: that they should neuer be Captaines or souldiers, that so they might be kept in weaknesse: he remoued the Christians out of his Court. He opened againe the Temple of the Heathen, and did erect Idols in them, and the more to giue credit and countenance to the matter, he himselfe being the Emperor, toke vpon him the office of a Bishop, and did offer sacrifice: many of the nobles, and many of the people, applied themselues to follow this example, and did the like. He licenced the Iewes to returne home againe, & to build vp Ierusalem, he allowed them money, he gaue them liberties, and all this only in the despite of Christ: only to discredit and deface the glorie of the Son of God. Hereby the Heretikes vpbraided and defied Christ: the faithfull were dismaied, and the Church of God was brought to great confusion.

But now let vs enter into the sanctuary of the Lords counsels, and behold the latter end of these doings. The Iewes fell to worke, laid their foundation, prouided all things needfull, and began to build: suddenly brake out an Earthquake, and ouerthrew their worke: lightnings fell from Heauen and burnt their tooles in their hands, and their coats on their backs. The print that the lightning made in their garments was a Crosse, in token that they were the enemies of the Crosse of Christ. Then was the name of Christ more glorious, and his Gospell more beautifull than before.

Iulian toke his iourney into Persia, and had made great threats, that at his returne he would consume the name of Christians, rot out the name of the Galileans, and not leaue one Christian aliue, and would set vp the Image of Venus in all his Churches. But being in the field, he was suddenly stricken in the breast with an arrow from heauen: he pulled it out, the wound was deadly, he cursed Christ, he toke of the blod into his hand, threw it vp into the aire, and thus cried: Vicisti Galilee: O thou Christ of Galilee, thou hast conquered. Thus suddenly the tyrant was slaine, his attempts were accursed, his frame of Hiericho would not stand. The faithfull Christians were set at liberty, they went to their Churches, they gaue God the glory, they made triumphs and were ioyfull. Thus God loketh vpon his faithfull: such is the power and readinesse of his hand.

The Dinell himselfe confessed, that when any Christian was present, his mouth was muzled, he could not speake, he could do nothing. The like might be said of Nero, Caligula, Maximinus, Diocletian, Valerian, and others: they had conquered France, Spaine, Germanie, England, Hungarie, Dalmatia, Arabia, India, Persia, and Scythia: they had the world at commandement; yet a few poore Christians, artificers, women, and maidens, ignorant and vnlearned people, they could neuer conquer. Nero had crucified Peter, and beheaded Paul that preached the Gospell, but the Gospell which they preached, they could not behead, they could not crucifie. Nero, Caligula, Commodus, and sundry others like tyrants were slaine. Diocletian, as it is thought, was stricken mad, made vnable to rule, and therefore left the Empire. Valerian was taken in the field by Sapores King of Persia, and tied in a chaine, and being the Emperor of the world, was made to lie downe on all foure, that Sapores might set his foot on his shoulders, and so get to horsebacke. Hist. tripart. lib. 7. ca. 39.

All this notwithstanding, the Gospell of Christ grew still and went forward. Such successe shall they haue, that take in hand to build Hiericho. The Lord will smite his enemies vpon the cheeke bone, he will breake the teeth of the wicked. Well may they barke, they shall not bite. God knoweth the way of the righteous, and the way of the wicked shall perish. God resisteth the proud, but giueth grace to the lowly. Yet a little while (saith Dauid) Psalm. 37.

and the wicked ſhall not appeare, and thou ſhalt looke after his place, and hee ſhall not be found: The remembrance of him ſhall periſh. Euery plant which our heauenly father hath not planted, ſhall be roted out. Put not your truſt then in Princes, nor in the ſonnes of men, which cannot ſaue themſelues: their breath departeth, and they returne to their earth. It is God that is King of Kings, which loueth the righteous, and ouerthroweth the way of the wicked. All fleſh is graſſe, and all the grace thereof is as the flower of the field: the graſſe withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of our God ſhall ſtand for euer.

Eſai. 40.

Was God able in thoſe daies to auenge the cruelty of Tyrants, to withſtand the proud, to defend the humble and lowly, and ſhall we think that his hand is ſhortned? Great is our God, and his power is wonderful, and there is no end of his iudgements. O what leagues and confederacies, what practiſes and policies haue we ſéen defeated! What abundance of blod hath bén ſhed by ſword, and by fire! The workers thereof are gone, the end of many of them was horrible; yet the Goſpell continueth, and increaſeth in all places. Æneas Siluius, who was afterward Pope, and called Pius the ſecond, ſheweth in his ſtory of Bohemia, what great preparation was made to maintaine the Church of Rome, and to deſtroy all thoſe which profeſſed the Goſpell, whom they called Huſſites and Calixtians, becauſe they defended the receiuing of the Cup, as well as of the bread in the Lords Supper. Two Cardinals, the one of them Cardinall Beauford, an Engliſh man, and Biſhop of Wincheſter, the other Iulianus, were ſent into Germany to leuy power: at whoſe intreaty the Emperor and States appointed three armies of men to fulfill the Popes purpoſe. But (ſaith the ſtorie) Non viſum hoſtem fugerunt: They fled before they did ſee the enemy. And againe the ſecond time: Priuſquam hoſtis vllus daretur in conſpectu, fœdiſſima cœpta fuga: They fled away with ſhame, before any enemie came to fight. Hereof one of the Cardinals, Iulianus, writeth thus to Eugenius the fourth: Nonne videbitur hic digitus Dei? Ecce, exercitus armatorum toties fugit à facie eorum, & nunc ſimiliter Eccleſia vniuerſalis fugit: Ecce, nec armis, nec literis vinci poſſunt. Videbitur miraculum Dei euidenter, demonſtrans illos vera ſentire, nos falſa. Is not the power of God heere to be ſeen? our armies of ſouldiers haue fled before them many times, and now the vniuerſall Church fleeth. They cannot be ouercome, neither by weapons, nor by learning. This muſt needs appeare a miracle wrought by God, to declare that their opinion is true, and ours falſe.

Hiſt. Bohemica, cap. 48.

Thus we ſée how vainly, and miſerably they encumber themſelues which take vpon them to reſtore Hiericho. God withſtandeth them, and defeateth their purpoſe, as we may ſée this day. Let vs therefore reioice in God, and let vs ſay with the people of Iſrael: I will ſing vnto the Lord; for he hath triumphed glorioully: the horſe and him that rode vpon him hath he ouerthrowen in the ſea.

Exod. 15.

It is not enough, that wée looke backe and gaze at this decaied Citie of Hiericho, and behold the rampiers lowſed, the walls thrown downe, the houſes burned, and the people thereof ſlaine. God can giue peace, God can withdraw it: we haue ſéene the iudgements of the Lord vpon them, we haue ſéene the turning of the Lords hand towards vs. That thing which hath bœn done, may be done againe. The Arke of God was taken by the Philiſtins, and God ſuffered his Temple to be ſpoiled: not that he was offended with the Arke, or with the Temple, but for the vnworthineſſe of the people. He neuer forſaketh, but hée is firſt forſaken; as hée ſaith: Seeing ye haue forſaken me, I will alſo forſake you. God himſelfe telleth vs by the Prophet Ieremie, as you heard before: That which I haue built, will I deſtroy; and that which I haue planted, will I plucke vp. When Chriſt rebuked the vnthankfulneſſe of the Iewes, he ſaid vnto them: The kingdome of God ſhall be taken from you, and ſhall be giuen to a Nation, which ſhall bring foorth the fruits thereof. And againe: The children of the kingdome ſhall be caſt out into vtter darkneſſe: for many are called, but few are choſen. It behoueth vs therefore not ouermuch to glory in victory. It is fickle, and caſuall, and may be loſt. Let vs humble our ſelues vnder the mighty hand of God, let vs acknowledge the wonderfull worke that he hath wrought in our daies, and pray him to continue the good thing he hath begun among vs. In him we haue our liuing, our mouing, and our being. We are nothing but clay before him: that he which reioiceth, may reioice in the Lord.

2. Eſd. 1.

Matth. 20.

Now it remaineth we conſider what holeſome remedies may be deuiſed, that Hiericho be neuer againe reſtored. Hereof I will ſay ſomewhat, the time ſo requireth. Here might we marke the practiſes and policies of noble Conquerors, what waies they take to kéepe themſelues in ſafety, and their conquered ſubiects from rebellion. Some when they had gotten a Citie, thought it enough to ouerthrow the walles thereof. Some raced all the Caſtles, and threw downe all the holds. Others haue built ſtrong places, and Towers, and furniſhed them with munition to bridle the people. Others haue ſpoiled them, and kept them poore. Others haue vnarmed them, and kept them from all weapon. Others, to withdraw them from vnquiet fancies, haue ſet them to plough the ground, and to others bodily labour. Others haue cut off their Captaines, and all ſuch as might ſeeme able to lead the people, and to moue rebellion. Some haue killed their male children. Some diſſolued the old Lawes, and gaue them new. Others haue forbidden banquets and feaſts, and all other conuenticles or aſſemblies, to make them ſtrange one to another. Others haue purpoſely ſowed and maintained factions, and ſet Citie againſt Citie, ſirname againſt ſirname, blood againſt blood, that no man might ſafely truſt another. Some haue deuiſed othes and bands of conſcience: ſome haue deuiſed Lawes martiall, and other cruelty: ſome haue tranſported, and carried away the whole people, man, woman, and child: as Nabuchodonoſor did the Iewes into Babylon, and put others in their place. By theſe, and ſuch other like waies, as much as wiſedome and policy could deuiſe, they thought to keepe countries and nations in obedience.

But, as touching our ſpirituall Hiericho, Ioſhuah ſuffered nothing to ſtand, he burnt houſes, and palaces, and killed man, woman, and child, and cattell without mercy, all together. For ſo God had giuen him in commandement, and ſo is it often written of him, that where the Lord gaue any people into his hands, he left nothing remaining, no were it neuer ſo little. Of this policy Moſes ſpeaketh: If you will not driue out the inhabitants of the land before you, then thoſe which ye let remaine of them, ſhall be pricks in your eies, and thornes in your ſides, and ſhall vex you in the land wherin ye dwell. Deſtroy not ſome only, to leaue ſome: you ſhall leaue nothing, no not a little. If you doe leaue, you breake the commandement of God. Numb. 33.

In religion, no part is to be called little. A haire is but little, yet it hath a ſhadow. In the body, a little diſquiet is often times cauſe of death. The Cniphes were but little, yet are they reckoned among the great plagues of God.

Metellus a noble man of Rome, by receiuing a haire in his milke, was choked with it, and died thereof. Some things are ſmall and doe no hurt: ſome things though they be ſmall, do great hurt. Therefore doth God ſtraitly charge his people to keep the law, ſaying: Thou ſhalt not turne away from it, neither to the right hand nor to the left. And S. Paul ſaith: A little leauen leaueneth the whole lumpe. Ioſh. 1. & 6. Deut. 15. & 28. 1. Cor. 5.

I ſpeake not this, becauſe I thinke nothing at all may be left to any eſpecial purpoſe. For euen in Hiericho, where was made a generall deſtruction, God himſelfe commanded, that all ſiluer and gold, and veſſels of braſſe and iron ſhould be ſaued, and not ſaued only, but be brought into the Lords treaſury. Howbeit, the things that may be reſerued, muſt not be duſt, or chaffe, or hay, or ſtubble: but gold, and ſilner, and iron, and braſſe; I meane, they may not be things meet to furniſh and maintaine ſuperſtition, but ſuch things as be ſtrong, and may ſerue either directly to ſerue God, or elſe for comelineſſe and good order. Such things may be reſerued, notwithſtanding they came out of the ſpoile of Hiericho. Ioſh. 6.

Now to ſtay the reſtoring of Hiericho, many good waies may be deuiſed. For our conſideration at this preſent, and becauſe the time is far ſpent, I will neme only foure vnto you. The 1. Maintenance of ſchooles and learning. 2. Vnderſtanding of the cauſe: that is, that euery man may conſider, what he hath left, and what he hath receiued: out of what darkneſſe, into what light he is come. 3. Kindneſſe towards God, and thankefulneſſe. 4. The diſcipline of the Church. With theſe foure, by Gods grace, we may keepe Hiericho from reſtoring. Of each of theſe a few words, and ſo I will end.

That learning and knowledge is able to hinder the builders of Hiericho, it is ſo plaine that it needeth no ſpeech. In the time of Moſes law, Aaron the great Biſhop and high Prieſt had written in a tablet before his breaſt, Doctrine, and Truth: not only learning, but alſo truth: whereby was meant, that neither might be without other. For, as learning is dangerous and hurtfull without religion, ſo is religion vnable to defend it ſelfe, and to conuince the gainſaiers, without learning.

For this cauſe, the Heathen, when they erected Temples in the honor of their gods, did alſo build libraries, that is, places to keep bookes: that by ſuch meanes, their Prieſts might grow in knowledge, and be better able to perſwade others to their religion. Strabo writeth of the Smyrnians, that they built a Temple in the honor of Homer, and ioined thereto a library. Auguſtus the Emperor, built a Temple and alſo a library in the honor of Apollo. Trajanus in like maner built a library, and called it Vlpia, after his own name. At Rome in the Capitol where all the gods had a ſolemne place for to be worſhipped in, there was alſo placed a library. Athens was a famous Vniverſity, and had many Colledges and ſchooles of learning, Academia, Stoa, Lycæum Canopus, Prytanneum, Tempe, Cynoſura, in which places were diuers ſects of Philoſophers. Such were in Perſia the wiſe men, whom they called Magi, in Babylon, the Chaldees: in India, Brachmanes: in Æthiopia, Gymnoſophiſtæ: in France, and England, Druides, and others in other Countries. In all times the Kings and

Princes

Princes which did ſet forth religion, were alſo builders of ſchooles and Colleges, and aduancers of learning. The people of Iſrael were neuer in better ſtate (as P. Phagius, a learned man noteth out of their ſtory) than when they had in euery towne and village Bathe cheneſioth, and Bathe medraſchoth, that is, Synagogues wherein they aſſembled together, and places to preach in. The ſame Phagius reporteth of Hieruſalem, that there were in it more than foure hundred Common-ſchooles and Synagogues, in which the Law of God was taught. The Patriarch Iacob was called Miniſter domus doctrinæ, a Miniſter of the houſe of learning, becauſe he applied himſelfe to the knowledge of the law of God, and to godlineſſe. The Prophets of God had their ſchooles, to breed vp vnder them ſuch as might after their death draw the people from Idolatry, and reſiſt the falſe Prophets. They which were ſo taught by them, were called filij Prophetarum, The ſonnes of the Prophets. Samuel taught in ſuch ſort at Rama. Elias and Elizeus the Prophets, in ſuch ſort, taught the Law of God, beſides Hiericho. S. Iohn the Euangeleſt, taught at Epheſus: and Euſebius reporteth out of Philo, that S. Marke had at Alexandria ſundry ſcholars, which gaue themſelues to reading and reaſoning, and expounding of the ſcriptures. Others did the like at Antioch, and at other places. But of ſuch ſchooles it pleaſed God to make many excellent men, and place them in his Church, as Origen, Tertullian, Cyprian, Lactantius, Arnobius, Baſilius, Nazianzenus; Chryſoſtomus, Hieronymus, Ambroſius, Auguſtinus, who were brought vp in all kind of learning, and became ſhining ſtars, and bright lights in the houſe of God, notable defenders of religion, ouerthrowers of Idols, and confounders of Heretikes. Chriſtian Princes herein haue witneſſed their zeale, in ſetting forth the glory of God. After Charles the Great had made his notable conqueſts, he erected fiue famous Vniuerſities, one at Paris, another at Tolouſe, another at Papia, another at Padua, another at Prage.

Suidas in Leone. Suidas reporteth of Leo the Emperor: Cum aliquando Eulogio Philoſopho ſtipendium dari iuſſiſſet, &c. When Leo on a time commanded that Eulogius a Philoſopher ſhould haue his Princely reward, a noble man of his Court, ſaid: That, that money would be better imploied for maintenance of ſouldiers. Nay (ſaith he) I would rather it might be brought to paſſe in my time, that the wages which are now beſtowed vpon ſouldiers, might be giuen to maintaine Philoſophers.

Charion. Chronic. lib. 3. Alex. Sen. Alexander Seuerus ſo highly eſtéemed that famous and notable Lawyer Vlpian, that when certaine of his ſouldiers ran fiercely vpon Vlpian, purpoſing to ſlay him, the Emperor ſtept forth, and ſet himſelfe betwéene the body of Vlpian, and the fury of the ſouldiers, and couered him with his owne robes, that the ſouldiers might know how carefull he was for the good eſtate of Vlpian.

As alſo for the contrary, ſuch as haue practiſed cruelty vpon learned men, and haue hated knowledge, are worthily diſcommended in the ſtories of all ages. I told you before of that wicked Apoſtata Iulian, how he forbad that Chriſtians ſhould bring vp their children in learning. Such an enemy to knowledge was alſo Licinius the Emperor, who called learning the poiſon and ouerthrow of Common-weales. The like is reported of Caligula, Caracalla and Domitianus, that either they vtterly hated all maner of learning, or had ſome ſpeciall malice againſt the writings of ſome one notable men, and therefore ſought to deſtroy them. Such was the policy of Satan, ſo thought he to get the vpper hand, and to reſtore againe his wicked Hiericho.

And were theſe the practiſes of heathen Princes only? May not we remember the like attempts wrought in our daies? Who will call to minde the time that is not far paſt, ſhal finde that this ignorant Hiericho, had many friends, who by all meanes drew men from knowledge: they gaue liberty rather to doe any thing, than to take vnderſtanding, and yet ſuffered rather the vſe and reading of fabulous and vncleane writers, that of the holy ſcriptures, and bookes which carried fruitfull inſtruction.

God letters, and ſtudy to increaſe knowledge, are not to be neglected. Such as preſume of Gods ſpirit ouer boldly, that, without their endeuour to vſe the holſome meanes which he hath left vnto his Church, they ſhall and doe by ſpeciall inſpiration vnderſtand his wil, do tempt God. The Prophet Dauid praied for the preſence of Gods ſpirit, but to the purpoſe, he might take profit and fruit of his reading in the law of God. Therefore he ſaith:

Pſal. 119. Open mine eies, that I may ſee the wonders of thy Law: And, giue me vnderſtanding, and I will keepe thy Law. And again: Incline mine heart vnto thy teſtimonies. S. Paul taught the Corinthians, That no man can ſay that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt: And in the 2. Chapt. of his 1. Epiſtle ſaith: Now we haue receiued, not the ſpirit of the world, but

1. Cor. 12. 1. Cor. 2. the ſpirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are giuen to vs of God. This

Acts 9. ſpirit prepared the heart of Paul, yet ſent him to Ananias, that by him it might be told him

Acts 8. what he ſhould do. This ſpirit prepared the hearts of the Eunuch, & of Cornelius: yet ſent

Acts 10. vnto them Philip & Peter to open the ſcriptures vnto them. Lydia heard Paul, & the Lord opened opened her heart that ſhe attended vnto the things that Paul ſpake. I haue planted, ſaith he, Apollos watered, but God gaue the increaſe. Thus are we taught, not to forſake the helps of reading, of hearing, and ſuch like: yet to know, that neither of them can ſettle vs vnto godlineſſe, without the eſpeciall grace of Gods ſpirit. Auguſtine ſaith well: Non verbis hominis fit vt intelligatur verbum Dei, facit Deus vt intelligatis: The words of man do not cauſe that Gods word is vnderſtood: God giueth the vnderſtanding thereof. And Chryſoſtome vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle: Such truſt haue we through Chriſt to God, not that we are ſufficient of our ſelues to thinke any thing, as of our ſelues, but our ſufficiency is of God; ſaith: Hoc eſt, non ita dicebam fiduciam habemus, vt id partim ſit noſtrum, partim ſit Dei. Sed totum illi tribuo acceptumque fero: that is, I did not ſo ſay wee haue truſt, that this worke is partly ours, and partly Gods: but I allow it, and yeeld it wholly vnto God. The conſideration hereof putteth vs in minde to ioine humble and hearty prayer to our diligent reading and hearing, that God will giue vs vnderſtanding and knowledge. Act. 16. 1. Cor. 3. Hom. 3. de verbis Dom. ſecund. Iohan. In 2. cap. 2. ad Corint.

Now to conclude this firſt remedie, whereby Hiericho may be kept from building; we may ſay that of the vſe of good learning, which S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh againſt thoſe that charge the Scriptures with vnneceſſary ſpeaches: Solo vomere terra proſcinditur: ſed vt hoc fieri poſſit, etiam catera aratri membra ſunt neceſſaria: The ſhare only renteth the ground, but to helpe this worke, the other parts of the plough are alſo needfull. We ſay, eloquence and other liberall Arts are to be likened to that part of the Carpenters wimble, which turneth about, goeth round, and by little and little draweth in the iron, or ſteele bit. The wooden handle entreth not into the wood, but wreatheth in the pierce: ſo doe theſe Arts, if they be rightly vſed, further the vnderſtanding of the word of God. This vſe Lactantius ſeemed to ſeeke, when he ſaid: Vellem mihi dari eloquentiam, vel quia magis credant homines ornatæ veritati, vel vt ipſi ſuis armis vincantur: I would gladly haue the gift of eloquence, either becauſe men might giue better credit to the truth, when it is beautified: or elſe becauſe the heathen may the ſooner be ouercome with their owne weapons. And in another place hee ſheweth that this eloquence muſt ſerue and wait vpon the wiſdome of God: Circumliniatur poculum cœleſtis ſapientiæ melle, vt intelligamus non hominem loqui, ſed Deum: Let the cuppe (of your ſpeech) bee ſeaſoned with the hony of Gods wiſdome, that wee may know it is God that ſpeaketh, and not man. Where this is not done, but men giue themſelues rather to be curious in hearing eloquence and pleaſantneſſe of ſpeech, than deſirous to learne the truth, the word of God becommeth vnfruitfull, as it is to bee feared in many, that they little account of the Goſpell of Chriſt, but ſeeke to pleaſe their itching eares with fantaſies of men. Auguſtine ſaith to ſuch: Bonorum ingeniorum inſignis eſt indoles, in verbis verum amare, non verba. Quid enim prodeſt clauis aurea, ſi aperire quod volumus non poteſt? aut quid obeſt lignea, ſi hoc poteſt? quando nihil aliud quærimus, niſi vt pateat quod clauſum eſt: Such as bee of good diſpoſition, ſeeke not after words, but after the truth: For what auaileth a key of gold, if it cannot open that we would haue opened? and what hurteth a key of wood, if it can open? ſeeing we deſire no other thing, but that it be opened vnto vs, which is ſhut. Lact. Inſti. lib. 5. cap. 1. De doctr. Chr. lib. 4. cap. 11.

The ſecond let or ſtay that Hiericho be not reſtored, is, that the people may be inſtructed, why it was ouerthrowen, and why God hath curſed them that ſhall ſeeke to reſtore it. This knowledge is a ſingular gift of God. When the Lord declared his fauour towards Iſrael, among other his ſpeciall mercies he ſpake in this ſort: This ſhall be the couenant that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael: After thoſe daies, I will put my Law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and will be their God, and they ſhal be my people: and they ſhal teach no more euery man his neighbour, and euery man his brother, ſaying, Know the Lord: for they ſhall all know me, from the leaſt of them to the greateſt of them, ſaith the Lord. And againe, our Sauior ſaith out of the Prophet Eſay: They ſhal all be taught of God. And in the ſeuenteenth of S. Iohn, he ſaith: This is life eternall, that they know thee to be the onely very God, and whom thou haſt ſent Ieſus Chriſt. To this end, and for this cauſe, He gaue ſome to be Apoſtles, and ſome Prophets, and ſome Euangeliſts, and ſome Paſtours, and Teachers, for the gathering together of the Saints, for the work of the miniſtery, and for the edification of the body of Chriſt: that we henceforth be no more children wauering and carried about with euery wind of doctrine, by the deceit of men, and with craftines, wherby they lay wait to deceiue. Therefore doth S. Peter call vpon them that are of the Church of God, in all places, that they ſhew forth the mercies of God, that they witneſſe vnto all the world, what the Lord hath done for them, in filling them with all ſpiritual knowledge & vnderſtanding: Be ready alwaies to giue an anſwer to euery man that asketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you. Therefore doth God giue charge to his people the children of Iſrael, to heare his law and keepe his commandements, not as an ordinance that ſhould ſtand good but for a ſeaſon, which ſhould be kept onely by them: but alſo requireth that they teach the ſame to their poſterity, that ſo his great bleſſings may neuer be forgotten. For thus he ſaith: Theſe words Ieremi. 31. Iohn 6. Iohn 17. Ephe. 4. 1. Pet. 3. Deut. 19.

which I command thee this day, ſhall be in thine heart, and thou ſhalt rehearſe them contially vnto thy children, and ſhalt talke of them, when thou tarrieſt in thine houſe, and as thou walkeſt by the way, and when thou lieſt downe, and when thou riſeſt vp. Thus doth God, by promiſe that he will giue the ſpirit of knowledge and of vnderſtanding vnto his people, and by raiſing vp labourers whom hée hath ſent forth into his Vineyard, Prophets, Apoſtles, Euangeliſts, and Paſtours, and Teachers, and by his earneſt commandement that we gaue eare to his word, and ſpeake of his wonderfull kindneſſe ſhewed vnto vs and our Forefathers, make it appeare how néedfull a thing it is, that we know his will. Without this knowledge we cannot loue him as our Father, we cannot feare him as our Lord.

But when we ſée the miſerable blindneſſe and ignorance in all places abroad, what hope may we haue to ſée Hiericho ſuppreſſed and quite ouerthrowen? It cannot be but great inconueniences ſhall follow in the Church of God, as confuſion of order, and diſſolution of life, to the indangering of the State, vnleſſe by godly care of the Magiſtrates, ſome helpe be prouided. This care muſt ſhew it ſelfe in remouing blinde watchmen, which haue no knowledge, who are but dumbe dogs that can not barke, who lie and ſléepe, and delight in ſléeping. Theſe grédy dogs can neuer haue enough (ſaith the Prophet Eſay:) Non reſidence and abſence from their cure, is a fault that would be amended in the Shepheards of the Lords flocke. Though they be neuer ſo able to inſtruct, and therefore worthy to haue the roomes in the Church, yet if they haue not a deſire to doe good, if they féed not Chriſts ſhéepe, if they be ſtrangers to the people of their charge, if they be not at hand to giue their flockes their bread in due ſeaſon, what let may there be, but that ignorance and blindneſſe ſhall grow and increaſe in the people?

Eſai 56.

Another fault no leſſe hurtfull to the Church of God, is the ſuffering of pluralities, when one man taketh the profit of two or more benefices, which is not worthy of one. Theſe Non Reſidents and plurality men teach not, they know not, nor care for the people of their charge: they haue brought this confuſion and ſhame into the houſe of God. They are blinde guides, they are the darkneſſe of the world. Againſt theſe which are ſuch, God ſheweth his heauy diſpleaſure: My ſheepe, ſaith he, wandred thorow all the Mountaines, and vpon euery high hill: yea, my flocke was ſcattered thorow all the earth, and none did ſeeke or ſearch after them. And againe: Neither did my ſhepheards ſeeke my ſheepe, but the ſhepheards feed themſelues, and not my ſheepe. And by the Prophet Ieremie he ſaith: They that ſhould miniſter the Law, knew me not. And againe: The Paſtours are become Beaſts, and haue not ſought the Lord: therefore haue they none vnderſtanding: and all the flockes of their paſtures are ſcattered. Theſe either be a remnant of the wicked inhabitants of Hiericho, that reſiſt the paſſage of Gods people towards the land of promiſe: or ſuch as haue forgotten the commandement of the Lord, and haue giuen themſelues to do the ſinnes of the people, whom the Lord gaue ouer vnto them. Theſe be they that ſéeke the reſtoring of Hiericho, and the ouerthrow of Hieruſalem, therefore the curſe of God will fall vpon them: the blod of Gods people ſhall be required at their hands, becauſe they bring the abomination of deſolation into the holy place: becauſe they ſuffer Chriſts flocke to periſh for lacke of knowledge, and to be carried away after euery wind of falſe doctrine. God grant all ſuch, that they may ſée with their eies, & vnderſtand in their hearts, and know the gratious goodneſſe of the Lord, that the people be not through their negligence like Horſe and Mule: but that they may diſcerne betwéene darkneſſe and light, and betwéene Hiericho and Hieruſalem: that they may be able to giue a reaſon of the faith which is in them and that they may teach the ſame vnto their children. So ſhall wée be built vpon a rocke, ſo ſhall wée ſtand as firme as mount Sion, ſo ſhall wée neuer be confounded.

Ezech. 34.

Ierem. 10.

The third meanes to ſtay the building of Hiericho, is to be thankfull for the benefits which God hath beſtowed vpon vs: and in ſuch ſort to lead our life, that it may appeare we be his ſeruants. To this end God hath giuen his holy word: and to this end hath he left his holy Sacraments, that wée ſhould bée put in minde of his kindneſſe, and not become vnmindfull, or vnthankfull, and ſo receiue his grace in vaine.

But, you will ſay, What thankes ſhall I giue? Some lead me one way, and ſome another: ſome ſay héere is Chriſt, ſome ſay there is Chriſt: I know not, nor wherefore, nor how to yéeld thankes. Héereto a ſhort anſwer cannot ſuffice, and a long would be tedious. Let vs call to remembrance the Leſſon that was giuen vs in this place on Sunday laſt: Let vs ſearch the Scriptures. Eſay the Prophet ſaith: To the law, & to the teſtimony: if they ſpeak not according to this word, it is becauſe there is no light in them. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Nullo modo cognoſcitur quæ ſit vera Eccleſia Chriſti, niſi tantummodo per Scripturas: By no meanes may it be knowen, which is the true Church of Chriſt, but only by the Scriptures. Without them our faith is no faith, without the help of them we cannot know Chriſt frō Antichriſt, we cannot know the church of Chriſt from the ſynagogue of ſatan: Hereby let vs learne to Hieruſalem, hereby let vs learne to know Hiericho. Certainly if the word of God, and the breath of his mouth be not able to ſhew this; tradition and cuſtome ſhall be much leſſe able.

It is a good thing to be thankfull, and to praiſe the Name of the moſt high: the ſeruants of God find cauſe of thankfulnes in conſideration of the great and wonderfull mercies continually powred vpon them. Moſes commanded Niſan to bee the firſt moneth in the yeare, Exod. 12. becauſe God had deliuered Iſrael from the hand of Pharao in that moneth. In like ſort Mardocheus the Iew, and Eſther the Queene, ſent letters vnto all the Iewes that were thorow all the Prouinces of the King Aſſuerus both neere and farre, enioyning them that they ſhould keepe the fourereenth day of the moneth Adir with ioy and feaſting, for that vpon that day God had deliuered them from the hand of Haman: and that they would not faile to obſerue the ſame euery yeare.

Vpon this day, euen vpon this day, I ſay, the xxiij. of this Moneth, God ſent his handmaid, and deliuered vs. Let vs be kinde and thankfull vnto God for ſo great a bleſſing. I ſay not, let vs make it the firſt day of the yeare. Yet this I ſay, let vs haue it in remembrance, let vs ſing with the Prophet: When the Lord brought againe the Captiuitie of Si- Pſal. 126. on, we were like them that dreame; then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with ioy. The Lord hath done great things for vs, whereof we reioice. Let no man be offended herewith, it is onely a remembrance of the mercy of God, it behoueth vs to remember it, it is good to ſpeake of it. For if we haue eies to ſee, and neglect not our owne ſaluation, we haue now much greater cauſe to reioice than Dauid had, becauſe the things which are this day reſtored vnto vs by the goodneſſe of our God, are far greater and worthier than thoſe, which Dauid and the people of Iſrael receiued in their deliuerance out of the captiuity of Babilon. For by how much the heauens are greater than the earth, and God is more excellent than a creature: ſo much doth the knowledge of God, and his true worſhip, paſſe all worldly bleſſing, and all other felicitie that can be deuiſed vnder the Sun. For what knoweth he, which knoweth not God? Or what worſhippeth he, which worſhippeth not God? He that worſhippeth not God, hath not the comfort of God: but he that hath God & knoweth God, and ſerueth God, hath a ſure helpe and defence in all aſſaies. Let vs therefore be glad and reioice, let vs witnes our ioy, and ſing vnto the Lord a new ſong. Let vs kindle in our hearts the fire of the loue of God, and of our neighbour, and let the flame thereof breake out to the glory of God. Let vs decke the Altars of our hearts with the flouriſhing branches of vertue, and good workes: let vs ſacrifice and kill our luſts and affections. In this maner if we ſhew our thankfulneſſe towards God, we ſhall hinder the wicked purpoſe of them that wiſh the reſtoring of Hiericho, we ſhall ſee the land of Gods promiſe, and enter into his reſt.

The fourth ſtay to hinder this building is diſcipline, which is ſo needfull, that neither without it ſhall we be able thoroughly to diſcomfort thoſe that ſeeke to build vp Hiericho againe, nor your ſelues happily and proſperouſly to goe on forward in ſetting forth the glory and maieſtie of our God, and to paſſe ſafely to the countrie promiſed. It is as the ſinewes of the Church to ſtrengthen it, and to ioine and knit the parts thereof together. But, becauſe the time is paſſed, and this matter waighty, and worthy of larger diſcourſe, I will leaue it to your godly conſiderations, and for ſome other time.

And thou, O mercifull Father, riſe vp we beſeech thee, to iudge thine owne cauſe, ſtabliſh the thing thou haſt begun in vs, guide our feet in the way of peace, giue force vnto thy word, bleſſe thine inheritance, blow downe the wals of Hiericho: ſo ſhall Hieruſalem proſper, and her wals be made ſtrong: ſo ſhall the day ſtar lighten our hearts: ſo ſhall Iſrael reioice, and all the people truly know thee, and praiſe thy name for euer. Amen.

1. HAGGAI. 1.

VERS. 2. Thus ſpeaketh the Lord of hoſts, ſaying: This people ſay, The time is not yet come, that the Lords houſe ſhould be builded.

3. Then came the word of the Lord by the miniſtery of the Prophet Haggai, ſaying:

4. Is it time for your ſelues to dwell in your ſeeled houſes, and this houſe lie waſte?

THeſe words be written in the firſt Chapter of the Prophet Aggæus. For better vnderſtanding whereof, I muſt call to your remembrance the ſtory of that time, vpon occaſion whereof, theſe words were ſpoken.

Almighty God being for many and ſundry cauſes highly diſpleaſed with his people the Iewes, after he had chaſtened them many waies, and ſaw none amendment, at the laſt gaue them ouer into the hands of their enemies, and ſuffered both the king and all the people of the countrie to be carried away priſoners into Babylon, where they continued in miſery the ſpace of ſeuenty yeres. In the meane ſeaſon, their countrie partly lay waſt, and grew full of wild beaſts: partly was inhabited by forreners: The Temple that Salomon had built them, the ſtatelieſt and richeſt worke of the whole world, was burnt to the ground, and all the ornaments thereof rauened vp, and carried into Babylon.

After fifty yeres, King Cyrus ſhewed fauour towards his people, and did licence them to depart home againe. But as they were about the building, vpon occaſion of complaint of their enemies, the whole worke was ſtaied. At the length, after 70. yeres, God remembred his promiſe and mercie, and ſtyred vp the heart of King Darius King of Perſia, who had then conquered the Chaldees, to licence the Iewes to depart home againe into their countrey, and to redifie their Citie and Temple. This King Darius (as the Rabbines or Doctors of the Iewes, and moſt part of learned men coniecture) was ſonne vnto the king Aſſuerus, begotten of the good Lady Quéne Heſter, which Lady Heſter he married after he had imbaſed and diuorced from him the proud and ſtubborne Quéne Vaſthi. This was Gods marueilous prouidence, by that meanes twice to deliuer his people. Firſt, by Heſter 3. the good Lady Heſter, from the tyranny of Haman, as it appeareth by the ſtory: and after, by her child Darius clérely to deliuer them, & to diſcharge them out of their enemies hands for euer. The Iewes notwithſtanding they had ſo gracious a grant of their King, yet many of them would not returne home, but made their abode euen there among their enemies in Babylon, and the moſt part of them that were returned, fell to building of their own houſes, and left the houſe of God vnbuilded: ſo ſone they had forgotten Gods mercy towards them. In the time of their trouble, they cried out, If I ſhrinke from God, I pray God ſhrinke from me. But being reſtored home and at liberty, they ſaid, as the Prophet héere reporteth: Nondum venit tempus, &c. The time is not yet come, that the Lords houſe ſhould be builded. They ſaw they had many enemies on euery ſide, the matter it ſelfe was marueilous weighty, and to their iudgements almoſt impoſſible. They had begun before vnder King Cyrus, and becauſe the matter was then daſht, and their enemies preuailed againſt them, they were vtterly diſcouraged and caſt into deſpaire.

Wherefore God ſpake to them by the Prophet Aggæus: Is it time for your ſelues to dwell in your ſeeled houſes, and this houſe lie waſte? Haue you found leaſure to ſet vp and furniſh your owne houſe, and can you neglect the reſtoring of my houſe? My houſe (I ſay in which my Law hath béene read and preached to you, where your Fathers haue made me ſacrifices, towards which houſe you turned your faces, whenſoeuer you praied vnto me in Babylon, and were heard? Therefore ſaith the Lord: You haue ſowen much, and bring in little: yee eat, but yet haue not enough: yee loked for much, and loe, it came to little: and when you brought it home, I did blow it out. You ſet your ioy vpon vaine things, and the ſame ſhall deceiue you. This place of the Prophet Aggæus, I haue thought good to applie to the preſent ſtate of our time. For as then the Citie of Hieruſalem was miſerably raced, and the Temple of God burnt downe by Heathens: euen ſo hath it fared in time lately paſt with the Church of Chriſt, héere among vs. And as then God mollified & ſoftned the heart of the king Darius for the deliuery of his people, euen ſo of his great mercy hath he now ſtirred vp a moſt noble & vertuous Lady our ſoueraign Quéne Elizabeth, for the ſame purpoſe. And, as then there were many that ſet light by Gods benefits, & thought it mát enough for him to wait vpon their leaſure: euen ſo, I pray God, the ſame ſecurity be not found in vs at this time. I pray God there be none of vs that make light of Gods grace, & ſay in our harts: Nondum venit tempus, &c. The time is not yet come, that the Lords houſe ſhould be builded.

1 Wherefore, firſt I will proue (by Gods grace) that our Church hath bén ouergrowen with errours and abuſes, as then the Temple of Hieruſalem was defaced by the Chaldees.

2 Secondly, I will ſhew what things they be, that do ſtay men from redifying of this Temple.

3 Laſt of all, after what ſort this Church ought to be builded, and ſo I will leaue you to God.

Touching the firſt part, I ſhall not néed many words; for God hath in our daies ſufficiently reuealed, and we haue ſéene the ſtate of the Church in time paſt. And indéed, the errors and abuſes haue béene ſo groſſe, that whoſo can not ſée them with his eies, yet may feele and grope them with his fingers. Yet, becauſe I know ſome are not thorowly perſwaded hérein, but think that the Church of Rome hath euer more bén pure and without ſpot: and ſome others in their writings call it the rule of the truth, that whatſoeuer the Church ſaith, whatſoeuer it be, muſt néeds be true: as Syluéſter ſaith, it is Infallibilis regula; A rule that neuer deceiueth: Some ſet it aboue the word of God, as the ſame Syluéſter: A doctrina Eccleſiæ Romanæ & Romani Pontificis ſacra Scriptura robur trahit & authoritatem: The holy Scripture taketh force and authority of that doctrine of the Church and Biſhop of Rome. And as

Cuſanus:

Cusanus: Sequuntur Scripturæ Ecclesiam, & non è converso: The Scriptures follow the Church, and not on the contrary part, the Church followeth the Scriptures. Others say: Impossibile hæreticari, &c. It is not possible he should fall into heresies which followeth the Church of Rome. Some others say, that if Christ & his Apostles were alive, they were not able to rule the Church in better sort, than is now ruled, by the Pope and his Cardinals. Thus some sely wise doctors have written, I am able to alleage mine authors. Therefore I must of force stand upon this matter a little; not because I thinke it needfull, but that all men may be satisfied. First, Christ our Saviour, as he foreshewed the prosperous course of the Gospell, that it should be preached throughout the world, & that the gates of hell should not be able to withstand it: so he and his Apostles forewarned also the ruine and decay of that church: and that in so many places, and in so plaine words, that no man can doubt of it, or deny it. Epist. 2. ad Bohemos.

For, Christ alleaging the Prophet Daniel saith, that abomination should sit in the holy place, and that there should be such confusion and disorder, that if it were possible the very elect should be peruerted. He saith, that when he shall come to iudge, there shall scarcely be found faith in the world. Paul likewise saith, that the man of sinne, that is, such a one as in all things should be contrary to Christ, and is called Antichrist, should sit in the Temple of God, and beare himselfe as if he were God indeed. Matth 24. 2. Thes. 2.

Daniel saith: The truth shall be cast downe to the ground. And to Timothy Paul saith: In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, and shall giue heed to spirits of error, and doctrines of diuels. S. Peter saith: There shall be false teachers among you. Dan. 8. 1. Tim. 4. 2. Pet. 2.

And, where saith Christ (I beseech you consider) this horrible desolation should be? Among the Turkes, or Iewes? No but in the holy place. Where shall the Sonne of man scarcely finde faith? Where shall the very elect stand in doubt what they may beleeue? Among the Heathens, or Infidels? No, but in the Church. Where saith S. Peter shall be the maisters of lies; where saith Daniel shall the truth be troden downe? Where saith S. Paul shal the man of sinne perch, and settle, and behaue himselfe as if he were very God? Among the Heathen? No, no good brethren, but in Templo Dei, In the Temple of God, in the very Church, among them that should beare the name of Christ. But, forasmuch as it cannot be doubted among Christian men, that Christ and his Apostles appointed the Church in their time in such sort, as no better could be deuised, let vs compare the church of late time to that originall, as the vse is, in trying of measures, where, in triall whether is true or false, we haue euermore recourse to the standard: for if there be any fault, whatsoeuer it be, the standard will bewray it. This order Christ himselfe vsed with the Priests & Pharisies, saying: Domus mea Domus orationis vocabitur: My house shall be called the house of praier. But you haue gone from the paterne or originall, and you haue made it a harbour for theeues. And whereas the contention stood vpon diuorce, Christ called them to the first originall: A principio non fuit sic, From the beginning is was not so: they twaine shall be one flesh. And S. Paul when the holy mistery of the Lords Supper was abused, called them home to the first institution: I haue receiued of the Lord, that which I also haue deliuered vnto you. By this standard Christ reproued the Sadducees: Erratis, nescientes Scripturas: You erre, not knowing the Scriptures. And by the same he confuted the Diuell, when he came to tempt him, Scriptum est, It is written. This standard shall be able to warrant vs, if we can say truly: Scriptum est. For as the learned father Irænæus saith: Scriptura est basis & fundamentum fidei nostræ: The Scripture is the pillar and foundation of our faith. It is rashnesse to beleeue without the warrant or direction of the Scriptures. It is not deuotion, nor Catholike faith, but wilfull rashnesse. Now, how many waies, and in how many points the Church of late daies hath dissented from the Church of Christ and of the Apostles (which no doubt was the Catholike Church) it were almost an infinite worke to recken vp. For they disagree in so many things, that in maner they agree in nothing. Notwithstanding, I will lay out one or two things before you, and by them your wisedomes shall ghesse the rest. Matth. 21. Matth. 19. 1. Cor. 11. Matth. 2. Matth. 4. Iren. lib. 3. cap. 1.

Christ gaue the Sacrament of his body and blood to be frequented in the Congregation, that all should be partakers thereof, in remembrance of his death, and said: Hoc facite in meam commemorationem: Doe you this in remembrance of mee. Thus Christ himselfe ordained and commanded: thus the Apostles, and the Catholike Fathers in the Primitiue Church vsed it: and there can no commandement, nor example be shewed forth to the contrary. Yet our latter fathers, against Christ, against the Apostles, against the Primitiue Church, haue thought it sufficient, that one Priest alone should communicate for all the rest. Luke 22.

Christ deliuered the holy Communion vnder both kindes, and so it was vsed in the Primitiue Church, and in the times of the Doctours, Chrysostome, Ambrose, Gregory, Augustine, & Hierome. But our fathers in the Councel holden at Constance of late yeres, haue gone from the original, and haue decreed against Christ himselfe, against his Apostles, & Doctors, that, to minister the Communion to a lay man vnder both kindes, is an open heresie. Alas, (good brethren) I beſeech you conſider by the way, in what ſtate was the Church of Chriſt then, when Chriſts owne inſtitution, and the Apoſtles doctrine was called hereſie?

Chriſt, his Apoſtles, and the Catholike Fathers vſed their Prayers in a common tongue, that the people might perceiue what was ſaid in the Church, and ſay, Amen. But how neare our latter Fathers come to that originall, it needeth no rehearſall. For you haue heard it taught you as a neceſſarie doctrine, that your Prayers ſhould be in the Latine tongue, although you did not vnderſtand what ye prayed for: and that kinde of prayer hath beene called deuotion.

God left order to his Church: Non facies tibi ſculptile: Thou ſhalt not make thee any grauen image. From Chriſts time for the ſpace of 500. yeares, there was no allowance of Images in the Catholike Church: but our latter Fathers cannot take it for a Church, vnleſſe it be decked and ſet about with Images.

The Apoſtles were married (as Ignatius and Ambroſe witneſſe) and ſo were others the Miniſters of the Church after them, as it is well knowen, for 1000. yeares after Chriſt. To hold good this originall, there haue beene certaine Canons ſet downe: Si quis docuerit, Sacerdotem ſub obtentu Religionis, propriam vxorem contemnere, anathema ſit: If any man teach that a Prieſt, for colour of Religion ſhould contemne his wife, let him be accurſed. And the generall Councell holden at Gangra, as it is ſet down alſo by Gratian: If any put difference betweene the Prieſt that is married, by reaſon of his marriage, that he ſhould not offer, and for that cauſe commeth not to his offering, he is accurſed: yet Pope Hildebrand, one of the latter Fathers, decreed and commanded, that no man ſhould heare ſuch Prieſts Maſſe that had a wife: but cauſed their tenth to be burnt, their prayers and bleſſings to be holden as curſes, and the Sacrament which they had Conſecrate, to be ſpit at, and troden vnder mens feet.

Diſtin. 28. Si quis deſcernit,

You will ſay, Theſe be but ſmall matters, and may be borne withall, for decencie and good order. But you ſhall vnderſtand, that the Canons of the Apoſtles, and diuers of the firſt Biſhops of Rome, and other holy Fathers required, that all ſuch as were preſent at the miniſtration of the Communion, ſhould alſo be partakers of the Sacrament: and accounted worthy to be put out of the Church, whoſoeuer would not communicate with the Miniſter. And Chryſoſtome calleth ſuch a one impudent and malepert. Quiſquis myſteriorum conſors non eſt, &c. Whoſoeuer, ſaith he, doth not communicate, and ſtandeth by, he is ſhameleſſe and malepert. Communion vnder one kinde, is no ſmall matter, but ſuch a matter, and of ſuch weight, that Gelaſius calleth it open ſacrilege, to miniſter the Sacrament in one kinde.

Homil. 3. ad Eph.
De conſecrat. diſt. 2. Canone comperimus.

Common Prayer in a ſtrange tongue, is ſuch a matter, that it taketh away the very vſe of common Prayer. For the people (as Paul ſaith) cannot ſay, Amen, nor be edified, nor giue God thankes. And the Emperour Iuſtinian in a Law that he maketh, touching the publike prayers of the Church, ſaith thus: We command all Biſhops and Prieſts to miniſter the holy Oblation, and the prayer at the holy Baptiſme, not vnder ſilence, but with ſuch voice as may be heard of the faithfull people: to the intent that the hearers may be ſtirred vp to more deuotion, &c. And let the holy Prieſts vnderſtand, that if they neglect any of theſe things, they ſhall make anſwer therefore at the dreadfull iudgement of the great God, and our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt. And yet neuertheleſſe, wee our ſelues vnderſtanding the ſame will not paſſe it ouer, nor leaue it vnpuniſhed.

To haue Images in the Church of God, is no ſmall matter. It is forbidden by a generall Councell called Eliberinum: and Epiphanius a Catholike Father, calleth it abomination.

The violent inforcing of ſole life, is ſuch a matter, that S. Paul calleth it doctrinam Demoniorum: the doctrine of Diuels. And Daniel ſaith, it is one of the markes of Antichriſt: Neither ſhall he regard the deſires of women. Which place S. Hierome expoundeth: Ideo Antichriſtus ſimulat caſtitatem, vt plurimos decipiat: Therefore doth Antichriſt faine or pretend chaſtity, that he may deceiue many.

Dan. 11.

Thus farre they diſagree from the originall of Gods word. But they vſe commonly to ſay, the Church was then in her minority and infancie: afterward, ſhe was better informed. So when Chriſt, and the Apoſtles, and the Doctours pleaſe them, they ſhall rule the matters, they ſhall be holy Doctours, and holy Fathers: if not, they ſhall not be paterns to follow, but children and infants. They vſe them as Merchants vſe their counters: for that counter which now ſtandeth for a pound, anon after ſhall be removed and made a ſimple halfe peny. Yet notwithſtanding they crie, Fathers, Doctours, Church: and yet indeed do all things contrary to the Church of Chriſt, contrary to the Doctours and Fathers of the Church.

Two principall things there be that ſeeme to beare vp the whole brunt of the Religion, that that hath bẽn in the woꝛld of late time: the one is the Maſſe, and things therunto belonging: the other is the authoꝛitie of the Pope. Theſe two I will bꝛiefly compare to the firſt oꝛiginall: onely running ouer certaine ſpeciall bꝛanches of them both, in as few woꝛds as I can deuiſe.

And as touching the Maſſe, if there be any man here that hath any good opinion of it, and is alſo learned and able to iudge, let him think with himſelfe, what Doctoꝛ oꝛ Father in the Pꝛimitiue Church euer vſed, oꝛ taught vs to vſe a pꝛiuate Maſſe: what Doctoꝛ oꝛ Father euer heard of ten, twenty, oꝛ thirty Maſſes in one Church ſaid at one time: what Father oꝛ Doctoꝛ euer taught the Pꝛieſt to communicate foꝛ other? Chryſoſtome noteth, it is an eꝛꝛoꝛ to ſay, the Sacraments receiued of one, may doe good to others, that receiue them not. What Father oꝛ Doctoꝛ euer taught, that hoc facite, was hoc ſacrificate? What Doctoꝛ oꝛ Father euer taught vs, that the bꝛead is tranſubſtantiate into Chꝛiſts body? I aſſure you that woꝛd was neuer heard of, vntill now within little moꝛe than thꝛee hundꝛed yeꝛes vnder Innocentius the third. What Father oꝛ Doctoꝛ taught vs, that there remaine accidentia ſine ſubiecto? that Chꝛiſts body is in a hundꝛed thouſand places at once, that the Pꝛieſt ſhould hold the bꝛead ouer his head, and turne his backe to the people? that the Sacrament ſhould be hanged vp in a Canopy foꝛ the people to adoꝛe? What Father euer taught vs, that their Communion bꝛead ſhould be round, becauſe the earth is round? That the Pꝛieſt ſhould kiſſe the Altar, becauſe Iudas kiſſed Chꝛiſt? That he ſhould waſh his fingers, becauſe Pilate waſhed his hands? That he ſhould knocke his bꝛeaſt, in token of the thefues repentance vpon the Croſſe? Theſe things haue bẽn wꝛitten by Durand, Bonauenture, and Innocentius, and others like of late time: but the Fathers in the Pꝛimitiue Church neuer heard of them. Hom. 40. in 1. ad Cor.

Yet ſome men of late time haue beaten into your heads, that theſe and many other like things haue come by ſucceſſion, euen from the Pꝛimitiue Church, and from the Apoſtles. But ſo the Coniurers and Soꝛcerers ſay, that their Books of Coniuration & Soꝛcery came from Moſes, from Enoch, and from Abel. Plutarch wꝛiteth, that Theſeus, Romulus, Hercules, and other like pꝛincely gentlemen, indeed were baſtards, and were begotten of fathers of veꝛy low degꝛee: but after they came into honoꝛ and eſtimation, the people (becauſe they knew not whoſe ſons they were) thought they had come from heauen, and theꝛefoꝛe they called them the ſonnes of the gods.

Euen ſo, theſe things that I haue heꝛe repoꝛted, notwithſtanding indeed they are baſe boꝛne, yet becauſe they haue ſtollen into the Church, and haue bẽn had in honoꝛ, ſome men haue taught you, they haue come euen from heauen, and theꝛefoꝛe they haue fathered them vpon Chꝛiſt, and his Apoſtles. But in the meane ſeaſon, they haue not dealt iuſtly with you, but haue done wꝛong both to Chꝛiſt, and to his Apoſtles. Hieꝛome wꝛiting vpon Aggeus, ſaith: Qua abſq; authoritate & teſtimonijs Scripturarum quaſi traditione Apoſtolica ſponte reperiunt atque confingunt, percutit gladius Dei: The ſword of God ſtriketh thoſe things which men finde out and deuiſe of themſelues without the authoꝛitie and teſtimonies of the Scriptures, and deliuer foꝛth, as if they came by the tradition of the Apoſtles. Hieron. in 1. Agge.

Againe, what Catholike Father taught vs, that the Pope is the head of the Church, aboue Kings, aboue Councels, aboue the woꝛd of God, greater and of moꝛe authoꝛity than the Apoſtles? that he cannot eꝛꝛe? that the whole woꝛld is his Dioceſſe? that he may not be iudged whatſoeuer he doe, although he dꝛaw a thouſand ſoules downe into hell? that he is neither man noꝛ God, but a mixture meddled together of God & man? All theſe things, our later Fathers haue wꝛitten of the Pope: and yet I leaue a hundꝛed things vntouched. Thus faꝛ haue they gone from their oꝛiginall and paterne.

But what greater diſoꝛder can there be in the Church of God, than when Antichꝛiſt ſhall come and ſit in the place of God? There is an old fable of Antichꝛiſt, that when he commeth, he would turne tꝛees vpſide downe, and doe ſuch like wonders. But the markes whereby Antichꝛiſt ſhall be knowen indeed, are otheꝛwiſe ſet downe in the holy Scꝛiptures. In his comming, abomination ſhall ſtand in the holy place, and truth ſhall be thꝛowen downe in the earth.

I know many men are offended to heare the Pope pointed out foꝛ Antichꝛiſt, and thinke it an vncharitable kind of doctrine: theꝛefoꝛe I teſtraine to vſe any ſuch names, and only will repoꝛt to you of other, by what tokens Antichꝛiſt, when he commeth, may be knowen. Gregorie, as it were in the ſpirit of pꝛopheſie, wꝛiting againſt Iohn Biſhop of Conſtantinople, ſaith: Rex ſuperbiæ propè eſt, & (quod dici nefas eſt) Sacerdotum eſt præparatus exercitus: The King of pride is at hand, and (which is vnlawfull to be ſaid) an armie of Prieſts is pꝛepaꝛed. By theſe tokens, ſaith Gregorie, you may know him: he ſhall be the Pꝛince of pꝛide, and he ſhall haue an armie of Pꝛieſts to wait vpon him. In another place he ſaith: Quiſquis ſe vniuerſalem ſacerdotem vocat, vel vocari deſiderat, in elatione ſua Antichriſtum præcurrit: Whoſoeuer Greg. lib. 4. epiſt. 38. Greg. lib. 6. epiſt. 30.

reſt themſelues vpon the Lord and ſay, Is not God in the middeſt of vs? Are not we the Church? Therefore night ſhall be vnto you for a viſion, and darkneſſe ſhall be vnto you for a diuination, and the ſunne ſhall goe downe ouer the Prophets, and the day ſhall be darke ouer them.

I will ſpeake nothing of the blindneſſe of the time paſt; for our aduerſaries take that for a ſpeciall hold, and call ignorance the mother of deuotion: and ſay, Scriptures are a buckler, and a defence for heretikes. Not long ſithence, in this City there were certaine interrogatories put forth, to inquire of ſuch as then they called heretikes, wherein one inquiry was made in this ſort: Item: Whether you know or haue heard of any perſon or perſons within your pariſh, that hath kept, or at this preſent doth keepe, any hereticall, naughty, and ſeditious booke or bookes, eſpecially, Engliſh Teſtaments, or Bibles. I faine not this of my ſelfe, the booke is to be ſeene, imprinted euen in this yard. But this matter will ſome be anſwered, will they ſay: for it followeth, Falſly tranſlated. That were ſome what, if they would appoint you out one, that were tranſlated aright, or did allow any tranſlation of the Teſtament in Engliſh to be vſed.

Whenſoeuer any great Eclipſe chanceth in the Sunne or Moone, ſome marueilous impreſſion, or change, or mortality followeth vpon the earth: Euen ſo, when true knowledge faileth in the Church of God, it cannot be but the ſoules of the people ſhall periſh. If in the little time of Moſes abſence, the people forgat God, and fell to Idolatry: if when Chriſt ſlumbred, and toke but a little nap in the ſhip, the ſhip began to drowne: how ſhall it bee with them that receiue not Moſes at all, and giue no place to our Sauior Chriſt, who only is able to ſaue the church from drowning? For as Hilarie ſaith: Eccleſia, intra quas verbum Dei non vigilauerit, naufragæ ſunt: Non quòd Chriſtus in ſomnum relaxetur, ſed quòd ſomno noſtro conſopiatur in nobis: Thoſe Churches are in danger of drowning, wherein the word of God waketh not: Not for that Chriſt is in any ſlumber, but becauſe his word is heauy in vs through our heauineſſe: And Origen ſheweth how dangerous the ſtate of them is where the Goſpell is not preached. Such a Church cannot ſtand before the abomination of deſolation ſtedfaſt, or without danger of ſeducing. Hilar. in Mat. cap. 8.

And therefore Chriſt compareth his Church to the weakeſt things that be. Sometimes he calleth it a Vine, which vnleſſe it euermore be propt and borne vp, and loked vnto, and pruned, of it ſelfe is not able to ſtand, but falleth to the ground, and groweth wild. Sometimes he likeneth it to a flocke of ſheepe, which without attendance, is ready to take infinite maladies. Sometimes to a ſhip, which if it be not well prouided on euery ſide, if it be deſtitute of light of Sun and Starres, is in danger of the rocke and winds, and ſurges of the Sea. Sometimes to the Moone, which hath no light, but from the Sun.

What needeth more proofe in a matter being of it ſelfe ſo cleere? Chriſt himſelfe, and Daniel, and Peter, and Paul, gaue vs warning that this confuſion ſhould come to paſſe in the Church of God. We ſee with our eies, how far we are ſtraied from the originall. We ſee what darkneſſe and blindneſſe hath beene euen in them that ſhould haue ruled the ſterne. Good men haue had their eies opened, and haue pointed to vs that the Pilot of the ſhip a long time hath beene Antichriſt. The ancient and old Doctors in their time foreſaw that this great captiuity and confuſion was comming euen vpon them. Our fathers of late yeeres (though our aduerſaries and Patrons of the contrary cauſe, yea, the Biſhops of Rome and their chiefeſt pillars) doe confeſſe, that the patern and originall hath not beene kept. Diſcipline, which is the greateſt bond of the Church, hath beene broken. I pray God it may now be reſtored. The Sacraments that Chriſt left for our moſt comfort, haue ben miſerably mangled and defaced. Our praiers haue beene without ſpirit and verity, and ſo abuſed, that indeed they were no praiers.

What greater proofes or authorities doe we looke for? Now then, can there be any man ſo wilfull, that will ſay, there hath beene no diſorder in the Church? or, that Chriſt himſelfe, and his Apoſtles (if they were aliue) could rule the Church in no better ſort, than it hath beene and is by the Pope and his Cardinals?

But me thinke I heare ſome ſay, The Church cannot be ſo forſaken. it is the houſe and Temple of God, it is the ſpouſe of Chriſt: Chriſt made her a ſure promiſe, that he would neuer forſake her. Ero vobiſcum vſque ad conſummationem ſeculi: I will be with you to the end of the world. All this is true; yet is it not true, that euery particular Church of the world ſhal be eſtabliſhed for euer. For was not this Temple that Salomon built, the Temple of God? yet was it ouerthrown, & burnt downe to the ground by the Chaldees. Iupiters Image was ſet vp in it by Antiochus. It was afterward ouerthrown by the Emperor Titus; yet was it the Temple of God. Gods houſe is a houſe of praier; yet Chriſt ſaith; Vos feciſtis ſpeluncam latronum: You haue made it a den of theeues. The Lord made choice of his Vine, he loued it, it was a choſen heritage; yet Ieremie ſaith: Many paſtors haue deſtroied my Matth. 28. Luke 19. Iere. 12.

my Vineyard, and troden my portion vnder foote; of my choſen place, they haue made a deſolate wilderneſſe. Hieruſalem was called the holy City; yet is ſhe charged, that ſhe hath plaied the harlot and done ſhamefully. The Iewes called themſelues the people of God, but Chriſt calleth them the Synagogue of Satan. The Church of God is called the holy place; yet Chriſt ſaith, the abomination of deſolation, and S. Paul ſaith, the man of ſinne ſhall ſtand in the holy place. Reuel. 1.

If we beléeue Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, that forewarned vs hereof: if we beléeue the old Doctors: if we beléeue the writers of later yéares: if we beléeue ſuch as God hath ſtirred vp in our time to reuiue his Goſpell: if we beléeue our aduerſaries: if we beléeue our owne ſenſes and experience; let vs confeſſe that the Church hath béene defaced with abuſes: let vs giue God thankes, that of his great mercies hath reſtored it, and let vs euery man endeuour to reedifie it.

God had mollified the Kings heart to be gracious towards them, he had deliuered them, he had reſtored them home to their country, he gaue them Prophets to call vpon them, and a godly Prince to rule ouer them: but the people cried out: The time is not yet come that the Lords houſe ſhould be builded. Here muſt I touch the cauſes that withhold men from the building of Gods Temple, not all that may be reckoned: For that would require more time; but only the chiefeſt, that ſhall come to hand.

The firſt ſéemed to be deſpaire of the cauſe. For they ſaw it was a long trauell from Babylon to Hieruſalem. They had béene ſpoiled of all they had, and were poore, and the greateſt part euen of their owne people forſoke them, and would not returne home with them. Their enemies were ſtrong, and laughed them to ſcorne, and hindered their buildings. Others charged them with ſedition, and ſaid, if theſe men may once recouer their City, they will pay no more tribute, they will be longer in ſubiection, and this matter at length ſhall redound to the Kings dammage: Looke in your Chronicles, and you ſhal find that the Iewes haue euer béene traitors.

Euen ſo, when the man of God Luther was raiſed vp by God to reforme the Church, a friend of his ſaid vnto him; O father Luther, you ſhall neuer be able to preuaile: the Pope and Princes, and all the world are againſt you: The matter is paſt recouery: go into your ſtudy, and ſay: Deus miſereatur noſtri. Euen ſo, whenſoeuer it pleaſeth God to build vp the walles of his Temple, he chuſeth out ſuch, that for their owne infirmities, and for the force and ſtrength of their enemies, they might be diſcouraged, and deſpaire. Euen now that it hath pleaſed God to reſtore his Goſpell, they that are of the contrary part, cry out: Theſe men be rebels, they would haue no magiſtrate, they would haue all things in common. Behold what they haue done in Heluetia: behold what they haue don in Germanie: Looke out your Chronicles, you ſhall finde that all the vproares and ſeditions which haue béene theſe forty yéares, haue béene ſtirred vp by ſome of them.

But all this diſcouraged not the good Prince Zorobabel, but armed himſelfe with Gods promiſe againſt all impoſſibilities, and ſo called the people to the building of the Temple. And therefore God proſpered him, and moued the king Darius heart to make Proclamation, that whoſoeuer would withſtand Zorobabel in his doings, timber ſhould be taken out of his owne houſe, and a gallowes made, and he theron hanged without redemption. Euen ſo, that man of God deſpaired not, though he ſaw all the world againſt him, but gaue the glory to God. And therfore God bleſſed his doings as we ſée at this day. For it is the cauſe of God, and not of man. The zeale of the Lord of hoſts hath done this. I will bring this to paſſe (ſaith the Lord) not for your ſakes, but that my name may be glorified among the nations. For God chuſeth the weake things, and the fooliſh things of the world. As for the Aduerſaries, be they neuer ſo ſtrong, he that dwelleth in the heauens laugheth them to ſcorne. Theſe, through feare and deſpaire, kéepe backe from building the Temple.

Some there be that confeſſe, that many things are out of frame, and ought to be looked on, but they ſay, it is no time to fall a building. We muſt looke for a generall Councel. And God grant we may once ſée that day, that a generall Councel may be called, wherein Chriſt may ſit preſident, and all theſe matters that are now in queſtion, may haue indifferent hearing, and may be decided by the word of God.

But alas, they that make a face and ſhew of generall Councels, themſelues ſtop and ſtay, that there may be no generall Councell. When Luther made his firſt appeale from the Pope that then was, to a generall Councell, they made him anſwer, that it was againſt the decree of Pope Iulius, and Pope Pius, that any appeale ſhould be made from the Pope to any Councell.

When the Emperor had compelled them to a Councell, and the Princes of Germany & Common-weales, had ſent learned men thither, the Biſhops that were there aſſembled, would not heare any of them preach, or diſpute, or declare their minde. For only Biſhops may

may ſit and ſpeake in their Councel, and ſuch as are ſworne to maintaine the Pope. Æneas Syluius, otherwiſe called Pope Pius the ſecond, ſaith, If a Biſhop ſpeake againſt the Pope, yea although he ſpeake the truth, yet neuertheleſſe he ſinneth againſt the oath, that he hath made vnto the Pope.

Æneas Sylui. us ad capitulum Magun. tin.

And laſt of all, when the Councell hath done all that it can, the whole concluſion of the matter hangeth vpon the determination of the Pope. Now iudge you, what ſentence there is like to be, whereas hee ſhall be Iudge in his owne cauſe. Thus when they crie out and ſpeake of Councels, they ſeeke delay, they mocke with God and man, and indeed meane to haue no Councell.

S. Paul, after he was called of God, and touched in his heart and conſcience with Gods truth, appealed not to a generall Councell, but ſaith: Non acquieui carni & ſanguini: I communicated not with fleſh and blood. The kingdome of heauen ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. There is no Councell aboue God.

Galat. 1. Mat. 11.

A Councel may teſtifie the truth to be truth, but it cannot make falſhood to be truth. Auguſtine anſwered moſt indifferently, writing to Maximinus a Biſhop of the Arrians, that alleged a generall Councel holden at Ariminum: Nec ego Nicenum, nec tu debes Ariminenſe tanquam præiudicaturus proferre Concilium, &c: Neither may I lay to thee the Councell of Nice, nor maieſt thou lay to me the Councell of Ariminum, either of vs thinking thereby to find preiudice againſt the other: But let vs lay matter to matter, cauſe to cauſe, and reaſon to reaſon, by the authority of the Scriptures, which are indifferent witneſſes for both.

Lib. 3. cont. Maxim. c. 14.

When Ageſilaus minded to make his paſſage with his army thorow his neighbors land, he deſired licence of the Prince of that country: the Prince ſaid, he could make him no ready anſwer, but that he would take aduice of his Counſell. Well then, ſaid Ageſilaus, take you aduiſement: in the meane ſeaſon, I will paſſe thorow. So when our aduerſaries delay oft, and ſoiourne till they may take their deliberation in a Councell, let them deliberate while they will: but in the meane ſeaſon, let vs paſſe on in the buſineſſe of God, and take the occaſion offered vs to build vp a houſe to the Lord.

Some other ſay, it is not yet time: the Biſhops be they that ſhould redreſſe the Church. Would to God they would. For they ſhould be Lux Mundi: The light of the world: they ſhould be Shepheards, and Watchmen, they ſhould be builders of Gods Church. But what if the light become darkneſſe? What if the Shepheards become Wolues? What if the Watchmen lie a ſleepe? What if the Builders become ouerthrowers? Ieremy ſaith, the Paſtors haue ouerthrowen the Vineyard: and is it likely that they will reare it vp againe? Chriſt ſaid vnto the Biſhops, You haue made my houſe a den of theeues: and is it likely that they will bring it againe to the former ſtate, and make it a place of praier? But O mercifull God, what a building is that like to be, where ignorance is the foundation, where ignorance is deuotion, & the greateſt corner ſtone of the building? I pray God lighten their hearts with his holy Spirit, and make them to bee that they profeſſe themſelues to be, the light of the world, and true labourers in Gods Vineyard, and faithfull builders of his houſe.

In the meane ſeaſon let vs remember, that in the old Law, whenſoeuer the Biſhop grew out of order, God raiſed vp ſomtimes Prophets, ſomtimes Princes, to reforme the Church, to redreſſe things that were amiſſe, and to edifie the decaies. For the Prince is keeper of the Law of God, and that of both Tables, as well of the firſt that pertaineth to religion, as of the ſecond that pertaineth to good order. For he is the Head of the people, not only of the Commons and Laity, but alſo of the Miniſters and Clergy. By that authority, Moſes being a Magiſtrate rebuked Aaron the Biſhop, for making the golden Calfe. Ioas being a King, reformed the riot of the Prieſts. Salomon being King, firſt builded the Temple of God, and put downe the high Biſhop Abiathar, and ſet vp Sadoc. Afterward, the ſame Temple being polluted was reſtored, not by the Biſhops, but by the Kings, Ezechias, Ioſias, Abias, Ioſaphat: and at this time after the captiuity of Babylon, it was reſtored, not by the Biſhops, but by Zorobabel the Prince of Iuda.

And after the comming of Chriſt, when the Emperors became Chriſtned, Conſtantine a godly Emperor threatned the Biſhops, if they would not be ruled, he would take vpon him to ſee them puniſhed, as hauing indeed authority and power ouer Biſhops. And Iuſtinianus in his law threatneth the Biſhops, that if they would not make their praiers in a loud voice, that the people might ſay Amen, he would puniſh them with his ſword, as hath beene ſaid before.

But what needeth more examples? When the Arke of God was reſtored home, Dauid being King, plaied the chiefeſt part: Dauid being King, made Pſalmes and ditties: Dauid being King, danced before the Arke: and being King, ſet the Biſhops and Prieſts in order. And for this cauſe they are Kings, euen to ſerue the Lord. And therefore they doe not wel that diuide Common weales in two, and deuise two heads, the one for the spiritualty, the other for the laity. For S. Paul saith: Omnis anima superioribus potestatibus subdita sit: Let euery soule be subiect to the higher powers. Euery soule, whether he be Bishop, Cardinall, or Pope, all are subiect to their Prince. And Chrysostome vpon that place saith: Etiam si Apostolus sis, si Euangelista, sine Propheta, sine quisquis tandem fueris: neque enim pietatem subuertit ista subiectio: Yea, if thou be an Apostle, if thou be an Euangelist, if thou be a Prophet, or of what state soeuer thou be: for this subiection is no hinderance to godlinesse. And of the superiority of Princes power, Tertullian speaketh thus: Colimus Imperatorem: vt hominem à Deo secundum, solo Deo minorem: We worship the Emperor as a man next vnto God, and inferiour only vnto God.

Rom. 13.

Hom. 23. in 13. Ro.

Tertull. ad Scapulam.

Some other there be that see and know, that the Church of God is now a building, and yet not onely refraine themselues from the worke, but also spurne downe that other men haue built vp: that see we teach nothing but the word of God, and the Doctrine of the Primitiue Church; and yet lest they should seeme to receiue the doctrine which they haue persecuted, inforce themselues to be constant, and lay violent hands vpon their owne conscience, and say: Non regnabit super nos: He shall not beare rule ouer vs: and as Pharao said in the hardnesse of his heart: Nescio Dominum, I know not the Lord.

I take not here vpon me to iudge other mens consciences: but such men there haue bin, as we may know by reading, and as God hath opened by notable iudgement; and I pray God there be none such now. I pray God there be none that offend against their owne conscience and knowledge, and against the holy spirit of God.

But alas, I speake not now of the ignorant and vnlearned sort of people, that offend of simplicity, and haue a zeale of God, although it be not according to knowledge: but I speak of them that be learned, that know well, that we teach you nothing this day, but that Christ and his Apostles taught before vs, and was euermore frequented throughout the Church, vntill all things grew to corruption. And of the contrarie part, they doe know, and their consciences doe testifie vnto them, that their doctrine for the most part is contrarie to the vse of the Primitiue Church, contrarie to the Apostles, contrarie to Christ himselfe.

Yet will these men sooner leaue their liuing, than be present at the hearing of an English praier, or communicate with the people vnder both kindes. They call it a schisme to haue the common praiers in a tongue that the people may vnderstand. To communicate vnder both kinds, they call it a schisme. For the Ministers to be married, they call it a schisme. And other like things, which were tedious to rehearse at length. Those things which were ordained by Christ and his Apostles, and vsed throughout the whole Catholike Primitiue Church without question, they call schismaticall.

O mercifull God! Shall we say, that all the whole world of the Christians, euer from Christs time, vntill the late time of these latter fathers, was in a continuall schisme? Shall we say that S. Augustine, S. Ambrose, and other old fathers were schismatikes? Shall we say that Christ and his Apostles taught vs schismes? or, that was once true, and Christian doctrine, is now become a schisme? Is the Church now within fiue hundred yeres become Catholike? and was Christs Church, and the Apostles Church, and the Doctours Church not Catholike? O Lord, if we be deceiued, thou hast deceiued vs: for if in these doings we be schismatikes, for hauing praier in a knowen tongue, or for communion vnder both kinds, or for the mariage of Priests and Ministers, whereas thou gauest thy communion vnder both kinds, and didst chuse such as were maried to be thy Apostles, and diddest pray in the common and vulgar tongue, as also thy Apostle Paul taught vs to doe: If this be schisme, we are become schismatikes, for following thine example, and that ordinance which thou hast left vnto thy Church.

But S. Hilarie sheweth how we shall be sure to know an heresie or a schisme. Hæc est regula fidei: Christus dixit, Apostolus dixit: This is a rule of faith, to say, Christ hath said it, The Apostle hath said it. Christ saith: Bibite ex hoc omnes, Drinke ye all of this, without exception. Paul biddeth vs to pray so, that the people may say, Amen. And saith: Honorabile coniugium in omnibus: Mariage is honorable in all men. Then is this by Hilaries rule the Catholike faith, and the contrary is schismaticall: for our faith is builded vpon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets. S. Cyprian saith: Non pax est, sed bellum; nec Ecclesiæ iungitur, qui ab Euangelio separatur: It is no peace but warre, no Catholike peace or vnitie, but open warre and schisme: neither can he say, I am of the Church, that is diuided from the Gospell. Iustinus Martyr, as it is reported by Eusebius, said: Ipsi Domino non acquiescerem, si alium Deum diceret præter omnium Creatorem: I would not beleeue Christ himselfe, if he should say there were another God than the Creator of all things. If he would not beleeue God himselfe, teaching otherwise than is set down by the word of God, much lesse would he beleeue the the Church, teaching contrary to the Goſpell.

God of his mercy grant, that all our controuerſies that we now ſtand vpon, may be heard and determined by Gods Goſpell, and open the eies of our aduerſaries, that they may ſée the hope whereunto they are called.

In the meane ſeaſon let not vs ſhun or refraine them, but exhort and counſell them with all ſobrietie in the ſpirit of mæknesſe, as our brethren.

Who knoweth whether God of his mercy will call them to repentance? As God ſaid to S. Paul by Reuelation: Populus mihi multus eſt in hac ciuitate: I haue much people in this citie: So I truſt I may ſay, at leaſt I doubt not but wée may charitably hope, God hath a great number, euen among them that run to the Maſſe, that will yet heare no reaſon, but are ſtubborne and wilfull.

Their hearts are in the hands of God, and he is able, and will mollifie them, and of ſtony will make them fleſhy, and of ſtones make them the children of Abraham, and the principall Corner-ſtones in the building of his Church.

Other impediments there be, that kéepe men from the building of Gods houſe. But that which GOD complaineth of by the Prophet, is, that euery man fell to build his owne houſe, and left the houſe of God vnbuilded. This is the corruption of our nature. Such things as we ſhould glorifie God withall, wée abuſe moſt to the diſhonor of God. Therfore Chriſt calleth them Thornes, and the Mammon of wickednesſe, not becauſe they are ſo of themſelues, for they are the gifts of God, but becauſe our froward nature maketh them ſo.

The man, as Chriſt ſaith in the parable, that was bid to the marriage feaſt, ſent word that he was married and could not come. Eſay ſaith: The Harpe, and Violl, and Timbrell, and Pipe, and wine are in their feaſts: but they regard not the worke of the Lord. The fantaſies and pleaſures of this life raviſh our minds and pull them cleane from God. So ſaith the Prophet: You can haue your houſes ſeeled, and furniſhed: in the meane while, my houſe lieth forſaken. Eſay 5.

O that Aggeus the Prophet were now aliue, and ſaw the rearing vp of Gods Temple here in England! What, thinke you he would ſay, You build your owne houſes, and leaue the houſe of God forſaken? Nay, he would ſay, You build your owne manſions, and pull downe the houſe of God.

The maſters of the worke, build benefice vpon benefice, and Deanry vpon Deanry, as though Rome were yet in England. The poore flocke is giuen ouer to a Wolfe: the poore children crie out for bread, the bread of life, and there is no man to breake it to them.

The Noblemen or Gentlemen, the Patrons of benefices, giue preſentations of benefices, either to bée Farmars themſelues, or elſe with exception of their owne Tenths, or with ſome other condition that is worſe than this. The poore Miniſter muſt kéepe his houſe, buy him bookes, releeue the poore, and liue, God knoweth how, and ſo doe you too.

O good my Lords and brethren, I come not hither to be a patrone for mony matters: God ſeeth my heart before whom I ſpeake it. But I ſee Gods Temple by this meanes is forſaken.

Yong men, ſuch as are of moſt towardneſſe, turne themſelues to be Phyſitians, or men of Law: yea, Clerkes, or Apothecaries. The matter is ſo vſed, that they are aſhamed to be Miniſters in Gods Church.

They ſhould not ſo doe, ſay you: no, neither yet you, as your doings are, can be angrie with them. They are not Angels, but your owne children, your brethren, your Coſins, of your owne affections, of your owne fleſh and blood, and they thinke themſelues too good to become your ſlaues.

O mercifull GOD! at the beginning of the Goſpell, euery man brought his goods, and laid them at the feet of the Diſciples. Now euery man is ready to pull out in a manner, neceſſarie ſuſtenance, euen out of the mouthes of Chriſts Diſciples. Then that, that was euerie mans owne, euerie man made it common, and no man counted it to bee his owne. Now that appertaineth to others, and is appointed to the building and preſeruing of GODS Church, that euery man laieth hands on, and counteth to bee his owne. In the meane ſeaſon, the poore Vniuerſities are neglected, the Schooles euery where vnfurniſhed, the youth driuen and chaſed away from the building.

Thinke of this in your hearts: conſider with your ſelues. There lack already Miniſters thorowout the Realme, to teach the people, and to build vp the wals of Gods Church. One poore hireling is driuen to ſerue two or three pariſhes. The ſicke haue no man to comfort or counſell them: the dead haue no man to bury them: one man buriеth another. That thing I know is not materiall: yet it ſemeth not ſo to all men, and our bodies are the Temples of the holy Ghoſt, and ought reuerently to be brought to their graues.

View your Vniuerſities: view your ſchooles, which euer haue beene nurſeries to this purpoſe: alas, how many ſhall you finde in both the Vniuerſities, and in all the Schooles thorow England, not only that are already ripe, but alſo that are minded to the Miniſterie? If they be not found there, alas where thinke you to haue them? Where thinke you will they be found? Thinke you that they will ſpring out of the ground, or drop down from the heauens? No, no, they be of you, and muſt be bred and reared amongſt you. If there be none to be found, nor hope of any to be hereafter: be you well aſſured, that Acts of Parliament, and Proclamations, are not enough to content the conſcience of the people, and to build vp the Temple.

Oh, that the Queens Maieſty knew the great ſcarſity, and miſerable need of Miniſters that is abroad! And I beſeech you, good my Lords, and other Honorable and Worſhipfull that are here, that haue or may haue acceſſe vnto her, to put her in remembrance, that her Grace will be mindfull of the houſe of God, and redreſſe the greedineſſe both of corrupt patrons, and of ſuch, who engroſſe and gather into their hands many liuings, being themſelues the remnant of the ignorant and perſecuting Babylon: and yet leaue to take charge ouer the people, blinde ſir Iohns, not only lacke Latine, but lacke honeſty, and lacke conſcience, and lacke religion. It would be a great furtherance to the Church of God, a wonderfull way to increaſe Schooles and the Vniuerſities.

Now remaineth the laſt part that I haue taken in hand to ſpeake of: that is, of the maner of the building. Whereof, becauſe the matter of it ſelfe is long, and I ſcanted of time, I will ſpeke two words, and ſo make an end. And what better way can be deuiſed to reſtore Chriſts Church, than that we ſe vſed by Chriſt himſelfe? Chriſt when he was appoſed of the Phariſies in the caſe of diuorce, whether it were lawful for a man to put away his wife vpon any kinde of matter, and to marie another, called them backe to the Scriptures: Ab initio non fuit ſic: Scriptum eſt: From the beginning it was not ſo: It is written. And ſo in other places in like matters, he ſaith: Scriptum eſt: and euer returneth them to the Scriptures. The ſame order vſed Eſaias: Ad Legem, & ad Prophetas, Haue recourſe to the Law and the Prophets. So Ioſias, ſo Ezechias, ſo Ioſaphat reformed the Temple of God when it was polluted, according to the patern of the Scriptures. For as Tertullian ſaith: Peraque ad vniuerſas hæreſes iam hinc præiudicatum eſt, Id eſſe verum quodcunq; primum, id eſſe adulterum quodcunque poſterius: By this rule wee may equally preſcribe againſt all hereſies. That is true that was firſt appointed, that is falſe that was afterward deuiſed. S. Auguſtine ſaith: In Scripturis didicimus Chriſtum, in Scripturis didicimus Eccleſiam: has Scripturas communiter habemus; quare non in eis & Chriſtum & Eccleſiam communiter retinemus? In the Scriptures we haue learned Chriſt: in the Scriptures we haue learned the Church: theſe Scriptures we haue indifferently between vs; why do we not after one ſort hold Chriſt and the Church by them? And againe, where he writeth againſt Petilian a Donatiſt: Non audiamus, Hæc dico, hæc dicis: ſed audiamus, Hæc dicit Dominus. Sunt certi libri Dominici, quorum authoritati vtrique conſentimus, vtrique credimus, vtrique ſeruimus: Ibi quæramus Eccleſiam, ibi diſcutiamus cauſam noſtram: Let vs not heare, Thus I ſay, thus thou ſaieſt: but let vs heare, Thus ſaith the Lord. There be certaine bookes of our Lord, vnto the authority whereof ech part agreeth, ech part beleeueth, ech part yeeldeth: there let vs ſeeke for the Church, thereby let vs examine and trie our matters.

De vnitat. Eccleſ. Tom. 7.

This is the Rocke vpon which Chriſt hath built his Church: againſt this Rocke the gates of Hell ſhall not preuaile. Auguſtine ſpeaketh this in a prety alluſion: Non me ædificabo ſuper te, ſed te ædificabo ſuper me. I wil not build my ſelfe vpon thee, but I will build thee vpon mee. The ſame affirmeth Hierome, Baſil, Cyril, Hilarius, and other the ancient writers. It would be too long to alleage any more: only I will recite vnto you Lyraes iudgement of theſe words, more for that he was one that fauoured our Aduerſaries, than for the waight of his authority: Super hanc Petram, ſaith he, id eſt, ſuper Chriſtum: Vpon this Rock, that is, vpon Chriſt: ex quo patet, quòd Eccleſia non conſiſtit in hominibus ratione poteſtatis &c. Wherby it is manifeſt that the Church is not among men, by reaſon of any Eccleſiaſticall or Secular authority or dignity: becauſe many Princes and chiefeſt Biſhops haue forſaken the faith: therefore the Church reſteth in theſe perſons, in whom are to bee found true knowledge, the confeſſion of faith, and acknowledging of the truth. Wherfore the foundation of this building, wherupon all the whole worke muſt reſt, muſt be Chriſt and his holy word: for as S: Paul ſaith; No man can lay another foundation, than that which is laid already, Ieſus Chriſt.

Lyra in 16. Matth.

1. Cor. 3.

The

The Emperor Domitian pretending a reforming of the Empire, which afore his time, Tiberius, Caligula, Nero, and other wicked Emperors had ſpoiled and defaced, aſked a Philoſopher, one Apollonius Tyanæus, what order were beſt to be taken therein. Apollonius made him anſwer: Sir, if it pleaſe your Maieſtie, you muſt doe as the Muſician bade his ſcholars doe. How is that, ſaid Domitian? Mary ſir, quoth Apollonius, there was a cunning Muſician that ſet his ſcholars to an ignorant and homely minſtrell to learne Muſicke of him: but before he ſent them out he gaue them this Leſſon, Whatſoeuer you ſee your Maſter doe, ſee that you auoid it: he is vnlearned, and his Leſſons and maner of fingering, naught: therefore ſee you doe the contrary. Euen ſo may I ſay, whatſoeuer we ſee that they haue done, that were our latter fathers before vs, that haue deſtroied Chriſts Church, let vs remember to doe the contrary. Their foundation, as you know, and as they themſelues confeſſe, is ignorance: let our foundation be Chriſt, and knowledge of Gods word. They haue pulled the Scriptures out of the peoples heads and hands, that no man might ſee their doings. Let vs exhort all men, as S. Chryſoſtome, Origen, and other holy Fathers did, to read the Scriptures, that all the world may ſee our doings. They build Gods word vpon the Church: let vs, as Paul doth teach vs, build the Church vpon Gods word. They contrary to God, and contrary to his word, haue made the Biſhop of Rome ſupreme head of the Church; contrary I ſay, to the word of God haue they made him ſupreme head of all the Church. Theſe are not my words, but S. Gregory, who was himſelfe a Biſhop of Rome, ſaith of them: Pia leges, venerandæ Synodi, ipſa Domini noſtri Ieſu mandata, ſuperbis atque pompaticis cuiuſdam ſermonis inuentione turbantur: The godly Lawes, the reuerend Synods, and the verie commandements of our Lord Ieſu, are broken, by the innention of a certaine proud and pompous name. And thereof, as Gregory himſelfe teſtifieth, hath enſued Vniuerſa pernicies: An vniuerſall deſtruction. Greg. lib 4. epiſt. 32.

Marke, I beſeech you, and let it not out of your remembrance. They ſay, this is the key of the Church, that one be the head of it, to rule it, and to gouerne; kept in vnity all the reſt. But Gregory, which was himſelfe a Biſhop of Rome, ſaith, it is Vniuerſa pernicies: A generall corruption and plaugue of the Church. Let vs according to Gods word, according to the Canons, know, that as Cyprian ſaith: Vnus eſt Epiſcopatus, cuius à ſingulis in ſolidum pars tenetur: There is but one Biſhoprick, part wherof is holden in whole of euery ſeuerall Biſhop. And as Hierome ſaith: Vbicunq; fuerit Epiſcopus, ſiue Romæ, ſiue Engubij, ſiue Conſtantinopoli, ſiue Rhegij, ſiue Alexandriæ, ſiue Tanais, eiuſdem meriti, eiuſdem eſt & ſacerdotij: Whereſoeuer there be a Biſhop, be it at Rome, be it at Eugubium, be it at Conſtantinople, be it at Rhegium, be it at Alexandria, be it at Tanais, they are all of one worthines, they are al of one prieſthood. Cypri. de ſimp. Prælatorum. Hieron. ad Enagrium.

They ſet the Pope aboue Kings and Princes, againſt Gods word. Let vs know, that according to Gods word, euery ſoule muſt be ſubiect to the higher powers. In theſe things and in all other the like, in which they forſake the paterne and originall, and in which they doe contrary to the Scriptures, to Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, contrary to the practiſe of the Primitiue Church, and contrary to the ſound iudgement of the ancient Catholike fathers, grounded vpon the word of God: let vs remember, whatſoeuer they doe, or haue done, to doe the contrary. For it is not poſſible, by what meanes things haue growen to corruption, that by the ſame meanes they ſhall euer be well reſtored againe.

After the Temple was builded, or was in building and rearing, Eſdras the Prophet read the Law of God, and ſacrificed oxen, ſheepe, and lambes, and the people wept in conſideration that they and their Fathers had ſo vnkindly offended God, and deſerued ſo extremely to be puniſhed at his hand. So the good king Ioſias, after he had found the booke of the law, and ſaw how highly both he and his fathers had offended God, he fell a weeping: (for the conſideration of Gods great benefits, and our own vnworthines, cauſeth vs to mourne at the ſight of our owne vnkindneſſe.) When they turned vnto God, repented themſelues of their wickednеſſe, and left ſuch vanities as they had walked in before. So Chriſt our Sauiour, when he began to preach the goſpel, and to ſpread abroad the vnſpeakable treaſure of our ſaluation, called vs firſt to repentance, and ſaid: Pœnitentiam agite, appropinquauit enim regnum cœlorum: Repent ye, for the kingdome of God is at hand. Zacheus when he had receiued Chriſt to his table, repented him of his extortion, and made reſtitution: Then Ieſus ſaid vnto him, This day is ſaluation come vnto this houſe, foraſmuch as he is alſo become the ſonne of Abraham. So the Chriſtian men in the beginning repented themſelues, and changed their whole life, and therefore were called Saints: as S. Paul vſeth in many places to name them: Vocatis Sanctis: To thoſe which are called Saints. And, Sanctis qui ſunt Corinthi: To the Saints which are at Corinth. Plinie being a Heathen, and ſet by the Emperor to enquire of Chriſtian men, made report in his Epiſtle to Traianus, that they were a ſect which would not offer vp to Idols, which could not be compelled to blaſpheme Chriſt, but were wont at certaine times appointed to meet together and ſing hymnes to one Chriſt Luke 19.

their God, that they were of one minde, and agreed among themſelues, and did abſtaine from theft, murder, and adultery, and did kepe their faith, and defrauded no man.

Euen ſuch ſhould we be, thus ought we to liue, theſe things are examples for vs to follow, we ſhould met often to ſing hymnes, and giue thankes to our God, we ſhould lament our former wickednelle, wherewith we haue called Gods anger vpon vs.

But alas, there appeareth not in vs that change of life that ought to be in ſuch as turne to Chriſt; we are as proud, as couetous, and wicked in abuſing the holy name of God, as euer we were in the time of ignorance. Thus we abuſe the great mercie of God, thus we withhold his truth in vnrighteouſnelle. We ſay, we know God, but giue him not the glory that is due vnto God.

And beſides this, we are in loue with our owne corruption: and as the Prophet ſaith, we reioice when we haue done wickedly: we cannot abide to haue our fault touched, our pride is growen vp as hie as heauen, our couetouſnelle is ſunke as deepe as hell, our poore weake brethren be offended, and thinke that theſe be the very fruits of Chriſts Goſpell. Yet we can in no wiſe ſuffer to be reproued, we ſay to the Preacher, Peace, and talke not to vs in the name of the Lord, tell not vs of the Scriptures, tell not vs of Chriſt, of Peter, and Paul: we bid him ſpeake vs faire, & bleſſe thoſe things that be accurſed by Gods own mouth. We ſay, he is too buſie, he medleth with that he knoweth not. Yes, yes man, he knoweth it well enough, he knoweth that pride is pride, that vſurie is vſurie, that ſinne is ſinne: and thou and thine owne conſcience knoweth it too, if thou wouldeſt be knowen of it, yea, thou knoweſt it, & indeed in thy heart, of force art wearie of it, and this is extreme miſerie, that we are ſo far plunged in ſinne, that we can neither abide our own faults, nor yet the amending of them. Is this the repentance of our life? Are theſe the fruits of Gods Goſpell? are theſe the fruits of the innocent blod, that we ſee ſhed before our eies? Are theſe our teares for the ſinnes we haue committed? Is this the thanks that we render vnto God, for giuing vnto vs ſo great bleſſings? But, what ſaid I, bleſſings? Would God we were ſo bleſſed, that we might conſider our bleſſednelle. Many already bewray the weaknelle of their ſtomacks, they breake not the Goſpel: yea, they ſeem already weary of theſe Preachers, they call them pulpit men, men of the ſpirit, and I know not what: as though they themſelues had nothing to doe with Gods ſpirit. Ah, merciſull God, what way may God take to win you? Alas, what are we? what haue we offended you? Are we become your enemies for telling you the truth? I feare me, this murmuring is not againſt vs, but againſt the Lord.

You haue had the Maſſe, and that you worthily hated: you haue now the Communion, and that you regard not. God hath ſent to call you with fire and fagots: thoſe which vſed that ſeuerity and cruelty, you call tyrants. He hath ſent vnto you now ſimple men, that bring you nothing elſe, but the kingdome of God, & ſake for nothing, but only for your ſalnation: and them you diſdaine. It is euen now come to paſſe, that Chriſt ſaid: We haue piped to you, and you haue not danced: we haue mourned to you, and you haue not wept: but wiſedome is iuſtified of all her children. Many of you are euen full of that Goſpell, and full and weary of theſe ſchoolmaſters. Therefore ſhall God ſend amongſt you another maner of ſchoolmaſter, that ſhal intreat you after another ſort, that ſhal put the pride from your necks, and the ruffes from your ſhoulders, I will ſay (I would God I might not ſpeak thus in the ſpirit of truth) I would to God it might proue vntrue, & neuer come to paſſe. But God is iuſt, and the extreme diſdaine of Gods truth, and his holy Goſpell, iuſtly deſerueth the extremity of Gods vengeance: and this Goſpell, that you are already ſo weary of, ſhall be taken away from vs. The kingdome of God ſhall be taken away from vs, and ſhall be giuen to a nation, that ſhall doe the fruits of it. The kingdome of God, which is the true vnderſtanding of Gods word, ſhall be taken away. And then what ſhall remaine, but blindneſſe and ſalſhood, which is the kingdome of the Diuell? I will ſend (ſaith God) a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirſt of water, but of hearing the word of the Lord.

Luke 7.

Amos 8.

Let vs therefore, good brethren, remember for what cauſes God ſuffered his Temple at Ieruſalem, to be deſtroied and burnt by the Chaldees: let vs remember wherfore God toke from vs his holy Goſpel that he had planted amongſt vs of late time: let vs now thankfully receiue it, with teares, & repentance for our former life: let vs not make our ſelues vnworthy of the great grace and bleſſing of God. To you this holy promiſe is made, you are the children of Abraham, to you Chriſt ſpreadeth out his armes to imbrace you: receiue not the grace of God in vaine, let vs not put out that heauenly light, which God hath kindled, let vs pray to God to giue vs new hearts, and to put a new ſpirit within vs. Why ſhould you periſh, you that are ſo derely ſaued? why ſhould you periſh, O you the houſe of Iſrael? Let vs once fall to the building vp of Gods holy Temple, let vs not driue it off any longer.

The Foxes haue burrowes, and the birds of the aire haue nefts, but the Son of man hath not yet a place to reſt his head in. God calleth to vs by the Prophet: Bring wood, and build this houſe, and I will be fauourable in it. Is it time for your ſelues to dwell in your ſieled houſes, and this houſe lie waſt? Your houſes are freſh and faire furniſhed, and yet my houſe lieth deſolate, flat vpon the ground. Behold the miſerable deſolation of my holy place, my flocke is ſcattered in the mountaines: behold your brethren that lie in chains in a thouſand places bound, beaten, tormented, and drawen to moſt cruell death, not for any offence they haue committed, but onely for the building of my Temple, and profeſſion of my name. They are your owne body, fleſh and blood. My bones are ſcattered vpon the face of the earth, my blood is ſhed without compaſſion, as it were water vpon the ground. O what crueltie haue you, that can ſee this, and not be moued! That can build your owne houſes, and ferme your owne pleaſures, and leaue my houſe forſaken!

Thus almighty God ſpeaketh to vs. O good brethren, let vs not deſpiſe his calling, let him not ſpeake to vs in vaine, let vs no longer ſay, it is not yet time to build vp the Lords houſe. God hath raiſed vp vnto vs a moſt vertuous and noble Lady, that hath already ſet labourers a worke, and begun the building. Let vs remember that the Chaldees, when they came to Ieruſalem, neuer ſtrained courteſie, or ſaid, it is not yet time to pull downe the houſe of God: they laid hands on it, and ſpoiled it, they burnt it without mercy, euen vnto the ground. Let vs not in Gods cauſe be more negligent, than our enemies were againſt God. Let euery man ſay with himſelfe: It is Gods Temple that muſt be built vp, it is the heauenly Hieruſalem, it is the Arke of the Lord, it is the Lords buſineſſe that I haue in hand; accurſed be he that doth the Lords buſineſſe vnfaithfully.

And you, my Lords, foraſmuch as God hath planted you in chiefeſt honour, and made you the greateſt ouerſeers of his worke, I beſeech you, euen for his ſake, when you ſee your owne houſes ſo furniſhed, as is meete for your eſtates, remember the poore houſe of God. When you ſee your men waiting and attending at your tables, remember how few there be to wait vpon Chriſt at his table. When you conſider that your owne houſes cannot be maintained without prouiſion, remember there be prouiſion made for the houſe of God. Let the zeale of Gods owne houſe rauiſh and deuoure our hearts, let vs build vp the tabernacle of the moſt holy, and dreadfull, and euer liuing God: ſo will God dwell and abide with vs; and be glorified in the middeſt amongſt vs.

And thou moſt mercifull father, deale fauourably with Sion, that we may ſee the walles of thy Hieruſalem reſtored. For now is the time of thy mercy come vpō vs, now is the time. And as thou haſt begun this worke in vs, in theſe our daies, ſo vouchſafe to bleſſe the ſame, that it may endure, and continue for euer, that all the world may know thee, the only true and liuing God, and thy Son Ieſus Chriſt, whoſe Goſpell thou haſt reuiued amongſt vs. To whom with thee, and the holy Ghoſt, be all honour & glory, world without end. Amen.

Psalm. 69.

Vers. 9. The zeale of thine houſe hath eaten mee.

Certaine learned and wiſe men of old time, that had no vnderſtanding or fauour of God, when they conſidered with themſelues to what end and purpoſe mankind was created and ſet in this world, after they had driuen the matter, as far as they might by natural knowledge, at length they concluded; ſome, that man was made to know the properties and qualities, the conuenience, or difference of naturall things, either in the aire, or in the water, or in the earth, or vnder the earth: Some other, that man was made to conſider and behold the Sunne and Mone, the Starres, the courſe and reuolutions of the Heauens. And ſo, they iudged that man, which either had moſt abundance of naturall reaſon, or beheld and conſidered the heauens beſt, to be moſt perfect of all others, and that he came neereſt to the end of his creation. Thus ſaid they, as men without feeling of God, only endued with the light of nature.

But (as God himſelfe declareth, who faſhioned vs, and made vs, and knoweth vs beſt) the very true end why man was made, was to know, and to honour God. Therefore, whoſo knoweth him beſt, and honoreth him with moſt reuerence, he is moſt perfect, he commeth neereſt the end of his creation.

When Salomon had deſcribed the deceiuable vanities of the world, and ſaid, Vanity of vanities, vanity of vanities, all is vanity: when he had concluded by long diſcourſe, that riches, empire, honour, pleaſures, knowledge, and whatſoeuer elſe vnder the Sunne, is but vanity; he knitteth vp the matter with theſe words: Feare God and keepe his commandements, for this is the whole duetie of men. That is, this is trueth, and no vanitie: Eccle. 1. Eccle. 12.

this is our perfection, to this end are we made: not to liue in eating and drinking, not to paſſe our time in pleaſure and follies, not to heape vp thoſe things, which are daily taken from vs, or from which we are daily taken away: but that in our words, in our life, in our body, and in our ſoule we doe ſeruice vnto God, that we loke aboue the Sun and Moone, and all the Heauens: that we become the Temples of the holy Ghoſt, that the holy ſpirit of God may dwell in vs, and make vs fit inſtruments of the glory of God.

Therefore God gaue vs his holy word, and hath continued it from the beginning of the world vntill this day, notwithſtanding the Philoſophers, and learned men in all ages, who ſcorned it out, as the word of folly; for ſo it ſéemeth to them that periſh: Notwithſtanding the wicked Princes, and Tyrants, and high Powers of the world, who conſumed and burnt it, as falſe and wicked, or ſeditious doctrine: notwithſtanding the whole world and power of darkneſſe were euer bent againſt it; yet hath he wonderfully continued and preſeruedit, without loſſe of one letter, vntill this day, that we might haue whereby truely to know him the true and onely God, and his Sonne Ieſus Chriſt whom he ſent.

Therefore haue we Temples and Churches, places to reſort vnto all together, to honor, to worſhip, and to acknowledge him to be our God, to ioyne our hearts and voices together, and to call vpon his holy name. In ſuch places God hath at all times vſed to open his maieſty, and to ſhew his power. In ſuch places God hath made vs a ſpeciall promiſe, to heare our praier, whenſoeuer we call vpon him. Therfore are they called the dwelling place and houſe of God. In ſuch places all godly men euermore ſet their greateſt pleaſure, and thought themſelues miſerable, when they were ſecluded or put off from the ſame: as the Pſal. 112. Prophet and holy Prince Dauid: Lætatus ſum in his quæ dicta ſunt mihi, In domum Domini ibimus: O (ſaith that holy man) my heart reioyced within my body, when my fellowes called vpon me, and ſaid: Let vs goe into the houſe of the Lord. Againe: I am in loue with the beauty of thy houſe. And againe: O how beautifull is thy tabernacle, O Lord! O thou the God of hoſts, my heart longeth and fainteth to come within thy courts. His ſpirits were raviſhed with the ſight and maieſty of the tabernacle: not for that the place it ſelfe at that time was ſo beautifull; for in Dauids time it was almoſt rotten, and ruinous, a homely thing to behold, nothing in compariſon to that Temple that afterward was built by Salomon: But therein ſtood the ſhew and worthineſſe of that holy place, that Gods truth and law was opened and proclaimed in it, and the ſacraments, and ceremonies ſo vſed, in ſuch forme and order, as God had commanded them to be vſed, and the people receiued them obediently, and liued thereafter.

Therefore when the tabernacle was reſtored, when the Arke was ſet home from Obed-edom, and ſet in the mount Sion: when religion reuiued, which through the negligence and malice of Saul was forſaken: when he ſaw his Nobility, his Biſhops, his Prieſts, and all his people willing and forward, he could not refraine himſelfe, but brake out and ſang: Hæc eſt dies, quam fecit Dominus, exultemus & lætemur in ea: This is the day which the Lord hath made, let vs be glad and reioyce in it. Let vs be merry, and ioy that euer we liued to ſée it. Euen ſo Paul, when in his time he ſaw the Goſpell take roote and proſper, and that the ſauour of life was powred abroad, that the kingdome of God was enlarged, and the kingdome of Satan ſhaken downe, his heart leaped, and ſprung within him. Ecce nunc tempus acceptabile: Behold now that acceptible time: Behold, God hath loked downe mercifully vpon the world, behold the day of ſaluation is come vpon vs.

But the Godly man, as he reioyceth at the beauty of Gods houſe, ſo when contrariwiſe he ſeth the ſame diſordered filthily, when he ſeth the Sacraments of God abuſed, the truth troden vnder foote, the people mocked, the name of God diſhonored, he cannot but lament and mourne, and finde himſelfe wounded at heart. When the good King Ioſias ſaw the booke of God, which was ſo long hid in the wall, and out of remembrance: when he conſidered the blindneſſe, in which they had liued, and the vnkindeneſſe of their forefathers, he could not forbeare, but fell a weping: he feared leaſt God would take vengeance vpon them for ſo great contempt of his word. When Ieremy ſaw the wilfulneſſe, and frowardneſſe of the people, which would not ſubmit themſelues, and be obedient vnto God, he cri-
Ier. 9. ed, Oh, that my head were full of water, and mine eies a fountaine of teares, that I might weepe day and night, &c. Such care had they for Gods people: thus the zeale of Gods houſe had eaten them vp.

Zeale if (any man know not the nature of the word) is an earneſt affection and vehement loue, as is the loue of a mother towards her children, or of the naturall childe towards his mother. This zeale cannot abide to ſée that thing which it loueth, deſpiſed or hurt. Such a zeale and care carieth God euer his people, he loueth them as a mother loueth her little chil-Eſay 49. dren: he will not ſuffer them to be hurt. By the Prophet Eſay he ſaith: Can a woman forget her child, and not haue compaſſion on the ſon of her wombe? though they ſhould forget, yet will I not forget thee. Zachary alſo ſaith: He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eie. For God hath ſaid, They ſhall be my people, and I will be their God. Such care likewiſe beare all the godly towards their God, they loue him with all their ſoule, with all their heart, with all their ſtrength: they reuerence him as their deare father, they are greeued at any blaſphemy, and with any contempt of his holy name. Zach. 2.

But, as euery man, be he neuer ſo wicked, yea, euen he that ſaith in his heart there is no God, which is become filthy and abominable in all his doings, yet in his talke outwardly ſaith he hath a God, and that he beleeueth in him: euen ſo there is none ſo wicked, or ſo forſaken of God in his heart, but he perſwadeth himſelfe he hath the zeale of God: and what he doth in ſelfeloue of his owne fantaſie, he will beare in hand, he doth it for the loue of God. The ouerthrowers and waſters of the Church, will ſeeme to ſhew a ſpeciall care for the Church. Diſſemblers, hypocrites, deſpiſers, ſcorners, euen ſuch as ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, which deny the truth of God after they haue knowen it, which witting and knowing, fight againſt the truth, which ſay of Chriſt, we will not haue him to rule ouer vs, which worke that ſinne that ſhall neuer be forgiuen in this world, nor in the world to come; yet notwithſtanding will pretend and ſeeme to haue the zeale of God.

Thus the Scribes and Phariſies ſet vp their bylles againſt Chriſt: Thy Diſciples kép not the common faſt: thou ſuffereſt them to pull and to eat the eares of corne: thou ſuffereſt them to eat with vnwaſhed hands: thou breakeſt the tradition of the Elders: thou breakeſt the Law of God, which he gaue vs by Moſes: thou art a ſeditious teacher: thou art a Schiſmatike, thou art an Heretike. They ſaid, We faſt twice in the weak: we haue Abraham to our father: we are Moſes Diſciples. Therefore when they heard Stephen ſpeaking thoſe heauenly words: Behold, I ſee the heauens open, and the Sonne of man ſtanding at the right hand of God: through zeale they gaue a ſhout with a loud voice, and ſtopped their eares, and ran vpon him all at once. Acts 7.

When Chriſt had ſaid: Yee ſhall ſee the Sonne of man ſit at the right hand of God, and come in the clouds of heauen: the high Prieſt, through zeale, rent his clothes, and ſaid: Yee haue heard the blaſphemy. This naughty man ſpeaketh blaſphemy againſt God. He called a Councell, the Scribes and Phariſies met together, not one man amongſt them but of themſelues: they loked about them, as if they only were the pillars and buttreſſes of the Church, and were only zealous and carefull for the houſe of God. But their meeting was (as Dauid foreſpake, and as Peter declareth, and as we know) againſt the Lord, and againſt his anointed. They were touched with zeale of their owne glory, and not with the zeale of Gods truth. They ſought their owne praiſe, but not the praiſe which is of God. They made crakes that they knew the Scriptures, that they were the Temple of God, that they had the conſent of all antiquity: as others haue done ſince that time, and as we ſee many do this day, and in very deed, theſe men now haue euen as much as they had then, as by proofe and triall it will appeare. Mark. 14.

There are others, which haue a feeling of God, and a great care for his Church: but ſuch a feeling and care as commeth either of their owne fantaſies, or of ſome opinion and credit they haue in their Fathers which were before them, not of the vnderſtanding of Gods pleaſure. Such are they which offended God, not of malice or wilfulneſſe, but only for lacke of teaching and vnderſtanding. Such were they which withſtood S. Paul in all his preaching; for that they tooke him for an Heretike, and thought his preaching was againſt God. I beare them witneſſe (ſaith he) that they haue the zeale of God, but not according to knowledge. Such a zeale haue many, who forbid that God commandeth, and command that which God forbiddeth. Such a zeale had Paul himſelfe: I was a blaſphemer, and a perſecutor, and an oppreſſor: but I was receiued to mercie: for I did it ignorantly without beleefe. Such a zeale haue they, who thinke they doe God good ſeruice, when they kill and murder the righteous, and good ſeruants of God. Such a zeale haue they, who (as ſaith Nazianzene) defend Chriſt againſt Chriſt, and defend the Church againſt the Church. And theſe things doe they, not of malice, nor of wilfulneſſe, nor againſt their conſcience, but, becauſe they know not God the Father, nor his Chriſt whom he hath ſent. Therefore they ſtumble at Chriſt, and ſpurne away the Goſpell of God, and thinke ill, and ſpeake euill of the word of life, becauſe they know not the Goſpel of God, nor the word of life. Thus they perſwade themſelues, that they defend the Church, that they honour the Sonne of God, that they do God great ſeruice, and that they haue the zeale of God. Rom. 10. 1. Tim. 1.

But this pride was euer in the heart of man, and it appeared euen in our grandſire Adam: whatſoeuer liketh vs well, we thinke that cannot but pleaſe God. Such is the opinion we fondly conceiue in our fantaſies: in truſt whereof whatſoeuer we doe, we thinke our ſelues ſure and ſafe. Origen writing vpon the place of the Apoſtle: Zelum Dei habent, ſed non

Origen in 1C. Rom. lib. 8. non ſecundùm ſcientiam: They haue the zeale of God, but not according to knowledge, ſaith: Similiter poteſt dicere Apoſtolus & de alijs, quòd timorem Dei habeant, ſed non ſecundùm ſcientiam: de alijs &c. In like maner the Apoſtle may ſay of others, They haue the feare of God, but not according to knowledge: of others, they haue the loue of God, but not according to knowledge: of another, he hath the faith of God, but not according to knowledge: And another may be ſaid to faſt, but not according to knowledge. And ſo in all things whatſoeuer we doe, vnleſſe we haue knowledge and vnderſtanding, it may be ſaid vnto vs, that we haue the zeale of a good worke, but not according to knowledge. Ideo danda eſt præcipuè opera ſcientiæ, ne res nobis infeliciter accidat, vt in fide poſiti fruſtremur à fide, zelum habentes bonorum, decidamus à bonis: Therefore all heed is chiefly to be giuen to the attaining of knowledge, leſt it goe not well with vs, leſt we faile from our faith, when we thinke we beleeue, and thinking we haue a zeale of good workes, we be found void of all good workes. The wiſe man ſaith: This was not enough for them, that they erred in the knowledge of God: but whereas they liued in great warres of ignorance, thoſe ſo many and ſo great plagues they called peace. The zeale that they had, and the contentation of their hearts made them beleeue that all their ſuperſtition and idolatry, and other enormities, was Catholike vnity.

Wiſd. 14.

This zeale, as on the one ſide it hath many tokens of goodneſſe, for that it hath a conſcience, and a feare, and an obedience towards God: ſo, on the other ſide it is very dangerous, becauſe it lacketh knowledge: euen as a ſhip for lacke of a gouernor is euer in danger of the rocks; and as the body which hath no eie, is euer in danger of falling. Such kind of zeale, the greater it is, the worſer it is: the more vehement it ſeemeth, the more vehemently it fighteth againſt God. For, our good meaning maketh not our doings good: our zeale is not a rule, whereby we may meaſure out either our faith, or our workes: but only the knowen will and pleaſure of God. Therefore ſpeaketh God in this maner by the Prophet Eſai: My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your waies my waies. Therefore ſaith Salomon: Truſt in the Lord with all thine heart, and leane not to thine own wiſedome: in all thy waies acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy doings. This counſell alſo doth Moſes giue: Take heed that ye doe as the Lord your God hath commanded you: turne not a ſide to the right hand, nor to the left.

Deut. 5.

But the true and godly zeale proceedeth not from hypocriſie or intention, but is led and trained by vnderſtanding, and is moulten into the heart, and the vehemency and heat of it no man knoweth, but he that feeleth it. It taketh away the vſe of reaſon, it eateth and deuoureth vp the heart; euen as the thing that is eaten, is turned into the ſubſtance of him that eateth it; and as iron while it is burning hot is turned into the nature of the fire: ſo great and ſo iuſt is the griefe that they which haue this zeale conceiue, when they ſee Gods houſe ſpoiled, or his holy name diſhonoured. So ſaith Elias: I haue been very iealous for the Lord God of hoſts: for the children of Iſrael haue forſaken thy couenant, broken down thine altars and ſlain thy Prophets with the ſword, and I only am left, and they ſeek my life to take it away. So when Moſes found that the people had forſaken God, and were fallen down before a molten Calfe, and did put their truſt in the worke of their owne hands: his wrath waxed hot, and he caſt the tables out of his hand, and brake them in peeces beneath the mountaine. His heart was ſo inflamed with zeale, that he conſidered not what he had in his hand, nor what he did. Ieremie, when he ſaw the diſorder of the people, and how they were not mended with his preaching, and would inwardly conceale the griefe he conceiued, and purpoſed not to make mention of the Lord, nor to ſpeake any more in his name; yet could he not: for his zeale found way, and brake out: His word (ſaith he) was in mine heart as a burning fire ſhut vp in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not ſtay.

Exod. 32.
Ierem. 20.

And, albeit there is much likeneſſe betwéen the rage and fury of hypocrites, and the godly zeale of good men: for either are hot, either are vehement, either wiſheth redreſſe: yet this is an euident difference: godly zeale is tempered and ſeaſoned with charity, the vngodly is ioined with bitterneſſe and reuenge: the godly ſeeketh to win, the vngodly to kill and to deſtroy. The vngodly haue their hands full of blood, they kill the Prophets, they ſay, We haue a law, and by our law he muſt die. They ſay, Come, let vs deſtroy them, that they be no more a nation.

Let not the name of Iſrael be had any more in remembrance. They burne the holy bookes of the Scriptures, as did Aza and Antiochus. They ſay, Ranſacke it, pull it downe, race it to the foundation, let not one be left aliue. They dig vp the bodies of the dead out of their graues. They ſhew their cruelty vpon the bones and aſhes, which were long before buried, and well nigh conſumed. It greeueth them when they lacke vpon whom they may whet their bloodthirſty and cruell zeale. It greeueth them, no one thing elſe ſo much, that they did not worke ſurely, and cut vp the rot. Such is the zeale of the vngodly. Euen ſuch a zeale as was in Nero, in Caligula, of whom it is reported, he wiſhed that all the Romanes had but one necke, that he might cut off all their heads at one ſtroke: as was in Herod, in Annas, and Caiaphas, and the like murtherers.

But the godly, when they ſee any diſorder, they doe nothing like the other: they mourne in their hearts to ſee that the truth is not receiued, and to ſee the mindes of their brethren ſo obſtinately hardned: they make praier to God for them: they are deeply touched with the feeling of ſuch calamities which God laieth vpon other. The zeale of Moſes could not like the Idolatry of the people: yet he went vnto the Lord againe, and ſaid: Now if thou pardon their ſinne, thy mercy ſhall appeare: but if thou wilt not, I pray thee race me out of thy Booke which thou haſt written. Exod. 32.

Chriſt lamented ouer Hieruſalem: O Hieruſalem, Hieruſalem, which killeſt the Prophets, and ſtoneſt them which are ſent to thee, how often would I haue gathered thy children together, as the hen gathereth her chickens vnder her wings, and ye would not? Behold, your habitation ſhal be left vnto you deſolate. Mat. 23.

Paul ſuffered much at the hands of the wicked Iewes: They troubled the Church of God, they hindred the courſe of the Goſpel, they were enemies of the Croſſe of Chriſt, they were dogs, they were conciſion: Yet he ſaith: I haue great heauineſſe and continuall ſorrow in mine heart for I would wiſh my ſelfe to be ſeparated from Chriſt, for my brethren that are my kinſmen according to the fleſh, which are the Iſraelites. Rom. 9.

Dauid ſaith: Mine eies guſh out with riuers of water, becauſe they keepe not thy Law. Pſal. 119.
And againe: My zeale hath euen conſumed me, becauſe mine enemies haue forgotten thy words. Againe: I ſaw the tranſgreſſors, and was grieued, becauſe they kept not thy word.
And when he ſaw the whole nation of Iſrael, waſted by the enemies, how mournfull a complaint made he to God? O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance: thine holy Temple haue they defiled, and made Hieruſalem heapes of ſtones. The dead bodies of thy ſeruants haue they giuen to be meat vnto the fowles of the heauen, and the fleſh of thy ſaints vnto the beaſts of the earth. Pſal. 79.
At this time when the tabernacle was loſt, when Saul was vnquiet and the Prieſts were ſlaine, and the Prophets deſpiſed, and the people left without all comfort, he powreth out his heart in theſe words: Zelus Domus tuæ comedit me: O Lord, the zeale I beare vnto thine houſe hath eaten me vp. It inflameth my heart, drieth my blood, conſumeth my marrow. Such a care had he for the houſe of God: it was death vnto him to ſee it ſo deſtroied and laid waſte.

So Chriſt, when he ſaw the Temple of God foully and vnſeemely abuſed: that they made the holy place, a place for their vnlawful and vnhoneſt gaine by vſury: that they turned Religion into robbery, ſold Oxen, Sheepe, and Doues, and kept their bankes for exchange in the Temple: when the Prieſts and Leuites, which ſhould ſerue God, were become Merchants and ſerued themſelues: when the Temple or houſe of God, which Dauid purpoſed, and Salomon finiſhed, and Ezechias and Ezras, and other godly Princes preſerued, in which was kept the booke of the Law, whither all the people aſſembled together to ſerue God was not vſed like Gods houſe, but like a common faire or market, and was made a den of theeues: when theſe groſſe abuſes were ſuffered, and things were let run to ſuch extremities, and all this vnder pretence of holineſſe, as if it were not only lawfull, but needs it muſt be ſo; moued with zeale, he could not abide it: He made a ſcourge of ſmall cords, and droue them all out of the Temple, and poured out the changers money, and ouerthrew the Tables, and ſaid, Make not my fathers houſe a houſe of merchandize. And his diſciples remembred, that it was written, The zeale of thine houſe hath eaten me vp. This was no frantike or melancholly paſſion, neither in Moſes, nor in Dauid, nor in Chriſt. Moſes was a very meeke man aboue all that were on the earth, Dauid was a man that hateth not, and in whoſe mouth are no reproſes. Iohn 2. Numb. 12.

And Chriſt ſaid, Learne of me, for I am humble and meke. When his diſciples Iames and Iohn, grew wrothfull againſt the Samaritanes that would not receiue him, and ſaid: Lord wilt thou that we command that fire come downe from heauen, and conſume them, euen as Elias did? he turned about and rebuked them, and ſaid, Yee know not of what ſpirit you are. Yet through zeale for Gods houſe, Chriſt whipped out the buiers and ſellers: Dauid ſhed forth teares abundantly; and Moſes daſht in peces the tables of Gods commandements. All men ought to be patient and gentle in matters appertaining to themſelues: but in Gods cauſe, no man muſt yeld or be patient. Luke. 9.

In our daies, vpon whom the end of the world is come, when we did lately ſee thoſe times, whereof our Sauiour foretold ſo long ſithence, that deſolation ſhould be in the holy place, and ſuch confuſion, ignorance, and blindneſſe, that men ſhould ſtumble at noone daies that truth ſhould be a ſtranger vpon earth, that men ſhould forſake holeſome doctrine, and giue eare vnto fables, that the myſtery of iniquity ſhould worke, and the very elect (if it were poſſible) be deceiued, what triall was made of true and godly zeale? How notably did it ſhew it ſelfe againſt the rage and fury of the wicked? What ſhould I ſpeake hereof?

The examples are freſh, you cannot forget them. you heard of them ſo late, it is ſo late ſince you did behold them. What moued ſo many, ſo learned, ſo vertuous, to yeld their backes to the ſcourge, their necks to the tormentors, their bodies to the fire, to forſake their gods, their friends their parents, their wiues and children, but the zeale of Gods houſe? Neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor things preſent, nor things to come was able to ſeparate them from the loue of God. They continued ſtedfaſt vnto the end: the zeale of Gods houſe did eat them vp.

But now God hath reſtored vs, he hath taken away the deſolation from vs, he hath giuen vs his truth, he hath reuealed the man of ſin, he hath raiſed vp a banner of hope. We ſee and enioy ſuch things as many Kings and Prophets would haue enioyed, and could not. What remaineth, but that we take the zeale of the Lords houſe into our hearts, and ſeeke by all meanes the glory of the ſame? As our good fathers and brethren ſhewed the vehemency of their loue in diſliking the diſorders which troubled the Church of God: ſo in this bleſſed peace which God giueth to his Church, let vs witneſſe our earneſt zeale in ſeeking that it may be made beautifull, and eſtabliſhed for euer.

Let our next care bee, to continue poſſeſſion. Kingdoms are preſerued by the ſame meanes, by which they were firſt gotten: That which is conquered by zeale, by carefull zeale muſt be kept. It was ſaid of Annibal, that he knew how to get the victory, but how to vſe it, he knew not. Many haue loſt that by negligence, which they had by diligence won. Therefore we ought, as our hearts were carefull, and deſirous to ſee theſe daies: ſo by our thankfulneſſe to God for ſo great bleſſing, and by Chriſtian and godly prouidence foreſee ſuch meanes, whereby we may long hereafter enioy the ſame. When Phydias had made the pourtraiture of Iupiter Piſanus, he ouerlaid it with oile, that it might continue freſh and greene, and neuer putrifie. When God gaue order to Noah for making the Arke, he ſaid: Thou ſhalt pitch it within and without with pitch; that it might be ſound, and ſure, and abide the waues. Gen. 6.

He which challengeth to himſelfe, that proud and wanton name, to be called the head of the vniuerſall Church, after by little and little he was gotten into poſſeſſion, was not behind hand by all meanes to maintaine and keepe the ſame. In this policy, he toke away the reading of the Scriptures from the people: he made noble men and Princes his Cardinals. He threw downe, and ſet vp, and changed whom, and what he would. The Kings and States of the world, the Biſhops, Profeſſors and Scholars in Vniuerſities, and Preachers were brought to ſweare allegeance and obedience vnto him. I deuiſe not this, the ſtories hereof are abroad, and the oath which they toke is knowen. His authority grew greater than the authority of generall Councels. Nothing might be decreed in Councels, but what pleaſed him: none might be admitted to ſpeake in Councels, but ſuch as were ſworn to him. He had all law in his breſt. There was ſometimes a Proclamation made in Rome, that for conſiderations no man ſhould erect or build vp any Theater: and that if any were ſet vp, it ſhould be raced, and pulled downe. Pompeius a gentleman of great wealth, and noble courage, did build a Theater, ſuch a one as before had not beene ſeene, which would receiue 2500. men, contrary to the Proclamation, and order taken. But doubting leſt the next Magiſtrates ſhould deſtroy it, he cauſed a place of religion to be ſet vpon it, and called it the Temple of Venus. Whereby he prouided, that if any would ouerthrow it, becauſe it was a Theater, they might yet ſpare it for the Temples ſake: for to pull downe a Temple was ſacrilledge. Euen ſo, there haue been Proclamations, and Canons, that no man ſhould be called the chiefe, or the head of all Churches, or vſurpe ſuch authority ouer others: but when the Pope built vp his ſupremacy againſt the meaning of ſuch Canons, he pretended religion for his doing: he ſaid, it was de iure diuino, that no man ſhould preſume or attempt againſt it, and that ſo his power might continue for euer.

If they haue beene thus carefull to maintaine falſhood, how much more careful ſhould we be to maintaine the truth? If they to aduance their owne kingdome, how much more wee, to ſet forth the kingdome of God, and to build vp the Church of Chriſt? And if they ſought to doe that by lies, and by falſe meanes, why ſhould we be ſlake to vſe the right, and true, and good meanes, whereby that good thing which God hath wrought for vs, may be eſtabliſhed? And albeit there be many waies, by which the kingdome of God may be maintained, as the fauour and countinance of the Prince, which ſo comforteth and cheriſheth the Church, as the Sunne beames comfort and cheriſh the earth: and knowledge, and learning, and Diſcipline, which are as the life and ſinews, and without which the Church muſt needes fall aſunder: at this time, I will leue to ſpeake of the reſt, and only ſtay vpon learning, which may truely be called the life or the ſoule of the Church, and of Chriſtian religion.

How neceſſary a thing, they haue counted learning to the ſetting forth of Religion, the ſtories of our old fathers, of Heathens, and Chriſtians in all ages, doe witneſſe. They thought, that neither Religion might ſtand without knowledge, nor knowledge were to be eſtæmed without Religion. Charles the Great, that he might the better plant Religion in Saxonie and Helvetia, did erect many places for increaſe of learning. He knew well, that there was no other way better to eſtabliſh Religion. The Cathedrall Churches, before ſuch times as ignorance and blindneſſe grew over all the world, and brought in an vniverſall corruption, maintained Schooles of learning, that the Doctrine which was taught in thoſe places, might be defended againſt the gainſaiers by ſuch learned men, as were there bred vp. The Princes of Germanie, and the free Cities, after they had received the Goſpell, they diſſolved their Monaſteries which had bin harborers for ſuch as lived in idleneſſe, and ſet vp Schooles and Colleges, which ſhould be nurſeries to breed vp learned men, that might be able to teach the people, and to maintaine Religion. Whereby it came to paſſe, that in ſhort time they had great ſtore of worthy and learned men.

This did they well ſee, that have bin the enemies of Religion, and therefore vſed all meanes to hinder the increaſe of learning, that they might have the better way to overthrow Religion. For, if learning decay, it is likely that Religion can not abide. Beare with me, if I ſpeake that which may ſeem more fit for ſome other place, than for this audience: the beſt here vnderſtandeth me well. In other Countries, the receiving of the Goſpell hath alwaies bin cauſe that learning was more ſet by: and learning hath ever bin the furtherance of the Goſpell. In England, I know not how, it commeth otherwiſe to paſſe. For ſince the Goſpell hath bin received, the maintenance for learning hath bin decaied. And the lacke of learning will be the decay of the Goſpell. Would God it were not ſo: or, that yet before the fault be incurable, there may be ſome redreſſe.

Loth I am to ſpeake, yet the caſe ſo requireth, that it is needfull to be ſpoken, I truſt I ſhall ſpeake in the hearing of them that will conſider it. Maintenance of learning, whereby an able and ſufficient miniſtery may grow, and be eſtabliſhed in all the Churches of this realme, is to be wiſhed for. The good eſtate of this noble kingdome, the comfort of poſteritie, the ſtay of religion, the continuing of the Goſpell, the removing of darkneſſe hangeth vpon it. One aſked ſometimes, How it was that in Athens, ſo godly and great a City, there were no Phyſitians. To whom this anſwer was made, Becauſe there are no rewards appointed for them that practiſe Phyſicke. The ſame anſwer may be made for our times: the cauſe why the Church of God is ſo forſaken, is the want of zeale in them that ſhould either for their courteſie, or for their ability be ſoſterers of learning, and increaſe the livings where occaſion is, and give hope and comfort to learned men. What ſaid I, increaſe: nay, the livings and proviſion which heretofore were given to this vſe, are taken away.

Have patience, if any ſuch be here, as I well know there are, whom theſe things touch. Suffer me to ſpeak the truth, it is Gods cauſe. The livings of ſuch as are in the miniſtery, are not in their hands, to whom they are due. All other labourers and artificers have their hire increaſed double as much as it was wont to be: Only the poore man that laboureth, and ſweateth in the vineyard of the Lord of hoſts, hath his hire abridged and abated. I ſpeake not of the Curates, but of Parſonages and Vicarages, that is, of the places which are the Caſtles and Towers of fence for the Lords Temple. They ſeldome paſſe now adaies from the patrone, if he be no better than a gentleman, but either for the leaſe or for preſent mony. Such merchants are broken into the Church of God, a great deale more intolerable than were they whom Chriſt chaſed and whipt out of the Temple. Thus they that ſhould be carefull for Gods Church, that ſhould be patrons, to proviſde for the conſciences of the people, and to place among them a learned Miniſter, who might bee able to preach the word vnto them out of ſeaſon, and in ſeaſon, and to fulfill his miniſterie, ſeeke their owne, and not that which is Jeſus Chriſts. They ſerve not Jeſus Chriſt, but their belly. And this done, not in one place, or in one country, but throughout England. A gentleman cannot keep his houſe, vnleſſe he have a Parſonage or two in farme for his proviſion.

O mercifull God, whereto will this grow at laſt! If the miſerie which this plague worketh, would reach but to one age, it were tolerable. But it will be a plague to the poſterity, it will be the decay and deſolation of Gods Church. Young men which are toward and learned, ſee this: They ſee that he which feedeth the flocke, hath leaſt part of the milke: he which goeth a warfare, hath not halfe his wages. Therefore they are weary and diſcouraged, they change their ſtudies: ſome become prentiſes, ſome turne to Phyſick, ſome to Law: all ſhun and flee the Miniſtery. And beſides the hinderance that thus groweth by wicked dealing of patrons: by reaſon of the impropriations, the Vicarages in many places, and in the propereſt market townes, are ſo ſimple, that no man can live vpon them, and therefore no man will take them. They were wont to ſay, Beneficia ſine cura: Benefices without charge: but now may be ſaid, Cura ſine beneficio: Charge or cure without benefice.

I ſpeake not this of my ſelfe: many heere preſent know I ſpeake the truth. And my ſelfe know the places, which haue continued ſtill theſe many yeeres without a Miniſter reſident among them, and haue prouided themſelues, as they might, with their owne money.

Your Graces ſubiects had hope of amendment, in your Graces late viſitation. But yet it ſtandeth ſtill in caſe as miſerable, as it did before. I know, your Grace heareth not of theſe matters. And I hope God will worke in your gracious heart, to prouide ſome remedie againſt them. For otherwiſe, the Schooles will be forſaken, the Church deſolate, the people wild and diſmaied, the Goſpell diſcredited: otherwiſe, we ſhall ſee that wrought againſt the houſe of God, that neuer any Ieroboam, or Iulian, or Licinius, could haue brought to paſſe againſt vs. This noble Realme which euer was famous for the name of learning, is like thereby to come to ſuch ignorance, and barbary, as hath not been heard of in any memory before our time.

I know that there are grieuous complaints made, that the Biſhops appoint Prieſts and Miniſters, that are ignorant and haue no vnderſtanding in the Latin tongue. Would God it were not true. Or would God that they which be the cauſers hereof, would ſomewhat helpe to amend it. But alas, are we able to make learned men vpon the ſudden? Or can we make others than come vnto vs, or will come to liue in miſery?

But there are many which can ſay, Such as be miniſters in the Church, ſhould teach freely, without hope of recompence or hire for their labour. Our Preachers are no better than Peter and Paul, and the other Apoſtles. They are no better than the holy Prophets, who liued poorely. Pouertie is a commendable eſtate. So ſay ſome, in like deuotion as did Iudas: What needed this waſte? this might haue been ſold for much and giuen to the poore: not that he cared for the poore, but becauſe he was a theefe, and had the bag, and bare that which was giuen. I doubt not, there are many which teach Chriſt for Chriſts ſake, which ſay in their ſoule, The Lord is my portion: who in that heauy time, from which God deliuered them, if they might haue receiued their life only for a recompence, would haue been glad to take the paines: who ſeeke you and not yours: which haue forſaken all they had, to follow Chriſt. I doubt not, there are ſuch.

But for the hope of poſterity, I report me to all you which are fathers, and haue children for whom you are carefull. Although your ſelues haue a zeale, and care for the houſe of God: yet will you breed them vp, keep them at Schoole, vntill foure and twenty yeeres old to your charges, that in the end they may liue in glorious pouerty? that they may liue poorely and naked like the Prophets and Apoſtles? Our poſterity ſhall rue, that euer ſuch fathers went before them: And Chronicles ſhall report this contempt of learning among the puniſhments, and murraines, and other plagues of God. They ſhall leaue it written in what time, and vnder whoſe raigne this was done. Or if we grow ſo barbarous that we conſider not this, or be not able to draw it into Chronicle, yet forraine Nations will not ſpare to write this, and publiſh it to our euerlaſting reproch and ſhame.

In the meane time, what may be gheſſed of their meaning, which thus ranin and ſpoile the houſe of God, which decay the proviſion thereof, and ſo baſely eſteem the Miniſters of the Goſpell? They cannot ſay to God, The zeale of thy houſe hath eaten me vp. Howſoeuer in other things they do well, howſoeuer they ſeem to reioice at the proſperitie of Sion, and to ſeek the ſafety and preſeruation of the Lords Anointed: yet needs muſt it be, that by theſe meanes forraine power, of which this Realme by the mercy of God is happily deliuered, ſhall againe be brought in vpon vs. Such things ſhall be done vnto vs, as we before ſuffered: the truth of God ſhall be taken away, the holy Scriptures burnt & conſumed in fire. A marueilous darkneſſe and calamitie muſt needs enſue. For, if the tempeſt be ſo darke in the ſea that the load ſtar loſe her light, & the needle faile to giue token of the North Pole, no maruell though the ſhip loſe her courſe, and be ſwallowed vp in the ſands.

The Goſpell of Chriſt is the fountaine of light, and of knowledge. It cannot be maintained by ignorance and darkneſſe. Theſe be the props of their kingdome which take away the Scriptures, which hold the people in blindneſſe, which flie the light, which haue their common prayers, miniſter the Sacraments, marry, bury their dead in a ſtrange tongue, that the people may vnderſtand nothing: which make a famine of hearing the word of God: which ſtop vp the ſprings of the water of life: which take away the keies of the kingdome of Heauen, and neither enter in themſelues, nor ſuffer them that would enter: which ſay ignorance is the mother of deuotion, and the Church is then in beſt order, and the people moſt deuout, when they are hoodwinckt and blinded, and ſee nothing.

Theſe are not fit inſtruments wherewith we may ouercome the aduerſaries. This is not the ſword of the ſpirit, theſe are not the ſpirituall weapons, which caſt down holds, and euery high thing that is exalted againſt the knowledge of God. What man that would kéep out his enemy, will pull downe his holds? what Captaine that meaneth to giue a forcible aſſault vpon the enemy, will diſcourage his fighting ſouldiers? But our ſouldiers are out of courage, our Caſtles are falling: therefore that which wee feare will fall vpon vs.

The ore that treadeth out the corne is muzled. He that goeth a warfare, receiueth not his wages: the cry heereof goeth vp into the eares of the Lord of Hoſts. He will not abide ſo great contempt of his word, and preachers: his owne name is thereby diſhonored. Our Sauiour ſaith: He that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth mee. And S. Paul: Hee that deſpiſeth theſe things, deſpiſeth not man but God. And thinke we, that he will ſuffer his holy name to bee deſpiſed? Nay, his wrath is already kindled. He hath already begun his iudgements, and therefore many places are left deſolate. There is none that can warne them of their ſinne, none that can moue them to repentance, none that can preach vnto them forgiueneſſe through Chriſt, none that can inſtruct them in the comfort of euerlaſting life. Becauſe they worke ſuch things againſt the Lord, the hearts of many are aſtonied. Though they heare, they vnderſtand not. They ſcorne and ieſt at the word of ſaluation: it is vnto them a ſauor of death vnto death: they are earthly minded, whoſe God is their belly, and whoſe glory is to their ſhame. Luke 10. 1. Theſſ 4.

For this cauſe you liue ſtill in your ſinnes, in adultery in couetouſneſſe, and in pride, without any feeling of conſcience, without any feare of God. Your daughters, your heires, to whom you ſhall leaue your lands, are ſtolne away from you, robberies and theft are ſo common, as if it were not onely lawfull: but alſo commendable: as if ſinne were no ſinne, and hell fire but a fable.

Thus we prouoke God to anger. Many walke, of whom we cannot thinke but with weeping: they are the enemies of the Croſſe of Chriſt: the name of God is blaſphemed through them. Many are ſo ignorant, they know not what the Scriptures are, they know not that there are any Scriptures. They cal them Heretical, and new Doctrine. Many will beléeue neither ſide, whatſoeuer they allege. Bring they truth, bring they falſhood: teach they Chriſt, teach they Antichriſt: they will beléeue neither, they haue ſo hardned their hearts. Be the Preacher rough or gentle, learned or vnlearned, let him vſe authority of the Scriptures, of the Doctors, of the Councels, of Decrees or Decretals, of Gods law, of mans law nothing will moue them, nothing wil pleaſe them, becauſe the miniſtery of God, and thereby God himſelfe is deſpiſed.

Theſe words happily ſéeme ſharpe and ouer vehement: but the darkneſſe of our hearts againſt God, and the lacke of zeale of his houſe, inforce me to them. We are almoſt fallen into the loweſt pit: we are left without zeale, as ſenſeleſſe men, and as if we had cleane forgotten our ſelues, as the heathen wich know not God. Therefore vnleſſe we repent, the kingdome of God ſhall be taken away from vs. He will ſend vpon this Land a famine of the word. Ieruſalem ſhall be ouerthrowne and made an heape of ſtones: the man of ſin and they which haue not the loue of the truth ſhall preuaile with many, & withdraw them from obedience to the Prince: this noble Realme ſhall be ſubiect to forraine nations: al this wil the zeale of the Lord of hoſts bring to paſſe.

I could haue ſpent this time in opening ſome other matter: but nothing in my iudgement is more worthy your good conſideration, and ſpéedy redreſſe. I would be loth raſhly or rudely to abuſe the reuerence of this place: but vnleſſe theſe things be cared for, vnleſſe we ſhew forth greater zeale then hitherto, if the yéeres to come eat vp and take away from the Miniſtery as the late yéeres haue done, there wil not be left within a while any to ſpeak the word of God out of this place. The pulpits ſhall haue none to vſe them: the people ſhal grow wild and void of vnderſtanding.

When Xerxes beheld the great company of Souldiers, ſuddenly he breake into teares, and wept bitterly. One ſaid to him, O Sir, you haue cauſe to reioice, you haue a goodly company, they are able to fight for you againſt any Nation. But what ſhal become of them, ſaith Xerxes? after a hundred yéeres not one of all theſe ſhall be left aliue. If the view of the ſmale number of Preachers might be taken, how few they are, and how thin they come vp, we haue greater cauſe then Xerxes to lament, if wee haue any zeale to the houſe of God.

For, of the Preachers which now are, within few yéeres none will remaine aliue. And Xerxes Souldiers left iſſue behinde them, which might afterwards ſerue their Country: But there is like to be ſmall increaſe for the ſupply of learned men. The Lord ſhall lacke men to bring in his harueſt, the little ones ſhall call for bread, and there ſhall be none to giue it them. They that ſhall come after vs, ſhall ſee this to be true. There is no houſe ſo ſpoiled, as the houſe of the Lord. There is no Seruant ſo little rewarded as the ſeruant of Chriſt, and the diſpoſer of the myſteries of God.

O that your Grace did behold the miſerable diſorder of Gods Church, or that you might foreſee the calamities, which will follow. It is a part of your kingdome, and ſuch a part, as is the principal prop and ſtay of the reſt. I wil ſay to your Maieſty, as Cyrillus ſomtimes ſaid to the godly Emperors Theodoſius and Valentinian: Ab ea quæ erga Deum eſt pietate, reipublicæ veſtræ ſtatus pendet: The good eſtate and welfare of your common wealth hangeth vpon true godlineſſe. You are our Gouernor, you are the Nurſe of Gods Church. We muſt open this griefe before you. God knoweth if it may be redreſſed, it hath grown ſo long, and is run ſo far. But, if it may be redreſſed, there is no other beſides your Highneſſe, that can redreſſe it.

Cyril. epiſt. ad Theod. & Valen.

I hope I ſpeake truly, that which I ſpeak without flatterie, that God hath endued your Grace with ſuch meaſure of learning and knowledge, as no other Chriſtian Prince. He hath giuen you peace, happineſſe, the loue and true hearts of your Subiects. Oh turne and imploy theſe to the glory of God, that God may confirme in your Grace the thing which he hath begun. To this end hath God placed Kings & Princes in their State, as Dauid ſaith, that they ſerue the Lord, that they may ſee and cauſe others to ſee to the furniture of the Church. The good Emperor Iuſtinian cared for this as much, as for his life. Conſtantine, Theodoſius, Valentinian, and other godly Princes, called themſelues Vaſſallos, the ſubiects and bond ſeruants of God. They remembred that God furniſhed them in their houſes, and were not vnmindfull to furniſh his houſe.

When Auguſtus had beautified Rome with ſetting vp many faire buildings, he ſaid: Inuenit lateritiam, marmoream reddidi: I found it made of bricke, but I leaue it made of marble. Your Grace when God ſent you to your inheritance, and the right of this Realme, found the Church in horrible confuſion, and in reſpect of the true worſhip of God a Church of bricke, or rather (as Ezechiel ſaith) daubed vp with vnſeaſoned morter. Your Grace hath already redreſſed the Doctrine: now caſt your eies towards the Miniſtery, giue courage and countenance vnto learning, that Gods houſe may be ſerued: ſo ſhal you leaue a Church of God, and a teſtimony that the zeale of the Lords houſe hath eaten you vp.

And you, O dearely beloued, if there be any ſuch, which are neither hot nor cold, which do the worke of the Lord negligently, which eſteeme the word of God but as a matter of policie, which are aſhamed to be called profeſſors of the Goſpell of Chriſt; pray vnto God that he will increaſe your zeale. Let vs continue rooted and built in Chriſt, and ſtabliſhed in the faith. Let vs haue care for the houſe of God. Whoſoeuer is not after this ſort zealous, is a man of a double heart. We may not halt betweene two opinions. If the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal be he, then goe after him: hee that is not with Chriſt, is againſt him. Many talke of the Goſpell, and glory in their knowledge: but it is neither talke nor knowledge which ſhall ſaue them in that day. He that feareth the Lord, and ſerueth him with a pure heart, and may truly ſay, The zeale of thine houſe hath conſumed me, he ſhal be ſaued. If they ſhal not eſcape which haue zeale without knowledge, what ſhal become of vs which haue knowledge without zeale?

And you, whoſoeuer you are, that by ſuch meanes haue decaied the Lords houſe, and abridged the proviſion and maintenance thereof, and ſee the miſerable wrake of Gods Church: if there be any zeale of God in you, if you haue any fellowſhip of the Spirit, if any compaſſion and mercy, if you loue God, if you deſire the continuance of the Goſpell; oh remember you haue the patrimony due vnto them that ſhould attend in the Lords houſe: you take vnto your ſelues wrongfullie, that which was not lotted for you. Giue vnto Cæſar thoſe things which belong to Cæſar, and vnto God the things which appertain to him, and make for the beauty and furniture of his houſe. Enrich your ſelues by lawfull meanes, and without the ſpoile and waſte of Gods Church. Let not the Miniſtery by your meanes bee deſpiſed. You enriched them, which mocked, and blinded, and deuoured you: Spoile not them now that feed, and inſtruct and comfort you. Let vs ſeeke the glory of God. Let vs at length ſerue the Lord and not our belly, and greedy wantonneſſe.

So ſhall God bleſſe you and proſper you in all your affaires: ſo ſhall he ſtrike a terror of you into all forraine Princes that dwel about you: ſo ſhal your heart be kept ſtedfaſt in the hand of God: ſo ſhal your heart be perfect before the Lord: ſo ſhal you leaue ſuch as ſhal alwaies praiſe the Lord in Sion, ſo ſhal you ſee your childrens children, and peace vpon Iſrael.

And, thou O moſt mercifull Father, grant that thy words be not ſpoken in vaine: it is thy cauſe. Thou art our Father, we are as clay in thine hands. Thou haſt the key of our hearts: giue zeale to them that haue knowledge, giue knowledge to them that haue zeale, that they may be enflamed and raviſhed with the loue of thy houſe, to ſorrow for the decay thereof, and to doe all their endeauour to build vp and eſtabliſh the ſame for euer: Amen.

MATTHEVV.

MATTHEW 9.

VERS. 37, Then ſaid he to his diſciples, Surely the Harueſt is great, but the labourers are few.

38. Wherefore pray the Lord of the harueſt, that hee would ſend labourers forth into his harueſt.

CHriſt our Sauiour, after he was baptized by Iohn and tempted by Satan in the wildernelle, began to execute the Commiſſion whereunto his Father had ſent him, choſe vnto himſelfe a number of Diſciples, to be at his commandement, and ſo toke his progreſſe thorow a great part of the Country. In the meane way, in euery place where he came, he taught the people that the kingdome of God was come amongſt them: he healed their diſeaſes; wrought ſtrange miracles before their eies: and gaue many ſingular and euident tokens of his comming.

But ſpecially, he beheld in what ſtate the poore people ſtood, touching their readineſſe in receiuing Gods truth, in all the country where he had bin: and therefore at the end of his circuit, he was moued with pity, and ſaid, he ſaw them in moſt wofull caſe, forſaken and loſt, as if they had bēn a flocke of ſheepe without a heard: and that not through their owne malice, but through the wilfull blindneſſe & negligence of them that were ſet to guide them.

Sheep (as Ariſtotle and Plinie write of them) are a ſimple kind of cattell, profitable to many vſes, ready to receiue all maner wrongs, without ſkill, to helpe or ſuccour it ſelfe: it coueteth to breake out of the fold or cloſe, if it may eſpie any hole open, it ſtraieth and wandreth abroad, many times hangeth in the briers, many times is taken vp by the Wolfe: it is euer in danger of the wind and raine, yea, of the very graſſe and water it liueth by, and thereof is infected often times with a number of maladies: ſo that the health and ſafety of the ſheep, reſteth onlie in the care and diligence of the ſhepheard. To ſuch a kind of cattle are the people likened.

Chriſt ſaith not, they were like vnruly ſheep, that would not be guided by their heard: but he ſaith; They were like poore loſt ſheep, that had no heard at all. For the people of themſelues were not vnwilling to receiue the Goſpell: but there was none to inſtruct them. And for that, he addeth another ſimilitude, to declare the ſame, and ſaith; The harueſt indeed is great, but the workemen are but few: the corne is ripe, and ready to be cut, but their lack hands to fetch it in.

The comming of theſe times was promiſed long before, euen from the firſt creation of mankind, but the performance thereof at the firſt was darke, and as it were wrapt vp, and hid in a cloud, and like corne buried in the ground.

After, it was ſomewhat more clērely ſet forth in the Law giuen by Moſes. After that, it was reuiued by the Prophets, and in maner plainely, in what place, at what time, of what mother, of what houſe or ſtock Chriſt ſhould be borne: what Doctrine he ſhould teach, what miracles he ſhould worke, what death he ſhould die, how he ſhould be buried, how he ſhould ariſe, how he ſhould aſcend into heauen, how the heathēs ſhould be called to beleeue in him, how the holy Ghoſt ſhould be ſent, and to conclude, how Chriſt ſhould come at the laſt, to iudge the world. After that came S. Iohn the Baptiſt, to point out Chriſt plainly, with his finger, and to ſay: Ecce agnus Dei, qui tollit peccata mundi: Behold the Lambe of God, that taketh away the ſinnes of the world.

Laſt of all, Chriſt himſelfe began to preach and prophecie of himſelfe, and to gather vnto him a choſen people, that ſhould be followers of good workes. Then was the accompliſhment and fulneſſe of time come to paſſe, that had ſo long bēn looked for: then the kingdome of God began to ſuffer violence, and men violently euen by force, breake in vpon it: then the corne ſowen and caſt into the ground by the Patriarchs long before, and watered and cheriſhed by the dew of the Prophets, was ripened and kerned by the Spirit of God: then was the harueſt great, and the eares white, euen ready to be cut.

Yet this notwithſtanding, Chriſt ſaith, the harueſt men are but few. He ſaith not, the harueſt is great, and there are but few Scribes, but few Phariſeis, but few Sadduces, but few Prieſts, but few Leuites: For the Prieſts and Leuites were diſtributed thorow the whole countrie. In euery little towne or borough there was a College, and as one of their Rabbines recordeth, in the City of Hieruſalem there were no leſſe then 400. ſchooles: ſo that the number was almoſt infinite.

Hiere.18. Moreouer, they vsed commonly to say, as it is reported by the Prophet Ieremie: Non peribit Lex a sacerdote, nec consilium à sapiente, nec sermo á Propheta: It cannot be that the true vnderstanding of the Law should be taken from the Priest, nor good counsell from the wise, nor the word from the Prophet. They read and expounded the Law to the people euery day: they had their daily sacrifice, and whensoeuer the Oxe, or Calfe, or Sheep, or Goat, was slaine, and offered vnto God, as then the maner was, the Priest for his share had the breastlet that couered the heart, in token, as Origen writeth, that the Priest should be a man of counsell. He had also appointed to him the right shoulder, and the tongue in token that he should be prompt and ready in good workes, and eloquent to declare the Law of God.

The Bishop had euermore before his breast a tablet, wherein was imbrodered in letters of gold, Vrim, and Thummim: in token that he should be a man both perfect in life, and also full and plenteous in the truth of God. In the same were set twelue stones, and therein grauen the names of the twelue tribes of the people, that he might haue them euermore in remembrance. The skirts or hems of his robes were set with bels of gold, and pomgranades: in token that his life should giue a good sauour, and his voice should ring, and bee heard among the people.

The Phariseis had certaine speciall points, and sentences of the Law written round about in the borders of their garments, that it might neuer be out of their eies: they prayed, no men more, and that in euery corner of the streets: they fasted twice euery weke: the bed that they lay vpon, as Epiphanius writeth, was but a span broad, and yet, that they might slepe with lesse ease, they strowed thornes vnderneath them. Briefly, all their life in appearance was such, and all their apparell and behauiour so seemly and decent, that if a man would paint out wisedome, sobriety, and perfect holinesse, he could haue no better patterne. And therefore they were called Pharisæi, that is, diuided, as men in holinesse and perfection of life far passing all the rest of the people.

Yet for all this, notwithstanding their great shew of wisedome, of learning, of perfection of life, and the great multitude of them, Christ saith there were few workmen to goe to the haruest. For: They did prophecy out of their own hearts, they did not rise vp in the gaps, Ezech 13. nor made vp the hedge for the house of Israel to stand in the battell in the day of the Lord: they haue seen vanity, and lying diuination, saying, The Lord saith it, and the Lord hath not sent them: and they haue made others to hope that they would confirme the words of their Prophecie, saith Ezechiell.

No, contrariwise, these that should haue bén the chiefe haruest men, were the wasters Iere.50. and destroiers of the haruest: My people (saith God) hath been as lost sheep: their shepheards haue caused them to go astray, & haue turned them away to the mountains. Christ telleth the Phariseis, they haue made his fathers house a den of théeues. He speaketh thus Iohn.10. of them. All that euer came before me, are theeues and robbers. Notwithstanding their stout learning and shew of holinesse, they were nothing els but théeues and robbers: they did rob mens soules, they stole the sheep out of the fold, they spoiled God of his glorie.

When they saw the people follow thick after Christ, and to haue him in reuerence, they cried out, None of the Princes & great holy learned men beléeue in him; but these rascals, that thus run after him, are accursed, and ignorant, and know not the law. The vnlearned sort said of Christ, He casteth out vncleane spirits by the power of God: the great learned men said, No, He throweth out diuels by the power of Beelzebub, the prince of the Diuels. The vnlearned marueled, and were astonied at the wonderfull workes that he did: the learned said, He hath a diuell, he is out of his wits. The vnlearned said, No doubt a great Prophet is risen amongst vs: the learned said, He deceiueth the people. The vnlearned said, God hath visited: and sent comfort amongst his people: the learned said, Behold a glutton and a companion of Publicans and sinners. The great learned shepheards persecuted Christ and chased him from place to place: the poore sheep followed him into the desert. They that were the guiders of the flocke crucified Christ, and shed his blod: the poore flocke set their whole affiance in his death, and so dranke his blod to the release of their soules, they beléeued in him, they knew the time of their visitation.

And therefore, notwithstanding there were grosse and damnable errors amongst the people, as wel as amongst the learned: yet Christ challenged not the people for them, but only the Priests and the Phariseis that toke vpon them to lead the people: for that he saw the Phariseis and Priests offended euen of malice, and the poore people only of ignorance Mat.3. and simplicity. Woe be vnto you Scribes and Phariseis, that haue taken away the keies, and shut vp the kingdome of God before the people; and neither will you enter in your selues, nor suffer others that would gladly enter.

But, as for the people, he had compassion one them, for that he saw they were forsaken, & perished periſhed euen as ſheep without a heard: that they had a certaine zeale of God, although not according to knowledge: that they fell into the pit, not of wilfull malice, but only becauſe they followed the blinde guides, that fell before them: that they were Gods haruеſt, and lay abroad, and were loſt, and no man would take the paines to fetch them in.

S. Paul was not only led away by ignorance, but alſo was a moſt earneſt perſecuter of the Church of Chriſt; yet was he a portion of Gods haruеſt. And therefore aſſone as God had ſtricken him downe from his horſe, he knew he had done amiſſe, and cried out: Lord, what wilt thou that I doe? and after, he writeth of himſelfe; God hath had mercy, and taken me to his grace, becauſe I knew not what I did. Acts 9.

Many there were that cried out vpon Chriſt, Crucifie him, crucifie him: and after when he hung vpon the Croſſe, nodded their heads vpon him, and made mowes at him, and did him all maner of ſpight and villany; and yet pertained they to Gods haruеſt, and afterward as it is credible, were crucified for him and ſhed their blood for him themſelues.

Euen ſo are there, euen at this time, many that of ignorance perſecute the Goſpell of Chriſt, and as it were crucifie Chriſt againe: which if they felt indeed, that it were the Goſpell of God, they would not ſo little regard their owne ſaluation. God make them to be of his haruеſt, and ſend out labourers to fetch them in.

Whenſoeuer we begin to feele a lacke within our ſelues, and can ſuffer our ſelues to bee informed, and taught by the ſpirit of God, then may we be aſſured God will take vs for his haruеſt. Plato the old Philoſopher imagineth that the god Loue was borne of the Lady Penia, that is to ſay, Madam lacke or neceſſity. For no man loueth a thing before he feele himſelfe ſtand in need of it: ſo loue is the childe, and lacke or need is the mother.

S. Auguſtine writeth of himſelfe, that before he became Chriſtened, a friend of his offered him the Scripture to looke vpon: but he, after he had read a little, becauſe he felt in himſelfe no lacke of it, he deſpiſed it, and flung it from him. Afterward he began to find much folly in himſelfe, and becauſe he could ſee no redreſſe, he fell to weeping and praier. In the midſt of his mourning and groning he heard a voice: Tolle, lege: tolle, lege: Take vp, and read, take vp and read. He marueiled much what it ſhould be. At the laſt, he tooke vp a booke that lay by him of Pauls Epiſtles, and the firſt words that he ſet his eies vpon, were theſe: Induimini Dominum Ieſum Chriſtum: Put ye one the Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Auguſt. Conf. lib. 8. cap. 12.

S. Hierome writing vpon the Prophet Nahum ſaith: In aduentu Meſſiæ, populus qui fuerat conſopitus ſub magiſtris, excitabitur, & ibit ad montes Scripturarum: What time Meſſias ſhall come, the people that were lulled aſleepe in ignorance by ſuch as ſhould haue been their teachers, ſhall awake, and get them foorth to the mountaines of the Scriptures. In Nahum. cap. 3.

And Chryſoſtome vpon Geneſis: Si deſit miniſterium hominis, ipſe Dominus ſuperne illuſtrabit mentem noſtram: If the miniſtery of man be wanting, the Lord himſelfe will lighten our minde from aboue. And Chriſt in the Goſpel of S. Iohn ſaith: My ſheep heare my voice, and follow me, and they will not follow a ſtranger, but flie from him. And to conclude, whoſoeuer feeleth a lacke within himſelfe, and can ſuffer himſelfe to be enformed and taught by the ſpirit of God, he may be aſſured, God will take him for his haruеſt. Thus was the haruеſt great, the labourers very few, the ſcatterers and waſters almoſt infinite. This was the ſtate of the Church at the comming of Chriſt. Hom. 36. Iohn 10.

Euen likewiſe in theſe our daies, Chriſt our Sauiour hath gone abroad in progreſſe, and done maruellous cures, and ſhewed ſtrange miracles among his people, and hath cauſed his Goſpel to ring throwout the world. And as he ſaid then, euen ſo may it now be ſaid: Meſſis multa: The haruеſt is great, and maruellous forward: yea, euen there, whereas no worldly hope of haruеſt could haue béne. Many there are that hunger and thirſt after the kingdome of God, which is the knowledge of his Goſpel: many that are yet grene & ignorant, many that lie by the way ſide, and yet haue gathered no rot, many that as yet are but tares and darnel, I meane blind and obſtinate; but when Gods holy will ſhall be, may be turned into good corne, and pertaine to his haruеſt.

Bet the labourers are few. I ſay not, there be but few Cardinals, few Biſhops, few Prieſts, that ſhould be preachers, few Archdeacons, few Chancellors, few Deanes, few Prebendaries, few Vicars, few pariſh Prieſts, few Monks, few Friars: For the number of theſe is almoſt infinite. Gregory Nazianzene in his time complained at the multitude of Prieſts, and ſaid, they were almoſt as many as the reſt of the people.

And Iuſtinian the Emperor in his time was faine to reſtraine the number of them, and to giue commandement, that in one Cathedrall Church there ſhould neuer be aboue 60. Prieſts, and 100. Deacons. The like order was taken in a generall Councel, for the abating of the multitude of Monks, and Friars. Concil. tom. 3. concil. delect. cardinalium.

And in the booke called Opus tripartitum, ioined to the Councell of Lateran, theſe words were written: Totus fere mundus obloquitur, & ſcandalizatur de multitudine religioſorum Concil. tom. 2.

pauperum, qui introierunt in mundum, qui non iam religioſi, ſed trutannij vocantur: Well neere the whole world crieth againſt, and is offended at the great multitude of begging Monks and Friars, which are entred into the world, and now for their behauiour are called not religious men but varlets. These be the words of the Councell.

The number of these is great: but alas, the number of labourers is very ſmall. And yet they giue a ſhew to the world, that they be paſtors and feeders of the flocke, that they be the Fathers of the people, that they be the teachers of the multitude, that they be the labourers in the harueſt, that the whole Catholike Church ſtaieth altogether vpon them.

They giue the Biſhop of Rome theſe titles, that hee is the onely key of Chriſtian faith, that he is greater then the Apoſtles, for that they could erre, and he cannot: they ſay, he is Chriſts Vicar, whereas indeed to any mans ſight, Chriſt may be contented to be his Vicar. They ſay, he is no bare man, but a God, as it is written in the Decretals of Nicholas Pope, and many other the like, which I leaue.

The Pope calleth the Cardinals, Cardines mundi, &c. The very hookes and ſtaies of the world, vpon whom the doore of the Church militant muſt bee turned. Another ſaith: As a doore turneth vpon the hook, euen ſo the Church of Rome is ruled by the Cardinals. Therefore they haue pillars and pollares carried afore them, in token that they be the pillars and ſtaies of the Church: and pollares, to beat downe all euill doctrine.

And what ſhall I ſpeake of Biſhops? their clouen miter ſignifieth perfect knowledge of the new Teſtament and the old. Their croſiars ſtaffe ſignifieth diligence in attending the flock of Chriſt. Their purple boots and ſandales, ſignifie that they ſhould euer be booted and ready to goe abroad thorow thicke and thin, to teach the Goſpell. And thereto they applied the words of the Prophet: Quàm ſpecioſi pedes Euangelizantium pacem, Euangelizantium bona! How beautifull are the feet of them which bring glad tidings of peace, which bring glad tidings of good things! But alas in what kinde of things do they beare themſelues for Biſhops? These myſticall titles and ſhewes are not enough to fetch in the Lords harueſt: they are garments more méete for plaiers, then for good labourers. S. Bernard writeth thus to Eugenius the Biſhop of Rome, who ſometime had béene his ſcholar: Thou which art the ſhepheard, ietteſt vp and downe ſhining in gold, and gorgeouſly attired: but what get thy ſheepe? If I durſt ſpeak it, theſe things are not the fodder for Chriſts ſheepe, but for diuels. Whatſoeuer apparell they haue vpon them, vnleſſe they will fall to worke, Chriſt will not know them for labourers.

De conſiderat. ad Eug. lib. 4.

How then can the Biſhop of Rome be taken for the chiefe paſtor of Chriſt, which theſe 900. yéeres hath not opened his mouth to feed the flocke? Theſe 900. yéeres, I ſay, ſince Gregory the firſt of that name, it can hardly be found, that euer anie Biſhop of Rome was ſeene in a pulpit. One of themſelues, Adrianus the fourth a Biſhop of Rome, was wont to ſay: Succedimus non Petro in docendo, ſed Romulo in parricidio: We ſucceed not Peter in teaching, but Romulus in murthering.

Aug. de ciuit. Dei. lib. 19. cap. 19.

And in the Canon of the Apoſtles it is decréed, that the Biſhop that teacheth not his flocke, ſhould be depoſed. To which purpoſe they allege S. Auguſtine: Epiſcopatus, nomen eſt operis, non honoris: vt intelligat ſe non eſſe Epiſcopum, qui vult præeſſe, non prodeſſe: A Biſhops office is a name of labour, not a name of honor, that hee which coueteth the place of preeminence, and hath not a deſire to doe good, may know he is not a Biſhop. Thus ſaith Origen, thus ſaith Chryſoſtome, thus ſay diuers others of the old Fathers, whom it were long and néedleſſe to reherſe. Multi Sacerdotes, pauci Sacerdotes, ſaith Chryſoſtome; multi nomine, pauci opere: There are many Prieſts, and few Prieſts: many that beare the name, but few that bee Prieſts indeed. Thus the harueſt is great and plenteous, but the labourers are but few.

Chryſoſt. hom. 43. in opere imperfecto in Mat.

The labourers are but few, but the deſtroiers and waſters are exceeding many; yea, ſuch as ſhould be the harueſt men, moſt of all deſtroy the corne. I will not heere report that I am well able, that your eies haue ſéene, and that many of you haue felt, the ſtate of our time hath béen ſuch. S. Bernard ſaw it in his time, and therefore ſaith: Omnes amici, & omnes inimici: omnes neceſſarij, & omnes aduerſarij: All are friends, and all are enemies: all are helpers, and all are aduerſaries, or hinderers. Againe: Heu, heu, Domine Deus, ipſi ſunt in perſequutione tua primi, qui videntur in eccleſia tua primatum diligere, gerere principatum: Alas, alas, O Lord God, they are the chiefeſt in perſecuting thee, that ſeeme to loue the higheſt roomes, and to beare rule in thy Church. The time being ſo ſhort as it is appointed me, will not ſuffer mee to ſpeake of them that euen now hinder Gods harueſt: and being ſuch men as ſhould ſtay the people, as much as they may doe by their example, diſquiet and diſturbe them that withſtand at this time, and reſiſt your Graces doings, not in darke and doubtful matters, wherein ſomething may be ſaid on both ſides, but in ſuch things as they themſelues doe know were appointed by Chriſt, publiſhed by the Apoſtles, receiued by the old Doctours, and vſed, and frequented in the Primitiue and Catholike Church. Why then will they not not receiue them? Chriſt himſelfe giueth the reaſon: Quia dilexerunt magis gloriam hominum quàm gloriam Dei. Becauſe they loued the praiſe of men, more then the praiſe of God. They know they ſhould endanger their credit, if they ſhould once again turne. Why would not the Phariſies ſuffer the people to beleeue in Chriſt? Cyrillus maketh anſwer: Quia quicquid Chriſto credentium acceſſerit, ſibi detractum putabant: This was the cauſe, ſaith he, for that they thought, how many ſoeuer faithfull came vnto Chriſt, ſo many were loſt from them. And therefore they had leuer keepe the traditions of their elders, then hazard their eſtimation. And Chryſoſtome vpon the ſame matter ſaith: Cum timerent ne principatum amitterent, ceu legum latores, vt maiores eſſe viderentur, multa innouabant; quæres ad tantam peruenit nequitiam, vt præcepta ſua cuſtodirent magis quam mandata Dei: Leſt they ſhould loſe their authority, as if they had beene lawmakers, men able to ſtabliſh and ordaine lawes, to the end they might ſeeme greater, they altered much; which thing (in the end) grew to ſuch a wickednes, that they kept their owne commandements more then the commandements of God. Thus euen now the Lords harueſt is great, the labourers few, and the deſtroiers and hinderers aboue number. O lift vp your eies, and conſider how the hearts of your poore brethren lie waſte without inſtruction, without knowledge, without the food of life, without the comfort of Gods word, ſuch a miſery as neuer was ſeene among heathens. The Turkes haue teachers ſufficient for their people, the Iewes, albeit they haue no ſtated country, but liue in baniſhment, and wander about, yet haue they their Teachers: the Chriſtians which this day liue in India, Æthiopia, Barbary, Mooreland, and other places vnder the perſecution of heathen Princes, yet haue their inſtructors in true religion. The Chriſtians in old time, when they liued vnder tyrants, and were daily put to moſt ſhamefull death, and were hated, and deſpiſed of all the world, yet neuer lacked Miniſters to inſtruct them. It is therefore moſt lamentable, that Chriſtians liuing vnder a Chriſtian Prince, in the peace & liberty of the Goſpel, ſhould lacke learned Miniſters to teach them, and inſtruct them in the word of God: this is the greateſt plague, that God doth ſend vpon any people. John. 10. Cyril. in Ioh. lib. 8. cap. 1. Chryſ. in Mat. hom. 52.

Contrariwiſe, the greateſt bleſſing which any people can receiue at Gods hands, is to haue Prophets and Preachers, by whom they may be inſtructed. When the Prophet declareth the mercy of God towards Iſrael, that he would put an end to their afflictions, and bring them home again from Babylon, he ſaith thus: Behold (ſaith the Lord) I wil ſend out many fiſhers, and they ſhal fiſh them. In like ſort ſaith Eſay: How beautifull vpon the mountaines are the feet of him, that declareth, and publiſheth peace; that declareth good tidings, and publiſheth ſaluation, ſaying vnto Sion, thy God reigneth! The voice of thy watchmen ſhal be heard, they ſhall lift vp their voice, and ſhout together. And Baruch: Nor the Agarens that ſought after wiſedome vpon the earth, nor the merchants of Nerran and Theman, nor the expounders of fables, nor the ſearchers out of wiſedome, haue known the way of wiſedome. There were the Giants, famous from the beginning, that were of ſo great ſtature, and ſo expert in warre. Thoſe did not the Lord chooſe, neither gaue he the way of knowledge vnto them, but they were deſtroied becauſe they had no wiſdome, and periſhed through their owne fooliſhneſſe. He hath found out all the way of knowledge, and hath giuen it vnto Iacob his ſeruant, and to Iſrael his beloued. And againe: O Iſrael, we are bleſſed: for the things that are acceptable to God, are declared vnto vs. He hath not dealt ſo with euery nation, neither haue they knowledge of his iudgements, ſaith the Prophet Dauid. Iere. 16. Eſay. 52. Baruch 3. Baruc. 4. Pſal. 147.

But when God taketh away his Miniſters which ſhould preach peace, and open vnto the people the will of God, and make knowne his iudgements, it is a token that God is highly diſpleaſed with his people. Where there is no viſion, the people decay: they know not what to beleeue. Of this miſery ſpeaketh Ieremy: The yong children aske bread, but no man breaketh it vnto them. Of this ſpeaketh Eſay: The poore and needy ſeeketh water, and there is none. They would haue ſome counſell, ſome comfort, and there is no man to giue it them. My ſheepe wandred (ſaith God) thorow all the mountaines, and on euery high hill: yea, my flocke was ſcattered thorow all the whole earth, and none did ſeeke or ſearch after them. They were full of diſeaſes, they were pined for hunger, and taken vp by the Wolfe, but none had care to deliuer them. Prou. 29. Lamen 4. Eſay. 41. Ezech. 34.

In ſuch ſtate as the flock is in, which hath no ſhepheard; or the ſhip which is toſſed by the tempeſts amidſt the ſurges and rocks of the Sea, and hath no skilful Pilot to guide it; or the yong ſucking child, that hath no nurſe to feed it: euen in ſuch ſtate are your ſoules if you haue not the miniſtery of Gods word abiding with you. You are children, the Preacher is your nurſe: you are a ſhip in danger of many wrecks thorow the boiſterous tempeſts of this world, the Preacher is your Pilot to guide you ſafely towards the hauen of reſt: you are the flocke, the Preacher leadeth you from dangerous places, to feed vpon the holeſome holeſome paſtures of Gods holy woꝛd. Whoſoeuer they be which reioyce not in the increaſe of the Lozds haruеſt, he foꝛſaketh them, and leaueth them comfoꝛtleſſe, and giueth them few oꝛ no labourers.

Wherefore pray the Lord of the haruеſt, that he would ſend forth labourers into his haruеſt. It is the Lozd which caſteth the firſt ſeed into the earth, which doth moiſten the ground, and maketh it fruitfull, & giueth foꝛth his Sunne, that it may come to ripening. All the ſoile, field, coꝛne, and the husbandꝛy thereof is the Lozds. Let vs pꝛay to him to ſend foꝛth labourers to trauell and take paines.

Notwithſtanding we ought to pꝛay to God, that he will ſtirre vp and ſet foꝛth men to inſtruct his people: yet that nothing embarreth the authoꝛity of pꝛinces. Foꝛ, as God calleth him inwardly in the heart, whom he will haue to be a miniſter of his woꝛd: ſo muſt he be authoꝛized of his Pꝛince by outward and ciuill calling, as I could ſhew at large, if time would ſuffer it.

So Salomon the king depoſed Abiathar the high pꝛieſt, and ſet vp Sadoc. So Iuſtinian depoſed two biſhops of Rome, Siluerius, and Vigilius, and authoꝛized others. And the ſame Iuſtinian was wont to ſay, That he had no leſſe regard to the Church of God, then he had to his owne ſoule. So Conſtantinus, Valentinianus and Theodoſius called themſelues Vaſſallos Chriſti, The vaſſals of Chriſt. And Socrates in his ſtoꝛy ſaith. We haue alſo herein compriſed the Emperours liues, for that ſithence the Emperours were firſt Chriſtned, the affaires of the Church haue depended of them, and the greateſt Councels both haue bin, and are kept by their aduice. It pertaineth theꝛefoꝛe alſo to Kings and Pꝛinces to ſend out labourers into the haruеſt.

Socrat. li. 5. in pꝛœmio.

Labourers they muſt be, and not loiterers. Foꝛ Chꝛiſt compareth the teaching of his people to things that be of great labour, as to plowing and fallowing of the ground, to planting of a Vine, to rearing of a houſe, to thꝛeſhing of coꝛne, to ſeeding of ſheepe, to leading of an Hoſt, and keeping of war: in which things is required much diligence & labоꝛ.

Cato in his bookes of husbandꝛy ſaith, it was an old ſaw among husbandmen: Qui terram colit, ne ſedeat: eſt enim aliquid ſemper quod agat: He that plougheth the ground, muſt not ſit ſtill: for he hath alwaies ſomewhat to doe. The woꝛke of the husbandman is neuer ended, he falloweth, ſtirreth, ſoweth, harroweth, weꝛdeth, and tendeth his land.

Theꝛefoꝛe, if they be Paſtours, let them feed the flocke: if they be Doctours, let them teach the people: if they be watchmen, let them ſtand vpon their watch: if they be meſſengers, let them doe their errand. This is the way to build vp the Church of Chꝛiſt. This commiſſion Chꝛiſt gaue vnto his Diſciples: Ite in mundum vniuerſum, &c. Goe ye into all the world, and preach the Goſpell vnto euery creature. Thus by twelue poꝛe Apoſtles al the woꝛld was conquered: Pꝛinces and Kings, and Emperours were ſubdued to the faith of Chꝛiſt. This is the key that openeth the conſcience, this is the two edged ſwoꝛd which entreth thoꝛow, euen to the diuiding aſunder of the ſoule and the ſpirit. Theꝛefoꝛe the Apoſtle ſaith: The weapons of our warfare are not carnall, but mighty through God, to caſt downe holds, caſting downe the imaginations and euery high thing that is exalted againſt the knowledge of God, and bringing into captiuity euery thought to the obedience of Chꝛiſt. This is the only inſtrument, wherewith we may cut downe and haue in the haruеſt of God.

Mark. 16.

2. Cor. 10.

Foꝛ all mens deuices, acts, lawes oꝛ commandements, be the authoꝛity thereof neuer ſo great, yet are not ſufficient to content one mans conſcience. Foꝛ the wiſdome of man is but folly befoꝛe God, and God knoweth the fancies and cogitations of men, that they be but vaine and fooliſh.

Ariſtotle the great wiſe Philoſopher on a time being ſicke, when the Phyſitian came to him to miniſter him a potion, and ſhewed him not what was in it, began to chafe and take on with him: Why, ſaid he, heale not me as thou wouldeſt heale an oxe oꝛ a hoꝛſe, but ſhew mee what thou giueſt me, what are the ingredients, and wheꝛefoꝛe thou giueſt it me. Euen ſo muſt the people be healed of their eꝛꝛoꝛs: they muſt know what is giuen them, and wheꝛefoꝛe.

Fides (ſaith Bernard) ſuadenda eſt, non imponenda: Faith may not be compulſed by force or rigour, but gently brought in by perſwaſion: Foꝛ foꝛced faith is no faith. Saint Paul ſaith: Faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. And theꝛefoꝛe it is well obſerued by the wiſe and politike father S. Ambroſe, that the Church of Chriſt was not gathered by the law, but by faith. Baſil ſaith: If you will haue Gods wiſedome take place, all your woꝛldly wiſedome muſt be ſet a part. And in like ſoꝛt, Hilarius: Humanis operibus extructa non permanent: aliter ædificanda Eccleſia, aliter cuſtodienda eſt &c. Things that be ſet vp with mans workemanſhip (ſaith Hilary) will not endure: the Church of God muſt otheꝛwiſe be builded and preſerued: for the foundation of it muſt be laid vpon the Apoſtles and Prophets. The Church being thus built by God, that is to ſay, by the doctrine of God, ſhall neuer fall.

I ſpeake not this againſt al ciuil, and honeſt lawful policy: for I know it is the gift of God, without the which, nor common State, nor the Church can be maintained. But this ſeemeth to haue bẽ the meaning of theſe old Fathers, that in the building of Gods Church, the preaching of Gods word muſt goe before, to quiet mens conſciences: and wiſedome and policie, like handmaids muſt follow after. For this honour and prerogatiue God claimeth only to himſelfe, that his Church muſt be built vpon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets. Which if it be otherwiſe built, Niſi Dominus ædificauerit domum, in vanum laborauerunt, qui ædificant eam: Vnleſſe God himſelfe build vp the houſe, they ſweat and labour but in vaine, that ſet it vp.

Thus Chriſt at the beginning gathered his Church, not by lawes of men, but againſt all law and policie, by the preaching of his word. God might haue inſtructed Cornelius by the Angell that appeared to him, as it appeareth in the Acts of the Apoſtles: but hee would not ſo, but ſent Peter to him, that he might be inſtructed by the mouth of a Preacher. He might haue taught Paul, after he had ſtricken him downe from his horſe, when he appeared to him, and ſaid, Ego ſum Ieſus quem tu perſequeris: I am Ieſus whom thou perſecuteſt. But he would not ſo, but rather left him to be taught by Ananias. And as it appeareth in the Acts of the Apoſtles, at the preaching of Peter, 3000. people were conuerted and won in one day, that it might appeare by what tooles, and with what workemen God would haue his harueſt ſet forward.

Now let vs behold the preſent ſtate of our country. Theſe words of Chriſt our Sauiour were neuer more true, then we find them now in theſe our daies. The harueſt is great, and the labourers very few: the poore people lieth forſaken, and left as it were ſheep without a guide: the afflicted in conſcience haue no man to quiet them: they grow wild and ſauage, as it were a people that had no God: they are commanded to change their religion, and for lacke of inſtruction, they know not whither to turne them: they know not, neither what they leaue nor what they ſhould receiue.

Some other deſie, and ſpit at the holy Goſpell of our Sauiour Chriſt, and refuſe the couenant of euerlaſting life. Some other for lacke of knowledge follow after wilfull and blind maſters, and become Arrians or Pelagians, and thus they blaſpheme the Sonne of God. Some other giue themſelues ouer to their owne affections, and, as he ſaith, reioice and triumph in their filthineſſe, without feare of God, without conſcience of ſinne, and ſo tread downe the blood of the Teſtament vnder their feet: and this do they for lacke of teaching, becauſe they haue not learned men and preachers to ſhew them what they ſhould do.

O, ſaith our Sauiour Chriſt the good ſhepheard and biſhop of our ſoules, my harueſt is beaten downe and loſt, and their is none that will goe abroad and ſaue it. My people run headlong to their owne deſtruction, not of malice but of very ſimplicitie, only becauſe they are not taught, becauſe they know not my father nor mee. Alas, it is not my fathers will, that any of them ſhould be loſt.

They be our brethren, they be the flocke of God, they be the harueſt, they are bought with great price: I beſeech you, euen for that blood that was ſhed and ſpent for them and vs all, let vs not deſpiſe them.

If the kingdome of God be not worthy to be promoted, yet the kingdome of Satan is worthy to be ouerthrowen. Now is that acceptable and ioifull time come amongſt vs, euen now God hath viſited his people: now the harueſt is great and plenteous. All the world this day longeth, and groneth after the Goſpell. Let vs therefore all together, direct our praiers to the Lord and maſter of the harueſt.

We beſeech thee moſt mercifull father, for thy Sonne Ieſus Chriſts ſake, as thou haſt plentifully encreaſed thy harueſt, and brought it to a ripeneſſe in theſe our daies, ſo ſend out labourers, to get it in, that it be not ſpilt. Gather in all thy ſheep that lie ſtraying without a heard. Lighten the hearts of thine aduerſaries, that they may know the time of their viſitation, and ſee that bleſſed hope, whereunto thou haſt called them. That all the world with one mouth, and one minde, may know and glorifie thee, the only true and liuing God, and thy ſonne Ieſus Chriſt: to whom with thee and the holy Ghoſt, be all honor and glory. Amen.

Luke

Lvke ii. Vers. 15.

But ſome of them ſaid, he caſteth out Diuels through Beelzebub the chiefe of the Diuels,&c.

THAT it may pleaſe God ſo to order both my vtterance, and your vnderſtanding, that whatſoeuer ſhall be ſpoken or heard, may turne to the glorie of his holy name,and to the profit and comfort of his Church, before I enter into the expoſition of theſe words, I deſire you to call vpō our gratious God with your earneſt and hearty praier. And here, I commend vnto you the good eſtate of Gods holie & Catholike Church, & therein the Quēnes moſt excellent maieſty, by the eſpeciall grace of God, Quēne of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the true, ancient, and Apoſtolike faith, & the highest gouernour next vnder God, of this Church of Englād, &c. That as God of his mercie, hath marueilouſly preſerued her to the poſſeſſion of her right, to the great comfort of all our her ſubiects hearts, and to the reformation of the Church: ſo it may pleaſe him to aid and encreaſe her with his holy ſpirit, to the continuance and perfourmance of the ſame. The Quēnes moſt honorable Councell, with the reſidue of the nobilitie. The miſerable ſtate of both the Vniuerſities, and all other ſchooles of learning, the only nurſeries of this Realme. The Biſhops and preachers, that the number of them may be encreaſed, and that they may haue grace, to ſet forth the truth of Gods Goſpell, as their duty is, diligently, ſoberlie, ſincerelie, truelie, and faithfullie: And the whole Commons of this Realme, eſpeciallie, ſuch as ſpeake ill, or thinke ill of Gods holie word, that they may haue grace to regard the ſaluation of their ſoules, to lay aſide all blinde affection, to heare the word of God, and ſo to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Whoſo liſt to peruſe either the whole courſe of the Scriptures, or other ſtories and records of antiquity, ſhal find, that the meſſengers of God, ſuch as haue bēn ſent of purpoſe to giue knowledge of his holy will, haue at all times bēn vnkindly receiued of the more part, and ſlanderouſly reported of: and whatſoeuer they haue ſaid or done, hath bēne falſly depraued, and turned to the worſt.

Moſes, that godlie Captaine, notwithſtanding he were purpoſely called, and ſent from God, and in his name wrought many and ſtrange wonders before the people: yet were there ſome that ſaid he was a Sorcerer, and whatſoeuer he did, he did by way of coniuration.

The religion of the Iewes, was the true worſhip of the only God: Yet Plinie ſaith, it was contemptus omnium numinum, The deſpiſing of all the gods. The Iewes ſuffered no images to be in their Churches, becauſe God had forbidden them: Yet Cornelius Tacitus ſaith, They worſhip their God in forme of an aſſe. Others ſaid, they worſhip a god whom they call Sabaoth, in the ſhape and faſhion of a hogge: and that therefore they were forbidden to eat ſwines fleſh. Others, that they worſhip Saturnus, becauſe they were commanded to kēpe holy the Saturday.

The wicked and cruell Aman, to bring the people of God into hatred with the king Aſſuerus made his complaint of them in this wiſe: May it pleaſe your Maieſty, ſaith he, to vnderſtand, you haue a people here in your Realme, that vſeth a new kind of Religion, and will not be ordered by your Graces lawes.

When the godlie prince Cyrus, had giuen Eſdras and Nehemias, leaue to build vp againe the Church of God at Hieruſalem, there came diuers to him, and bade him take good hēd, for that the Iewes were his enemies, and euer had beene traitors to his crowne.

Likewiſe, after that Chriſt our Sauiour had aſcended into heauen, and the holy Ghoſt was powred downe vpon the Apoſtles, and they began to ſpeake diuers tongues that they neuer had learned, the enemies diſdainefully ſcorned at the gifts of God, and ſaid, Muſto pleniſunt iſti, Theſe men be drunken, and full of new wine. And therefore they talke they know not what.

When Paul and the other Apoſtles taught frē remiſſion of ſinnes, without any goodneſſe or deſert of our parts, only of Gods mercie, and in the blood of Chriſt: the enemies iefted at that kind of learning, and ſaid, faciamus mala, vt veniant bona: then if Gods mercy be declared by forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, Let vs do euill that good may come thereof: Let vs continue in ſinne, that grace may abound.

Rom.3.8.
Rom.6.1.

Becauſe

Becauſe the Chriſtians in the miniſtration of the holy Communion vſed bread and wine; ſome ſaid, they worſhipped not Chriſt, but Bacchus and Ceres, gods of the Heethens.

Whereas the Chriſtian men ſome after the Apoſtles time, vſed to reſort together in the night time, or in the morning before day, into ſome priuate houſe, there to call vpon the name of God, and to receiue the Sacrament together, for feare of the cruelty of tyrants; the enemies reported, that being thus together, they killed a child amongſt them, and ſo deuoured vp his fleſh, and dranke his blood, and after put out the lights, and ſo committed inceſt and adultery one with another.

But what nedeth moe examples? Becauſe we ſay, that iuſtification ſtandeth only vpon the free grace and mercy of God; the aduerſaries report, that we forbid good workes. And becauſe we ſpeake againſt ſuperſtition vſed in faſting, as before vs did Eſay, Paul, and Chriſt himſelfe; they report, that we would haue no faſting. And becauſe we reproue the errors and abuſes in the maner of praier; they ſay, we would not haue the people to pray. And becauſe we reſtore the Sacraments to the firſt inſtitution of our Sauiour Chriſt, and the example of the primitiue Church; they ſay, we take away the Sacraments.

This is Gods holy will, that for our exercíſe whatſoeuer we ſay or doe, be it neuer ſo well, it ſhall be ill taken.

Iulian the Apoſtata found fault with the ſimplicity and rudeneſſe of Gods word.

Tertullian ſaith, the heathens in the time of the Primitiue Church, were wont to paint out in mockery the God of the Chriſtians, with an Aſſes head and a booke in his hand, in token that the Chriſtians profeſſed learning, but indeed were Aſſes, rude, and ignorant. And doe not our aduerſaries the like this day, againſt all thoſe that profeſſe the Goſpell of Jeſus Chriſt? O, ſay they, who are they that fauour this way? none but Shoomakers Tailers, Weauers, Prentiſes, ſuch as neuer were in the Vniuerſity but be altogether ignorant and void of learning. Thus haue you béene borne in hand, that you might be brought to miſtruſt the Goſpel.

And as the Phariſies vpbraided thoſe that heard the doctrine of Chriſt: Doth any of the Rulers, or of the Phariſies beleeue in him? But this people, which know not the law, are curſed. Euen ſo this day, they ſay by you: They vnderſtand not their Pater noſter, they know not their Creed; ye be ignorant. O miſerable men, do they auance themſelues of your ignorance? If you know not your beléefe, if you vnderſtand not your Pater noſter, if you be ſo ignorant, through whoſe fault are you ſo ignorãt? why were they your Paſtors? why did they not teach you? why take they from you the holy Scriptures? why wil they haue you be ignorant and vnlearned ſtil? Iohn 7.

This doe they, that they may the more diſcredit and deface the Goſpel, which God of his mercy hath in our daies reſtored vnto vs, and cauſed the beames thereof to ſhine ouer al Countries, in ſuch ſort, that now the ſimple & vnlearned, the rich, the learned, the worſhipful, the honourable, the States and Princes of the world, be become profeſſors and maintainers of it, as our eies doe ſée this day. Bleſſed be his holy name therefore.

They ſay, that the preachers of the ſame are vnlearned, as men that read nothing but a few Engliſh bookes, and neuer ſtudied or ſaw the old Doctors.

We find not ſuch fault in their learning, neither do we ſpeake thoſe things by them, that the moſt part of you doth know we might iuſtly and truly ſpeake. For we ſéeke not to confound them by ſuch meanes, it is not our profeſſion. We malice them not, we are not enemies vnto them. And that, thou O Lord that knoweſt al things, knoweſt beſt.

Let them haue the commendation of learning: God giue them grace to ioyne it with truth, and to vſe it to his glory, & not to their own. Yet they muſt néeds be very wel learned, that will charge all their aduerſaries with ignorance.

Albeit in contention of learning, I may be worſt heard to ſpeake, being the vnworthieſt of al my brethren: yet, this dare I be bold to ſay, becauſe it is true, we are not ſo far to ſéeke in learning, as they would haue vs appeare to be. S. Paul being driuen to anſwer in his own defence in a like matter, in compariſon betwéene him and the falſe Prophets, writeth on this ſort: Hebræi ſunt, & ego: Iſraelitæ ſunt, & ego: Semen Abrahæ ſunt, & ego: miniſtri Chriſti ſunt, & ego: They are Hebrewes, ſo am I: they are Iſraelites, ſo am I: they are the ſeed of Abraham, ſo am I: they are the miniſters of Chriſt, ſo am I. 2. Cor. 11.

So will I ſay, and truly ſay, betwéen vs and them. They are ſéen in the tongues, Latin, Gréeke, and Hebrew; ſo are we. They haue ſtudied the Arts; ſo haue we: they haue read the Doctors, the generall Councels, and the Scriptures; ſo haue we. If they can be learned doing this; O what vnfortunate and vnhappy men are wée, that are ſo vnlearned, & yet do the ſame? This lucke commonly followeth al them that be profeſſors of the truth.

S. Paul was counted and called a rebel, and accuſed that he was an Egyptian, and had gathered Act. 24. gathered a number of men of war to disquiet and trouble the country. We haue found (saith Tertullus) this man a pestilent fellow, and a mouer of sedition amongst all the Iewes thorowout the world.

So saith Tertullian, that in his time the Christians were called Hostes publici, that is, enemies and destroiers of all common States.

And those reports the enemies not onely scattered among the common people, but also dropped them into the magistrates and princes eares, that they might haue an ill opinion of Christian religion, and suppresse the ministers and preachers of it: so vnkind commonly many haue bene towards the messengers of Gods word.

When Christ himselfe came downe from heauen, from the bosome of his father, and began to vtter and to teach the Gospel of euerlasting life, and to confirme the same with many a strange miracle: the poore people gaue eare vnto him, and beleeued his doctrine, and by his wonderous workes knew him to be the Sonne of Dauid, the very Messias that was promised them.

But the Scribes and Pharises, that bare the name of Doctours, and had bene euermore brought vp in learning, and were the instructors of the people, made light of Christs miracles, and said to the people; He casteth out diuels through Beelzebub the chiefe of the Diuels.

The miracle was such, that no reasonable man would haue thought it to bee wrought by the Diuell. The poore man that before had bene deafe, was now able to heare: that before was possessed of the Diuel, was now deliuered: that before was sick, was now restored to his health. The poore people marueiled at the doing, and glorified God. But the Pharisies cried out against him: In Beelzebub principe dæmoniorum, ejcit dæmonia: He casteth out diuels through Beelzebub, the chiefe of the diuels. Not because it was true, nor because it was likely to be true, nor because they in their conscience thought it to bee true: but only to bring Christ in hatred with the people, and to deface his doctrine. And therefore they blasphemed that, that indeed they could not deny: and that they knew to be the workmanship of God, they said it proceeded from the Diuell.

Christ our Sauiour putteth backe these slanders with diuers reasons; whereof at this time for shortnesse sake, I will touch but two. The first reason is: Euery kingdome that is diuided in it selfe, shall be brought to desolation: if Satan be diuided against himselfe, then must his kingdome needs be dissolued, and that by his owne working. But that is not likely. For all the Angels of Satan agree and conspire together to the vpholding of their kingdome: therefore must you needs confesse that I haue remoued this Diuel by some other greater power, and not by the power of Beelzebub the chiefest of the Diuels.

Heere perhaps, some man will replie, that witches, and coniurers often times chase away one Diuell by the meane of another. Possible it is so; but that is wrought, not by power, but by collusion of the Diuels. For one Diuell, the better to attaine his purpose, will giue place, and make as though he stood in awe of another Diuell. And by the way, to touch but a word or two of this matter. for that the horrible vsing of your poore subiects inforceth thereunto: It may please your Grace to vnderstand, that this kind of people, I meane witches, and sorcerers, within these few last yeares, are marueilously increased within this your Graces realme. These eies haue seene most euident and manifest marks of their wickednesse. Your Graces subiects pine away euen vnto the death, their colour fadeth, their flesh rotteth, their speech is benummed, their senses are bereft.

Wherefore, your poore subiects most humble petition vnto your Highnesse, is, that the lawes touching such malefactours, may be put in due execution. For the shole of them is great, their doings horrible, their malice intollerable, the examples most miserable. And I pray God, they neuer practise further, then vpon the subiect. But this only by the way, these be the scholers of Beelzebub the chiefe captaine of the Diuels.

This first reason that Christ vseth, is taken of common experience. For notwithstanding there be nothing so puissant, as the force of a kingdome: yet if it be diuided in it selfe, it will perish and come to confusion. For, concord and agreement is the strength and maintenance of all States. Breake the hoopes of a vessell, and all the boords will fall asunder. The examples hereof are too rife. The mightiest kingdomes that euer were, by such meanes haue bene conquered, and fallen into the power of their enemies.

Therefore, Esay prophecying the destruction of the kingdome of the Iewes, saith, first the people shal fall at dissension within themselues, and then should follow their confusion.

When Vespasian the Emperour and his sonne Titus came with an army against Hierusalem, the whole nation of the Iewes was diuided into three factions, each of them ready to vndoe the other. Then followed the ouerthrow of the kingdome. Then was Hierusalem raced to the ground: Then were there slaine of the Iewes to the number of 1100000.

1100000. Once againe I will say it, because it is maruellous, and most true as Iosephus (who was then a Captaine in the field) writeth, there were then slaine of the Iewes, of men, women, and children, no lesse then 1100000.

Of late yeeres, the dissention betweene two brothers, brought all Græcia and Asia, and al the East parts of Christendome into the possession of the Turke. But what needeth vs to goe to Hierusalem or to Turkie for examples?

This Kingdome of ours, the mightiest, the noblest, the richest, the blessedest land that is, or euer was vnder heauen, could neuer yet be conquered by any enemy, but onely at such time, as the people were at variance within themselues. Then was Iulius Cæsar with a smal number, then were the English Saxons, then were the Danes, then was the Duke of Normandy, able to ouerrunn vs, and to possesse our Country.

Therefore the Prince that desireth to be a Conqueror, laboreth not so much to furnish his owne men, and to make himselfe strong, as to set discord among his enemies. For that is a manifest token of their vndoing and that Gods vengeance is at hand. And for that cause Herodian an old writer pronounceth, that as much as warre is worse then peace: so much is ciuill sedition worse then warre. And Titus Liuius in his story saith: Hæc res sola facit, vt magna Imperia sint mortalia: Dissention only, saith he, causeth that great Empires cannot continue but haue an end. For, if the one part conquer, and haue the victorie, it is euen as if a man with his right hand would maime himselfe, and chop of the left. This example Christ vseth to confound the malice of the Phariseis.

The second reason is this: If I cast out diuels by the power of Beelzebub, by what power doe your children, my disciples, Iohn, Iames, Peter, Andrew, and the rest, cast them out? They granted that Christs disciples wrought miracles, only by the name of God. And yet that they allowed in the scholers, euen of malice & hatred and contrary to their conscience, they reproued and blaspemed in the Master. Hereof Christ concludeth; If I cast out diuels in the power of God, then doubtlesse the kingdome of God is among you: your own children shall be iudges ouer you.

Now to apply these words vnto this our present time, wherein vnder a most godly and gracious Prince, the truth of Christs Gospell is freely preached, Gods holy name therefore be praised for euer.

As Moses in his time was counted a sorcerer: as the Iewes were called despisers of all religion, seditious and heady against their Princes: as the Apostles were counted drunken, and full of new wine: as all Christians were called idolaters, worshippers of Bacchus and Ceres, murtherers, incestuous, and adulterers: as S. Paul for his preaching was iudged a rebel: and al Christians were taken for enemies of all common Estates: euen so in these latter daies, all these or other the like crimes, haue béene laid to preachers and professors of Christs Gospell: that they haue bén godlesse, seditious, rebels, despisers of good orders, incestuous, adulterers, masters of all sinne and wickednesse.

But this is our comfort, that nothing can be deuised to be spoken against vs, but the same aforetime hath bén deuised and spoken against Christ himselfe. For he himselfe was called a Samaritan, a companion of Publicans and harlots, a glutton, a liar, a blasphemer, a subuerter of the whole nation, a seducer of the people, a rebel against Cæsar, a sorcerer, a worker by the diuell, and a breaker of the Sabbath day.

We are set vp, saith Paul, as a marke for men to speak against, and whatsoeuer be spoken of vs, be it neuer so vntrue or vnlikely, yet are there some that will beléeue it. Yea such things as would not be beléeued spoken of a théefe, or a murtherer will sone be beléeued of him that professeth the name and Gospell of Iesus Christ: Woe is me, my mother (saith Ieremie) that thou hast borne me a contentious man, and a man that striueth with the whole earth: I haue neither lent on vsury, nor men haue lent vnto me on vsury: yet euery one doth curse me. The true report of these things caused such extremity, as this day you may heare of in other countries, and somtimes haue séene presently before your eies. Ieremi. 5.

Princes, and noble men hated the doctrine of the Gospel, before they knew it. They hated it, and thought il of it, not of malice, nor against their conscience, nor against the testimony of the holy Ghost, but onely of ignorance, because they lacked instruction. They had a zeale, and a féeling of God, but not according to knowledge. And therfore doing as they did, they thought they did God high seruice.

This courtesie had Christ our Sauior shewed him when he was in the world. The same courtesie must they looke for, that will become Christs disciples. They said of Christ, that whatsoeuer he did, he did it in the name of Beelzebub the chiefe of the diuels. Euen so, whereas it hath pleased almighty God to blesse vs with the true preaching, and light of his holy Gospel: yet there are some that condemne it and call it heresie, and beare the people in hand, that all this doctrine is nothing else but a renuing of old heresies.

It is a greeuous matter for a Christian man, iustly to be accused of heresie. For whosoeuer is an heretike, is an enemie of God, and a waster & destroier of all true Religion. And therefore, vnlesse the crime bee maruellous euident, hee doth great wrong that calleth any man heretike: and though a man be falsely charged, yet may he not dissemble it. Ruffinus would say, that man were not a Christian, whosoeuer would abide to be called an heretike. All other iniuries may be borne withal, but this is such and so hainous a crime, that vnlesse it be manifestly euident, no man may suffer to be so iudged: and it should not be beleeued, when it is laid to the charge of any Christians.

Wherefore, forasmuch as the cause is Gods, and pertaineth to the conscience of a great many, let it be as lawful for the poore man that is vniustly hurt, to make his saue, as others thinke it lawfull for them to giue the wound.

Christ our Sauiour, when he was thus charged, made answer: Si ego in Beelzebub eycio dæmonia, filij vestri in quo eyciunt? If I through Beelzebub cast out diuels, by whom doe your children cast them out? So may we say to such as this day be aduersaries to this cause, and speake against vs: If we be heretikes that teach this doctrine, what are the Ancient Fathers, the Doctors, and the Apostles that haue taught the same? If they were Catholikes, and haue beene euermore so taken, writing as they did, how is it that only we are not Catholikes, writing and saying as they did? they shall iudge on our side against you. And would God in the greatest and speciallest points of our controuersies, all parts would bee contented to stand to their iudgement: so should all contention be soone at an end.

For I call Heauen and Earth to witnesse, and speake it before God and his holy Angels, and before the consciences of all them that speake against vs, that touching the very substance of religion, we teach nothing this day but that hath beene taught before by Christ himselfe: set abroad by his Apostles: continued in the Primitiue Church, and maintained by the old and ancient Doctors.

And in one or two words onely to giue a taste of the same, that thereby ye may the better iudge of the rest:

We say, that in the Sacrament after the consecration, remaineth the substance and nature of bread and wine. The same saith S. Augustine, S. Chrysostome, Theodoretus, Gelasius, and others. Gelasius words are so plaine, as no man can denie them: Non desinit esse substantia panis & vini: There leaueth not to be the substance of bread and wine. Thus wrote they, and were Catholikes.

We say that Christs last Supper must be vsed as a communion, and frequented with more then one. So Christ ordained it, so the Apostles, the Primitiue Church, and all the old Doctors practised it, and neuer was there any of them that euer made mention of a priuate Masse: Thus did they, and yet were they Catholikes.

We say the holy Communion or Sacrament of the breaking and shedding of the body and blood of Christ, ought of necessity to be vsed vnder both kinds: Thus did al the Doctors vse it. And Gelasius an old Father saith: that otherwise to vse it, is open sacrilege. And for the space of 1000. yeares after Christ, there can no example be found to the contrarie. Thus did they, and yet were Catholikes.

We say, the publike praiers ought to be in the common tongue: that the Bishop of Rome ought not to take vpon him to be the head of the vniuersall Church: that the Prince is of right, and by the authority that God hath giuen him, the highest Ruler of his Church and Realme as well of the Ecclesiasticall officers, as of the temporall.

And all these things bee auouched and confirmed by the examples of the Primitiue Church, by the old generall Councels, and by the Doctors. And the contrary hereof shal neuer be proued, nor by old Father or Doctor, nor by ancient Councel, nor by example of the Primitiue Church, nor by any sufficient authority of the Scriptures. I leaue the rest, for it were an infinite labour to say as much as might be said.

Thus they taught, thus did they, and were Catholikes: and alas, are we, saying the same, only because we say the same, become heretikes? that was once true, is it now become false? that was once Catholike doctrine, is it now at last become heresie? O mercifull God! was it thy will, that thy truth should be true but for a season, vntil there should come men to decree the contrary? If we be heretikes that teach the same that the old Doctors of the Church taught, what then are they, that teach contrary to the Doctors? Christ our Sauiour to reproue the Phariseis, thought it sufficient to say to them: Hoc Abraham non fecit: This thing Abraham neuer did. Therefore are you not the children of Abraham. Euen so may we truly say to such as hold not themselues contented with this doctrine; These things that you do, S. Augustine neuer did, S. Hierome neuer did: none of the ancient fathers euer did: the Apostles in the Catholike primitiue Church neuer did: therefore yee are not the children of S. Augustine: ye are not the children of S. Hierome: yee are not the children of any of the old Catholike Doctors: ye are not the children of Chriſts primitiue, catholike, and vniuerall Church.

It may not become me to ſet order in theſe things: yet if it were lawful, I would wiſh that once againe, as time ſhould ſerue, there might be had a quiet and a ſober diſputation: that each part might be required to ſhew their grounds, without felfe will, and without affection: not to maintain or breed contention, (for I truſt it ſhould be the way to take away all contention) but only that the truth may be knowen, many conſciences quieted, and the right ſtone tried, by compariſon of the counterfet. For, at the laſt diſputation that ſhould haue bin, you know which party gaue ouer, and would not meddle. Some will ſay, the Iudges wil not be indifferent. And alas, what man that doubteth his own matter, will euer thinke the Iudges indifferent? Let the whole world, let our aduerſaries themſelues be Iudges herein, (affection put apart) let our aduerſaries themſelues be Iudges. What can we offer more? if this be not ſufficient, what can there be ſufficient?

Pompeius a noble gentleman of Rome, at what time he ſhould go into the field againſt Cæſar, that then was his enemy, and ſome of his Counſel told him he lacked men, and ſhould neuer be able with ſo ſmal a number to ſtand in field againſt Cæſar, being wel furniſhed: Tuſh, quoth he, whenſoeuer I ſhal but beat the ground with my foot, I ſhal by and by raiſe vp a ſwarme of ſouldiers. Afterward it befel that Pompey was vanquiſhed, and glad to flee. Then Marcus Cato, an old gentleman, and one of his army ſaid to him: O ſir, remember your promiſe, you lacke men, now let vs ſee your ſwarme of ſouldiers.

It is wel knowen that it hath bin ſpoken, both in this place, and in other like, that al the Doctors, and al the general Councels were againſt vs. Now the army is diſcomfited, now they ſtand in need of men, now let them cal for their Doctors and Councels: if they come but with one ſufficient Doctor or Councel, they may haue the field.

I ſpeake not this to boaſt my ſelfe of any learning, but the goodneſſe of the cauſe maketh me the bolder. Neither would I haue in this behalfe ſaid ſo much as I haue, ſauing that the matter it ſelfe, and very neceſſity inforced me ſo to do. Alas, it were great pity that Gods truth ſhould be defaced with priuy whiſperings. It were great pity that whole houſes ſhould be ouerthrown, mens conſciences wounded, the people deceiued. Gods truth and the loue thereof pulled from your hearts, his word blaſphemed, as if it came frō Beelzebub, without any good groūd, without any authority of ỹ ſcripture, without any example of ỹ Primitiue Church, without Councel, without any ancient Doctor or Father.

But they haue another kind of learning, which becauſe we haue not, therefore they ſay we are vnlearned. For if controuerſies might haue bin tried by learning, you ſhould neuer haue ſeen the Maſſe againe after it was once down.

If there euer come another change, as I pray God we may neuer ſee, nor ſurely euer ſhal we, vnleſſe our vnkindneſſe pul down Gods plague vpon vs: but, if a change come, ſuch a one as they looke for, you ſhal ſee with what argument they wil proue their Maſſe. We read that Chriſt did put the Phariſeis to ſilence; yet afterward when their time came, they ſaid: We haue a law, and by our law he muſt dy. But Gods name be praiſed, no perſecutions, no torments, no fire, no fagot, haue euer weakned the cauſe of the Goſpel. Tertullian ſaith: Plures efficimur, quoties metimur: The more we be cut down, the more we increaſe. Tertul in Apologet. Theſe be their arguments, this is their Logicke: they haue no liking to try the matter by Scripture, by Doctors, by Councel, or by the practiſe of the moſt ancient Churches: and, if they make any pretence of liking ſuch trial, they do it for ſome other hidden purpoſe, to moue mutinies and diſquet: that they may worke their practiſes, whiles mens heads are occupied and buſied with talke of ſuch matters.

Pyrrhus, a luſty gentleman, and king of Epyrus, when he firſt tooke counſel with his Nobles to wage war againſt the Romans, heard ſay he might ſoon conquer them, for that they were nothing els but a ſort of wild and barbarous people: but afterward, when he came to the view of the Romans army indeed, and ſaw their Captaines and ſouldiers wel appointed and their flags, and ſtandards in good order: Mary (quoth he) whether theſe men be barbarous or no I cannot tel, but wel I wot their behauiour, and the order of their campe is not barbarous.

So, what account ſoeuer men make of this doctrine, that God be thanked is taught this day, yet whoſoeuer ſhal come nere and view it well, and try it to the vttermoſt, and ſhal find that al things are done ſeemly and orderly according to the old Doctours, to the Apoſtles, and to the primitiue Church of Chriſt, ſhal fal down to the ground, and confeſſe that the order and maner thereof, or any thing that is taught therein, is not heretical.

S. Iohn Baptiſt ſent his Diſciples to Chriſt to know whether he were the true Meſſias or no, or els, whether they ſhould looke for another: Chriſt made them anſwer: Goe and ſhew Iohn what things ye haue heard and ſeen: the blind receiue ſight, & the halt go, the lepers Luke. 7.

are cleansed, and the deafe heare, the dead are raised vp, & the poore receiue the Gospel. For these tokens were sufficient to make Iohn vnderstand, that Christ was the true Messias.

Euen so, if a man stand in doubt of this religion, whether it be of God or no, let him but consider, and thinke with himselfe thus: great numbers of errors are now reuealed, superstition is remoued, idolatry is taken away, the Sacraments are rightly and duly vsed, the dumbe speake, the blind see, the poore afflicted minds receiue the Gospel, the prayers are in such sort as the people may take profit and comfort by them. God giue vs grace to know how great need we haue to pray, that in al places we may lift vp cleane hands and hearts vnto God, and cal vpon him in spirit and truth.

If this be heresie, then alas, what is true religion? Can these be done by the power of Beelzebub? Can the diuel reforme errors, remoue superstition, take away idolatry, cause the Sacraments to be directly vsed, the dumbe to speake, the blinde to see, the poore to receiue the Gospell, the people to take fruit and comfort by their prayers?

O good brethren, this is the worke of Gods right hand, the kingdome of God doubtlesse is come vpon vs, the Prince of error is put to silence, the readinesse of the people vniuersally and in all places is maruellous, Kings and Princes suffer themselues to be led captiues to the obedience of Christ. They that before were enemies and persecutors of this doctrine, are now contented to yeld their bodies and liues for the defence of the same: and to be short, al the world this day crieth, and groneth after the Gospell.

And al these things are come to passe, at such time as to any mans reason it might seem impossible: when al the world, the people, priests, and Princes were ouerwhelmed with ignorance: when the word of God was put out of sight: when he that toke vpon him the general rule of al together, was crept into the holy place, and had possessed the conscience of man, as if he had been God, and had set himselfe aboue the scriptures of God, and gaue out decrees, that whatsoeuer he should do, no man should find fault with him: when al schooles, Priests, Bishops, and Kings of the world were sworne to him, that whatsoeuer he toke in hand, they should vphold it: when he had chosen Kings sons and brothers to be his Cardinals: when his Legates and espies were in euery Kings counsel: when nothing could be attempted any where, but he by and by must haue knowledge of it: when whosoeuer had but muttered against his doings, must straightwaies haue been excommunicate, and put to most cruel death, as Gods enemy: when no man could haue thought there had been any hope, that euer these daies should haue been seen that God of his mercy hath giuen vs to see: when all things were void of al hope, and ful of desperation.

Euen then, I say, euen then, contrary to al mans reason, God brought al these things to passe. Euen then God defeated their policies, not with shield or speare, but only with the spirit of his mouth, that is, with preaching of the Gospel. There is no counsel against the Lord, the diuels were cast out by the power of God.

This is the day which the Lord hath wrought: to thee O Lord, the praise hereof is due: thou hast turned our mourning into ioy: thou hast put to silence the spirit of error: thou hast inflamed the hearts of thy people: thou hast brought Princes and Kings to the obedience of thy Son Iesus Christ: thou hast opened the eies of the world to espy out, and to cry for the comfort of the Gospel. When al things were in despaire, yet thou didst reserue vnto thy selfe one little sparke, that should inkindle againe light in thy Church, that should remoue rubbish and filth out of thy Temple, whose heart should euer be in thy hand, who should do that that good is in thy sight, and should walke in the waies of her father Dauid. This is the hand and power of God, this is the Lords doing, and it is marueilous in our eies. God giue vs grace to haue these things euer before our eies, that we neuer be vnthankful. Now for al these graces that God hath so plentifully powred vpon vs, let vs consider what kindnesse ought to be rendred one our part. O Israel, O my people, saith almighty God what thing is it that I require of thee, but only that thou loue me, and walke in my waies: this is our homage, this is our duty, this shal be looked for at our hands. The grace of God, saith Paul, that bringeth saluation vnto all men, hath appeared, and teacheth vs that we should liue soberly and righteously in this present world, looking for the blessed hope, and appearing of the glory of the mighty God, and of our sauiour Iesus Christ.

Tit. 2.

Such in old times was the life of al them that professed the name of Christ. Tertullian of his time saith, a Christian man could be knowen by nothing so wel, as by the changing of his life. Cyprian, of the Christians in his time, saith: Veniunt vt discant, discunt vt viuant: They come, that they may learne, they learne, that they may know how to liue. S. Paul commendeth the Philippians, that they shine as lights in the world, that their life doth testifie what they be. Eusebius saith: Valeriani aula, erat referta pijs, & Ecclesia Dei facta: They that were of the court of Valerian, were become Christians, and then was the court not like a court, but likevnto the Church of God.

Ad Iulianum.

Philip. 2.

Eccle hist. lib. 7. cap. 9.

Iustinus

Iuſtinus the Martyr ſaith, he was firſt turned to Chriſt: for the admiration that he had of the innocent and godly life of Chriſtian men.

Such then was the life of them that bare the name of Chriſt, they came to learne, they learned to liue. You might haue known their profeſſion, by the only changing of their maners. The Court wherein they liued, was ſo reuerently kept, without notable ſin or wantonneſſe, as if it had bene the Temple of God.

O almighty God, how fares it now with them that would be called Chriſtians, and bee reckoned among profeſſors of the Goſpell! how many are there that come to learne! how many are there that learne to liue! how many are there that may be known by changing of their maners! Unleſſe it be, for that they make a mockery of Gods holy Goſpel, and ſo become more diſſolute, more fleſhly, more wanton, then euer they were afore.

What Court can we find, that any part may be like the Temple of God? Seldome is it, that almighty God may be heard to ſpeake his mind. But when he hath ſpoken, who is hee that thinketh vpon it? who is he that doth not deſpiſe it? who is he that ſpurneth not at it?

If our life ſhould giue teſtimony and report of our Religion, ſory I am to ſpeake it, but alas, it is to true in to many, it crieth out, Non eſt Deus: the very courſe of our life beareth witneſſe againſt vs, that in our hearts we thinke there is no God, and that there is no feare of God before our eies. I amplifie not, nor enlarge the matter: I would to God it were no more then I make of it.

Thus we doe withhold the truth of God in vnrighteouſneſſe: thus the grace of God is abuſed to the contenting of our pleaſures: thus we become the veſſels of Gods wrath, and heape vp vengeance vpon our heads. Therefore will God take away his holy ſpirit from vs, therefore will God giue vs ouer to a reprobate minde, therefore ſhall the end of vs bee worſe then was the beginning.

O good brethren, let vs not abuſe the mercy of God, let vs not receiue the grace of God in vaine. Remember how many eies are ſet vpon vs, let vs take occaſion away from them that ſeek occaſion to ſlander our profeſſion: let not, let not our life cauſe the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt to be ill ſpoken of and blaſphemed: let vs walke ſo as becõmeth them that are called, and indeed are Filij lucis: The children of light.

The truth of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, hath now ſhined ouer the whole world: if it be yet hidden from any, it is hidden from them that periſh: he that periſheth now, ſhal periſh in his own blod. Now if any beléue not, he is inexcuſable. The wiſdome of God in publiſhing his word, contrary and againſt the courſe of mans policie: the continuall preaching of it in al places: the aſhes of ſo many learned fathers and godly men and women, who haue yélded their bodies to the cruell torments of tyrants, to be conſumed in the fire for the teſtimony thereof, are yet ſo freſh in your eies, and ſpoken of in your hearing, and witneſſed in your hearts and conſciences, that you can not denie, but the kingdome of God is come amongſt vs. But if there be any, that is not perſwaded in his religiõ, (forasmuch as it is a matter of life and death, of ſaluation and damnation) I beſeech you before God, and before his Chriſt, let vs not be careleſſe, let vs not bee negligent. If we miſlike it, let vs read the Scriptures, and know wherefore we miſlike it.

Deſpiſe not, good brethren, deſpiſe not to heare Gods word declared. As you tender your owne ſoules, be diligent to come to ſermons: for that is the ordinary place, where mens hearts be moued, and Gods ſecrets be reuealed. For be the preacher neuer ſo weake, yet is the word of God as mighty, and as puiſſant as euer it was. If thou heare Gods word ſpoken by a weake man, an ignorant man, a ſinner as thou thy ſelfe art, and yet wil beléue it, and heare it with reuerence; it is able to open thine eies, and to reueale vnto thée the high myſteries of thy ſaluation.

Remember we are the Sons of the Prophets. The kingdome of God is come amongſt vs. Let vs not withſtand the ſpirit of God: let vs not tread downe the blod of the euerlaſting Teſtament. The hand of God hath wrought this: let vs not arme our ſelues againſt God, and ſay, They are wrought in the name of Beelzebub.

It is not our doctrine that we bring you this day, wee wrote it not, we found it not out, we are not the inuẽtors of it, we bring you nothing, but that the old fathers of the Church, that the Apoſtles, that Chriſt our Sauiour himſelfe hath brought before vs. O condemne it not, before you know it: In the meane while thinke well of them that labour for you, that doe you ſeruice, that pray for you, that ſhall giue their life for you.

Let vs lay aſide al blind affection, let vs labor to know the truth, let God haue the victory. And then, when we know God, let vs glorifie him as our God; let vs ſo liue, that our words, our déeds, & our whole life may teſtifie, that the kingdom of God is amongſt vs. Let our light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſée our good works, & glorifie our father which is in heauen. So ſhal God powre down his bleſſings vpon vs, ſo ſhal God bleſſe whatſoeuer we take in hand, ſo ſhall we be bleſſed in peace, ſo ſhall we be bleſſed in war, ſo ſhall God goe forth before our armies, ſo ſhall we be the children of God, ſo ſhall God be our God, and remaine with vs for euer.

And thou moſt mercifull father, as thou haſt ſent vs thy heauenly kingdome, that is, the moſt comfortable tidings of the Goſpell of thy ſonne Ieſus Chriſt: ſo we beſeech thee for thy mercy, bleſſe that thing that thou haſt begun, that it may continue among vs, and remaine with vs for euer. Open the hearts of them, that of ignorance thinke ill of it, that they may ſee that bleſſed hope whereunto thou haſt called vs, that all the world may know thee, and thy ſonne our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, whom thou haſt ſent for the redemtion of the world. Amen.

ROM. 13.

VERS. 12. The night is paſt, and the day is at hand: let vs caſt away the works of darkneſſe, and let vs put on the armour of light.

THis little portion of the Scripture, hath beene often expounded and opened in your hearing: yet ſhall it not be vnprofitable once againe to entreat thereof. For, albeit the propoſition, and ground of matter be one, yet ſome difference may be in the maner of vtterance.

The word of God is the water of life, the more yee laue it forth, the freſher it runneth: it is the fire of Gods glory, the more yee blow it, the clearer it burneth: it is the corne of the Lords field, the better you grinde it, the more it yeldeth: it is the bread of heauen, the more it is broken and giuen forth, the more remaineth: it is the ſword of the ſpirit, the more it is ſcoured, the brighter it ſhineth. The voice of God cannot be vnpleaſant to their eares which are the children of God: the oftner they heare it, the more comfort they receiue: they can neuer haue ouermuch who neuer haue enough.

S. Paul in theſe words ſtirred vp the Romans, and awaked them out of the ſlumber of death, that they might behold the cleare light of the Goſpell, and know the time of their viſitation, and ſhake off the workes of darkneſſe, and apparell themſelues with the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt our Sauiour.

But before I proceede further to declare that which is to be ſpoken at this preſent, let vs turne our hearts to God, euen the father of lights, that it may pleaſe him to open the eies of our vnderſtanding, and to direct all our doings to his glory, &c.

In worldly buſineſſe, it is reckoned a great point of wiſdome, to doe things in due time, and to chuſe the fitteſt ſeaſon to ſpeake or to hold ſilence, to buy or to ſell, to build or to pull downe. Salomon therefore ſaid: To all things their is an appointed time, and a time to euery purpoſe vnder the heauen. Who ſo doth not waigh the ſeaſon, and take his conuenient time, he is vnwiſe and defeateth himſelfe, and bewraieth his folly. But of all wiſedomes this is the greateſt, that a man lift vp his eies to the throne of Gods mercy, and know the time of his bleſſing, and direct his life to the ſeruice of God, as he warneth: Mak no tarrying to turne vnto the Lord, and put not off from day to day: for ſuddenly ſhall the wrath of the Lord breake forth and in thy ſecurity thou ſhalt be deſtroied. If the good man of the houſe were wiſe, if he knew at what houre the theefe would come, he would ſurely watch, and ſtand in readineſſe, and not ſuffer his houſe to be digged thorow. Of this wiſdome in taking the vantage of time, ſpake the Prophet Dauid: This day if you heare his voice harden not your hearts. Foreſlow not the time, loſe not this good occaſion, heare his voice now, this day. Of this wiſedome ſpake S. Paul: We as workers together beſeech you, that ye receiue not the grace of God in vaine. For he ſaith: I haue heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of ſaluation haue I ſuccored thee. Behold now the accepted time, behold now the day of ſaluation.

2. Cor. 6.

Whoſo knoweth not this time, is not wiſe. Of this blindneſſe and heauineſſe of the people, God complaineth in many places of the Prophets. In the eighth Chapter of Ieremie: Euen the Storke in the aire knoweth her appointed times, and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Swallow obſerue the time of their comming: but my people knoweth not the iudgement of the Lord. Of this their blindneſſe and folly, our Sauiour reproueth Hieruſalem: O if thou haddeſt (euen now at the leaſt in this thy day) known thoſe things, which belong vnto thy peace: but now are they hid from thine eies. For the daies ſhall come vpon thee, that thine enemies ſhall caſt a trench about thee, and compaſſe thee round, and keepe thee in on euery euery ſide, and ſhall make thee euen with the ground, and thy children which are within thee, and they ſhal not leaue in thee a ſtone vpon a ſtone, becauſe thou knoweſt not the time of thy viſitation. Therefore the Apoſtle calleth vpon the Romans, telleth them that the Sun is vp, and the day open: and warneth them, not to loſe the ſeaſon: for now, euen now (ſaith he) it is time to riſe.

That we may the better diſcerne the light, let vs behold the darkneſſe of that time, which was before. The whole world was diuided into the people of the Iewes, and the heathens: and beſides theſe, there were no other people. The Heathens were forſaken of God: the Iewes were his choſen people. The Heathens worſhipped the works of their own hands, and gaue the glory of God vnto creatures, which are not God. They went after Idols, euen as they were led: they had many gods, according to the number of their Citties: they deliuered vp their bodies to all maner filthineſſe: God gaue them ouer to follow their luſts. The Fathers amongſt them ſlew their own children, and offered them vp in Sacrifice to Diuels. So ſtrongly did the Prince of darkneſſe poſſeſſe them, they had not the Arke of the Teſtimony, they liued without Prophets, or couenant, or Chriſt, or God: they liued without hope, or light, or comfort. In ſuch a night, and ſuch a darkneſſe lay the heathen.

The Iewes, Gods choſen people, they were alſo bereft of knowledge: there was no Prophet left among them, nor any to teach them the will of the Lord. The law did periſh from the Prieſt, and Counſel from the ancient: light was turned into darkeneſſe, and iudgement into wormewood: they were bitter and grieuous to the poore: they ſlew the Prophets which were ſent vnto them, they did forſake the fountaine of liuing waters, & followed Baal and Aſtaroth. Like people, like prieſt: from the ſole of the foot, vnto the head there was nothing whole in them. Of them God ſpake by the Prophet: I haue no pleaſure in you, neither wil I accept an offering at your hand. Of them he ſaid: When you ſhal ſtretch out your hands, I will hide mine eies from you: and though you make many praiers, I wil not heare you. In ſuch a darkneſſe lay the Iewes, in ſuch a darkneſſe lay the Gentiles. All had ſinned, they were all corrupt and abominable in their waies, they were the Children of wrath, and the veſſels of deſtruction. So were they wrapt in the cloud of ignorance, & couered in the ſhadow of death. Such was the night S. Paul ſpake of, ſo vgly, ſo darke, ſo void of comfort. Eſay. 1. 6. Malach. 1. Eſay. 1.

But God gaue forth his light to ſhine vpon them, he ſent the Patriarchs & Prophets, and holy Fathers, he ſent vnto them Moſes and Aaron, and Angels from heauen, to giue out ſparkes of this light. He made it appeare by his Prophet Eſay: Behold, the Virgin ſhal conceiue, and beare a Sonne, & ſhe ſhall call his name Emmanuel. In him ſhall all Iſrael be ſaued, he is the light to lighten the Gentiles: his name ſhall be called, Wonderful, Counſellor, the mighty God, the euerlaſting Father, the Prince of peace: in him ſhal all the ends of the world be bleſſed. This light they beheld, when it was not cleerly opened vnto them, they did ſee it comming, and reioyced in it; they were vnder a ſchoolemaſter, and had not the perfect knowledge of this light. Eſay. 7.

But now God hath ſcattered al theſe Clouds, and we behold as in a mirror the glory of the Lord with open face. Our elder Fathers in the old Teſtament had only a dim candle to guide their feet, we haue the bright Sun beames: They had only the grẽ blade of the Corne, we haue the plentiful increaſe, euen as in the time of harueſt: they had the ſhadow, we haue the light: they had only a drop to refreſh themſelues, we haue the whole ſtreame of Gods mercy powred out vpon vs.

Now hath God remembred his holy couenant, and the oth which he ſware to our Father Abraham: now the Word was made fleſh, and dwelt with vs. The day ſtar is ſprung vp in our hearts, the Spirit of God hath filled the whole world: the earth is ful of his glory. The Idols of the Heathen are faine, and are put to ſilence: their greateſt miſeries appeare to be follies, and are laught to ſcorne, the children make games of them in their ſtreets. Sathan the Prince of this world, which is the accuſer of our brethren, is now caſt forth.

Now is it knowne, that ſaluation, and power, and glory belongeth to our God. He hath raiſed his Chriſt, and hath eſtabliſhed his kingdome, the kings and nations of the world ſhal walke in his light, and his light ſhall not be put out, and his kingdome ſhall haue no end. Now is that new Hieruſalem, the glorious City of our God reuealed from on high: now hath God made the Heauens new, and a new earth, and hath fixed his Tabernacle and dwelling place among men. The fulneſſe of time is come, the ſound of the Apoſtles is gone thorow all the earth: the Sunne of righteouſneſſe hath appeared: he is the light and comfort of the whole world. This is the gracious yeare of mercy, this is the day which the Lord hath made. Now is the mercy of the Lord ſhewed more & more towards vs, vs, and his truth endureth for euer. When Balaam the falſe Prophet beheld the glory of Numb. 24. this time, he brake out and ſaid; Who ſhall liue when God doeth this? Who ſhall liue, and ſee, and enioy theſe things?

Awake therefore, or ariſe from ſléepe, the time ſo requireth: For now is our Saluation neerer then when we beleeued it. Of thoſe few words haue growne diuers ſenſes, all good and godly: yet in my iudgement, the ſimpleſt and plaineſt ſenſe is this: When wee were heathen, and ſat in darkeneſſe, we thought we did wel, and that we ſhould be ſaued in that way, in which we walked: and that there was no hope of ſaluation, but only in that: and we had a great liking in our doings. This is the vanity and miſery of man: often times where he thinketh himſelfe moſt ſure, he is déepely deceiued.

The Turkes and the Iewes at this day, and others the enemies of the croſſe of Chriſt, thinke there is no other true religion but theirs: and in that they are wonderful zealous, and ſtand in it vnto death: no perſwaſion nor force can remoue them. When the people of Epheſus heard of the preaching of Paul, they raiſed vproare, and filled the Citie full of Acts 19. tumult: they caught Gaius and Ariſtarchus men of Macedonia, and Paules companions in his iourny, and would haue ſlaine them: they made an outcry, ſaying; Great is Diana of the Epheſians; ſhe is a goddeſſe, ſhe hath made heauen and earth, we haue put our truſt in her, we will call vpon her, and ſhe wil heare vs. Chriſt ſheweth his Diſciples, The bro-
Mat. 10. ther ſhall betray the brother to death, and the father the ſonne, and the children ſhall riſe againſt their parents, and ſhall cauſe them to die, and ye ſhall be hated of all men for my
1. King. 18. name. For zeale to their god, the Prieſts of Baal cut themſelues with kniues and lancets. Through zeale, many fathers ſlew their owne children, and burnt them quicke in fire, in the honour of the Idol Moloch. Circumcelliones, which were a ſort of Heretikes ſprung out of the Donatiſts about 420. yéeres after Chriſt, through zeale murthered one another, they threw themſelues downe from high Rockes and deſtroied themſelues, and thought that the only way to pleaſe God: ſo hot and feruent was their deuotion. The children of light haue ſeldome ſuffered more, or more willingly, or with more affiance, then the children of darkeneſſe: ſo ſtriued they for God, but againſt God: and abuſed his name againſt himſelfe, and wittingly and willingly went downe to hell. They haue great zeale and earneſt deſire of the glory of God, but not according to knowledge. They contented themſelues with that they had receiued of their fathers, and would ſéeke no further, they thought they did ſerue God, but they blaſphemed the name of the Sonne of God. In ſuch ſort did God ſuffer them to walke in the blindneſſe of their heart. In the lat-
Mat. 7. ter day many ſhal ſay vnto Chriſt; Lord, Lord, haue we not by thy Name prophecied, and by thy Name caſt out Diuels, and by thy Name done many great workes? We haue praied and giuen Almes for thy ſake: was it not done of zeale and deuotion towards thée? So wel ſhal they be perſwaded of their doings, they ſhal preſſe boldly to the throne of Gods Maieſty, and require their méed.

But Chriſt ſhal anſwer them, I neuer knew you: you ſerued your fancy, you ſerued not me: your almes, and miracles, and your praiers ſhall condemne you. Therfore Chriſt Iohn 4. ſaid to the Woman of Samaria: Ye worſhip that which you know not. You are led with a zeale, and follow your Fathers, but are deceiued. Euen ſo, he praied his Father for them that crucified him, and ſtod by, and reuiled him; O Father, thou art full of mercy, forgiue them; they are moued of zeale, and thinke they pleaſe thée, they know not what they doe, they know not thée, nor mée thy Sonne whom thou haſt ſent. Saint Hierome ſaith: No-
Hieron. contra Luciferianos. mine vnitatis & fidei infidelitas ſcripta eſt: Infidelity hath beene written vnder the name of faith and vnity. For herein they thought themſelues good, and holy, and Catholike, if they departed not from the vnity of the world. Therefore they followed the generall conſent of others, they thought themſelues (ſaith he) the true Church, and ſéemed to follow vnity, though indéed they fel to infidelity. Whatſoeuer is not of faith, in ſinne: whatſoeuer it be,
Rom. 14. be it neuer ſo holy, neuer ſo glorious, it is ſin, it diſpleaſeth God: the end therof is deſtruction. Therefore Chriſt ſaith: I am the light of the world: hee that followeth me, ſhall not Iohn 8. walke in darkeneſſe, but ſhal haue the light of life. So ſpake almighty God to his people: Take heed that you do as the Lord your God hath commanded you: turne not aſide to the Deut. 5. right hand, nor to the left. Thou ſhalt not doe the thing that ſéemeth right in thine owne eies: Thou ſhalt not follow the zeale of thine owne heart. Thinke that thou maiſt bée deceiued: diſpoſe thy ſelfe to harken to the voice of the Lord: whatſoeuer he ſhal command thée, that onely ſhalt thou doe. For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your waies my waies, ſaith the Lord. For as the heauens are higher then the earth, Eſay 55. ſo are my waies higher then your waies, and my thoughts aboue your thoughts. The will of the Lord is the onely meaſure whereby al truth muſt bée tried. Hereunto the Prophet Dauid humbleth himſelfe, and ſpeaketh vnto God in this manner: Lighten mine eies, O Lord, O teach me to doe thy will, teach me to follow it, and to practiſe it. Heereof S. Paul ſpeaketh; Vnderſtand what the will of the Lord is. Leaue the pretence of zeale, leaue the deuotion of your owne heart, reſt not vpon the wil of your forefathers, nor of fleſh and blood. Learne to feele and taſte the wil of God, it is good, and gratious, and mercifull: thereby direct your ſteps, therein ſhal you finde the poſſeſſion of life. Epheſ. 5.

We were drowned in darkneſſe (ſaith the Apoſtle) yet thought we had the light. I my ſelfe (ſaith he) was a blaſphemer, and did perſecute the Church of God. I followed the way of my Fathers, I had a great zeale, and thought I did wel, but the way wherein I walked, was ſlippery, the light was darkneſſe. I delighted in vanity, and had pleaſure in leaſings. I was blind, yet perceiued it not, and therefore was my blindneſſe and miſerie ſo much the more.

But now is our ſaluation come nere vnto vs: our bodies are made the Temples of God, and his ſpirit dwelleth within vs. We haue the word of life put both in our mouth, and in our heart: the kingdome of God is in the middes amongſt vs. The Sonne of God calleth vnto vs: Come vnto me all ye that trauell and be heauily laden, and I will refreſh you. S. Iohn ſaith: We haue looked vpon, and our hands haue handled the Word of life. And againe: The Word was made fleſh, and dwelt among vs, and we ſaw the glory thereof as the glory of the only begotten ſonne of the Father, ful of grace and truth. So nere is the Lord to them that ſeke him: ſo nere vnto vs is our ſaluation. 1. Iohn 1. Iohn 1.

When Dauid heard the voice of the Lord, he awaked and roſe vp, he gaue thanks vnto God, and powred out his heart before him, ſaying: O Lord our Lord, how wonderfull is thy name in all the world! And againe: Praiſe the Lord, O my ſoule, and all that is within me praiſe his holy name. When the Apoſtles heard this voice of the Lord, they were awaked, they forſoke all they had, they toke vp their Croſſe, and went euer al the world preaching the Goſpel of ſaluation. When Paul heard the voice of Chriſt from heauen aboue, he fel flat on the earth, and being aſtoniſhed, ſaid; Lord, what wilt thou that I doe? I am thy ſeruant, and the ſonne of thy handmaid: make me to do that thou commandeſt me to doe.

Then could neither life, nor death, nor Angels, nor Principalities, nor Powers, nor things preſent, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other Creature ſeparate Paul from the loue of God which is in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord: then he eſteemed not to know any thing, ſauing Ieſus Chriſt, and him crucified. He brake his ſléepe, roſe vp, and went forward. In like maner the Prophet Eſay ſtirreth vp Hieruſalem: Ariſe; be bright; for the light is come, and the glory of the Lord is riſen vpon thee. Know thy time, and the day of thy viſitation, awake thou that ſléepeſt, and ſtand vp from the dead, for the Sonne of God hath ſhined ouer thée. Eſay. 60.

The Apoſtle therefore ſaith; It is now time that we ſhould ariſe from ſleepe. We are the children of God, we are the children of the truth, we are the ſonnes of the Prophets, we are they whom God hath choſen out of the world. Whoſoeuer putteth his hand to the plow, and loketh backe, is vnmeet for the kingdome of heauen. Theſe things are ſent for our vnderſtanding: God hath giuen his word vnto vs. We haue ſéene the workes of God, the dumbe to ſpeake, the deafe to heare, the blinde to ſée, the lame to goe, the dead to riſe and come out of their graues: the Sunne to be darkned, the earth to quake, rockes to rent, and the Diuel to confeſſe the Sonne of God: for he was forced to ſay, Thou art Chriſt the Sonne of God. Now doth the kingdome of heauen ſuffer violence. The night is paſſed, the day is at hand; we haue ſlumbered enough in ignorance, it is now time we know the bleſſings which God hath beſtowed vpon vs: it is time we ſhould be thankful, and awake out of the ſléepe of forgetfulneſſe, that we humble our ſelues vnder the mighty hand of God, and dreame no more of our owne ſtrength: our conſcience is charged; we cannot plead ignorance: it is time that we riſe: the mercy of God, the abundance of his bleſſing, the feare of his iudgment, the regard of our ſaluation ſo requireth.

Let vs caſt away the workes of darkneſſe: they be vnfruitful, lothſome and horrible. They darken the heart, and blind the conſcience: he that doth them ſhal be caſt into vtter darkneſſe. Let vs be afraid, let vs be aſhamed hereof, ſuch things are not fit for the children of light.

Let vs put on the armour of light. God hath choſen vs to be his Souldiers, and hath called vs forth into the field. Our fight is not againſt fleſh and blood, but againſt the Diuel, the Prince of this world, and the Father of darkneſſe: he rampeth like a Lion, and lieth in wait, and ſéeketh whom he may deuoure. All the vanities of this life, our bodies, our own hearts conſpire againſt vs: the fight is terrible, the danger is great. Let vs not be vnprouided, let vs not ſtand open to the ſtroke of the enemy. Let vs take vnto vs the whole armour of God, let our loines be girded with verity, let vs put on the ſhield of faith the breſtplate of righteouſneſſe, the ſworde of the ſpirit, and the helmet of ſaluation. Theſe be the weapons of righteouſneſſe, theſe be the armor of light. Let vs not feare to declare the truth, though thereby we ſhould danger our life. Let vs be faithfull vnto the end; let it appeare that the weapons of our warfare are not carnall, but mighty through God to caſt downe holds, and imaginations, and euery high thing that is exalted againſt God: ſo ſhall our armor be complete, ſo ſhall we ſhew glorious in the field, and be terrible to the enemie: ſo ſhall we ſtand ſtrong and boldly againſt ſworde, and fire, and death: ſo ſhall we like faithfull ſouldiers of our captaine Chriſt, manfully ſtand againſt the gates of hell, and reſiſt al the aſſaults, and quench all the fiery dartes of the wicked: then ſhall we eat of the fruit in the middeſt of Paradiſe, and ſhall receiue the Crowne of euerlaſting glory.

the,

Let vs walke honeſtly, as in the day, not in gluttony and drunkenneſſe, neither in chambering and wantonneſſe, nor in ſtrife and enuying. He ſetteth downe three things, as three botches and carbuncles of the ſoule: they oppreſſe the body, defile the minde, and breake the bond and vnity of the Church of God.

The firſt is gluttony and drunkenneſſe, the roote and mother of all euill: nothing ſtandeth ſafe, where wine preuaileth. This was the iniquity of Sodome, abundance and fulneſſe of bread: they abuſed the gifts of God, to the diſhonor of God. This was the cauſe of all her filthineſſe: and her filthineſſe was the cauſe of her deſtruction. Hereof God ſpeaketh: My choſen people, my darling is waxed fat: Therefore he forſooke God that made him, and regarded not the ſtrong God of his ſaluation. And againe, by the Prophet Eſay: The harpe, and viole, timbrell and pipe, are in their feaſts; but they regard not the worke of the Lord, neither conſider the worke of his hands. And in the one and twentith chapter: Behold ioy and gladneſſe, ſlaying oxen, and killing ſheepe, eating fleſh, and drinking wine, eating and drinking: for two morrow we ſhall die. So through gluttony and drunkenneſſe they deſpiſed the threatnings of God, and entred not into the way of repentance, but continued in their ſinnes, and made ſcorne of the Prophets of God. The people of Iſrael ſate them downe to eat and drinke, and roſe vp to play. They forgat God, and the mettles he had ſhewed vpon them, and worſhipped a golden calfe: So groſſe and ſo deadly are the clouds of drunkenneſſe. Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, towards the latter day the people ſhal eat and drinke, and be void of care, as in the daies of Noah, and deſtruction ſhal ſuddenly fal vpon them: therefore Chriſt ſaith; Wo be to you that are full, for you ſhall hunger.

Luke. 6.

Many haue bene ſlaine in the field, but many more haue taken their deadly wound by ſurfetting: many haue bene drowned in the ſea, but many more haue periſhed by the ſtrength of wine. It is not ſet downe, that the rich glutton was an oppreſſor, an extortioner, an vſurer, or that he came vniuſtly by his goods, but that he abuſed the ſame, that he fared deliciouſly, and became vnthankfull: and therefore was puniſhed in hel fire. When he which before had abundance, and did ſwimme in wine, had not one drop to quench his thirſt. Many make their belly their God. They haue more comfort in the taſte of ſweet ſare, then in the conſideration of the workes of God. Their table is turned into a ſnare, their glory is to their ſhame. Here wil I ſpeake nothing of forcing and quaffing; God kepe it far from Chriſtian tables. it is to to wild and barbarous: the heathens hate it, nature abhorreth it, the horſe and mule would not vſe it. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Ebrius non peccatum facit, ſed ipſe totus eſt peccatum: A drunken man doth not commit ſinne, but he is altogether ſinne. And therefore his reward is death. S. Paul ſaith: Drunkards ſhall not inherit the kingdome of God. They ſhall drinke the cup of the wine of the Lords wrath. Therefore Chriſt ſaith: Take heed to your ſelues, leſt at any time your hearts be oppreſſed with ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe, and the cares of this life: and leſt that day come on you at vnwares. Therefore ſaith the Apoſtle, Let vs not walke in eating and gluttony: it will drowne our ſenſes, it will oppreſſe our nature.

1. Cor. 6.

Luke. 21.

The kingdome of God is neither meat nor drinke: our meat is to doe the will of our Father. Let vs not abuſe the creatures of God: Let vs eat and drinke, that we may liue, only to the ſuſtenance of our bodies: that we by the moderate and ſober vſe of thoſe things, may be the better able to follow and pleaſe God in our vocation. The meat for the belly, and the belly for the meats: but God ſhal deſtroy both it and them. Let vs thinke of the Cup which Chriſt had on the Croſſe: his Cup was eiſel and tempered with gal: at his hand let vs take the Cup of thankſgiuing, and cal vpon the name of the Lord. Let vs whether we eate or drinke, remember who it is that hath beſtowed his gifts vpon vs, and whatſoeuer we do, let vs do it to the glory of God.

Another botch and carbuncle, is chambering and wantonneſſe. Of this alſo the Apoſtle warneth vs: for adulterers and fornicators God ſhal iudge; they ſhall haue their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death: the Lord is the auenger of all ſuch. It is the wil of God, that our bodies be kept in holineſſe, they are the Temples of God, he hath called vs to be veſſels of honour, that we ſhould be holy in body and holy in ſpirit, that we ſerue him in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all the daies of our life.

Temples

The laſt, is ſtrife and enuying. We are one body in Chriſt Ieſus, we are indued with one ſpirit, we are members one of another. The Goſpel of Chriſt is the Goſpel of peace, he hath broken the ſtop of the partition wall, he hath ſet al things at peace. He hath taught vs: Learne of me, for I am humble and meeke. Let vs not (ſaith S. Paul) be deſirous of vain glory, prouoking one another, enuying one another. Let not one of you ſay, I am Pauls, and another, I am Apolloes; the body of Chriſt is one, it is not diuided. If you bite and deuoure one another, take heed leſt you conſume one another. If there be enuying, and ſtrife, and diſſenſions among you, you are yet carnall, you ſauour not of the ſpirit of God. You are but a little flocke, the world hateth you, ioyne together, loue one another, beare you one anothers burden, and ſo fulfil the Law of Chriſt. The fruit of the ſpirit is loue, ioy, peace, long ſuffering, gentleneſſe, goodneſſe, faith, meekeneſſe, and temperancy. Loue ſuffereth long, it is bountiful: loue enuieth not: loue doth not boaſt it ſelfe: it is not puffed vp: it diſdaines not: it ſeeketh not her owne things: it is not prouoked to anger: it thinketh not euil: it reioyceth not in iniquity, but reioyceth in the truth; it ſuffereth al things: it beleeueth al things, it hopeth al things: it endureth al things: loue is the bond of perfection. The ſeruant of Chriſt is not quarrellous: let vs keepe the vnity of the ſpirit in the bond of peace. Let not diſſenſion or malice trouble our hearts; let vs walke after this maner, and ſo, let vs glorifie God in our mortal bodies. Let vs auoid theſe things, gluttony, drunkennelle, chambering and wantonneſſe, ſtrife and enuying. They be the vnfruitful workes of darkneſſe: the way of them leadeth vnto damnation.

Gal. 5.

But put you on the Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

If we behold our ſelues, and conſider our owne nakednelle, we ſhal find, that by nature we are nothing elſe but the children of wrath. Who can cal that cleane, that is conceiued of vncleane ſeed? Dauid ſaith: Behold, I am conceiued in ſinne: my ſinnes haue gone ouer my head: there is no health in my fleſh. None that liueth ſhal be iuſtified in thy ſight. Who can vnderſtand his faults? Cleanſe me from my ſecret faults. Iob ſaith: Verebar omnia opera mea: I ſtood in feare of all my workes, knowing that thou wilt not iudge me innocent. Againe: The Starres are vncleane in his ſight: How much more man a worme, euen the ſon of man, which is but a worme? In like ſort ſaith Eſay: We haue al bin as an vnclean thing, & all our righteouſneſſe is as filthy clouts. Our vertue, our holineſſe, our faſting, our prayers are filthy, when they come to his ſight. We cannot ſay, our heart is cleane. We cannot ſay, we haue not ſinned. God hath ſhut vp al in vnbeleefe, that he may haue mercy vpon al. That is borne of the fleſh, is fleſh. The ſpirit fighteth againſt the fleſh, and the fleſh againſt the ſpirit. Open ſhame belongeth to vs, and to our fathers. Curſed is he that abideth not in al things that are written in the Booke of the Law. And whoſoeuer offendeth in one, is made guilty of al the Commandements. When the miſerable and wretched ſoule boaſteth it ſelfe, ſaying: I am rich, and increaſed with goods and haue need of nothing, the ſpirit of God maketh anſwer: Thou art wretched, and miſerable, and poore, and blinde, and naked. Thou haſt nothing to put vpon thee, to couer thy ſhame. I counſel thee to buy of me, gold tried by the fire, that thou maiſt be made rich: and white raiment, that thou maiſt be clothed, and that thy filthy nakednelle doe not appeare: and anoint thine eies with eie ſalue, that thou maiſt ſee. The ſame ſpirit in the Apoſtle, giueth this counſel, that we put on vs Ieſus Chriſt. Let him couer vs with his body, and with his blood, as with a garment: his blood hath cleanſed vs from al our ſinnes. He is the Lambe of God that taketh away the ſinnes of the world. He is become vnto vs, wiſedome, and righteouſneſſe, and ſanctification and redemption. S. Hierome ſaith: Si merita noſtra conſideremus, deſperandum eſt: If we weigh our owne deſerulngs, if we appeare in our owne apparel, we muſt deſpaire. And Baſil ſaith: Qui non fidit recte factis, nec ſperat ex operibus iuſtificari, ſolam habet ſpem ſalutis miſericordias Domini: He that truſteth not to good deeds, nor hopeth to be iuſtified by his workes, hath no other hope of ſaluation but by the mercies of the Lord.

Let vs therefore put on vs Ieſus Chriſt. Let vs couer vs vnder his apparel as Iacob couered himſelf vnder the coat of his Brother Eſau, and ſo let vs preſent our ſelues before our heauenly father. The phraſe of putting on is vſual: whereby he meaneth, we muſt be wholly clad, and poſſeſſed with Chriſt. In like phraſe it is ſaid in the twelfth of the Reuelation: There appeared a great wonder in heauen, a woman clothed with the Sun. And in the 104. Pſalme: My ſoule praiſe thou the Lord. O my God thou art exceeding great, thou art clothed with glory and honour. And; Which couereth himſelfe with light, as with a garment. And to the Coloſſ. Coloſſ. 3.

tradit: Behold he giueth vs Chriſt to be put on as a garment, which is a haineus thing to be ſpoken. It paſſeth al ſenſe of nature, it paſſeth the iudgement of fleſh and blod.

Here remember, theſe wordes may not be taken, as if Chriſt were a material and earthly coat, made of cloth to couer our bodies: they are ſpiritual wordes, and haue a ſpiritual vnderſtanding. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Omnia tibi factus eſt Chriſtus, menſa, veſtimentum, domus caput, & radix: Chriſt is become al things for thee, thy table, thy garment, thy houſe, thy head, and thy root. Origen ſaith: Verbum Dei & caro dicitur, & panis, & lac, & holera: The word of God is called fleſh, and bread, and milke, and herbs. Nazianzen alſo ſaith: Quemadmodum Dominus Ieſus appellatur vita, via panis, vitis, lux vera, & mille alia: ita etiam appellatur gladius: After the ſame maner as our Lord Ieſus Chriſt is called the life, the way, the bread, the vine, the true light, and a thouſand things elſe: ſo is he alſo called the ſword.

Ad populum Antiochenum, hom. 11.
Orig. in Exodum, ca. 15. hom. 7.
Nazianz. in Pſal. 44.

He is ſpiritually a table, a garment, a houſe, a root, a head, fleſh, milke, herbes, the way, the light, a ſword, bread or drinke: we dwell in him ſpiritually, we are clothed with him ſpiritually. We grow out of him, and walke vpon him, and are made one with him, euen members of his body, ſpiritually. We doe ſpiritually eat him and drinke him, we liue by him ſpiritually, we eat him by hearing, and digeſt him by faith. Origen ſaith: Appellatur panis vita, vt habeat guſtus animæ quod deguſtet: He is called the bread of life, that the ſoule may haue whereon to feed.

Hom. 2. in Cantica.

O brethen, O that we had ſenſes to feele this food, that we could sauour of the bread of life, and taſte and ſee how ſweet the Lord is! he that thus taſteth of this bread ſhall liue for euer.

Chryſoſtome ſaith: Dentes inſerimus in carnes Chriſti: Wee thruſt our teeth into the fleſh of Chriſt. And Cyprian: Intra ipſa vulnera redemptoris noſtri linguam figimus: We faſten our tongue within the wounds of our redeemer. Theſe be vehement and ſpirituall kind of ſpeeches, to raiſe vp our ſenſes, and to teach vs to feele the vnſpeakeable ſweetneſſe of this heauenly feeding.

Chryſoſt. in encæniis.
Cypr. de cœna Domini.

Likewiſe ſaid Bernard: Deſidero totum Chriſtum videre & tangere: & non id ſolum, ſed accedere vſq; ad ſanctum vulnus lateris eius, oſtium arcæ quod factum eſt in latere, vt intrem totus vſq; ad cor Ieſu: I deſire to behold whole Chriſt, and to touch him: and not ſo only, but alſo to come to the holy wound of his ſide, which is the doore that was made in the ſide of the Arke, that I may enter wholly, and goe in, euen vnto the heart of Ieſus. Thus are we taught to lift vp our hearts, and to ſeeke thoſe things which are aboue, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God. Why ſhould we then follow the fleſhly errour of the Capernaits? why ſhould we be ſo inſenſible in heauenly things? Let vs haue ſome feeling hereof in our heart. Salomon ſaith: The wiſe mans eies are in his head, but the foole walketh in darkeneſſe. Our Sauiour therefore ſaith: The words that I ſpeake vnto you, are ſpirit & life. To eat the body of Chriſt, and drinke his blod, is not the part of the body: it is rather a worke of our mind. And therefore S. Ambroſe ſaith: Non corporali tactu Chriſtum, ſed fide tangimus: We touch not Chriſt by bodily touching, but we touch him by faith. And again, Stephanus in terris poſitus, Chriſtum tangit in cœlo: Stephen being in the earth, toucheth Chriſt being in heauen. By faith therefore we eat Chriſt, and by faith we drink Chriſt: by faith we are apparelled and clothed with Chriſt. And this is that the Apoſtle ſaith: Put ye on the Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Let vs be incorporate in him. Let God ſee nothing in vs but the image of his ſonne, ſo ſhall he dwell in vs, and we in him.

Serm. 58.
Rom. 13.

Take no thought for the fleſh, to fulfill the luſts thereof.

The ſonnes of God reſt vpō the prouidence of God their father. He giueth them water out of the rockes: he raineth downe bread from heauen: he openeth his hands, and filleth euery liuing thing with his bleſſing. The Prophet ſaith: The Lord is my ſhepheard, I ſhall not want. The things of this world ſhall haue an end, they fade away and will not continue. If riches abound, we muſt not ſet our heart vpon them, but rather be carefull for the life to come. We muſt ſeeke the kingdome of God, and the righteouſneſſe thereof: then all theſe things ſhall be miniſtred vnto vs.

Pſal. 23.

He doth not forbid honeſt and moderate forecaſt and prouiſion: as if it were not lawful for Chriſtians to deale in matters appertaining to the good eſtate of this life. For he hath ſaid vnto Timothy: If there be any that prouideth not for his own, and namely for them of his houſehold, he denieth the faith, and is worſe then an infidell. Againe he ſaith: No man euer yet hated his owne fleſh, but nouriſheth it, and cheriſheth it. Againe, writing to Timothy: Drinke no longer water, but vſe a little wine for thy ſtomakes ſake, and thine often infirmities. In which ſpeeches he ſheweth we are bound to nouriſh, and feed, and be carefull for our bodies.

1. Tim. 5.
Epheſ 5.
1. Tim. 5.

Though the converſation of the faithfull be in heauen, and they ſeeke after the things which which are on high, yet whiles they passe the pilgrimage of this life, they must nedes haue the fellowship and company of their naturall bodies: the which they must not so weaken, that thereby they shall become vnprofitable, and not able to doe seruice in the Church of God: and yet so keepe them vnder, that they may be made obedient to the spirit.

Only we may not be ouer carefull. To take great care for the body, is to cast away all care for the soule. For they that will be rich, fall into temptation and snares, and into many foolish and noisome lusts, which drowne men in perdition and destruction: for the desire of mony is the root of all euill, which whiles some lusted after, they erred from the faith, & pierced themselues with many sorrowes. Of this care speaketh our Sauiour: It is easier for a Camel to go thorow the eie of a needle, then for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. 1. Tim. 6. Matth. 19.

No care can satisfie the vncontented minde. The righteous eateth, and is satisfied: but the belly of the wicked euer wanteth. He hath enlarged his desire as hell, and ladeth himselfe with thick clay, he encreaseth that which is not his, and cannot be satisfied. The horse leach hath two daughters, which cry, Giue, giue. There be three things that will not be satisfied; Yea, foure that say not, It is enough. They care not by what means they make their gaines, they liue in vsury, a most filthy trade, a trade which God detesteth, a trad which is the very ouerthrow of all Christian loue. They eat vp the people as they eat bread. Such are the waies of euery one, that is greedy of gaine. He would take away the life of the owners thereof. They haue hardned their heart against God, they doe not serue God, but Mammon. Prou. 13. Prou. 30. Prou. 1.

But their gaine shall be to their losse, and their mony to their destruction. He that giueth his mony vnto Vsury, shall not dwell in the Tabernacle of the Lord, nor rest vpon his holy mountaine.

We haue here no continuing City, we are strangers as were al our fathers before vs. If we gather riches to our selues, and be not rich in God, he shall say vnto vs: O fole, this night will they fetch away thy soule from thee: Then whose shal those things be which thou hast prouided? Let him therefore that hath this worlds goods, bee as if hee had them not. They are the gifts of God. The Lord giueth them, and the Lord taketh them away. Settle not your hearts vpon them. As they come, so will they fade away: they be vncertain, they will deceiue you. Set your desire vpon heauenly things, seeke after the life which is to come in the land of the liuing, when we shall see those vnspeakeable ioies, we shall perceiue, that all the pleasures of this life, in comparison of them were nothing.

Now somewhat more specially to apply the words of the Apostle to this present time. It is now time also, that we should arise from sleeps. God hath deliuered vs also from the night. We may say, This is the day which the Lord hath made: Let vs reioice and be glad in it, we may say, he hath shewed his mercies towards vs, and the truth of the Lord endureth for euer.

Let vs looke backe to the time late past, and behold the night of error and ignorance. What shall I say? Where should I begin, or how may I end? The matter is of great compasse: the time I haue to speake is but short: and I haue no delight to speake of darknesse. After God had deliuered the people of Israel, and giuen them passage thorow the red sea, Marie the Prophetesse, sister of Aaron, looked backe into Egypt. There she remembred Pharao, & his cruelty, how he plagued the children of God: she remembred how by a mighty hand and outstretched arme, he deliuered them, and wrought his wonders vpon Pharao, and all the land of Egypt. She looked backe vpon the great darkenesse, and vpon the frogs, and flies, and botches: she beheld the waters turned into blood, the killing of the first borne of man and beast, the ouerthrow of Pharao and all his Chariots in the midst of the Sea. And therefore she answered the men: Sing ye vnto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously: The horse and his rider hath he ouerthrowne in the sea. Exod. 15.

Euen so, let vs cast backe our eies, and make a view of the Church. Loth I am to speake of it: yet it is needfull to say somewhat thereof, that we may reioice in our deliuerance. All things were done in a strange tongue: the priest spake, and the people heard they know not what. No man could say Amen to their praiers. The matters were such, that he might bee reckoned happy which heard them not. They abused the Church of God with vain fables. If you doubt hereof read their Legends and festiuals. They know this, they acknowledge it. It might well be spoken of them which Hilary said: Sanctiores sunt aures populi quam corda Sacerdotum: The eares of the people are more holy then the hearts of the Priests. Hilar. con. Auxentium.

I beseech you, marke the forme & fashion of their praiers. To the blessed virgin they say: Aue Maria, salus & consolatrix viuorum & mortuorum: Haile Mary, the sauior and comforter both of quicke and dead. And againe: O gloriosa virgo Maria, libera nos ab omni malo, & a pœnis inferni: O glorious virgin Mary, deliuer vs from al euil, & from the paines of hel. Again, Monstra te esse matrem: shew that thou art a mother. They call her, Regina Cœli, domina mundi, vnica spes miserorum: Queene of heauen, Lady of the world, the only hope of them that be in misery. It were tedious, and vnpleasant to recite the like their blasphemies. How did these men account of the crosse and passion of Christ? What leaue they to be wrought by the price of his blod? To speak nothing of the multitude of their intercessors and patrons, of their false miracles, of their deceiueable merits and works of supererogation: how foule a kind of Idolatry was it, to worship the image with the selfe same honor, wherewith they worship the thing it selfe, that is represented by the Image! As if the thing it selfe be worshipped with godly honor, then must the Image thereof be worshiped with godly honor.

The holy Scriptures, which are the light to direct our waies, and the power of God to saue our soules, were hid vnder a bushell. Whosoeuer built himselfe and his faith vpon them, was adiudged an heretike. Mariage was forbidden, and fornication suffered. They did not only deuour widows houses, but drew to themselues the fat of the land, by pretence of their long prayers. I spare your chaste and godly eares: otherwise, I were able to rehearse many their foule abuses, and workes of darkenesse.

Yet will I shew you one of their nightbirds, lately hatched in the nest of all superstition. It is the Agnus dei: here it is. It was lately consecrate by the holy Father and sent from Rome. They teach that by the vertue of their consecration, (or rather coniuration) and blessing, these little things haue power to defend the faithfull from lightening and tempest.

O mercifull God! what hath the Pope to do with the lightning: what can a pece of wax preuaile to the staying of a tempest? The Lord of heauen and earth, it is he that sendeth forth lightnings, and raiseth vp tempests. Fire and haile, snow and vapors, stormy wind, execute his word. God will send forth his lightning and consume them. Behold (saith Ieremy) the tempest of the Lord goeth foorth in his wrath, and a violent whirle wind shall fall downe vpon the head of the wicked.

Psalm. 148.

Ierem. 25.

O, what a shepheard is he, that now in this light of the day, thus mocketh and deceiueth the lambs and sheepe of Christ! Is this to worship Christ in spirit and truth? Is this the hope we haue in Christ? Is this the profession of the Gospel? Is this the will of God, to commit our liues to so vile a cake? Howbeit, there is no cause why any man should maruel hereat. For, ignorance which is the mother of error, by their own confession, is become the mother of deuotion: and these be the fruits, and children of blindnesse and ignorance. I will speake nothing of that man from whence this geare commeth. Would God he were the man he would seeme to be. But if the light it selfe be darkenesse, how great then is the darknesse? Yet they say of him, his voice must be receiued as the voice of Peter; and the word of God himselfe must take authority and credit of him. Thus hath he come betweene, like a Cloud, and eclipsed the sunne of Gods glorious Gospell.

If we behold either their Schools or their Churches, their Quier, their Pulpit, their Prayers, their Sacraments, their Clergy, their People, their Doctrine, or their Life; we may truly say as the Prophet said: Surely our fathers haue inherited lies, and vanity, wherein was no profit. We may truely say, The Law hath perished from the Priest, and counsell from the wise, and the word from the Prophet: the blind did lead the blind, they haue turned siluer into drosse, and fed the people with chaffe, in stead of wholesome and good meats. Blessed be the name of God, who hath giuen vs eies to espie their dealings, and hath reuealed vnto vs his word, to guide our feet into the way of peace.

Ierem. 16.

I know these things are defended boldly and obstinatly: no maruell. For the Apostle saith: They haue not all obeied the Gospell. There haue bene, that haue called the light darkenesse, and the darknesse light. If our Gospell be hid (saith he) it is hid in them that perish, in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds.

Rom. 10.
2. Cor. 4.

I will not here make answer to any particular, albeit occasion be offered, and happily it be loked for. Contention and quarrels haue no end: All doctrine shall be brought to triall, the day of the Lord shall reueale errors, and giue witnesse for the truth. God will turne all to his glory. Whatsoeuer stir is raised vp against the truth, it is but a smoke, it will soone fade and come to nothing.

There are this day many, to all appearance, godly men, of good life, of righteous dealing, of great zeale and conscience: but yet haue not eies to see these things. I protest in their behalfe, as did Paul, they haue a great zeale of Gods glory; would God it were according to knowledge. We may say with the Prophet: O Lord, thy iudgements are like a great deepe. Who hath knowne the mind of the Lord? or, who is of his counsell? God knoweth his time. He hath the key of Dauid, he openeth and no man shutteth: he is the Father of lights. We are in his hand, both we and all our counsels: God grant we may put off al fleshly affections, and put on Iesus Christ, and that all the earth may see his glory.

Psalm. 36.

Now on the other side, let vs consider how mercifully God hath dealt with vs. He hath restored vnto vs the light of his Gospel, and hath taught vs the secrets of his heauenly wil. We heare him talke with vs familiarly in the scriptures, as a father talketh with his child.

Thereby

Thereby he kindleth our faith, and ſtrengtheneth our hope: thereby our hearts receiue ioy and comfort. We haue the holy miniſtration of the Sacraments: we know the couenant of Baptiſme: we know the couenant and myſtery of the Lords Supper. We fall down together, and confeſſe our life before God: we pray together, and vnderſtand what we pray. This was the order of the Primitiue Church: this was the order of the Apoſtles of Chriſt. If we compare this with the former, we ſhall ſone ſée the difference betwéen light and darkneſſe. The kingdome of God now ſuffereth violence. The ſound of the Goſpell hath gone ouer al the world, and the whole world is awaked therewith, and draweth to it. The ſunne is riſen, the day is open: God hath made his kingdome wonderfull among vs. It is now time, now is it time that we ſhould ariſe from ſléepe: for now is our ſaluation néere. Now it is in our mouth, we can ſpeake of it: God grant it may be néerer vs, euen in our hearts. The night is paſt, God grant it be paſt for euer: that we be neuer againe throwen into the darkneſſe of death, that the word of life, the truth of Chriſt, be neuer againe taken from vs. And it ſhal neuer be taken away, if we be thankfull. Vnkindneſſe can neuer ſcape vnplagued. Let vs wake, let vs wake, our ſléepe is deadly. Let vs pray God to awake vs: he is able to raiſe the dead. Our Sauiour ſaith, The houre ſhall come, when the dead ſhall heare the voice of the Sonne of God, and they that heare it, ſhall liue. Lazarus was dead, yet he heard the voice of Chriſt, and roſe vp againe, and came abroad. Iohn. 5.

Let vs put on Ieſus Chriſt, let it appeare vpon vs that we weare him, let vs not be aſhamed of his Goſpell, it is the power of God to ſaluation. If we be aſhamed of him and of his words, hee will be alſo aſhamed of vs, when he commeth in the glory of his father, with the holy Angels.

Let vs caſt away the workes of darkneſſe, and all doctrines of ſuperſtition and ignorance. Let vs behold the troubles and miſeries of other countries. Heauen and earth, our brethren, the care of our ſaluation, the Son of God himſelfe put vs in minde, that it is now time. Whiles we haue time, let vs do good: let vs ſéek God whiles he may be found. The Lord waiteth when he may ſhew his mercies: Let vs turne vnto him with an vpright heart. So ſhall he turne to vs: ſo ſhall we walk as the children of light; ſo ſhal we ſhine as the ſun in the kingdome of our father; ſo ſhall God be our God, & will abide with vs for euer.

And thou, O moſt mercifull Father, we beſéech thée for thy mercie ſake, continue thy grace and fauour towards vs: let the ſun of thy Goſpell neuer go downe out of our hearts, let thy truth abide, and be eſtabliſhed among vs for euer. Helpe our vnbeléefe, increaſe our faith, giue vs hearts to conſider the time of our viſitation: Apparell vs throughly with Chriſt, that he may liue in vs, and ſo thy name may be glorified in vs in the ſight of all the world. Amen.

1. CORINTH. 4.

VERS. 1. Let euery man eſteeme vs, euen for the Miniſters and Stewards of the ſecrets of God.

2. Now is there no more required of the Stewards, but that they be found faithfull.

DEarely beloued in our Lord and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, the people of the City of Corinth, to whom S. Paul wrote this Epiſtle or letter, were at great ſtrife, contention, and variance among themſelues, as touching the Preachers of Chriſts Goſpell, and Miniſters dwelling among them. For, whereas God had ſent them ſore of Preachers, as Peter, Paul, Apollo, Cephas, and ſuch other, which were notable in the miniſtery of God; they of theſe great gifts and benefits of God, toke occaſion of ſtrife; toke (I ſay) occaſion of great contention and debate among themſelues. For whoſoeuer liked Peter beſt, would ſay, I holde of Peter; whoſoeuer thought Pauls doctrine better then Peters, would ſay, I ſtand of Pauls ſide; whoſoeuer againe thought that Apollo excelled the reſt, would ſay, I hold with Apollo. And thus of their owne fancies, they toke occaſion of ſtrife, and found fault with the preaching of Chriſts Goſpell. As for Peter, as for Paul, as for Apollo, they all preached one thing, they taught one doctrine, there was no ſtrife, no debate, no diſſenſion among them. Yet notwithſtanding, though the Scholemaſters agréed, the Diſciples & Scholars could not be at one: though they all preached one and the ſame Doctrine, yet could not the people fancie their Preachers alike. And therefore Paul concluded before, and ſaid: Let no man reioice in men; for all is yours, whether it be Paul, or Apollo, whether it be Cephas or the world, all is yours. And hereupon followed theſe words of his, that you heard read vnto you: As for vs (ſaith S. Paul) eſteeme vs as the Miniſters of Chriſt: whatſoeuer they be that preach vnto you the Goſpell of GOD, regard them as the Stewards of the ſecrets of God.

So it hapneth oftentimes, that either the people iudge too much of the preachers of Gods word, or elſe they iudge too little: Sometime they attribute vnto them too much honour, ſometime againe they giue them too little honor: Sometime they credit them too much, ſometime they beleeue them nothing at all. So are the people alwaies inconſtant, Acts.14. ſo are they moued on either ſide. When Paul and Barnabas at Lyſtra began to preach, by and by the whole multitude of the people thought them to be gods and no men; forthwith they erected Altars, they brought their Sacrifices, their Oxen, their Calues, their Sheep, minding to haue ſacrificed vnto them, and Paul they called Mercurius; Barnabas, Iupiter. This was too great an honor. And therefore when Paul and Barnabas Acts.10. vnderſtood the ſame, they rent their clothes, tore their own garments, ran in among the people, cried out and ſaid: Yee men and brethren, why do ye this? So likewiſe Peter being appointed by God to goe to Cornelius the Captaine, ſo ſone as he came in vnto him, by and by Cornelius met him, fell downe at his feet, and worſhipped him; he thought him a God and no man. And thus, as yee ſee, ſomtimes the people offended too much on that hand, and gaue more honor and reuerence vnto Gods Miniſters then God himſelfe required, or they loked for: Somtimes againe on the other hand, they gaue them no reuerence, they attributed no honor vnto them, they did ſet too little by the Preachers of Gods word: and this was a fault on the other ſide.

When Chriſt in our nature began firſt to preach, and ſet abroad his Fathers will, and the glad tidings of the goſpell, the people forthwith found fault with him; Yee is,
Iohn.6. ſaid they, but a Carpenters Son, we know his Father, we know his Mother; hee was neuer ſet to Schoole, how can this man haue learning? Afterward, when the Diſciples and Apoſtles of Chriſt preached and taught the people, and began to ſpeake with ſtrange Acts.2. tongues, in ſo much that euery man maruelled to heare his owne ſpeech and language, both Medes, Perſians, and they of Meſopotamia; yet ſaid the people, Theſe men are full of new wine. And this was too little honour. Therefore if the Preacher be too much honoured, then is GOD diſhonoured: if he be deſpiſed and nothing ſet by, then is Chriſt himſelfe deſpiſed and not regarded. They that ſaid Chriſt was a Carpenters ſonne, a man vnlearned, and ſuch a one as neuer went to Schoole: they that ſaid the Apoſtles of Chriſt were full of new Wine, ſpake not this of any priuate malice or hatred that they bare either vnto Chriſt, or his Apoſtles, but only to bring Gods word to ſhame, only to bring Chriſtes holy goſpell out of credit with the people: this was their intent and purpoſe, and nothing elſe. Therefore Saint Paul in this place sheweth the Corinthians how they ſhould eſteem the Teachers of GOD holy word, how they ſhould thinke and iudge of them. For the people ſometime eſteeme moſt a politike man, ſuch a man as by his great wit is able to conclude Peace and Leagues betweene Princes; they regard him that is of ſtoute courage and learned in the Lawes; they ſet moſt by him that is eloquent and able to perſwade; yea and they regard him not that is not excellently learned, and ſeene in all Sciences: but here S. Paul sheweth them, that they ſhould not eſteeme the Preachers of Gods goſpell as men politike, as men of great wit, as men of ſtout courage, and learned in the Law, as men eloquent, and excellentlie well ſeene in Sciences: but as the Miniſters of Chriſt, and Stewards of the ſecrets of GOD.

Thus ſhould the Miniſters of Chriſt be eſteemed, and thus ought the Teachers of Gods word, shew themſelues as Miniſters of Chriſt, and diſpenſers of Gods ſecrets.
2.Cor.4. And therefore Saint Paul in another place ſaith: We come not to preach our ſelues, but all our preaching, all our teaching, all our Doctrine, is, that you know Jeſus Chriſt;
Iohn.7. as for our ſelues, we are but your ſeruants. So Chriſt himſelfe: Qui de ſe loquitur gloriam propriam quærit: He that ſpeaketh of himſelfe, ſeeketh his owne glory, ſaith Chriſt.
1.Cor.3. So Paul likewiſe: Quid Petrus, quid Paulus, quid Apollo, niſi Miniſtri? What is Peter? what is Paul? what is Apollo? Thinke you them any other then the ſeruants and Miniſters of God? Paul hath planted, Apollo watered, but God hath giuen the increaſe. The increaſe came not from Peter, not from Paul, not from Apollo, but from God alone. Apollo, Paul, and Peter, are nothing elſe but the Miniſters and ſeruants of God; God is he that giueth the increaſe; God alone is he that giueth the increaſe. When the great City of Hieruſalem vnderſtood of Iohn the Baptiſt, and began to reſort vnto him, they aſked him,

What

What art thou? He anſwered them: Ego vox clamantis in deſerto, Parate viam Domini: I am, ſaid he, a man not worthy to bee eſteemed, I am but a meſſenger ſent vnto you: I am nothing elſe but a voice to crie, Prepare you the way of the Lord. So Moſes and Aaron that had the conducting of the people of God, when the whole Campe was in a tumult and vproare, and the people ranne in rage againſt them, like to haue ſlaine them, they ſtretched out their hands and ſaid: Non contra nos ſed contra Dominum; nam nos qui ſumus? This ſtirre, this hurly burly, this tumult, that you make, is not, ſaid they, againſt vs, but againſt God; for alas, what are we? We are but Gods ſeruants, Gods meſſengers: appointed to leade and guide you. Thus therefore ought euery man eſteeme the Preachers of Gods Goſpell, as meſſengers, as ſeruants, as Miniſters of Chriſt; thus ought euery man thinke, and iudge of them. I Iohn 1. Exod. 16.

But what kind of ſeruant is this Preacher, what maner of Miniſter is hee? Saint Paul ſaith: Hee is the Steward and Diſpoſer of Gods ſecrets: hee ſetteth forth and ſheweth abroad the myſteries of his holy Goſpell. And theſe myſteries that S. Paul heere meaneth, (to conclud in one word) are none other then the Articles of our Faith: That Chriſt is the Sonne of God, conceiued by the Holy Ghoſt, borne of the Virgin Marie; that he was crucified, dead, buried, deſcended into Hell, roſe againe, and ſitteth at the right hand of his Father; that by his blood, our ſinnes were waſhed away; that our bodies ſhall at the laſt day ariſe, and wee poſſeſſe eternall life. Theſe bee the ſecrets, theſe be the myſteries, that the Miniſters of Chriſt, the ſeruants and Stewards of God doe vtter and declare to Gods people: no wiſdome of man is able to compaſſe this, no learning of this World able of it ſelfe to expound theſe hidden ſecrets. For, ſaith Saint Paul: Animalis homo non percipit ea quæ ſunt ex Deo: The naturall man perceiueth nothing of the ſpirit of God: He vnderſtandeth not ſuch things as are of God. It is foolihneſſe vnto him, and he cannot perceiue it, for it muſt bee ſpiritually diſcerned. Chriſt himſelfe alſo: Non ex hominibus, neque ex voluntate carnis, ſed ex voluntate Dei: they which are Gods Children, and able to vnderſtand his myſteries, are ſuch which are not borne of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God. When Chriſt had aſked of Peter, what he thought of him, and Peter had ſaid: Tues Chriſtus, filius Dei viui: Thou art Chriſt the Sonne of the liuing God: He anſwered: O happy art thou Simon the ſonne of Ionas, for fleſh and blood hath not opened that vnto thee, but my Father that is in Heauen. Theſe myſteries therefore are onely opened by the ſpirit of God, by Gods onely working, not by any wiſdome of man, not by any cunning and great learning of this World. 1. Cor. 2. Iohn 1. Matth. 16.

Now therefore, ſaith Saint Paul, thinke thus of vs, iudge vs to be the Miniſters and Seruants of God, and marke well whether we reueale vnto you Gods myſteries, and his holy Goſpell; Conſider with your ſelues, and ſee whether we open vnto you Gods hidden ſecrets: By this ſhall you know, whether we be the ſeruants and diſpenſers of Gods myſteries.

But like as in S. Pauls time there was diſſenſion, ſtrife, and great debate, euen amongſt the Chriſtians, and ſuch as profeſſed the name of God: So likewiſe in our daies, (good Brethren) euen in the time that we our ſelues haue ſeene, there hath beene diſcord and parts-taking among vs. Some haue ſaid, I will beleeue the old learning: ſome againe haue ſaid, I will beleeue the new: ſome haue ſaid, I will credit this man: ſome I will beleeue that man. And thus the Father hath fallen out with the ſonne, the mother with the daughter, the brother with his brother, and one neighbour with an other; each man defending that part, which hee himſelfe beſt liked. But alas, (good brethren) this is no new thing, this hath beene from the beginning, and euen in Chriſts time. For at what time Chriſt himſelfe walked heere on this earth, and began to preach the glory of his Father, ſome ſaid he was a good man, ſome other ſaid, no; ſome ſaid he was a Prophet, ſome other ſaid he was none, but one that deceiued the people; ſome reioiced that it pleaſed God to ſend ſuch a Preacher as Chriſt was, ſome againe deſpiſed his doctrine, and ſaid, Hee had a Diuell. Theſe words the people then ſpake of Chriſt; theſe words, I ſay, they ſpake of Chriſt himſelfe. He was called a Samaritane, a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and ſinners, a ſeducer of the people. Therefore, it is the leſſe maruell if ſuch words be now at theſe daies ſpoken, as were ſpoken in the beginning of the Church; if ſuch words bee ſpoken againſt vs, as were ſpoken againſt Chriſt himſelfe. But Saint Paul hath heere giuen vs a rule, whereby to know the true ſeruants of Chriſt, and Stewards of Gods ſecrets. Iohn 7. Luke 7. Iohn 7. Luke 7.

Chriſt was the true Prophet, and why ſo? Becauſe hee preached his fathers will. What euer I haue heard of my Father, ſaith Chriſt, the ſame haue I declared vnto you. Saint Paul was the true ſeruant of Chriſt, and Steward of his ſecrets, and why ſo? becauſe Iohn 15.

he laboured in Gods vineyard, he preached, he taught, more then all the rest of the Apostles of Christ did: Laborani plus quàm cæteri omnes: I haue laboured more then all the rest of the Apostles haue done. Therefore was hée the true and faithfull minister of Gods mysteries, because he thus diligently alwaies taught Gods Gospell and the glory of his name: for this cause, I say, and none other, was he the Steward and dispenser of Gods secrets. So were the Patriarchs, and the Prophets, the true seruants of God, because they declared the will of God. And here haue we to consider, that Christ, which was the true Prophet; the Apostles, which were the true Ministers and Stewards of Christ; the Patriarchs & Prophets, which were the true and faithfull seruants of God, were al grieuously afflicted, persecuted from place vnto place, and lastly put to most cruell death. This, I say, hapned to Christ himselfe, and all his Apostles, S. Iohn the Euangelist only excepted. And yet was Christ, Gods own sons, the Apostles were the true Ministers and Stewards of Gods secrets. And therefore if we shall in our time sée the Preachers of Gods word afflicted, the Teachers of the Gospell of Christ persecuted, the Stewards of Gods secrets miserably tormented, yet let not vs (good Brethren) let not vs giue ouer and shrinke from Gods Gospell, let vs consider that this is no new thing, no strange hap, but such as happened to the Patriarches, to the Prophets, to the Apostles, yea and to Christ himselfe.

1. Cor. 15.

Now then, let vs take this rule of S. Pauls, and thereby let vs trie whether the Preachers in times past, the Popes, the Cardinals, the Bishops, were the true seruants of God, Stewards and dispensers of his holy secrets. There are at this day some that be called Bishops, some that be called Cardinals, and they say that they carry vp the Church of Christ, and are the props and pillars of the same: and therefore in token thereof they haue alwaies pillars borne before them. At this day the Bishop of Rome calleth himselfe a generall Bishop, an vniuersall Bishop, not ouer this part, or that part, but ouer all Christendom; yea, and he saith, he is the head of Christs Church: he saith that he hath power ouer Kings, ouer Princes, he hath power ouer Purgatory, ouer Soules departed, ouer Diuels, ouer Angels: he can pardon not only sinnes already done, but such also as shall be at any time hereafter committed: and that he cannot mistake the Scriptures of God, that he cannot erre, and be deceiued: what euer he doth, all is well done: no man can iudge him and sit vpon his doings. I speake not this of malice, I speake it not for any grudge or hatred I owe to his person, God is my witnesse; I neither know him that now is, nor any of them that haue hæretofore time bæne Bishops of Rome. But all these their doings are written, all these words which I haue heere spoken, are written, I say, euen in their owne Lawes and decrées; the places may be alleged and brought forth. Alas, these are glorious Titles, to be called vniuersall Bishop, and head of Christs Church, to haue dominion ouer Kings and Princes, to haue power ouer Purgatory, ouer Soules departed, ouer Diuels, ouer Angels, to haue authority to pardon sinnes past, and sins hereafter to be committed, not to erre, not to be deceiued: all these are glorious and triumphant Titles, as you well sée. But let vs now take Pauls rule, the rule, I say, that S. Paul hath here giuen vs, and let vs by the same trie, whether the Bishops, the Cardinals, the Popes, haue heretofore time, or at this time, doe dispense vnto vs the mysteries of the Gospell, as Stewards of the secrets of God: whether they doe preach and teach the Gospell of Christ, as the seruants and Ministers of Christ. Alas, we sée they doe nothing lesse, they doe, wee sée, nothing lesse then set forth the Gospell of God, and the glory of his holy name. How then can they call themselues Pastores, when they fæd not Gods shæpe? how can they call themselues watchmen, when they haue no regard to Gods flocke? how can they call themselues pillars of the Church, yea, and the head of the Church, when they shew themselues rather destroiers of the Church of Christ, and not members of the same? Alas, if they be not Gods seruants, whose seruants are they? if they bee not Dispensers and Stewards of Gods secrets, of whose secrets are they Stewards? if they be not so much as members, how are they then the pillars and head of Christs Church?

Saint Paul goeth further, and saith, It is not sufficient to be called Seruants, to be called Ministers, to be called Stewards of Gods secrets, but it is further required at the Stewards hand, that he be found faithfull. In this world the Master committeth the order of his house to the gouernance of his Steward; the disposing of his whole liuing, and order of all other things, he committeth only to his stewards wisdome: and he loketh that he bæ found faithfull in all his doings. And if this be in worldly things, if the Master heere in this world will loke for, and require faithfull dealings at his Stewards hands, in such things as are but transitory, and of little value: how much more then will God require faithfulnesse in his Stewards, as touching things Eternall, things heauenly, and the disposing of his secrets? But from the beginning, euen from the first beginning of the world, worlde, there haue bene alwaies vntrusty and wicked Stewards. For, at what time God framed man, and placed him in Paradise in great ioy and pleasure, The Diuell enuying this his felicity, became a wicked Steward, and said vnto Adam; Tush, Ye shall not die; eat of this fruit, ye shall not die; God doth but mocke with you: For he doth know, that in what euer houre ye eat of it, your eies shall be opened, and ye shal be as God, knowing both good and euill. Gen. 3. And thus he became a most wicked Steward. Ieremy also the Prophet saith, that in his time there were wicked and vntrusty Stewards: Currunt, saith he, at ego non misi; loquuntur, at ego non sum loquutus illis: They runne, saith God, but I sent them not; they haue spoken, but I speake not vnto them. Ier. 23. So Christ himselfe said, that in the latter daies there should come false Stewards, false Prophets, false Preachers, and say; Hic est Christus, illic est Christus: Lo, here is Christ, there is Christ; and should doe great wonders and tokens, in so much, that if it were possible, the very chosen should bee brought into errour also. Math. 24. Antichrist in like wise shall come saith Paul: The man of sinne, the sonne of perdition, he shall exalt himselfe aboue all that is called God, he shal sit in the holy place, in the Temple of God, in the conscience of men: and when he commeth he shal not say, I am Antichrist, I am a false Prophet, I am a wicked Steward; but he shall rather say, I am a true Prophet, I am a faithfull Steward. I am Christ the sonne of God, yea I am God himselfe. 2. Thess. 2. Now therefore how will you know the true seruant from the false Minister; how will you try the faithfull Steward from the vnfaithfull? Mary, saith S. Paul, if he doth his masters will and commandement, if he doth all those things faithfully that his master requireth at his hands; if he this doth, then is he a faithfull Minister and a trusty Steward. By this shall you know him, by this token, and none other shall you sone discerne, whether he be a faithful Steward, this is the point of a trusty seruant. And therefore God vnto Ezechiel his Prophet, and so by him to all such as shall become his Stewards and Preachers of his gospell, saith: I haue appointed thee a Watchman ouer my house of Israel, to crie vnto my people; therefore take good heed to the words of my mouth, and giue them warning at my commandement: thou shalt heare it at my mouth, saith God, and then shalt thou pronounce it vnto my people. Ezech. 3. So Paul was bold to say: Quod accepi à Domino, tradidi vobis; That which I deliuered vnto you, receiued I of the Lord: what thing soeuer I receiued of the Lord, that haue I deliuered & shewed vnto you, without adding any thing thereto, or diminishing any thing therefro. 1. Cor. 11. Euen so, Christ himselfe said: Sermo quem audisti is non est meus, sed patris mei qui misit me: The doctrine which you heare is not mine, but his that hath sent me: These words that you haue heard, are not mine, but my fathers that sent me: I doe but my Fathers message, saith Christ; all that I teach, all that I preach vnto you, is nothing else but the wil of my Father. Ioh. 7. By this therefore (my Brethren) shal you sone try whether they are true seruants of God: for if they shal only disclose vnto you the wil of God, if they shall preach vnto you the secrets of Gods gospel, & the glory of his holy name, then are they true seruants, then are they Christs ministers, & faithful dispensers of Gods secrets. But if they teach you not the sincerity of Gods gospell, if they preach not vnto you the mysteries of Gods word, if they disclose not vnto you the wil of God; if they doe not this, then are they not Gods seruants, then are they not Christs Ministers, nor Stewards of Gods secrets. Ioh. 7. And therefore saith S. Iohn in his Epistle: If any man come vnto you, and bring not this doctrine, receiue him not into your house, neither salute him: if any man, saith he, come vnto you, & teach you any other gospell, then this that I haue preached, let him not enter into your house, doe not so much as bid him, God speed. 2. Iohn 1. So Esay the Prophet: If they speake not according to this word, they shall haue no morning light. Esay 8.

Now as touching the variance and diuersity of opinions now a daies, as touching the dissension & controuersie that is at this time among vs, I would to God that al such as defend and maintaine the Popes authority & power, would be content to be iuged by this rule, to be tried by this only rule that S. Paul here giueth. These are the most and the greatest controuersies, whereupon hath risen all the contention & variance that we haue seen; whether we should haue a Communion, or a Priuate Masse: whether the Communion should be ministred vnder both kindes or not: whether we ought to haue our Praiers in our vulgar tongue: whether we should haue and set vp in our Churches any grauen Images: and whether we may lawfully haue the Scriptures in our common tongue, that euery man may read and vnderstand them. These are, I say, the controuersies whereon hangeth all our debate. But now let vs see and consider, whether such as taught you to haue a priuate Masse: such as would haue the Communion ministred vnder one kind alone: such as taught you to worship Images: such as would you to pray in an vnknown tongue: such as would not suffer you to haue the knowledge of Gods word and his gospell: let vs, I say, according vnto S. Pauls rule, see whether they were the true Ministers of Chriſt, and faithfull ſtewards of the ſecrets of God, let vs weigh whether they diſcloſed vnto you the myſteries of Gods word, and whether their doctrine agreed with the goſpell of Chriſt.

Luke 22. Chriſt at his laſt Supper ordained a Communion for the comfort of all our ſoules; but they turned this into a Priuate Maſſe, that one ſhould receiue alone. This was contrary to Chriſt, contrary to that he ordained. And how then ſhould we eſtæme them, as the Miniſters of Chriſt, and Stewards of the ſecrets of God? Chriſt miniſtred the Communion to his Diſciples in both the kindes: yet they notwithſtanding miniſtred it vnder one kinde alone, they robbed the people, and toke the cup from them. And this was contrary to Chriſt, and his inſtitution. And how then ſhould we eſtæme them as the Miniſters of Chriſt, and Stewards of the ſecrets of God? God gaue vs in commandement to make no grauen Image: they taught, that we ſhould make our ſelues grauen Images, that we ſhould knéele, that we ſhould bow, that we ſhould crépe vnto them, and that we ſhould offer and ſticke vp candles before them.

This they taught to be neceſſary doctrine, and that our ſaluation depended thereupon. This haue they done, you all right well know, and this contrary to the expreſſe commandement of God. And how then ſhould we eſtæme them as the Miniſters of Chriſt and Stewards of the ſecrets of God? S. Paul willeth our praiers in the congregation to bee
1. Cor. 14. ſuch, to be read and ſung in ſo plaine a tongue, in ſo diſtinct and knowne a language, that the common people may vnderſtand them, and ſo all together may anſwer the Miniſter, and ſay, Amen. And this was vſed in the Patriarchs, in the Prophets, in the Apoſtles, in the old Doctours times, in the Primitiue Church: and yet there haue béene men, and now are, that would haue the Praiers in Latine, in a tongue to vs ſtrange and vnknown, and in a tongue that few or none vnderſtand. And how then can they ſay they are the
Num. 15. Miniſters of Chriſt, and Stewards of Gods ſecrets? God in the old Law gaue in charge
Deut. 11. to his people, that they ſhould haue his Law alwaies before their eies, that they ſhould haue his commandements written in their hands, on their ſleeues, on their doore threſholds, in the skirts of their garments. This God himſelfe commanded. And Chriſt in Iohn 5. the new Law: Scrutamini Scripturas, ſaith he; illæ enim teſtimonium perhibent de me: Search ye the Scriptures; for they do beare witneſſe of me. And yet this notwithſtanding, notwithſtanding Chriſt cõmanded vs to ſearch the Scriptures; yet you your ſelues haue knowne men, and ſuch as were Preachers, forbid you to haue Gods Goſpell in your hands, would not ſuffer you to haue the holy Teſtament of Chriſt in your houſes, no nor in the Churches for all men to read. This was contrary to Gods commandement, and the mind of our Sauior Ieſus Chriſt. And how then can they ſay they are the Miniſters of Iohn 21. Chriſt, and Stewards of Gods ſecrets? Chriſt ſaid vnto Peter: Amas me? paſce oues meas, paſce agnos meos, paſce gregem meũ: Peter (ſaid Chriſt) loueſt thou me? feed my ſheepe, feed my lambes, feed my flocke: But our great Clerkes, our Popes, our Cardinals, our Biſhops, would ſeldome or neuer make a ſermon; they fed not Gods ſhéepe, they fed not Gods lambs, they had no regard to Gods flocke: and how then could they ſay, they were the Miniſters of Chriſt, and Stewards of Gods ſecrets? I leaue out much of purpoſe, good brethren, I wittingly ouerpaſſe héere many things elſe, that I could ſay hérein: the time would faile me if I ſhould rehearſe vnto you all thoſe things wherein they haue moſt ſhamefully abuſed themſelues. But iudge you, my brethren, by theſe things onely which I haue héere ſhewed vnto you, whether they ſhould be eſtæmed as the Miniſters of Chriſt and Stewards of the ſecrets of God. Chriſt willed them not onely to be Stewards, but faithfull Stewards, faithfull Miniſters, faithfull diſpenſers of his ſecrets. If to doe nothing be the faithfulneſſe that God requireth in them, if this be the charge that Chriſt demandeth of them, then may we well cal them the ſeruants of God and Miniſtery of Chriſt: otherwiſe how can we ſay, that they are the Stewards of Gods ſecrets, and faithfull diſpenſers of his hidden myſteries?

Saint Paul goeth forth and ſaith: It is but a ſmall thing that I ſhould be iudged of you. Saint Paul notwithſtanding he was an elect veſſel of God, to beare abroad the glory of his name, notwithſtanding he was the greateſt of the Apoſtles, and a faithfull diſpenſer of Gods ſecrets; yet ſome men ſaid that he was vnlearned, ſome ſaid he was no Miniſter of Chriſts, ſome ſaid that there were many other Preachers better then he. And this was ſpoken of him euen by the Chriſtians, and ſuch as profeſſed Gods name. And thus a great number of the people iudged that S. Paul was not the ſeruant of God, was not the Miniſter of Chriſt, was not a Steward of Gods ſecrets. But S. Paul appealed from them, he appealed from their iudgements, and ſaid: It is but a ſmal matter for me to bee iudged of you, or of mans day &c. Héere may we ſée what a bold courage, what a ſtout ſtomacke was in S. Paul, when he durſt thus openly, and, as it were, to their faces, appeale from the peoples iudgement, and ſo bring them before the dreadfull maieſty of the eternall God. This was a great courage of his, this was a ſigne that he little or nothing feared the force of the people. But this he did, becauſe he well knew, that what euer befel him in this world, what euer punishment he ſuffered in this life, he could not miſcary before God, he could not doe other then well in the life to come. And therefore likewiſe in another place he boldly ſaid vnto the people: I am pure from the blood of all men; I haue kept backe nothing that was profitable, I haue hid nothing from you, but haue ſhewed you all the counſell of God. And ſo, where at this day ſome men there are, which ſay that this doctrine which is now preached vnto you, ſhall againe haue a change; that this religion ſhall be taken away and once againe altered, that it cannot long ſtand and continue: to ſuch we boldely anſwer heere as S. Paul to the Corinthians did; That it is but a ſmall matter for vs to be iudged of you, that we much force not what you iudge and deeme of vs. For we haue kept nothing backe from you, we haue diſcloſed vnto you all the counſel of God. But if ſuch change doth happen, if any alteration of our religion doth chance, as poſſible enough it is ſo to come to paſſe, yet is it not (good brethren) a thing to be reioiced at, it is not a thing whereat we ſhould triumph and be glad.

For oftentimes when God ſeth his benefits miſuſed, when he perceiueth his Goſpell little regarded, when he eſpieth his holy word neglected and nothing ſet by: then he pulleth from vs againe his benefits earſt beſtowed, then he taketh his word from out of the congregation, then he will not ſuffer the light of his holy goſpell any longer to ſhine vpon them. And this when he doth, he doth it only for our ſinfulneſſe, only for our own ſinnes and wretchedneſſe. For ſo in times paſt he ſaid by Oſe his Prophet: For the wickedneſſe of my people I will get me away, they ſhall not ſee me. So Chriſt himſelfe alſo ſaid: Auferetur à vobis regnum Dei: The kingdome of God ſhall be taken from you, and giuen to the heathen, which ſhall bring forth the fruits of it. Matth. 21. But alas, when Gods kingdom is taken away, in whoſe kingdome and dominion do the people then liue? when Gods Goſpell and his word is no longer preached, what learning, what doctrin, what diſcipline is there left to be taught? And this often times commeth to paſſe by meanes of our owne ſinne and wickedneſſe: that for the miſuſing of God and his goſpell, we neither haue Gods kingdome, nor his goſpell among vs. But then, alas, in what great miſery, in what wretchednеſſe, in what wofull caſe ſhall we ſtand! For if Gods kingdome be ſhut from vs, whither ſhall we flie? If the light of his goſpell be taken from vs, what light ſhall be left vs? If God will get him away from vs, who ſhall be our ſuccour? And therefore no man ought to reioice hereat, no man ought to be glad of ſuch a change. But though Gods kingdome be taken away from vs, though Gods goſpell be no more preached vnto vs, though God flie from vs, and will hide himſelfe away, yet is God and his goſpell nothing thereby altered; God is ſtill one, and the ſame God, his goſpell is the ſame goſpell that it was before, his kingdome continueth in one ſtay and eſtate, it is not changed nor altered. For, ſaith Chriſt: Cœlum & terra tranſibunt, verbum autem meum non tranſibit: Heauen and Earth ſhall periſh, but my word ſhall not periſh. Matth. 5. And againe: Portæ inferorum non præualebunt aduerſum illud: The gates of hell ſhall not preuaile againſt it. Matth. 16. And therefore S. Paul hauing one his ſide this word of God, which neuer changeth, but alwaies continueth one and the ſame: hauing, I ſay, this words of his, which ſhal neuer periſh, and againſt which the very gates of hel ſhal not prenaile, he was bold to appeale from the ſlanderous iudgement of the people and ſay; I paſſe not what you thinke of me, It is but a ſmall matter for me to be iudged of you, or of mans day, &c.

Good people you haue heard declared vnto you, and thereby you may well perceiue, that S. Paul notwithſtanding he was the ſeruant of God, an elect veſſel of the holie Ghoſt, and the cheifeſt Apoſtle of Chriſt; yet was euil ſpoken of and miſliked euen of the Chriſtians, and ſuch as profeſſed the name of God: notwithſtanding he was indeed the true ſeruant of God, the Miniſter of Chriſt, and a faithfull diſpenſer of the ſecrets of God, yet could not all men ſpeake wel of him, all men could not giue him a good report. And therefore to cauſe them to conceiue a better opinion of him, and report of him none other then he deſerued, he heere willeth them, that they ſhould firſt weigh wel and conſider his doings, they ſhould examine his doctrine, and the Goſpel that he had preached amongſt them: they ſhould marke wel and ſee whether he had beene a faithfull diſpenſer of the myſteries of Gods goſpell, and then ſo eſteeme him, as the Miniſter of Chriſt, and Steward of the ſecrets of God. And therefore, Iudge you nothing (ſaith he) before the time that the Lord come, which ſhall bring that to light which is hid in darkneſſe, and open the counſels of the hearts, and then ſhall euery one haue praiſe of God. And ſo in theſe daies, as Paul in his time was miſliked of many, ſo I ſay in theſe our daies the Miniſters of God, and Preachers of his goſpell, are euill ſpoken of amongſt all men: ſome ſay they are vn-learned, they know nothing, they are crafts men, they were neuer ſet to ſchoole. This they haue ſaid, and doe yet report of them. Some men ſay, they preach they cannot tell what, they ſpeake againſt praier, againſt faſting, againſt almes dæds, and all other good workes; they allow nothing that good is, they diſallow in maner al things. This you know hath bẽn ſpoken, and yet is reported of ſuch as now are miniſters in Gods Goſpel. But hereunto haue I none other thing to ſay, then that which S. Paul in this place writeth to the Corinthians: It is ſufficient for vs to be found the ſeruants of God, the miniſters of Chriſt, and faithfull diſpenſers of Gods ſecrets. In the meane ſeaſon do not you (good brethren) thinke euil of the preachers of Gods word, report not amiſſe of the miniſters of Chriſt, account not them your enemies, that bring vnto you the glad tidings of the Goſpel. When Paul came to Berea from Theſſalonica, and began there to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt, the people ran to their bookes, ſearched the Scriptures, conferred his doctrine with the word of God: and when they found that in al points it agréd therewith, then they beléeued Paul, then they embraced his doctrine, then with willing hearts they clane to his diſcipline. And as they did, euen ſo let vs do, good brethren; let vs not iudge raſhly of Gods miniſters, let vs not ouer haſtily giue ſentence of them, let vs not report euil of Gods ſeruants: but let vs wel weigh and conſider what thing they teach vs: let vs examine and try their doctrine with the touch ſtone of Gods word: let vs conferre their preaching, their teaching, their diſcipline, with the Scriptures of the holy Ghoſt. And this when you haue done, then be you our Iudges; then if you ſée that we teach you nothing but the myſteries of God, if you perceiue that we only diſcloſe vnto you the wil of God, if you ſée that we preach vnto you none other thing then the ſecrets of Gods Goſpell, eſteeme vs to be the ſeruants of God, the miniſters of Chriſt, and Stewards of the ſecrets of God.

Acts. 17.

PSALME 67.

VERS. 3. Let the people praiſe thee, O God, let all the people praiſe thee:
4. O let the people reioice and be glad, that thou iudgeſt the folke righteouſly, and gouerneſt the Nations vpon the earth, &c.

AT what time the Iewes had grieuouſly offended God their Lord, forgotten their obedience towards him, and betaken themſelues to ſtrange gods, euery man wandring after his owne luſt and fancy; and thereupon God began to plague and puniſh them with ſundry and diuers plagues and with vnſeaſonable weather, ſo that their graſſe, their corne, their fruits, and what euer other commodities ſprang out of the earth, were all in great danger: then Dauid the Prophet, ſeing al theſe miſeries at once fal vpon the people, called them home againe, ſhewed them how they ſhould returne from their wickednes, and come vnto God. For God deſireth not our deſtruction, he is loth to worke reuengement vpon vs when we anger and diſpleaſe him: In what euer houre the ſinner ſhall returne from his ſinne, and come vnto me, ſaith the Lord; I ſhall be readie to receiue him. As for all his ſinnes that he did before, they ſhall not be thought vpon: but in his righteouſneſſe that he hath done he ſhall liue. In what euer time a man ſhal hold vp his hands, acknowledge Gods mercy, and be ſory for his offenſes from the bottome of his heart, God aſketh no more, he craueth no more at his hands, he is pleaſed only with his humble repentance. And therefore Dauid in the beginnig of this pſalme ſhewed the people how they ſhould in this wiſe come vnto God, and deſire mercy at his hands, ſaying: God be mercifull vnto vs, and bleſſe vs, and ſhew vs the light of his countenance, and bee mercifull vnto vs.

Eze. 18.

And now therefore, when Dauid perceiued that this grace of God, this mercy, this bleſſing of his was not giuen in vaine, was not fruſtrat and void, he cauſed all the people to ſay: Let the people praiſe thee O God, let all the people praiſe thee. This is a ſhort ſentence, but ſuch a ſentence it is, as ſhall endure and continue for euer. This is our profeſſion, this is our baptiſme, this is our religion: It is not ſufficient to know the Goſpell, to know God, to know Chriſt, but we muſt confeſſe the Goſpell, we muſt confeſſe God, we muſt confeſſe and acknowledge Chriſt. The Goſpell that Chriſt left vs, is not a ſong to delight our eares, it is not an harmony to content and pleaſe our hearing; but it is a ſquire to direct our lines by, it is a rule to frame all our doings by. S. Paul ſaith: To this end hath the grace of God, that bringeth ſaluation, appeared vnto vs, that we ſhould deny vngodlineſſe and worldly luſts: and that wee ſhould liue diſcreetly, righteouſly, and godly in this world. Therefore hath God giuen vs his goſpel, therefore hath hee giuen vs his word, that we ſhould according thereunto liue a ſober, a diſcréet, and modeſt life, ſaith he. And in another place: That we by the ſame Goſpel may ſerue and pleaſe him in newneſſe of life. And ſo Zachary that holy Father, being filled with the holy Ghoſt, ſaid: that wee Luke 1.

being deliuered out of the hands of our enemies, might ſerue him al the daies of our life, in ſuch holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, as is accepted before him. For like as our profeſſion is, ſo ſhould our liues be. If we profeſſe the name of Chriſt, wée ſhould liue like Chriſtians: if we profeſſe God, we ſhould liue as becommeth the ſeruants of God. Saint Iohn ſaith: For this purpoſe appeared the Sonne of God, to looſe the works of the Diuell: to this end, 1. Iohn 3.
that all ſinne and wickednes ſhould be left and forſaken. By this are the children of God knowne from the children of the Diuel. S. Paul in his Epiſtle to the Romans ſaith, before God they are not righteous which heare the Law, but they that doe the Law ſhall be iuſtified. God reckoneth no man iuſt for hearing of the Law, he accounteth no man righteous for knowing of his goſpel, but for the keeping of his Law, for the obſerning of his goſpel; though no man indeed be able thoroughly to fulfil and keepe the ſame. S. Iames alſo ſaith: See that yee be doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiuing your own ſelues. Iam. 1.
For if any heare the word and doe it not, he is like vnto a man that beholdeth his bodily face in a glaſſe: for as ſoone as he looketh on himſelfe, he goeth away and forgetteth immediately what his faſhion was. But whoſo looketh in the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein (if he be not a forgetfull hearer, but a doer of the worke) the ſame ſhal bee happy in his deed. If ye therefore heare the word of God preached vnto you, if you know the goſpel of Chriſt neuer ſo wel, if ye daily & hourely read and ſtudy the ſame: yet if you liue not according to the word of God, if you walke not after the goſpel of Chriſt, you do nothing elſe but deceiue your ſelues; you doe, I ſay, nought elſe but deceiue your owne ſelues. S. Iohn the Baptiſt when he preached and prepared the way of the Lord, he began with this leſſon; Pœnitentiam agite: Do you (ſaid he) the workes of repentance. For hereunto are we al called, not only to know Gods way, but alſo to walke in Gods way: not only to know God and his name, but alſo to confeſſe God and praiſe his holy name. Therefore doe we receiue Chriſts holy Sacraments, therefore are we baptiſed, therefore eat we the Sacrament of Chriſts body, and drinke his moſt holy blood. But O merciful God, how many are there that ſay they know Gods way, and yet walke not in that way! how many that ſay they know their faith and promiſe made in baptiſme, and yet forſake the ſame! how many that receiue the Sacrament of Chriſts body and blood, & yet continue in their old ſinne & wickednes! But God ſaith; God I ſay, that cannot lie, ſaith: Qui manet in peccato non nouit me: He that continueth in ſinne knoweth not mee. Ezechiel declaring 1. Iohn 2.

people: yea my people ſit downe before thee, and heare thy words, but they doe not thereafter: For in their mouthes they ſhew themſelues as though they were feruent, but their heart goeth after their owne couetous lucre. They haue my word in their mouthes, they ſpeake euer of my name, ſaith God, but their hearts are farre from mée. And ſo likewiſe Iude the Apoſtle of Chriſt: Veritatem Dei verterunt in luxum, ſaith he: They haue turned Iude 1.

glorifie not his name. Whoſoeuer he be that taketh vpon him to know Gods way, and walketh not in Gods way, whoſoeuer taketh vpon him to know God and his Goſpell, and directs not his doings according vnto Gods will and his holy commandements, hée doth not confeſſe God, and glorifie his holy name. Saint Paul found fault with the Iewes, and ſaid: For your ſake is the name of God euill ſpoken of among the Gentiles: for Rom. 2.
your ſake, for your euill and corrupt liuing, ſaid S. Paul.

God brethren, let vs conſider, that as many of vs as ſay, we know Gods way, wée know Gods word and his goſpell; if vertue follow not, if honeſt converſation and vpright liuing follow not this our profeſſion, wee ſhame God, and diſhonor his holy name. Dicunt ſe noſſe Deum, ſaith S. Paul, ſed factis negant: They ſay they know God, ſaith hée, Titus 1.
they ſay they know his holy word and goſpell, but in their deeds they deny God, they deny his Goſpell. An horrible thing it is to deny God. The Turkes, the Iewes, the Heathen, and Infidels, doe not deny God: and yet Saint Paul ſaid, that in his time Chriſtian men, ſuch as profeſſed the name of God, in their déeds denied God and his Goſpell. If thou ſay thou knoweſt God, if thou ſay thou knoweſt his Goſpell: if thou liue not as God commandeth thée, if thou liue not as it becommeth a profeſſor of Gods

Goſpel

Eſay 29. Goſpel, thou blaſphemeſt Gods name, and diſhonoreſt his Goſpell. Ore ſuo appropinquant ad me, ſaith God by his Prophet Eſay, corda autem illorum longe abſunt a me: This people draweth nigh vnto me with their mouthes, but their hearts are farre from me. They honor mee with their mouthes, but with their hearts they deny mee. And in another place
Pſal. 50. God by his Prophet Dauid ſaith: O thou man, why doſt thou preach my lawes, & takeſt my couenant in thy mouth? for with the ſinfull thou art ſinfull, with the theefe thou art a theefe, with the adulterer thou art an adulterer.

Therefore, if we haue the word of God as a ſong to delight our eares; if we turne the truth of Gods Goſpel into riot and wantonneſſe; if we confeſſe God with our lips, and deny him in our deeds; if we ſay we know Gods Law, we know his commandements, and yet liue not thereafter; we doe not praiſe God and confeſſe his name, but we ſhame God, and diſhonor his holy name: we cauſe the people to thinke euill of Gods word, and ſlander his goſpel. And this is the cauſe why the common ſort of people iudge, that not to be the goſpell, which is this day preached and taught vnto them; becauſe ſuch as profeſſe the goſpel, liue not after the goſpel; becauſe ſuch as ſay they know Gods way, walke not in Gods way. And thus through our own folly, through our owne euil and corrupt liuing, we offend our brethren, we offend our ſelues, and ſo in them offend Ieſus Chriſt: and their blod ſhalbe required at our hands. Let vs remember what God by the Prophet Eſai ſaith:
Eſay 30. Hæc eſt vera via, ambulate in ea: This is the true way, walke in the ſame. Chryſoſtome ſaith: If ye heare Gods word preached vnto you, and ye follow it not, ye learne, ſaith he, but your own damnatiõ, ye learn nought elſe but your own deſtruction: The words that you heare preached vnto you, ſhal accuſe and condemne you. God ſaith: Thou ſhalt not ſteale, thou Exod. 20. ſhalt not commit adultery, thou ſhalt beare no falſe witneſſe, &c. Theſe words, this Law of God written vnto vs, ſhal accuſe, yea and condemne vs, I ſay, if we to our powers follow not the ſame, if we walk not and continue in them accordingly. Alas, them very age of the World, the profeſſion that we haue taken vpon vs, is, or ſhould be, enough to put vs in remembrance of another life, of another world to come. Let vs not take the name of God in vain, let vs al praiſe and extol God, let our mouthes, our hands, our hearts, and all other our members praiſe and confeſſe his name for euer. Lætentur & exultent populi, &c. O let the people reioyce and be glad, that thou iudgeſt the folk righteouſly, & gouerneſt the nations vpon the earth. Thy way, O Lord, is known, ſaid Dauid, thy way is known vpõ the earth, therfore let al people, al nations, yea, al the whole world reioyce and be glad thereat.

Diuers people ſet their mindes on diuers things: ſome in conqueſt, ſome in great power and force of men, ſome in heapes of money and treaſures of this world, ſome others, that they are able to make other men feare, and they feare nothing themſelues. But al theſe things are vaine, both conqueſt, power, and heapes of great treaſure are tranſitory and fade away: but the man of God, that dreadeth God, and hath a delight in his Law, ſetteth his ioy and delight in thoſe things which haue no end, but continue for euer. And therefore Dauid here ſaith; Let all the people reioyce and be glad, in this thing alone, becauſe thou iudgeſt the folke righteouſly, and gouerneſt the nations vpon the earth.

Let vs conſider if there were a whole Chriſtian Nation brought in captiuity vnder the Turke, in thraldome & ſubiection vnto him, in ſuch ſort that they ſhould neuer heare the Scriptures, neuer receiue the Sacraments, neuer come to the Church to pray, but alwaies be where God ſhould be deſpiſed, & his name diſhonored: conſider, I ſay, with your ſelues, in what miſery, in what wretchedneſſe, in what great thraldome ſhould they be. With what conſcience ſhould they be able to abide this? But if it would then pleaſe God to deliuer them ſtanding in this ſtate, if it would pleaſe God to reſtore vnto them his Scriptures, if it would pleaſe God that they might receiue againe his holy Sacraments, and might come and pray together: if God would thus much do for them, O what ioy, what triumph, what mirth would they make! Let vs therefore here conſider the eſtate of Gods
1. Reg. 5. Church before the time of the Prophet Dauid, and as it was in his time. Before the reigne of Dauid, the Tabernacle of God was broken, the Arke loſt, the Scriptures taken from them, the Prieſts ſlaine: God made them no anſwer by Prophet, Angel, nor by dreame: euery man ran whither himſelf beſt liked, without any feare of God, or dread of his Law: ſo had Saul that wicked king miſerably toſſed and turmoiled the ſame. But it pleaſed God, by the hands of King Dauid his Prophet, to reſtore againe his Church ſo ouerthrowne, to her former eſtate and condition: it pleaſed God by him to make vp the Taber-

Reg. 6. nacle againe, to find out the Arke that before was loſt, to ſet vp al other things in good ſtay and order: and this was as much, as if he had called them from death vnto life, from bondage to freedome, from Hel to Heauen. Therefore when all theſe things were thus reſtored again by the might and power of God, this Prophet Dauid comforted his heart, &
Pſal. 118. ſaid: Hæc eſt dies quam fecit Dominus, lætemur & exultemus in ea: This is a ioyful day which the Lord hath made, let vs reioice and be glad therein. And so likewise in an other place; Dominus regnauit, moueatur terra: The Lord beareth the rule, the Lord is king, be the people neuer so vnpatient. Let the whole world conspire (saith he) let it be moued and doe what it can against God, for God ruleth and raigneth ouer all. Psal. 99.

Zachary when he sawe the comfortable time that should ensue the birth of Christ, he fell down and cried out, saying: Benedictus Dominus Deus Israel, quia visitauit & fecit redemptionem plebis suæ: Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people. Luke 1.

So Simeon that old and holy father, so sone as he beheld Christ, and had receiued his redeemer into his armes, by and by his heart brake out for ioy, and said; Nunc dimittis seruum tuum Domine, secundùm verbum tuum in pace, &c. Luke 2.
Now lettest thou thy seruant, O Lord, depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eies haue beholden thy saluation, mine eies haue seene thy Sauiour, whom thou hast prepared for al people.

Euen so in this place the Prophet Dauid considering the great mercy that God had shewed, the wonderous work that he had then wrought, and how that in his time al the whole people knew Gods way, he said: Lætentur & exultent populi, &c. Let the people reioice & be glad, yea let al the people reioice, because thou iudgest the folke righteously, and gouernest the nations vpon the earth. Now, good brethren, forasmuch as we haue here seen & considered the state of Gods Church before Dauids time, and the state whereunto it was restored againe in Dauids time: euen so let vs in like consider the state of Christs Church before our time, and the state and condition of the same in our own time, in those daies that wee our selues haue seene. Let vs consider how horrible darkenesse, what error and confusion hath of late time bin in the Church of God, let vs weigh and consider, I say, the deformity and great abuses that were in the same. For alas, we had the Sacraments, we had the holy Gospel & word of God; but we had them all in vain. Baptisme we had, but we knew not the principles of our faith. The Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ we had, but we vnderstood not why Christ left vs this Sacrament: we knew not why he said: Take eat, this is my body, &c. It is the greatest Sacrament, and yet we perceiued not what it meant. We had praiers, we had psalmes, we had supplications vnto God; and yet we vnderstood them not, we vnderstood no word of them. We worshipped things made with mens hands, images of blocks & stones, such as had eies & saw not, eares & heard not, neither had any breath in their mouthes: such things we worshipped, and this contrary to the expresse commandement of God. The Scriptures were rent, were torne, were troden vnder foot, were burnt before our eies. Wee groped our way in the midst of the day, as said the Prophet Ieremie. And as the same Prophet of his own time spak, saying: Secundum numerũ ciuitatum tuarum sunt Dij tui: According to the number of the cities, are thy Gods, O Iuda: so might we of our own time haue said. For loke how many cities we had, so many gods had we also. Euery borough, euery towne, yea, euery village, in a maner, had his proper & peculiar Saint. Ierem. 11.

It was then come to passe that Esay prophesied, saying: Hel hath opened her mouth maruellous wide. Hel hath gaped, saith he, because they haue no knowledge of God, because they haue no vnderstanding. Esai 5.

And so likewise Salomon: When Prophesie faileth, the people must needs be scattered. Pro. 29.

This is the word of God. The old father Toby, when God had stricken him with blindnesse, and so taken his sight from him and therefore his friends & acquaintance resorted vnto him to comfort him, and somewhat, if they might, ease him of his great griefe: Alas (said he) what comfort can I receiue that cannot see the light the Sun? Thus said he only because he could not behold the light of this world. Tob. 5.

Alas, what comfort then, what ioy, what consolation, could we haue, when God toke from vs the knowledge of his Gospel, the light of his word, yea the knowledge of God himselfe; when euery man ran whither himselfe best liked, & followed that way which pleased his own fansie? Therefore were we carried away, therefore were we led into error, therefore lost we the knowledge of God, because prophesie failed, because Gods word was not taught & preached vnto vs. But now it hath pleased God to reueale himselfe vnto vs; now we know what is what, now can we discerne light from darkenesse, good from bad; now we vnderstand & know this, I say: Now we haue the scriptures in our mother tongue, that euery man may read & vnderstand them: the same scriptures that Christ hath sealed with his own blood. And these scriptures Ieremy that old father calleth; The propof our faith. So Christ himselfe; Illæ sunt quæ testimonium perhibent de me: They beare witnesse of me, saith Christ, and they shall lead you into all truth. Hilary saith: The Scriptures are the squire and rule of our life. In the Scriptures, saith Christ, you shal find euerlasting life. And Paul writing vnto the Romans, saith: The Gospel of Christ is the power of God to saue al that beleeue thereon. The scriptures were written, saith he, that we thereby should know our saluation. Al these things God hath now restored vnto vs. Now are we able to know our profession, now are we able to know our religion, to know God, to know Christ, to know our saluation. Now haue we the vse of ỹ primitiue church, the communion vnder both kinds: now haue we praiers in our known tong, as in the Apostles time, as in ỹ Ioh. 5. Ioh. 5. Rom. 1.

Fathers and Doctors times they were vſed. Tertullian that old Doctor ſpeaking of his time; We come together (ſaith he) and heare the Scriptures read vnto vs. We may now doe, as S. Baſil writeth the people in his time did: Sonus virorum, mulierum, & parvulorum, in orationibus clangorem edit, tanquam fluctus ferientes littora: The ſound (ſaith he) of men, women, and children praying together, maketh a noiſe like the waues of the Sea beating on the ſhore. Thus ſaith that old Father, they did in his time, and thus may you now doe. Now may we ſay, as Athanaſius ſaid: If I be deceiued, thou haſt deceiued me, O Lod. For thy word is plaine, thy Goſpell is true, and therfore if we be now deceiued, it is thy word, it is thy Goſpel that deceiueth vs: God hath ſo plainly ſhewed vnto vs the light of his Goſpel, the knowledge of his word. Therfore haue we moſt iuſt cauſe to ſay with the Prophet Dauid: Lætentur & exultent populi: Let the people reioice and be glad. And therefore let vs not be vnkind, let vs not be vnthankefull; let vs ſay: Thou, O Lord, iudgeſt the folke righteouſly, and gouerneſt the Nations vpon the earth. Thou haſt now reſtored vnto vs our prayers in our known tongue, thy Sacraments as they were vſed in the Apoſtles time, in the Primitiue Church, in the old Fathers & Doctors times. And let vs ſay with Zachary that holy Father: Benedictus Dominus Deus Iſrael: Bleſſed is the Lord God of Iſrael. Let vs ſay with Dauid: Hæc eſt dies, lætemur & exultemus in ea: This is the ioifull day, let vs reioice and be glad therein. Let vs with Simeon the Prophet ſay: Nunc dimittis ſeruum tuum Domine, ſecundùm verbum tuum in pace: Now letteſt thou thy ſeruant, O Lord, depart in peace, according vnto thy word. Let vs ſay as the Prophet here ſaith: Lætentur & exultent populi: Let the people reioice and be glad, becauſe thou ruleſt the Nations vpon the earth. O let the people praiſe thee, O God, let all the people praiſe thee. And God euen our owne God giue vs his bleſſing, that the earth may bring foorth her increaſe. Thou haſt, O Lord, ſent vnto vs thy meaſure, thou haſt giuen vs thy ſquire, wherby to meaſure and rule our liues: thou haſt ſent, I ſay, vnto vs thy Goſpel, thy holy word, the light of thy derely beloued Son Ieſus Chriſt, whereby we may guide our ſelues, and direct our waies vpon the earth. And when we ſhall thus liue, when we ſhall once begin ſo to direct our doings, as Gods Goſpel teacheth, and his holy word commandeth vs: then ſhall the earth bring forth her increaſe, then ſhall ſhe yelde vs her fruit in due ſeaſon. For like as God, when we turn from him following our own luſts and deſires, plagueth and puniſheth vs; ſo when we repent and returne vnto him, he is good, he is louing, he is mercifull vnto vs. Ierem. 3. Turne vnto me, ſaith God by his Prophet Ieremy, and I will turne vnto you. Whenſoeuer a ſinner repenteth him of his ſins, Eze. 33. I will forget his iniquities, ſaith the Lord. It is the Lord that giueth vs fruit; it is the Lord that maketh the ground fertile; it is not the ground of it ſelfe that bringeth forth fruit; it is not the corne that fedeth vs; it is the bleſſing of God; the bleſſing, I ſay, of God alone. And therefore ſaid the Prophet Dauid: if thou, O Lord, wilt open thy hand, then all things ſhall Pſalm. 145. be filled with thy bleſſing. It is the Lord that maketh the Sun to ſhine, the Mone to giue light, the raine to fal on the earth. I am the Lord that doth this, ſaith God. Dauid alſo in his Pſalme: Pſalm. 144. Sciant quòd manus tua fecit hæc: Let them know, O Lord, ſaith he, that thy hand alone hath done theſe wonders. It is God, I ſay, that cauſeth the earth to be fruitfull, Pſal. 85. and bring forth increaſe; it is God that cauſeth the heauens to heare the earth, the earth to crie vnto the heauens. Your hearts ſhal be full of my bleſſing, ſaith the Lord. If we ſhal forſake our ſins, if we will leaue our wickednes, and turn vnto God, our hearts ſhal be ful of his bleſſing, and then ſhall the earth bring forth her encreaſe: the earth, this dead thing, this vnſenſible thing, this maſſe of clay, at Gods commandement, at his wil and pleaſure, it ſhal bring forth corne, it ſhal bring forth graſſe, and al other kinde of fruits, to ſerue them, that neuer thinke vpon him that beſtowed them. O that we were kinde, that we were not vnmindfull, that we would remember God! But alas, we are vnkind, we are vnmindful, wee neither thinke on God, nor his works: and therefore God cloſeth vp his hand, therefore he giueth not vnto vs his bleſſing, therefore is the earth barren and vnfruitfull. And this our own ſinnes cauſeth, this our own wickednes, and ſinfull liuing cauſeth. Oſe the Prophet vnto the people of Iſrael (when they had forſaken God their Lord, and therefore were grieuouſly puniſhed) cried out and ſaid: Malum tuum ex te ô Iſrael: Thy euill is come of thy ſelf Oſe. 13. O Iſrael. All this ſcarſity, all this dearth, all this plague commeth of thy ſelfe alone. Thou art, ſaith he, the cauſe, thou thy ſelfe art the cauſe hereof. And euen as they were the cauſe of their plague, ſo are we the only cauſe of all this our puniſhment: & yet we ſee not, nor know Gods anger. I haue ſtricken thee, ſaith God by his Prophet: and yet thou feeleſt not: and Eſa. 1. where ſhal I ſtrike thee once again? Filios educaui: ſaith God by his Prophets, I haue bred vp, I haue nouriſhed vp children, and they deſpiſe me, they ſet nought by me, they will not acknowledge me their father. Good brethren, let vs turne vnto God, let vs amend our ſinful liuing, let vs ſubmit our ſelues wholly to his mercy: ſo ſhall the earth bring forth her increaſe, ſo ſhal ſhe yeeld vs her fruit in due time and ſeaſon. Let vs conſider the dignity that God hath giuen vs: he made vs in Paradise, he fashioned vs to his own likenesse, he breathed life into vs; and lastly, where we by the fall of our first parent Adam, were al adiudged to eternal death, he redeemed vs again by the blud of his dear son, & passion of our Sauior Iesus Christ. Behold these things, and be not vnthankfull. Let vs (good brethren) behold our selues, let vs behold our owne vocation, our own profession, let vs behold Christ our Sauior. We are the children of God, the brethren of Christ, & heirs of the euerlasting kingdom; we are Christian men, we profesle Gods gospell: let vs therefore remember that we must walke as becommeth the seruants of Christ, we must line like the professors of Gods holy gospell. Let vs remember how many waies God calleth vs, how diuerslie he allureth vs vnto him, by what sundry meanes he prouoketh vs to come vnto him. O thou proud soule, saith God by his prophet, thou earth & ashes, when wilt thou forsake thy sinful liuing & come vnto me? when wilt thou repent & turne vnto me? Alas, do we loke that the stone in the streets, the very stones vnder our feet should rise vp, and call vs to repentance? The heauens drop down teares for our sake, they weep and are sory for vs; and wilt not thou O man burst out in teares, & bewaile thy sinfull life? God loketh when we wil come, he watcheth when we will returne vnto him, he daily and hourely watcheth when we will submit our selues, and receiue his mercy. So louing, so good, so gratious a Lord is he. Why should you perish, saith Christ: Giue me thy heart, O thou man, and I am contented.

Let vs al therefore my brethren, let vs all returne vnto God, let vs al together come forth and confesse Gods holy name; let our hands, our mouthes, our hearts, praise and laud him for euer: let all the people reioice and be glad, that God iudgeth the folke righteously, and gouerneth the Nations vpon the earth. So shall the earth bring forth her increase, so shall the yeild vs her fruit in due season: so shal we be blessed in our houses, blessed in the fields, blessed in our commings in, and our goings out: so shall our corne, our cattell, our sheep, and oxen, be alwaies blessed: and so shall Gods blessing be vpon vs, and our children: and God euen our own God, shal bless vs, and remaine with vs for euer. Amen.

VERS. 19. Like as ye haue giuen ouer your members to the seruice of vncleannesse, from one wickednesse to another: euen so now also giue ouer your members, to the seruice of righteousnesse, that ye may be holy, &c.

FOr the better vnderstanding of these words written by the Apostle S. Paul, we must consider that there be two Princes of contrary dispositions and natures, which haue the rule and gouernance of this world; that is to wit, God, and the Diuel; and that neuer was there man sithence the first foundation of the world; but was in subiection and vnder obedience either of the one, or of the other: And as God is the father of light; the God of all good men; so is the Diuel the father & prince of this world, the lord of darknesse, the king of this age, as saith S. Paul, and ruler of the wicked: And like as all good men fight vnder the banner of God their Lord, so all vngodly fight vnder the standard of the Diuel their Prince: and euen as the iust man hath his reward of God, so hath the wicked man his stipend of the Diuel. And thus be Infidels, Turkes, Iews, and al heathen people, vnder the power & dominion of the diuel, vnder the standard of Satan: and therefore are they not able to think any good, to conceiue one good thought, because they fight vnder his Banner, because they haue giuen ouer al their members to be ordered of the Diuell, without any feeling of good, without any feare of God. And thus, as I said, doe the Turkes, thus do the Infidels, thus doe all heathen people at this day, & so did the Iewes in the time of Paul; In vmbra mortis ambulauerūt, saith he, They walked in the shadow of death. But after that it pleased God the Father, by the comming of his dear Son Iesus Christ, to reueale himself vnto them, to open & declare his gospell among them, then began the people to renounce the Diuel, to forsake his Law and seruice, and to betake themselues wholly to the gouernance of God. And therefore S. Paul, the further to incourage them thereunto, willeth them in this Epistle of his. That like as before time they gaue ouer their mēbers to the seruice of vncleannesse, from one wickednesse to another, so should they now giue ouer the same their members, to the seruice of righteousnes. For, to this end was Christ borne into this world, to this end liued he here among vs, to this end preached he, and taught the people Gods holy word, that we by his example, and the doctrine of his gospel, should liue an vpright and holy life. And therefore Zachary, that holy Prophet, being filled with the holy ghost prophecied, and said, before Christs birth, that Christ should for this cause appeare in this world, That we being by him deliuered from the feare of our enemies, might serue him in purenes and holines all the daies of our life. And S. Paul likewise saith: Ye were darknes, but now ye are light; walke therefore as becommeth the children of light. Therefore are we deliuered from the power of darknesse, saith S. Paul, that we should walke in the light.

and haue no fellowship with the vnfruitfull workes of darknesse. And so in like, Vocauit nos Deus, non ad immunditiem, sed ad sanctitatem: God hath not called vs to vncleannesse, but to holinesse and sanctity of life. Thus hath he called vs, that we not only in body, but in soule, should be pure & vnspotted. And therfore S. Paul vnto the Romanes; Know you not, saith he, that al we which are baptized into Iesus Christ, are baptized into his death? Therfore are we buried with him by baptisme into death, that like as Christ was raised vp frō the dead, euen so also should we walke in a new life. And for this cause, this same Paul likewise saith: Exhibete vos tanquam viua membra: Shew your selues as quick and liuely members. And in another place: Exhibete corpora vestra sacrificium sanctum & acceptatum Deo: Giue ouer your bodies for a sacrifice holy & acceptable before God. And also: Nescitis corpora vestra esse tẽpla Dei? Know you not that ye are the temple of God, & that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? These and such other many lessons hath S. Paul giuen vs, to call vs vnto pureues & holines of life. Let vs therfore (good brethren) liue holily; consider that God hath not called you to vncleannes, but to purity of life; consider if ye be baptized with Christ into death, you must also walke with him in a new life: let our bodies be a sacrifice holy & acceptable vnto God: shew your selues liuely members of Christ, & the temple of the holy ghost. Vocauit nos Deus, saith S. Paul, Vt viueremus sobrié: God hath called vs, God hath appointed vs, to liue in sobernes, to liue in pureneſſe, to liue in holineſſe: and this not in one part of our bodies, not in one part of our soules, but in our whole bodies in our whole soules. For Christ our sauior suffered not his body to be crucified in one part; Sed a planta pedis, vsq; ad summũ capitis: But euen from the sole of the foot, to the crown of his head, was he beaten, rent, and torn, and miserably tormented in his whole Body. His body was scourged with whips, his head prickt with thornes, his hãds & fẽt nailed to the Crosse, his side pierced with a sharpe speare. For Christ speaking of himself, saith: Foderunt manus meas, & pedes meos: They haue digged my hands, & my feet, they haue made holes thorow them. And thus sithence Christ suffered al his whole body to be tormented for vs, sithence he suffered al his members to be crucified for our sakes; let vs apply our selues, and al our members to serue & please him in holinesse and vpright liuing al the daies of our liues. And therefore saith S. Paul here; Ye haue now betaken your selues vnto Christ; therfore let your conuersatiõ be according, liue as becommeth the seruants of Christ: For euen as before this time, ye gaue ouer your members to vncleannes frō one wickednesse to another, so now giue ouer your members to the seruice of righteousnesse. And such (good brethren) was the life of al Christian men, in the beginning of Gods Church: such was, I say, their life & liuing. They subdued their flesh, they mortified their members, and gaue them ouer wholly vnto Christ, and so made them members vnto righteousnesse. When Christ walked here on this earth, & was conuersant in our flesh, and this nature of ours; at what time he entred into the house of Zacheus, which was a Ruler of the Publicans, & desired to sée Iesus; by and by Zacheus was turned into a new man, and by and by he stood forth, and said vnto the Lord: Behold Lord, the halfe of my goods I giue vnto the poore; and if I haue defrauded any man, I restore him foure-fold. Thus was he only by the presence of Christ, turned into a new man; thus he of an vncircumcised Publican was made the child of Abraham, and of a sinfull & wretched creature, he became forthwith a Christian. And so in like, when Christ had but once called vnto Matthew, & bad him follow him, immediatly he left the Tol-gathering, he left the receit of the custome, he left his own proper gaine & profit, and ran after Christ. Of such force was the presence of Christ vnto Zacheus, of such power was the commandement of Christ, with Matthew the Tol-gatherer. S. Augustine a little before he returned vnto Christ, & imbraced his truth, he feared, he trembled, and alwaies stood in doubt: but so soone as Christ had once inspired him with his holy spirit, and reuealed his truth vnto him, forthwith without any further doubt or delay, he renounced his errors, and became a perfect Christian. There was once a Christian man, whose name was Eusebius, and being demanded what he was, answered, A Christian; being asked what countriman, said, A Christian: who was his father, a Christian: where he dwelt, A Christian: & so to ech other demand, he answered a Christian: as who would say, Whatsoeuer I be, I am nothing else but a Christian. In the beginning of Gods Church, all good men were called Christian men: and yet was it not one thing to be a Christian & a good man. The Christian men, for that they considered they were called to saluation, to redemption by the death of Christ, and to the inheritance of heauen, they had their delight & only felicity in heauenly things: they esteemed not the vain pleasures of this world: & because they thus carried Christ in their bodies, because they had their members crucified vnto Christ, therfore were they called Christians. And so should we do, (good brethren) so should we consider our redemption, so should we mortifie our members, and renouncing the vaine delights of this world, we should fix our eies, our minds, and al our doings on heauenly things alone. S. Cyprian saith, The people come to learne the Gospell.

to heare the word of God; and wherefore? that they might worke according vnto the Goſpell: that they might bring forth fruits worthy the word of God: that they may thus doe, therefore they heare Gods word, ſaith S. Cyprian. And thus if wee doe not, what euer wee brag of our redemption, what euer wee brag of our profeſſion, what euer wee boaſt of the knowledge of Gods Goſpel, it is to no end, it is not to effect or purpoſe. And therfore if we haue heeretofore time giuen ouer our members vnto vncleanneſſe, from one wickedneſſe vnto another, now let vs giue ouer the ſam our members vnto the ſeruice of righteouſnes. For, ſaith S. Paul, What profit, what fruit had ye at that time in thoſe things, wherof you are now aſhamed? for the end of ſuch things is death. It is the part of a wiſe man, and the office of a diſcreet man, in ſuch good order to diſpoſe all his buſineſſe, and to bring all his doings to ſo good end, that he take no foile, nor haue any ſhame therefore. Ye haue committed ſin (ſaith S. Paul) ye haue giuen ouer your members from one wickednes to another, and now ye be aſhamed, now are ye ſorry for thoſe your miſdoings: But what profit then had ye of thoſe things whereof you are now aſhamed? This is an horror, and the greateſt horror that may be, that no man can commit ſinne without a great burden of conſcience, without great torment & diſquietneſſe of mind. Iudas, when he had betraied his maſter Chriſt, by and by, his conſcience accuſed himſelfe, and was ſo great a burden vnto him, that to be deliuered & eaſed thereof, he went immediately and hanged himſelfe. When Cain had ſlaine his owne brother, and committed that execrable murther, God ſaid vnto him: Why doſt thou lowre? Such a thing is ſinne, that whoſoeuer committeth it, it wil forthwith appeare in his face, it will appeare & ſhew in his countenance. But happy is that man that ſoneſt commeth to repentance, happy is he that is ſoneſt ſorry for his ſinnes and miſdoings. Adam, ſo ſon as he had eaten of the forbidde fruit, and ſo tranſgreſſed the commandement of God, God called vnto him, and ſaid: Adam, vbi es? Where art thou? He anſwered: I am fled away, Lord, I hide my ſelfe. And why fled he away, why hid he himſelfe from the ſight of God? becauſe he was aſhamed. The prodigall ſon ſpoken of in the Goſpel, after he had riotouſly conſumed his whole ſubſtance, & ſo brought to extream pouerty, he returned again, came home to his father, fel down before his feet, and ſaid: O father, I haue ſinned againſt heauen and againſt thee. And why ſaid he thus? becauſe he was aſhamed. The people in the time of Daniel the Prophet, when they ſaw their own wickedneſſe, and repented them therof, cried out and ſaid: Shame is come vpon vs, ſhame and confuſion is this day fallen vpon vs. Dauid the Prophet, when he had by tyranny cauſed his faithful & truſty ſeruant Vrie to be ſlain, thereby to haue his pleaſure of Berſabee his wife, & after had ſeen his own folly, cried out vnto God, ſaying; Miſerere mei, quoniam iniquitatem meam ego cognoſco: Haue mercy vpon me O Lord, becauſe I know mine iniquities. And why ſaid he thus? becauſe he was aſhamed. Ieremy: Poſtquam oſtendiſti mihi peccata mea, erubui: After thou hadſt, O Lord, ſhewed me mine offences, I was aſhamed (ſaid he.) Thus (good brethren) a wicked conſcience euermore beareth ſhame about with it, euermore carrieth a moſt heauy burden, euermore is prickt and tormented, & neuer at quiet. And though ſome men there be, ſo giuen ouer vnto ſinne, that they feele no ſhame in this life, that are not moued in their conſcience in this world, yet may they aſſure themſelues they ſhall feele bitter torments in the world to come, & eternall ſhame that neuer ſhal haue end, and if there be any that wil now ſay, as the people in the time of Daniel did; whatſoeuer we do, God will not looke vnto vs, he regardeth not our doings, whether we doe good or euill, God hath no reſpect vnto it; and ſo be nothing moued in their conſcience for their ſinful liuing: when they ſhall be caſt into vtter darkneſſe, where ſhal be weeping & gnaſhing of teeth, then ſhall their conſcience be moued with repentance, then ſhall they be aſhamed: but then all to late. Remember the glutton, the rich glutton (that in his life time had nothing but pleaſure, neuer felt aduerſity, nor neuer was prickt in conſcience for his miſliuing) after he fel into hel fire, was there tormented, & the worme of his conſcience began to gnaw him; then he cried out vnto Abraham, then he was aſhamed; but then was it too late. And thus ſhall the wicked people do at the laſt day; the wicked people (I ſay) that ſhall then be liuing and ſee the great terror of that day: They ſhal ſay vnto the hils, Fall vpon vs; vnto the mountaines, Come couer vs: then ſhall their own wicked conſcience accuſe them, then ſhall they be aſhamed; but then to late. Now (good brethren) what profit had all theſe of their own ſinfulneſſe, what profit & commodity had they of all their wickednes? What profit had Adam by tranſgreſſing the commandement of God? What profit had Cain for murdering of his brother? What profit wan the prodigal ſon by miſpending of his fathers goods? What profit had the people in the time of Daniel, for their miſliuing? What profit had Dauid by killing of Vrie? what profit had the rich glutton that liued in ſuch pleaſure? what profit (I ſay) had al theſe of their own wickednes? No profit, no commodity, no pleaſure at al but ſhame, nothing els but ſhame and confuſion. Euen ſo here S. Paul: What profit (ſaid he) had ye then of al thoſe things, of which ye are now aſhamed? It appeares wel ye haue gotten

And this that is well ſpoken of honeſty of life, this that is well applied to honeſt conuerſation, may well be ſpoken and applied to religion. For it behoueth a man ſo to worſhip God, that he haue no ſhame, no confuſion therefore. But alas, from the beginning, euen from the firſt creation of man, there haue bene good, there haue ben bad: ſome there haue bene, that forſaking the liuing God, haue worſhipped their own deuiſes: ſome in ſtead of

And as they had theſe vaine Idols for their gods: ſo likewiſe had they a number of ſuperſtitious ceremonies of their owne deuiſing, which here were too long to be ſpoken of. And all this did they of blindneſſe, thinking they had done well, meaning nothing but good therein. But afterwards when it pleaſed God to ſhew them their owne blindneſſe, to ſhew them their folly, to ſhew them the wickedneſſe they walked in: then were they aſhamed of their doings; then (I ſay) they were aſhamed and confounded. And therefore ſaid Ieremy the Prophet: Verè patres noſtri coluerunt mendacia: truly our forefathers followed after lies. The Gentiles, when they perceiued that the Sun and Mone their chiefe gods, were indeed no gods, and able to do them no pleaſure, then they were aſhamed. When the people of Babylon ſaw and vnderſtood their owne folly in worſhipping their god Bel and their Dragon, and that they were not ſuch, as they tooke them to be; then were they aſhamed. And ſo in like, when the Iewes ſaw before their eies their golden Calfe molten, and their braſen Serpent broken and ground into powder, then were they aſhamed, then were they ſorry and aſhamed of their former doings. Thus ſaith the Prophet Eſai, or rather God by the gined as a childe. But as soone as I was a man, I left all childishnesse. Now I am become a man, and therefore I am now ashamed of my childishnesse.

Thus might the Prophets haue said to the Gentils; What profit had you of your gods, the Sun and the Mone? what profit had you of them, whereof ye are now ashamed? So might Moses haue said to the children of Israel; What profit had ye in this golden calfe? So Ezechias; What profit had ye in this brasen Serpent, of which now ye are ashamed? Euen thus Esay might likewise haue said; What profit had ye in your calends, and new Mones, in your holy daies and sacrifices? And so either the Prophets might well haue said; What profit had ye in your dreames, in your spider cobbes, in your drosse, in your chaffe? what commodity had ye of all these things? Alas ye are now ashamed of them, and therefore ye had no profit of them, ye had no pleasure by them, they brought you no commodity, they brought you only shame and confusion.

Thus (good brethren) let weigh and consider, what profit wee had in times past of those things, of which we are now ashamed. And let vs consider how much we are beholden to God, that now may see and know our owne folly and ignorance, and so be ashamed. But herein, good brethren, there needs not many words: for there is no man so blind, but may well see, no man so deafe, but may well heare, no man so dull, but may well perceiue and vnderstand, the great errour, the great blindnesse, the great darknesse, that wee haue bene in. And therefore let vs all now giue God thanks that he hath restored his light vnto vs, and taken that great errour and darknesse from vs. Loth I am here to speake of those things whereof we may be ashamed: loth and sory I am to repeat that vnto you, whereof we are now ashamed: but this place now requireth the same, this time and place willeth me somewhat to speake thereof.

The time hath bene that we haue put our trust in Pardons, in Bulles of the Popes, in vaine scrolles, and writings of his; yea, & in them we haue had greater hope and affiance then in the death of Christ, or merits of his passion. We haue fallen downe before images, before stockes and stones, such as had eies, and saw not; eares, and heard not: before them we prayed, before them we kneeled, and stucke vp candles. But now we are ashamed of them; we all are, I think, now sory and ashamed of this our folly: but what profit had we then of all these things? Sometime we prayed in a strange tongue, in a tongue that we vnderstood not: we prayed contrary to the vse that was in the Patriarchs times, in the Prophets times, in the Apostles times: but then what profit had we of those prayes, whereof we are now ashamed? We haue seen lawful marriage forbidden, and mens lawful wiues taken from them: and yet the vse of a concubine granted; as though God were displeased with marriage, and pleased with whoredome: but what profit had ye then of that thing, of which ye now are ashamed? We had Baptisme, but we vnderstood not the principles of our faith: and euen as the Prophet spake of his time: Qualis populus, talis Sacerdos: The Priest is become like the people: so might we wel haue said of our own time; Blind were they both, and therefore both fell into the dike. This we are now ashamed of, but what profit had we then thereby? The Prophets (said Ieremy) teach falsly, and the Priests follow them, and my people hath pleasure therein. And lo, euen this same which the Prophet Ieremy said, the Priests and Prophets did in his time, we our selues haue seene done in our daies, and now weare ashamed thereof: but what profit had we then by it? We had the Sacrament of Christs body, but we knew not why Christ instituted the same, we knew not why Christ left vs that Sacrament; we did al things contrary to Christs institution. Christ ordained a Communion: but we had a Priuate Masse: Christ ordained, that the whole people should receiue in both kindes: but wee ministred it vnder one kinde alone: Christ, when he instituted this Sacrament, spake in thee common tongue that al might vnderstand him: but we contrary to Christ, contrary to the Apostles, contrary to the Primitiue Church, consecrated the same in an vnknowne tongue, that no man might vnderstand vs. And hereof are we now ashamed, but what profit had we then thereby? We haue knowne this to be taught, that the Bread in the Sacrament was turned into the very body and blood of Christ our Sauiour: this we all know, and doe yet remember. But Christ, when he said the Sacrament should be turned, meant not that the bread should be turned into his body, but that we which receiue the same should be turned; that we, I say, should be turned, and made one body with him. This was the meaning; this I say, was the meaning of our Sauiour Christ. And therefore Saint Paul: Panis quem frangimus, participatio corporis & sanguinis Christi est: The bread which we breake is the participation of the body and blood of Christ. For we many are one bread, and one body, in as much as we all are partakers of one bread. Christ himselfe said: I will drink no more of the liquor of the vine: Christ, I say, after the consecration, said he would not drinke any more of the liquor of the Vine: The blood of Christ is not Wine, it is not the liquor of the vine. Augustine

Augustine, in Sermone ad Infantes, saith plainly: Quod videtis in mensa, panis est: That which you see on the table, is bread. Theodoretus also: Non mutatur substantia panis: The substance & nature of the bread is not changed, saith he. Gelasius likewise, whom peraduenture yée will the more credit, because he was sometime Bishop of Rome, saith: Non desinit esse substantia panis: There leaueth not to be the substance of bread. Natura panis in Sacramento remanet: The nature of the bread remaineth in the Sacrament. Chrysostome also: Non mutatur substantia panis: The substance of the bread is not altered. I could say more, but this is for this time enough: this only I trust, amongst a number of other, shal be now sufficient to perswade you the truth herein. Yée see here that S. Augustine, Theodoretus, Gelasius, and Saint Chrysostome doe al affirme, and herein agree, that the substance or nature of the bread, after the consecration is not changed.

Let vs therefore, good brethren, notwithstanding we haue béene otherwise taught, let vs, I say, beléeue these holy Doctors, let vs credit them; they will not mocke vs, they wil not deceiue nor beguile vs. But this other doctrine, this doctrine of transubstantiation, was of late deuised, not past three hundred yeeres agos, in the councell of Laterane. And there, vpon this new deuice of theirs, they made a great solemne, and festiuall day, and called it, Corpus Christi day. And now we are ashamed of this: but then what commodity, what profit had we thereof? Wee found out of our selues a new sacrifice, the sacrifice (I meane) of the masse, as though the death of Christ had not beene a sacrifice sufficient, as though Christs blood had not once for al washed away our iniquities, as though Christ had not said, I haue paid the ransome for your sinnes. It were an infinite labour to repeat vnto you particularly, all the abuses of late daies vsed in the Church of Christ; you your selues can well remember them, I néed not héere to rehearse them vnto you. But then what profit had yée of all such things of which you are now ashamed? But some men there be peraduenture, that will not be ashamed of these abuses, but alwaies vphold and maintaine the same: and such, if there be any, they are like them, whom Ieremy
Ier. 3. prophesied of, saying: Thou hast taken an harlots countenance, thou hast gotten thee a whores forehead, and canst not be ashamed: they are like them also, whom Esay the Prophet speaketh of, and saith: Malice hath made you blind, you barke against the truth. This is the sinne that neuer will be forgiuen; this is so great an offence, that it will neuer bée pardoned. Therefore let vs, to whom God hath giuen eies to sée, eares to heare, and hearts of vnderstanding; let vs, I say, consider that it is no shame to confesse our errours, to acknowledge our blindnesse: but shame it is to continue in error, too much shame it is to remaine stil in blindnesse. And such as will not be ashamed of their euil, but laught at and scorne others, that are sorry and ashamed, may wel be likened vnto them, whom S. Paul
Eph. 4. writing to the Ephesians speaketh of, saying: They being past repentance, haue giuen themselues ouer vnto wantonnesse, to worke all maner of vncleannesse, euen with greedi-

Euen he that leadeth an vncorrupt life, that doth the thing which is right, and speaketh the truth from his heart: Hee that hath not sworne and deceiued his neighbour. But O merciful God, who walketh now innocently? Who leadeth an vncorrupt life? Who doth the thing that is right? Who speaketh truth from his heart? What man is there, that hath not sworne and deceiued his neighbour? Ieremy speaking of the people in his time, saith: Confusi sunt, imo non sunt confusi: They are ashamed, nay, they are not ashamed, saith Ieremy. And euen so may we of our daies well say: The people are not ashamed, they are nothing sorry nor ashamed of their euill liuing. These S.

And shall we then liue thus? shall we thus die? shall we thus end our liues? shall we thus appeare at the latter day, and not be ashamed? shall adulterers, fornicators, whoremongers, couetous persons, come and stand before the iudgement seat of God, before the throne of his maiesty, and not be ashamed? Is this the marriage garment that we should be clad with? are we those that are called to the feast by the Bridegroome? are we Christs brethren, and heires of the kingdome of God? No. Non resurgent impij in iudicio: The wicked shall not arise in iudgement, saith the Prophet Dauid; the vngodly shall not be able to stand in the iudgement, neither the sinners, in the congregation of the righteous. Psal. 1. Woe be vnto them that run from God with a desperate minde, woe be vnto them that wilfully forsake, and flie from him. S. Gregory saith: One sinne linketh another, as one linke of a chaine holdeth the other. It is an horrible thing to turne from God, it is a terrible thing to flie from him: for if we turne from God, whither shall we goe? if we flie from him, whither shall we run? Conscientia mille testes; our owne conscience, though we hide our selues neuer so close, shall be as a thousand witnesses against vs; our own conscience shall vtter and bewray vs. Saint Augustine saith: If we do not indeed repent, we faine that we doe repent: we only faine, saith he, that we do repent, and so we mocke with God. But God will not be mocked of vs, he will not be deluded by vs. But we shal be ashamed and confounded, when we appeare before God; when we appeare, I say, before the iudgement seat of God. But then what profit shall we haue of that we are ashamed of? what commodity shall we then haue of that whereof we are ashamed? Let vs consider, that we are flesh of Gods flesh, bones of his bones, and members of his members. And therefore let vs giue ouer our whole bodies, let vs giue ouer all our members, let vs giue ouer our eies, our eares, our tongues, our hearts, vnto the homage and seruice of God. So shal wee haue profit of Christ our Sauiour, so shall we haue profit of his death and passion, and so shall Christ say vnto vs: Come ye blessed of my Father, and inherit the kingdome prepared for you from the beginning of the world. Amen.

PSALME 7.

VERS. 11. God is a righteous Iudge, and God is euer threatning.

12. If men will not turne, he hath whet his sword, he hath bent his bow, and made it ready.

13. He hath prepared him the weapons of death, and ordained his arrowes to destroy.

ALmighty God our heauenly Father, like as he is both good, and also mercifull, like as he is patient, and of long sufferance: So he vseth two maner of waies to allure and cal vs vnto him, when we of our owne heads follow our owne deuices, and leaudly run whither our lusts lead vs: Sometimes of his great mercy he vseth promises; sometimes of his iustice he vseth threatning. He promiseth to vs for our well doing, his fauour and grace; for keeping his commandements, eternal blisse. He threatneth vs for euil liuing, with plagues and punishments: and for breaking of his Law, eternal death. Thus he of his mercy sometimes vseth promises, and threatneth againe of his rigour and iustice. He promiseth to comfort, aid, and succour vs, if we come vnto him: and he threatneth to strike the terror of death into vs, if we turne from him. And so almighty God most mercifully vsed his promises vnto Abraham: Ego sum protector tuus & merces tua: I am (said he) thy defender and thy reward, Ego benedicam benedicentibus tibi, & maledicam maledicentibus tibi: I will blesse them that blesse thee, and curse them that curse thee. So ample, so large, so great a promise made God vnto him. And thus almighty God when he would deliuer his elect people, the children of Israell from their great bondage and captiuity: Inducam te in terram fluentem lacte & melle: I will bring you into a land that shall flow with milk & hony. This wil I perform, this wil I bring to passe for you, & this wil I do for my names sake. And likewise to these his people he made this mercifull promise against their enemies saying: Ye shal chase your enemies, & they shal fal into the sword before you; fiue of you shal chase an hundred, & a hundred of you shal chase ten thousand. Thus also God by his Prophets promised his people, and said: Turne vnto me, and I wil turne vnto you. And euen thus likewise Christ in the Gospel, maketh most cleere and manifest promises of euerlasting life and saluation, to all such as for his names shal forsake the pleasures Gen. 12. Deut. 11. Leuit. 26. Zach. 1.

sures and delights of this World, and repose their felicity only in him. Beati pauperes spiritu, beati qui lugent, beati qui esuriunt, beati qui persequutionem ferunt: Blessed are the poore in spirit: blessed are they that mourn, blessed are they that hunger & thirst, blessed are they that suffer persecution. And why so? For what cause are they blessed that are poore in spirit? For what cause are they blessed that mourn? Why are they happy that hunger? What reward shall they haue that suffer persecutiō? Because (saith Christ) theirs is the kingdome of heauen, they shall be comforted, they shall be filled, they shall obraine a crown of glory. When two or three are gathered together in my name (saith Christ) I will be in the middest of them. Whatsoeuer ye shall aske my father in my name, it shall be giuen vnto you. These manifold & great promises it pleased almighty God to make vnto his chosen & elect people: these cōfortable promises Christ himself vouchsafed to pronounce to al such as shal cleaue vnto him: thus mercifully it pleased God by faire promises to allure and win vs vnto him. But often times alas, we set little or nothing by these swēt and comfortable promises, we little esteeme or regard them: and therefore God then vseth his threatning, his rigor and iustice among vs: when no swēt words can win vs, then he striketh his terror into vs. For when God in old time perceiued that no gentlenesse, no kindnesse, no mercy of his could win his people vnto him, he caused Esay his Prophet to crie out and say; Impium in beneficijs me non agnouit; in angustijs autem clamauit ad me. The wicked and sinfull man (saith he) in my great goodnesse and benefits bestowed vpon him, would not acknowledge nor confesse me; but in his misery or trouble, in his anguish and woe, then he ran vnto mee and called on my name.

And so likewise by the Prophet Ieremie God himselfe saith; Conuerterunt ad me terga, non facies suas: in die autem tribulationis inclamant me: They haue turned their backes, and not their faces vnto me: but in the day of their trouble, in the time of necessity they call and crie vpon me. And so in like the same Prophet Ieremie, or rather God by this Prophet, saith: Impinguatus & in crassatus est populus meus: My people are waxen fat and lusty, they haue forsaken me the well of life and digged themselues pits, yea vile and broken pits that can hold no water. Such a thing is the felicity and pleasure of this world, that maketh vs soone to forget God, and the felicity of the world to come. And therefore God so often warned his people of Israel, that when they were once come into the land of Canaan, into that plentiful country which flowed with milke and hony, wherein should be no dearth nor scarcenesse: that then they should not forget the Lord their God, that then their hearts should not be deceiued, that then they should not goe aside, and serue other gods; and so his wrath and indignation ware hote vpon them. And therefore when faire promises and louing kindnesse, cannot win vs to God, then vseth he another way, then doth he appoint another meane, then beginneth he to threaten and feare vs, and that of his rigour and iustice. And thus did he to our first father Adam: because he would not he should transgresse his commandement, he threatned him, and said; In quocunque die comederis ex hoc fructu, mortem morieris: In what euer day thou shalt taste of this fruit, thou shalt die the death. So likewise God to the whole multitude of his people of Israel said: Vnlesse yee giue eare to the voice of the Lord your God, to do all his commandements & ordinances, cursed shall you be in the towne, and cursed in the field, cursed shall thy basket be and thy store, cursed shall be the fruit of thy body & the fruit of thy land, cursed shalt thou be in thy comming in, and in thy going out. You shal call, and I will not heare; you shal cry vnto me, & I will not giue eare. Dabo vobis cælum æneum, & terram ferream: The heauen shall be brasse, and the earth as Iron; the heauens shal giue you no raine, the earth shall bring you forth no fruit, your trauel & labour shal be lost, your land shal not giue her increase. Thus almighty God threatned his elect and chosen people, and al to keepe them in awe and feare of him. And so in another place he saith; I will set my face against you, and ye shall be slaine before your enemies, & they that hate you shal haue dominion ouer you, & ye shal flie whē no man chaseth you. Thus you see, that it pleaseth almighty God oftentimes to vse these & such like words of threatning, to vse such rigor, to beat a terror into his people, when faire promises and swēt words can do nothing: and this doth he of his great iustice. And therefore Dauid in this place: God is indeed, saith he, a rightfull Iudge, and God is euer threatning. If men will not turne, he hath whet his sword, and hath bent his bow, and made it ready: he hath prepared him the weapons of death, and ordained his arrowes to destroy. So mighty, so omnipotent is God, that he can punish, and so righteous a Iudge is he, that hee wil punish when it best pleaseth him. But some man wil here peraduenture say; If God be thus able to punish, and wil indeed punish when he is offended, why then doth he it not by and by, why is he not reuenged out of hand? Because (saith the Prophet) he is mercifull, patient, and of long sufferance. Therefore he proceedeth not to reuenge his anger, therefore he hasteth not to wreake himselfe on vs, so soone as wee offend him, and transgresse his will:

will: but tarieth, and maketh long delaies to ſee whether we will repent and returne vnto him. But yet (ſaith Dauid) forasmuch as he is abuſed, for as much as ye haue left and forſaken him, notwithſtanding he be mercifull, notwithſtanding he be patient and of long ſufferance, He hath now whet his ſword, he hath bent his bow, and made it ready, hee hath prepared him the weapons of death, and ordained his arrowes to deſtroy: and this will he doe out of hand, he will make no longer delay at all. Here muſt we not fancy, that God will ſtrike vs with a ſword of iron, that he hath a bow bent and arrowes to deſtroy withall: for euery creature on the earth, what euer it bee, bee it neuer ſo vile, neuer ſo ſimple, neuer ſo weake and abiect, is able at Gods commandement to bee an inſtrument to plague and puniſh withall. And therefore conſider what is ſo weake as water, ſo ſimple as flies, ſo vile as lice and frogs: and yet it pleaſed almighty God, by theſe weake, by theſe ſimple, by theſe vile things, to puniſh and ſtrike the Egyptians; yea, and ſo much thereby to plague them, that neuer before they felt the like, neuer earſt they heard of the like puniſhment. It pleaſed God to turne their water into blod, ſo that in the whole country no water could be found to drinke, no liquor of water to refreſh their bodies. This was a great plague, and yet was this wrought by want of water, which was but a weak and ſimple creature. A flie, you know, is a ſimple thing, a thing of little ſtrength and no force: yet God ſo increaſed the number of them, he ſent ſuch a multitude of flies among the Egyptians, that euen in the kings houſe they ſet vpō what euer the king eat or drank, fell vpon his meat, fell into his drinke, and ſo putrified and corrupted the ſame. The Lice wherewith God in like plagued them, fell not onely vpon the king, and his people, but vpon their Shæpe, their Oxen, their Aſſes, their Horſes, their Mules, and their whole heards of Cattell, what euer they were. The Frogs entred into their houſes, into the kings Palace, into his hall, his parlor, his chamber, yea, and into his bed alſo. Thus it pleaſed God to vſe againſt the Egyptians theſe ſimple, theſe baſe, and vile creatures, as his rod, as his ſcourge, as his ſword of puniſhment. Euery creature, euery thing, whether it hath life, or no life, when it pleaſeth God to vſe it, is his ſword, is his rod to ſtrike withall. The fire that fell from heauen, and deſtroied the two famous Cities, Sodom and Gomorra, and the whole Region there about, was none other then the ſword of God. Therefore ſaith the Prophet Dauid: The ſpirits of tempeſts doe his will, the thunder and lightnings fulfill his commandement. And ſo the ſame Prophet, here in this place: now hath God begun to ſtrike; Now hath hee whet his ſword, and bent his bow, ſaith he, now hath he prepared his arrowes to deſtroy: and there is no way now to eſcape his vengeance, no way to auoid his puniſhment, but onely this, to turne vnto him, to run and ſubmit your ſelues wholly to him.

Gen. 19.

Pſal. 104.

These words Dauid the Prophet (being perſecuted of his enemies, and beſet round about of them) ſpake vnto Saul the proud king, and his adherents and ſouldiers: putting them in remembrance how they had prouoked and iuſtly deſerued the vengeance of God, for perſecuting of his innocent ſoule. And euen as this Prophet Dauid ſpake and pronounced theſe words vnto Saul, & his wicked company to reduce vnto their memory the power of God, and the puniſhment that then hanged ouer their heads: So may we likewiſe well vſe the ſame in theſe our daies, firſt to bring vs in remembrance, that God is a righteous Iudge; and then to conſider how we daily prouoke and deſerue his iuſt wrath, and ſo at the leaſt for feare of puniſhment, to be ſorry for our miſdæds, and returne vnto him: for if we will not be conuerted, he hath whet his ſword, hee hath bent his bow, prepared him the weapons of death, and ordained his arrowes to deſtroy. But before we come vnto God (good brethren) before we returne vnto him, we muſt one come vnto another; wee muſt one turne to another: before we be reconciled to Chriſt, we muſt be reconciled vnto our neighbour; before we be at one with God, we muſt be at one with our Chriſtian Brother. This is the order that God liketh we ſhould obſerue, this is that rule which Chriſt commanded vs to kæpe. Remitte, & remittetur tibi: Forgiue, and thou ſhalt bee forgiuen. Si remiſeris alijs peccata ſua, tua remittentur tibi: If thou ſhalt forgiue other men their offences towards thee, then ſhall thy ſinnes alſo be forgiuen: Then ſhall God pardon thée thine offences, when thou ſhalt pardon thy Brother that he hath offended thée; then, I ſay, ſhall God forgiue thée, and not before. And againe: Niſi remiſeritis alijs peccata ſua, veſtra non remittentur vobis: Vnleſſe ye forgiue other men their treſpaſſes, your owne ſinnes ſhall not be releaſed, ſaith Chriſt. Remember (good Brethren) remember and marke well theſe words; Chriſt is the authour; Chriſt is the ſpeaker; Chriſt is the commander hereof. And ſo Chriſt our Sauiour in another place of his Goſpell: When thou offereſt thy gift at the Altar, ſaith he, and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee; leaue there thine offering before the Altar, and go thy way firſt and reconcile thy ſelfe to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. God is contented his honor be deferred; he is contented to tarry for his sacrifice, till thou art agreed with thy brother, till thou art at one with him. And when thou hast thus done, then come and there offer thy sacrifice. This is the ground of the attonement betwæn God and vs, this is the token that Christ is reconciled vnto vs, if we be at one with our neighbour, if we be reconciled to our Christian brother.

1. Ioh. 4. For if we shall hate our brethren whom we see, if we shall be at debate with our neighbors being daily conuersant with vs; how can we loue God, whom we see not: how can we agree with Christ, with whom we are not conuersant? But to declare further vnto you, that God accepteth not our Sacrifices, that he regardeth not our petitions, that he is not pleased with our praiers, vnlesse we be at one and pleased with our brethren; he crieth out by

Esay 1. Esay his Prophet, and saith: Cum clamabitis ad me, ego non exaudiam vos, quia manus vestræ plenæ sanguinis sunt: When you shall call vpon me, I will not heare you: though yee make many praiers, yet heare I nothing at all, saith God. And wherefore? Because your hands

Gen 4. are full of bloud. It is written in Genesis, that God would not looke vpon Cain and his offring, that he would haue no regard to his Sacrifice: And wherefore? Because his heart was full of malice. Salomon saith: Precatio iniusti abominabilis est: The praier of the wicked is abominable, the sinfull mans praier is abominable in the sight of God. Dauid also:

Psal. 109. Let their praiers be as a sinne: let their praier be turned into sinne, saith he. O miserable man thou art, if thou be not in charity: wretched and ful sinfull thou art, if thou be not in loue and vnity, thy praier is abominable, yea, thy praier is no praier, thy praier is sinne. Thou praiest to be forgiuen, but thou thy self wilt not forgiue: this is enough to condemn thee. For our religion is none other but a brotherhod knit together in the loue of God; our profession is none other then charity and brotherly loue towards all men in our Sauiour and Redeemer Iesus Christ. God is the God of loue, Christ is the Prince of peace,

1. Ioh. 4. his Gospel is the Gospell of peace; and we that are Gods seruants, ought to liue in godly loue: we that are Christs brethen, ought to liue in brotherly peace. We are all baptized in one water, whereby we should haue in remembrance, that we should in loue liue as one together. These, and such other are, or may be, sufficient to bring vs in remembrance of brotherly loue, of faithfull amity, and vnfained concord, if we of our selues were not

Ioh. 14. Ioh. 13. forgetfull. O how oft said Christ to his Disciples, Pacem meam do vobis, pacem meam relinquo vobis: I giue you my peace, my peace I leaue vnto you? By this cognisance and none other shall men know you to be my Disciples, saith Christ, if ye loue together, if yee haue loue one to an other. He saith also: A new commandement giue I you, that you loue together, as I haue loued you. What a zealous fire, what an earnest loue had Christ

Ioh. 17. when he praied and said: O Father, cause that these be one, as thou and I are one, that like as thou Father art in mee, and I in thee, that they also may be one in vs? Because ye be few, said Christ to his Disciples, and in the middest of your enemies, line you in concord and peace one with an other, one beare with another, and all you hold together. S. Paul saith:

Rom. 13. That he which loueth his brother, hath fulfilled the whole law. Let not the Sunne go down
Eph. 4. on thy wrath, saith Paul. And againe: Reuenge not, but giue place vnto displeasure; wreke
Rom. 12. not your selues, but giue rome to the wrath of God. Dauid, when he was in most extreme persecution, and his enemies laid daily wait for his life, seeking his destruction, euen then fel he to most earnest praier: he sought not to bee reuenged, but he made his praier vnto

Psal. 108. God and said, O Lord, they speake euil of me, they reuile me, they call me Traitor, they cal me al that naught is; but I haue none other help, but to pray vnto thee, my only succor is to flie vnto thee. Thus did that holy Prophet Dauid, and so did the Christians in the beginning of Christs Church. For, Tertullian, an old and holy father, saith: Fratres se appellabant, & mori voluerunt pro inuicem: They called themselues brethren, saith he, & one would not stick to die for an other. O what a charity, what a loue, what a brotherly affectiō was this among Christians, in the beginning of Gods Church! S. Steuen, when he was stoned, all his bones crusht and burst in peces, and his soule ready to leaue his body, euen then he

Act. 7. praied for his Tormentors, euen then he cried out vnto God, and said: O Domine, ne statuas illis peccatum hoc: Lord, lay not this sinne to their charge. So that holy father Nazianzen, when the hangman that most cruelly had tormented him, desired pardon of him, he meekely answered: Qui mihi ignouit, ignoscat tibi: He that hath forgiuen mee, the same forgiue thee: God hath pardoned me, and I beseech him that he will in like pardon thee. Euen so likewise Christ, when he hanged on the Crosse, when his hands and feet were nailed to the tree, and he in the middest of all his woe, euen then he praied for his persecutors, then he desired his father to pardon them, and said: O Pater, ignosce illis; nesciunt enim

Luk 23. quid faciunt: Father, forgiue them, for they wot not what they doe. This is an example for vs to follow, thus ought we to doe, as in the beginning of Christs Church, the Christians did, who called themselues Brethren, and one would die for an other: Thus ought we to say, as S. Steuen said; Lord, lay not this sinne to their charge: thus should we doe, as that holy father Nazianzene did, and say: He that hath forgiuen me, the same forgiue thée.

And lastly, so ought we to pray for our enemies, as Christ did for his persecutors, & say, Father forgiue it them, they wot not what they doe. Thus ought we to doe, if we minde to liue according to our profession, and if we will be Christians, as we are called Christians. We read, written by S. Luke in the Acts of the Apostles, that in the beginning and first Acts 4.
spring of Gods Church, the whole congregation had one thought, one minde, one heart. Such a loue, such a charity, such a Christian conformity was among them. And in commendation of Christian charity, and brotherly loue one with another, the Prophet Dauid said: O quàm bonum, & quàm iocundum, habitare fratres in vnum! Behold how good and Psalm. 133.
ioifull a thing it is, brethren to dwell together in vnity! He estéemed loue to bée so great a iewell, he thought concord and vnity a thing of so great price, that he could not speake to much good of it. And therefore he said: It was like the ointment that ran vnto Aarons beard, and like the dew of Hermon which fell vpon the hill of Sion, where the Lord promised his blessing, and life for euermore. But O mercifull God! vnto what times hast thou reserued vs? where is now the peace giuen, the loue left by our Sauiour Iesus Christ? where is that charity that should alwaies remaine among Christians? Now is the time, euen now, (good Brethren) are the daies come, which Christ himselfe prophesied should come, say- Matth. 24.
ing: The time shall bee, that iniquity shall haue the vpper hand, and the loue of many shall abate. Christ said, that such a time should come, and euen now, euen now, that time and 2. Tim. 3. season is come vpon vs. So likewise Saint Paul the Apostle of Christ said: In the last daies there shall come perillous times: Erunt homines seipsos amantes: There shall be men which shall loue themselues, couetous, boasters, proud, cursed speakers, and such as shall bee des- Ose 4.
pisers of them that are good. Osee the Prophet saith: Non est veritas in terra: There is no truth, no faithfulnesse in the whole world: there is no mercy, no knowledge of God in the land: but swearing, lying, manslaughter, theft, and adultery. Ieremy also the Prophet of God: Frater venabitur fratrem ad mortem, saith he; One brother shall hunt and persecute Ierem. 9.
another vnto death: no man may safely trust his owne Brother, for one brother undermineth another, and on neighbour beguileth another. And all this do we now sée; we, I say, in these our daies doe sée and behold all this. Wee sée now that which Nazianzene that old holy Father speaketh of: Membra Christi pugnant inter se: The members of Christ are at strife and variance among themselues, saith he, and euen those members that Christ died for; those members, I say, that Christs blood redéemed, those members we now see at debate and fighting together. I speake but in generality, I speake not now in particularity; I doe not heere repeate to your memories our particular offences, and great crimes, which to consider would cause any honest heart to be sorry, yea, which to remember would enforce the stony heart to bléed. I doe not now rehearse vnto you by name any such our offences. O rip vp your consciences, descend into your owne hearts, sée whether iniquity doth not abound, sée whether there be not in these our daies, men, such as are louers of themselues: sée whether there be any truth, any fidelity vpon the earth: sée whether one brother doth not hunt and persecute another vnto death: and lastly, sée whether the verie members of Christ are not now at debate and fighting together. Dauid when he considered the great oppression, tyranny, and persecution vsed against the faithfull, in his time, cried out and said: Serua me Deus, quia defecit sanctus: O saue mee Lord, for there is not Psal. 12.
one Saint more, very few faithfull are there among the children of men: Euery man telleth lies to his neighbour, they doe but flatter with their lips, and dissemble in their heart. Ieremy the Prophet, when he saw the whole multitude of the people in his daies forsake God, and run after their owne affections, euery man whither his lust led him, he cried out and said: Ierem. 9.
Quis capiti meo dabit aquam, & oculis meis fontem aquarum! O who will giue my head water enough, and a well of teares for mine eies, that I may bewaile the iniquity of this people! And euen like as Dauid in his time, so may the iust man say now: Serua me Deus, quoniam defecit sanctus: O Lord helpe, because there is no holy man left. Like as Ieremy, so may the vertuous bewaile now the wickednesse of these our daies, and say: O who shall powre water into my head, and giue a fountaine of teares vnto mine eies, that I may bewaile the wickednesse of this people. O Christ, where is now thy new commandement? where is now thy cognisance, thy badge whereby thy seruants are knowne? where is that peace which thou leftest to thy Disciples? where is now that one heart, that one minde, that one thought, that was in the congregation in the beginning of thy Church? But what néed I to speake, what néed I to say any thing, if they would heare thée, Lord, if they would heare thy word and Gospell? O Lord, where is thy strength become? where is that power, that force of thy word, which was able to diuide the marrow from the bone? What Heb. 4. is now become of that maruellous might of thy word? Thy word, O Lord, is one, thy Gospell is the selfe same and one; but the hearts of men, the hearts of thy people are not one. But this commeth to passe for my sins; this I sée wel is wrought by thée, O Lord, for mine owne sinnes and offences: for other prize men preach thy Gospell, other prize men do teach & instruct thy people with thy holy word, and by and by the people mourne, by and by they are sorry for their sinnes, they repent them of their wickednesse, and turne vnto thée. And I speake as they doe, I preach the same Gospell, the same word of thine as they doe; and yet I doe sée no amendment, I do not sée any one won vnto thée through my teaching. And therefore my sinne is the cause, mine owne sinne and nothing else is the cause hereof: thou hast not thought me a man worthy, by whom any one lost sheepe should be conuerted, and brought home vnto thée. But O thou my Brother, that heere standest like an Idoll, thou hast eies to sée, and eares to heare: séest thou not that God hath his sword whet, his bow bent, his arrowes ready to destroy: heerest thou not how he calleth thee to repentance. Thou dost sée, and heare this, and yet thou increasest sinne vpon sinne, and so heapest vp anger and displeasure against the day of wrath. I call God to witnesse, I haue vttered vnto you Gods truth, I haue preached among you his holy Gospell, I haue reuealed vnto you his diuine word, so that none of you all can excuse your selues by ignorance. But take you héed to your selues, take good héed, I say, my brethren, and marke well what S. Paul saith:

Hebr. 10. Peccantes post acceptam gratiam, destituti sunt omni misericordia: They which wilfully sinne after they haue once receiued the knowledge of the truth, are destitute of all mercy: there remaineth vnto them no more sacrifice for their sinnes, but a fearefull looking of iudgement, and violent fire, which shall consume the aduersaries. And this is it that the Apostle saith, to be cast into a reprobate sense. This is the sinne that S. Iohn maketh mention of, saying, Est peccatum in spiritum sanctum: there is a sinne against the holy Ghost, which shall neuer bee forgiuen in this world nor in the world to come. And for this great sinne, for this horrible wickednesse, good people, God hath drawne out his sword, for this cause hath he bent his bow, and prepared his arrowes to destroy.

Therefore (good brethren) let vs lay aside all contention, al strife, and debate, and let vs looke vp vnto heauen, let vs cast our eies thither, where is no rancor, no discord, no strife, no debate: let vs fix our eies, our hearts, and our whole minds on Iesus Christ; on him, I say, who hanging on the Crosse, prayd for his persecutors, and said: O father forgiue them, they wot not what they doe. Let vs imagine that we now behold him, and that he now spreadeth out his armes vnto vs, and saith, O thou sinfull man that slumbrest in thy sins, and slépest in thine own wickednesse, awake, now is it time for thée to awake out of thy slumber, to arise from thy heauy slépe: remember thou art a Christian man, consider thou art a limbe of my limbes, a member of my body, the child of God, and coheire of my fathers kingdome. You children of men, how long will ye dwell in your old wickednesse? How long will yee liue in hatred one with an other? How long will ye continue in rancor and strife? Shall I so forgiue you as you forgiue your neighbours? shal I so pardon you your sins, as you pardon your brethren their offences? O I forgaue thée thy great debt, and wilt not thou forgiue thy brother that little, wherein he hath offended thée? I haue paid his debt, I haue paid the ransome for his trespasse, if my blood be a sufficient ransom for the same: for that bloods sake of mine forgiue him; if nought else wil moue thée, if thou wilt not for his own sake, yet for my sake pardon him. Good brethren, we haue long enough serued the diuel, the prince of this world; let vs now serue God our maker, and Christ our redéemer. Wee haue long enough, yea too long, continued in rancor and malice one with an other: let vs now therefore, if there be any society betwéen God and vs, if there be in vs any loue of Christ, if there be any feare of Gods wreake and vengeance, let vs one forgiue another: let euery man forgiue his Christian brother, let vs all cast aside all rancor, strife, and debate, and so let vs dwell together in vnity, in brotherly loue, and concord.

This day we haue heard Gods Gospel preached vnto vs, this day we haue learned out of the word of God, that if we be Christians, we should liue like Christians, if we be the children of God, we should liue as becommeth the children of God, without enuy, without hatred, without strife or malice. Let vs therefore now leaue off our old contention & strife, let vs euen héere in this place one forgiue an other, and so be reconciled one vnto another, and say; Remitte nobis debita nostra, sicut & nos dimittimus debitoribus nostris: O Lord forgiue vs our sins, as we forgiue them that trespasse against vs. This is our profession, this is our religion, hereunto are we called of God, appointed by Christ, & commanded by his holy word. Let vs consider our white & hoare haires, let vs behold our riueled skin, let vs haue alwaies before our eies the graue whereunto wee are créeping: Let vs consider that death daily hangeth ouer our heads. And shall wée then in this sort liue out the rest of our yeeres? Shall wee thus die, and come to our graues? Let vs shew our selues in our workes to be the children of God, and the brethren of Christ: let vs not shew our selues Christians in name, and not indeed: let vs not lone in word alone, but in deed and verity: let vs not requite euill with euill, one mischiefe with another; but let vs (according vnto S. Pauls rule) Ouercome euill with good, hatred with loue, and so fulfill the Law of God. So shall Rom. 12. God hold backe his sword, though already drawen; so shall he not smite vs, though he hath bent his bow, prepared him the weapons of death, and ordained his arrowes to destroy. But God shall continue our God, and remaine with vs for euer. Amen.

Lvke 10.

Vers. 23. And he turned him to his disciples, and said: Blessed are the eies which see that ye see.

24. For I say vnto you, many Prophets and Kings would haue seen the thing that ye see, and haue not seen them, and haue heard the things that ye heare, and haue not heard them.

OVr Sauiour Christ, before he began to declare & set forth the will of his Father, before he began to preach abroad the high mysteries of our redemption, the glad tidings of mans saluation, sent abroad into the world a many of disciples, to the number of three score & ten, to the end that they should espie out and see the stay of the people, how they would accept his doctrine, & first to giue them this warning, and say; Pœnitentiam agite, appropinquat enim regnum cœlorum: Repent your selues, for the kingdome of heauen is at hand. These disciples of Christ, after they had in al points accomplished their masters commission, & fulfilled his commãdemẽt, returned again vnto Christ, & shewed him the maruels that they had wrought in his name, reioicing much therat, & especially for that Diuels departed from men possessed, & were driuen out by them; The very Diuels (said they) are subdued vnto vs in thy name. But when Christ heard them thus say, and perceiued that they reioiced therat, he turned to his Disciples, he pulled them from this vaine fancy, and said; I saw Satan fall downe from heauen as lightning. Behold, I haue giuen you power to tread vpon Serpents, to goe ouer Scorpions, ouer all venemous and noisome beasts; they shall be subiect, and obedient vnto you, & they shall not hurt you. But reioice not in this, reioice not that you shall haue power ouer Serpents, that you shall be able to tread vpon Scorpions, and all other venemous beasts, and be nothing therewith annoied: but reioice you in this, that your names are written in the book of life. Put away (said Christ) this vain glory that you haue conceiued, this fond fancy wherin ye reioice, and reioice ye only in this, that your names are written in heauen: and that you know God, and his Son, whom he hath sent into the world. For no man knoweth the Son, Matth. 11. but the Father: neither knoweth any man the Father, saue the Son, and he to whom the Son will open it. This is your felicity, this is your ioy, and no man but you, hath this great ioy and felicity. And therefore blessed are the eies which see, that ye see. This heauenly felicity, this maruellous blisse, that Christ in this place spake of to his Disciples, was prophesied and long time before spoken of, euen at the first beginning of the world: for at what time Adam had transgressed Gods commandement, and so fallen from the ioies of Paradice; God himselfe, to put Adam in some comfort againe, pronounced these words against the wicked Serpent, that had wrought him that woe, and said: Ipsum conteret caput tuum: The Gen. 3. seed of the woman shall tread downe thy head: he, he it is that shal breake downe and destroy the power of the diuell, said God vnto Adam. This promise (I say) euen at the beginning of the world was made by God vnto Adam, and so continued to the time of Christ: for afterward this same promise declared God likewise, to many a good and godly man. He said vnto Abraham: In semine tuo benedicentur omnes fines terræ: In thy seed (said God) in Gen. 22. that seed of thine shall all the Nations of the earth be blessed. To Dauid also God declared likewise this promise, & said: De semine tuo ponam super solium tuum: Of the fruit of thy body shall I set vpon thy seat. And so in the time of Esay his prophet, God continued this promise, & said: Ecce virgo concipiet & pariet filium cuius nomen erit Emmanuel: Behold, a virgin Esay 7. shal conceiue & bring forth a Son, whose name shal be Emmanuel, that is, God amongst vs. And hereunto witnessed al the Patriarchs and Prophets, euen from the first beginning of the world, vnto the time of the cõming of our Sauior Iesus Christ. And therfore because the whole scriptures, the Patriarchs, the Prophets, spake thus plainly of Christ, & declared his cõming, Christ said: Scrutamini, Scripturas illæ enim testimonium perhibent de me: Search Iohn 5. you the scriptures, for they do beare witnes of me. Likewise again to the Scribes & Pharisies he said; Si Moysi crederetis, & mihi: If ye beleeued Moses, ye would beleeue me, Iohn 5.

for Moses also hath written of me; he hath told you of me, saith Christ, and therefore if you beleeued him, ye would also beleeue me. And thus all the whole body of the Scriptures bare record of the comming of Christ: the Patriarchs knew long before that Christ should be borne: the Prophets prophesied of his comming into the world. But when Christ should be borne, when his glorious comming should appeare, that neither the Scriptures declared, neither the holy Patriarchs knew, nor the Prophets were able to shew. And therefore said Christ: Abraham voluit videre diem meum: Abraham would faine haue seen my day, and he saw it, and therefore he reioiced. But how did Abraham see it? with bodily eies? no, but in faith, and because he was in faith able to see it, therefore he reioiced. What then if he had with his eies seene Christ, if he had talked with him, if he might haue touched and imbraced Christ: what ioy would he haue made? how would he haue reioiced and been glad? No doubt, as the birth of Christ was most acceptable and welcome to al good men in that time, so was his comming much longed for of the holy Patriarkes and Prophets before time: for they well knew that his time should be a time most acceptable, that then all things should be in quietnesse, vnity and concord in euery place, peace thorow the whole world. And therefore said Esay the Prophet: Et vocabitur princeps pacis: He shall be called the Prince of peace. And to declare this more plainly, the same Prophet saith: Then shall the Wolfe dwell with the Lamb, the Leopard shall lie downe by the Goat: Bullocks, Lyons, and cattell shall keep company together; the Cow & the Beare shal lie together: and there shall be no crying, no wailing, no noise heard in the streets. And therefore this Prophet Esay in another place, considering the great ioy, the great felicity that Christ should bring into the world, when he should be borne, cried out and said: Disrumpe cœlos & descende: O Lord, said hee, breake the heauens and come downe. And so another Prophet in like sorte seeing this great felicity that should ensue the birth of Christ, said: Quis vivet, & videbit hæc? O who shall liue to enioy this maruellous felicity? When Christ was come into this world, though then not borne, but in his mothers wombe, Iohn the Baptist being a babe, and in his mothers belly also, yet at the Maiesty of his Lord, and at the presence of Christ, he sprang for ioy, and leapt in his mothers wombe. So likewise at the birth of Christ, for ioy that the Angels in heauen conceiued therat, they sang: Gloria in excelsis Deo, & in terra pax hominibus: Glory be to God one high, and in earth peace vnto men. After that time when Simeon that holy Prophet had in spirit perceiued the true Messias, and Sauior of the world to be borne, and had receiued Christ into his armes, he cried out and said: Nunc dimittis seruum tuum Domine, secundùm verbum tuum in pace: Now letteſt thou thy seruant depart in peace, according to thy word: Now, euen now that this light is prouided before the face of the whole world, that so long hath been loked for, now that light is appeared which shall be the light of the Gentiles: Now, O Lord, said he, let thy seruant depart in peace, I haue liued long enough to see thy saluation.

Thus, good brethren, all the scriptures thorowout, the Patriarchs, the Prophets, shewed long before vnto vs, the ioy and felicity that should come vpon the whole world, at such time as Christ should be borne. And therefore to confirme all this that they before had prophesied of him, Christ here said vnto his Disciples: Blessed are the eies which see, that ye see. Blessed are your eies, said Christ, for your eies haue seen Gods promises performed: that promise which he made to Adam, saying: The seed of the woman shall breake the head of the serpent: Your eies haue seen that promise made vnto Abraham: The seed wherein all nations shall be blessed: That promise also your eies haue seen performed, which God made vnto Dauid, saying: Of the fruit of thy body will I set vpon thy seat: You haue seen, and do now see that Emmanuell, of whom Esay prophesied: You, I say, haue seen that thing, whereunto all the Patriarchs, al the Prophets, & the whole body of the scriptures do beare witnesse: You do see and behold him, whom Abraham would gladly haue seen: You see him, whom Esay calleth the Prince of peace: him, in regard of whom the Prophet cried out and said: O who shall liue to see this great ioy! You see him, at whose presence S. Iohn the baptist being in his mothers womb, sprang & leapt vp for ioy: him, at whose birth the very Angels in heauen sang, Gloria in excelsis: him, whom Simeon pronounced to be the Sauior of the world. All this, said Christ, you see, you my Disciples: your eies do see all this, and therefore blessed are your eies, happy and blessed are the eies that see which ye see. In the beginning, saith S. Paul, God spake diuersly, and by sundry meanes vnto his people, somtimes by dreams, somtimes by reuelation, somtimes by Prophecies, somtimes by Angels, & somtimes by his own voice: but now in these daies he hath sent amongst vs his own sonne; by him, saith he, God hath declared his will vnto vs clerely and plainly, euen by the mouth of his own sonne. When S. Iohn the Baptist baptized Christ in the riuer of Iordan, it pleased God the Father to crie from heauen, and say: Hic est meus filius dilectus, ipsum audite: This is my beloued Sonne, heare him: hearken vnto his voice, giue eare vnto his doctrine:

Heb. 1.

for

for he it is to whom both the law and the Prophets haue their respect. And S. Paul saith: Mysterium absconditum à seculis, nunc autem reuelatur per Iesum Christum: the mystery, that high mystery of mans saluation, that hath been so many hundred yeeres hid, is now reuealed by Christ our Sauiour: so long it hath bæn hidden, saith S. Paul, and now it is opened and shewed vnto the whole world by Christ. Therefore blessed are your eies, said Christ, yea, blessed are the eies which see that yee sæ; for your bodily eies sæ that which the Angels did lacke, you sæ that which the Patriarchs and the Prophets neuer saw: you, said Christ, you my Disciples are blessed that sæ me, that heare my Gospel and beleæue the same; and therefore blessed are your eies, and the eies which sæ that you see. For otherwise the Scribes saw Christ as the Apostles did, the Pharisies saw him as the Apostles did, and yet were they alwaies Scribes and Pharisies, that is, such as withstood Christ, and gainsaid his doctrine: Caiaphas saw Christ as the Apostles did, and yet he rent his clothes, and said, that Christ was a blasphemer. Pilate saw Christ as the Apostles did, and yet he gaue iudgement against Christ. Iudas saw Christ as the rest of his fellowes the Apostles saw him, and yet he betraied Christ. The Souldiers, and such as hung Christ on the Crosse, saw Christ as the Apostles did, yet were they wicked men, and did put Christ vnto death. Shall we then say, that these mens eies were blessed: that the eies of the Scribes and Pharisis were blessed: that Caiaphas eies, Pilates eies, Iudas eies were blessed: shall we say, that the souldiers eies, and the eies of them that put Christ vnto death, were blessed, because they saw Christ, and beheld his body? O good brethren, these men saw Christ, and yet saw him not: they saw him with their bodily eies, and yet they knew him not: they saw him as the Asse, the Wolfe, and the dog saw him: they saw him as the diuel saw him, and said: Tu es filius Dei: Thou art the son of God. Thus they saw Christ as touching the body: but they saw him not as the Apostles saw him: they saw him as a man, but not as the son of God: they saw him as the son of a Carpenter, for so they said he was, but they saw him not as the Apostles saw him, to be the very son of God: they saw Christ as a miserable man, but the Apostles saw him as the Sauior of the world. And therefore Peter was bold to say: Tu es Christus, filius Dei viui: Thou art Christ, the son of the liuing God. And again he was inabled to say: Tu habes verbum salutis: Thou hast the words of life. Thus the Apostles saw Christ, and beleæued him to be the redæmer of the World, and therefore Christ said vnto them: Blessed are your eies, and the eies which see that you see. For I say vnto you, many Kings and Prophets would faine haue seene the things that you see, and could not see them.

Luke 8.

This promise, good brethren, of the birth of Christ, and his comming into the world, to redæme mankind, was made long before, yea, it was promised by God the father, euen in the first beginning of the world, as I haue already declared vnto you. And therefore in hope of the performance of this promise, many a godly man did put his affiance in Christ, and long before his comming had a fixed trust in the merits of his passion. The Patriarchs, the Prophes, and all such as liued vnder the old law, had the same Law and Testament that we now haue, they had the same doctrine, the same faith, the same prayer, the same Sacraments that we now haue: we drinke of Christ, and so the Iewes drank of Christ. Bibebant de petra, petra autem erat Christus: They dranke of the rocke, saith S. Paul, and the rock they dranke of was Christ. They were circumcised, and so are we: for, saith S. Paul, We are so are circumcised, but with circumcision without hands: We are circumcised, but we are circumcised in heart by the power of the holy Ghost. The Patriarchs and the Prophets knew well, and beleæued, that by Christ they should be redeemed, that by his onely blood, shed on the Crosse, all the world should be saued: but thus they knew, this the saw, only by faith, and in spirit, for then was not Christ borne: we haue the Lamb of God offered vp for vs, and so had they the same Lamb offered vp for them. For S. Iohn saith: Agnus occisus a principio mundi: Christ was the Lamb offered vp from the beginning of the world. And now therefore, forasmuch as the Patriarchs, the Prophets, and the holy men in old time, had the same testament, the same doctrine, the same faith, the same prayer, the same Sacraments that we haue: forasmuch as they drank of Christ as wee doe: forasmuch as they were circumcised, and so are we: forasmuch as they did beleæue that they should bee saued by the death of Christ, as we do; shall we thinke that they were not blessed: that their eies were not as happy as ours: that they saw not as much as we doe? Shall we thinke, that Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, Ioseph, & diuers others such good men, lackt any part of their felicity? Or if they were blessed, why said Christ only to his Apostles: Blessed are the eies which see that ye see? When our Sauior Christ said thus, blessed are your eies, & the eies which see that ye sæ, he meant not any peculiar blessing giuen vnto them alone, but he signified the blessing of that time: as if he should haue said, Blessed is this time, blessed are the daies that you sæ. For there is in times & seasons a great difference & diuersity. Some on time is blessed, another is accursed. The time of the wicked king Manasses, wherin the testament & law of God was burnt, Baals altars reedified, and Idols ſet vp, was a miſerable time: this time I ſay,

4. Reg. 23. of Manaſſes raigne, was an accurſed time. But the time of Ioſias, wherein the law of God was reſtored again, Baal caſt out of the Temple, the Idols pulled downe, and al good orders againe ſet vp in their former eſtate, was a bleſſed time, a time moſt happy: and bleſſed was he that liued to ſée that time. So likewiſe the time of the birth of Chriſt was a bleſſed time, and the time of Antichriſt a time accurſed. And therefore Chriſt oftentimes wept o-

Paul ſpake of: Dum habetis lucem, ambulate in luce: Whiles you haue light, walke in the light, ſaith Chriſt: receiue the light, and ſo ſhall you be the children of light. And ſo that time was a bleſſed time: becauſe Chriſt was borne in that time, becauſe the force and power of the diuell was by Chriſt then deſtroied, becauſe the dominion and kingdome of ſatan was then throwen down, therefore was it a bleſſed time. But as touching the bleſſing of the men in times long before, men were as bleſſed as they were then: Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, Ioſeph, and ſuch other, were as bleſſed as the Apoſtles. They had the ſame Chriſt, the ſame Sauior and redéemer that the Apoſtles Hebr. 15. had. For ſaith S. Paul; Ieſus Chriſtus, heri, hodie, & ſemper: Chriſt, is for yeſterday, this day, and for euer. One Chriſt ſerued for all the world. Otherwiſe moſt miſerable were we, and in moſt wretched condition were all ſuch as either now liue, or haue liued ſithence the time of Chriſt, for we neuer ſaw Chriſt in the fleſh, we neuer beheld his body, we were neuer conuerſant with him on the earth. But Chriſt hath told vs by S. Thomas: Beati qui non vi-
Iohn 20. dent & credunt: bleſſed are they that beleeue and haue not ſeen: bleſſed are they that ſée not, and yet beleeue. Theſe things be for our great comfort. For although we neuer ſaw Chriſt with our eies, though he was neuer conuerſant with vs, as he was with his Apoſtles, yet haue we through him the ſame ſaluation that the Apoſtles had, we haue him our redéemer and Sauior as they had him.

Now let vs compare this ſaying of Chriſt vnto our ſelues and our time: let vs ſée whether this that Chriſt then ſpake to his diſciples, may not be ſpoken of vs, and our time. For thus ought wee to read Gods word, to this ende wee ſhould read the Scriptures of God. Now therefore good brethren, let vs conſider well, and ſée whether the Church of God hath not béene ſo diſordered before our time, yea, and in our time, that we may now well ſay, Bleſſed are our eies, and the eies which ſée that we ſée: for many good and godly man would faine haue ſéene that we ſee, and could not ſée it. I will bée ſhort, I will not long trouble you in this thing, I will not vſe many words vnto you herein. The errors that haue béene taught and preached in the Church of Chriſt, haue béen (good brethren) ſo groſſe, that ſuch as could not ſée them with their eies, might haue felt them euen with their fingers: ſo horrible and ſo groſſe were the errors in the Church: ſo were all things confounded, and ſcarſely the forme of the Church left vnto vs. But that this ſhould ſo come to paſſe, Chriſt himſelfe, S. Paul, S. Peter, and Daniel the Prophet, long time before gaue warning to the world, and propheſied it ſhould ſo be. And euen as they ſpake, ſo hath it come to paſſe; looke what they ſaid, the ſame haue we ſéene fulfilled. For Chriſt himſelfe o-

And again he ſaid: When the ſonne of man ſhall come to iudge the earth, thinke you that hee ſhall find any faith vpon the earth? Paul likewiſe ſaith: The time ſhall bee, the ground. Now, good brethren, consider wel with your selues, where should this desolation be, which Christ spake of? Amongst whom shal so smal faith be found? Where should Antichrist nestle himselfe? Where should good doctrine be despised? Where should there be preachers and teachers of lies? Where should the truth be cast flat to the ground? Where should al these things come to passe? Amongst the Turkes, the Saracens, the Heathen, the Infidels? amongst such as neuer heard of Christ, nor his Gospel? Should these things that Christ, that S. Paul, that S. Peter, that Daniel prophesied to come to passe; should they (I say) be fulfilled amongst them? Let not vs deceiue our selues, good brethren: Christ said that desolation should come into the holy place, that such as professed God and his name, should haue little faith. S. Paul said, that Antichrist should sit in the holy place, in the Temple of God: that amongst Christians holesome doctrine should be despised, and cast away: S. Peter also, that euen amongst the professors of Gods Gospel, some there should be that should preach and teach lies: And Daniel likewise, that in the Temple Antichrist should sit, and there al truth should be cast flat to the ground. And this should not come to passe among the Heathen and Infidels, but in the Church of Christ, euen in the very Church of God. S. Hilary, who was an old Father in the Church, saith: O you wil soone deceiue your selues if ye trust in the wals: know you not that Antichrist is in the Church? Let vs not therefore deceiue our selues; let not vs, good brethren, deceiue our selues. And here I pray you consider with me, how that God, for our better vnderstanding, hath in similitudes opened and set forth vnto vs the state of his Church. For Christ in the Gospel cōpareth his Church vnto a ship in the sea, tossed & tumbled with perilous waues: & what, I pray you, betides vnto a ship so tossed in the sea, if there be no Lodes-man to steere it, or if the Lodes-man doth not his duty? Christ hath likened his Church to a vine: & what becomes to a vine, if it be not shred and vnderpropped? He doth also liken it to a flock of sheep: and what becomes to a flock of sheep, if there be no shepheard to guide & loke vnto them? And now therefore consider with me, I pray you, euen from the meane Priest, to the Bishop of Rome: consider, I say, whether they haue done their duties: which of them al hath done that which is required in them? which of them hath fulfilled that God gaue them in charge to do? Christ to his Disciples, and in them to all such as should become Preachers, gaue this Commission, saying: Ite, & prædicate: Goe you, and preach. And what is he that euer saw the Bishop of Rome in a Pulpit? Who hath heard a Cardinal many times preach? Iudge you then (my brethren) when shall the ship come safe to the hauen, if the Lodes-man doth not his duty? When shal the vine bring forth any fruit, if the husbandman apply not his diligence to dung, to shred, to vnderprop the same? What shal become of the flocke, if the shepheard sheweth not his industry and earnest labour among them? Now let vs consider a little further, what they were that should haue bēn our Lodes men: what they were that should haue plaid the good husbands in Gods vineyard: what they were that should haue loked to the flock of Christ. Here wil I declare nothing of my self, I wil not here vtter vnto you any thing of mine owne inuention: I wil only shew you the minds of the ancient Doctours in the Primitiue Church, and the sayings of old holy Fathers, that haue written of the Church of God. S. Gregory speaking of the Church of God, saith: Ecclesia Dei, si ab vno pendebit, corruet: If the Church of God shal hang vpō one man, if the whole sway thereof shal depend vpon one alone, that Church must needs fal, saith S. Gregory. Now let vs consider whether in times past it hath bēn so in the Church of God, whether we haue known one man to haue called himselfe the Head of the Church: and if it so be, how can it then be otherwise, but that the same Church must nēds perish and fal? Saint Bernard, an old holy Father, writing of the Bishops and Prelates of the Church in his time, saith: Non sunt Pastores, sed Impostores; non Doctores, sed Seductores: non Prælati, sed Pilati: They are not (saith S. Bernard) good Pastors and Feeders of Gods flocke, but they are Impostors, such as deceiue Gods sheepe; they are not Doctours, but they are Seductors, such as lead men out of the right way; they are not Prelats, but they are very Pilats. And againe, the same S. Bernard, in the Councel holden at Rhemes, where he made a Sermon in the presence of the Bishops there assembled, said: Habemus iam non mercenarios pro Pastoribus, neque Lupos pro mercenarijs, sed in loco Luporum, Dæmones habemus: We haue not now, said this holy Father, hirelings in stead of shepheards, nor woolues in stead of hirelings; but in place of woolues we haue very Diuels. This spake Saint Bernard of the Preachers and Pastors in his time. But O miserable is that Church, wherein are hirelings in stead of good shepheards; more miserable, where are woolues in place of hirelings; and most miserable, where Diuels in roome of Woolues. For then al goeth to ruine and decay, then must nēds al goodnesse in Gods Church be ouerthrowne.

Esay 5. Iohn 10. Math. 16.

And so was it then, so was it in his time, said this old Father S. Bernard. So Platina also an ancient Writer: Defecit tum maxime Imperatorum, & sanctitas Episcopi; When the Bishop

ſhop of Rome, ſaith he, tooke ſo much vpon him, when he would be called, Vniuerſall Biſhop, and head of Gods Church, then decaied the Maieſty of the Emperour, and the holineſſe in the Biſhop. Saint Hilary likewiſe ſaith; The Church wherein Gods word is not preached, muſt needs runne againſt the rocke. Tertullian alſo: Miremur ſi fides deficit, cum non ſit inſtructio? Doe we maruell (ſaith hée) if faith faile, if faith be not found amongſt men, ſithence there is no Preaching, no teaching, no inſtruction? Euen ſo another old writer ſpeaking of his owne time, ſaith: Calamitoſa eſt deſolatio in Domo Dei: There is an horrible deſolation in the Church of God. And therefore alſo hée ſaith further: Nos ſumus, in quos feces terræ deuenerunt: We are they, vpon whom all the dregs of the earth are fallen. So Chryſoſtome: If you (ſaith hée) perceiue it to waxe darke in the vale, you ſay it is toward night: if you ſee it beginne to be darke on the hils, you ſay it is nigh night: but if you ſee it once darke in the skie, you ſay it is high night: So if you ſée ignorance in the people, you may ſay it is towards night: if you ſée ignorance in the Prieſts, it is almoſt night: but if you ſée ignorance and little learning in the Biſhops and Prelates, then may you wel ſay, it is high night.

Bernard, that holy father, in another place ſpeaking of the Prieſts of his owne time, ſaith: Nothing is now ſafe amongſt the Clergy, all things are confounded, all things out of order; and therefore there is now nothing left, but that Antichriſt be reuealed. I recoũt hére nothing vnto you, my brethren, but only the ſayings of the ancient Doctours and holy Fathers which haue written of Gods Church in times héere before, and therefore I truſt you will beléeue them the better. The ſame S. Bernard, of whom I ſpake before, ſaith alſo: It appeareth now, that there is no perſecution, no Martyrs done vnto death: Nay, not ſo, ſaith he, it is not ſo, for now euen they that ſit higheſt in the Church of God, they that beare the greateſt ſtroke therein, they begin to perſecute and deſtroy Gods ſeruants. And againe, ſpeaking of the Prieſts and Prelates: They would ſeeme to be Gods friends, yet they are his enemies; they would be Chriſts kinſmen, yet they are his aduerſaries; they would be ſeruants to Chriſt, and yet they ſerue Antichriſt. And thus, (good brethren) it hath béene in our time, & you your ſelues haue ſéene it, you your ſelues haue ſéene that the whole Church hath hanged on one man alone: that ſuch as ſhould haue béene Paſtors, haue béene deceiuers: ſuch as ſhould haue béene teachers of the right way, haue bin ſeducers and guides into blind waies: ſuch as ſhould haue béene Prelats, haue béene Pilats. You your ſelues haue ſéene in the Church of God hirelings in ſtead of good ſhepheards, wolues in place of hirelings, & very diuels in the roome of wolues. All theſe things haue béene ſpoken of afore: That the Maieſty in the Emperor, and holineſſe in the Biſhop ſhould decay: that where Gods word is not preached, there muſt the Church néeds run againſt the rock: that it is little maruel if faith faileth, where good inſtruction wanteth: that pitiful deſolation is come into the houſe of God: that we are they vpon whom the dregs of the whole earth are come: that it is then high night, when ignorance raigneth in the Biſhops: and laſtly, that there is nothing now left, but that Antichriſt be reuealed. All theſe things haue béen ſpoken of before, and are now come to paſſe, & you your ſelues haue ſéene them; you your ſelues, I ſay, haue ſéene all theſe things fulfilled. You haue ſéene ſuch ſit higheſt in Gods Church, that haue perſecuted God & his Church: ſuch as haue martyred the ſeruants of Chriſt, ſuch as would ſéeme Gods friends, & yet are his enemies: ſuch as would be Chriſts kinſmen, & yet are his aduerſaries: ſuch as would be ſeruants to Chriſt, & yet do ſerue Antichriſt: ſuch as Eſay ſpeaketh of ſaying: They haue broke down my vine, Math. 21. and deſtroied my wine preſſe: ſuch as Chriſt himſelf ſpeaketh of, and ſaith: They haue made my Church a den of theeues. Therefore (good brethren) let vs not deceiue our ſelues, let vs not ſay, All things were wel in the Church, there néed no reformation, all things were as they ſhould be, there néed nothing to be amended. For alas, all things were out of order, all things out of ſquare, all things ſo confounded, that all things néeded to be amended. I ſpeake hérein only generally, I ſpeake not héere of the particular things amiſſe in Gods Church; for then ſhould time faile me, if I ſhould recount them vnto you particularly. In time paſt, if any one man would haue ſought comfort for his afflicted conſcience, where ſhould he haue ſought it? whither ſhould he haue gone for comfort? where ſhould he haue craued conſolation? what comfort could we haue of our own merits, what help by our own deſerts, and good deeds? what conſolation of the Popes Bulls & Pardons? Alas, no cõfort, no conſolatiõ, no help at al. And yet vnto theſe were we taught to run, in theſe were we taught to ſéek comfort, & at the to craue conſolation. In the Church, before time it hath béen both ſaid & ſung vnto the people: Tuo per Thomæ ſanguinem, fac nos aſcendere vbi Thomas nunc eſt: Thou Chriſt, by the bloud of thy Martyr S. Thomas, make vs worthy to aſcend thither, where Thomas now is: This, I ſay, as a prayer hath béen vſed in the Church of God. The mother alſo, that bleſſed mother of our ſauior Chriſt, hath bin openly blaſphemed in the Church:

Church: ſhee is called, Spes, vita, dulcedo: Our hope, our life, and our ſweetneſſe. And further: Salua omnes ſperantes in te: Saue all them that truſt in thee. Thus haue men openly praied vnto her, to the great blaſpheming of her holy name. But, O Chriſt, O thou that ſuffereddſt for the whole world, where was then thy paſſion, where was then that precious blood of thine that waſhed away the ſinnes of Man, where was then the Lamb of God that redeemed all mankind? Loth I am to ſpeake of theſe things; loth and ſory I am to repeat them here vnto you; but I am inforced ſo to doe, ſomewhat the more plainly to open vnto you the great abuſes, the wonderfull errors that long time haue raigned in the Church of God. We had Praiers; but alas, as they were vſed, they were no praiers: we had the Sacraments, but we knew not to what end thoſe Sacraments were left vnto vs. We had Baptiſme; but we knew not what Baptiſme meant. The Teſtament, & holy Goſpell of God, was burnt, caſt downe, and trode vnder foot. And in one word, in one word for all, there was in Chriſts Church nothing but a heape of wickednеſſe, nothing but a very heap of confuſion and wickednеſſe. Ieremie the Prophet ſaid, That all men (after Chriſt once appeared) ſhould haue ſuch knowledge, ſuch perfect knowledge of God, that no man ſhould ſay to his neighbour, Know the Lord; for all men ſhould know him, euen from the higheſt vnto the loweſt. Baruch alſo the Prophet, ſaid: O bleſſed art thou Iſraell, how happie art thou, ſeeing God hath ſhewed vnto thee all ſuch things as are pleaſant vnto him! what euer God would haue knowen, that is reuealed vnto thee. O then, what may we ſay of our ſelues, and the blind time that is now paſt, wherein we neither knew God, nor had Gods word reuealed vnto vs? What may we ſay of that time? O we may well ſay, Miſerable were we, and curſed was that time wherein we then liued. Ier. 31. Baruck. 4.

And thus (good brethren) I haue in few words laid open before you, both the miſerable eſtate that Gods Church hath ſtood in, and the great ignorance, error, and blindneſſe that you haue been led in: to the end, that you may now become the more thankfull for Gods great mercy ſhewed vnto you. For now hath it pleaſed Almighty God to reueale vnto you his holy Goſpell, his truth, and verity. Now we know that whatſoeuer we doe, when we haue done all things that we can doe, yet, we are vnprofitable ſeruants. Now we know, that all our comfort, all our conſolation, all our helpe, is to be ſought for at Gods hands alone. Now we know, that Chriſt is only our Sauiour, our Redeemer, and that his blood alone, as S. Iohn ſaith, hath waſhed away our iniquities. Now we know what we pray. Now we know wherefore, and to what end the Sacraments were left vnto vs: what our Baptiſme meaneth. Now haue we Gods Teſtament, and his holy word reſtored vnto vs. Now we need not ſay to our neighbour, Know the Lord; for we all are, or may be, ſufficiently inſtructed to know God, to know Chriſt, to know the holy Ghoſt. Now may we ſay, as Baruch to the children of Iſraell: O happy are we, for all things that God would haue knowen are reuealed vnto vs. And therefore bleſſed are our eies, and the eies which ſee that we ſee; and on the other part, accurſed are thoſe eies, which will not ſee that we ſee; accurſed are the eares, which will not heare that we heare; and accurſed are thoſe hearts that will not beleeue God, and his Goſpell. My brethren, conſider the miſerable eſtate that the Church of God long time hath ſtood in; and conſider againe, the ſpeedy redreſſe thereof, which God now hath ſent vnto vs. The kingdome of God is come vpon vs: Gods kingdome (my brethren) is euen now come vpon vs. Chriſt: ſaid O Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, thou that ſtoneſt my Prophets, and ſuch as are ſent vnto thee; O that thou wouldeſt know the time of thy viſitation! We are that Ieruſalem, Chriſt hath called, Chriſt hath cried vnto vs: O therefore let vs now ſee and conſider the time of our viſitation. O how many of our brethren which haue ſuffered perſecution for Chriſt and his Goſpell, how many of them, I ſay, would faine haue ſeen the things that we ſee, and heare that which we heare, and could not ſee it? O let vs not deſpiſe our brothers blood, let vs not deſpiſe the calling of Chriſt, let vs not deſpiſe the bleſſing of God, the greateſt that may be. Alas, if we conſider the miſerable eſtate that we haue ſtood in, and the great goodneſſe and mercy of God now ſhewed vnto vs, doubtleſſe we cannot deſpiſe this great mercy of his, vnleſſe we will be too vnthankfull; we cannot neglect this marueilous worke, and goodneſſe of his, vnleſſe we will be counted too much ingratefull. Luc. 17. 1. Ioh. 1.

Let vs therefore make our ſelues new hearts, new ſoules, new mindes; let vs ioifully imbrace God and his Goſpel; let our eies, our eares, and our hearts ſay: Bleſſed are the eies which ſee that we ſee, and eares which heare that we heare: for many Kings and Prophets haue deſired to ſee that we ſee, and could not ſee it. And thus if we doe, then ſhall we be bleſſed, then ſhall our eies, our eares, our hearts, be bleſſed: and GOD the Father of Light, and giuer of al goodneſſe, ſhal bleſſe vs, and remaine with vs for euer. Amen.

2. Cor. 6.

VERS. 1. We therefore as helpers, exhort you, that ye receiue not the grace of God in vaine.

2. For he ſaith, I haue heard thee in an acceptable time, and in the day of ſaluation I haue ſuccoured thee, &c.

SAint Paul after he firſt began to preach the glad tidings of the Goſpell, and teſtifie the name of Chriſt vnto the whole world, as he was much troubled with falſe Prophets, falſe Teachers, and ſuch as ſeduced the people from God; euen ſo he found a number of them among the Corinthians, to whom he wrot this Epiſtle or Letter. Some of them, to diſcredit Paul, & bring an euil opinion of him among the people, ſaid he was an enemy vnto Moſes, one that ſought to aboliſh the Law giuen by Moſes, & ſuch a one as deſpiſed & brake the ſame. Some other ſaid, that he was a teacher of falſe doctrine, a ſeducer of the people, one that diſſented cleane from the reſt of the Apoſtles, yea, & ſuch a one as diſquieted the whole Church of Chriſt. All theſe were reported by S. Paul; thus was he ſlandered, thus was he euil ſpoken of: and this was done euen by ſuch as profeſſed the name of Chriſt. Therefore he feeling himſelfe herewith touched, and perceiuing alſo that this not only touched him, but God himſelfe, thought good by his Letters to auoid this ſlander ſo riſen, and to cleare himſelfe vnto the Corinthians, among whom this euil bruit firſt ſprang of him. And therefore in the Chapter before, he ſaid: Chriſt hath committed vnto vs the preaching of the attonement; and ſo what euer we doe, what euer we teach or preach vnto you, is only to this end, to ſhew our ſelues inſtruments of the reconciliation betweene Chriſt and you. Now then are we meſſengers in the roome of Chriſt, and therefore, euen as though God did beſeech you through vs, ſo pray we you, that ye be at one with God: and further we exhort you, that ye receiue not the grace of God in vaine:

Gen. 6. Almighty God perceiuing the frailty and weakneſſe of this nature of ours, euen at the firſt beginning of the world pronounced thus, and ſaid: Pronum eſt cor hominis ad malum, à iuuentute ſua: The heart of man is prone and ready vnto euill, euen from the cradle. This God himſelfe ſaw wel in our weake nature, and therefore he ſpake thus of it. So dul are we of our ſelues, to learne any good, and ſo quicke are we to forget the ſame; ſo ready are we to fall into vice; and ſo hard are we to incline vnto vertue. And this hath bene ingrafted in vs, this hath bene grounded in this nature of ours, euen from the beginning, and this wil ſo continue in vs whiles the world laſteth. The heart of man hath alwaies bene ready to fal from God, and decline to vice, alwaies prone vnto euil, and hard to be won vnto good. And therefore it behoueth all ſuch as are Preachers, all ſuch as are meſſengers ſent from God, and will ſhew themſelues as truſty and faithfull ſeruants, it behoueth them not only to ſhew their meſſage, to declare their commiſſion, but they muſt alſo incourage them to whom they are ſent, they muſt improue, rebuke, exhort, and controll them, and that in time and out of time, in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, that their meſſage may

2. Tim. 4. be fruitfull, and they found faithfull. So Paul to Timothy ſaith, Inſta opportunè, importunè: Preach the word, be feruent, be it in ſeaſon, or out of ſeaſon: Doe the worke of a Preacher, be earneſt, call vpon them, both in time, and out of time. And euen this thing that he willed his Scholar Timothy to doe, the ſame performed he in him ſelfe; I haue not ceaſed,

1. Theſſ. 2. ſaith he, to preach vnto you, to teach you both day and night. So likewiſe in another

Act. 20. place, he ſaith: Mundus ſum ego à ſanguine omnium veſtrorum: I am cleane from the blood of you all. I am pure from the blood of all men: For I haue kept nothing backe, but haue

2. Cor. 11. ſhewed you all the counſell of God. So in like, he ſaith: Quis infirmatur, & ego non infirmor? Who is weake, and I am not weake? Who is hurt in the faith, and my heart burneth not? As who would ſay, There is none of you all, no not the leaſt of you, that is greeued, but I alſo am greeued; none of you troubled, but I alſo troubled; none of you made weake, but I alſo am made weake with him. So Paul againe ſaith: Filioli mei, quos iterum partu-

Gal. 4. rio: My little children, of whom I trauell in birth againe, vntill Chriſt be faſhioned in you. Thus was S. Paul alwaies carefull for the ſaluation of the people: thus was he continually mindfull of the ſafegard of his brethren, and what euer griefe or diſquietneſſe fell to any of the flocke of Chriſt, the ſame was a griefe and diſquietneſſe vnto him. And thus muſt euery good Preacher doe, thus muſt all ſuch doe as are meſſengers from God, and will ſhew themſelues faithfull ſeruants and true workmen in Gods vineyard. We muſt doe that which longeth vnto vs, and then will God doe that longeth vnto him. We must admonish the people outwardly, and God wil moue their hearts inwardly. S. Paul speaking of himselfe, of Apollo, of Cephas, and other such, notable in the ministery of God, saith: Paulus plantauit, Apollo rigauit, at Dominus dedit incrementum: Paul planted, Apollo watered, but God gaue the increase. God it was, yea, God alone that gaue the increase. 1. Cor. 3.

These things I speak now to them which haue taken vpon them the ministery of Gods word, to them that haue taken vpon them to be guides vnto the flocke of Christ: to them I speake this, to put them in remembrance, that they neuer forget their message, that they forget not their duty, that they improue, rebuke, exhort, and control the people, that they be earnest and feruent, calling stil vpon them, both in time and out of time, in season and out of season; that they fulfil the office whereunto they are called, that their conscience may be found without spot: and in conclusion, that they may plant, that they may water, and God may giue the increase; that they may both reforme the vngodly, and incourage the godly. And this haue we in our commission, this is our duty, this will be required of vs: and this if we doe not, we shal be found faulty, for, we are debtors vnto all men, aswel vnto the Page, as vnto the Prince, vnto the poore, as vnto the rich, vnto the foolish, as vnto the wise, vnto the bad, as vnto the good. And therefore (my brethren) euen for this cause alone, all good and godly Preachers, and such as were sent from God, haue euer bin so zealous, and so much desired the saluation of Gods people. Moses, when he saw the people of Israel after their deliuerance from captiuity by the mighty hand of God, fal from God, forsake him, and forget the wonders that he had wrought for them, he cried out vnto God, and said: O Domine, me potius dele ex libro vitæ: Sooner then that these perish, O Lord, wipe me out of the booke of life: let my name be stricken out of it. So Paul: Cupio anathema esse pro fratribus meis: I wish my selfe to be accursed from Christ for my brethren: I would that I might be cast away, so they might be saued. Rom. 1. Exod. 31. Rom. 9.

O my brethren, consider these hearts, consider, I say, the zealous heart that Moses, the zealous affection that Paul had vnto the saluation of the people. What thinke you is it to be stricken out of the booke of life? What thinke you is it to be a man accursed, and haue portion among reprobates? Moses was content to be blotted out of the booke of life, so that the people of Israel might be saued. S. Paul was content to be accursed and cast from the face of God, so that Gods people might not be cast to perdition. Thus they of an earnest heart and zealous loue they bare to the congregation of God, wished their owne destruction for the safegard of others. Therefore also it behoueth you, my brethren, you that are temporal men, it behoueth you on the other part, not to despise Gods messengers, not to set light by them that preach you the Gospel and glad tidings of your saluation. For this is the only meanes whereby it pleaseth God that we should be saued, this only is it whereby the people is won vnto Christ. God might haue sent an Angel vnto the Chamberlaine of the Queene Candace, and so haue conuerted him: but he sent Philip; he sent Philip, I say, a poore and meane man, that through his preaching he might be won to the faith, and so brought to saluation. God might haue sent an Angel to Cornelius: but he sent Peter, who instructed him in the faith, and wan him to the Gospel of Christ. God might haue sent an Angel vnto Paul to haue mollified his heart, and so turned him from persecution of Gods Saints: but it pleased God to send Ananias, that through the putting on of his hands the scales should fal from his eies, that by him he should receiue his sight, & be baptised, and so by meanes of a man he might be brought home vnto God, and made a member of his flock. Therefore whensoeuer we heare the word of God preached, notwithstanding the preacher beare no pomp of eloquence, or shew of great learning, notwithstanding he be a simple and poore man; yet if he bring vnto vs the rule of Christs Gospel, if he teach vs the will of God, and the glory of his word, let vs not despise him, let vs consider that he is Gods messenger, and appointed by God to helpe vs to saluation. Act. 8. Act. 10. Act. 9.

I beseech you, saith S. Paul, that ye receiue not the grace of God in vain. This only boun I aske of you, this is only the request that I make vnto you, that ye take not the grace of God in vain. A great matter it were if any one man would misuse the grace of his Prince, a great matter it were for a man to despise the friendship of his friend, or the gentlenesse of his enemy: but a greater matter it is, yea a far greater matter, to take the grace of God in vaine. For what auaileth it vs, what should it profit vs, if God once deliuer vs from our sinnes, and we turne againe to our old wickednesse?

What gained we, if the couenant of God, & Testament of our Sauiour Christ be broken vnto vs, if we receiue the same in vaine? Blessed are they (saith Christ) which heare the word of God, and keepe it. The Scribes, the Pharisies, the Iewes, Annas, Caiaphas, & Pilat heard the word of God, heard Christ himselfe speak & preach amongst them, and yet they receiued this word of God in vain. Christ likened his word to a sower, that went forth Luke 11.

and ſowed his ſeed, whereof ſome fel by the way ſide, & ſo was troden with mens feet and deſtroied; ſome on the ſtone, which tooke roote, but yet ſoone withered away becauſe it lacked moiſtneſſe; ſome fell among thornes, and the thornes ſprung vp with it and choked it. So the poꝛe huſbandman loſt in manner his whole coſt and labour, foꝛ of all that he ſowed, little fel into the good ground and bꝛought any increaſe. And euen thus ſtandeth it with Gods Goſpel now adaies: foꝛ pꝛeach we neuer ſo oft, teach we neuer ſo much, few, yea very few are found that receiue the ſame, and continue therein, and ſo bꝛing foꝛth fruits of ſaluation. When Moſes the ſeruant of God was but a little time departed from the people, and gone vp into the mount there to talke with God, and aſke counſel of him, the people by and by made themſelues a golden Calfe, and fel to the woꝛſhipping of that Image. And this did they, becauſe they receiued the grace of God in vaine. When Moſes was dead, and Ioſua ſucceeded into his rome, ſtraightwaies the people woꝛſhipped Baal and Aſtaroth, they foꝛſoke the liuing Loꝛd, who had deliuered them, and in ſtead of him they woꝛſhipped very Diuels. And this did they, becauſe they receiued the grace of God in vaine. Saul, though he once was the ſeruant of God, & inſpired with his ſpirit, yet at the length he fel from God and perſecuted Dauid the choſen of God, and ſo in the end miſerably ſlew himſelfe. And this did he, becauſe he receiued the grace of God in vaine. Iudas being one of the Apoſtles, and the ſeruant of Jeſus Chꝛiſt, yet he not only betraied his maſter Chꝛiſt, but alſo became himſelfe a very Diuel: foꝛ ſo ſaid Chꝛiſt: Vnus veſtrum Damon eſt: One of you is the Diuel. And this did he, becauſe he receiued the grace of God in vaine. And therefoꝛe S Paul in this place willeth the Coꝛinthians, that they ſhould not receiue the grace of God in vaine, as the people did in Moſes time: that they ſhould not receiue it as they did which liued in the time of Ioſua: that they ſhould not in ſuch ſoꝛt take it as Saul did: and laſtly, that they ſhould not ſo receiue it in vaine as Iudas did, and woꝛke their owne deſtruction. This was his requeſt, this thing he only deſired, that they would not receiue the grace of God in vaine.

Exod. 32.

1. Reg. 28.

Ioh. 6.

Foꝛ God ſaith: In an acceptable time haue I heard thee, and in the day of ſaluation haue I ſuccoured thee. Theſe woꝛds are witten in the pꝛopheſie of Eſay, and pꝛonounced they were by him of the appearance of Chꝛiſt our Sauiour, and his comming into this woꝛld. And theſe woꝛds thus ſpoken by the Pꝛophet, S. Paul hære fitly applied to the pꝛeaching of Chꝛiſts Goſpel. Foꝛ like as our Sauiour came into the woꝛld at ſuch time as Chꝛiſt was boꝛne; ſo when the Goſpel is truely pꝛeached, and Gods holy woꝛd ſincerely taught vs, then is Chꝛiſt opened vnto vs, then is the acceptable time and our ſaluation is woꝛought thereby. Thereforе S. Hierom, that holy father and old Doctour of the Church, ſaith: Quotieſcunque audimus Euangelium Chriſti, toties caro & ſanguis Chriſti funduntur in aures noſtras: As often as we heare the Goſpel of Chꝛiſt pꝛeached vnto vs, ſo oft the fleſh and bloud of Chꝛiſt is powred into our eares, ſaith S. Hierom. And theſe woꝛds of his do plainly and moſt euidently ſhew vs, how we ſhould vnderſtand the eating of Chꝛiſts body, and dꝛinking of his moſt holy blod in the Sacrament: theſe woꝛds, I ſay, may ſufficiently teach vs what is meant by the eating and dꝛinking of Chꝛiſts body and blod. This is it that S. Paul hære ſpeaketh of, that they receiue not the grace of God in vaine. And whenſoeuer the Goſpel of God is truly and ſincerely pꝛeached, and it receiued accoꝛdingly, then is the acceptable time, then is the time of grace and ſaluation. O what a comfoꝛtable ſaying is this! whenſoeuer we heare the Goſpel taught vs, whenſoeuer we heare Gods holy woꝛd pꝛeached vnto vs, then is the gate of ſaluation ſet open vnto vs, & then is the time of grace. And on the contrary part, when Gods woꝛd is taken from vs, and the light of his Goſpel hidden from our eies, then is the gate of ſaluation ſhut vpon vs, & then is the time of perdition. But alas, the time of grace, the acceptable time, the time of mercy and ſaluation hath often times but little continuance among vs, often times it hath ſmal time of abiding with vs. Foꝛ beforе Chꝛiſt appeared, and was boꝛne into this woꝛld foꝛ the ſpace of foure thouſand yæres, the whole woꝛld, the Jewes only excepted, was in ignoꝛance and altogether blindneſſe. And when Chꝛiſt was boꝛne, when he once appeared, then was the acceptable time, then was the time of grace, then was the time of ſaluation. Hære ſome man wil peraduenture ſay: Why did God ſuffer the whole woꝛld ſo long to be in blindneſſe? why would he in that long time haue no reſpect to any other nation, but only to the nation of the Jewes? This caſe is dæpe, & paſſeth our capacity to reaſon, it is aboue the reach of mans wit, and thereforе hærein we haue only to ſubmit our ſelues, to humble our hearts & our minds, and ſay with Paul the Apoſtle: O homo, quis tu qui Deum arguis: O man, what art thou that findeſt fault with God? What art thou that repꝛoueſt the almighty? As God of his pꝛouidence and good wiſedome hath appointed foꝛ vs both Summer and Winter, the ſpꝛing, and likewiſe the fall of the leafe againe: So hath he oꝛdained a time of light, and a time of darkeneſſe, a time of ſaluation, & a time of deſtruction. And no man may ſay vnto him, Why doſt thou thus? Theſe things ſeeme good in his eies, and therefore what art thou, O man, that wilt call God to account why he doth this, or why he doth that? Thus it pleaſeth God, and ſtandeth with his good will, often times to ſhew vs his light, and the glory of his Goſpel: and often times againe to take the ſame from vs, and leaue vs altogether in blindneſſe, altogether in ignorance, altogether in vtter darkeneſſe. For ſo he hath ſaid by Amos his Prophet: I will ſend an hunger vpon the earth, not the hunger of bread, nor the thirſt of water, but an hunger to heare the word of the Lord: ſo that they ſhall goe from one Sea to the other, yea, from the North to the Eaſt, running about to ſeeke the word of the Lord, and ſhall not find it. Chriſt himſelfe alſo in the Goſpell, ſaith: The kingdome of God ſhall be taken away from you. Rom. 9. Amos 8. Matth. 21.

And yet, when hee hath thus done, when he hath ſent an hunger and thirſt of his word into the earth, when he hath taken Gods kingdome from amongſt vs; yet I ſay, he oftentimes powreth downe his truth into the earth, hee diſtilleth his grace from heauen, that it may ſinke into the hearts of men: For ſo ſaith God by his Prophet Malachie: Ab ortu ſolis, vſque ad occaſum, magnum eſt nomen meum inter gentes: My name is great, euen from the riſing of the Sunne to the fall thereof, amongſt all Nations. I am a great King (ſaith the Lord) and my name is fearefull amongſt the heathen. This is the time that the Prophet Eſay calleth The acceptable time. And what needeth moe examples? the whole Scriptures, both the Old and the New Teſtament, are full of theſe and ſuch like other. Malach. 1.

There are times that are times of knowlege, there are times againe that are times of ignorance. And who is there now, what man ſo old, or child ſo yongue, but may well remember the blindneſſe that hath beene in our time, and our Fathers times before vs? Who is ſo blind, who ſo far paſt knowledge, but may both wel ſee and remember the darke ignorance that hath beene in times paſt, and the great grace that God hath now powred downe vpon vs in theſe our daies?

Therefore as Saint Paul gaue the Corinthians warning, that they ſhould not receiue the grace of God in vaine: euen ſo now he warneth vs, and biddeth vs beware that wee take not this grace of God in vaine, that wee turne not to our old vanity againe, that we returne not to our former wickedneſſe, that we defile not the Goſpell of God by our euill and corrupt liuing. And therefore in another place he ſaieth: Giue your members as inſtruments of righteouſneſſe vnto God, and let not ſinne haue power ouer you. Wherein is ſet out vnto vs, and as it were painted before our eies, our whole office and duty, and how that we as wel by our workes, as by our words, ſhould be an example and patterne for other men to follow, and that we giue no cauſe of offence or ſlander of the Goſpell of God. I ſpeake this not onely to the Preachers and Miniſters of Gods word (though chiefly to them indeed) but I ſpeake it generally to all you my brethren, that profeſſe Gods Goſpell, and beare the name of Chriſt. Rom. 6.

For Saint Paul indifferently to all men ſaith: Yee are not the children of darkneſſe, but the children of light; walke you therefore as becommeth the children of light. And againe in another place, he ſaith: Giue man no occaſion of euil, offend no man, that in your office ye be not found faulty. And ſuch was in old time the life of all good and godly men, ſuch was their liuing that profeſſed Gods Goſpell, and the name of Ieſus Chriſt. 1. Theſſ. 5. 2. Cor. 6.

But if it ſo happen (as often times it chanceth) that men will needs bee offended with vs liue liue we neuer ſo vprightly, walk we neuer ſo circumſpectly (as Chriſt notwithſtanding he was the Sauiour of the world, notwithſtanding he was without ſpot, and one that neuer tranſgreſſed the Law, yet was called the Sone of offence:) If it thus happen, I ſay, that we be ill reported of without cauſe, then may we ſay as Chriſt himſelfe to the Scribes and Phariſies ſaid: Sinite illos, cæci ſunt, duces cæcorum: Let them alone, they are blinde, the leaders of the blinde. 1. Pet. 2. Matth. 15.

This is the comfort that we haue, this is all the comfort that is left vnto vs, if any man wilfully be offended with vs, if any man iudge of vs other then we deſerue. For ſo it behoueth vs to liue, ſo ought wee to direct our liues, that if any man accuſe vs, if any man finde fault with vs, our vpright liuing may bee a teſtimony againſt him, and bee able to confound him. Saint Paul ſaith: It is our part to take away occaſion of offence. When Chriſt by procurement of his enemies (the Scribes and Phariſies) was brought before Pilat to be condemned and adiudged to death, the innocencie of his life was ſuch, that he was cleered and acquited euen by the mouth of his very enemy: For when Pilat had heard all that was laid againſt him, and the whole accuſations wherewith they burdened him, hee pronounced openly, and ſaid: I finde no fault in this man. The Scribes, when they had nothing to accuſe Chriſts Diſciples of, nor nothing wherein they might intrap them, as in breach of their Law, they came vnto our Sauior Chriſt, and ſaid: 2. Cor. 6. Luke 23.

Quare non obseruant Discipuli tui traditiones patrum nostrorũ? Why doe not thy disciples obserue the traditions of our fathers? Why kepe they not the customes of our elders? said they. And vpon this place of the Gospell, S. Chrysostome an old Doctor of the Church, saith thus: That the Disciples of Christ in all points so exactly fulfilled the law, that the Scribes could find no fault in them, as touching the same: and therefore they controlled them for breaking their owne traditions, and the traditions of their forefathers. Traianus that Emperor of Rome, and most cruell persecutor of the Christians in his time, when hee had vsed al kind of extremity towards them, and indeed put a wonderfull number vnto death, and heard say, that they all suffered maruellous patiently, and willingly went to execution; and that notwithstanding this, they daily increased and grew more and more: he sent abroad into all parts of his dominion, to vnderstand what manner of men they were, of what conuersation, and in what sort they liued, that professed the name of Christ: And answere hee had from Plinie a gentleman of Rome and a Magistrate in that City, who said, That they were men without fault, and liued without offence, as touching the lawes; sauing that in the morning they vsed to resort together, and so make their praiers and call vpon the name of Iesus. Tertullian also, an old father of the Church, saith, that in his time this report went of one Seianus, a Christian, and was amongst al men so common a saying, that in maner it became a Prouerbe: Marcus Seianus, vir bonus, si non Christianus: This was all the fault they could finde in him: That he was a Christian man, and one that professed the name of Christ. So the same Tertullian in another place speaking of the Christians in his time, saith: Vide, appellant se fratres, & mori volunt pro inuicem: Loe, they cal themselues brethren, and one will die for another. This was the only fault they found in them, that they loued so together, that one would vouchsafe to die for the other: this was, I say, the greatest fault that they could find no fault in them.

Luke 5.

Thus was it amongst Christians in the beginning of Christs Church; and thus ought it to be amongst vs: so should we liue, that we may be found vnreprooueable and vnspotted in the sight of all men. And therefore S. Paul heere saith, that we should walke in such honestly, in such vprightnesse of life, That we giue no man occasion of euill, that in our office there be found no fault: that if any man would accuse vs he might be controlled by our vertuous life: that our enemies haue nothing to lay to our charge, nothing to accuse vs withall; but that euen their owne mouthes should acquit and discharge vs: that in our selues and our liues, there should none other fault be found, but onely this, that wee are called Christians: that we should in such loue liue together, that one of vs would willingly die for the other: And lastly, that this only fault should be in vs, that we are cleane and without fault, that both our words, works, and deeds may testifie vs to be professors of God, and his holy Gospell.

Good people, let vs consider that God of his goodnesse hath sent vnto vs this acceptable time, the time of mercy and grace, that he hath deliuered vs from the horrible thraldome that we sometimes liued in: that God hath put away the blindnesse, & dispersed that great darkenesse whereunder the whole world was sometime whelmed: that we may now worship him in spirit and holinesse without superstition or Idolatry: that we may now walke in the light, without any error or wandring. And this great blessing of his, whoso seth not I pray God open his eies that he may both see and vnderstand it.

Let vs not, good brethren, let vs not take this grace of God in vaine, let vs not despise this Gospell of Christ, whereby the whole world is saued. God knoweth how long this acceptable time, this time of grace, this time of saluation, shall last and continue amongst vs. And what knowest thou, O thou man, whether by one only sermon many may be conuerted, and won to the faith of Iesus Christ: S. Peter by one only Sermon conuerted fiue thousand people, as it appeareth in the Acts of the Apostles.

Acts 4.

S. Hierome hath a saying worthy to be noted, and it is this: I know not, saith S. Hierome, whether that soule may be saued, that is negligent in hearing the word of God, and the Gospell of his saluation preached: I know not, saith he, whether such a soule may be saued. Alas, good brethren, we are not able to saue you, God is your only Sauior and Redeemer: we are but Gods messengers sent vnto you, we are but helpers appointed to exhort you to the Gospell of God, and to open vnto you the glory of your saluation. If you then will wilfully refuse to heare Gods holy word, and will not imbrace the same, we cannot saue you, we are not able to worke your saluation. I my selfe rose vp euer betimes to warne my people, saith God by his Prophet Ieremy: I my selfe stand all the day at the gate crying vnto them to commune with them, yet would they not heare: I called vnto them, yet would they not answer me.

Ierem. 7.

O my deare brethren, God knocketh, let vs open the gates of our hearts vnto him: hee calleth, let vs heare him: he crieth, and willeth vs to come vnto him; O therefore let vs ran,

run, let vs make haſt, let vs flie vnto him. I haue euer ſtretched out my hands to Eſay 65.
an vnfaithfull people, ſaith GOD by his Prophet Eſay: all the day long haue I ſtretched out mine armes vnto a people that will not heare me: all the day long haue I ſtretched out mine hands vnto them, and yet they will not know me: I haue ſent you the acceptable time; I haue giuen you the daies of grace, the daies of mercy, the daies of ſaluation. O then let vs not receiue this acceptable time in vaine, let vs not take this grace of God in vaine: Let vs remember how many thouſands of people periſh this day for want of the Goſpell of God, and knowledge of his holy word. We are they whom God hath called to be his children, whom he hath appointed to be ſaued, whom he hath receiued to his grace and mercy. If we haue any great policy, if we haue any great wit, if we haue any learning, riches, wealth, and felicity in this world; let vs conſider that we haue them from God alone, that God giueth vs our policy, that God giueth vs our wit, that God giueth vs our learning, that he alone giueth vs our riches, our wealth, and all other felicity that we haue in this life. O then let vs not take theſe great gifts of God in vaine, let vs not take theſe graces of his in vaine. Let our liues ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee our good works, and glorifie our Father which is in Heauen. Amen.

ROM. 12.

VERS. 16. We deſire you, that ye thinke all one thing, that ye haue like affection to another. Be not high minded: be not wiſe in your owne opinion.
17. Recompence to no man euill for euill.
18. If it be poſſible haue peace with all men.

DEerly beloued in our Lord and Sauiour Jeſus Chriſt, This Epiſtle or letter of S. Paul, written vnto the Romans, is diuided into two ſeuerall parts.

In the firſt part S. Paul inſtructeth and telleth them of the beginning of their religion, of the foundation of their faith, of the grace whereunto they are called by the merits & death of Jeſus Chriſt. And forbecauſe, he ſaw and wel perceiued, that euen ſuch of the Romans, who had receiued the faith, to be far from the workes of the faith, & the profeſſion of the Goſpel of Chriſt, therefore he inſtructeth them, that they know the Teſtament of Chriſt, that they know the couenant of their ſaluation: & that they ſhould remember, that where beforetime they were ſtrangers from God, cleane without any promiſe of grace, enemies vnto God, and the children of perdition, were now called vnto God, were become the ſons of Abraham, Gods deare friends, and the children of adoption: and this not of any deſert of theirs, not by any merit of their owne: but only through the great grace, and meere mercy of Jeſus Chriſt. For the whole world was couered vnder wickednes: the whole world, I ſay, the Jewes only excepted, was ouerwhelmed in ſin, and had no hope at al of any ſaluation by God. But yet when Chriſt Jeſus the Sauiour of al the world appeared, and the Jewes would not acknowledge him their Redeemer, it pleaſed God, by him to ſaue the whole World, and cal vnto his grace as wel the Gentile as the Jew, the vncircumciſed as the circumciſed: and this did he only of his infinite and great goodnes. And therefore S. Paul in the concluſion hereof, trieth out, and ſaith: O the depthnes of the abundant wiſdome and knowledge of God, how vnſearchable are his iudgements, and his waies paſt finding out! Who knoweth the mind of the Lord? who was his Counſellour? Who hath giuen vnto him firſt, that he might be recompenced againe? And therefore he concludeth thus: Quia in illo, ex illo, & per illum omnia, illi omnis honor & gloria. For of him, through him, and for him are all things: to him therefore be glory for euer. Thus doth S. Paul conclude the firſt part, to know the couenant of their ſaluation, to know the greatneſſe of Gods mercy, wherunto they are called, and to giue the praiſe and thankes to him alone. Rom. 11. 33. Rom. 11. 36.

In the ſecond part, which I now handle, he inſtructeth them of a vertuous life, of honeſt converſation, and vpright liuing among all men. For it is not enough to change our Religion, it is not ſufficient to alter our faith, but we muſt alſo change our old life, we muſt walke in newneſſe of life, we muſt walk in holineſſe, we muſt walk as becommeth the profeſſors of a new Religion, as becommeth them that are of a right faith, as becommeth all ſuch as confeſſe God and his Goſpel. And therefore S. Paul writing vnto the Hebrews ſaith: Seeing that we by the meanes of the blood of Jeſus haue liberty to enter into the holy place, let vs draw nigh with a true heart in a ſure faith, let vs prouoke vnto loue & to good works. Heb. 10. 19.

Epheſ. 5. 8. So in another place he ſaith; You were ſometimes darkneſſe, but now ye are light in the Lord, walke therefore as becommeth the children of light. So God himſelfe when he had choſen the Iewes to be his people, and them alone amongſt all other Nations to worſhip him, ſaid; O Iſraell, what is it that I require or ſeeke for at thy hands, but that thou loue me, and keep my commandements? This is the only thing that I would haue you to doe, that you kéep my Law and walke in my Precepts.

Deut. 10.

Therefore Saint Paul himſelfe alſo, after he had declared and ſet forth at large, the great goodneſſe and mercy of God, he ſaid: I beſeech you, that ye make your bodies a quicke and liuely Sacrifice, holy and acceptable vnto God, which is your reaſonable ſeruing of God. Renue your ſpirits, make your ſelues new hearts, that it may ſhew and appeare in you, that you are reconciled vnto God, that you are the children of adoption, and profeſſours of Gods holy name.

Therefore be not high minded, be not wiſe in your own opinions: recompence no man euill for euill: prouide aforehand things honeſt in the ſight of all men: and if it be poſſible, haue peace with all men. Marke well my brethren theſe words by the way; If it be poſſible haue peace with all men. Chriſt, though he was the author of peace, and the true peace it ſelfe, yet could he not haue peace with all men. Non veni pacem mittere in terras, ſed bellum, ſed diſcordiam: I am not come (ſaith Chriſt) to ſend peace into the world, but war and diſſenſion: for from hence forth there ſhall be fiue in one houſe diuided, three againſt two, and two againſt three: the father againſt the ſonne, and the ſonne againſt the father: the mother againſt the daughter; and the daughter againſt the mother. The peace of the world is no peace with God: the loue of this world is no loue before God.

Luke 12.

So the Patriarchs and the Prophets, though they were men of peace, yet could they haue no peace in this world. And therefore S. Paul here ſaith: If it be poſſible, as much as in you ſhall lie, haue peace with all men; be in vnity and loue with all maner of men. This thing, my brethren, I haue put you in remembrance of by the way.

But that S. Paul ſhould thus doe, that he ſhould exhort the Romans, as he here doth, that they become not high minded, nor wiſe in their owne opinions, nor recompence no man euill for euill, & that they ſhould, if it were poſſible, haue peace with all men; good cauſe there was, there was, I ſay, good cauſe why he ſhould thus doe. For there were at the ſame time in Rome, a great number both of Iewes and Gentiles, and amongſt them there was great ſtrife and diuiſion. The Iewes on the one ſide eſtéemed not the Gentiles: the Gentiles on the other ſide deſpiſed the Iewes. Thus betwéen them the people were diuided, and rent into diſſenſion: thus betwéen them the whole people often times were ready to fall together by the eares: and thus through them, were they at ſuch great contention and ſtrife, that they that were brethren would not vouchſafe to commune & talke together: they that before were linked in ſuch loue and united together, that one would die for the other, could not then one abide another: and ſuch as were friends, became open enemies. And this came to paſſe onlie through pride. Pride was the cauſe, that ſuch as were brethren fell out one with another: pride was the cauſe, that ſuch as ſhould haue died one for another could not one abide another: pride was the cauſe, that ſuch as beforetime were friends, became then open enemies. The Iewes on the one part, were proud, for that they were the children of Abraham, for that they were vnder the Law & promiſe, for that they had knowledge of Gods will by Oracles, for that God had often times both ſent his Angels vnto them and ſpoken by his owne mouth vnto them. And the Gentiles had none of all theſe: they were not of the ſeed of Abraham: they were not vnder the promiſe: they neuer had knowledge of Gods will, neither by Oracle, nor viſion; God neuer ſpake vnto them, nor neuer ſent his Angels vnto them. The Gentiles on the other ſide, were as proud as the Iewes: they ſaid that they had wiſe men amongſt them, men of great learning and knowledge: they had Philoſophers, they had Aſtronomers, they had Geometricians, and great Orators; and ſo had not the Iewes amongſt them: They had no men of great wiſdome, they had no men of any high learning, they had no Philoſophers, no Aſtronomers, no Geometricians, nor Orators; they were men ignorant, and without any great knowledge at all. S. Paul therefore to ſet an vnity betwéen theſe two which were thus far at diſcord, exhorteth them, that They all thinke one thing, that they be of like affection one towards another: that they be not high minded, nor wiſe in their owne opinions. For pride it is that breaketh all loue, and pride it is that breedeth all diſſenſion. There was neuer yet diuiſion, there was neuer any diſcord or diſſenſion, but pride was the firſt cauſe and authour thereof.

Rom. 9.

Lucifer, that ſometime was an Angell of God, ſet himſelfe againſt God, and ſaid: Exaltabo me ſuper Aquilonem, & ero ſimilis Altiſſimo: I will get me vp aboue the North Pole, I will ſit aboue the clouds, and I will be like vnto the moſt high. And this did he, for that that he ſwelled with pride. And therefore was he throwne downe; only for this great pride of his was he caſt into vtter darkeneſſe, and deepe dungeon of hell.

Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, being puffed vp with pride, conſpired againſt Moſes and Aaron: but God cauſed the earth to open, and ſwallowed vp both them, and all ſuch as then were in the Tents with them. Numb. 16.

The Iewes themſelues, which had profeſſed the Goſpell of Chriſt in S. Pauls time, were diuided; and ſome of them ſaid; I ſtand with Paul: ſome other ſaid; I hold with Apollo, and ſo were drawen on either ſide. 1. Cor. 1.

And this did they only through pride. But alas, ſaith S. Paul: Is Chriſt diuided? Both Paul and Apollo preach one and the ſame Chriſt vnto you, they teach you all one Goſpell; is Chriſt then diuided amongſt you? So likewiſe ſome of them, which profeſſed Chriſts Goſpell (becauſe al meats and drinks were indifferent vnto them, becauſe they could with ſafe conſcience indifferently eat of all meats, and drinke of all kinds of drinke) were proud, and thought themſelues more perfect then other men. On the other ſide, ſuch as had a conſcience therein, ſuch as could not for conſcience ſake indifferently vſe all kinds of meats and drinks, were likewiſe proud and thought themſelues more holy then other men. Rom. 14.

And thus pride, euen amongſt ſuch as profeſſed Chriſt and his Goſpell, brake the loue and vnity which ſhould haue bene amongſt them that lined vnder the Goſpell. Pride it was that cauſed the Iewes to hate the Gentiles, and the Gentiles to deſpiſe the Iewes. Pride it was that cauſed Lucifer ſo much to exalt himſelfe, and make himſelfe equall with God. Pride it was that cauſed Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, to conſpire againſt Moſes, and Aaron. Pride it was that cauſed ſuch as could indifferently eat all meats, to thinke themſelues more perfect then ſuch as could not ſo doe. Pride it was againe, that cauſed the other which could not indifferently vſe all meats, to thinke themſelues more holy then the reſt. Therefore in this place S. Paul willeth the Romanes for auoiding of all diſſention, firſt to put away all pride, which is the very rot and mother of all diſcord: Be not high minded, ſaid he, for ſo ſhall you abate this rancor and malice among you; but humble your ſelues, humble your courage; bee not proud of your wit, of your great learning, of your eloquence: but make your ſelues equall to them of the lower ſort. This is the golden chaine of humility. For like as pride is the mother of all wickednes, ſo is humility the mother of all vertue: like as pride maketh vs like vnto Lucifer, ſo humility maketh vs like vnto Chriſt. Therefore Chriſt himſelfe, when he firſt gaue his Diſciples charge for to preach, when he firſt gaue them in commandement vpon the mount, to publiſh abroad his Goſpell, Beati pauperes, ſaid he. And why ſo: quoniam ipſorum eſt regnum cœlorum. Bleſſed are the poor, for theirs is the kingdome of God. Luke 6. And againe: Beati mites. And why ſo: Quoniam ipſi poſſidebunt terram: Bleſſed are the meeke, for they ſhall inherit the earth. Matth. 5. So againe to his diſciples he ſaid; Diſcite ex me, quia ego mitis ſum: Learne ye of me, for I am meek; I am gentle, learne this of me, ſaid Chriſt. Matth. 11. So Paul: Hic ſenſus ſit in vobis, qui fuit in Chriſto: Let the ſame minde be in you, that was alſo in Chriſt Ieſus: which when he was equall with God, yet neuertheleſſe made himſelfe of no reputation, & humbled himſelfe vnto death, euen the death of the Croſſe. Philip. 2. So Dauid, notwithſtanding he was a King, a Prophet, and a man choſen, euen according to the heart of God, yet he humbled himſelfe and ſaid: Non ambulaui in magnis, neque in mirabilibus ſuper me: I am not high minded, I haue no proud looks, I do not exerciſe my ſelfe in great matters, which are too high for me. Pſalm. 131. So Paul: God hath choſen the fooliſh things of this world, that by them hee may bee able to confound the wiſe: hee hath choſen the weake things that through them hee may ſubdue the ſtrong. Thus God vſeth humble and lowly things, ſaith S. Paul. Ex ore infantium & lactantium perfeciſti laudem tuam. Out of the mouth of very babes & ſucklings haſt thou made perfit thy praiſe; euen by the mouths of infants & ſucking babes thou haſt ordained ſtrength, & ſpread abroad the glory of thy name. 1. Cor. 1. Pſalm. 8. So Paul, notwithſtanding he was a great learned man, and ſkilful in the Lawes among the Iewes, yet he bragged not, nor boaſted of his great knowledge he had, but he humbled himſelfe, and ſaid; Ego me arbitror nihil ſcire niſi Chriſtum, & eum quidem crucifixum: I thinke thus of my ſelf, that I know nothing, ſaue Ieſus Chriſt, euen the ſame that was crucified. Other knowledge haue I none to aduance my ſelfe of, ſaid S. Paul. 1. Cor. 2. And vpon this foundation of humility, it pleaſed almighty God, at the firſt to erect and build his holy Church, vpon his Apoſtles; I ſay, who were the very patternes of meekeneſſe, it ſeemed good vnto God to build his holy Church. And after them, ſuch as were of the congregation of Chriſt, ſuch as profeſſed the name of Chriſt, were not proud men, were not men of hauty courage, nor high minded. And therefore, as we read in the Acts of the Apoſtles, Erat illis cor vnum, & anima vna: They were all of one heart, and one minde together. Acts. 4. So at the beginning, the Diſciples of Chriſt were poore in ſpirit, and therefore were they meet to inherit the kingdome of heauen: they were meeke in heart, and humble of minde, and therefore were they mæt to poſſeſſe the earth: they learned at Chriſt to be méeke and lowly: they had the ſame ſenſe in them that was in Chriſt, and therefore they humbled themſelues vnto death: they were counted the fooliſh things of the earth, therefore were they mæte inſtruments to confound the wiſdome of the world; they were counted the weake things, and therefore were they mæt to ouercome the mighty. The babes were méeke and lowly, and therefore were they mæt to ſpread abroad the glory of God. S. Paul of all his learning thought that he knew nothing, ſo much he humbled himſelfe: and therfore was he mæt to be an Apoſtle of Chriſt, and Preacher of his Goſpell. There is a ſtory, or rather a fable, written of S. Anthonie; whether you take it as a ſtorie, or a fable, I much recken not, but it ſerueth well for this purpoſe: It is thus: S. Anthonie on a time lay in a trance, and as he ſo lay, he loked down from heauen (as he thought) and ſaw all the whole earth ſo thicke couered with ſnares, that poſſible it was not for any man to tread vpon the earth, and not be intangled therwithall: and this when he beheld, ſuddenly he cried out, and ſaid; O Lord, and who can then walke on the earth, and not be intrapped? With that he heard a voice that anſwered him, & ſaid: Sola humilitas: Onelie humilitie it is, ſaid that voice, that may go, and not be intangled: only Humilitie, and nothing elſe. Who ſo is Humble, he may walke without danger, he may goe and not be taken. This is written that S. Anthonie ſhould ſée, and heare in his trance. But Dauid, the Prophet of God, ſaith indéed: Sacrificium Deo ſpiritus contritus: The contrite and humble heart, is a ſacrifice vnto God: the méeke and lowly heart is a ſweet and acceptable Sacrifice vnto God, ſaith the Prophet Dauid. So againe, in another place he ſaith:

Pſal. 138. Deus humilia reſpicit, & alta à longè proſpicit: God hath regard to the humble and lowlie, and as for the proud, hee beholdeth them a far off. Eſay alſo, or rather God by his Prophet

Eſay 65. Eſay ſaith: Super quem requieſcet ſpiritus meus, niſi ſuper humilem? Vpon whom ſhall my ſpirit reſt, ſaith God, but vpon the humble and meeke? for otherwiſe, ſaith S. Paul, Titus 3. Qui inflatur, cadit: Hee that is puffed vppe with pride, falleth into the hands of the Diuell.

Thus, (good Brethren) humility preſerueth the Church of God; humility vpholdeth all good Common weales. Pride it is that ſcattereth the Church of God; pride ouerthroweth all good Common weales. There was yet neuer pride in any Citie without diſſenſion, nor diſſenſion that continued without deſtruction of the whole Common weale. Yee ſhall neuer read in any record, either of City, Kingdome, or Common weale, but that, if pride raigned therein, there conſequentlie followed diſſenſion, and of diſſenſion inſued the ouerthrow of the ſame. In the City of Rome, which was called the Lady of the whole world, there were two that toke vpon them the gouernance of the Empire: Iulius Cæſar, and Pompey. Iulius Cæſar was a man of ſo haughty courage, that hee could abide no Péere: Pompey was of ſuch an high mind, that hee could ſuffer no man to be his equall. And thus for dominion, ſtroue theſe two together: and thus through their diſſenſion, was not onely the whole City, but the Kingdome it ſelfe brought to deſtruction. The State of the Grecians, which then chiefly aboue other flouriſhed, becauſe it was diuided, came to vtter confuſion. But what ſpeake I of theſe? what ſpeake I of Rome, and the State of the Grecians. Who is there that hath not heard of Ieruſalem; Ieruſalem I ſay, that great City, that ſame Towne that God had choſen to him ſelfe, euen that ſame Towne wherein God would haue his Temple erected, and his holie name honored, after that the Rulers thereof began to be diuided, after that the Magiſtrates fell to diſcord, and each man would bée a Captaine, and no man would bee ruled: then came the enemies in, then was it beſieged, then was the Mother for very famine conſtrained to eat her owne child, then was it vtterly deſtroied, and no one ſtone left vpon another; and which was moſt miſerable, there were ſlaine in that Citie eleuen hundred thouſand people, and the verie chanels in the ſtrætes ran all with bloud. Thus miſerably was it ouerthrowen, and in ſuch wretched eſtate were the whole people thereof: and this onely came to paſſe through pride and diſſenſion. And this was it that Eſay long time before propheſied of, and ſaid: Then Eſay 3.24. ſhall the whole Countrie be ſcattered, when the people once conſpire againſt their Princes. And therefore alſo an old writer, Petrus Lilius ſaith: Diſcord is the onelie cauſe of the ouerthrow of Kingdomes; Diuiſion is the onelie cauſe that great Empires cannot ſtand; Diſſenſion maketh two Kingdomes of one; Diſſenſion maketh of two Cities one; and at length it maketh of two Kingdomes, no Kingdome; of two Cities, no Citie. This writeth Petrus Lilius of Diſſenſion; this is the end of Diſcord ſaith hee: and indéed experience hath taught that this is moſt true.

But wherefore ſpeake I of theſe things? wherefore doe I héere repeat vnto you theſe old and ancient hiſtories? why recount I vnto you the ouerthrow of Rome? the deſtruction of the Grecians? the deſolation of Ieruſalem? which all hapned through Diuiſion. I would to God I ſaw nothing euen now before mine eies, that cauſeth me thus to ſay: I would

would to God, I ſay, that I ſaw now nothing preſent before mine eies, that cauſeth mee thus to ſay. But theſe examples (my brethren) God hath placed before our eies, that wee might take heed by them, that wee might the better looke to our ſelues, and beware of our owne deſtruction. Chriſt hath ſaid; Chriſt that is the authour of truth, and truth it ſelfe, hath ſaid: Ciuitas diuiſa, deſolabitur: The City that is diuided, bee it neuer ſo rich, neuer ſo ſtrong, neuer of ſo great force, yet, ſhall it be deſtroied, it ſhall be brought to vtter deſolation. Rome, that ſometime was the wealthieſt City in the World, and called therefore the Lady of the whole world, fell to diuiſion: and therefore was ſhee ouerthrowen and vterly deſtroied. The Grecians, which were a people of greateſt force, fell to diſſenſion: and therefore was their whole eſtate pulled downe, and caſt flat to the ground. Ieruſalem, that holy City, that City that was ſo ſtrong, fell aſunder, fell at diſcord within it ſelfe: and therefore was ſhee ſpoiled of her enemies, and brought to deſolation. Luke 11.

Remember, good brethren, remember with your ſelues, how can that ſhip which ſaileth in the Sea, bee ſafe in the middeſt of the waues, if the people within the ſame doe bore through it, or rent vp the ribs of the ſame? How can that City be preſerued, where no man will heare counſell, where no man careth for the publike State, where no man paſſeth for other, where God is not in the middeſt: Deus charitas eſt, ſaith S. Iohn, & qui in charitate eſt, in Deo manet: God is charity, and he that dwelleth in charity, dwelleth in God. Or, ſaith Salomon: Turris fortiſſima nomen Domini: The name of the Lord is a ſtrong Tower: The name of God ſaueth the City. Dauid alſo the Prophet of God ſaith: Niſi Dominus cuſtodierit ciuitatem, in vanum laborant qui cuſtodiunt eam: Except the Lord keepe the City, except the Lord defend it, ſaith hee, they labour in vaine, they watch in vaine that are ſet to defend it. 1. Ioh. 4. Pſal. 127.

Theſe things, good brethren appertaine both to our office that are Miniſters, and appointed by God to inſtructe the people, and they appertaine alſo vnto all Magiſtrates, yea, and vnto the whole people. As for vs that are Gods Miniſters, and meſſengers ſent vnto you, we do ſtand vpon the Tower to crie, and giue you warning that the enemies are comming, to ſhew you before hand that your foes are approching: our part is to declare vnto you, that your fight is not againſt King, nor Cæſar; is not againſt any Prince or power of this world, but againſt ſpirituall enemies, againſt the Diuell and his adherents: our part is to diſſuad you from diſſenſion: to diſſuad you from diſcord and diuiſion. This muſt we doe aſwell to the Magiſtrate, as to the reſt of the people: aſwell to him that beareth office, as to him that beareth none. For we are debtors vnto all men, aſwell to the rich, as to the poore; to the wiſe, as to the foliſh; to the good, as to the bad. This is alſo the Magiſtrates office; this is likewiſe his duty. Therefore hath God ſet him vp; therefore hath God exalted him aboue the reſt of the people, that hee ſhould guid them in peace, and lead them in loue and vnitie together. Rom. 1.

Thus did Dauid, that good king; he found the whole kingdome left by Saul his predeceſſor in diſſenſion & diuiſion within it ſelfe; he found, I ſay, the whole country at variance and great debate; but by his great wiſdome & good gouernance together, he reduced the ſame into good order againe, and ſuch as before were enemies, he made faithfull friends, and the whole Country he brought to quietneſſe, peace, and mutuall vnity. And therefore, when he had this brought to paſſe, for ioy that he had thus of mortall foes, made louing friends, he ſung: O quàm bonum, & quàm iucundum habitare fratres in vnum! O how ioyfull a thing is it, for brethren to dwell together in vnity! So much it comforted him, ſo glad was hee when he ſaw his people agree together. Therefore in the ſcriptures the Magiſtrates are called Shepheards, for that they ought ſo to guid the people committed to their charge, as the Shepheard doth his flocke. Therefore they are called alſo Captaines, for that they ought to haue ſuch reſpect to Gods people, as the good Captaine hath regard to his Souldiers. Therefore likewiſe are they called the Heads, for that, like as the head gouerneth the whole body, ſo ſhould they rule and gouerne the people, as members of their body. Therefore in like are they called Fathers, for that the people are ſo in ſubiection vnto them, as the child is in obedience vnder his Father. But chiefly it is required in them; it is chiefly, and aboue all other things required in ſuch as are Magiſtrates, that they themſelues knowe God; that they themſelues, I ſay, aboue all other men, haue perfect knowledge of God, and his Lawes: ſo that the people by that meane may follow him, and they all together may follow God. Therefore in the Booke of Deuteronomie, God himſelfe gaue in charge to all ſuch as ſhould become Magiſtrates, ſaying: He that is called to beare Office, whatſoeuer he be that is appointed to be a Ruler, ſhal firſt write out all this booke of my Law with his own hand. And againe, he ſaid: Non recedet liber iſte ab ore tuo: This booke of mine ſhall not depart from thy mouth: this booke of mine ſhall not be out of thy hand. This is Gods charge to all them that beare office, this is his charge and commandement giuen vnto them. Iohn 1. 1. Pet. 2. Ioſua 1.

fore that good king Dauid, when God had appointed him to be king and chiefe Ruler of his people, he said: Si dedero oculis meis somnum, aut palpebris meis requiem, antequam inuenero domum Domino meo, & Tabernaculum Deo Iacob: If I shall giue my selfe vnto sleepe, or mine eie lids any rest, before that I find out a house for my God, and a Tabernacle for the God of Iacob, &c. As who would say, I will neuer study mine owne matters, I will neuer go about mine owne business, before I haue established the matters of my God, and the businesse of the God of Iacob. Therefore in like maner Ezechias, that vertuous king, when he was called by God to beare office, would not go home to his own affaires, before he had purged the Church of God. Iustinian also, that good and godly Emperor, was wont to say; That hee asmuch cared for the preseruation of Gods Church, as he did for the safegard of his owne soule. And thus, loke what care Dauid the prophet of God had ouer Gods people: loke what care that vertuous king Ezechias had: loke what care that good and godly Emperor Iustinian had; the same, and the like ought euery good Magistrate to haue: as Dauid, Ezechias, and Iustinian did, so should euery good and godly officer doe: he must not giue himselfe vnto sleep, nor his eie lids vnto rest, before he hath prouided a Temple for the God of Iacob: hee must not goe home vnto his owne house, before that hee hath purged Gods Church: he must haue as great respect to the saluation of Gods flocke, as he hath regard to the safegard of his owne Soule: he must remember, that his chaire is Gods chaire, that his sword is Gods sword. Now (good Brethren) it behoueth you of your part, to put away all hatred, to abolish from him all pride, dissension, all discord, and to honor the Magistrate, to follow you your Shepheard, as the sheepe doe there shepheard: to ioy in him your Captaine, as the Souldiers reioice in their Captaine: to bee gouerned by him your head, as the members of the body are ruled by the head: and lastly, so to bee in subiection vnto him, as the childe is in obedience and subiection to his father. And so shall there then be, both a godly Magistrate, so shall there be godly people, and so shall there bee a godly Realme.

2. Chro. 29.

Now let vs here thinke, that S. Paul speaketh these words vnto vs (as indeed he speaketh them vnto vs, if we are, or will be called Christians) vnto vs, he saith: Bee not high minded: vnto vs he saith; Be not wise in your owne opinions: vnto vs he saith; Recompence no man euill for euill: vnto vs he saith; If it be possible haue peace with all men. O then, why are we of such proud hearts? Why are we high minded? Why are we wise in our owne opinions? Why recompence we euill for euill? Why seeke wee reuengement? Why agree not wee together? O by whose name shall I call you? I would I might call you brethren: but alas, this heart of yours is not brotherly. I would I might call you Christians: but alas, you are no Christians. I know not by what name I shall call you: for if you were brethren, you would loue as brethren: if you were Christians, you would agree as Christians. Christ said vnto his disciples, and so by them to all such as professe his name; Mandatum nouum do vobis, vt diligatis inuicem, sicut & ego dilexi vos: I giue you a new commandement, said Christ, that you loue together, euen as I haue loued you. By this token, by this cognisance of mine shall men know you to be my Disciples, if you loue together as I haue loued you. Let vs loke well vpon our selues, let vs behold our selues well: alas, this badge, this cognisance is gone, this peace that Christ left vnto vs, is not to be found amongst vs. O ye that sometimes were brethren, but now mortall enemies, ye that sometimes ware this badge, this cognisance of Christs peace, which now ye haue cast from you: O how long will you follow vanity, how long will ye dwell in dissension? I haue done my part, I haue called you to peace, I haue called you to loue, I haue called you to vnity: doe you now your parts, doe you ensue after peace, loue you ech other, continue ye in vnity together. I haue not the keies of your hearts, I am not able to lose and open those stony hearts of yours: God make you all one, God mollifie your hearts, God make you friends, God grant you to loue as brethren together.

Ioh. 13.

Let vs lay aside this pride of our heart, let vs not be wise in our owne opinions, let vs not requite euill with euill; let vs, as much as may be, haue peace with all men. Alas, it is no great thing that I require of you: I require only your loue, I require your friendship one towards another; I aske no more, but that your hearts be ioined in mutuall loue and vnity together. Alas, it is a thing that some may bee granted of such as pray together, of such as haue one heauenly Father, of such as are partakers of Christs holy Sacraments, of such as professe Christ, and will be called Christians.

O how can we pray our Heauenly father to forgiue vs, if we will not forgiue our brother wherein hee trespasseth against vs? How can wee with cleere conscience come vnto the holy Communion, and bee partakers of Christs most holy body and bloud, if wee are not in charity with our owne neighbour? Let vs therefore lay aside all discord without hypocrisie, let vs lay apart all malice without dissimulation, let vs all ioine together ther in brotherly loue, let vs all be of like affection one towards another; but let vs not be high minded, let vs make our ſelues equall to them of the lower ſort. So ſhall we make our bodies a quicke and liuely Sacrifice, ſo ſhall we make them holy and acceptable vnto God; ſo ſhall we be reconciled vnto God, and God reconciled vnto vs: and finally, ſo ſhall we which are called Chriſtians, be knowen to be Gods ſeruants, and ſuch as profeſſe the name of Chriſt, if we ſhall be found to haue this peace and brotherly loue, which is the badge and cogniſance of Chriſt. And ſo ſhall God be ours, and remaine with vs for euer. Amen.

A TREATISE OF THE SACRAMENTS GATHERED out of certaine Sermons, which the Reuerend Father in God, Biſhop Iewel, preached at Salisbury.

I Haue opened vnto you the contents of the Lords Praier, and ſhewed you vpon whom we ought to call, and what to aſke: and the Articles of our Chriſtian Faith, in God the Father, the Sonne, and the Holie Ghoſt; of the Church, of Remiſſion of Sinnes, of the Reſurrection, and of Life euerlaſting, &c. And I haue opened vnto you the Tenne commandements, and in them what our duty is towards God, towards our Prince and Magiſtrates, towards our Parents, towardes our neighbour and towards our ſelues. All this haue I done ſimplie and plainelie, without all ſhew of learning, that it might the better ſinke into our hearts.

Now I thinke good to ſpeake of the Sacraments of the Church, that all you may know what they are, becauſe you are all partakers of the holy Sacraments. Chriſt hath ordained them, that by them he might ſet before our eies the myſteries of our ſaluation, and might more ſtrongly confirme the faith, which we haue in his blood, and might ſeale his grace in our hearts. As Princes ſeales confirme and warrant their deeds and charters: ſo doe the Sacraments witneſſe vnto our conſcience, that Gods promiſes are true, and ſhall continue for euer. Thus doth God make known his ſecret purpoſe to his Church: firſt, he declareth his mercy by his word: then he ſealeth it, and aſſureth it by his Sacraments. In the word we haue his promiſes: in the Sacraments we ſee them.

It would require a long time, if I ſhould diſcourſe that might be ſaid in this matter: eſpecially in laying open ſuch errors and abuſes, as haue crept into the Church. But I will haue regard to this place, and ſo frame my ſpeech, that the meaneſt and ſimpleſt may reape profit thereby. That you may the better remember it, I will keepe this order. I will ſhew you, what a Sacrament is: Secondly, who hath ordained them: Thirdly, wherefore they were ordained, and what they worke in vs: Fourthly, how many there are: and then I will briefly ſpeake of euery one of them.

A Sacrament is an outward and viſible ſigne, whereby God ſealeth vp his grace in our hearts, to the confirmation of our Faith. Saint Auguſtine ſaith: Sacramentum eſt inuiſibilis gratiæ viſibile ſignum: A Sacrament is a viſible ſigne of grace inuiſible. And that we may the better vnderſtand him, he telleth vs what thing we ſhould call a ſigne: A ſigne, is a thing that beſids the ſight it ſelfe, which it offereth to the ſenſes, cauſeth of it ſelfe ſome other certaine thing to come to knowledge. In Baptiſme, the water is the ſigne: and the thing ſignified, is the grace of God. We ſee the water, but the grace of God is inuiſible: we cannot

ſee

Ad Marcellinum epist.5. ſee it. Moreouer he ſaith: Signa, cum ad res diuinas adhibentur, Sacramenta vocantur: Signes, when they be applied to godly things, be called Sacraments. The ſignification and the ſubſtance of the Sacrament, is to ſhew vs, how we are waſhed with the paſſion of Chriſt, and how we are fed with the body of Chriſt. And againe: If Sacraments had not a certain likeneſſe & repreſentation of the things wherof they be Sacraments, then indeed they were no Sacraments. And becauſe of this likeneſſe which they haue with the things they repreſent, they be often times termed by the names of the things themſelues. Therefore after a certaine maner of ſpæch (and not otherwiſe) the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt, is the body of Chriſt, and the Sacrament of the blod of Chriſt, is the blod of Chriſt: ſo the Sacrament of faith, is faith.

Aug. epiſt.23. ad Bonifacium.

Who hath ordained the Sacraments? Not any Prelat, not any Prince, not any Angel, or Archangell, but only God himſelfe. For, he only hath authority to ſeale the charter, in whoſe authority only it is to grant it. And only he giueth the pledge, and confirmeth his grace to vs, which giueth his grace into our hearts. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Diuinum & integrum non eſſet myſterium, ſi quicquam ex te adderes: The myſtery were not of God, nor perfect, if thou ſhouldeſt put any thing to it. In the daies of Noah, when God determined to be mercifull vnto his people, and neuer to drowne the whole world with water, he ſaid:

Hom 7. in 1. Corin.

Gen.9. I haue ſet my bow in the cloud, and it ſhall be for a ſigne of the couenant between me and the earth; and when I ſhall couer the earth with a cloud, and the bow ſhall be ſeene in the cloud, then will I remember my couenant which is between me and you, and between euery liuing thing in fleſh, and there ſhall be no more waters of a flood to deſtroy all fleſh.

Gen.17. In like maner, when God would witnes and ſtablish to Abraham and his ſeed after him the promiſe of his mercy; he himſelfe ordained a ſacrament to confirme the ſame: This is my couenant which ye ſhall keepe between me and you, and thy ſeed after thee. Let euery manchild among you be circumciſed. Thus God ordained the ſacrament of circumciſion. This ſacrament was a ſeale of Gods promiſe to Abraham, and a ſeale of Abrahams faith, and obedience towards God. By this ſacrament was man bound to the Lord: and by the ſame ſacrament God vouchſafed to bind himſelf to man. But how is the ſacrament formed? of what parts is it made? Auguſtine ſaith: Accedat verbum ad elementum, & fit Sacramentum: Ioine the word of Chriſts inſtitution with the ſenſible creature, and thereof is mad a Sacrament. Ioine the word to the creature of water, and therof is made the Sacrament of Baptiſme: take away the word, then what is the water other then water? The word of God & the creature make a ſacrament. But why were ſacraments ordained? he telleth you Tract.80. in 13. Ioh.

Lib.19. contra Fauſt. cap.11. In nullum nomen religionis, ceu verum, &c. Men cannot be gathered together to the profeſſiō of any religion, whether it be true or falſe, vnleſſe they be bound in the fellowſhip of viſible ſignes of ſacraments. The firſt cauſe why they were ordained, is, that therby one ſhould acknowledge another, as fellowes of one houſehold, and members of one body. So was all Iſraell reckoned the children of Abraham, becauſe of there circumciſion; and all ſuch as were vncircumciſed, were cut off from the people, and had no part in the common wealth of Iſraell, becauſe they were vncircumciſed: Euen as we take them that are not baptized, to be none of our brethren, to be no children of God, nor members of his Church, becauſe they will not take the Sacrament of Baptiſme. Another cauſe is, to moue, inſtruct, and teach our dul and heauy hearts, by ſenſible creatures, that ſo our negligence in not heeding or marking the word of God ſpoken vnto vs, might be amended. For if any man haue the outward ſeale, and haue not the faith thereof ſealed within his heart, it auaileth him not: he is but an hypocrite and diſſembler. So the circumciſion of the foreſkinne of the fleſh, taught them to mortifie their fleſhly affections, and to cut off the thoughts and deuiſes of their wicked hearts. Therefore ſaid Stephen to the Iewes, Ye ſtiffenecked and of vncircumciſed hearts and eares, you haue alwaies reſiſted the holy Ghoſt.

Act.7.

So, when in Baptiſme our bodies are waſhed with water, we are taught that our ſoules are waſhed in the blod of Chriſt. The outward waſhing or ſprinkling doth repreſent the ſprinkling and waſhing which is wrought within vs: the water doth ſignifie the blod of Chriſt. If we were nothing elſe but ſoule, he would giue vs his grace barely and alone, without ioining it to any creature, as he doth to his Angels: but ſeeing our ſpirit is drowned in our body, and our fleſh doth make our vnderſtanding dull; therefore we receiue his grace by ſenſible things.

Hom.7. in 1. Cor. Chryſoſt. ſaith: Aliter ego, & aliter incredulus diſponitur. Ille cum, &c. I am otherwiſe affected, then is he which beleeueth not. When he heareth of the water of Baptiſme, he thinketh it is nothing elſe but water: but, I ſee (not the creature only, which mine eies do ſee, but alſo) the cleanſing of my ſoule by the holy Ghoſt. He thinketh that my body only is waſhed: I beleeue, that my ſoule is thereby made pure & holy: & withal I conſider Chriſts buriall, his reſurrection, our ſanctificatiō, righteouſnes, redemptiō, adoption, our inheritance, the kingdome dome of heauen, and the fulnesse of the spirit. For I iudge not of the things I see by my bodily eies, but by the eies of my mind.

When one that is vnlearned, and cannot read, loketh vpon a booke, be the booke neuer so true, neuer so well written, yet because he knoweth not the letters, and cannot read, he loketh vpon it in vaine. He may turne ouer all the leaues, and looke vpon all, and see nothing: but another that can read, & hath iudgement to vnderstand, considereth the whole storie, the doughty deeds, graue counsels, discreet answers, examples, promises, threatnings, the very drift, and meaning of him that wrot it. So doe the faithfull receiue the fruit and comfort by the Sacraments, which the wicked and vngodly neither consider, nor receiue. Thus doe the Sacraments lead vs, and instruct vs to behold the secret and vnknowne mercies of God, and to carrie our selues to the obedience of his will. And this is the other cause, why Sacraments were ordained.

Thirdly, they are seales and confirmations of Gods promise. S. Paul saith: Abraham receiued the signe of circumcision, as the seale of the righteousnesse of the faith, which he had when he was vncircumcised. By these, we stop the mouth of heretikes. For, if they denie that our Lord Jesus Christ was deliuered to death for our sins, and is risen againe for our iustification: we shew them our Sacraments, that they were ordained, to put vs in remembrance of Christ, and that by the vse of them, wee shew the Lords death till hee come. We tell them, these are proofes, and signes, that Christ suffered death for vs on the crosse. As Chrysostome saith: Laying out these mysteries, we stop their mouthes. Rom. 4. Chrys. in Mat. hom. 83.

What? Are they nothing else but bare and naked signes? God forbid. They are the seales of God, heauenly tokens, and signes of the grace, and righteousnesse, and mercie giuen and imputed to vs. Circumcision was not a bare signe. That is not circumcision, which is outward in the flesh, saith Paul, but the circumcision of the heart. And againe: In Christ yee are circumcised with circumcision made without hands, by putting off the sinfull body of the flesh, through the circumcision of Christ. Euen so is not Baptisme any bare signe. Baptisma eius, saith Chrysostome, etiam passio eius est: Christs baptisme, is Christs passion. They are not bare signes: it were blasphemie so to say. The grace of God doth alwaies worke with his Sacraments: but we are taught not to seeke that grace in the signe, but to assure our selues by receiuing the signe, that it is giuen vs by the thing signified. Wee are not washed from our sinnes by the water, wee are not fed to eternall life by the bread and wine, but by the precious bloud of our Sauiour Christ, that lieth hid in these Sacraments. Rom. 2. Coloss. 2. Ad Hebr. hom. 16.

Bernard saith: Datur annulus ad inuestiendum, &c. The fashion is to deliuer a ring, when seisin and possession of inheritance is giuen: the ring is a signe of the possession. So that he which hath taken it, may say; the ring is nothing, I care not for it: it is the inheritance, which I sought for. In like maner, when Christ our Lord drew nigh to his passiõ, he thought good to giue seisin and possession of his grace to his Disciples, and that they might receiue his inuisible grace by some visible signe. Serm. de cœna Dom.

Chrysostome saith: In nobis non simplex aqua operatur: sed cum accepit gratiam spiritus, abluit omnia peccata: Plaine or bare water worketh not in vs, but when it hath receiued the grace of the holy Ghost, it washeth away all our sinnes. Hom. 35. in Iohan.

So saith Ambrose also: Spiritus sanctus descendit, & consecrat aquam: The holie Ghost commeth downe, and halloweth the water. And, Praesentia Trinitatis adest: There is the presence of the Trinity. So saith Cyril: Quemadmodum viribus ignis aqua, &c. As water thorowly heat with fire, burneth as well as the fire: so the waters which wash the body of him that is baptized, are changed into diuine power, by the working of the holy Ghost. So said Leo, sometimes a Bishop of Rome: Dedit aqua, quod dedit matri. Virtus enim altissimi, & obumbratio Spiritus Sancti, quae fecit vt Maria pareret saluatorem, eadem fecit, vt regeneret vnda credentem: Christ hath giuen like preeminence to the water of Baptisme, as hee gaue to his mother. For that power of the Highest, & that ouershadowing of the holy ghost which brought to passe, that Mary should bring foorth the Sauiour of the world, hath also brought to passe, that the water should beare a new, or regenerate him that beleeueth. Ambr. de Sac. lib. 1 cap. 5. Cyril. in Ioh. lib. 2. cap. 42. Leo. Serm 5. de nat. Dom.

Such opinion had the ancient learned Fathers, and such reuerend words they vsed, when they intreated of the Sacraments. For, it is not man, but God which worketh by them: yet is it not the creature of bread or water, but the soule of man that receiueth the grace of God. These corruptible creatures need it not: we haue need of Gods grace. But this is a phrase of speaking. For the power of God, the grace of God, the presence of the Trinitie; the holy Ghost, the gift of God, are not in the water, but in vs. And we were not made, because of the Sacraments: but the Sacraments were ordained for our sake.

Now for the number of Sacraments, how many there be: it may seeme somewhat hard to say, and that it cannot be spoken without offence. For mens iudgements heerein haue swarued swarued very much: some haue said, there are two: others three: others foure: and others, that there are seuen Sacraments. This difference of opinions standeth rather in termes, then in the matter. For a Sacrament in the maner of speaking which the Church vseth, and in the writings of the holy Scripture, and of ancient fathers, sometimes signifieth properly euery such Sacrament which Christ hath ordained in the new Testament, for which he hath chosen some certaine element, & spoken special words to make it a Sacrament, and hath annexed thereto the promise of grace: sometimes it is vsed in a generall kind of taking, and so euery mistery set downe to teach the people, and many things that indeed and by special property be no Sacraments, may neuertheless passe vnder the generall name of a Sacrament.

The Sacraments instituted by Christ are only two: the Sacrament of Baptisme, & of our Lords Supper, as the ancient learned fathers haue made account of them. Saint Ambrose hauing occasion of purpose to entreat of the Sacraments, speaketh but of two. De Sacramentis, saith he, quæ accepistis, sermonem adorior: I begin to speake of the Sacraments which you haue receiued. And yet in his whole treatise diuided into sir bookes, he writeth but of two: his booke is extant, if any man doubt this, he may see it.

Lib. 1. de Sac. cap. 1.

De Symb. ad Catechumen. lib. 3. cap. 9. de doct. Christ.

S. Augustine reckoneth them to be but two: Hæc sunt ecclesiæ gemina Sacramenta: These be the two Sacraments of the Church. Againe he saith: Quædam pauca pro multis, eademq; factu facillima, &c. Our Lord and his Apostles haue deliuered vnto vs, a few Sacraments in stead of many: and the same in doing most easie, in signification most excellent, in obseruation most reuerend, as is the Sacrament of Baptisme, and the celebration of the body & bloud of our Lord. Thus Augustine and Ambrose, vnto whom I might also ioyne other ancient fathers, reckon but two Sacraments. Let no man then be offended with vs for so doing: we doe no new thing, but restore the ordinance of Christ, and kepe the example of the holy fathers.

What then? Do we refuse Confirmation, Penance, Orders, and Matrimony? Is there no vse of these among vs? doe we not allow them? Yes. For we do confirme and teach Repentance, and minister holy Orders, and account Matrimony, and so vse it, as an honorable state of life. We visite the sicke among vs, and anoint them with the precious oyle of the mercy of God. But we call not these Sacraments, because they haue not the like institution. Confirmation was not ordained by Christ: Penance hath not any outward element ioyned to the word: the same may be said of Orders. And Matrimony was not first instituted by Christ: for God ordained it in paradise long before. But in these two, we haue both the element and the institution. In Baptisme, the element is water; in the Lords supper, bread and wine. Baptisme hath the word of institution: Teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and the Sonne, and the holy Ghost.

Math. 28.

The Lords supper in like maner hath the word of institution: Do this in remembrance of me.

Luke 22.

Therefore these two are properly and truly called the Sacraments of the Church, because in them the element is ioyned to the word, and they take their ordinance of Christ, and be visible signes of inuisible grace.

Now, whatsoeuer lacketh either of these, it is no Sacrament. Therefore are not the other fiue, which are so reckoned, and make vp the number of seuen, in due signification and right meaning taken for Sacraments. For in such sort as these are called Sacraments, that is, because they signifie some holy thing, we shal find a great number of things, which the godly learned Fathers haue called Sacraments; and yet, I trow, we must not hold them as sacraments ordained to be kept and continued in the Church: for then should there be not seuen, but seuenteene Sacraments.

Serm. de cœna Dom.

S. Bernard calleth the washing of the Apostles feet a Sacrament: Ablutio pedum Sacramentum est quotidianorum peccatorum: The washing of feet, is the Sacrament of daily sinnes.

Serm. 2. de Resur. D.

So Leo calleth the Crosse of Christ a Sacrament. Crux Christi quæ saluandis est impensa fidelibus, & sacramentum est, & exemplum: The Crosse of Christ, which was giuen to saue the faithful, is both a Sacrament, and also an example. Tertullian calleth the whole state of Christian faith, Religionis Christianæ Sacramentum: The Sacrament of Christian Religion.

Lib. 4. contra Marcion.

S. Hilary in diuers places saith: Sacramentum orationis, Sacramentum ieiunii, Sacramentum fitis, Sacramentum fletus, Sacramentum Scripturarum: The Sacrament of praier, the Sacrament of fasting, the Sacrament of thirst, the Sacrament of weeping, the Sacrament of the Scriptures. Thus much for the number, that by the institution of Christ, there are but two Sacraments, as Cardinal Bessarion confesseth: Hæc duo sola Sacramenta in Euangelijs manifestè tradita legimus: We read, that these two only Sacraments were deliuered vs plainly in the Gospell.

Bessar. de Sacram. Eucha.

I will now speake briefly of the Sacraments in seuerall, and leaue all idle and vaine questions, and only lay open so much as is needful, & profitable for you to know. Baptisme therefore

therefore is our regeneration or new birth, whereby wee are borne anew in Christ, and are made the Sons of God, and heires of the kingdome of heauen, it is the Sacrament of the remission of sinnes, and of that washing which we haue in the blood of Christ. We are all borne the children of wrath, and haue our part in the offence of Adam. S. Paul saith: By one man sin entered into the world. Augustine saith: Non dixit, veniet super eum, sed manet super eum. Respexit originem, &c. Christ said not, it shall come vpon him; but it abideth on him: He had regard to our offspring, when hee saith; the wrath of God abideth on him. Vpon which when the Apostle also looked, he said; and we our selues also were sometimes the children of wrath. That which in Adam was imputed to his offence, and not to be of nature, is now in vs, which are come of Adam, become natural. Therefore saith the Prophet; Behold I was borne in iniquitie, and in sinne hath my mother conceiued me. So that we all haue cause to crie out and mone with S. Paul: I see another law in my members rebelling against the law of my mind, and leading me captiue vnto the law of sinne which is in my members. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? Hereof speaketh our Sauiour: That which is borne of the flesh is flesh: and that which is borne of the spirit, is spirit. And for this cause, saith he; except a man be borne of the water and the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God.

Rom. 5. De verbis Apost. Serm. 14.

Psal. 51. Rom. 7.

Iohn 3.

For this cause are infants baptized, because they are borne in sinne, and cannot become spiritual, but by this new birth of the water & the spirit. They are the heires of the promise: the couenant of Gods fauour is made vnto them. God said to Abraham: I will establish my couenant betweene me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an euerlasting couenant, to be God vnto thee, and to thy seed after thee. Therefore saith the Apostle: If the root be holy, so are the branches. And againe: The vnbeleeuing husband is sanctified by the wife, and the vnbeleeuing wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children vncleane: but now are they holy. When the Disciples rebuked those that brought little children to Christ, that he might touch them, he said: Suffer the little children to come vnto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdome of God. And againe: Their Angels alwaies behold the face of my father which is in heauen.

Gen. 17.

Rom. 11. 1. Cor. 7.

Mark. 10. Mat. 10.

The kingdome of heauen is of such, saith Christ: not only then of those, but of other like infants which shall be in all times.

As God tooke the seed of Abraham to bee partakers of the couenant which he gaue to Abraham: so he appointed that euery man childe of eight daies old should bee circumcised. And Abraham circumcised his sonne Isaac, when he was eight daies old, as God had commanded him. May we thinke, that the promise of God hath an end, so that it reacheth not to our children? Or might the children of the Iewes receiue the signe of the couenant, and may not the children of the Christians? Whatsoeuer was promised to Abraham, the same is also performed vnto vs. We enioy the same blessings, and free priuiledge of Gods fauour. S. Paul to the Galathians saith: Know yee, that they which are of faith, are the children of Abraham. Againe: If ye be Christs, then are yee Abrahams seed, and heires by promise.

Gen. 21.

Galat 3.

Now is the signe of the Couenant also changed, and Baptisme is in stead of Circumcision, as S. Paul declareth, and calleth them circumcised, which are baptized. In whom (meaning Christ) also yee are circumcised, with circumcision made without hands, by putting off the sinfull bodie of the flesh, thorow the circumcision of Christ, in that you are buried with him through baptisme. Our Sauiour giueth charge to his Apostles, to baptize all nations in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost. The Apostles baptized not only such as professed their beléefe, but whole housholds. The keeper of the prison was baptized, with all that belonged vnto him. So was Crispus the chiefe ruler of the Synagogue, and his houshold, and the houshold of Stephanas. Infants are a part of the Church of God: they are the sheepe of Christ, and belong to his flocke. Why should they not beare the marke of Christ? they haue the promise of saluation: why should they not receiue the seale whereby it is confirmed vnto them? they are of the fellowship of the faithfull: Augustine saith: Vbi ponis parvulos non baptizatos? præfecto in numero credentium: Where place you young children, which are not yet baptized? Verily in the number of them that beleeue. Why then should not they be partakers of the Sacrament together with the faithfull?

Coloss. 2.

Acts 16.

De verbis Apost. Serm. 1.

And as the children of the faithfull by right ought to be baptized: So such others also as were borne of vnbeléeuing parents, and were aliens from the common wealth of Israel, and were strangers from the couenant of promise, and had no hope, if they acknowledge the error in which they liued, and séeke the forgiuenesse of their former sinnes, may well receiue this Sacrament of their regeneration. So when they which heard Peter were pricked in their hearts, and said to Peter and the other Apostles: Men and brethren what shal we do? Peter said said vnto them, Amend your liues, and be baptized euery one of you in the Name of Iesus Christ, for the remission of sinnes. They were buried with Christ by Baptisme into his death, and made partakers of his blood, and continued in the Apostles doctrin and fellowship.

Ephes. 5. Tit. 3. Christ, saith the Apostle, loued the Church, and gaue himselfe for it, that he might sanctifie it and cleanse it by the washing of water through the word. Againe: According to his mercy he saued vs by the washing of the new birth, and the renewing of the holy Ghost. For this cause is baptisme called saluation, life, regeneration, the forgiuenesse of sinnes, the power of God to resurrection, the Image and pledge of resurrection, and the wæde of immortality. And yet are not these things wrought by the water: for then what need had wee of Christ? what good did his passion? what doth the holy Ghost worke in our hearts? what power or force is left to the word of God?

Tract. 80. in Iohn. Augustine saith: Quare non ait, mundi estis propter Baptismum quo loti estis: nisi quia etiam in aqua verbum mundat? detrahe verbum, & quid est aqua nisi aqua? Why doth not Christ say, now ye are cleane, because of the Baptisme wherewith yee are washed: saying that because in the water it is the word that maketh cleane? take away the word, and what is water more then water? It is the couenant, and promise, and mercy of God, which clotheth vs with immortality; assureth our resurrection, by which we receiue regeneration, forgiuenesse of sinnes, life, and saluation. His word declareth his loue towards vs: and that word is sealed and made good by Baptisme. Our faith, which are Baptized, and our continuance in the profession which we haue made, establisheth in vs this grace which we receiue. As it is said: Verus Baptismus constat non tam &c. True Baptisme standeth not so much in washing of the bodie, as in the faith of the heart. As the Doctrine of the Apostles hath taught vs, saying; By faith purifying their hearts. And in an other place: Baptisme saueth vs, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the examining of a good conscience before GOD, by the resurrection of Iesus Christ. Therefore Hierome saith: They that receiue not Baptisme with perfect faith, receiue the water, but the holy Ghost they receiue not.

De consecrat. Dist. 4. Verus. Acts 15. 1. Pet. 3. In Eze. ca. 16.

The water wherein we are baptized, doth not clense the soule: But, the blood of Iesus Christ his Sonne doth clense vs from all sinne. Not the water but the blood of Christ reconcileth vs vnto God, strengtheneth our conscience, and worketh our redemption. We must seeke saluation in Christ alone and not in any outward thing. Hereof saith Cyprian: Remissio peccatorum, siue per Baptismum, siue per alia Sacramenta donetur, proprie spiritus sancti est. Verborum solennitas &c. The remission of sins, whether it be giuen by baptisme, or by any other Sacraments, doe properly appertaine to the holy Ghost. The solennitie of the words, and the inuocation of Gods holy Name, & the outward signes appointed to the ministerie of the Priest by the institution of the Apostles, worke the visible outward Sacrament. But touching the substance thereof, it is the holie Ghost that worketh it. S. Ambrose also saith: Vidisti fontem, vidisti Sacerdotem &c. Thou hast seene the water, thou hast seene the Priest, thou hast seene those things, which thou mightest see with the eies of thy body, and with such sight as man hath: but those things which worke and do the deede of saluation, which no eie can see, thou hast not seene.

1. Iohn. 1. Cypr. de Baptis. Christi. Lib. 1. de Sac. Cap. 3.

Such a change is made in the Sacrament of Baptisme. Through the power of Gods working the water is turned into blood. They that be washed in it receiue the remission of sinnes: their robes are made cleane in the blood of the Lamb. The water it self is nothing: but by the working of Gods spirit, the death and merits of our Lord and Sauiour Christ, are thereby assured vnto vs.

A figure hereof was giuen at the red Sea. The children of Israel passed thorow in safetie: but Pharao and his whole army were drowned. Another figure hereof was giuen in the Arke. The whole world was drowned, but Noah and his family were saued aliue: Euen so in the fountaine of baptisme, our spirituall Pharao the Diuel, is choaked: his army, that is, our sinnes are drowned, and we saued. The wicked of the world are swallowed in concupiscence, and vanities, and we abide safe in the Arke: God hath chosen vs to be a peculiar people to himselfe; we walke not after the flesh, but after the spirit, therefore we are in Christ Iesus, and there is now no condemnation vnto vs.

Now, touching the Minister of this Sacrament, whether hee bee a good man or an euill man, godly, or godlesse, an Heretike, or a Catholike, an Idolater, or a true worshipper of God: the effect is all one, the value or worthinesse of the Sacrament dependeth not of man, but of God. Man pronounceth the word, but God setteth our hearts with grace: man thoucheth or washeth vs with water, but God maketh vs cleane by the Crosse of Christ. It is not the minister, but Christ himselfe which is the lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.

Againe,

Againe, whether the infant be signed with the signe of the crosse, or be put into the water once or thrice; whether one or two or three, or more be godfathers, or witnesses of the baptisme, it maketh nothing to the vertue of the Sacrament, they are no part thereof: without these, baptisme is whole and perfect. Hereof Gregory saith: In una fide nihil officit consuetudo Ecclesiæ diuersa: The Faith being one, the diuersity of customes hurteth nothing. Christ left no order for the vse of these things, neither did by his word or example require them. The Church of God hath liberty to dispose herein, as may be most fitting for decency and godlinesse. Greg. lib. 1. Epist. 41.

Some make doubt of those infants the children of the faithfull, which depart before baptisme, whether they be saued or not. What, shall we say that they are damned? It is a hard matter, and too curious for man to enter into the iudgements of God: his mercy is infinite, and his purpose secret. He sheweth mercy vnto those, vpon whom he will haue mercie. Who can appoint him, or set him an order what he shall doe? It is not good, nor standeth with Christian reuerence to be contentious and busie in searching out, or reasoning of matters, which the wisdome of God hath hid from our knowledge.

Yet, if any would faine be resolued: he may thus safely reason. It is true, that children are borne in sinne, and that by the sinne of one man death hath entred into the world, and that the reward of sinne is death: but who knoweth if God hath forgiuen them their sinne? Who is his Counsellor, who knoweth his meaning? Our children are the children of God. He is our God, and the God of our seed. They be vnder the conenant with vs. The sobrest way is to speake least, and to leaue them to the iudgement and mercy of God.

Howbeit, if any should despise, and of wilfulnesse refuse this holy ordinance, so that they would in no case be baptized, or suffer their children to be baptized; that were damnable. Otherwise the grace of God is not tied so to the ministration of the Sacrament, that if any be preuented by death, so that he cannot be receiued to the fellowship thereof, he should therefore be thought to be damned. For many haue suffered death for Gods cause, for their faith in Christ, who neuer were baptized: yet are they reckoned, and are indeed blessed Martyrs. So Valentinianus a Christian Emperor died without Baptisme: yet doth Ambrose commend him, and nothing doubteth, but that he is saued. He saith: Audiui vos dolere, quod non acceperit, &c. I haue heard that you are greeued, because he tooke not the Sacrament of Baptisme. Tell me, what other thing is there in vs, but our will, and our desire? Againe: He which was induced with thy spirit, O God, how might it be that he should be void of thy grace? Or, If this moue you, because the mysteries were not solemnly ministred: are not the martyrs crowned if they be only nouices (that be not yet Christned?) But if they be washed in their blood, then is he also washed in his godlinesse and in his desire. S. Augustine saith: He is not depriued from the partaking and benefit of the Sacrament, so long as he findeth in himselfe that thing, that the Sacrament signifieth. Orat. de obit. Valentiniani. In serm. ad infantes.

Constantinus the great, was the first Christian Emperor: yet was not baptized vntil the time of his death. Qui, cum Nicomediæ ageret (saith Theodoretus) langore grauatus, nec ignorans vitæ huius incertum, gratiam baptismatis est adeptus: Who, when he was at Nicomedia, being grieuously sicke, and knowing the vncertainty of this life, was baptized. The theefe vpon the crosse, was not baptized: yet Christ said vnto him, this day thou shalt be with me in Paradise. The Prophet Ieremy, and Iohn Baptist were sanctified in their mothers wombes. By these few it may appeare, that the Sacrament maketh not a Christian, but is a seale and assurance vnto al that receiue it, of the grace of God, vnlesse they make themselues vnworthy thereof, and that no man may despise this holy ordinance, and keep backe his infants from baptisme, for in so doing he procureth his own damnation. In time of ignorance many could see this, and acknowledge it, that the outward baptisme by water was not necessary vnto saluation, so that the children or others that died without, were for lacke therof damned. The Church hath alwaies receiued three sorts of baptisme: the baptisme of the spirit, or of blood, or of water: If any were preuented by death or hindered by cruelty or persecution, so that they could not receiue the sacrament of baptisme at the hands of the minister, yet hauing the sanctification of the holy ghost, or making their faith knowen by their suffering, they were borne anew, and baptized. God hath his purpose in vs, our children. Before we be borne, when he had done neither good nor euill he hath mercy and compassion on vs. Iudgement appertaineth vnto God. He knoweth who are his. No man knoweth the things of God, but the spirit of God only. And thus much of the sacrament of baptisme, which is the badge and cognisance of euery Christian. If any be not baptized, but lacketh the marke of Gods fold, we cannot discerne him to be one of the flocke. If any take not the seale of regeneration, we cannot say, he is borne the child of God. This is the ordinary way, let vs vse it, let vs not despise, nor forslow to receiue the Sacraments: they are the meanes by which God maketh sure his good will towards vs. Hist. tripart. lib. 3. cap. 12.

It shall not be amisse, to speake a word or two of the naming of your children. Some are herein ouerseen, they refuse to call their children by the names of holy men and women, because they thinke it to sauor somwhat too much of religion, and therefore either they name them at aduenture, hauing no regard at all, how they be named: or els they giue them the names of heathen men, and call them Iulius Cæsar, Hercules, Lucretia, Scipio, or such like. These, although they were notable in wisdome, learning, chastity, boldnesse, and in conquests: yet were they heathen men, and knew not God. The name is nothing, it commendeth vs not to God. Yet may a Christian father be ashamed to call his child by the name of such, who were enemies to the Crosse of Christ.

Hom. 21 in Genesim. Chrysostome a godlie father, saith; Non solum hic parentum monstratur pietas, sed & magna erga pueros diligētia, &c. In this thing, that is, in the naming of their children, both the godlinesse of the parents, & also their great care for their children is declared. And how haue they forthwith and from the beginning taught the children which were borne vnto them, giuing them warning, by the names wherewith they call them, that they should practise virtue? They did not giue names at aduenture and without reason, as is vsed now adaies. For now men say, let the child be called after the name of his grandfather, or great grandfather: but our old fathers did not so. They took all heed to call their children by such names, which should not only prouoke them to virtue which carried the names, but should teach all others much wisdome, whosoeuer should remaine many yeers after them. Againe he saith: Hom. 51 in Gen. See how great vnderstanding they of old time had, that euen the women named not their children rashly or by chance, but called them by names that foreshewed such things as might happen after. And of Lea Iacobs wife, he maketh a speciall commendation. Hom. 56. in Gen. Vidisti quomodo non simpliciter, neq; temere nomina natis indiderit, Vocauit enim Simeon, quoniam audiuit (inquit) Dominus. See how shee nameth not her children simply, nor at aduenture: shee called him Simeon, because (saith she) the Lord hath heard. Therefore he saith, Hom. 21. in Gen. Igitur nos ne vulgaria nomina pueris indamus, neq; auorum, &c. Let not vs therefore giue names vnto our children that are common names, or because they were the names of our grandfathers, or great grandfathers, or of such who haue been famous for their parentage: but rather let vs call them by the names of such as haue excelled in virtue, and haue been most faithfull towards God. Let them carry the names of the Apostles, of the Prophets, of the Martyrs, of such who haue been constant in the faith, and haue suffered death for Christs sake. That so they may be taught by their name to remember whose name they beare, and that they neither speake, nor doe any thing vnworthy of their name.

As, if any be called Iohn, that he pray for grace, and desire to be filled with grace: that he giue witnesse of Christ, that he is the Lambe of God which taketh away the sins of the world: that he rebuke vice boldly, as Iohn did in Herod, though he were a mighty Prince. Or, if he be called Paul, that he so become a follower of Paul, as Paul was of Christ: and say with Paul, That I might liue vnto God, I am crucified with Christ. Thus I liue, yet not I now, but Christ liueth in me: and heare Christ speaking vnto him as did Paul, and fal down and say, Lord, what wilt thou that I do? So let him, that is called Thomas, touch the bosome of Christ, and handle his wounds, & make a good confession as Thomas did, and say, My Lord and my God. Let Matthew forsake his custome, euen the deceitfull gaines of the world, & follow Christ. Let Daniell remember Daniell, and though he should be thrown into the den of Lions, or be burnt in the fire, or suffer anie cruell torments, yet let him not therfore forsake God, but put his whole trust in him. Thus should our names teach vs, that whether we write them, or vtter them, or heare them spoken, they may put vs in mind of Christian duty and godlinesse. The other sacrament of Christs Church, is the Sacrament of the Lords supper, which some haue called the sacrament of the Altar: some the sacrament of the holie table: some the sacrament of bread and wine: but we most properlie may call it the sacrament of the body and blood of Christ. And that we wander not at large, but may stand in certaine ground, I will expound those words of our Sauior: This is my body; and this is my blood of the new Testament, that is shed for many: for the remission of sinnes.

Galat. 2. Acts 9. Matth. 26.

This matter these two or three hundred yeres late past, hath been incumbred with manie questions and much controuersie. Some say, the words are plaine. Christ himselfe spake them: he is almighty, and can do whatsoeuer he will: he hath not spoken otherwise then he meant: If we expound them by signes and figures, we take away the force of the holie mysterie; and make nothing of it: the words must be taken euen as they lie, they must not haue anie other construction. Therefore at this day, many wise men, which yeld from other points of superstition, and in manie other things receiue the truth, stand heare, and sticke at this, and cannot yeld.

I will declare the whole matter, simply and plainlie, and submit my selfe to the vnderstāding and capacity of all men. That which I will vtter herein, shall not be of my selfe, but of the fathers of the Church: not of those which haue beene of later yeeres; but of the most ancient: not of the heretikes: but of the most Catholike, which euer haue been the enemies and confounders of Heretikes. I will shew the vse, and order, and faith of the Primitiue Church which was in the times of the Apostles, and of Tertullian, Cyprian, Basil, Nazianzene, Hierome, Augustine, Chrysostome, and other Catholike and godly learned Fathers. Let no man regard me, or my speech: I am onely a finger: these are cleere and bright starres. I doe but shew them vnto you, and point them, that you may behold them. God giue vs grace that we may see them truly, and by them be able to guid, and to direct our way. Let vs lay aside all contention, and quietly heare that shall be spoken. Whatsoeuer shall bee said, if it be true, if it be ancient, if it be Catholike, if it be so cleere, as the Sun beames, let vs humble our hearts, and beleeue it. There is no truth but of God. Whosoeuer resisteth the truth, resisteth God.

First, I will shew you, that we doe truly and indeed eat the body of Christ, and drinke his blood. And this shall be the foundation and key of entrance into all the rest.

Secondly, I will open these words, This is my body: and there how, by what sort, in what sense and meaning, the bread is the body of Christ. Thirdly, that the bread abideth still in former nature and substance as before; euen as the nature and substance of water remaineth in Baptisme. Fourthly, how the body of Christ is eaten: whether by faith, or with the mouth of our body: and how the body of Christ is present in the Sacrament.

Fiftly, What difference is betweene the body of Christ, and the Sacrament of the body of Christ. Sixtly, how we ought to prepare our minds, and with what faith, and deuotion we must come to the receiuing thereof.

We say, and beleeue, that we receiue the body and blood of Christ truly, and not a figure or signe: but euen that body which suffered death on the Crosse, and that blood which was shed for the forgiuenesse of sinnes. So saith Christ; My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drinke indeed. And againe: Except ye eat the flesh of the sonne of man, and drinke his blood, ye haue no life in you. And againe: Hee that eateth mee, euen he shall liue, by mee. We say there is no other substantiall foode of our soules: and that he is diuided among all the faithfull; and that he is void of saluation, and the grace of Christ, whosoeuer is not partaker of his body and blood. This we say, and may not flee from it hereafter. Iohn 6.

Yet, lest happily any should be deceiued, we say this meat is spirituall, and therefore it must be eaten by faith, and not with the mouth of our body. Augustine saith: Vt quid para dentes & ventrem? crede & manducasti: Why preparest thou thy teeth and thy belly? beleeue, and thou hast eaten. And againe: Nolite fauces parare, sed cor: Prepare not your iawes, but your heart. As materiall bread nourisheth our body, so doth the body of Christ nourish our soule, and is therefore called bread. Deus panis intus est animæ meæ, saith Augustine: God is the inward bread of my soule. For we receiue him, and eat him, and liue by him. But hereof hereafter more at large. Tract. 25. in Iohn. Serm. 23. in Lucam. Confess. lib. 1.

Now, let vs consider the words of Christ, This is my body: and, This is my blood. These words you say, are plaine, open, easie, and manifest. So are they: yet albeit they they are plaine, they must haue a right construction. The plainest words that be, vnlesse they be duly expounded, may breed error. S. Iohn saith; The word was made flesh. These words are plaine, yet of these plaine words Appollinaris did breed an heresie. Christ saith, My Father is greater then I. His words are plaine: yet did the Arians gather thereof an heresie, that Christ is not equall with his Father. Christ saith of Iohn Baptist: This is Elias, which was to come. He saith not, he doth signifie Elias, but, he is Elias. The words are plaine: yet were there some, that stood in the maintenance of their error thereby, and said, that the soule of Elias, did abide in Iohn Baptist. Christ saith; If thine eie cause thee to offend, plucke it out and cast cast it from thee. And, If thy hand or foot cause thee to offend, cut them off, and cast them from thee. The words are plaine: yet he meaneth not that you should picke out your eies out of your head, nor chop off your hands or feet from your body. Iohn saith of Christ, He will baptize you with the holy Ghost, and with fire. These words are plaine, yet hereof some raised this error, that children at the time of their baptisme, should be marked in the forehead with a hot burning iron. S. Paul saith: he hath made him to be sinne for vs, which knew no sinne. The words are plaine: yet Christ neuer sinned. He is the Lambe of God, in whom there is no spot. He is hereby said to be the Sacrifice for sinne. Christ saith; They two shall be one flesh. And: They are no more two, but one flesh. These words are plaine: yet if you try the words by common sense, it is not so, they are not one, but two seuerall flesh. Christ saith: You are the salt of the earth: you are the light of world. The words are plaine: yet indeede, the Apostles were neither materiall light, nor materiall salt. Christ said of Iudas: one of you is a diuell. The words are plaine: yet Iudas in nature and substance was not a Diuell. Heb. 7. 1 Cor. 10. 1 Ioh. 1. Iohn 3. Iohn 6. Iohn 1. 1. Ioh. 14. Mat. 11. Matth. 18. Matth. 5. 2. Cor. 5. Mat. 19. Iohn 3. Matth 6. Mark 1. Iohn 6.

Heb.7. S.Paul ſaith of Melchiſedech: He was without father, and without mother, without kinred, and hath neither beginning of his daies, neither end of his life. These words are plaine: yet indeede he had father and mother, and was a man, and was borne, and died as other men. So he ſaith: The rocke was Chriſt. So Moſes ſaith: The life of all fleſh is his blood. And ſo is Chriſt called a Lamb, a Lion, a worme, a way, a bridegroom, a head, a doore, a vine, the light, bread, water, a garment. These ſpeeches, and infinite others the like, are plaine, open, and euident: yet are they not true, as the words ſound them, and literally. For Chriſt is not a Lamb in ſubſtance and nature, but a ſpirituall Lambe. So is he a ſpirituall garment, ſpirituall light, ſpirituall water, and ſpirituall bread.

1. Cor. 10. Leuit. 17.

Iohn 3. Chriſt ſaid to Nicodemus: Except a man be borne againe, he cannot ſee the kingdome of God. These words are plaine: yet Nicodemus miſtooke them and was deceiued, and ſaid:

Iohn 6. How can a man be borne that is old? can he enter into his mothers wombe againe and bee borne? Chriſt meant the ſpirituall birth of the ſoule and the ſpirit, not the naturall and corporall birth of the body.

And to come nearer to the matter in hand, when Chriſt ſaid: I am the bread which is come downe from heauen: and except ye eate the fleſh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his blood, ye haue no life in you: and, My fleſh is meat indeed: and, My blood is drinke indeed: He that eateth of this bread, ſhall liue for euer. The Capernaits thought theſe words plaine enough: therefore they ſay; How can this man giue vs his fleſh to eat? This is an hard ſaying, who can heare it? And they departed away from him. Then ſaid Ieſus; The words that I ſpeake vnto you are ſpirit and life. Vpon occaſion hereof, S.Auguſtine writeth thus; Spiritualiter intelligite quod loquutus ſum vobis. Non hoc corpus, &c. Vnderſtand ye ſpiritually, that I haue ſpoken vnto you. Ye ſhall not eat this body that ye ſee, neither ſhall yee drinke that blood, that they ſhall ſhed that ſhall crucifie me. I haue recommended vnto you a certaine ſacrament: being ſpirituallie vnderſtood, it will giue you life.

In Pſa. 98.

Euen ſo Chryſoſtome: What is it, that he ſaith, the fleſh profiteth nothing? He ſpeaketh it not of fleſh indeed; God forbid: but of ſuch which take the things carnally that are ſpoken. And what is it to vnderſtand carnallie? Euen to take things ſimply as they be ſpoken, and to ſeeke no further meaning. For the things which are ſeene, are not ſo to be iudged of: but all myſteries ſhould be conſidered with inward eies, that is, ſpiritually.

In 6. Ioh. hom. 46.

Ibidem. Againe vpon theſe words: If any man eat of this bread, he ſhal liue for euer: he ſaith; Panem verò ſine doctrinam hoc in loco, & ſalutem, & fidem in ſe, ſiue corpus ſuum dicit: vtrumq; enim animam fortiorem reddit: He calleth bread in this place, either doctrin and ſaluation and faith in him, or elſe his body: For either of theſe maketh the ſoule ſtronger. S.Paul ſaith: Hee that eateth or drinketh vnworthilie, eateth and drinketh his own damnation. Damnation is a ſpirituall thing, which is not receiued in by the mouth, or broken with the teeth. So Chriſt ſaith: This Cup is the new Teſtament in my blood, which is ſhed for you. Yet now is not his blood ſhed any more: for he is riſen and dieth not.

1.Cor.11. Luke 22.

Ibid. And theſe words which are ſo plaine, if they be examined, wil not be ſo plaine to yeld the ſenſe, vnto which they are forced. It is written: He tooke bread, and when hee had giuen thankes, he brake it, and gaue to them, ſaying, This is my body. This bread is my body. The bread was ſtill bread, and neither fleſh nor his body. And, This cup is the new Teſtament. In due, and right, and open meaning, the cup cannot be the new teſtament. Here we ſee, how the words are not all ſo plaine, but muſt haue a reaſonable conſtruction. It is a rule in the law; In fraudem legis facit, qui verbis legis ſaluis, ſententiam eius circumuenit: Hee doth wrong to the law, that following onlie the bare words, defraudeth the meaning of the Law.

De ll. & Senatuſc. & lon. con. contra.

Origen ſaith: Eſt & in nouo Teſtamento litera, quæ occidit eum, &c. There is alſo in the new Teſtament a letter which killeth him, that doth not ſpirituallie vnderſtand thoſe things which are ſpoken. For if he follow this after the letter, where it is ſaid, Except ye eat my fleſh, and drinke my blood; this letter killeth. Marke if yee take the word of Chriſt barely, and nakedly, and as the letter ſoundeth, it killeth. S.Auguſtine ſaith; In allegoria omni hæc regula tenenda eſt, vt pro ſententia præſentis loci conſideretur, quod per ſimilitudinem dicitur: This rule is to be kept in euerie allegorie, that what is ſpoken by ſimilitude, be waighed by the meaning of the preſent place. Hierome ſaith: Non in verbis Scripturarum eſt Euangelium, ſed in ſenſu: The Goſpell is not in the words of Scriptures, but in the meaning. And: Non in ſuperficie, ſed in medulla; non in ſermonum foliis, ſed in radice rationis: It is not in the outward ſhew, but in the inner marrow: not in the leaues of words, but in the roote of reaſon. When Chriſt ſaid, Deſtroy this Temple, and in three daies I will raiſe it vp againe. The Iewes following the bare letter, did beare falſe witneſſe againſt him, ſaying; We heard him ſay, I will deſtroy this Temple made with hands, and within three daies I will build another made without hands.

Auguſt. in Pſalm. 8.

Hier. in 1. Gal.

Iohn 2. Mark. 14.

We may not take the letter in all places of the Scripture as it lieth. The Scriptures ſtand stand not in the reading, but in the understanding. By taking the bare letter, the Iewes found matter to put Christ to death. Origen saith: There is a letter in the New Testament, which killeth. Ierome saith: The Gospel is not in the words of the Scripture, nor in the outward shew, nor in the leaues: but in the meaning, in the marrow, and in the root, which are hid, and not open and manifest. So that they may not be taken by the bare sound, but must haue some other construction.

But what shal be the construction of these words, This is my body? Whose interpretation or iudgement of them shal stand? The learned men which haue beene of late yeers, and which yet liue, are suspected. Let vs heare the elder ancient Fathers, whom, there is no cause, that any should suspect: they were not Sacramentaries, nor Zuinglians, nor Lutherans: they were not diuided into any of these sects.

Tertullian, an ancient Father, who liued more then 1500. yeeres since, expoundeth them thus: Acceptum panem, & distributum Discipulis, corpus suum illum fecit, dicendo; Hoc est corpus meum: id est, figura Corporis mei. Figura autem non esset, nisi veritatis esset corpus. Caterum vacua res, quæ est phantasma figuram capere non potest: Christ taking the bread, and distributing it to his Disciples, made it his body, saying; This is my body; that is to say, this is a figure of my body. But a figure it could not be, vnlesse there were a body of a truth, and indeed. For a void thing, as is a fantasie, can receiue no figure. Chrysostome saith: Si mortuus Christus non est, cuius Symbolum ac signum hoc Sacramentum est? If Christ died not, whose signe and whose token is this Sacrament? Againe: The very body of Christ it selfe is not in the holy vessels, but the mystery or Sacrament thereof is there contained. Lib. 4. contra Marcion. Hom. 83. in Math. Hom. 11. in Math.

Augustine against the Heretike Adimantus, writeth: Non dubitauit Dominus dicere, Hoc est Corpus meum, cum signum daret corporis sui: Our Lord doubted not to say, This is my Body, when he gaue a token of his body. And in another place: Christ tooke Iudas vnto his table, whereat he gaue vnto his Disciples the figure of his body. S. Hierome saith: Christ represented the verity of his body. Aug. cont. Adim. cap. 12. August. in Psal 3.

S. Ambrose saith: Before Consecration, it is called another kinde: after Consecration, the body of Christ is signified. And againe: In eating and drinking (that is, in receiuing the holy Communion) we signifie the body and bloud of Christ, that was offered for vs. So also Gelasius saith: Imago & similitudo corporis & sanguinis in actione mysteriorum celebratur: The image & similitude of his body and bloud is shewed in the action of the mysteries. It would be ouerlong to lay forth vnto you what other reuerend old Fathers haue written to like effect, and haue expounded those words of Christ by such termes as you haue heard, of signe, figure, token, image, and likenesse. I trust no man be offended: these speeches are not mine owne, but the speeches of most ancient Fathers, and haue beene spoken or written, and continued in the Church, these 1200. 1300. and welneere 1400. yeeres, and neuer condemned in them as false, though many of late times haue sought otherwise to vnderstand the words of Christ. The Gloss vpon the Canons ioineth herein with the Fathers: Dicitur Corpus Christi, sed improprie: vt fit sensus, Vocatur Corpus Christi, &c. It is called the body of Christ, but vnproperly: the meaning thereof may bee this, It is called Christs body, that is to say, It signifieth Christs body. In Math. cap. 26. De iis qui initiantur, cap. 9. Ambros. 1. Cor. 11. Gelas. contra Eutych. De Con. dist. 2.

Therefore doth S. Augustine giue vs good and holesome aduertisements: thus he writeth to Bonifacius: Vnlesse Sacraments had a certaine likenesse of the things, of which they be Sacraments, then indeed they were no Sacraments. And of this likenesse often times, they beare the names of the things themselues, that are represented by the Sacraments. And againe: In Sacraments wee must consider, not what they bee (in substance and nature) but what they signifie. Againe he saith: It is a dangerous matter, and a seruitude of the soule, to take the signe in stead of the thing that is signified. And againe: If it be a speech that commandeth, either by forbidding an horrible wickednesse or requiring that which is profitable, it is not figuratiue: but if it seeme to require horrible wickednesse, and to forbid that is good and profitable, it is spoken figuratiuely. Except ye eat (saith Christ) the flesh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, ye haue no life in you. He seemeth to require the doing of that which is horrible, or most wicked: it is a figure therefore commanding vs to communicate with the passion of Christ, and comfortably and profitably to lay vp in our remembrance, that his flesh was crucified, and wounded for vs. In another place he saith: It is a more horrible thing to eat mans flesh, then to kill it: and to drinke mans bloud, then it is to shed it. Againe he saith: We must beware, that we take not a figuratiue speech according to the letter: for thereto it pertaineth, that the Apostle saith, the letter killeth. Beside this that hath beene shewed you out of the godly learned old Fathers, how they haue expounded these words, whosoeuer will aduisedly consider these principal sentences, or rather rules of S. Augustine, shal be holpen much, and directed to the due and Catholike construction and meaning of them. Ang. ad Bonif. epist. 23. Lib. 3. contra Maxim. Lib. 3 cap. 5. de doctr. Christ. Lib. 3 cap. 16. de doct. Christ. Lib. 2. cap. 9. cont. aduers. legis & Proph. Lib 3. ca. 5 de doctr. Christ.

The next matter, and the third of the six is, whether the bread and wine abide still in former nature and substance as before, euen as the nature and substance of water remaineth in the Sacrament of Baptisme. There are some that say by vertue of these words, Hoc est corpus meum, the bread is changed into the body of Christ, that the substance of bread is gone, and nothing remaining, but only accidents: that is, a shew, and appearance, and likenesse of bread. They say, it seemeth to be the same it was, but it is changed: it seemeth to be bread, but it is not bread: and the wine, by the taste and colour seemeth to be wine, but it is not wine. They say we may not beleeue our eiesight, nor stand to the iudgement of our senses. They say, Christ is almighty, he spake the word, and all things were made: he hath said, Hoc est corpus meum, therefore it is now no more bread, but his body: and that this is the faith of the Church, in which we were borne and christned.

Indeed, this hath lately béene receiued, as a matter of faith. But if we examine it well, we shall find it to be an errour, and no point of faith. I say it hath béene receiued of late: for our old Fathers neuer beleeued it, as I wil declare and proue, and let you see, that it hath not béene the Catholike Faith, nor the Faith of Primitiue Church, nor of the Apostles of Christ, therefore no faith at al. The opening of this matter will be somewhat darke, and wherewith you haue not béene acquainted: but giue me your attendance, lend me your senses, and I trust by the grace of God I shal make it plaine.

They say, the bread is changed, and done away vtterly: and that it is no bread, though it seeme to be bread: that in this case we may not trust our eies, but leane to faith. Marke, I say, they tell vs that the bread remaineth not, and for trial hereof, they require vs not to leane to any other thing then faith. We wil then close and shut vp our senses, and hearken what Christ, what S. Paul, what the holy Fathers of the Church, who are best able to instruct our Faith, haue spoken.

1. Cor. 11. S. Paul to the Corinthians, in one péece of a Chapter, calleth it bread, foure times. Read the place, ye shal find it so, in the eleuenth of the first Epistle. The Lord Iesus in the night that he was betraied, tooke bread. And, As often as ye shal eat this bread, and drinke this cup, ye shew the Lords death till he come. Againe: Whosoeuer shall eat this bread, and drinke the cup of the Lord vnworthily, shal be guilty of the body and bloud of the Lord. And againe: Let a man therefore examine himselfe, and so let him eat of this bread, and drink of this cup. They say it is not bread; but Paul saith, and so many times saith, it is bread. And of the wine, Christ said after he had giuen thankes, and it was consecrate, and after his Supper, I wil not drinke of this fruit of the vine henceforth, vntil that day when I shal drink it new with you in my fathers kingdome. The fruit of the vine, in wine: therefore the selfe same fruit of the vine, the selfe same wine in substance did abide stil after Consecration, as before.

Math. 26.

De fide ad Petr. cap. 19. S. Augustine calleth this holy mystery, Sacramentum panis & vini: The Sacrament of bread and wine. Iustinus Martyr saith: Diaconi distribuunt vnicuique præsentium de pane in quo gratiæ actæ sunt: & de vino & aqua ad eos qui non sunt præsentes deferunt: The Deacons diuide vnto euery one of them that are present, part of that bread ouer which thanks were giuen: and they carry of the wine and water to such as are not present. Againe he saith: Alimento humido & sicco admonemur, quæ propter nos Dei Dei filius perpessus sit: By drie and moist food (whereby he meaneth the Sacrament) we are taught what things God the Son of God hath suffered for vs. What meant he by drie food, but bread? or by moist food, but wine? It cannot be auoided, but that he thought that bread & wine remain after the Consecration. He liued 1400. yéers since. And before him Ignatius: Vnus panis omnibus fractus: It is one bread which is broken for al. So Irenæus who also liued 1400. yéers since, saith: Eum calicem, qui est creatura, &c. He made that cup, which is a creature, his body, by which he increaseth our bodies. Therefore when the cup of mixture, and the bread which is broken, receiueth the word, it is made the Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, by which the substance of our flesh is increased and nourished. He saith, after Consecration it is a creature, and such a creature as nourisheth the substance of our flesh.

In Colloq. cum Tryphone.

Ignat. ad Philadel. aduer. he. lib. 5.

In 15. Math. Origen, who liued welnigh 1400. yéeres since, saith: Ille cibus qui sanctificatur per verbum Dei, perque obsecrationem, iuxta id quod habet materiale, in ventrem abit, & in secessum ejicitur: The meat which is sanctified by the word of God and by praier, as touching the materiall substance thereof goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the priuy. Certainly, vnlesse bread, in the substance & nature of bread did remaine in the Sacrament, these words were too horrible to be spoken. Dionysius saith: Pontifex operturn panem aperit, & in frusta concidit: The Bishop vncouereth the bread that was couered, and cutteth it in peeces. He noteth that the loafe of the Communion was of some bignesse, and that the Minister after Consecration diuided it, and gaue to euery man a portion.

Ecclc. Hierarc. cap. 3.

De vnctione Chrismatis. S. Cyprian writeth: Dedit Dominus noster in mensa, in qua vltimum cum Apostolis participauit panis communium, &c. Our Lord at the Table, whereas he receiued his laſt Supper with his Diſciples, with his owne hands gaue (not his very body and verie blood really, but) bread and wine: but vpon the Croſſe, he gaue his owne body, by the hands of the ſouldiers to be wounded. He maketh a difference betweene that which Chriſt gaue vpon the Croſſe, and that which he gaue at the Table. At the Table he gaue bread and wine; vpon the Croſſe he gaue his body and blood. Againe, he calleth the bread after Conſecration: Panem ex multorum granorum adunatione congeſtum: Bread made (not of formes and accidents, but) of the ſubſtance, and moulding of many cornes. Id. in erat. Determinatam.

Ambroſe ſaith: Quanto magis operatorius eſt ſermo Dei, vt ſint quæ erant, & in aliud commutentur? How much more effectuall is the word of God, that the bread and wine may be (in ſubſtance and nature) the ſame that they were before, and yet be changed into another thing? They are changed into a Sacrament, which they were not before, and remain bread and wine, which they were before. Lib. 4. cap. 4. de Sacram.

Chryſoſtome ſaith: In ſimilitudinem corporis & ſanguinis Chriſti, panem & vinum ſecundum ordinem Melchiſedech, nobis oſtendit in Sacramento: He ſhewed vs in a Sacrament bread and wine, after the order of Melchiſedech, to be the likenes of the body and blood of Chriſt. What ſhould I ſtand to trouble you with the reſt? As theſe ſay, ſo ſay the other: that the things which are ſeene in the Sacrament, are bread and wine. In Pſal. 22.

But, ſay they, it is called bread, becauſe it was bread, or becauſe it hath a likeneſſe of bread. A prety ſhift, but it will not helpe. For S. Auguſtine ſaith: Quod videtis, panis eſt, & calix: quod vobis etiam oculi renunciant: The thing that you ſee, is the bread and the cup: which thing your eies doe teſtifie. Gelaſius ſaith: Non deſinit eſſe ſubſtantia panis, vel natura vini. Et certe imago vel ſimilitudo corporis & ſanguinis Chriſti in actione myſteriorum celebratur: There leaueth not to be the ſubſtance of bread, or the nature of wine. And indeed, the image or repreſentation, and likeneſſe of the body and blood of Chriſt is publiſhed in the miniſtration of the myſteries. He ſaith, it leaueth not, it remaineth, it is ſtill, (not the forme or appearance, but) the ſubſtance and nature. Aug. ad infant. Contra Eutich.

Chryſoſtome ſaith: Natura panis in Sacramento rèmanet: The nature of bread remaineth in the Sacrament. And Theodoretus: Signa myſtica poſt ſanctificationem non recedunt a natura ſua: manent enim in priori ſubſtantia, & figura, & forma: The myſticall tokens or ſacraments after the Conſecration depart not from their own nature: for they remaine ſtill in their former ſubſtance, and forme, and figure. Not only in forme and figure, not only in ſhew, but it remaineth bread and wine in nature & ſubſtance. Likewiſe Cyrillus: Chriſtus fragmenta panis dedit Diſcipulis: Chriſt gaue fragments or peeces of bread to his Diſciples. It was very bread diuided into ſundrie peeces. And Rabanus ſaith: Sacramentum ore percipitur, & in alimentum corporis redigitur: The Sacrament is receiued with the mouth, and is turned into the nouriſhment of the body. Ad Cæſar, dialog. 2. In Iob. lib. 4. cap. 14. Lib. 1. cap 31.

Bertramus ſaith: Secundum creaturarum ſubſtantiam, quod fuerunt ante conſecrationem, hoc & poſtea conſiſtunt: Touching the ſubſtance of the creatures (of bread and wine) they abide the ſame after, as they were before the conſecration. Euen ſo ſaith Clemens, Vinum eſſe illud quod benedictum eſt oſtendit, rurſus dicens, non bibam amplius ex hoc germine vitis. Chriſt ſhewed that that was wine which was bleſſed, by ſaying againe, I will no more drinke of the fruit of the vine. I will bring forth no more witneſſes in this matter, you haue enough, and ſo many as may ſatisfie anie reaſonable man. You ſee the conſent of the old Doctors, I know not how anie thing may be more plainlie ſet downe and declared. De corp. & ſang. Dom. In pædag. li. 2. cap. 2.

Why, then ſay you, how came tranſubſtantiation into the Church? How it came in I cannot ſhew you. The huſbandman, that findeth his field ouergrowen with cockell, and ill weeds knoweth not how they come. They grow of themſelues, he ſoweth them not. But when, or ſince what time it hath been receiued and allowed of, I will tell you. It was firſt determined and enacted in the Councell of Laterane, vnder Pope Innocentius the third, in the time of King Iohn, King of England, and in the yeere of our Lord 1215. that is, 350. yeeres ago, and not before. Then was it firſt ſo named, and made a matter of faith, and neuer before. This I ſpeake not of my ſelfe, they that maintaine that errour confeſſe it, the moſt learned, and wiſeſt, and ageſt of them ſay it. And yet then was it no Catholike faith, for it was only receiued in the Church of Rome; the other Churches ouer all the world receiued it not, as appeareth by a Councell holden at Florence. Therefore, if tranſubſtantiation be a matter of faith, it is a new late found faith, and no old and Catholike faith. In the time of our great grandfathers it was not ſo taken. Afterward Pope Honorius 3. commanded, that it ſhould be kept vnder a canopie, and that the people ſhould worſhip the Sacrament. And after him Vrbanus 4. made a new holiday in honour of it, which he called Corpus Chriſti day. And all theſe things haue been done within theſe few yeeres. For before, in the times of Auguſtine, Ierome, Chryſoſtome, and the old Fathers, they Anno 1226. Anno 1265.

were neuer heard of. But to returne to that we haue in hand, whether the bread and wine in the Sacrament remaine in their proper nature: Yes verily, for ſo is it auouched by our Sauiour, by S. Paul, by Ignatius, Iuſtinus, Irenæus, Origen, Dionyſius, Cyprian, Ambroſe, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine, Gelaſius, Theodoretus, Cyrillus, Bertramus, and Rabanus. By ſo many good and lawfull witneſſes it appeareth, that the bread and wine remaine in the ſame nature and ſubſtance as before.

I ſeeke not to aſtoniſh you by bringing in ſuch a heaps of Authors: nor yet to ſeeke mine owne glory thereby, God is my witneſſe, and his Chriſt. If I would ſeeke mine own commodity, I ſhould hold my peace, and not vnfold theſe errours, wherewith the Church of God hath beene diſquieted theſe late yeeres. As for glory, I haue none in theſe things: ſhame come vpon them, that ſeeke the glory and commendation of men: our glory is to diſcharge our conſcience, and to ſpeake the truth, that we may be blameleſſe in the day of our Lord.

And yet in ſpeaking thus of the ſacrament of the Lords ſupper, and denying the ſtrange and new learning of tranſubſtantiation, and making it known, that the bread and wine continue ſtill that they were before, we doe not conceiue baſely or vnreuerently of the ſacrament: we doe not make it a bare and naked token. Let no man be deceiued. We doe both thinke, and ſpeake ſoberly, and with reuerence of the holy myſteries. As we cannot call them more then they are: ſo may we not eſteeme them leſſe then they are by the ordinance and inſtitution of Chriſt.

We ſay, they are changed, that they haue a dignity and preeminence which they had not before; that they are not now common bread, or common wine, but the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt: a holy myſterie: a couenant betweene Chriſt and vs: a teſtimonie vnto our conſcience, that Chriſt is the lambe of God: a perfect ſeale, and ſufficient warrant of Gods promiſes, whereby God bindeth himſelfe to vs, and we ſtand likewiſe bounden vnto God, ſo as God is our God, and we are his people.

In baptiſme, the nature and ſubſtance of water doth remaine ſtill: and yet is not it bare water. It is changed, and made the ſacrament of our regeneration. It is water conſecrated, and made holie by the blood of Chriſt. They which are waſhed therein, are not waſhed with water, but in the blood of the vnſpotted Lambe. One thing is ſeene, and another vnderſtood. We ſee the water, but we vnderſtand the blood of Chriſt. Euen ſo we ſee the bread and wine, but with the eies of our vnderſtanding we looke beyond theſe creatures, we reach our ſpirituall ſenſes into heauen, and behold the ranſome and price of our ſaluation. We do behold in the Sacrament, not what it is, but what it doth ſignifie. When we receiue it with due reuerence and faith, we ſay, as ſaid Gregorius Nyſſenus; De creat. hom. cap. 20. Ego aliam eſcam agnoſco, quæ, &c. I know another kind of meat, bearing the likeneſſe and reſemblance of our bodily meat, the pleaſure and ſweetneſſe whereof paſſeth only into the ſoule. It goeth not into the mouth or bellie, but onlie into the ſoule, and it feedeth the mind inwardlie, as the other outwardlie feedeth the body.

In Pſal. 48. Baſil. in Pſal. 33. We ſay as S Auguſtine: Ipſe eſt panis cordis noſtri: Chriſt is the bread of our heart. And as S. Baſil: Eſt ſpirituale os interioris hominis, quo nutritur recipiens verbum vitæ, quod verbum eſt panis qui deſcendit de cœlo: There is a ſpirituall mouth of the inner man, by which he is nouriſhed by receiuing (Chriſt) the word of life, which is the bread that came from heauen. In this myſterie of the death of Chriſt, his death and paſſion is renued to our remembrance. We are ſo mooued to ſorrow for our ſinnes, which haue beene cauſe of his death; and to be thankfull for the great mercie of God, which by this meanes wrought our redemption, as if we did ſee him preſent before our faces hanging vpon the Croſſe. We know that Chriſt hath left his Sacraments to his Church, that they might be helpes to lift vs vp into Heauen. By them we are ioined with Chriſt, and made partakers of his paſſion.

Next, let vs conſider, how and after what ſort we eat the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament. And heere, I beſeech you, that you may take the comfort of the body and blood of Chriſt, to giue good eare. For of miſtaking this myſterie, grew the firſt error in the Church. When the Diſciples of Chriſt heard Chriſt ſpeake of this matter, and vnderſtood him not, they were offended, and ſhrunke backe, and departed. If we take the words of Chriſt in ſuch meaning as they did, we ſhall be deceiued and offended as they were.

This it is then which we haue to conſider, whether the body of Chriſt go into our mouth and our bodies, as other meats: or whether it be receiued ſpirituallie, as a ſpirituall meat, and ſo paſſe into, and nourith our ſoule. Hereof ſomewhat was ſaid before, by the way and ſhortlie. But for clearer vnderſtanding of the ſame, we haue to weigh and declare, that the eating of the bodie of Chriſt, is not groſſe or corporall, but ghoſtlie, and ſpirituall, as a peculiar worke of the minde.

The

The truth hereof is founded in our Creed, and is an article of our Christian faith. We beleeue that Christ did rise againe from the dead, and ascended into heauen, and sitteth at the right hand of God in glory. So saith S. Paul, If ye then be risen with Christ, seeke those things which are aboue, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. And againe: Our conuersation is in heauen, from whence we also looke for the Sauiour, euen the Lord Iesus Christ. Christ himselfe saith to his Disciples: It is expedient for you that I goe away. And: The poore alwaies ye haue with you, but me yee shal not haue alwaies. So S. Peter saith: Whom the heauen must containe, vntil the time that al things be restored, which God had spoken by the mouth of all his holy Prophets since the world began. Coloss. 3. Phil. 3. Iohn 16. Iohn 12. Acts 3.

Which speeches haue occasioned the old ancient learned Fathers, to teach the people after this sort, touching the body of Christ. Vigilius, a godly Bishop and Martyr, saith: Caro Christi cum esset in terra, non erat in cœlo: & nunc, quia est in cœlo, non est vtique in terra: The flesh of Christ when it was in earth, was not in heauen: and now, because it is in heauen, doubtlesse it is not in earth. Ambrose saith: Seeke the things that bee aboue, and not the things that be vpon earth. Therefore we must seeke thee neither vpon the earth, nor in the earth, nor according to the flesh, if we list to find thee. Contra Eutych. lib. 2. In Luc. lib. 10. cap. 24.

S. Augustine saith: According to the flesh that the word receiued: according to that he was borne of the Virgin: according to that he was taken of the Iewes: according to that he was nailed to the Crosse: according to that he was taken downe, and lapt in a shrowd, and laid in the graue, and rose againe, and shewed himselfe in this respect, it is true that he said: Ye shal not euermore haue me with you. Tract. 50. in Iob.

And againe he said: Donec seculum finiatur sursum est Dominus, &c. Vntil the world be ended, the Lord is aboue: yet notwithstanding euen here is the truth of the Lord. For the body wherein he rose againe, must needs be in one place. So Cyrillus said: Christus non poterat in carne versari cum Apostolis, postquam ascendisset ad patrem: Christ could not be conuersant together with his Disciples in his flesh, after he had ascended vnto his father. De consecrat. dist. 2. Cyril. in Iob. lib. 11. cap. 3.

It would be tedious to allege al that might be said to like purpose. Thus Christ, and Paul, and Peter: thus Vigilius, Ambrose, Augustine, Cyril, and al the old Catholike fathers say; and we are taught to beleeue, that Christ is not corporally in the Church, but is ascended into heauen, and that he hath giuen to his body immortality, but hath not taken from the same the nature of a body. Vigilius hauing cause to proue this same article against Eutiches, shutteth vp the matter thus: Hec est fides & professio catholica, quam Apostoli tradiderunt, martyres roborauerunt, & fideles huc vsque custodiunt: This is the Catholike faith and profession, which the Apostles haue deliuered, the martyrs haue confirmed, and the faithful hitherto doe continue. Vig. contra Eutych. lib. 1.

The body then which we eat, is in heauen: aboue al Angels, and Archangels, and powers, and principalities. Our meat is in heauen on high, and we are here below on the earth. How may it be, that we may reach it, or taste, or eat it? Here let vs imagine, that there are two men in euery man, and that euery man is flesh and spirit, body and soule. This man thus doubled, must be furnished with double senses: bodily to serue the body: and spiritual, to serue the soule. He must haue eies of the body, and eies of the soule: eares of the body, and eares of the soule. Spiritual senses, are quicke, sharpe, and liuely. They pierce any thing, be it neuer so thicke: they reach any thing, be it neuer so far off. Christ saith of Abraham, Abraham reioiced to see my day: he saw it, and was glad. He saw it, not with his bodily eies, but with the inner eies of the soule. Iohn 8.

When we speake of the mystery of Christ, and of eating his body, we must shut vp and abandon al our bodily senses. And, as we cannot say, that we see him with our bodily eies, or heare him with our bodily eares, or touch him with bodily feeling: so likewise can we not and therfore may we not say, we taste him, or eat him with our bodily mouth. In this worke we must open al the inner and spiritual senses of our soule: so shal we not only see his body, but heare him, and feele him, and taste him, and eat him. This is the mouth, and the feeling of faith. By the hand of faith we reach vnto him, and by the mouth of faith we receiue his body.

Touching the eating of Christs body, Saint Augustine taught the people on this wise: Crede, & manducasti. Credere in Christum, hoc est, manducare panem viuum: Beleeue in Christ, and thou hast eaten Christ. For, beleeuing in Christ, is the eating of the bread of life. Beleeue that he is that Lamb of God that taketh away the sinnes of the world. Beleeue that there is no other name giuen vnto men, wherein we shal be saued, but the name of Iesus Christ. Beleeue that he hath paid the ransome for the sins of the whole world. Beleeue that he hath made peace between God and man. Beleeue, that it is he, which hath reconciled al things by his blood. Here is nothing to be done by the mouth of the body. Whosoeuer thus beleeueth, he eateth, he drinketh him. Tract. 26. in Ioan.

Clemens

In pæda. lib. 2. cap. 2. Clemens saith: Hoc est bibere sanguinem Iesu, participem esse incorruptionis eius: This is the drinking of the bloud of Iesus, to be made partaker of his immortality. Tertullian saith: He must be receiued in cause of life: he must be deuoured by hearing: he must be chewed by vnderstanding: hee must bee digested by faith. Thus did Christ himselfe teach his Disciples to vnderstand him. The words which I speake are spirit and life. S. Hierome Ioh 6 therefore saith: Quando audimus sermonem domini, caro Christi, & sanguis eius in aures nostras infunditur: When wee heare the word of God, the flesh of Christ, and his bloud is powred into our eares. In Psalm. 147.

The Patriarchs and Prophets, and people of God, which liued before the birth of Christ, did by faith eat his flesh, and drinke his bloud. S. Paul saith: They did all eat the same spirituall meat, and did all drinke of the same spirituall drinke. Whosoeuer beleeued in Christ, they were nourished by him then, as wee are now. They did not see Christ: he was not yet borne: hee had not yet a naturall body, yet did they eat his body: he had not yet any bloud, yet did they drinke his bloud. They beleeued that it was hee, in whom the promises should be fulfilled, that he should be that blessed seed, in whom all nations should be blessed. Thus they beleeued, thus they receiued, and did eat his body. 1. Cor. 10.

But say some, the fathers of the old law, were in darkenesse, in a shadow, and a figure: it was meet they should receiue the Sacrament spiritually, or the body of our Lord spiritually: but all otherwise with vs, vnto whose benefit, the sacraments of the new Testament worke the thing it selfe that they signifie: so that wee receiue Christ really, bodily, and with the mouth of our bodies.

S. Paul telleth vs, the Fathers of the old Law did eat the same spirituall meat, that is to say, the same Christ, that we eat. So saith S Augustine: Sacramenta illa fuerunt, in signis diuersa: in rebus quæ significabantur, paria: These things were Sacraments, in the outward tokens diuers, but in the things signified, all one with ours. Likewise saith Leo: Mysteria pro temporum ratione variata sunt: quum fides, qua viuimus nulla fuerit ætate diuersa: The Sacraments are altered according to the diuersity of times: but the faith whereby wee liue, was euer in all ages one. If they did eat the same meat; if the things, that is, the matter of their Sacraments were all one with ours; if their faith was all one with our faith; what difference is there betweene their and our eating? As they did eat Christ by faith, and not by the mouth of the body: so we eat Christ by faith, and not by the mouth of our body. Tract. 26. in Iohan. De natiui. Dom. ser. 3.

To make this somewhat more euident, let vs take the iudgement of the fathers. They teach vs plainly, that the spirituall eating of Christs body by faith, is the true eating: and that we doe not grossely, fleshly, really, or naturally eat him in the Sacrament. S. Cyprian saith, the body of Christ est cibus mentis, non ventris: It is meat for the minde, not for the belly: Not for the teeth to chew, but for the soule to beleeue. Cyrillus saith: Sacramentum nostrum, hominis manducationem non asserit, mentes credentium ad crassas cogitationes irreligiose inducens: Our Sacrament auoucheth not the eating of a man, leading the minds of the faithfull in vngodly maner to grosse (or fleshlie) cogitations. Athanasius saith: Quot hominibus sufficisset corpus eius, &c. Vnto how many men could Christs body haue sufficed, that he should be the food of all the world? Therefore he made mention of his ascension into heauen, that he might withdraw them from corporall and fleshly vnderstanding. What thing may be spoken more plainly? It were vnpossible his naturall body naturally receiued, might suffice all the world: to let them see he had no such meaning, he speaketh of his going vp into heauen. Spiritually then, he is receiued of euery one, and is digested, and becommeth the nourishment of all the world. Cypr. de cœna Domini. Ad obie. Theodo. anath 11. In illud Euan. Quicunque dixerit verbum.

S. Augustine expounding these words of Christ: Whoso eateth of this bread, shall not die, saith thus: Quod pertinet ad virtutem sacramenti, non quod pertinet ad visibile sacramentum. Qui manducat intus, non foris: qui manducat in corde, non qui premit dente: That pertaineth to the virtue and effect of the Sacrament, not that pertaineth to the visible sacrament He that eateth inwardly, and not he that eateth outwardly: that eateth with his heart, not that bruseth (the Sacrament) with his tooth. Thus is Christs body receiued, as these holy fathers say: not to the filling our contentation of the body, not with mouth or teeth, but with spirit and faith, vnto the holinesse, and sanctification of the mind. After this sort wee eat his flesh, and drinke his bloud. Tract. 26. in Iohn.

Therefore wicked men, and such as beleeue not, receiue not the body of Christ: they haue no portion in it. So saith Origen: Est cibus verus, quem nemo malus potest edere, &c. The body of Christ, is the true food, which no euill man can eat: For, if the euill man could eat the body of our Lord, it should not be written, he that eateth this bread shall liue for euer. Orig. in 15. Matt.

Ambrose saith: Hunc panem qui manducauerit, non esuriet: est esca sanctorum: non morietur morte peccatoris, quia remissio peccatorum est: He that eateth this bread, shal not hunger: it is the food of those that are holy. He shal not dy the death of a sinner: because it is the remis- De bened. Patriarch. cap. 9.

sion of sinnes. S. Augustine saith: Qui discordat à Christo, nec panem eius manducat, nec sanguinem bibit, &c. Whoso disagreeth from Christ, neither eateth his bread, nor drinketh his blood: although he daily receiue the Sacrament of so great a thing without difference, to the iudgement of his presumption. And againe: Qui in me non manet, &c. Hee that abideth not in me, and in whom I do not abide, let him not say, or thinke, that he either eateth my bodie, or drinketh my blood. And againe: Cæcus interius panem Christum non videt. Et beatus est? Hoc non dicet, nisi pariter cæcus: He that is blind in his heart within, seeth not Christ, that is our bread. And is he blessed? No man will say so, vnlesse it be one as blind as he. In Ioh. tra. 26. Aug. de ciuit. Dei lib. 21. cap. 5. Aug. in Psal. 57.

Chrysostome saith: Where the carcasse is, there are Eagles: The carkasse is the bodie of Christ, in respect of his death. But he nameth Eagles, to shew, that who so will approach to this bodie, must mount aloft, and haue no dealing with the earth, nor be drawne, and creepe downward, but must euermore flee vp, and behold the Sun of iustice, and haue the eie of his mind quicke and sharpe. For this is a table of Eagles, (that flie on high,) not of layes (that creep beneath.) So saith S. Hierome: Let vs goe vp with the Lord (into heauen) into that great parlar, spread and cleane: and let vs receiue of him aboue, the cup of the new Testament. He saith, They that rise not vp by faith, receiue not the cup of Christ. So saith Hillarie: The bread that came downe from heauen, is not receiued, but of him that hath our Lord, and is the member of Christ. Hom. 24. in ad Cor. Ier. ad Hedibiam quæst. 2. De trinit. lib. 8

This is the vndoubted meaning of the old fathers, that the wicked are not partakers of the passion of Christ, because they lack faith, whereby only Christ is receiued of vs. As Augustine saith: How shall I hold Christ being absent? how shall I thrust my hand vp into heauen, that I may hold him sitting there? Send vp thy faith, and thou holdest him. By this meanes we draw nigh to Christ, we hide our selues in his wounds, we sucke at his breast, we feed of his body, and comfortably lay vp in our minde, that his flesh was crucified and wounded for our sakes. Tract. in Ioan. 50.

Now let vs examine what difference is betweene the body of Christ, and the Sacrament of the body. It behoueth vs to take each part aright as it is, lest we be deceiued and take one for another. Origen saith: Simpliciores nescientes distinguere, &c. Simple men not being able to discerne what things in the Scriptures ought to be applied to the outward man, and what to the inner, being deceiued by the likenesse of words, haue turned themselues to a sort of peeuish fables, and vaine fantasies. Therefore saith Chrysostome: Magnum crede mihi bonum est scire quid sit creatura & quid sit Creator, &c. Beleeue me, it is a great matter to vnderstand what is the creature, and what is God the Creator; what are the works, and what is the workman. The difference herein is this: A Sacrament is a figure or token: the body of Christ is figured or tokened. The Sacrament bread is bread, it is not the body of Christ. The body of Christ is flesh, it is no bread. The bread is beneath, the body is aboue. The bread is on the Table, the body is in heauen. The bread is in the mouth, the body in the heart. The bread feedeth the outward man, the body feedeth the inward man. The bread feedeth the body, the body feedeth the soule. The bread shall come to nothing: The body is immortall, and shall not perish. The bread is vile, the body of Christ glorious. Such a difference is there betweene the bread, which is a Sacrament of the body, and the body of Christ it selfe. The Sacrament is eaten as wel of the wicked, as of the faithful: the body is onely eaten of the faithfull. The Sacrament may be eaten vnto iudgement: the body cannot be eaten, but vnto saluation. Without the Sacrament we may be saued: but without the body of Christ, we haue no saluation, we cannot be saued. As S. Augustine saith: Qui non sumit carnem Christi, non habet vitam: & qui eam sumit, habet vtam, & eam vtique æternam: He that receiueth not the flesh of Christ, hath not life: and he that receiueth the same, hath life, and that for euer. De ieiunijs & lectione Gen. Tract. 26. in Iohan.

Such a difference maketh Epiphanius: Hoc est rotunda figura & insensibile, quantum ad potentiam, &c. This thing (that is, the Sacrament) is of a ronnd forme, (for it was a great thicke round Cake) and touching any power that is in it, vtterly void of sense. But we know that our Lord is whole sense, whole sensible, whole God, whole mouing. Againe S. Augustine saith for the difference of them: The Sacrament (of Christs body) is receiued of some vnto life, of some vnto destruction: but the thing it selfe, (that is, the flesh of Christ) whereof this is a Sacrament, is receiued of all men vnto life, and of no man to destruction, whosoeuer shall be partaker of it. Epipha. in Anchor. Tract. 26. in Iohan.

Of the difference which is betweene a figure of any thing, and the thing it selfe, Chrysostom saith: Audisti fuisse figuram, ne ergo mirare, neque omnia require in typo: neque enim typus esset, si omnia quæ veritati accidunt haberentur: Ye haue heard that it was a figure, therefore maruell not, & being a figure, require not al things to agree: for otherwise it were no figure. Hom. 35. in Gen.

These and such like reasons no doubt moued the godly Father to say as wee haue learned to say: Aliud est Sacramentum, aliud res sacramenti: The Sacrament is one thing, and the Tract. 26. in Iohan.

matter of the Sacrament (which is Christs very body) is another thing. And therefore he
Aug. de trinit. lib. 3. cap. 10. saith: Honorem, tanquam religiosa habere possunt: stuporem tanquam mira non possunt: These things (speaking of the Sacrament of Christs body) may haue honour as things appointed to religion: but wonder, as things maruellous, they cannot haue. Thus are we plainely taught by the Catholike learned Fathers, to put a difference betwéen the Sacrament and the body of Christ: and that the one of them is not really lapped vp or shut within the other: that the one (as Epiphanius saith) is vtterly void of sense: the other whole sense, and whole sensible: that the one is receiued to destruction vnto some, as S. Augustine saith: the other is receiued of all men vnto life: That the one is a figure, as Chrysostome saith: the other a truth.

It remaineth, that we consider how we ought to prepare our hearts: and with what faith and reuerence we should resort to these holy mysteries. Wee may not come, as wee vse to doe to our vsuall meats. For here, in a mystery and Sacrament of bread, is set before vs the body of Christ our Sauiour: and his blood in the Sacrament of Wine. We sée one thing, we must conceiue another thing. Therefore we must in such maner be affected, as if we were present to behold his death vpon the Crosse, and the shedding of his blood for our sinnes.

Let vs set before our eies that dreadfull tragedy, and the causes and effects of his death: that so our hearts may be the rather moued to yéeld that allegeance, obedience, and reuerence, which is due. We were the children of wrath, the enemies of God, shut vp vnder sinne, and the heires of euerlasting damnation. In this case God so loued the world, that he gaue his only begotten Son, that whosoeuer beléeueth in him should not perish, but
Rom. 8. haue life euerlasting. And as Saint Paul saith: God sent his owne Sonne in the similitude of sinfull flesh, and by sinne condemned sinne in the flesh. There was no other thing in heauen or earth, which would be taken for our ransom. Therefore was the Sonne of God brought before the Iudge, and araigned as a théefe, and condemned, and scourged, and put to death: his side was opened with a speare, and the blood flowed out: and he said, It is finished: that is to say, the price for man is now paied. Thus, being in the forme of God, he Philip. 2. thought it no robbery to be equall with God: but he made himselfe of no reputation, and tooke on him the forme of a seruant, and was made like vnto men, and was found in shape as a man. He humbled himselfe, and became obedient vnto the death, euen the death of the Crosse. He gaue his body to be crucified, and his blood to be shed for our sakes. There was no other sacrifice left for sinne: woe worth the sinne of man, that was the cause of the death of Christ.

What were the effects of his death? What followed? God hath highly exalted him, Phil. 2. and giuen him a name aboue euery name, that at the name of Iesus should euery knee bow: and that euery tongue should confesse that Iesus Christ is the Lord, to the glory of God the Father. God spake out of the heauens, and said: This is my beloued Son, in whom I am well pleased. He crowned him with glory and honour: he hath not only aduanced Christ, Ephes. 2. but vs also together with him. And made vs sit together in heauenly places in Christ Iesus: He hath made vs like to the Image of his Son. Thus hath he made vs an acceptable people, and hath renewed the face of the earth: sée that now he saith not, as he did to Adam, thou art earth, and shalt returne to earth: but he saith, Thou art heauen: an immortal and vndefiled inheritance that fadeth not away is reserued in heauen for thée. This is the effect, and value of the death of Christ.

All these things are laid before vs in the holy table, if wée haue eies to sée and behold them. There may we sée the crucifying of his body, and the shedding of his blood, as it were in a glasse. Therefore Christ saith, doe this in remembrance of me: in remembrance of my benefit wrought for you: in remembrance of your saluation purchased by me. S. Paul
1. Cor. 11. saith: As often as ye shall eat this bread, and drinke this cup, ye shew the Lords death till he come.

In this supper lieth a hidden mystery. There is the horror of sinne, there is the death of our Lord for our sinne represented, how he was wounded for our sins, and tormented for our iniquities, and led as a Lamb to the slaughter. There may we sée the shame of the Crosse: the darknesse ouer the world: the earth to quake: the stones to cleaue asunder: the graues to open, and the dead to rise. These things may we sée in the Supper: this is the meaning of these holy mysteries.

Therfore let euery one examine himselfe, and search and weigh his own heart, whether hée bée the child of God, and a member of the body of Christ: and so let him eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup. The Sacrament of the Lords Supper, is a holy food, the seale of our faith, the assurance of Gods promises, and a couenant betwéen God and man. He that doth vnworthily thrust himselfe to this table, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation.

nation. When a ſicke man, of a weake and feeble ſtomacke, ſitteth downe to eat with them that are whole, whatſoeuer he eateth or drinketh, it doth increaſe his ſickneſſe. To them that periſh, the word of God is a ſauour of death vnto death. Whoſo diſagreeth from Chriſt, neither eateth his bread, nor drinketh his blood, as ſaith S. Auguſtine.

If any of vs come to the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt, and yet make our ſelues the members of the Diuell, we tread Chriſt vnder our feet, we regard not his body crucified, nor his blood ſhed for vs; we regard not the price of our ſaluation, we are guilty of his death, we betray the innocent blood, we are fallen from grace, and Chriſt hath died in vaine for vs.

Let vs remember Chriſt was forſaken, ſcorned, buffeted, crucified, and left vpon the Croſſe: he was a worme, and no man, a reproch among men. Nature it ſelfe yearned, & yeelded at the ſight hereof. The whole land grew darke, the earth did quake, the Sun loſt his light, the powers of heauen were moued, the rocks were clouen, the vaile of the Temple rent, the theefe repented, and ſaid, Lord remember me when thou commeſt into thy kingdome: the Centurion glorified God, and ſaid, of a ſurety this man was iuſt.

Where is the power of Chriſts death now? Where is the force and power of his word? By theſe meanes he ſpeaketh to thee, & calleth, ſaying; Behold, O man, thus haue I ſought thee: theſe things I ſuffer for thy ſake, that thou ſhouldſt eat my fleſh, and drinke my blood, and be made one with me: that thou mightſt come into me, and I into thee. I haue made thee a member of my body, bone of my bones, and fleſh of my fleſh. Thou that walloweſt in thy ſins, thou Sodom, and Gomorrah, thou child of deſtruction, which haſt reioiced in my ſhame, and art not moued with the paines which I haue ſuffered, what might I do for thy ſake, to ſaue thee, that I haue not done? What might I ſuffer, and haue not endured it? O be a partner of my death, that thou maiſt haue part in my reſurrection.

Let vs die with Chriſt, let vs be crucified vnto the world. Let vs be holy Eagles, and ſoare aboue. Let vs goe vp into the great parlar, and receiue of our Lord the Cup of the new Teſtament. There let vs behold the body that was crucified for vs, & the blood which was ſhed for vs. There let vs ſay, this is the ranſome of the world: this was once offered, and hath made perfect for euer all them that beleeue: this entred once into the holy place, and obtained euerlaſting redemption for vs: this ſtandeth alwaies in the preſence of God, and maketh interceſſion for vs: this is the Lambe of God, that taketh away the ſins of the world: by this body I am now no more earth and aſhes: by this, I am now not a bondman, but made free. This body hath broken the gates of hell, and hath opened heauen. In this are all the treaſures of Gods mercy: by this the Prince of darkneſſe is caſt forth: in this body ſhall he come againe to iudge the quicke and the dead.

Let no vncleane or filthy perſon, no adulterer, no vſurer, no cruell extortioner, or deuourer of Gods people, offer himſelfe to the receiuing of this Sacrament. If any be ſuch a one, I require him by the body and blood of Jeſus Chriſt, and by the iudge of the quicke and the dead, that he come not to the Lords table: that he betray not the Son of God. It were better he had neuer been borne, and that a millſtone were hanged about his necke, and he throwen into the ſea. Let vs not deceiue our ſelues: God will not be mocked. He receiueth damnation, that receiueth vnworthily.

Let vs fall downe before our Lord, and giue thanks vnto him: Let vs ſay, what ſhall I giue vnto the Lord, for all that he hath giuen vnto mee? I will take the Cup of ſaluation, and call vpon the name of the Lord. Let vs ſay, O Lord our Lord, how wonderfull is thy name in all the world? Let vs ſay, praiſe the Lord, O my ſoule, and all that is within me, praiſe his holy name. Let vs purpoſe, and promiſe amendment of our life: let vs goe out with Peter, and weep: let vs fall at Chriſts feet with Mary Magdalen, and with our teares waſh his feet: Let vs ſay with Dauid, I haue ſinned to thee Lord: Let vs ſay with the prodigall Son, Father, I haue ſinned againſt heauen and againſt thee, I am no more worthy to be called thy Son: Let vs ſay, Haue mercy on me O God, according to thy great mercie. Thou art my God. I am thy ſeruant. O ſaue me for thy mercies ſake. Let vs offer vp our bodies, a liuing, pure, holie, and acceptable ſacrifice to God. So ſhall we be partakers of the death of Chriſt, and of his reſurrection. Thus haue we briefly gone thorow the whole matter of the ſacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, and followed the ſame order which was ſet downe. Firſt that we do in the ſacrament truly eat the body of Chriſt. Secondly, what is the meaning of the words Hoc eſt corpus meum. Thirdly, whether the bread remaine in nature and ſubſtance. Fourthly, whether it be eaten with the mouth of the body, or by faith only. Fifthly, what difference is betweene the body of Chriſt, and the myſticall ſignes. Sixtly, how we muſt be prepared, and with what deuotion we ought to come to receiue this Sacrament.

Hauing thus treated of the Sacraments of the new Teſtament, and ſaid ſo much as is nædfull for you to know of them both, as well of baptiſme, which is the ſacrament of our regeneration, as of our Lords ſupper, which is the Sacrament of our refection, or nouriſhment: I will now in few words ſpeake ſomething of confirmation, of matrimony, of eccleſiaſticall miniſtery, which ſome call holy orders, of repentance or penance, and of extreame vnction, which ſome of late yeres haue called Sacraments, and by ioining theſe to the other, haue made vp the number of ſeauen ſacraments, and ſo haue charged the Church with fiue Sacraments more then Chriſt did euer ordaine.

For theſe fiue, want either the word, or the element, or both: and therefore may not be taken for true Sacraments. Such as haue with all their ſkill ſhewed themſelues helpers and furtherers of our aduerſaries, yet haue plainly confeſſed that they are no ſacraments of Chriſts inſtitution. Alexander of Hales, ſaith of Confirmation. The ſacrament of confirmation, as it is a ſacrament, was not ordained either by Chriſt or by the Apoſtles, but afterward in the Councell of Melda: Which Councell was kept many yeres after Chriſt. And Durandus ſaith of matrimonie: Matrimony in due and proper kind of ſpeech, is no Sacrament. And Beſſarion a Cardinall, confeſſeth (as it was ſhewed before) that in due and right conſideration, none of theſe fiue may be called Sacraments: We read (ſaith he) that theſe two only ſacraments, were deliuered vs plainly in the Goſpell.

Firſt, of confirmation, which is ſo called becauſe that which was done on our behalfe in baptiſme, is ratified and confirmed: many parents had not ſuch due care as they ought in the godly bringing vp of their children: ſo that many children knew not whether they were baptized or no: many were neuer taught what couenant was made betwen them and God in their baptiſme: many ſwarued away from Chriſtian profeſſion, and caried themſelues to the fellowſhip of the heathens: and of the Sons of God, became the Sons of the Diuell. Vpon this occaſion, the Church of God laieth charge vpon the parents, and the witneſſes, of the baptizing of yong children, that they teach them the waies of the Lord, and to know the holy myſterie that they haue receiued, and what they haue promiſed and profeſſed in Baptiſme; that they put them in mind, how God hath called them out of the kingdome of darkneſſe, vnto his wonderfull light, and to the fellowſhip of the ſaints in light.

When the children of the Chriſtians were thus brought vp, and had learned the religion of Chriſt, and to walke in the waies of godlineſſe, they were brought to the Church, and by their parents preſented vnto the Biſhop: and yeelded a reaſon of their faith openly, before the whole congregation: they profeſſed they would ſo beléeue, that they would liue and die in that faith. Then the Biſhop and all the people fell downe on their knées, and praied vnto God, that he would continue the good thing he had begun, and the Biſhop laying his hand vpon them, commended them vnto God. This was the ratifying of the profeſſion which they made by others at their baptiſme, and for that cauſe called confirmation.

Now, whether it be a ſacrament: and, when I ſay a Sacrament, I meane a ceremony commanded by God in expreſſe words: For God only hath the authority to inſtitute a ſacrament. Sacraments are confirmations and ſeales of the promiſes of God, and are not of the earth, but from heauen. As Chriſt ſaith: The Baptiſme of Iohn whence was it? from Math. 21. heauen or of men? Chryſoſtome ſaith; The myſtery were not of God, nor perfit, if thou ſhouldeſt put any thing to it. Marke, and iudge, and your ſelues ſhall ſée, whether this were a ſacrament inſtituted by Chriſt. Auguſtine ſaid: Accedat verbum ad elementum, & fit ſacramentum: Ioine the word to the creature, and it is made a ſacrament. This creature or element is viſible, as are water, bread and wine. The word which muſt be ioined, is the commandement, and inſtitution of Chriſt: without the word, and the commandement and inſtitution, it is no ſacrament.

I proteſt that the vſe and order of confirmation rightlie vſed, is profitable, and neceſſary in the Church, and no way to be broken. But all that is profitable, and neceſſary, is not a ſacrament. Chriſt did not command it, he ſpake no word of it. Looke, and read, if you doubt it. Chriſts words are written, and may be ſeen. You ſhall neuer find that he commanded Confirmation, or that he euer made anie ſpeciall promiſe to it. Therefore may you conclude, that it is no ſacrament. Otherwiſe, being rightlie vſed, it is a good ceremonie, and well ordained of our ancient Fathers.

The Apoſtles laid their hands on them, and confirmed them which were baptized of Iohn. But that proueth not this confirmation: that was extraordinary, it was a miracle. The holy Ghoſt came down vpon them, & lightned their hearts by this laying on of the Apoſtles hands. But it is not ſo now, the holy Ghoſt doth not now deſcend in viſible forme vpon thoſe which are confirmed: there is no ſuch miracle wrought. There is no need that it ſhould ſo be. There was no commandement, either to appoint it to the Church, or to continue it vntil the comming of Christ, and the end of the world. Therfore it is no sacrament by the institution of Christ. Hitherto of the vse: now somewhat of the abuse.

Nothing so good and holy, but it may be abused. The word of God hath bene abused to heresies, to negromancy, to charmes, and sorcery, and witchcraft. The supper of the Lord was abused in the time of S. Paul. He telleth the Corinthians: This is not to eat the Lords Supper. Lesse maruell then, if this happen to a ceremony. Time rusteth and consumeth all things and maketh many a thing to proue naught in the end, which was first deuised for good. The brazen serpent, at the first was made by Moses, and set it vp for good purpose. But, afterward it was abused: The children of Israel did burne incense vnto it, and therefore Ezechias brake it in peces. 1.Cor.11.

The first abuse in confirmation was, that it was done in a strange tongue, that no man might vnderstand what was meant. Then, that they receiued to confirmation such children, and so yong, as were not able to make profession of their faith: so that the infant promised, he knew not what: and the Bishop ratified and confirmed, where there was nothing to be confirmed: he set to his seale where there was nothing to be sealed. These abuses were farre vnmet for the Church of God.

Besides these, there was great abuse in the maner of doing. For thus the Bishop said: Consigno te signo crucis; & confirmo te chrismate salutis: I signe thee with the signe of the crosse, and confirme thee with the oile of saluation. Thus they vsed to doe: these were their words, with the oile of saluation. They toke not this of Christ, nor of his Apostles, nor of the holy ancient Fathers. It agreeth not with our Christian faith, to giue the power of saluation vnto oyle. He that seeketh saluation in oyle, loseth his saluation in Christ and hath no part in the kingdom of God. Oyle for the belly, and for necessarie vses of life. It is no fit instrument without commandement or promise by the word, to worke saluation.

More they said, he was no pefect Christian that was not annointed by the Bishop with this holie oyle. This was another abuse. For, whosoeuer is baptised receiueth thereby the full name of a perfect Christian, and hath the ful and perfect couenant and assurance of saluation: he is perfitly buried with Christ; doth perfitly put on Christ, and is perfitly made partaker of his resurrection. Therfore they are deceiued, that say, no man is a perfit Christian, that is not marked with this oyle. Else the Apostles, and holy Martyrs were but halfe Christians, because they lacked this oyle. Else, what hope and comfort might the more Fathers haue? In what state shall he thinke to find his child if he die before confirmation, and passe without perfit Christendome? verily they write thus: Sine oleo Chrismatis, nemo potest sisti ante tribunal Christi: Without the oyle of Chrisme, no man can appeare before the Iudgement seat of Christ.

Againe, they say, confirmation is more honourable then baptisme: because any Priest may baptize, but confirmation is giuen onely by a Bishop, or a Suffragain. So doe they giue a greater preeminence to confimation, which is deuised by man, then to the holy sacrament of baptisme which Christ himselfe ordained. I need not speake more hereof, the error is so grosse, so thicke, so sensible and palpable.

Again, when they blessed, or hallowed their oyle, they vsed these words: Fiat domine hoc oleum, te benedicente, vnctio spiritualis ad purificationem mentis & corporis: O Lord, let this oyle by thy blessing, be made a spirituall ointment, to purifie both soule and body. O Christ Iesu, where was thy Crosse, where was thy blood, and the price of thy death and passion, when a drop of oyle was of power to worke remission of sins, to saue and defend against all the darts of the wicked spirits, and to refresh both body and soule? Yet so were wee taught, so were we led. I faine not these things: The words may be seene. Neither doe I speake this, to bring you to a misliking or loathing of our late fathers: but only that wee may humble our hearts, and giue thanks to God, that hath brought vs out of that darkenesse, and giuen vs better knowledge.

Now a word or two of the bringing vp of children, and preparing them to confirmation. Wherin I would God the old order were duly obserued, that they were instructed perfitly to know religon, and their duty to God: and so might be brought before the Congregation, and make an open profession of their faith, with promise, that neither tribulation, nor anguish, nor persecution, nor famine, nor nakednesse, nor fire, nor sword, nor life, nor death, shall euer make them denie their faith. Hereof might much be spoken but I wil be short.

The whole standeth in knowlsdge and in the feare of God: that they may know God, and walke before him in reuerence, and in feare: and serue him in holinesse, and righteousnesse, all the daies of their life. The Iewes are a miserable people: that liue in error, they die in their owne blood: yet haue they so much vnderstanding, that they bring vp their children in the knowledge of God, and that knowledge they teach out of the word of Deut. 4. God. They remember what charge God gaue them: Thou ſhalt teach them thy ſons, and thy ſons ſons.

Therefore, a father muſt teach his child what God is: That he is our father, that he hath made vs, and doth fæd vs, and giueth vs all things needfull, both for body and ſoule: that he is our Lord, and therefore we muſt ſerue him, and obey him, and do nothing whereby he may be diſpleaſed: that he is our iudge, and ſhall come to iudge the quick and the dead, and that all men ſhall come before him, to receiue according as they haue done in the fleſh. He muſt put his child in mind of his baptiſm, and teach him that it is a couenant of Gods mercy to vs, & of our duty to God: that it is a myſtery of our ſaluation, that our ſoule is waſhed with the blood of Chriſt, as the water of baptiſme waſheth our body. So muſt he alſo teach his child the myſtery of the Lords ſupper: what & how he receiueth there to his comfort: that as the bread is broken, and the wine powred out, ſo the body of Chriſt was crucified, and his blod ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins: that if we beléue in Chriſt, we are through the promiſe of God, ſo certainly nouriſhed in our ſoules to euerlaſting life, by the paſſion of Chriſt Ieſus our Sauior, as our bodies are truly nouriſhed with the creatures of bread and wine. Thus Paul was brought vp at the feet of Gamaliel, and inſtructed according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers. Thus Timothy was brought vp to know the holy Scriptures of a child. How are we become ſo ſuperſtitious? Why haue we bén ſo delighted in darkeneſſe? why is it ſo hard a matter to remoue vs from the errors wherein we haue liued? Why had we rather fal downe before dumb things and worſhip them, and continue ſtill in ignorance, rather then hearken vnto the word of God? Why haue we plaied the part of the Iewes, and cried Crucifige vpon our deare friends, and kinſmen: vpon thoſe whom we could not iuſtly accuſe of any crime: who offended vs no waies, but in that they did point vs to Chriſt, and called vs to ſéek ſaluation only in him? Hereof there cannot any better cauſe be yélded, then this, that we were ignorantly bred vp, without knowledge of God, without vnderſtanding of his word. The wiſe man ſaith: Teach a childe the trade of his way, and when he is old he ſhall not depart from it. And againe: Who ſo awaketh vnto wiſdome betimes, ſhall haue no great trauell: for he ſhall finde her ſitting at her dores.

Acts 22. 2. Tim. 3. Prou. 22. Wiſd. 6.

Therefore wicked rulers, as Iulianus, Licinius, Maximinus, and ſuch others, haue forbidden that children ſhould be brought vp in the knowledge of God. They taught them to blaſpheme Chriſt, and holy men, and to ſpeake ill of them before they knew them. But let vs looke vpon our children as vpon the great bleſſings of God. They are the Lords veſſels ordained to honor, let vs kéepe them cleane: they are Chriſts Lambs and ſhéepe of his flock let vs lead them forth into wholſome paſture. They are the ſéed plot of heauen, let vs water them that God may giue the increaſe: their Angels behold the face of God, let vs not offend them: they are the Temples, and Tabernacles of the holy Ghoſt, let vs not ſuffer the foule ſpirit to poſſeſſe them, and dwell within them.

God ſaith, your children are my children. They are the ſons of God. They are borne anew, and are well ſhapen in beautifull proportion: make them not monſters. He is a monſter whoſoeuer knoweth not God. By you they are borne into the world, bee carefull alſo that by your meanes they may bee begotten vnto God: you are carefull to traine them in nurture and comely behauiour of the body; ſéek alſo to faſhion their minds vnto godlineſſe. You haue brought them to the fountaine of baptiſme to receiue the marks of Chriſt, bring them vp in knowledge, and watch ouer them that they be not loſt. So ſhall they be confirmed, and will keepe the promiſe they haue made, and will grow vnto perfect age in Chriſt.

Of mariage I ſhall néede ſay the leſſe, the matter is ſo known, and common. This fellowſhip was firſt ordained by God himſelfe in Paradiſe. God himſelfe ſaid: It is not good that man ſhould be himſelfe alone: I will make him an helper meet for him. God, which faſhioned man and breathed in him the breath of life, and knoweth his very heart and raines, ſaid; it is not good, it is not fit, that man ſhould be himſelfe alone. Although man were in Paradiſe, although he were in the perfection of vertue, yet ſaith God he hath need of a helper. Chriſt diſdained not to be at a Mariage, he honored it both by his preſence, and by the working of a miracle. S. Paul ſaith: Marriage is honourable in all men and the bed vndefiled. In all men, ſaith he, in the Patriarchs, in the Prophets, in the Apoſtles, in Martyrs, in Biſhops.

Gen. 2. Heb. 13.

That all the Apoſtles, S. Iohn only excepted, were married, appeareth by Ignatius, Clemens, and Euſebius. Spiridion was a married Biſhop, and yet he was thereby nothing hindred, neither to diſcharge his duty, nor to any other godly purpoſe. Tertullian was a Prieſt, and maried, as appeareth by his own book, written to his wife. Gregorie, S. Baſils brother, was Biſhop of Nyſſa, yet married. Another Gregorie was Biſhop of Nazianzum, yet married, and neuertheleſſe, a faithfull ſeruant and ſteward of the myſteries of God. Hillarie was Biſhop of Poitiers, yet maried. Al theſe were holy, and godly, and chaſte in body, and in spirit, and yet were married. Gregory Nazianzene saith: Marriage is worthy of praise, for the quietnesse and contentation that is in it. And Clemens Alexandrinus saith: As well marriage as also chastity, haue their peculiar offices pertaining to God. And Chrysostome saith: Mariage is void of fault, and is no hinderance to vertue. Again: So precious a thing is matrimony, that with the same thou maist be promoted euen to a Bishops chaire. In funere Gorgonie. Strom. lib. 3. Hom. 57. ad Heb.

and

What are they then that call mariage vncleannesse, filthinesse, a work of the flesh: that say it defileth a man, & therefore Gods ministers may not be maried? How can they thus speake that haue any knowledge of that which God hath spoken? May we not worthily say vnto such despisers of lawful matrimony, that which S Bernard in like case said? Fingunt se amore castitatis ista dicere, cum ea magis causa turpitudinis foouenda, & multiplicanda adinuenerint: They beare vs in hand that they speake these things for loue of chastity: whereas indeed they haue deuised the same, to the end to nourish, and to increase their filthinesse. Or, as Augustine sometime said to the Manichees: Non concubitum, sed vtrumque ab Apostolo longe ante dictum est, vere nuptias prohibetis: Ye forbid not copulation: but as it was long agofore spoken by the Apostle, indeed ye forbid very mariage. If you marke these few words which I deliuered, it will easily appeare, how reuerend an accompt is to be made of that state of life. For if you regard the necessity thereof, God found it good to giue man a wife: if the antiquity, it was ordained in the beginning of the world: if the place, in Paradise: if the time, in the innocency of man. If you regard any thing the rather, because of him that ordained it, God was the author of mariage: euen God which made heauen and earth, and which is the father of our Lord Iesus Christ. If you seeke the allowance, Christ approued it by his birth in mariage, and by his presence at mariage: if the dignity, it is honourable: if among whom, in all men of all estates, of all callings: in Prince, in subiect, in Minister, in Priest, and in people. It is honorable in Prophets, honorable in Apostles, in Martyrs, in Bishops. Hom. 7. ad Heb. Bern. Sermon. 66. in cantica. August. de moribus Manich. lib. 2. cap. 18.

Mariage is honorable in all men, but whoremongers and adulterers God will iudge. Their portion shal be with the infidels, they shal be cast into vtter darknesse, their worme shal neuer die, their fire shal neuer be quenched, they shall goe downe headlong into the fire that is prepared for the diuel and his Angels. Be not deceiued, (saith S. Paul) neither fornicators, nor adulterers, nor wantons, nor buggerers, shal inherit the kingdom of God. 1. Cor. 6.

Now are we to speake in the next place of the ministery of the Church, which some haue called holy orders. Shal we account it a Sacrament? there is no reason so to doe. It is a heauenly office, a holy ministery or seruice. By such as haue this office, God lightneth our darknesse, he declareth his minde to vs, he gathereth together his scattered sheep, and publisheth vnto the world the glad tidings of saluation. The Patriarchs did beare this office. This was the office of the Prophets. God saith: I haue sent vnto you all my seruants, the Prophets, rising vp euery day, and sending them. Againe he saith: I haue put my words in thy mouth. Therefore when they taught the people of God, the Prophets signed their speech thus; The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it: The Lord hath said; The voice and the word of the Lord: Heare the word of the Lord. Ierem. 7. Esay 51.

But when the fulnesse of the time came, God sent his Son, and hath spoken vnto vs by him. He became our Prophet, to shew vs the wil of his Father. He saith: I haue not spoken of my selfe: but the Father which sent mee, he gaue me a commandement, what I should say, and what I should speake. Hereof S. Iohn saith: No man hath seene God at any time. He is inuisible, he is incomprehensible, no minde can conceiue him, no eie can see him; but, the only begotten Son, which is in the bosome of the Father, hee hath declared him. Of him the Father said: This is my beloued Son, in whom I am well pleased: heare him. Hearken vnto him, receiue his word, credit him, beleeue him. No doubt the Ministery of the Gospel is highly to be esteemed, seeing our Sauiour was not ashamed to publish the will of his Father in his owne person: yet it appeareth not, where euer he did ordaine it to be a Sacrament. John 12. John 1. Mat. 3.

He appointed that the comfort thereof should be carried into all nations, and gaue that charge vnto his Apostles, Goe teach all nations. Again, What I tell you in darknesse, that speake you in light: and what you heare in the eare, that preach you on the houses. He saw the people, and had compassion on them, he saw they were dispersed, and scattered abroad like sheepe without a shepheard, and that they perished, because they had no knowledge of the wil of God. Therefore he saith: Pray the Lord of the harueste, that he would send labourers into the haruest. Therefore he ordaineth them to this ministery, I will make you fishers of men. And sendeth them forth, as my Father sent mee, so send I you. And: Goe to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. He willed them to call the people to repentance, and to preach the kingdome of God. Mat. 28. Mat. 10. Mat. 9. Mat. 4. John 20. Mat. 10.

By this ministery, God hath gathered to himselfe an acceptable people, and hath brought them to the obedience of the Gospel of Christ, and hath turned the hearts of the fathers vnto their children, and so made it to be the foundation of Religion. They that exercise this ministery are the eies of Christ, the pillers of the Church, the interpreters of Gods will, the watchmen of the Lords towre, the leaders of Christs sheep, the salt of the earth, the light of the world. Dan.12. Daniel saith: They that turne many to righteousnesse, shall shine as the Stars for euer and euer. Not that there is any so great wisdome, or eloquence in men: they are but weake, they are vnfit to do this seruice. Esay saith of himselfe: Esay 6. I am a man of polluted lips. And Ieremy saith: O Lord God, behold, I cannot speake, for I am a Ierem.1. child. So saith S. Paul: I haue planted, Apollo watered, but God gaue the increase. So then, 1.Cor.3. neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth, but God that giueth the increase. So said Saint Iohn, that he was not Christ, nor that Prophet, but the voice of him that crieth in the wildernesse, and not worthy to vnlose the latchet of his shoe that should come after him.

The power, whereby they did conquer the world, was not in them, but in the word which they preached. It is the power of God to saluation to euery one that beleeueth. It is Rom.1. like a fire, and like a hammer that breaketh a stone. When ye receiued of vs the word of the Ierem.23. preaching of God (saith S. Paul to the Thessalonians) ye receiued it not as the word of 1.Thess.2. men, but as it is indeed the word of God, which also worketh in you that beleeue. The power of an earthly Prince is great. The wise man saith: The feare of a king, is like the Prou.20. roaring of a Lion. Yet is a Prince but mortal: and the Law of a Prince is but mortal; it hath no power to force the conscience. But the word GOD doth breake into the heart, it forceth a way into the conscience: it is sharper then any two edged sword: it entreth thorow, euen to the diuiding asunder of the soule and the spirit, because it is the word of God.

For, it is no man, but God that speaketh, as Christ telleth the Apostles: It is not ye that Mat.10. speake, but the spirit of your father, which speaketh in you. So saith the Prophet Zacha- Luke 1. ry: He spake by the mouth of his holy Prophets, which haue been since the world began. The Prophets, and Apostles, and holy men of God were but instruments. It was God which gaue his holy spirit, which gaue them tongues to speake, and words to vtter. Therfore said Christ: I wil giue you a mouth, and wisdome, where against all your aduersaries Luke 21. shall not be able to speake, nor resist. Though men be but simple, yet the word they deliuer, is mighty: though they be mortall, the word of the Lord endureth for euer.

Where this word is receiued, it is fire, and burneth: it is a hammer, and breaketh the hardnesse of the heart: it is mighty in operation: it cleanseth the inner man: it openeth the conscience: it is a sauor of life vnto life: it is the meanes of saluation. He that receiueth this word and beleeueth, shall be saued. This is the word of reconciliation. God hath committed it vnto vs.

If any hide this word, he slaieth the people: He is a dumb dog. Of such GOD saith: Ierem.23. Behold, I will come against the Prophets, that steale my word euery one from his neigh- Luke 11. bor. They are theeues and robbers. Woe be vnto you Interpreters of the Law: for ye haue taken away the key of knowledge (saith Christ) yee entred not in your selues, and them that came in, ye forbad.

Mat.23. And againe: Woe be vnto you Scribes, and Pharisies, hypocrites, because ye shut vp the kingdom of heauen before men: for ye your selues goe not in, neither suffer ye them that would enter, to come in. Of these, and against them God speaketh by the Prophet Ieremy: Woe be vnto the Pastors, that destroy, and scatter the sheep of my pasture. And by the Ierem.23. Prophet Zachary: O Idol shepheard that leaueth the flocke. Thou hast eares, and hearest Zach.11. not; thou hast eies, and seest not; thou hast a tongue, and speakest not; and a heart, but vnderstandest not; thou art an Idol; Christ said to thee, feed my Lambs, feed my sheep, but thou carest not for them. Thou hast the name of an Euangelist, and Pastor, and Teacher: but thou gatherest not the Saints together; thou doest not the worke of the ministery; thou buildest not vp the body of Christ. They shall perish in their wickednesse, but their blood will I require at thy hands.

Here note, this ministery of the Church was not ordained to offer sacrifice for forgiuenesse of sinnes. Whosoeuer taketh that office vpon him, he doth wrong and iniury to the death and passion of Christ. He only is called of God an high Priest after the order of Mel- Heb.5. chisedec. He only, by his own bloud entred in once into the holy place, and obtained eter- Heb.9. nal redemption for vs. He only, with one offering hath consecrated for euer them that are Heb.10. sanctified. He only hath said, Consummatum est: It is finished. The ransome or price for mans saluation, and for forgiuenelle of the sins of the world is paid in me, in my death vpon the Crosse. Of him alone, and only of him, hath it been spoken: This is my welbeloued Mat.3. Son, in whom I am well pleased. And by Esay: With his stripes only we are healed. It is he Esay 53.

only, which hath made of both one. It is he only, which did put out the hand writing of ordinances that was against vs: he euen tooke it out of the way, and fastned it vpon the Crosse. He alone is our high Priest, the Lambe of God, the Sacrifice for sinnes, the Altar, the Propitiation for sinnes, and redemer of the World. He only hath appeased the wrath of God. He only appeareth in the sight of God, to make intercession for our sinnes. All others whatsoeuer, Apostles, Prophets, Teachers and Pastors, are not in office to offer any propitiatorie Sacrifice: but are called to the ministery of the Saints, to the edification of the body of Christ, and to the repairing of the Church of God. Ephes. 2. Coloss. 2.

Thus much of the holy ministery of the Church, which standeth in the setting forth of the mystery of our saluation, both by the preaching of the word of God, and by the due and reuerend ministratiō of the Sacraments. The principallest part of this office is, to preach repentance, that sinne may be put out of our liues, and be conuerted vnto God. So Ioel the Prophet followeth his ministery, saying: Rent your hearts and not your garments, and turn to the Lord your God, for he is gracious and merciful. So S. Paul teacheth, That true circumcision is by putting off the sinfull body of the flesh: that it is in mortifying our members that be on the earth, Fornication, vncleanesse, the inordinate affections, euil concupiscence, and couetousnesse, which is idolatry: that it is in putting away all these things, wrath, anger, maliciousnesse, cursed speaking, filthy speaking out of your mouth, in putting off the old man with his workes, and putting on the new, which is renued in knowledge after the image of him that created him. Ioel 2. Coloss. 2. Coloss. 3.

So Iohn Baptist said: Repent, for the kingdome of God is at hand. Prepare yee the waies of the Lord, and make his paths straight. So our Sauiour Christ, when he began to preach, said: Amend your liues, for the kingdome of God is at hand. Math. 3. Math. 4.

Therefore it wil not be amisse now, to speake of repentance, which some of late yeres haue changed into penance, and thereof haue also made a Sacrament. Verie it behoueth to rip vp the whole life of man. There is not any man that liueth, and sinneth not. God saith: The imagination of mans heart is euill from his youth. The Prophet Ieremy saith: The heart is deceitfull and wicked aboue all things, who can know it? S. Iohn therefore saith: If we say, that we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, and truth is not in vs. Of himselfe S. Paul saith: I know that in me, that is, in my flesh dwelleth no good thing. Of himselfe the Prophet Dauid saith: There is nothing sound in my flesh, because of thine anger: neither is there rest in my bones, because of my sins. For mine iniquities are gone ouer mine head, and as a weighty burden they are too heauy for mee. He saith: If thou, O Lord, straitly markest iniquities, O Lord, who shall abide it? So saith the Wise man: A iust man falleth seuen times. Gen. 9. Iere. 17. 1. Iohn 1. Rom. 7. Psal. 38. Psal. 130. Pro. 24.

God is a righteous God, and the auenger of all them that offend. S. Paul saith: The wages of sinne is death. And the Prophet Ezechiel: The soule that sinneth shall die. For this cause then God ordained the ministery of his word, and appointed certaine to this office, that they should warne his people of their sinnes, and feare them by the terror of Gods assured displeasure, and heauy wrath. As is seene by that to Esay: Crie aloud, spare not: lift vp thy self like a trumpet, and shew my people their transgressions, and the house of Iacob their sinnes. So S. Paul vnto Timothy: I charge thee before God, and the Lord Iesus Christ which shal iudge the quicke and dead at his appearing, and in his kingdome, preach the word: be instant in season and out of season: improoue, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine. Rom. 6. Ezech. 18. Esay 58. 1. Tim. 4.

So would God haue our filth laid open before our eies, that we might weigh and iudge our owne hearts, that euery man might make charge vpon himselfe, and say, I am an vnprofitable seruant, my righteousnesse is as a foule and stained cloth. My soule hath sinned, and hath deserued to die the death.

In this case, some fall into desperation, and say, as sometimes did Caine: My sinne is greater then can be pardoned. God withdraweth his mercy from me, I am vnworthy of it. I haue offended against the holy spirit of God: mine owne conscience accuseth me. I haue no part in the kingdome of God, and of Christ: there is no sacrifice left for my sins. Thus the wicked liue in trembling and agony, as did Caine: thus they leaue their life with horrour and misery: so haue they no grace to repent, no taste nor feeling of the mercy of God. Gen. 4.

But the children of God though they be wounded, yet they haue release in the certaine hope of Gods mercy. Though they say, I am a sinner, my sinnes are more in number then the haires of my head; I haue offended against heauen and earth; yet they know that Christ came to cal sinners to repentance, and that he healeth those that are sick: That he said; Come vnto me all ye that are wearie and laden, and I will ease you. For what laieth he on his shoulders with ioy? Is it not the lost sheepe? Wherefore doth the woman light a candle, Math. 11.

candle, and sweepe the house, and seeke diligently till she find it? Is it not for the peece of siluer, which she had lost? Ouer whom had the father compassion, and ran, and fell on his necke, and kissed him? Was not this done for him which was dead, but liued againe? and for him which was lost, but was found againe? The sonne of man came to saue that which was lost. And: There is ioy in the presence of the Angels of God, for one sinner that conuerteth.

Math. 18. Luke. 15.

God is mercifull, and his mercy endureth for euer. So saith the Prophet Dauid. Mercie is with the Lord. By the Prophet Ezechiel: I desire not the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God. It is the will of God that al men shall be saued, and come to the knowledge of the truth. By Esay the Prophet God saith: If your sinnes were as crimson, they shall be made as white as snow. For I, euen I am he that putteth away thine iniquities, for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sinnes. The children of God heare this, and are glad. They lift themselues vp in the faith of the mercy of God: they see the filthinesse of their sinne: they know though the wrath of God be kindled against sinne, yet he doth not vtterly destroy those that haue sinned, but such as continue in their sinnes without repentance: they know God will not despise an humble and contrite heart.

Psal. 130. Ezech. 18. 1. Tim. 2. Esay 1. Esay 43.

Therefore they say, Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, O Lord, for no flesh is righteous in thy sight. Take away the iniquity of thy seruant. They say, Why art thou heauie, O my soule, and why art thou vnquiet within me? Wait on God: for I will yet giue him thankes for the helpe of his presence. They say, there is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Iesus. Though I should walke through the valley of the shadow of death, I will feare no euill, because thou art with me. They say, If our heart condemne vs God is greater then our heart. Thus are we taught by the Office of the Ministry, and by the word of God, to see our selues, to know our weaknesse, to repent our sinnes, to beleeue the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, and to turne vnto God.

Psal. 143. 1. Iohn. 3.

We are taught to lay open and acknowledge our sinnes, not to hide them, but to make confession of them. This is done two waies: either in the secret thought of thy heart, before God, or else in the hearing and presence of men. Dauid made confession of his sinnes before God. I acknowledged my sinne before thee, neither hid I mine iniquitie. I said I will confesse against my selfe my wickednes vnto the Lord, and thou forgauest the punishment of my sinne.

Psal. 32.

And againe: I know mine iniquities, and my sinne is euer before me. Against thee, against thee only haue I sinned, and done euill in thy sight. Such a confession made Daniel: Wee haue sinned, and haue committed iniquity, and haue done wickedly: yea, we haue rebelled, and haue departed from thy precepts, and from thy iudgements. For we would not obey thy seruants the Prophets, which spake in thy name to our Kings, to our Princes, & to our Fathers, and to all the people of the land. Euen so the Prophet Esay: Behold thou art angrie for we haue sinned. We haue all been as an vncleane thing, and all our righteousnesse is as filthy clouts, and we all doe fade like a leafe, and our iniquities like the wind haue taken vs away. But now, O Lord, thou art our Father: we are the clay, and thou art our potter, and we all are the worke of thy hands. This is true and Christian Confession. We are required after this sort to examine our selues, and confesse our sinnes before God: who doth not so, he shall not find mercy and forgiuenesse of his sinnes.

Phal. 15. Dan. 9. Esay 64.

The other sort of confession made vnto men, I do not condemne. It may do much good, if it be well vsed. S Iames commendeth it among the faithfull: Acknowledge your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. He speaketh not of Priest or Minister, but of euery one of the faithfull. Euery Christian may doe this helpe vnto another, to take knowledge of the secret and inner griefe of the heart, to lok vpon the wound which sinne and wickednesse hath made, and by godly aduice and earnest praier for him, to recouer his brother. This is a priuate exhortation, and as it were a Catechizing or instructing in the faith, and a meanes to lead vs by familiar and speciall conference, to examine our conscience, and to espie wherein we haue offended God. The vse and practise hereof is not only to be allowed, but most needfull and requisite, if so the superstition, and necessity, and conscience, which many haue fondly vsed and put therein, be taken away.

Iacob. 5.

That the Priests should heare the priuate confessions of the people, and listen to their whisperings: that euery man should be bound to their auricular confession, it is no commandement or ordinance of God. It is deuised and established by men, and was lately confirmed by Innocentius the third. The Church of God in the time of our elder fathers, was not tied to any such necessity.

Hom. 2. in Psa. 50. Chrysostome saith: Non dico, vt confitearis conseruo tuo peccata tua: dicito Deo, qui curet ea: I will thee not to confesse thy sinnes to thy fellow-seruant (that is, to the Priest) confesse them vnto God, that may heale them. Againe he saith: Cogitatione tua fiat delictorum exquisitio

Hom. de pœnit. & confess.

exquisitio: sine teste sit hoc iudicium, solus Deus te confitentem videat: Examine thy sinnes in thy heart within thee: let this iudgement be without witnesse, let God only see thee making thy confession. And againe: Non dico tibi, vt te prodas in publicum, neque vt te apud alios accuses: sed obedire te volo Prophetae dicenti, Revela Domino viam tuam. Apud Deum ergo, &c. I say not to thee, that thou openly shew forth thy selfe, nor that thou accuse thy selfe in the presence of others: but I will haue thee obey God, which saith; Disclose thy waies vnto the Lord. Confesse thy sinnes therefore before God: declare thine offentes, and make thy praier for them before God, which is the true and righteous Iudge. Make thy confession not with the tongue, but in the record of thine owne conscience. Hom. 31. ad Hebr. vel hom. 30. quare.

Likewise S. Augustine: Quid mihi est cum hominibus, vt audiant confessiones meas, quasi ipsi sanaturi sint omnes languores meos? Curiosum genus ad inquirendam vitam alienam, desidiosum ad corrigendam suam: What haue I to do with men, that they should heare my confessions, as if they could heale al my wounds or diseases? They be a curious sort, in searching out the life of others, and slothfull in correcting their owne life. S. Ambrose saith: Lauat lachrima delictum, quod voce pudor est confiteri: The teare washeth away that offence, which shame would not suffer to confesse in speech. The Church of God in Græcia, neuer receiued it. And Erasmus witnesseth, it was not vsed in the time of S. Hierome. Apparet tempore Hieronymi nondum institutam fuisse secretam admissorum confessionem: It appeareth that in the time of S. Hierome (which was foure hundred yéeres after Christ) secret confession of sins was not yet ordained. De pœnit. Petri Sermo 46. In scho. in Epitaph. Fabiolæ.

And Beatus Rhenanus, a man of great reading, saith: Tertullianus de clanculariâ istâ confessione admissorum nihil loquitur, neque eam vsquam alim praeceptam legimus: Tertullian speaketh nothing of this secret confession of sinnes: and we read not any where, that it was commanded in times past.

By these testimonies of Chrysostome, Augustine, Ambrose, and by the obseruation of Erasmus, and Rhenanus it may appeare, that this secret confession in the eare of the Priest, hath not bin taken to be necessary: and that it is not of Gods determinate appointment, but an ordinance of man. As the Glosse vpon the Decrees something plainly confesseth: Melius dicitur confessionem institutam fuisse à quadam vniuersali Ecclesiæ traditione, potius quam ex noui vel veteris Testamenti authoritate: It is better said, that confession was appointed by some tradition of the Vniuersall Church, then by any authority or commandement of the New or Old Testament. De pœnit. dist. 5 in pœnit. in Glossa.

Now in a word or two, I will somewhat speake of satisfaction or recompence for offences which we haue done, whereby we satisfie and make amends to the ful contentation of him that is offended. Such a recompence the Law required: An eie for an eie: a tooth for a tooth: a hand for a hand: a foot for a foot. Such amends for such harme: so much for so much; and this was accounted due and lawfull satisfaction. Exod. 21.

This is of two sorts; either that which is done vnto God, or that which is done vnto men. We are neuer able to satisfie and make amends vnto God. We must alwaies confesse, that we are vnprofitable seruants, and vnworthy to stand in his presence: and by no meanes able of our selues to make recompence for that we haue offended him. Our only and full satisfaction for our trespasses done against him, is the blud of our Sauiour Iesus Christ.

The Theefe vpon the Crosse, called vpon Iesus: Lord remember me when thou commest into thy kingdome. He knew he had offended God, but found not how he might make amends, otherwise then by the righteousnesse of Christ. Iesus answered him: Verily I say vnto thee, To day thou shalt be with me in Paradise. To day, that is, by and by. He refuseth him not, nor feareth him that God will refuse him, because he had done amisse, and made no recompence; but promiseth him, because he repented and beleeued that he shal be saued. Paul was throwne downe a persecutor, and raised vp a preacher. What amends might he make in so short time?

S. Cyprian saith; Sanguis tuus, O Christe, non quærit vindictam: Thy blood, O Christ, looketh not for any reuenge. And S. Ambrose: Lachrimas Petri lego, satisfactionem non lego: I read of Peters teares, but I read nothing of any satisfaction he made. For our whole life cannot sufficiently acquite vs from the guiltinesse of one sinne: much lesse is any man able to worke or deserue the forgiuenesse of all his sinnes. Cypr. de passione Domini. De pœnit. Pet. Apost. Ser. 46.

The only things that God requireth of vs when we haue sinned, are that we sorrow for our sinnes and amend our liues. So Iohn the Baptist spake to the Phariſies: Bring foorth fruit worthy amendment of life. So S. Paul calleth the Ephesians to make recompence for their former naughtinesse; Cast off lying, and speake euery man the truth to his neighbor. Let him that stole steale no more, but let him rather labour, and worke with his hands the thing that is good. Other recompence, God liketh not for at our hands. Matth. 3. Ephes. 4.

But

But when the godly haue taken offence at any our doings that are euill, we must giue all heed to content their mindes, and reconcile our selues againe vnto them. It hath bene an ancient order in the Church of God, that, if any had openly offended the congregation, he should come openly againe before them to satisfie them by amends. There he fel down on his knees, confessed his fault, wept, and lamented for it: praied the brethren that they would forgiue him, and would also pray vnto God to be mercifull vnto him. There the whole congregation fell downe before God: their hearts melted: their eies gushed out in teares: they held vp their hands: praied together for him, and gaue thankes to God, that their brother which had bene lost, was found againe. Such satisfaction was it which hath bene made to the Church of God.

The last of those which some haue of late misused, and counted one of the Sacraments of the Church, is Extreme vnction. And this they haue founded vpon the words of Saint Iacob.5. Iames: Is any sicke among you? Let him call the Elders of the Church, and let them pray for him, and anoint him with oile in the name of the Lord, and the praier of faith shal saue the sicke, and the Lord shall raise him vp: and if hee haue committed sinne, it shal bee forgiuen him.

For the better vnderstanding of which words, consider that God is merciful to the sons of men, and sheweth forth his mercy at sundry times by sundry waies. And to leaue the examples of the Old Testament: in the time of the Gospel, he hath giuen to some the gift of tongues, and hath made them able being simple men, to speake the wonderful works of God in tongues which they neuer learned. To some he hath giuen the gift of power, and of the operation of great works. By this power, many signes & wonders were wrought Act.5. by the hands of the Apostles. At the word of Peter, Ananias and Saphira his wife fel down Act.13. dead. In this power Paul stroke Elimas the sorcerer with blindnesse.

To some he gaue the gift of healing. By this S. Peter healed a man which was a cripple Act 3. from his mothers wombe, and said: In the name of Iesus Christ of Nazareth, rise vp and walke: and hee tooke him by the right hand, and lift him vp, and immediatly his feet and ancle bones receiued strength. They were able to make the blind see: the lame to walke: the leapers to be cleane: the dead to receiue life againe. For when he sent forth his Apo-
Math.10. stles to preach: Christ gaue them power against vncleane spirits, to cast them out, and to heale euery sicknesse, and euery disease.

These things they wrought, sometimes by their shadow, as many were healed by the shadow of Peter: sometimes with their word: sometimes with handkercheifs: sometimes by laying on of hands, and by touching: sometimes with oile, as is in the sixth of S. Mark:
Mark.10. They cast out many Diuels, and they anointed many that were sicke with oile, and healed them: euen as Christ also by many sundry waies healed many. He healed sometimes, though he were absent: sometimes by his word: sometimes by mourning and sorrowing: sometimes by touching: sometimes with spettle and dust; for at that time, the Church had the especial gift of working miracles.

Therefore S. Iames putteth them in mind, that they despise not to vse the meanes which God hath appointed: that whosoeuer falleth into sicknesse, he cal for the Elders, and that they vse their gift of healing, and anoint him with oile, because it hath pleased God therby to worke health. This was the maner and order of those times. Euen as Christ vsed dust and spettle: so S. Iames willeth them to vse oile for the restoring of health. As the Corinthians did abuse the gift of tongues, and were taught by S. Paul how to vse it better: so did many abuse the gift of healing, and were therefore warned by S. Iames how they should vse it better. As the gift of tongues was not to last for euer, but only for a time: so the gift of Math.6. healing was not to continue euer, but for a time. Christ saith; When thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face. He doth not in these words giue an vniuersall commandement that must euer be kept in our fasting, that we vse the ceremony of anointing; but meaneth thereby, that in our fast we be fresh and merry. Euen so S. Iames, in saying, anoint him with oile, doth not set downe an order, whereunto he would haue the Church of God tied for euer; it is not an vniuersal commandement, that the after ages should do the like; but only a particular ordinance for the time, to vse the gift of healing. This is the meaning of his words.

Let vs marke what abuses haue growne by mistaking them. S. Iames speaketh of bare and simple oile; They vnderstand it of their oile, which they consecrate, and halow in vnaduised order. For these words the Bishop vseth when he consecrateth it. Aue sanctum oleum, chrisma, balsamum Haile O holy oile, and chrisme, and balsame. Againe: Exorciso te immunde spiritus, in nomine patris & filij & spiritus sancti, vt recedas ab hoc oleo, vt possit esse unctio spiritualis, vt spiritus sanctus possit in eo habitare: I adiure thee thou vncleane spirit, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the holy Ghost, that thou depart from this this oile, that it may be a spirituall ointment, & that the holy Ghost may dwell in it. Againe, Emitte quesumus, sancte pater, spiritum sanctum paracletum tuum de calis in hanc pinguedinem olive, ad refectionem corporum, & sanationem animarum: O holy Father, we beseech thee send downe thy holy spirit the comforter from heauen into this fatnesse of the oliue, to the refreshing of bodie and soule.

In like sort they are taught to pray ouer the sicke: Per hanc sanctam unctionem, & suam pissimam misericordiam ignoscat tibi Deus, ut per hanc unctionem habeas remissionem omnium peccatorum: By this holy annointing, and by his great mercy God pardon thee, that by this annointing, thou maist haue remission of all thy sinnes.

I deuise not these things, I imagine them not of my selfe, nor report them untruly. The Bishop in such words blesseth the oile: and with such words doth the Priest annoint the sicke with oile: in their bookes it is easie to be seene. Now iudge you, if this were S. Iames doctrine, or if this order were kept in the Church in the time of the Apostles. Would you thinke that S. Iames gaue curtesie by bowing his body, and saying Ans to the oile? did he speake words of coniuration to driue away the euill spirit? would he euer say that the oile doth heale both body and soule? or that remission of all sinnes is giuen by annointing? S. Iames knew that remission of sinnes is not giuen by any creature: that there is no name in heauen or earth, by which we are saued, but the name of Iesus onlie: that the holy Ghost resteth not, nor dwelleth in oile, but in the hearts of the faithfull: that God giueth health, not in respect of the corruptible creature but at the praiers of the Church, which are offered vp to him by his Sonne, our Sauiour. So great difference is there betweene the late meaning, and the meaning of S. Iames.

Such vse of the oile we haue not, neither doth the Church of God allow. Yet hold we the rule of the Apostle in visitation of the sicke. When any is sicke among vs, the Minister commeth vnto him, and discretlie instructeth him in what sort he should prepare himselfe to depart this life, and so leadeth him to comfort, and laboureth to make him strong in the certaine hope of euerlasting life.

Thus he saith: Brother, you are entring the way of all flesh. All the sonnes of Adam are heires of this sentence of God vpon Adam; Thou art dust, & to dust thou shalt returne. Man that is borne of woman, is of short continuance, and full of trouble. He shooteth forth as a floure, and is cut downe: he vanisheth also as a shadow and continueth not. Humble thy selfe vnder the mighty hand of God. He is our good father, and doth correct those children whom he loueth. Blessed is he, whom the Lord doth chastise and instruct in his waies.

Here is the proofe and triall of your patience and faith: remember the patience of Iob, in all his miseries he praised the name of the Lord. Although (said he) he should kill me, yet will I put my trust in God. Although my bowels be consumed within me, and my members of my body be rent asunder, and the pangues be neuer so great, yet can I not but trust in him. Loue not the world, nor the things that be in the world. The world 1. Ioh. 2.

Christ hath therefore willed vs to wake, and be readie, because we know not in what houre our maister will come. He saith, Behold, I come as a thiefe: blessed is he which wat- Reuel. 16.
cheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walke naked, and men see his filthinesse.

Examine your selfe, consider how, and in what things you haue offended God, make a true and humble confession of your sinnes: say with Dauid, I haue sinned against the Lord and I will confesse against my selfe my wickednesse vnto the Lord. Call to mind how you haue gotten your goods, how you haue vsed them, and whether you haue delighted in them, or put any confidence in them. Call to minde how you haue taken care for your children and seruants, if by your good meanes, they haue been nourtered in the feare of the Lord. In these, and such other parts of your life, lay open your sinnes, let them come forth before you, acknowledge them against your selfe vnto the Lord: say boldlie, because you may say it truly, I am an vnprofitable seruant: I haue not done that which I ought to haue done there is no good thing dwelling in me: the law in my members hath preuailed against the law of my mind. It cannot be, but God will cast his eies vpon you, and will heare you, and will pardon the wickednesse of your sinnes.

What wanteth in you to the fulnesse of righteousnesse, is already satisfied in the righteousnesse of Christ. God hath said, and sworne, As I liue saith the Lord God, I desire not the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turne from his way, and liue. And againe, If the Ezech. 33.

Rom. 5. ing. And S. Paul: God ſetteth out his loue toward vs, ſeeing that while we were yet ſinners, Chriſt died for vs, much more then being iuſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaued from wrath through him. Thus in time of ſickneſſe are we put in mind to examine and view our ſinnes, and to ſolace our ſelues in that bloodſhedding of Chriſt.

Farther, he that is ſicke, is counſelled to call to mind, what any man hath treſpaſſed him, and to forgiue them: becauſe God is the God of loue: and if any man hate his brother, he abideth in death: and we are commanded to ſay, forgiue vs our treſpaſſes, as we forgiue them that treſpaſſe againſt vs: and if we doe forgiue men their treſpaſſes, our heauenlie father will alſo forgiue vs. But if we doe not forgiue men their treſpaſſes, no more will our heauenly father forgiue vs our treſpaſſes. That ſo, all we which are redeemed with one price, by the precious blood of the vnſpotted Lambe, may ioine together as partakers of one inheritance, and the children of one Father, and ſo go forward to one glory by one way, and become all one in Ieſus Chriſt our Lord.

In this caſe, the good Father calleth his ſonne vnto him, and exhorteth him in this maner. My ſonne hearken vnto mée: theſe be the laſt words which I ſhall ſpeake vnto thée. Thou ſeeſt in mée the weakeneſſe and decay of fleſh: thou ſhalt be, as I am now. One paſſeth before another, the world and the beautie thereof fade away, and come to an end. Truſt not the world, it will deceiue thée: walke aduiſedlie: know that thou ſhalt giue an
2. Cor. 5. accompt of thy doings. For we muſt all appeare before the iudgement ſeat of Chriſt. That euery man may receiue the things which are done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or euill.

Deceiue no man by wrongfull dealing: increaſe not thy goods by extortion, nor by vſurie: hée that giueth his money vnto vſurie, ſhall not enter into the Tabernacle of the Lord. Hée that taketh vſury of his neighbour, killeth him without a ſword. The Lord will auenge it: he will not bleſſe ill gotten goods: they cannot proſper: they will neuer continue, nor remaine vnto the third heire.

My ſonne, in all thy doings feare the Lord. If thou feare the Lord, thou ſhalt proſper: and in the day of thine end, thou ſhalt be bleſſed. Meddle not much with other mens buſineſſe, leſt thou be entangled with controuerſies: abhorre the ſlaunderer and doubletongued. Let my doings, which am thy father, be euer before thine eies. Thoſe few goods which I haue, were truelie gotten. I haue not gathered them of the teares, and heauineſſe, and vndoing, or hindering of anie. Be faithfull to thy wife, and beſides her, know none other. Helpe thy neighbour according to thy power: and turne not thy face from the poore and needie. Be mercifull after thy power, if thou haſt much, giue plentifullie: if thou haſt little, doe thy diligence gladlie to giue of that little. Be not ſlow to viſit the ſicke: whatſoeuer thou takeſt in hand, remember the end, and thou ſhalt neuer do amiſſe.

As for me, I haue paſſed the vanities and miſeries of this world. The Lord hath giuen, and the Lord taketh away, bleſſed be the name of the Lord. Hée is the Lord my God let him do with mée as it ſéemeth good vnto him. I know that this ſhall hasten my ſaluation: And that Chriſt ſhall be magnified in my bodie, whether it be by life, or by death. I haue not ſo liued, that I am aſhamed to liue: neither am I afraid to die, for we haue a gracious Lord. I know, that if my earthlie houſe of this tabernacle be deſtroied, I haue a building giuen of God, that is, an houſe not made with hands, but eternall in the heauens. They that die in the Lord are bleſſed, they ſhall reſt from their labours. Chriſt is vnto mée both in life, and in death, aduantage. In ſuch ſort doe the godlie prepare themſelues to their iournie out of this life.

Then the Miniſter prayeth, that he may be conſtant in this faith: he ſtrengtheneth him, and confirmeth him in it. He exhorteth the ſicke to commend himſelfe vnto God: he prayeth vnto God, that he will giue his Angels charge ouer him to kéepe him and defend him, that he fall not into temptation.

Hée teacheth him to ſay, O Lord, in thée haue I truſted, let me neuer be confounded. Come Lord Ieſus, come, and take mée vnto thée: Lord, let thy ſeruant depart in peace: thy kingdome come. I am thy ſonne, thine am I, O ſaue me: into thine hands, O Lord, I commend my ſpirit, thou haſt redéemed mée, O Lord God of truth. In this ſtate he dieth, and hath his eies alwaies faſtened vpon God, and ſo ſeth, how in déed, the dead are bleſſed which die in the Lord.

Thus

Thus doth the Church of God inſtruct all men to liue, and to die, and to bée in readineſſe. Thus are the ſicke among vs anointed with the inner and inuiſible oile of the mercy of God. Thus are they put in mind to haue the oile of faith and of a good conſcience, and that their Lamps may euer bée burning, that ſo they may enter in with the bridegrome: that the day ſpring from an high may viſit their hearts: and that it may be ſaid vnto them, Come yée bleſſed of my Father, inherit ye the kingdome prepared for you from the foundations of the world.
